Anſ. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith, we are in ieopardie, as giuing a ſpeciall inſtance of himſelfe: as afterward, verſ. 32. he maketh mention of his fighting with beaſts at Epheſus, after the faſhion of the Gentiles, which was a caſe peculiar to himſelfe. Secondly, the Apoſtle is not excluded, though he ſpeake ſometime in the ſecond perſon, as verſ. 17. If Chriſt bee not raiſed, your faith is in vaine; and ſo ſhould S. Pauls faith be in vaine alſo: ſometime in the third, as they that vſe this world muſt bee as though they vſed it not, 1. Cor. 7. 31. which ſaying extendeth alſo to the Apoſtle. Thirdly, this obiection maketh as much againſt Bellarmines expoſition, ſeeing that he thinketh that the Apoſtle did baptize himſelfe with teares for the dead: and yet he ſaith not, why are we baptized?

Secondly, the ſentence is repeated againe, Why are they baptized for the dead? and againe, why are they baptized for them? that is the dead, which muſt bee vnderſtood of thoſe that are dead: for otherwiſe they are baptized not for them, but for themſelues, Bellarm.

Anſ. The Latine text ſo readeth, as the Ieſuite alleageth: but the originall Greeke, repeateth the ſame ſentence, Why are they baptized for the dead? So then this obiection is nothing.

Wherefore all this notwithſtanding, our expoſition remaineth ſound, and inuiolable: firſt, becauſe it is authorized by collation of Scripture, Rom. 6. 6. as wee haue ſeene. Secondly, the argument doth conclude more ſtrongly from the generall cuſtome of the Church in baptiſme, then from any ſpeciall vſe. Thirdly, S. Chryſoſtome, the beſt of the fathers, without compariſon, for the right interpreting of Scripture, ſo expoundeth it. Wherefore this ſentence of the Apoſtle, why are they baptized for the dead, doth ſet forth the fruite and efficacie of baptiſme, whereby we are made partakers of Chriſts death, and are nouriſhed into the hope of his reſurrection; and ſo conſequently maketh nothing at all for Purgatorie.

The Proteſtants.

THat there is no ſuch place of Purgatorie after this life, but that here onely is the place of repentance, and to be reconciled vnto God; and that the ſoules departed are preſently either receiued vp to heauen, or thruſt downe to hell: thus it is proued out of the Scriptures.

Argum. 1. The Scripture maketh but two kindes of workes, either good or euill, Eccleſiaſtes 12.14. But two ſorts of men, he that beleeueth ſhall be ſaued, he that beleeueth not, ſhall be condemned, Mark. 16.16. But two places, heauen and hell, Matth. 25. Chriſt hath but two flocks, one of ſheepe, at the right hand; another of goates at the left: and he ſaith to the one, Come ye bleſſed: to the other, Goe ye curſed. There are but two ſorts of men, therefore but two places: Ergo, no Purgatorie.

Bellarm. There ſhall be indeede at the comming of Chriſt but two places, Heauen and Hell: Purgatorie ſhall haue an end.

Anſ. Firſt, you ſay your ſelues that there ſhall be two infernall places for euer, Hell for the wicked, and a Limbus for infants that die vnbaptized, and Heauen that maketh three; and now you ſay there ſhall be but two. Secondly, there are but two places now, becauſe there are but two ſorts of men: for the beleeuers are alreadie paſſed from death to life, Ioh. 5.24. The vnbeleeuers are alreadie condemned, Ioh. 3. verſ. 18. Thirdly, Auguſtine conſenteth with vs, Non eſt vlli vllus medius locus, vt poſſit eſſe niſi cum diabolo, qui non eſt cum Chriſto: There is no middle or third place, but he muſt needes bee with the diuell, that is not with Chriſt, De peccator. remiſſ. & merit. lib. 1. cap. 28. And againe, Tertium locum penitus ignoramus, imo nec eſſe in ſcripturis ſanctis inuenimus: The third place beſide heauen and hell, we are vtterly ignorant of; nay wee finde not in Scripture that there is any.

Argum. 2. Eccleſiaſtes. 11.3. Whether the tree fall toward the South, or the North, where it falleth there it ſhall be. This place our aduerſaries graunt to bee vnderſtood of the ſtate of the dead, which are diſpoſed of to two places; there is not then a third, and ſo conſequently no purgatorie.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, by the South the ſtate of ſaluation is vnderſtood, which alſo comprehendeth purgatorie.

Contra. Firſt, if to fall to the South, be to enter into the ſtate of ſaluation, then the Patriarches that died before Chriſt, preſently had poſſeſſion of euerlaſting Saluation, and ſo they haue loſt their Limbus. Secondly, it is ſtrange, ſeeing they make Purgatorie a part and member of hell, that they will comprehend in one word, heauen and hell together.

Secondly, ſaith he, we may by the South vnderſtand heauen, and by the North hell, but then euery tree falleth not either North or South.

Contra. Firſt, this Scripture maketh mention but of theſe two places of the dead, and ſo you graunt your purgatorie to be deuiſed beſide Scripture, as it is indeede. Secondly, the text ſaith, in quocunque loco, in what place ſoeuer it falleth: ſo that to fall to the South or North, is what place ſoeuer, that is, all and euery place toward the which the tree falleth.

Thirdly, if this place ouerthrow Purgatorie, it ourthroweth as well alſo Limbus Patrum, whither the Fathers went before Chriſt. Bellarm.

Contra. We graunt all, that this place maketh againſt both the one and the other: for as there is not now a third place of Purgatorie beſide Heauen and Hell, ſo neither was there then of Limbus.

Argum. 3. Rom. 8. There is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Ieſus: but all ordained to ſaluation are in Chriſt Ieſus; therefore to ſuch there is no condemnation: Ergo, no purgatorie: for to be caſt into priſon, which they ſay is purgatorie, Matth. 5.25. is a condemnation.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that S. Paul by condemnation vnderſtandeth the contagion of ſinne, that commeth by the concupiſcence of the fleſh, which they haue not that are in Chriſt Ieſus.

Contra. Firſt, ſinne is one thing, and the wages of ſinne is another, which is death or condemnation, Rom. 6.25. therefore by condemnation the Apoſtle vnderſtandeth not ſinne. Secondly, if they that are in Chriſt haue no ſinne, much leſſe doth the puniſhment of ſinne, which they ſay is in purgatorie, abide them.

Argum. 4. 2. Cor. 5.1. We know, that if our earthly houſe be diſſolued, we haue an houſe in heauen not made with hands, &c. wherefore it followeth, that the ſeruants of Chriſt preſently after their diſſolution enter into heauen.

Bellarmine: The Apoſtle ſaith not, that all the godly preſently after death goe vnto their heauenly houſe, but onely thoſe that are clothed with righteouſneſſe, as it followeth verſ. 3. if ſo we be found clothed, not naked.

Cont. Firſt, the Apoſtle meaneth no ſuch clothing: but the clothing, wherof he ſpeaketh, is to be clothed with our houſe from heauen, verſ. 2. and then he addeth, not preſcribing a condition, but rendring a reaſon, why wee deſire to bee clothed with our heauenly houſe, verſ. 2. becauſe being clothed (that is with our heauenly houſe) we ſhall not be found naked. Secondly, that all the godlie ſtraight after their diſſolution are clothed with the heauenly houſe; it followeth, verſ.4. that we may not be vnclothed, but clothed vpon. But if any godly being vnclothed of their fleſh by death, ſhould not preſently bee clothed with immortalitie, then ſhould they bee vnclothed, which the Apoſtle denieth.

Argum.5. S. Paul ſaith, that euery man ſhall receiue the workes of his bodie, according to that which he hath done either good or euill, 2.Cor.5.10. Therefore there is no place to cleanſe and purge the ſoules of men after this life: for then they ſhould not receiue according to the workes done in their fleſh.

Bellarmine ſayth, that euen they whoſe ſinnes are remitted after death, doe receiue nothing but that which was done in the fleſh, for they deſerued in their life time to be helped after death.

Anſw. Firſt, as for deſert, we will ſhew elſe where, that it hath no place before God neither in this life, nor the life to come: for the Scripture ſaith, Bleſſed is he to whom the Lord imputeth no ſinne: not who deſerueth remiſſion of ſinnes, Rom.4.6. Secondly, this deuiſed and friuolous diſtinction, doth not ſtand with the Apoſtles meaning: for he ſpeaketh of things actually done in the fleſh, not deſerued to be done, and of the workes of the body, not of the ſoule, and of things perfectly done, not begun onely or inchoate: and he vſeth it as a reaſon to perſwade men, euen while they liue, to be accepted of God, verſ.9.11. But if there might be any ſuch helpe after death, there needeth no ſuch haſt preſently to be conuerted vnto God. Thirdly, if they deſerued any thing in their life, why deſerued they not preſently to haue forgiuenes of ſins, as wel as afterward?

Argum.6. Apocal.14.13. Bleſſed are the dead from henceforth that die in the Lord, for they reſt from their labours: Ergo, there is no Purgatorie: for all the godly departed are at reſt.

Bellarm. Firſt, it is not meant of all the godly, but onely of Martyrs, which die for the name of Chriſt.

Anſw. As to liue in Chriſt Ieſus, is a phraſe of Scripture, and ſignifieth to liue godly in Chriſt, 2.Tim.3.12. ſo to die in the Lord, ſignifieth to dye in the faith of Chriſt, 1.Theſſ.4.16. Therefore this place is vnderſtood of all the godly.

Bellarm.2. This word (amodo) from henceforth, is not to be vnderſtood ſtraight after their death, but ſtraight after the day of iudgement, then they ſhall be bleſſed.

Anſw. Firſt, by this reaſon none that are dead in Chriſt ſhould be happie before that time. And yet by your owne confeſſion, Martyrs are ſtraightway receiued vp to heauen. Secondly, S. Iohn vſeth this word elſewhere, to ſignifie from this time forward, as Ioh.1.51. Chriſt ſaith to Nathanael, From henceforth you ſhall ſee heauen open.

Rhemiſt. Thirdly, it may be alſo vnderſtood of the ſoules in Purgatorie, that are without danger of ſinne and damnation, and are put in vnfallible ſecuritie of their ſaluation, with vnſpeakable comfort.

Anſ. Firſt, ſo the Saints liuing are bleſſed, being as well without feare of damnation, Rom.8.1. and are aſſured of their ſaluation, Rom.8.16. Secondly, I pray you what reſt or comfort can they haue, that endure greater paine then any in this life? And how can their conſciences be quieted, ſeeing their ſoules are ſo afflicted? for bodies they haue none, whatſoeuer they ſuffer is in ſoule: how then can ioy and paine, comfort and horror be together in the ſoule?

Let vs ſee the iudgement of antiquitie: Concil. Aquiſgranenſ. lib.1.cap.1. Tribus modis peccata mortalium vindicantur, &c. The ſinnes of mortall men are three wayes puniſhed, two wayes in this life, and one in the next: Of the two wayes the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, if we would iudge our ſelues, &c. This is the puniſhment, wherein euery ſinner taketh reuenge in himſelfe: Afterward hee ſaith, but when we are iudged of God, we are chaſtiſed, &c. This is the puniſhment, which God in mercy doth lay vpon ſinners: The third is moſt fearefull and terrible, not in this but the next world, when the iuſt Iudge ſhall ſay, depart from me ye curſed, &c. We ſee then that Purgatorie by the ſentence of this Councell is excluded, for it is none of theſe three kindes of puniſhments here expreſſed.

And yet we haue more euident teſtimonie out of their owne Canons, Gelaſius epiſtol. ad Anaſtaſium; Quæ ſolueris ſuper terram, &c. That which thou bindeſt vpon earth: vpon the earth, for he that dieth being thus bound, can no where be abſolued: Therefore he that is not abſolued in this life, cannot be afterwards: Ergo, no Purgatorie.

Againe, the ſame Gelaſ. decret.2. de eo, qui in diuino iudicio eſt conſtitutus, &c. Concerning him that is committed to the diuine iudgement, it is not lawfull to iudge any other thing, then that, wherein he died.

Decret. part.2. cauſ.33. diſtinct.1. c.39. Non meretur iuſtificari: He is not worthie to be iuſtified, which did not confeſſe his ſinnes, while he liued.

Ibid. c.49. Leo; Quod manens in corpore non recepit: That which a man in his bodie receiued not, being vncloathed of his fleſh, he cannot obtaine. If then there be no remiſſion of ſinnes after this life, then conſequently no Purgatorie.

And as touching the worde purifying or purging, whereof Purgatorie is deriued, their owne Canons call repentance, Purificatorium ignem pœnitudinis, the purifying fire, decret.p.2.cauſ.24.qu.1.c.11. If Repentance be a purgatorie fire, what neede another purgatorie fire afterward.

Let them heare alſo the iudgement of one of their owne writers, Animarum poſt diſſolutionem carnis ſuum quaq; ſtatum immutabilem ſortiuntur: Euery ſoule after the diſſolution of the fleſh, do enter into their immutable ſtate, Eſpenc.in 2.Timoth.p.144.d. If the ſtate of euery ſoule after death be immutable, then there is no Purgatorie; for that ſtate is mutable and temporall by their owne confeſſion.

Let vs adioyne the teſtimonie of the holy Martyrs, Richard Feurus, french Martyr, being asked if he beleeued any Purgatorie, anſwered: I beleeue that Chriſt with his precious bloud hath made an end of all Purgatorie, and purgation of our ſinnes, Fox.pag.913.col.1. Frauncis Rebezies holy Martyr, I doe acknowledge that Purgatorie, which is the death and paſſion of Chriſt. Fox.pag.922.col.1.

Iohn Frith holy Martyr, I beleeue there is no ſuch place to purge the ſpots and filth of the ſoule after this life: for man conſiſteth of two parts, that is of bodie and ſoule, whereof the one is purged here in this world, by affliction, perſecution, impriſonment, and laſt of all by death it ſelfe, and the ſoule is purged by the word of God, which we receiue through faith, &c. Now, if you can ſhew me a third part of man beſide the bodie and the ſoule, I will alſo grant vnto you the third place which is Purgatorie, &c. Fox.pag.1034.

Maſter Latimer Martyr thinketh the deuiſe of Purgatorie, to be a meere imagination and fanſie, and ſaith vpon this ground, that he would rather chooſe to be in Purgatorie, then in the Lollars tower: And of this his ſpeech he rendreth many ſufficient reaſons: See more, Fox.pag.1741.col.2.

Laſtly, Iohn Spicer, William Coberly, Iohn Maundrel Martyrs put to death, for ſaying that Purgatorie was the Popes pinfold, pag.1894.col.1. Let our aduerſaries ſhew now, if they can, who of their ſect haue dyed in the defenſe of Purgatorie, as we are able to bring forth many Martyrs, who haue witneſſed againſt it, euen by their bloud.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE CIRCVMSTANCES and other matters belonging to Purgatorie.

The Papiſts.

11.Error. 1. THey ſay, it is an article of faith, to beleeue that there is a Purgatorie, and that he, which beleeueth it not, is ſure to goe to hell, Bellarm.lib.1.De.purgatorio.cap.11.

The Proteſtants.

WE hold, that it is not onely an article belonging to the faith, but contrarie to it: and that though there were a Purgatorie, yet it ſhould not be neceſſarie to ſaluation to beleeue it. Firſt, becauſe the Scripture hath not determined it, which containeth all things neceſſarie to ſaluation. Secondly, the Greeke Church holdeth it not to this day: they confeſſe no Purgatorie fire, though they pray for the dead: as may be ſeene in the Florentine Councell, ſeſſ.25. it were a hard matter therefore to pronounce them damned. Thirdly, Auguſtine doubted of it: He ſaith, that there ſhould be ſome ſuch place after death, non incredibile eſt, it is not incredible, & vtrum ita ſit, quæri poteſt, & aut inueniri aut latere fideles poteſt: whether it be ſo or not, it may be enquired, and it may either be ſafey found out, or remaine hid and vnknowne to the faithfull: Enchirid.69. Auguſtine ſaith, A faithfull man may ſafely be ignorant of Purgatorie.

The Papiſts.

12.Error. 2. THey, ſay they, onely goe to Purgatorie, that die in their veniall and light tranſgreſſions, or which haue their ſinnes remitted, but not ſatisfied for the puniſhment, Bellarm.lib.2.de Purgat.cap.1.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, we deny that any ſinnes are of their owne nature veniall, as they affirme, for the wages of all ſinne, without the mercie of God, is death, Rom.6.23. Secondly, what equitie ſhould there be in this, that veniall ſinnes ſhould be puniſhed with the helliſh fire of Purgatorie, that exceedeth all the afflictions of this life, yea and a longer time then any man liueth vpon earth; for the Pope taketh vpon him to pardon for thouſands of yeeres: and yet mortall and deadly ſinnes (as they call them) may be ſatisfied for here, where neither the penance can be ſo grieuous, nor ſo long? Thirdly, the ſinne once remitted, there remaineth no puniſhment, Mark.2.5. Chriſt ſaith to the ſicke of the palſie, Thy ſinnes are forgiuen thee: and verſ.10. That ye may knowe that the Sonne of man hath authoritie on earth to forgiue ſinnes, I ſay vnto thee, ariſe, take vp thy bed and walke. The releaſing him of the puniſhment of his bodie, was a ſigne that his ſinnes alſo were forgiuen, and the ſinne being remitted, the puniſhment alſo ceaſeth. Wherefore who ſo leaueth the world without ſinne, is no more guiltie of any puniſhment.

The Papiſts.

3. THe ſoules in Purgatorie doe neither ſinne any more, neither can they merite. Eccleſ.9.5. The dead know nothing at all, verſ.10. there is neither worke, knowledge, nor wiſdome in the graue, Bellarm.cap.2.

13.Error.

The Proteſtants.

WE ſay, that if there were any ſuch place as Purgatorie, the ſoules there tormented, muſt needes both increaſe in charitie and righteouſnes, becauſe the more they are purged the more pure they are, and the leſſe droſſe is in them: and being in vnſpeakable torments, they cannot chooſe but tremble and feare; yea and alſo be diſquieted in their ſoules, as the Saints were ſometime in their afflictions here vpon earth; and therefore cannot be without ſinne: for feare hath painfulnes, as the Apoſtle ſaith, and he that feareth is not perfect in loue, 1.Ioh.4.18. Ergo, a ſeruile or ſlauiſh feare is ſinne. That place alleadged doth not onely take away meriting or working from the dead, but all knowledge and vnderſtanding. And it is ſpoken in the perſon of the Epicure and ſenſuall man, that thinketh that the dead know nothing.

The Papiſts.

4. THey affirme, that the ſoules in Purgatorie are certaine of their ſaluation in the midſt of their torments: for euery ſoule departed, ſtraight after death receiueth ſentence of life or death, Bellarm.cap.4.

14.Error.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. FIrſt, that euery ſoule is iudged preſently after death, we grant: and it maketh ſtrongly againſt your Purgatorie: for the ſentence giuen is either of death or life; and the ſentence being giuen is accordingly executed: ſo that they which receiue ſentence of life goe preſently to heauen, the other to hell. For to what purpoſe els ſhould the ſentence be giuen, if it be not ſtraightwayes in force? So S. Paul ſaith, that they which looke to be cloathed with their houſe from heauen, ſhall not be left naked or vncloathed, 2.Cor.5.2.3.4. But if ſome ſoules ordained to life eternall, ſhould pauſe a while in Purgatorie, being vnclothed of their fleſh, they ſhould be left altogether naked, hauing not yet receiued their clothing from heauen. Secondly, where there is ſecuritie of ſaluation, there is the greateſt comfort and ioy that can be: how then can the ſoules in Purgatorie be ſo grieuouſly tormented, which cannot be elſewhere then in their conſcience? for as for the whipping, ſcalding, freezing of ſoules in Purgatorie, they are but old wiues fables: the ioy then of the ſoule is in the conſcience, ſo is the ſorowe: how then can both theſe be matched in the ſoule together, to haue vnſpeakable ioy, as alſo to feele moſt horrible paine?

5 In theſe poynts alreadie ſet downe, our aduerſaries we ſee are bold to define certainly of Purgatorie: but there are as many poynts, and ſomewhat more, which they leaue in doubt and vncertaine. Firſt, where Purgatorie ſhould be: Bellarmine geſſeth it is in the bowels of the earth next to hell, cap.6. ſo doe the Rhemiſts, Luke.16.ſect.8. But they doe not all agree, neither hath their Church defined it. Secondly, they cannot tell how many yeeres Purgatorie endureth, whether an hundred, or two hundred, or a thouſand yeeres. Thirdly, they cannot tell certainly whether it be materiall fire which burneth in Purgatorie, but they ſay it is probable. Fourthly, neither can they ſhew how corporall fire ſhould worke vpon the ſoules in Purgatorie, being ſpirituall and incorporall, Bellarmine cap.12. Fiftly, they are vncertaine, whether the diuels or Angels be the tormentors in Purgatorie, cap.13. Sixtly, whether the paine of Purgatorie be at all times alike, or by little and little ſlacked toward the end; and whether it doe exceede all the paines and ſorowes of this life, they yet remaine vncertaine, and are not able to determine, Bellarm.lib.2.de purgat.cap.14. Let vs leaue them therefore with their vncertainties, and brainſicke phanſies: for the vaine inuentions and imaginations of men haue no end, but are fitly by the Prophet compared to ſparkles, that leape out thicke out of the fire, but are ſoone extinguiſhed: Walke, ſaith the Prophet, In the light of your fire, and ſparkes that you haue kindled: that is, as the ſparkles giue but a dimme light for a man to walke by, he may ſtumble and grope about ſtill for all that light: euen ſo, no meruaile if the Papiſts do wander vp and downe in their imaginations, walking by the light and ſparkles of their phantaſticall and mathematicall fire of purgatorie.

Iſa.50.11.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER THE PRAYERS OF the liuing, or any other workes of theirs doe profit the dead.

The Papiſts.

THeir opinion is, that the prayers of the liuing are neither auailable for the Saints in heauen, for they neede them not, nor for the damned in hell, for they cannot be helped; but onely for the ſoules tormented in Purgatorie, who doe find great eaſe, ſay they, by the prayers of the liuing, and therefore we ought to pray for them, *Bellar.lib.2.de purg.c.*15.18.*Rhem.annot.*2.*Theſ.*2.*ſect.*19.

*Argum.*1. Chriſt while he liued, profited the dead, for he raiſed to life the rulers daughter, Matth.9.the widowes ſonne, Luk.7.and Lazarus, which were dead: therefore euen ſo the members of Chriſt ought one to helpe another, the liuing the dead, *Bellarm.cap.*15.

Anſw. Firſt, is not here a ſtrong argument, thinke you, Chriſt raiſed Lazarus, and ſome others from death to life: Ergo, we ought to pray for the dead? for it followeth not that vpon the miraculous workes of Chriſt, we ſhould build the ordinarie duties of Chriſtians: Auguſtine would haue told you that Chriſt is not to be imitated in ſuch workes: Non hoc tibi dicit, non eris diſcipulus meus, niſi ambulaueris ſupra mare, aut niſi ſuſcitaueris quatriduanum mortuum: He ſaith not vnto thee, Thou ſhalt not be my diſciple, vnleſſe thou walke vpon the ſea, and raiſe one that hath been dead foure dayes: But, Learne of me: for I am humble and meeke. Secondly, if prayer for the dead be vnto vs, as the raiſing of the dead was to Chriſt: then, as al the dead are to be prayed for, ſo Chriſt ſhould haue raiſed againe all that went then to Purgatorie; or els, by your concluſion, he failed in charitie, as we doe now, if we pray not for the dead, as you beare vs in hand. Thirdly, though the Saints departed, and the faithfull liuing are members of the ſame bodie, and ſo are bound in loue one to the other, yet it followeth not, that one ſhould pray for the other. They with vs, and we with them doe wiſh and long to ſee the redemption of the ſonnes of God accompliſhed, Reuel. 6.10,22.20. But charitie bindeth vs not one to pray for another, becauſe we know not one the particular needes of another. Nay, to pray for any departed, is againſt the rule of charitie: for loue beleeueth all things, and hopeth all things, 1.Cor.13.7. We ought to hope the beſt of the dead, that they are at reſt: but in praying for them, we preſuppoſe they are in miſerie, and ſo need our prayers: therefore we hope not the beſt of them, as charitie willeth vs.

*Argum.*2. There is a mutuall communication of all the members of Chriſts bodie; S.Paul ſaith, if one member ſuffer all ſuffer with it, 1.Cor.12.26. but the righteous departed are members of the ſame bodie: Ergo, the liuing ought to be touched with compaſſion toward them, and aſſiſt them with their prayers. *Bellar.lib.2.de purg.c.*15.

Anſw. Firſt, though it can not be denied, but that the Church of God in heauen and earth make but one familie, Epheſ.3.15.yet it is euident, that in this place the Apoſtle onely ſpeaketh of that part of the Church, which is on earth, wherein Chriſt hath ordained ſome to be Apoſtles, ſome Prophets, &c.verſ.28. which diſtinction of offices belongeth to the militant Church on earth. Secondly, and yet we graunt that there is a mutual communication betweene both members, ſuch as is agreeable with their eſtate: namely that the Saintes in heauen do long for a conſummation of our and their happineſſe; and do wiſh vnto the Church militant, the like happie end of their afflictions, as they haue attained vnto, Reuel.6.10. and the members yet liuing do giue thanks for the glorious victorie of the Saints in heauen, according as the Apoſtle ſaith, if one member be had in honour, all the members reioyce with it, 1.Cor.12.26.but the members liuing ſuffer not with the members departed; for as much as they ſuffer not at all, all teares being wiped from their eyes, Apocal.7.17. and therefore they haue no neede of our prayers.

*Argum.*3. 1.Ioh.5.verſ.16.The Apoſtle ſaith, There is a ſinne vnto death, for the which a man ought not to pray: that is, deadly ſinne, wherein a man dyeth without repentance: but for other ſinnes not vnto death, whereof men repent themſelues, it is lawfull to pray: Ergo, we may pray for thoſe that are departed not in deadly ſinne: for this place is properly to be vnderſtood of praying or not praying for the dead: becauſe ſo long as a man liueth he may be prayed for, becauſe all ſinnes are pardonable in this life, Rhemiſt.ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, a ſinne vnto death is not onely finall impenitencie, but ſinne alſo againſt the holy Ghoſt, ſuch as was the ſinne of Iudas, and of the Phariſies. Secondly, though we ſhould vnderſtand it of finall impenitencie, yet it is but a ſory argument: Some of the dead ought not to be prayed for: Ergo, the reſt may. Thirdly, the text cannot be vnderſtood of praying for the dead: for the text ſaith not, If any man ſee that his brother hath ſinned not vnto death, but, If he ſee him ſinning: but the dead doe neither ſinne, nor are ſeene to ſinne. Fourthly, whereas you ſay, that all ſinnes are pardonable in this life, our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith contrarie, that the ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt can neuer be forgiuen, neither in this world, nor in the world to come. See more of their arguments in the queſtion before of Purgatorie, *Argum.*2.& 7.

The Proteſtants.

TO pray for the dead, is a worke neither pleaſing before God, becauſe he hath no where commanded it, nor auaileable for them that are departed, becauſe they haue their iudgement alreadie. While we liue, let vs one pray for another, but when we are gone, the prayers of the liuing helpe vs not.

*Argum.*1. The ground of this popiſh opinion of prayer for the dead, is their ſuperſtitious deuiſe of Purgatorie: for none els doe they hold it lawfull to pray for but for the ſoules onely in Purgatorie. But there is no Purgatorie, as we haue ſhewed before after this life: our purging is onely in this life: Chriſt hath by himſelfe purged our ſinnes, Hebr.1.3. Chriſt his bloud is the chiefe and onely purgation of our ſinnes: there are alſo other inferiour and miniſteriall purgings, whereby that onely ſoueraigne purging is made beneficiall, and applyed vnto vs: as the inward operation and worke of the ſpirit is compared to fire, Matth.3.11. 1.Corinth.3.13. There is alſo a purging fire of affliction compared by the Prophet to fullers ſope, Malach.3.3. There alſo ſhall be a third purging fire in the day of the Lord, 1.Pet.3.7. when as the corruption and mortalitie of our bodies ſhall be purged away, and then ſhall our mortalitie put on immortalitie, 1.Corinth. 15.53. Other Purgatorie after this life we acknowledge none. Seeing then that there are no ſoules in Purgatorie, and for none els it is lawfull to pray but for the ſoules tormented in Purgatorie: it followeth, that we are to pray for none at all that are dead.

*Argum.*2. No prayer is acceptable to God without faith. We muſt pray without wauering and doubting, Iames 1.6. But ſo can we not pray for the dead: for we cannot tell in what caſe they are for whom we pray, whether they be in heauen, hell, or Purgatorie, and therefore we cannot aſſure our ſelues that our prayers are heard, but muſt needes pray with great doubting and wauering of the mind: Ergo, ſuch prayers are in vaine, Iames 1.7.

Bellarmine anſwereth, Firſt, it is better, that they ſometime ſhould haue our prayers, that need them not, as the Saints in heauen, then they to want them, that need them, namely the ſoules in Purgatorie: as wee giue almes many times to the wicked, leaſt wee ſhould be wanting to the righteous.

Contra. Firſt, he very vnskilfully ſtill beggeth the thing in queſtion, that the ſoules in Purgatorie need our prayers, which we do inſtantly denie: ſo that our prayers are not ſuperfluous onely to ſome of the dead, but to all. Secondly, he would haue men make their prayers, as the blind man ſhooteth at the Crow, that as he ſhooteth many arrowes, that at the leaſt ſome may hit; ſo they to make many prayers, that ſome may preuaile: but the Scripture forbiddeth vs to pray ſo vncertainely, ſaying, whatſoeuer you deſire, when you pray, beleeue, that you ſhall haue it, and it ſhall be done vnto you, Marke 11.24. So then, if it were lawfull to pray for the dead, then we ſhould be ſure to helpe all with our prayers, yea euen thoſe, which are in hell, which they themſelues denie. This rule then, it is better to be ſuperfluous in neceſſaries, then to be defectiue; to abound, rather then to lacke; taketh place in matters arbitrarie, & ſubiect to our wil: but where Gods pleaſure is otherwiſe, as in this caſe of praying for the dead, it hath no place at all. Thirdly, the inſtance of almes is not alike, for we are commanded to do good vnto all, and ſo to the vniuſt, though chiefely to the houſhold of faith; but there is no cõmandement to pray for the dead: and againe, almes do profite all the receiuers, ſo are not prayers profitable to all, that are dead.

Secondly, ſaith he, a goodworke is neuer in vaine, it is meritorious to the doer, though it profite not the receiuer, Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. Firſt, we denie that any good worke is meritorious. Secondly, that is no good worke, which is not of faith, nor commanded by the Lord: and therefore prayer for the dead, being not warranted by the word, is no good worke, but meere ſuperſtition.

*Argum.*3. Our prayers profite not the dead, becauſe there is no place after this life for repentance or remiſſion of ſinnes: for this ſhould be the end and intendment of our prayer, that they might be releaſed of their ſinnes, and eaſed of their paine. There is no remiſſion of ſinnes after death, becauſe there is no true repentance: repentance there is none, becauſe there can be no amendment of life, which alwayes followeth repentance: for Iohn Baptiſt that was a preacher of repentance, bid not onely the people to repent, but to bring foorth fruites worthie repentance, Matth.3.2.8. So ſaith the Prophet Ezechiel, If the wicked will returne from his ſinnes, and doe the thing that is lawfull, he ſhall liue and not die, 18.21. There are two parts then of repentance, as Iſay ſaith, Ceaſe to doe euill, learne to doe well, 1.Iſay 16.17. But there is no place of working out of the bodie: Ergo, then no repentance.

To this Auguſtine agreeth: Non eſt apud inferors pœnitentia ad ſalutem proficiens, ecce nunc tempus eſt ſalutis, nunc tempus remiſſionis. In hac vita pœnitentiæ tantum patet libertas, poſt mortem nulla correctionis eſt licentia: De tempor. ſerm.66. In hell, or among the dead, there is no repentance vnto ſaluation: behold now is the time of ſaluation, the time of forgiuenes: In this life onely haue men libertie to repent, after death there is no place for amendment. What is become now (I pray you) of your Purgatorie repentance? after this life there is no ſaluation to be had, becauſe there is no remiſſion of ſinnes: no remiſſion of ſinnes, becauſe there is no repentance: there is no repentance, becauſe there is no amendment.

See the conſent of antiquitie againſt prayer to be made for the dead: Gelaſius epiſtol. ad Anaſtaſium Imperator. Quæ ſolueris ſuper terram. &c. ſuper terram (inquit:) nam in hac ligatione defunctum nuſquam dicit abſolui: whatſoeuer thou looſeſt vpon earth (ſaith our Sauiour Chriſt:) he ſaith, vpon earth: for he that dyeth being bound, is no where ſaid to be looſed. If the dead then cannot be looſed from their ſinnes, in vaine are they prayed for.

Concil.Toletan.3.can.22.Qui diuina vocatione ab hac vita recedunt, cum pſalmis tantùmmodo & pſallentium vocibus debere ad ſepulchra deferri: nam funebre carmen, quod vulgò defunctis cantari ſolet,&c. prohibemus: They which are called by God out of this life,are to be brought to the graue onely with pſalmes and the voyce of ſingers: for that funerall verſe, which they are woont to ſing to the dead, we doe forbid to be vſed. Here ſinging onely and thankſgiuing for the departure of the dead is permitted: and all verſes and whatſoeuer enditings directed to the dead are forbidden: therefore alſo prayers for the dead are vnlawfull by this decree.

Further, prayer for the dead is contrarie to their owne rule, Iniuriam facit Martyri,qui orat pro Martyre: He doth wrong to a Martyr, that prayeth for a Martyr; and therefore whereas in their old Maſſe bookes they prayed thus, Annue nobis Domine, vt animæ famuli tui Leonis,&c. Graunt Lord, that this oblation may be profitable to the ſoule of thy ſeruant Leo; they haue changed the forme thus; Quæſumus domine,vt interceſſione,&c. We beſeech thee Lord,that by the interceſſion of bleſſed Leo, this oblation may be profitable to vs, *decret.Gregor.lib.3.tit.41.c.*6. Wherefore their prayers for the dead muſt needs be iniurious, ſeeing amongſt others, they pray alſo for many Saints in heauen.

Thomas Hawkes holy Martyr, hath ſealed this truth: *The prayer of the righteous man is auaileable for the liuing, but not for the dead: for Dauid ſaith, no man can deliuer his brother from death, nor make agreement vnto God for him,Pſal.49.Fox*.pag.1587.col.2.

AN APPENDIX OR AN APPERTINENCE TO this part,concerning the burials and funerals of the dead.

THere are certaine poynts wherein there is no great variance or diſſenſion betweene vs. Firſt, we confeſſe, that it is meete and conuenient, that the bodies of Chriſtians, being departed, ſhould after a ſeemely and comely manner be brought to the graue: as David commendeth the men of Iabeſh Gilead, for burying the bodie of Saul,2.Sam.2.5.The brethren alſo tooke the bodie of Stephen and buried it, Act.8.2. Secondly, it is not to be denied but that lamentation and ſorrow may be made for the dead, obſeruing S.Pauls rule, that we mourne not as thoſe that haue no hope, that is,exceſſiuely, 1.Theſſ.4.13. where S.Paul doth not ſimply forbid Chriſtians to ſorrow,but not as the Gentiles. The brethrē alſo made great lamentation for Stephen, Act.8.2. Thirdly,we doe alſo graunt, that according to the diuers cuſtomes of countries, it is not vnlawfull to vſe ſome comely rites and ceremonies in the buriall of the dead; not for religion, but for orders ſake: as among the Iſraelites, the mourners were woont to goe about in the ſtreetes, Eccleſiaſt.12.5. And Chriſt commended the woman in the Goſpell,for anoynting of him againſt his burial, Mark.14.

But beſide theſe points by vs confeſſed,and acknowledged,there are other more waightie matters,as touching the order of funerals, wherein wee worthilie and iuſtly diſſent from our aduerſaries.

16.Error. 1 They do attribute much to the places where men are buried, as in Churches,and Churchyards,but eſpecially vnder the Altar, Rhemiſt. As the ſoules of the righteous do reſt in Chriſt,who is that altar, vnder the which the Apoſtle ſaw the ſoules of Martyrs: ſo for the correſpondence to the place in heauen,their bodies are commonly laid vnder the Altar,where the ſacrifice of the bodie of Chriſt is daily offered, *Annot. Apocal.6.verſ.*9.

Anſ. The altar of the Croſſe was the onely place where the bodie of Chriſt was ſacrificed: neither neede it to bee often offered in ſacrifice,but it ſufficed once onely to haue been done, Heb.9. verſ.25.27. And in the Communion, wee acknowledge no ſacrifice, but of praiſe and thankſgiuing, Heb.13.15. It is kept onely in remembrance of the death of Chriſt, 1.Cor.11.25. And how ſhould it be auaileable for the dead, ſeeing it profiteth not all the liuing,but onely thoſe that are preſent,which doe eate and drinke the holy elements of bread and wine in remembrance of the bodie and blood of Chriſt giuen and ſhed for them? So ſaith the Scripture, Doe this,as oft as you doe it,in remembrance of me, 1.Cor.11.25. The doers therefore, agents and receiuers, haue the preſent benefit,not they which are abſent: how then can the dead receiue any ſolace by it? It profiteth them not a whit to bee laid in Churches,or Churchyards, or other hallowed places, as they call them; for all places are alike: neither helpeth it the dead to be buried in one place more then another: for God ſhall commaund the ſea,and all other places to giue vp their dead, Apocalypſ.20. The very Heathen did confeſſe as much: one ſaith, It skilleth not, humíne, an ſublimè putreſcam, Theodor. whether I rot vnder, or aboue the ground. And another thus writeth, Cœlo tegitur, qui non habet Lucan. vrnam: Heauen is a couering to him that hath no other coffin. It were a foule ſhame then for Chriſtians,to exceede the very Gentiles in their ſuperſtitious conceits. Auguſtine ſaith, Si aliquid prodeſt De cura pro mortuis cap.3 impio ſepultura precioſa,oberit pio vilis,aut nulla: If ſumptuous funerals profit the wicked, then homely or no burials doe hurt the godly. Therefore as it helpeth not a wicked man to be buried in one place more then another; ſo it doth not hinder or hurt the godlie and righteous man.

Bellarmine obiecteth the example of the Patriarches, who dying in Egypt, gaue charge for their bodies to be buried in the land of promiſe: from whence he concludeth, that it is auaileable to be buried in holie places: And afterward in the times of the Chriſtians, they vſed to burie their bodies in Churches, *Bellarm.cap.*19.

Contra. Firſt, the Patriarches deſired to bee buried in the land of promiſe, not for the holines of the place, but partly to be ioyned to the ſepulchers of their fathers, as Iacob alleageth, Gen.49.31. partly to ſhew their faith and aſſurance of Gods promiſes as touching the deliuerance of the Iſraelites out of Egypt, as Ioſeph confeſſeth, Gen.50.26. for afterwards, when the people were come out of Egypt, they had no ſuch deſire for their buriall: for Miriam was buried in Kadeſh, and Aaron in the mount Hor in the wilderneſſe, Numb.20.

Secondly, it is vntrue that it was practiſed of ancient time among the Chriſtians to burie their dead in Churches, but this vſe was taken vp afterward, as ſuperſtition encreaſed: for this was forbidden both by the Imperiall, and Eccleſiaſticall lawes: as *Cod.lib.*3.*tit.*43.*leg.*12. Mortuorum corpora non debent in ciuitatibus ſepeliri: The bodies of the dead muſt not bee buried in cities: Ergo, much leſſe in Churches. And *lib.*1.*tit.*5.*leg.*2.Theodoſ.Nemo martyrum,&c. Let no man thinke, that the ſeate of the Martyrs and Apoſtles is graunted for humane bodies: that is, to be buried in.

Likewiſe, Decret.part 2.*cauſ.*13.*qu.*2.*c.*15.Prohibendum eſt ſecundum maiorum ſtatuta: We prohibite, according to the decrees of our elders, that they bee not buried in the Church, but in the porch, or the limits without the Church: but within the Church, & prope altare, and neere to the altar, where the bodie and blood of Chriſt is made, let them be buried by no meanes. This Canon ouerthroweth the Rhemiſts collection for burials vnder the altar.

*Concil.Auernenſ.can.*5.De opertorio altaris non ſacerdotis corpus, dum ad tumulum euehitur, obtegatur, quia ſacro velamine dum honorantur corpora, altaria polluuntur: The prieſts bodie muſt not be couered with the Altar-cloth, while it is carried to the graue, for while the bodies are honoured with the holy vaile, the Altar is defiled. If it bee not lawfull for the Altar-cloth to couer the dead, much leſſe for the Altar it ſelfe, which is greater then the couering?

*Concil.Bracarenſ.*1.*cap.*36.Vt defunctorum corpora nullo modo intra Baſilicam ſanctorum ſepeliantur, quia & hoc moris ciuitatum eſt, vt nullius defuncti corpus intra ambitum murorum ſit humatum: That the bodies of the dead ſhould not in any caſe bee buried within the Churches of the Saints, becauſe, that it is the cuſtome alſo of cities, not to burie their dead within the walles. But if it had bin ſo great a priuiledge to the dead to bee buried in the Church, and neere vnto the Altar, I thinke this Councell would not haue forbidden it.

This alſo hath been the confeſſion of thoſe that haue been perſecuted for the truth: William Tracie, As touching the burying of my bodie, it auaileth me not whatſoeuer be done thereto, Fox pag.1043.col.1. Thomas Patmore: That he regarded not the place, whether it were hallowed, or no, where he ſhould be buried, after he was dead, pag.1044.col.2.

2 Wee condemne alſo their ſuperſtitious ceremonies which they vſe at their funerals; as the 17.Error. burning of Tapers, which ſignifieth, ſay they, that the ſoules of the dead are aliue, *Bellarm.de Purgator.lib.*2.*cap.*19.

Anſ. Firſt, this ſuperſtitious vſe of ſetting vp candles, was directly forbidden in the Eliberine Counceil, Canon.34.2. Cereos per diem in cœmiteriys placuit non incendi: Wee thinke it good that no waxe candles be burned by day in the Churchyards.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Councell doth onely forbid the ſuperſtitious vſe of the Gentiles in burning of candles: but this notwithſtanding candles may bee vſed to betoken the life of the ſoules departed.

Anſ. The words of the Councell are generall, as in the 37. Canon likewiſe it is forbidden, Ne lucernas publicè accendant: That they ſhould in no wiſe ſet vp candles publikely: and ſo abſolutely it condemneth the vſe of candle light by day.

Of the like ſort alſo were other ſuperſtitious vſages, as the going about of the belman to will the people to pray for their ſoules, the ringing or iangling of bels to bring their ſoules to heauen, with queere-ſongs and other melodie to commit the bodies to the ground, and commending their ſoules to the protection of Saints. We denie not, but comely and decent orders, voide of ſuperſtition, may be vſed, according to the faſhion of the countrie: as Iacobs bodie was embaulmed after the manner of the Egyptians, Geneſ.50.2. At the buriall of their Kings, the Iſraelites vſed to burne odors, Iere.34.5. The Iewes manner was to waſh the bodies of the dead, to winde it vp in a linnen cloth, and burie it with ſpices and odors: So our Sauiours bodie was buried after the manner of the Iewes, Ioh.19.40. We reade alſo that Ioſeph was put into a coffin or cheſt, Gen.50.26. Of theſe and the like cuſtomes, Auguſtine giueth a rule, writing vpon thoſe words in the Goſpell, Iohn 19.40. As it was the manner of the Iewes to burie: Non mihi videtur Euangeliſta ſic fruſtra dicere voluiſſe: ita quippe admonuit, in huiuſmodi officijs, quæ mortuis exhibentur, morem cuiuſque gentis eſſe ſeruandum: in Iohann.tract.120.Me thinketh the Euangeliſt ſaid not thus without cauſe: hereby letting vs to vnderſtand, that in performing ſuch duties of buriall to the dead, the manner and cuſtome of euery countrie is to be kept.

The Iewes alſo had a cuſtome,with ſome companie or frequencie of people,to bring their dead to the ground, Eccleſ.12.5. And in the while, to vſe ſome admonition to the people concerning death and mortalitie which came in by ſinne,and of the wrath and mercie of God, Syrus.interp.in Mark.14.3.Neither doe wee ſee,why it is not lawfull now among Chriſtians, at funerals and burials,to haue ſome godly ſermon and exhortation,to put the people in minde of their end,and to comfort them with the hope of the reſurrection,as alſo to giue God thankes,for thoſe his faithfull ſeruants,that did glorifie him by their life,and by their godly departure. This ſeemeth alſo to haue been the commendable cuſtome of the Church in ancient time: as Auguſtine writeth thus, Expoſit.in Pſal.103.part.1.Pauca nos cogit dicere temporis anguſtia, quod & nouit charitas veſtra debere vos exequijs fidelis corporis ſolenne obſequium: The ſhortnes of the time cauſeth me to be briefe,and you know,that we are to performe a ſolemne dutie to the bodie of our faithfull brother. The ſermon ſeemeth to haue been made at ſome funerall.

Concil.Colonienſ.part.7.cap.52.In ſepulturis & exequijs mortalitatis admonitio diligens fiat, & excitandi inter alia præſentes,vt recogitent ſibi eodem modo hinc excedendum eſſe: In burials and funerals, the people muſt carefully be admoniſhed of mortalitie,and they which are preſent,ſhould be ſtirred vp to conſider,that they alſo are mortall.

The Iewes alſo, the buriall being ended, did comfort thoſe that mourned, and ate and dranke with them,and gaue them the cup of conſolation, Ierem.16.7. Ioh.11.31. Both which cuſtomes may be kept and retained without any ſuperſtition. But other cuſtomes and ceremonies,that doe ſauour of impietie, and doe any way imply prayer or commendation of the ſoules of the dead, ought to be left and aboliſhed.

18.Error. 3 Another abuſe in popiſh funerals,is their ſuperſtitious and often remembrance of the dead: for they haue their weekes minde for the dead the ſeuenth day,nay their halfe weekes minde the third day,their moneths minde the thirtith day: and beſide, their anniuerſarie or yeeres minde. I pray you what neede all this? Where doe they finde, that wee ſhould mourne for the dead many daies,yea moneths, yea a whole yeere, as they vſe to doe? Ioſeph mourned but ſeuen daies for his father,Geneſ.50.10. So did the Gileadites for Saul, 1.Sam.31.13. The Egyptians indeede mourned threeſcore and tenne daies,when Ioſeph mourned but ſeuen: that we may ſee a manifeſt difference betweene the moderate mourning of the faithfull,and the exceſſiue lamentation of infidels. But the popiſh yeeres mindes doe farre exceed the Egyptians ſtinted mourning: there being fiue times 70.daies in a yeere. Yet yeerely ſtipends,erected for weekly,monethly, quarterly, or yeerely ſermons we miſlike not: being ordained for the inſtruction of the people,without any relation to the ſoules of the dead, otherwiſe, then to giue God thankes for them,and thoſe good things which the Lord wrought by them.

Let vs ſee their own Canons: Decr.part.2.cauſ.13.qu.2.c.24. Et luxit eum Iſrael,&c. And Iſrael mourned for Iacob 7.daies: Hæc ergo ſequenda ſolennitas,quam præſcribit lectio: This ſolemnitie is then to be obſerued,which the Scripture preſcribeth. And againe, Planxerunt filij Iſrael Moſen, &c. The children of Iſraell bewailed Moſes thirtie daies. Both theſe obſeruations are grounded vpon authoritie,&c. for Iacob they mourned but ſeuen,for Moſes thirtie,who was ſuch a Prophet, as Iſrael in all reſpects had not the like. This was not a yeeres minde: and beſide,the Iſraelites in this mourning made not prayers for the dead,as they vſe to doe,but mourned for the loſſe of ſuch excellent men.

19.Error. 4 They doe greatly erre and are deceiued,in holding it to be a meritorious worke, which is performed in the buriall of the dead: alleaging to this purpoſe that place,2.Sam.2.5.where Dauid ſent meſſengers to the men of Iabeſh Gilead, ſaying; Bleſſed are ye of the Lord, that you haue ſhewed ſuch kindnes vnto your Lord Saul and haue buried him: therefore now the Lord ſhew mercie and truth vnto you. Bellarmine cap.19.

Anſ. There can be no ſuch concluſion gathered out of theſe words: The Lord will ſhew mercie,according to his truth and promiſe, to thoſe that are mercifull: Ergo,it is meritorious to bee mercifull: for here the reward dependeth of Gods promiſe and truth, not vpon the worthines of the worke: Indeede Dauid ſaith,as it followeth in that place, I will recompence this benefit, becauſe you haue done this thing. They might deſerue kindnes at the hands of Dauid, becauſe one good turne requireth another: but before the Lord there is no merit or deſert. Secondly,to burie the dead is a worke of charitie,and therefore commaunded,as all other duties of charitie are. The things then commaunded,we doe of dutie,we are bound to doe them: Ergo, they are not meritorious. So ſaith our Sauiour Chriſt, Doth the maſter thanke his ſeruant for doing that which he was commaunded? I trow not,Luk.17.9.

5 In their funerals and ſuffrages for the dead, they doe make great difference betweene the rich and the poore: for they ſay, it is poſſible that ſo many prayers and ſuffrages may be made at once for yͤ dead, that their ſoules may at once be deliuered out of Purgatorie, Et ideo in hoc ſolo caſu melior eſt conditio diuitis, quàm pauperis, quia habet vnde ſuffragia fiant pro ipſo: And therefore in this caſe onely the eſtate of the rich is better then the poore, becauſe he hath wherewithall ſuffrages ſhould be made: that is, is able to giue great legacies, and bequeſts to that end: *Albert. mag. de officio miſſ. tract.*3. Againe, they haue greater reſpect vnto the Pope departed, then any other: for the firſt day, there muſt be 200. Maſſes read for his ſoule, and for nine daies after 100. Maſſes euery day, *Tilemann. de primat. pontif. error.*86.

Anſ. Where doe they reade in all the Scriptures, that the rich in matters of the ſoule ſhould be preferred before the poore? nay, the Scripture ſaith plainly, that God is no accepter of perſons, Act.10.34. And Saint Iames ſaith, We ought not to regard a rich man that weareth goodly apparell, hauing a gold ring, before a poore man in vile apparell, 2. verſ.2. Where alſo doe they learne to pray for none but for thoſe, for whom they are hired to pray? And if prayer be a worke of charitie, and if by their prayers they can deliuer mens ſoules out of Purgatorie, why doe they not extend their charitie to all in praying for them?

What if the rich Glutton, and poore Lazarus were aliue now, or theſe popiſh Maſſe-mongers had liued then; would they haue been bought for money to haue praied for the rich mans ſoule, and let Lazarus alone? It is like they would. But ſurely all their Maſſes ſhould neither haue profited the one, nor the want of them haue hindered the other. Marke, I pray you, what Auguſtine ſaith: Præclaras exequias in conſpectu hominum purpurato illi diuiti turba exhibuit famulorum: ſed multò clariores in conſpectu domini vlceroſo illi pauperi miniſterium præbuit angelorum: A goodly funerall did the friends and ſeruants make for the rich man araied in skarlet in the ſight of the world: but a more bleſſed buriall had the poore man in the ſight of God, by the miniſterie of the Angels. Therefore there is no reſpect of perſons to bee had among the dead: neither haue the rich any greater priuiledge for the multitude of ſuffrages, then the poore that wanteth them: for no doubt the rich mans executors ſpared for no coſt; Maſſes, Trentals, Dirges they had enough, if they were then to be had: yet for all this ſtirre his ſoule went to hell, and Lazarus ſoule was by the Angels carried to heauen, that had none of this geare.

6 Laſtly, if there were no other thing to bee miſliked in their funerals, this were ſufficient to condemne them as abominable; that they thinke, their ſinging, chaunting, ringing, giuing of dole and almes to the poore, and all other their ſuperſtitious cuſtomes, doe helpe and profit the dead, Bellarm. ibid.

Auguſtine giueth two reaſons of this dutie to be ſhewed in the burying of the dead. Firſt, Corpori humando quicquid impenditur, non eſt præſidium ſalutis, ſed humanitatis officium: What dutie is performed in enterring the bodie, is an officious worke of humanitie, not any reliefe for the health of the ſoule. Secondly, ſaith he, Corpori mortuo, ſed tamen reſurrecturo, impenſum huiuſmodi officium, eſt quodammodo eiuſdem fidei teſtimonium: This Chriſtian dutie beſtowed in burying the dead bodies, which ſhall notwithſtanding riſe againe, is a liuely teſtimonie in vs of the ſame faith. That is, wee doe carefully commit the bodies of Chriſtians to the ground, knowing that they are not loſt, but ſhall riſe againe: but as for the dead themſelues, they receiue no benefit at all. Curatio funeris, pompa exequiarum, viuorum ſunt ſolatia magis, quàm ſubſidia mortuorum: This great prouiſion for funerals, this great pompe of burials, they are comforts for the liuing, not helps to the dead. Impleant ergo homines iſta erga ſuos poſtremi muneris officia, & ſui leuamenta mœroris: Let men therefore performe this laſt dutie to their friends, which is alſo a great lightning of their griefe: Ergo, funerals profit not the dead, but comfort the liuing: yea, it is called the laſt dutie, which is performed at burials. If it be the laſt, then there is no dutie afterward to be done, Therefore prayers alſo are ſuperfluous; for if it were needfull to pray for the dead, then the laſt dutie ſhould not be in the buriall, another comming afterward. And thus much alſo concerning the manner and order of funerals.

De cura pro mortuis cap.2.

THE SECOND PART OF THIS CONTROVERſie, of the Saints departed that are in ioy and bliſſe.

This controuerſie ſtandeth of theſe ſeuerall queſtions.

1 Of the bleſſed eſtate of the Saints in heauen, and of the canonizing of them vpon earth.
2 Of the adoration of Saints: Firſt, whether they bee to bee adored or not, and whether it bee lawfull to ſweare by them. Secondly, of the diuers kindes of worſhip. Thirdly, of the worſhip of Saints vpon earth.
3 Of the inuocation of Saints; whether they pray for vs and vnderſtand our prayers.
4 Of the adoration, tranſlation, keeping of reliques, and of the miracles wrought by them.

5 Of Images, and the ſigne of the Croſſe, and other matters thereto belonging more particularly handled.
6 Of Churches: the forme, vſe, ornaments, dedication of them, and ſuch like.
7 Of Pilgrimages and Proceſſions.
8 Of holy and feſtiuall daies, the Lords day, and Saints daies.
9 Of the Virgin Mary, her conception, vowes, aſſumption, worſhip, merits. Of theſe now in order.

THE FIRST QVESTION, CONCERNING THE bleſſed and happie eſtate of the Saints departed.

THis queſtion hath two parts: Firſt, of their bleſſednes which they haue before God in heauen. Secondly, of the publiſhing or making knowne their bleſſednes before men, which they call the canonizing of Saints.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE BLESSED eſtate of the Saints before God in heauen.

22.Error.

BEllarmine taketh great paines, Lib.1.de Sanctis, in ſixe long chapters together, to prooue, that the Saints departed doe preſently enioy the ſight of God, and doe enter into bliſſe; and that their ſoules forthwith are receiued into heauen, and are not kept in any ſecret by-places till the day of iudgement. But all this while he fighteth with his owne ſhadow: for we graunt as much as he proueth, that the righteous are with Chriſt ſo ſoone as they are looſed from their bodies, as Chriſt ſaid to the theefe vpon the Croſſe, This day thou ſhalt be with me in Paradiſe, Luk.23.42. See alſo to this purpoſe, Philipp.1.23. 2.Corint.5.1. Heb.12.22. All theſe places doe euidently proue, that preſently after their departure, the ſoules of the faithfull doe enioy the preſence of Chriſt, and the celeſtiall companie of the Angels in heauen. Yet our aduerſaries ſtay not here, neither are contented with this, that the Saints are bleſſed: but proceede further, and giue them a full poſſeſſion of bleſſedneſſe, making no difference betweene them and the Angels in glorie, but affirme that they are as highly exalted as the Angels are, Rhemiſt.annot.Luk.15.ſect.2. And Bellarmine therefore taketh vp Caluine, becauſe he ſaith, the Saints are yet in hope and expectation of the perfect fruition of glorie, cap.1.lib.1.de Sanctis.

The Proteſtants.

WE confeſſe, that the Saints in heauen are alreadie [a] bleſſed: yet they looke for the full accompliſhment and perfection of their glorie, when as their bodies ſhall bee glorified in the reſurrection: Then it is ſaid, they ſhall be like the Angels, and yet not in all things; much leſſe are their ſoules now equall to the Angels in glorie.

*Argum.*1. The Saintes ſhall be as the Angels, but not before the reſurrection, Matth.22.30. Neither can it be proued out of that text, that they ſhall then be equall to the Angels in all things: for it is not all one to ſay; they ſhall be as the Angels, becauſe they ſhall then neede no mariage, as to ſay, they ſhall bee equall to the Angels in all things, Apocalyp.6.10. The ſoules vnder the altar doe crie Lord, how long! Ergo, they are in expectation of greater glorie. And reaſon alſo giueth as much, that the bodie and the ſoule being ioyned together in the kingdome of God, ſhall make a fuller weight and meaſure of ioy.

*Argum.*2. The wicked ſpirits and damned ſoules, haue not yet their full and perfect torment: Ergo, neither the Saints their perfect ioy. The diuels are now tormented, and kept in chaines of darkeneſſe, 2.Pet.2.4. Iud.6. But their full damnation is reſerued for the day of the Lord, Matth.25.41. They are not yet tormented in ſuch meaſure, as they ſhall be, and themſelues make account for, Matth.8.29. Luk.8.31.

*Argum.*3. 1.Iohn 3.2. Wee know, that when he ſhall appeare, wee ſhall be like him. This Scripture ſheweth, that we ſhall not haue a perfect conſummation of glory before the day of iudgement.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the text is not When he ſhall appeare, but as before the Apoſtle ſaid, It doth not appeare, what we ſhall be, ſo here, when it (not he) ſhall appeare, what we ſhall be: ſo that this place ſheweth onely that the glory of the Saints ſhall not be manifeſted to the world before that day, not that they ſhall not haue their glory before. Bellarm.lib.de ſanctis c.3.

Contra. Who ſeeth not how he corrupteth this text: for what elſe can be the ſenſe of this place, Cum apparuerit, ſimiles ei erimus: then this, when he, (not it) ſhall appeare, we ſhall be like him: what him, ſhall we be like, but the ſame that is vnderſtood to appeare? Againe, that Chriſt is here implied to appeare, it is manifeſt by the like place, Coloſſ.3.4. When Chriſt, which is our life, ſhall appeare, then ſhall we appeare with him in glorie: So then, the perfection of our glorie is deferred till Chriſts comming.

Laſtly, if now the Saints are equall to the Angels in ioye, their ſoules onely being in heauen: it then followeth, that in their reſurrection, when their bodies ſhall be reſtored to their ſoules, their happines ſhall farre ° exceed the Angels: which no where the Scripture teacheth vs, vnleſſe they will thus reaſon, Chriſt tooke not the Angels, but the ſeede of Abraham, Hebr.2.16. Ergo, we are better then the Angels. But to this Auguſtine anſwereth very well: Some perhaps will ſay, that we are better then the Angels, becauſe Chriſt died for vs, and not for the Angels. Quale eſt (ſaith he) ideo ſe velle agrotum laudari, quia vitio ſuo tam deteſtabiliter ægrotauit, vt non poſſet aliter, quam medici morte ſanari. As if a ſicke man deſerued commendation, becauſe by his owne fault, he was ſo dangerouſly ſicke, that he could not be healed, but by the death of the Phiſition. Quid hoc aliud eſt, quàm de impietate gloriari? Chriſtus enim pro impijs mortuus eſt: What is this els but for man to boaſt of his wickednes? Chriſt died not for Angels, but for men, becauſe they were wicked.

Tractat.in Iohan.110.

Now, whereas Bellarmine reproueth Caluine for thus writing, Animas piorum militiæ labore perfunctas in beatam quietem concedere, vbi cum fœlici lætitia fruitionem promiſſæ gloriæ expectant: That the ſoules of the godly hauing ended their warfare, are gone vnto bleſſed reſt, where moſt ioyfully they doe expect the full fruition of the promiſed glorie. And the Ieſuite further giueth this vncharitable cenſure: Nota miram ſtultitiam hominis: See the great fooliſhnes of the man. Now it ſhall eaſily appeare, that Caluine ſaith none other thing, then was concluded by the Greeke and Latine Church in the Florentine Councell: in proœmio. Animas iuſtorum perfectam ſuam fælicitatem, quatenus animæ, conſecutas cenſemus; ita tamen vt aliam cum corporibus ſuis perfectionem expectent, qua perpetuò fruantur: We doe thinke that the ſoules of the righteous haue alreadie obtained their perfect felicitie, as they are ſoules; yet ſo, that they looke for a more perfect ſtate with their bodies, for euer to enioy. Thus Bellarmine either of malice or ignorance, chargeth a general Councell with fooliſhnes, ſeeing he rayleth vpon Caluin, for ſpeaking or writing, as it was by this generall Councell decreed.

Their owne Canons conſent hereunto: *Decret.Greg.lib.*3.*tit.*41.*ca.*6. It is confeſſed by *Innocent.*3. Sanctorum gloriam vſque ad iudicium augmentari: That the glorie of the Saints doth encreaſe till the day of iudgement. And the Maſter alloweth their opinion as more probable, that hold, that Angeli vſque ad diem iudicij ſcientia & alijs proficiant, Angels doe encreaſe in knowledge and other things till the day of iudgement, *lib.*2.*diſtinct.*11.g. If the glorie of Angels is not yet perfect, much leſſe of the Saints, who yet expect the redemption of their bodies.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE Canonizing of Saints.

The Papiſts.

THe canonizing of Saints, is nothing els but the publike determination and ſentence of the Church, whereby men that are dead, are iudged to be Saints, and worthie of honour and worſhip, as to be prayed vnto, Temples and Altars to be ſet vp in their names, holy dayes to be appoynted for them, and their reliques to be adored. And thus it is lawfull, profitable, and expedient for the Church to canonize Saints, *Bellarm.cap.*7. 23.Error.

*Argum.*1. The Patriarkes and Prophets were canonized for Saints in the old lawe, Heb.11. So Act.7. Stephen and other were canonized: therefore it is credible, that the Lord would haue the ſame order ſtill continued in his Church, *Bellarm.cap.*7.

Anſw. Firſt, neither in the old nor the new lawe, were any ſet vp to be Saints, with intent to be worſhipped, called vpon, Temples to be conſecrated in their names; but onely the Scripture giueth teſtimonie of them, as of holy and faithfull men: and ſo may we alſo honour the bleſſed Martyrs, whom the cruell Emperours of Rome, and ſince them the Popes of Rome haue ſent through fire and other torments to heauen. Secondly, when they haue as good teſtimonie for their Saints, as we haue for the holy Patriarkes and Prophets, they may be bold to pronounce them to be holy, bleſſed. Thirdly, your argument followeth not, vnleſſe you will ſay, that the Church may doe all things nowe, which the Prophets and Apoſtles did then: They may as well make Scripture, and more Canonicall bookes by the ſame reaſon, as make and canonize new Saints.

*Argum.*2. The Saints are vnto vs examples of vertue, and to be imitated, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Remember your ouerſeers, which haue ſpoken to you the word of God, the end of whoſe conuerſation beholding, imitate their faith, Heb.13.7. But how can wee imitate them, vnleſſe wee know in particular who are to be imitated? Bellarm.

Anſ. Firſt, the Apoſtle propoundeth the example of their paſtors then liuing, to be imitated of them, whoſe conuerſation they did behold. This place maketh nothing for the imitation of canonized Saints, dead many yeeres agoe: whoſe life and conuerſation is not certainly knowne. Secondly, we neede not runne to popiſh fables, to ſeeke patternes to follow, we may ſet before vs the example of godly men liuing; or if they faile vs, we haue moſt perfect examples in Scripture: as S. Paul ſaith, Be followers of me, as I am of Chriſt, 1. Cor. 11. 1. and obſerue them, as you haue vs for an example, Philip. 3. 17. Thirdly, if popiſh Saints ſhould bee imitated, then Thomas Becket muſt bee followed in his rebellion to the King; Bonauenture in his blaſphemie againſt Chriſt, aſcribing the worke of our ſaluation to the Virgin Mary, as may bee ſeene in his Ladie Pſalter, compiled to the honour of her: and many ſuch goodly examples ſhall wee finde in the liues and acts of popiſh Saints.

The Proteſtants.

THat none of the Saints are to be adored or worſhipped, their images, or reliques, or prayers to be made vnto them, or any ſuch honour to be giuen them, it ſhall afterward appeare more at large: and therefore they ought not to bee canonized to any ſuch end or purpoſe. Wee alſo graunt, that the number of Gods Saints and elect is increaſed daily: and wee are ſure in generall, as the Scripture teſtifieth, that the death of his Saints is precious in the ſight of God, Pſalme 116. 15. And that all are bleſſed that die in the Lord: But particularly wee are not able certainly to determine of any; the matter is to be left wholly vnto God, and we in the meane time to hope the beſt.

Argum. 1. If the Church haue authoritie to canonize Saints, and determine of the election or ſaluation of men, then may wee as well iudge of the condemnation of thoſe that are loſt: for if it be knowne to the Church who are Saints in heauen, they alſo may as well define who are damned in hell. But this none can doe: nay, it were great raſhnes and want of charitie for any ſo to take vpon them. Saint Paul ſaith, Why condemneſt thou another mans ſeruant? he ſtandeth or falleth to his owne maſter, Rom. 14. 4. No man can iudge whether the ſeruant ſtand or fall, but his maſter: Ergo, if the Church preſume to determine of the election or damnation of thoſe that are departed, ſhe is now a Miſtris and Ladie rather of the Saints, then they Lords or patrones to her, as the Papiſts hold they are.

Argum. 2. Iudge not (ſaith S. Paul 1. Corinth. 4. 5.) before the time vntill the Lord come. The iudgement then of men, who are ſaued, and who are condemned, is reſerued for the comming of Chriſt: Therefore it is great preſumption for men to preuent the time, and to take vpon them to be Iudges in Gods place. Againe, our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith, that To ſit at his right hand or left, in his kingdome, was not his to giue (meaning as he was man) but it ſhall be giuen to them for whom it is prepared of my father, Matth. 20. 23. How then is it in the power of any ſinfull man, to giue vnto any a ſeate, either at the right hand, or left hand of Chriſt, in the kingdome God? Argument. Gualter. Bruti. Fox. pag. 487.

Auguſtine alſo conſenteth, Non ſeparatio iam cuiq; tuta eſt, &c. It is not ſafe for men now to make ſeparation (of the good and bad) it belongeth to him, that cannot erre: We in this life doe hardly know our ſelues, how much leſſe ought we to iudge raſhly of others? expoſit. in Pſal. 139. Here are two reaſons giuen, why it is not lawfull for men to iudge of the election or reprobation of men: firſt, their iudgement is ſubiect to error, and therefore the matter muſt be referred to God, who erreth not. Secondly, we cannot iudge our ſelues, much leſſe can we iudge of others: Ergo, no man liuing ought, or is able to define either who are Saints in heauen, or who are damned in hell.

Anaſtaſius decret. 2. Monente nos beatiſſimo Paulo Apoſtolo, &c. Know ye, that, as the Apoſtle Paul doth admoniſh vs, wee muſt obſerue, and take heede, that there ariſe no offence in the Church, while we take vpon vs to doe that which we cannot, that is, to iudge thoſe which are gone out of the world: for none of vs liueth or dieth to himſelfe, but whether we liue or dye, we are the Lords? wherefore, why iudgeſt thou another mans ſeruant, &c. Here wee haue the iudgement of a Pope himſelfe, grounded vpon S. Pauls iudgement, that it is not in the power of the liuing to iudge the dead, either in condemning or acquiting them.

AN APPENDIX OR THIRD PART, OF OTHER circumſtances, which belong to the canonizing of Saints.

The Papiſts.

24. Error. THey ſay, that it doth appertaine onely to the Pope, to canonize a Saint for the whole Church: and that none ought to be acknowledged for Saints, but they that are ſo canonized by him: And that herein the Pope is of ſo infallible a iudgement, that he cannot erre in canonizing of Saints; becauſe that ordinarily none are canonized by the Pope for Saints, which haue not been knowne to worke miracles, Bellarm. lib. 1. cap. 8. 9. 10.

Argum. 1. That it belongeth to the Pope to canonize Saints, Bellarmine thus proueth: to define and declare who are heretikes, appertaineth to the Pope: Ergo, the contrarie alſo, to determine who are Saints in heauen.

Anſ. Firſt, the argument followeth not, the Pope may iudge of men according to their preſent ſtate in this life: Ergo, of their ſtate afterward. For an heretike is diſcerned according to that he preſently holdeth and teacheth, who may afterwards be conuerted from his hereſie: as Saint Paul ſaith, he had deliuered Hymenæus and Alexander to Sathan, that they might learne not to blaſpheme, 1. Timoth. 1. 20. Though the Apoſtle for the preſent caſteth them out as heretikes, yet he deſpaireth not of their conuerſion: wherefore to bee an heretike and a reprobate doe not alwaies concurre, and therefore the argument followeth not: For to bee an heretike and a Saint are not contraries: he that is firſt an heretike, being conuerted, may become a Saint, as S. Paul of a perſecutor was made a preacher.

Secondly, it belongeth not to the Pope to determine, who are heretikes; but euery Church hath power to declare by the Scriptures what hereſie is, and who are heretikes: the Apoſtles haue giuen vs rules to know heretikes by; as 1. Cor. 16. 22. If any man loue not the Lord Ieſus let him bee anathema: according to this rule, all that detract from the humanitie of Chriſt, as yͤ Anabaptiſts; or frō his diuinitie, as the Arrians; or frō his offices, as the Papiſts, are heretikes. Again, 2. Theſſ. 3. 14. If any man obey not our doctrine, note him. And, 1. Ioh. 4. verſ. 3. Euery ſpirit that confeſſeth not that Ieſus Chriſt is come in the fleſh, is not of God. According to theſe and ſuch like rules in Scripture, it is lawfull for euery Church to define an heretike, and for euery man to auoide him. Tit. 3. 10. An heretike, after the firſt and ſecond admonition, auoide. It is but a ridiculous toy, that wee muſt ſend vp to Rome firſt, to know the Popes pleaſure, who ſhould be counted an heretike.

Thirdly, the Popes are no fit men to iudge of hereſie, ſeeing many of them haue been heretikes: as Marcellinus an Idolater, Liberius an Arrian, Honorius a Monothelite, with many more, as wee haue ſeene before in the controuerſie of the Pope.

Argum. 2. Now that the Pope cannot erre in canonizing of Saints, he would make vs beleeue, becauſe there hath yet been no error detected that way: the Pope hath Sainted none which were not Saintes indeede.

Anſ. The contrarie is true, that he hath canonized many notorious rebels, and other wicked perſons, as Thomas Becket of Canturburie, Hugh of Lincolne, both rebels to their Prince, with many more, as further followeth preſently to be ſhewed Argum. 3. and therefore, becauſe the Pope is and hath been ſo groſlie deceiued in canonizing of Saints, he may bee aſhamed to iuſtifie his palpable errors.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, if Saints were to bee regiſtred and canonized, as they ſay; yet it ſhould not belong to the Pope, but to the whole Church.

Argum. 1. The Pope hath no authoritie ouer the whole Church; no nor yet in any other Biſhops dioceſſe, no more then they haue in his: Let him be content with his owne dioceſſe (and it were to bee wiſhed, that he could rule that well) the whole world is too large a prouince for him. Secondly, the whole Church hath power to excommunicate and deliuer vp to Sathan, 1. Cor. 5. 4. and to cut off the prophane and wicked from the Church of God, as Heathen and Publicanes, Matth. 18. 17. Ergo, to iudge who are members of the Church, and Saints of God, is a matter which appertaineth to the whole Church. Thirdly, before anno 800. in the time of Carolus Magnus, there was no Saint publikely canonized by the Pope, as Bellarmine confeſſeth: but the truth is, this cuſtome of canonizing Saints began not til more then 1000. yere after Chriſt, till Alexander the 3. his time, and Gregorie the 7. I pray you then, were there no Saints before? if there were, who canonized them?

Argum. 2. So much as is to be knowne of Saints and holy men, euery Chriſtian is to acknowledge, without any publike decree or determination of the Pope or any other: for the word of God giueth rules, whereby we may diſcerne the righteous from the vnrighteous: Chriſt ſpeaking of falſe prophets, ſaith, By their fruites ye ſhall know them, Matth. 7. 16. And againe, he ſaith thus to his Apoſtles, By this ſhall men know that you are my diſciples, if you loue one another, Ioh. 13. verſ. 35. By theſe rules, it is eaſie for euery Chriſtian to iudge who for the preſent time are the true diſciples of Chriſt, who otherwiſe.

Argum. 3. It is a moſt impudent and ſhameleſſe ſaying, that the Pope cannot erre in canonizing of Saints: Firſt, Miracles are no ſufficient proofe of a Saint: for many, that ſhall be condemned in the day of iudgement, haue had power to doe ſtrange workes, Matth. 7. 22. 23. Secondly, what better argument can wee haue of this, then common experience? For the Popes haue regiſtred in their Calendars notorious wicked men, and traitors to their Princes, as Saints and holie men: Such an one was Thomas Becket, who ſome hundreth yeeres was worſhipped as a Saint, by the name of Saint Thomas of Canturburie; and yet was a plaine traitor to his Prince, Fox pag. 225. And therefore his ſhrine was iuſtly put downe in King Henry the 8. daies. Richard Scroope of Yorke was openly in armes againſt Henry the 4. Thomas Earle of Lancaſter a rebell againſt Edward the 2. yet both are the Popes canonized Saints.

Fox pag.579.

Elizabeth Barton was called the holy Mayd of Kent, and fained that ſhe had many reuelations: yet was found to be a traitor, and executed: Theſe are the Popes Saints. And on the other ſide, they haue condemned the true Saints and Martyrs of God, and accurſed them to the bottomleſſe pit of hell: as they dealt moſt wickedly with Iohn Huſſe that zealous ſeruant of God, vpon whoſe head they ſet a crowne of paper pictured with diuels, as if he were giuen vnto the power of Satan. But wee doe iudge of theſe holy men, as the Scripture teacheth, which ſaith, that they are bleſſed which dye in the Lord, Apocal. 14. 13. Their good life, holy profeſſion, and conſtant death and martyrdome declared no leſſe; and that aſſurance, which God gaue them of their election: as it appeared in that worthie Martyr Doctor Barnes, who being brought to the ſtake, ſaith thus vnto the people; If Saints doe pray for vs, I truſt to pray for you within this halfe houre: who at the ſame time vttered his opinion, that notwithſtanding to pray vnto Saints was againſt the word of God, although it ſhould be graunted that they pray for vs.

Let them now be aſhamed to ſay ſtil, that the Pope cannot erre in canonizing Saints, who condemneth good men, and iuſtifieth the wicked, according to the common ſaying, Many are worſhipped for Saints in heauen, whoſe ſoules doe burne in hell.

If the Pope herein be of ſo infallible a iudgement, how came it to paſſe, that Bonifacius the 8. did cauſe Hermannus Ferrarienſ. who had been canonized for a Saint, after 30. yeeres to bee taken out of his graue, and burned, anno 1300. Either he, by whom he was firſt canonized, or elſe Bonifacius, by whom he was vncanonized or vnſainted, muſt needs haue groſly erred. And is it not as poſſible for the Pope to be deceiued in iudging who are Saints, as Tertullian and Origen erred in commending of Pilate and his wife for good Chriſtians? Tertull. apologet. cap. 21. by which authorities ſome were moued to canonize them for Saints. And Decret. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 45 cap. 1. mention is made of one, that was ſlaine in his drunkennes, whom they worſhipped for a Saint. But it will bee anſwered, that Alexander the 3. reproueth that abuſe in the ſame decree. But what will they ſay concerning the Saints of Rome, that are worſhipped vnder the Popes noſe, and by his allowance; ſhall they all goe for currant, and true Saints indeede? Let them heare what Lindanus an archpapiſt complaineth of this matter: Breuiaria etiam Romanum nouum feſta quædam habent ſanctorum, quorum nomina, neſcio an ſatis ſint vindicata, &c. The Breuiaries or Maſſe-bookes, yea the new Romane Breuiarie hath many feſtiuals of Saints, whoſe names, I know not whether they are ſufficiently tried and purged. He affirmeth, that euen in Rome many obſcure and vnknowne Saints were worſhipped.

Fourthly, Auguſtine thus writeth of this matter: Per has humanorum cordium tenebras, res multùm miranda & dolenda contingit, vt eum nonnunquam quem iniuſtum putamus (iuſtus tamen eſt) auerſemur, & hominem bonum tanquam malum affligamus, quem neſcientes amamus: By reaſon of the darknes and ignorance of mens hearts, a pitifull and ſtrange thing many times falleth out, that we ſhould hate a man, whom we take to be a wicked and vngodly one (and yet he is a righteous man:) and ſo we puniſh a good man for a bad, whom wee notwithſtanding doe vnwittingly loue for his goodnes, Tract. in Iohan. 99. Ergo, the iudgement of men is vncertaine, and the beſt may bee deceiued in iudging of others, who are bad, and who good.

If all the Popes canonized Saints are to be worſhipped, prayers to bee made vnto them, holie daies, and Churches to bee conſecrate to their memorie, wherein (as the Ieſuite telleth vs) conſiſteth the canonization of Saints: hereby it may appeare what ſmall diſcretion the Popes haue ſhewed in their canonizing, in bringing ſuch an idle and ſuperfluous multitude into the Saints Calendar: that it were impoſſible for a man to remember all ſuch Saints names, that are to bee prayed to; Alexander anno 1180. did canonize Bernard Clareuallenſ. and Thomas of Canturburie: Innocentius 4. anno 1250. Edmund of Canturburie, Staniſlaus Biſhop of Cracouia, and Peter Veronenſ. a Dominicane: Alexander 4. anno 1260. did canonize Clara, Francis his ſiſter, the father of the Franciſcanes: Nicholaus 4. Ledouik. Tolcſan. a Minorite: Bonifacius 8. Ledouike the French King: Clement 6. did canonize Iue a Prieſt anno 1350. Nicholaus 5. did make Bernardine Senenſ. a Franciſcane, a Saint: anno 1455. Calixtus 3. did adde to the Calendar Vincentius Valentinenſ. a Dominicane, Albert. Depranenſ. a Carmelite: Pius 2. did magnifie one Angelus a Carmelite, and Katherine Senenſ. anno 1464. Sixtus 4. Bonauenture: anno 1484. Innocentius 8. Heliopoldus Duke of Auſtria: And many hundreds more haue been by the Popes aduanced to the dignitie of Saints, ſome Kings, ſome Dukes, ſome Biſhops, ſome Prieſts, ſome Friers, ſome Widowes, ſome Virgins: ſo that the dayes of the yeere are not enough for euery Saint to haue his day. Now let it bee conſidered, whether the Pope hath not good skill in ſainting of men, thus multiplying without end the number of his houſe-gods.

THE SECOND QVESTION, CONCERNING the adoration of Saints.

THis queſtion hath three parts: Firſt, whether Saints are to bee adored. Secondly, of the diuers kindes of adoration. Thirdly, concerning the worſhip due vnto holy men liuing, as the kiſſing of feete, and ſuch like.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER SAINTS are to be adored and worſhipped.

The Papiſts.

25.Error.

THey doubt not to affirme, that there is a kinde of religious worſhip due vnto Saints, not that great religious worſhip which is proper vnto God, but a kinde ſomewhat leſſe and inferiour to that; yet a religious adoration, which is the meane or middeſt betweene that higheſt worſhip due vnto God, and ciuill honour which is giuen vnto men. So this is their ſentence, that religious worſhip is due both to God and to the Saints: herein onely (ſay they) the difference is, the more religious worſhip belongeth onely to God, the leſſe vnto the Saints, Bellarm. cap.12.lib.1.de Sanctor.beatit.

*Argum.*1. Bellarmine obiecteth certaine examples out of Scripture of the adoration of Angels, as how Abraham adored the Angels, Gen.18.2.and Lot, Gen.19.1. and Ioſua alſo adored the Angel that appeared vnto him, Ioſu.5.therefore Angels, and ſo conſequently Saints, may ſafely be adored and worſhipped.

Anſw. Firſt, it is certaine that the Angel, whom Abraham worſhippeth, was God himſelfe, euen Chriſt, that appeared in the ſhape of an Angel; for verſ.17.he is called Iehouah, which name is neuer in Scripture giuen to any Angell: and verſ.25. Abraham calleth him Iudge of the world, which is Chriſts office onely; ſo alſo the Angell that appeared to Ioſua, was Chriſt himſelfe; for Ioſua calleth him Lord, and himſelfe his ſeruant: But the Angels doe not preſume to take vs as their ſeruants, but acknowledge themſelues to be our fellow ſeruants vnto the ſame Lord, theirs and ours, Reuel.22.9. And this is the iudgement of diuers of the ancient Fathers, and namely Origen; Ioſua non adoraſſet eum, niſi agnouiſſet Deum, &c. Ioſua would not haue worſhipped him, if he had not knowne him to be God, for who elſe is the Prince of the Lords warfare, but the Lord Ieſus Chriſt? hom.6.in Ioſu.

Secondly, it can not be ſhewed out of the text, that Lot did worſhip the two Angels that came to Sodome, but did onely make obeiſance, and bow himſelfe vnto them, as excellent and heauenly perſons: for the word שחה ſignifieth an inclination and bowing of the bodie, as Iacob is ſaid to bow himſelfe to his brother Eſau, Geneſ.33.this therefore was no religious adoration, but a ſeemely reuerence, which might be giuen to thoſe glorious ſpirits.

Thirdly, the Angels of the old Teſtament, and the Angels of the new are all one; but in the new Teſtament, the Angels refuſe to be adored, Reuel.22.9. Ergo, the Angels of the old Teſtament did not receiue it.

*Argum.*2. The Pſalmiſt ſaith, Adore his footeſtoole, Pſalm.99.5.and Hebr.11.21.Iacob adored the top of his rod: Ergo, it is lawfull to adore creatures, *Bellarm.cap.*13. *Rhemiſt.annot.*11. *Heb. ſect.*9.

Anſw. In the firſt place by the footeſtoole is vnderſtood the Tabernacle with the Arke: the Prophet ſaith not, Adore his footeſtoole, but, At or before his footeſtoole: for we deny not, but that we may kneele downe, and fall proſtrate in adoring of God before ſuch things, but none is to be adored but God. In the ſame place the Apoſtle ſaith, that Iacob worſhipped towarde the end of his ſtaffe, that is, leaning vpon his ſtaffe. The vulgar latine readeth corruptly, adorauit faſtigium baculi, He worſhipped the end of his ſtaffe: for then the Greeke prepoſition ἐπὶ were ſuperfluous. And Auguſtine expoundeth it aright, ſaying, that Iacob by faith worſhipped God vpon the end of his ſtaffe: *quæſt.in Gen.*162.*Fulk.annot.Heb.*11.*ſect.*9.

*Argum.*3. Nabuchadnezzar bowed himſelfe to Daniel, and cauſed odours to be offered vnto him, and worſhipped him, who for ſo doing was not reproued of the Prophet: Ergo, Saints are to be worſhipped, *Bellar.ibid.Rhemenſ.annot. Apocal.*19.*ſect.*5.

Anſw. Firſt, your owne vulgar text thus readeth, The king commanded, Vt ſacrificarent ei hoſtiam: To ſacrifice an hoſt vnto him: and Arias Montanus tranſlateth Sacrificium, to offer a ſacrifice vnto him; but to offer ſacrifice, is a part of the diuine and godly worſhip: ſo that the king commanding ſacrifice to be made to Daniel, doth attribute vnto him ſuperſtitiouſly diuine worſhip. Bellarmine anſwereth, that the ſacrifice of beaſts, is that ſacrifice, which is peculiar vnto God; but as for odors and other gifts, they may be yeelded vnto men: as 1.Reg.10.certaine of the Iſraelites refuſed to bring gifts vnto Saul, the ſame word (מנחה) is there vſed: and we (ſaith he) do cenſe vp odours before the images of Saints, though wee graunt that ſacrifice is onely due vnto God. *Bellar.cap.*13.*argum.*3.

Contra. Firſt, that the Hebrue word (מנחה) here vſed, is ſometime taken for a ciuill gift, wee graunt, as in the place alleadged, and Gen.32.13. where Iacob ſent a gift or preſent to Eſau: but in this place it ſignifieth a religious oblation, in which ſenſe he cannot finde in all Scripture, that it was giuen to any mortall man; but onely was due vnto God, as Ierem.41.5. they had offrings and incenſe in their hands to offer in the houſe of God: And this word, when it is vſed in a religious ſenſe, is taken onely for ſacrifice due vnto God; as 1.Reg.18.29. when they had prophecied till the time of the euening Sacrifice; and 2.Reg.3.20. in the morning, when the Sacrifice vſeth to be offred: in both theſe places the word מנחה is vſed. Secondly, whereas he granteth, Sacrificium non deberi niſi ſoli Deo: That ſacrifice is not due but vnto God, it followeth, that the king committed Idolatrie, in ſacrificing to Daniel, as your owne Vulgar readeth. Thirdly, it is great impietie in him to allow the cenſing of odours to Saints, or Saints images, whereas in the olde Law it was a part of the worſhip of God; as may appeare Ierem.41.5. they brought odours and incenſe: And it may be gathered, that the offring of incenſe was the more principall part of the ſacrifice; as it followeth euen now to be ſhewed.

Secondly, it is vntrue, that Daniel accepted of this worſhip and reproued it not: Firſt, though it be not mentioned, it followeth not, that he miſliked it not: for neyther is the inceſt of Lot Geneſ.19. nor of Iudas, Gen.38. cenſured in the ſtorie, doth it follow therfore that they were iuſtified? Secondly, it may be diuerſly gathered that Daniel miſliked the kings purpoſe: Firſt, becauſe frō the beginning, he giueth the glorie vnto God, and telleth the King, that it was the God in heauen, that was the onely Reuealer of ſecrets, verſ.27. and therefore it is not like, that Daniel would take the honor vnto himſelfe. Secondly, becauſe the King afterward verſ.47. being better inſtructed by Daniel, giueth God the honor, ſaying he was GOD of Gods, and ſo onely to be worſhipped. Thirdly, verſ.48. he magnifieth Daniel now as Gods inſtrument, and beſtoweth great gifts vpon him, whereas he offered ſacrifice before.

The Proteſtants.

WE can finde in the word of God but two kindes of worſhip or adoration; a religious worſhip onely due vnto God: and a ciuill honour vſed amongſt men. As for the Angels and Saints, we doe honour them with loue, not with ſeruice. We doe alſo reuerence the holy men vpon earth, as the Prophets and Apoſtles were in times paſt, with a ciuill adoration or worſhip of loue, not with a religious ſeruice. There is alſo a due reuerence and eſtimation of ſuch things as are ſanctified to holy vſes, as of the Tabernacle, Arke, Altar, Sacrifice in the lawe: ſuch now are the Sacraments, which are duely to be reuerenced, yet not to be adored, or kneeled vnto. So we conclude, that all religious ſeruice and worſhip belongeth onely vnto God, and it were great idolatrie to giue it to any other, Fulk.annot. Apocal.*19.*ſect.*5.

Argum.*1. The Scripture is plaine: Matth.4.10. Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him onely ſhalt thou ſerue. 1.Tim.1.17. To God onely wiſe, immortall, inuiſible, be all honour and glorie: Ergo, all religious worſhip is onely due vnto God. Bellarmine anſwereth, that theſe places are to be vnderſtoode of a certaine kinde of religious worſhip, which is onely proper to God. Anſw. All religious worſhip is forbidden in theſe places to be giuen to any but vnto God: for Sathan did not tempt Chriſt, to worſhip him as God, but onely to fall downe and worſhip him: he asked onely of him, προσκύνησιν, a certaine inclination of the body, which Chriſt denieth, as being onely proper to God, Caluini Argum.

Argum.*2. When Cornelius fell downe at Peters feete and would haue worſhipped him, hee was forbidden by Peter, Act.10.25. So the Angell would not ſuffer Iohn to worſhip him, Apocal.22. Paul and Barnabas ſtayed the people that would haue offered ſacrifice vnto them, Act.14.14.

Bellarm. anſwereth to the firſt, that Peter of modeſtie refuſed the homage of Cornelius.

Anſw. Peter giueth this reaſon, why he would not haue Cornelius ſo to doe, I alſo am a man (ſaith he:) thereby letting him to vnderſtand, that ſuch kind of worſhip ought not to be giuen to any man. The ſame reaſon is rendred Acts 14. by Paul and Barnabas, why they refuſed ſacrifice: We alſo (ſay they) are men. If Peter did of modeſty refuſe Cornelius worſhip, then Paul and Barnabas did for modeſtie ſake onely likewiſe refuſe to be ſacrificed vnto, which I am ſure they will not grant.

Bellarmine to the ſecond ſaith, that Iohn did well in worſhipping the Angell, and the Angel did well in refuſing to be worſhipped: for though the Angels of right are to be worſhipped, yet they do well to refuſe it, for reuerence to the humanitie and manhood of Chriſt: Before the comming of Chriſt, Angels ſuffered themſelues to be adored; but ſince that the Angels after Chriſts incarnation did worſhip man in him, they would not be worſhipped of men, eſpecially of the Apoſtles poſtles: who although they refuſe to be worſhipped, yet we do well to worſhip them.

Anſw. Firſt, let it be noted that Bellarmine ſhapeth a cleane contrary anſwere to our Rhemiſts, as appeareth before, *cont.*8.*quaeſt.*3.*part.*1. For they ſay, that Iohn was deceiued in the perſon of the Angell, taking him for Chriſt, and is forbidden by the Angell to worſhip him as God: but Bellarmine altogether freeth Iohn from all error, and commendeth his doing: whereas it is certaine, that Iohn knew well inough that he was an Angell, but being caried away in the extaſie of his minde, did for the preſent time forget himſelfe. Secondly, that the Angell did not of modeſtie refuſe to be worſhipped, but abſolutely and ſimply, it is made manifeſt by his anſwere to Iohn, Worſhip thou God: he would not haue the Apoſtle to worſhip him, but God. And againe the Angell ſaith, I am thy fellow ſeruant, &c. but it is vnmeete for one fellow ſeruant to worſhip another, they both haue but one Lord to worſhip: wherefore the Angell meaneth indeed, that hee ought not to be worſhipped, and doth not of modeſtie refuſe it. This alſo is Auguſtines iudgement; Angelus multa diuina oſtendens homini, ab homine adorebatur, ayt ille ſe reuocans ad Dominum, &c. The Angell ſhewing many diuine things to man, was worſhipped of man, but he referring him to God, ſaith, worſhip him, for I am thy fellow ſeruant, homil. de paſtorib.

Thirdly, where findeth hee that Angels in all the olde Teſtament ſuffered themſelues to be adored: he can ſhew neyther precept nor practiſe for the adoration of Angels: And that the Angels ſince Chriſts comming did depart from their right, it is a prophane conceit, and derogatorie to Chriſt, as though he by his comming empaired the ſtate of Angels, which by him is made glorious: And if our Sauiour would haue the chaire of Moſes reuerenced, though euill men ſate in it, Matth.23.2. it was not his pleaſure, that the dignitie of thoſe holy Spirits ſhould be abated.

Bellarmine to the third ſayth, that the Apoſtles did well in refuſing to be ſacrificed vnto: becauſe to offer ſacrifice is an externall act of worſhip to be performed onely to God, *cap.*14.

*Anſw.*1. What reaſon haue they to burne incenſe vnto Saints and their images, rather then to offer ſacrifice? For it appeareth in the law, that the burning of incenſe was more precious, and a more high poynt of the Leuiticall ſeruice, then was the offering of ſacrifice. Firſt, the Altar of incenſe was more curiouſly made, being ouerlayd with fine golde, and was called the golden altar; the other for burnt offerings, the brazen altar, Exod.40.26. Secondly, the altar of incenſe was placed in the Tabernacle neere vnto the moſt holy place; the other altar ſtood at the doore without, Exod.40.26.29. Thirdly, the miniſters were diuers: the Prieſts offered ſacrifice in their courſes; but Aaron onely, and his ſucceſſors the high Prieſts burned incenſe, Exod.30.7. Fourthly, Vpon the brazen altar incenſe was offered with other ſacrifices, Leuit.2. but vpon the golden altar no burnt ſacrifice or any oblation, but onely incenſe was offered vnto God. Fiftly, Of all offerings and oblations, it moſt liuely prefigureth the ſacrifice of attonement wrought by Chriſt vpon the croſſe, who therefore is called by the Apoſtle, A ſacrifice of ſweete ſmelling ſauour vnto God, Epheſ.5.2. Seeing then that the offering of incenſe was a more ſoueraigne thing in the Law, then was the oblation of ſacrifices: there is ſmall reaſon for it, that our aduerſaries ſhould reſerue the leſſe, that is, the offering of ſacrifices for the Lord, and participate the greater and more worthy ſeruice, that is, cenſing of odours and perfumes vnto Saints, as Bellarmine doth, *cap.*13.

*Anſw.*2. If ſacrifice were not then to be offered to Saints, much leſſe are prayers to be made now vnto them: for to call vpon God is a greater thing, then to offer ſacrifice. Pſalm.50.verſ.8.14. If Saints cannot challenge the leſſe, that is, to haue ſacrifices, they haue no right to the greater, namely, to be called vpon and prayed vnto.

Laſtly, Auguſtine ſaith, Non ſit nobis Religio cultus hominum mortuorum, &c. Let vs not make it any part of Religion to worſhip men that are dead: for if they liued well, they are now in that ſtate, that they neede not, neither doe require any honour at our hands: but they would haue vs to worſhip God; by whoſe illumination or reuelation, they may vnderſtand, and doe reioyce, that we are partakers and fellowes in the ſame faith. They are then to be honoured for imitation, not to be adored for Religion, *Haec Auguſt. de vera Religion. cap.*55.

Bellarmines anſwere here to S. Auguſtine is very meane, that he ſpeaketh againſt the error of the Gentiles, who made wicked men departed their Gods: *lib.*1.*de Sanct. cap.*14.Contra. But Auguſtine ſpeaketh not of wicked men, but of ſuch, as, piè vixerunt, liued a godly life, and are to be imitated: but ſo are not the wicked. Therefore his meaning is, that no men, though neuer ſo godly, or worthie of imitation in their life, are to be adored, or worſhipped: The Ieſuite we ſee then faileth in his anſwere.

*Synod. Moguntin. cap.*45. Sancti, qui vitae huius curſum beato fine clauſerunt, &c. The Saints, who haue happily ended this life, as the moſt noble members of Chriſts body, are worthily of vs to be honoured, not with that worſhip, which is due vnto God, but with the worſhip of loue and brotherly fellowſhip, as we worſhip or reuerence holy men in this life. The argument from hence is framed thus, As holy men are to be worſhipped in this life, ſo are the Saints in heauen: but no religious worſhip is due vnto them here, but onely of loue, &c. Ergo.

A ciuill adoration then we denie not to be due vnto holy men, ſuch as the ciuill law aſcribeth to Princes: Cod.lib.2.tit.9.l.6. Noſtram adoraturos purpuream: They are ſaid to adore the Kinges robes, that is, the kingly Maieſtie: but this is farre from religious adoration.

I will in the laſt place alleadge the ſentence of a learned Papiſt againſt the adoration of Saints: namely Driedo, who thus writeth, There be certaine ſtories of the Saints to be ſuſpected, &c. Vt cùm narrantur ſancti in mortis agone conſtituti, aut monuiſſe aut exegiſſe, vt ex hoc mundo tranſlati colerentur, &c. As when the Saints are reported in the agonie of death, to haue warned or required, that after they were gone out of this world, they ſhould be worſhipped, and in diſeaſes and other dangers to be called vpon; for it is not like, that they paſſing out of the world were carefull for their honour, but would pray rather with Dauid, Lord enter not into iudgement with thy ſeruant: de libris Apocryph.lib.4.c.1. Thus farre one of their owne, miſliking the adoration of Saints.

Maſter Lambert holy Martyr hath ſealed this truth: who out of Auguſtine here before alleadged doth thus inferre, that we ſhould worſhip no men departed, be they neuer ſo good or holy, for they ſeeke no ſuch honour, but that we ſhould worſhip God alone: Honoramus eos (ſaith Auguſtine) charitate non ſeruitute: we honour them with loue, not with any worſhip or ſeruice: Fox.pag. 1108.col.1.

AN APPENDIX TO THIS FIRST PART, CONcerning vowes and othes made to or by Saints.

The Papiſts.

26.Error. FIrſt, vowes may be made to Saints (ſay they) properly as vnto God, though not altogether in the ſame manner: Prayer may be made to Saints, therefore vowes alſo. A vowe in the Greeke tongue is called εὐχὴ, votum, prayer προσευχὴ, oratio. As they differ not in name, ſo neither in deede are they to be ſeuered. Bellarm.

*Anſw.*1. He taketh that for graunted, which is chiefly in queſtion: for it is idolatrie to pray to any other but vnto God: Call vpon me in the day of trouble, Pſal.50.15. It is not lawfull to pray vnto Saints, therefore not to vowe.

2 To make vowes is a more ſtrict and binding act of religion, then prayer is; for in euery vow there is a prayer: we pray God to giue vs grace to performe the thing vowed: and there is beſide a full purpoſe of the heart with a ſolemne promiſe, whereby we bind our ſelues to the performing. Againe, we may make petition and requeſt vnto mortall men, but vowes we can make none vnto them: It would not therefore followe, though Saints might be prayed vnto, that they are alſo capeable of our vowes.

Secondly, it is alſo lawfull (they ſay) to ſweare by the name of Saints, becauſe all is referred to the honour of God; as he that ſweareth by the Temple, ſweareth alſo by him that dwelleth therein; *Rhemiſt.Matth.*21.*ſect.*8.

*Anſw.*1. In this place Chriſt reproueth the Phariſies for their ſwearing, and condemneth it by this argument: that howſoeuer they thought it a ſmall matter to ſweare by the Temple, yet in effect they did ſweare by God himſelfe. See then the boldnes of theſe men, that dare iuſtifie ſwearing by creatures by the ſame reaſon, that Chriſt condemneth it. 2. Our Sauiour ſaith nothing but this, that in euery oth there is an inuocation of the diuine power, and therefore whoſoeuer ſweareth by a creature, committeth idolatrie, in making it his God.

The Proteſtants.

1. THat it is great impietie to make vowes vnto Saints, it is thus proued, Eſay 19.21. In that day the Egyptians ſhall knowe the Lord, and ſhall doe ſacrifices, and vowe vowes vnto the Lord. But ſacrifices are not due vnto Saints, but onely to God: therefore neither vowes.

Againe, the vowes of Chriſtians are not to binde themſelues to goe in pilgrimage, or to offer vnto this Saint or that, this Image or that, as Auguſtine ſaith, Alius pallium, alius oleum, alius ceram, De tempor ſerm.7. One voweth a cloke, another oyle, a third a wax candle: God careth not for theſe vowes, ſaith he, Sed hoc, quod hodie redemit, ipſum offer, hoc eſt, Animam tuam. But offer & vow vnto God, that which as this day he hath redeemed, that is, thy ſoule. The vowes therefore of obedience and repentance and all Chriſtian duties are the true vowes, the vowing of body and ſoule to the ſeruice of God, Rom.12.1. But this cannot be vowed vnto any but to him ÿ redeemed vs: Ergo, not to any Saint.

2 That we ought onely to ſweare by the name of God, the Scripture is plaine, Deut.6.13. Thou ſhalt feare the Lord thy God and ſerue him, and ſhalt ſweare by his name; and by no other, Exod.23.13. But Saints are not to be feared or ſerued, for the Septuagint tranſlate: λατρεύσεις, Thou ſhalt worſhip God, which kinde of worſhip the Papiſts themſelues dare not attribute to Saints: Ergo, neither are we to ſweare by them.

Serm.10.Sermonum 17. Againe, to ſweare, is to call him to witneſſe by whome wee ſweare, and ſo to make him our God: for whom we ſweare by, we confeſſe to bee a ſearcher and knower of our hearts, and a reuenger of falſe ſwearers. To ſweare then, is to call God to witneſſe. Quid tu facis, cum iuras? Deum teſtem adhibes. Auguſtine. What doeſt thou, when thou ſweareſt? Thou calleſt God to witneſſe. But they that ſweare by Saints, call them to witneſſe, and none els are called to witneſſe, but they by whome they ſweare: Ergo, they make Saints their Gods, ſeeing God is called vpon in euery oath.

Concil. Carthaginenſ.4.can.61. Clericum per creaturas iurantem, acerrimè obiurgandum; ſi perſtiterit in vitio, excommunicandum: That a Clergie man ſwearing by creatures ſhould ſharply be reproued; and if he continue in that vice, to be excommunicate: But he that ſweareth by Saints, ſweareth by creatures. This Canon is alſo confirmed in the decrees: cauſ.22.queſt.1.c.9.

See alſo to this purpoſe the decree of Pope Pius; ibid.10. Si quis per capillum Dei, vel caput iurauerit, &c. If any man do ſweare by the haire or head of God, if he be an Eccleſiaſticall perſon, let him be depoſed; if a lay-man, let him be anathematized. If it be not lawfull to ſweare by the bodie of Chriſt, or any part thereof, which is vnited to his Godhead in one perſon, much leſſe by this Canon is it lawfull to ſweare by any other creatures. Let vs ſee alſo to this purpoſe the determination of their Maſter: Quæritur vtrum liceat iurare, &c. A queſtion is made, whether it be lawfull to ſweare by the creatures? and it ſeemeth we ought not, becauſe it is written in the Law, Thou ſhalt render thy oathes vnto the Lord: and a little after; The Iewes were commanded, if they did ſweare, they ſhould ſweare only by the Creator, not by the creature; for ſwearing by the Angels, &c. they did worſhip the creatures, which honor was more ſafe to be giuen vnto God, then to the creatures, lib.3.diſtinct.39.d.

William Thorpe, holy confeſſor of Gods truth, about anno. 1400. ſaith thus, To ſweare by any creature, both Gods law and mans law is againſt it: And thereupon inferreth, that it is vnlawfull to ſweare by a booke, becauſe it is a thing compact of diuers creatures, *Fox.*pag.529. Wherefore a booke is brought forth, when an oath is miniſtred, not to ſweare by; but it is vſed as an externall rite, and teſtifying ſigne or witneſſe, for the better aduiſement to be had in the oath: As Abrahams ſeruant layd his hand vpon his Maſters thigh, ſwearing vnto him, Gen.24. and as Iacob and Laban made the heape of ſtones a witneſſe of the couenant betweene them, Gen.31. yet neither did the one ſweare by his maſters thigh, nor the other by the ſtones.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE DISTINCTION of the two kinds of worſhip λατρεῖα, and δουλεῖα.

The Papiſts.

THat kinde of worſhip which is proper to God, they ſay, is fitly expreſſed by the Greeke word λατρεῖα, neither is this word vſed, but for the worſhip of God: the other word δουλεῖα, is taken for all kind of ſeruice both of God and men: ſo that the religious worſhip, which is called λατρεῖα, is only to be giuen to God: the other called δουλεῖα, may be attributed to Angels and Saints, Bellarmine cap.12. 27.Error.

The Proteſtants.

THis diſtinction is but of late inuented and coyned of our aduerſaries, ſomewhat to countenance them out in their Idolatrous and ſuperſtitious worſhip of Saints: We thus doe refell it.

*Argum.*1. This diſtinction helpeth them not: for heere are onely two words which doe betoken two kinds of worſhip, λατρεῖα, is the religious honour: δουλεῖα, is the ciuill dutie, ſuch as ſeruants performe to their maſters. They ſhould haue found out three names for their three kindes of worſhip: they haue gayned nothing by this diſtinction, but that ciuill adoration is due vnto Saints, ſuch as is giuen to men vpon earth. As for their fained word ὑπερδουλεῖα, which may be called a ſuperſeruice, when they can finde it in Scripture, they ſhall know more of our minde: and yet receiuing this terme, it ſignifieth but a more ciuill ſeruice, it betokeneth not a new kind of religious worſhip.

*Argum.*2. Neither are the words ſo vſed, as they make vs beleeue: for the word λατρεῖα, which they make proper for the ſeruice of God, is applyed to men, as Leuit.23. Opus ſeruile non facietis, You ſhall doe no ſeruile worke: the word is ἔργον λάτρευτον: Lodouic Viues alſo ſheweth out of prophane authors, that ſometime the word λατρεύειν is taken for the ſeruice of men or maides to their maſters: In 10.*lib. Aug. de ciuit. Dei.cap.*1. So likewiſe Laurentius Valla ſheweth the ſame vſe of the word.

So contrariwiſe, the worde δουλεύειν, is taken in Scripture for the proper ſeruice of God, as Gala. 4.8. Ye did ſeruice to them that by nature were no Gods: the word is, ἐδουλεύσατε: Ergo, religious ſeruice is onely due vnto God, not vnto Angels or Saints, for they are not by nature Gods. So we ſee that theſe two words, not onely in prophane authors, but in Scripture alſo are confounded.

in Exod.94. Religious ſeruice is due vnto God as Lord; religious worſhip is onely due vnto God, as he is God.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that this place of Auguſtine maketh for him; for hence it followeth, that the worſhip called λατρεία, being due vnto God, as God, is not communicable vnto any, becauſe there is but one God; but the other, called δουλεία, ſeruice, being attributed to God as Lord, may be communicated, becauſe there are many truely and properly called Lords, Bellar.cap.16.

Contra. Firſt, he directly oppugneth the Scripture, for the Apoſtle ſaith, Vnto vs there is but one God, and one Lord Ieſus Chriſt. 1.*Cor.*8.6. The Apoſtle ſaith, that there is but one Lord that is properly and verily, he ſayth, there are many. Secondly, the Apoſtle ſaith, There are many Gods and many lords in the world, verſ.5. that is, improperly ſo called; ſo then, as many are called Lords, ſo alſo they are named in ſome ſort gods in the earth, and that in Scripture, Pſal.82.6. I haue ſaid ye are Gods,&c. Wherefore he hath anſwered iuſt nothing.

That there is but one kind of religious worſhip, and that onely due vnto God, and that whatſoeuer reuerence beſide, is but a ciuill kinde of adoration, we haue the euident teſtimonie of antiquitie: Concil.Nicen. 2.*action.*4.Quid aliud eſt, quam honoris alicubi exhibiti emphaſis, adoratio? What elſe is adoration or worſhip, but a more emphaticall or earneſt yeelding of honour? It is then no new kinde of honour, but a further degree onely of ciuill worſhip.

Likewiſe in the ſame Councell, *action.*7.Tharaſius entreating of the worſhip of Saints, doth notably handle this poynt: προσκυνεῖν, i. adorare, & ἀσπάζεσθαι, i.ſalutare,& φιλεῖν, i. amare, ſignificat: nam quod quis amat, id etian adorat, & quod adorat, id etiam amat: To adore, or worſhip, is all one, as to ſalute, or loue; for that which a man loueth, he adoreth: and what he adoreth, he loueth. Then he goeth forward: of the Phariſies our Sauiour ſaith, that they loue the firſt places at feaſts, and ſalutations in the markets: Certum eſt ἀσπασμὸν, ſalutationem hoc loco à domino appellari προσκύνησιν, adorationem: It is certaine, that by ſalutation here is vnderſtood adoration, or worſhip. Againe, he giueth another inſtance out of the 21. of the Acts, verſ.19. how Paul ſaluted or embraced the Elders aſſembled with Iames: Hic ſalutationem honorificam, adorationem mutuo factam Apoſtolica ſententia ſignificat: Here the Apoſtle, by his honorable ſaluation, ſignifieth their mutuall adoration one of another. Further (ſaith he) Eſt adoratio, qua venerationem & deſiderium ſignificat: There is an adoration, which ſignifieth a reuerent kind of deſire, as we adore the Emperour: Eſt qua timorem tantum ſignificat: There is an adoration that ſignifieth feare, as Iacob adored Eſau: Eſt quæ gratiam notat: There is an adoration which betokeneth thankefulnes, as Abraham adored the ſonnes of Heth of whom he bought the field: Qui ſperant beneficium, adorant: They that hope for a benefite, adore, as Iacob adored Pharao. And all theſe are but diuers kinds of ciuill adoration, ſuch, and no other, as are due vnto the Saints, as more plainely writeth *Adrian.*1.epiſtol. ad Conſtantin. about the time of this 2.Nicen.Councel: Qualis eſt iſte adorationis honor? profectò non alius, quam is, quo nos inuicem proſequimur, ſalutantes nos inter nos per honorationem, & dilectionem: What manner of worſhip is this, (which is to be giuen to the Saints?) ſurely none other, then that, which we giue one to another, ſaluting our ſelues by honour and loue. Thus this popiſh diſtinction of religious worſhip, is found to be cleane contrarie to antiquitie.

THE THIRD PART, CONCERNING the kiſſing of holie mens feete.

The Papiſts.

29.Error. IT is a ſigne of reuerence done both to Chriſt and other ſacred perſons, as Prophets, Apoſtles, Popes, or others repreſenting his perſon here vpon earth, *Rhemiſt.Act.*4.*ſect.*3.

*Argum.*1. The Shunamite fell downe and embraced Eliſeus feete, 2.King.4.27.Ergo, the Popes feete ought to be kiſſed.

*Anſ.*1. Your Popes muſt be firſt as holie as this Prophet was, who was thus reuerenced for his holines, before they can challenge the like honour.

2 This reuerence to the Prophet was voluntarie in the woman, not looked for or exacted by the Prophet, as the Pope looketh for it of dutie.

3 Here is no mention made of kiſſing of feete, but onely that ſhe caught him by the feete, which was partly a ſigne of her ioy, that ſhe had met with the Prophet, partly by this ſudden and diſordered geſture, the Prophet perceiued that ſhe was troubled in minde: for Gebazi would haue thruſt her away, but he ſaid, Let her alone, for her ſpirit is troubled within her.

4 This is no warrant for the Pope to offer his feete to bee kiſſed of Kings and Emperours, becauſe the woman fell downe at the Prophets feete, thinke you, that if the King of Iſrael had ſo done, the Prophet would haue ſuffered it?

*Argum.*2. Marie kiſſed Chriſts feete: Ergo, the Popes feete ought to kiſſed.

Anſ. What arrogancie is this, that the Pope, a mortall and ſinfull man, ſhould challenge that honour which was done to Chriſt, being God in the fleſh, and voide of ſinne? He might alſo with the like blaſphemie challenge to be worſhipped: becauſe the women in the Goſpell caught Chriſt by the feete and worſhipped him, Matth.28.9. We may ſee by this, of what ſpirit he is, and whether he be not that Antichriſt, that ſhall make himſelfe as God, 2.Theſſ.2.4.

The Proteſtants.

THe kiſſing of the feete, was an humble and lowly geſture, which was worthily vſed toward our Sauiour Chriſt, who was God in the fleſh, and in his bodie and humanitie annexed to his Godhead, as God to be worſhipped: but it is too diuine, and too lowly an homage to be offered to any mortall man: And holy men in times paſt refuſed it, when any carried away with immoderate zeale and admiration of their perſon, were readie to giue it vnto them.

*Argum.*1. When Cornelius fell downe at Peters feete, the holy Apoſtle would not ſuffer him to doe it. The Pope is of a cleane contrarie ſpirit to S. Peter: for he refuſed it being offered; the Pope holdeth out his toe, and offereth it to be kiſſed, and vrgeth men thereunto.

*Argum.*2. If ſuch kiſſing of feete be commendable, how commeth it to paſſe that the Pope onely hath holie feete to kiſſe; and not other Biſhops and Clergie men, as well as he?

Auguſtine thus writeth vpon thoſe words of the Pſalme, Worſhip his footſtoole, reading according to the Septuagint. ſaith he, the earth is his footſtoole, but wee muſt not worſhip the earth: *Conuerto me ad Chriſtum, & inuenio, quomodo ſine impietate adoretur terra: ſuſcepit enim de terra terram, quia caro terra eſt. in Pſal.*98. I turne me (ſaith he) vnto Chriſt, and I finde how the earth may without any impietie be worſhipped: for he tooke earth of earth, fleſh of the fleſh of the Virgin, the fleſh is earth. Out of theſe words I conclude, that the fleſh, the bodie, the humanitie ought not in any to bee worſhipped, but onely in Chriſt, for the neere coniunction of the Godhead and humane nature together: and therefore conſequently no kiſſing of feete, which is an externall act of diuine worſhip, is ſeemely for any mortall man.

The Ieſuite might as well defend other inſolent parts of the Popes, as the kiſſing of their feete, as that they take vpon them to be carried vpon mens ſhoulders, as Stephanus 2. was anno 757. Alexander 3. did tread in the Emperour Fredericks necke: Adrianus 4. found fault with the Emperour for holding his ſtirrup on the left ſide: to whom the Emperour made this ſober anſwer: Scire velim ex te, hoc officij genus ex debito ne ſit, an beneplacito, &c. I would know of thee, whether this ſeruice be of dutie, or good will; if of good will, it skilleth not on which ſide he commeth, that ſheweth his good will. So then it ſeemeth, that this great reuerence ſhewed to the Popes, as in kiſſing their feete and ſuch like, proceeded rather from the good will, and lowlineſſe of others, then of any dutie belonging to their perſons. But concerning this and other proude parts of the Pope, the ſaid Fredericke the Emperour writing to Adriane, ſaith, as the truth was: Superbiæ deteſtabilem beſtiam vſque ad ſedem Petri reptaſſe videmus: Wee ſee that the deteſtable beaſt of pride, is crept euen into Peters chayre.

THE THIRD QVESTION, CONCERNING the inuocation of Saints.

THis queſtion hath three parts: firſt, whether prayers are to bee made vnto Saints. Secondly whether they doe pray for vs. Thirdly, whether they vnderſtand our prayers.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER prayers are to be made to Saints.

The Papiſts.

THeir aſſertion is this, Sanctos defunctos piè & vtiliter à viuentibus inuocari: That Saints depar- 30.Error.
ted are with great profit and pietie called vpon, and praied vnto: and that it is not onely lawfull but godly, ſo to doe, *Rhemiſt.*1.*Tim.*2.*ſect.*4.*Bellarm.cap.*19.*lib.*1.de Sanctor.beatit.

*Argum.*1. They ſay, they doe not pray vnto Saints, as authors of any benefit or grace, but as interceſſors onely: Neither doe they make them immediat interceſſors, but only through Chriſt; concluding all their prayers, per Chriſtum Dominum noſtrum. Bellarm.

Anſ. 1. It is falſe, that you pray vnto them as interceſſors onely, for you deſire them not onely to pray for you, but to haue mercie on you: for thus they pray, O bleſſed Ladie haue mercie vpon vs, preſerue thy ſeruants, let the merits of S. Marie bring vs to the kingdome of heauen. *Fulk.*1.*Timoth.*2.*ſect.*4.

2 It is alſo falſe, that they make them not immediat interceſſors, but conclude their prayers, Per Chriſtum Dominum noſtrum: For in that blaſphemous prayer, Tu per Thomæ ſanguinem quem pro nobis impendit, fac nos Chriſte ſcandere, quò Thomas aſcendit: Here they aske life eternall of Chriſt by the bloud of Thomas of Canturburie. How then is it true which the Rhemiſts affirme in word, that Chriſt alone by his merits procureth all grace and mercie toward mankinde, ibid. when they hope to obtaine their requeſts by the merits of Saints? See Fulk.annot.Ioh.16.ſect.3. where diuers prayers to Saints, as to S.Marie, S.Oſmond, S.Anne, S.Katherine, are reckoned vp, and none of them concludeth, per Chriſtum Dominum noſtrum.

Fox.pag.1274 Likewiſe anno 1551. in Scotland it was taught as good doctrine among the Papiſts, that it was lawfull to ſay the Pater noſter to Saints, that we may cal them our fathers, and ſay Hallowed be your names, becauſe God hath made their names holy, and that their kingdome may come, becauſe the kingdome of heauen is theirs by poſſeſſion: and further, that their will may be done, ſeeing their will is Gods will: and ſo of the other petitions. Whereby it appeareth, that they would haue prayers made vnto Saints properly, euen as vnto God.

*Argum.*2. Exod.32.13. Moſes thus prayeth, Remember Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob thy ſeruants. Moſes here hopeth to haue his prayers heard by the merits of theſe holie men, Bellarm.

Anſ. Moſes rehearſeth only the couenant, which the Lord made with theſe holy men and their ſeede, as the words following do ſhew, To whom thou ſwareſt by thine owne ſelfe and ſaideſt vnto them, I will multiplie your ſeede: Moſes therefore pleadeth not the merits of Abraham, Iſaac, Iacob; but vrgeth and preſſeth the promiſe of God, and couenant made with them: as we may reade, Geneſis 17.7. where the Lord ſaith to Abraham, I will be God vnto thee, and thy ſeede after thee.

Bellarmine replieth, that mention is not onely made of the couenant, but of their merits alſo: as 1.King.15.4. For Dauids ſake did the Lord giue him a light in Ieruſalem, &c. becauſe Dauid did that, which was right in the ſight of the Lord, &c.

Contra. Firſt, here is no mention of Dauids merits: for in the ſame place Dauids ſinne againſt Vrias is remembred, which was ſufficient to ſtaine all Dauids merites with God. Secondly, God doth many times crowne the righteouſnes of the parents with temporall bleſſings in their poſteritie, according as the Lord promiſeth in the ſecond commaundement, I will ſhew mercie vpon thouſands to them that loue me: So that all this dependeth vpon Gods mercie and promiſe. Thirdly, compare this place with chap.11.32.34. there we ſhall finde this reaſon giuen, becauſe I haue choſen Dauid, &c. therfore God would not rent all the kingdome from Salomons poſteritie: wherefore this mercie to Dauids ſeede, did firſt of all iſſue from the free election of God. Fourthly, this place maketh nothing at all for the inuocation of Saints, though God reſpecting the obedience of Dauid, ſhould ſhew mercie vnto his ſeede.

*Argum.*3. The Saints doe pray one for another here vpon earth, and doe one deſire anothers prayers: Saint Paul, Rom.15. Epheſ.6. Coloſſ.4. and in other places deſireth to be aſſiſted by their prayers: Ergo, much more may we deſire the prayers, of Saints departed, Bellarm. Rhemiſt.

Anſ. Firſt, to pray one for another while wee liue, is a dutie of charitie, and commaunded in Scripture: but to requeſt the prayers of Saints departed, hath no warrant in the word. Secondly, we doe not deſire the godly liuing to pray for vs, as our Mediatours, or as though by their worthines we are brought into the fauour of God, as you ſay the Saints doe: and therefore your argument followeth not, from the prayer of the liuing to the prayer of the dead. Thirdly, we may one pray for another, and one requeſt the prayers of another, while we liue, becauſe we know our mutuall neceſſities: but the Saints departed know not what things are done vpon earth, neither are euery where preſent to heare our prayers. Thus is their argument anſwered, whereof Bellarmine ſo boaſteth, that he ſaith, it was vnanſwerable, cap.19.

*Argum.*4. Bellarmine produceth diuers teſtimonies of the fathers, and certaine Canons of Councels to proue the inuocation of Saints: as namely, Synod.7. act.6. in fine; Cum timore &c. Let vs doe all with feare, entreating the interceſſion of the vndefiled Virgin, of the Angels, and all Saints, &c.

Anſ. Firſt, this 7. Synode, which was the Nicene 2. is not worthie to be counted among the generall Councels, wherein it was concluded that images of Saints were to be worſhipped, and it was aſſembled againſt, Iconoclaſtas, the breakers of Images: but the 4. Conſtantin. rather is to bee held the 7. generall, which was gathered againſt, Iconolatras, the worſhippers of Images: wherein it was concluded, that it was neither lawfull to haue the images of Saints, nor to worſhip them. And that this deſerueth rather the name of a generall Councell, it may appeare, both becauſe it had the preſence and conſent of two Emperours, Leo and Conſtantinus; whereas the other had but the conſent of Irene the Empreſſe, Conſtantinus her ſonne being yet vnder her gouernment, who afterward comming to yeeres of diſcretion, did abrogate the conſtitutions of this Councell: as alſo for that the one was moderated by the reuerend Patriarke of Conſtantin. Paulus, and Theodoſius Biſhop of Epheſus; but the other was ouerruled by Tharaſius that vnlearned prelate of Conſtantinople, of a lay man ſuddenly made a Patriarke, contrarie to the Canons, whoſe election Charles the great did take exception againſt.

Secondly, that it may appeare what reſpect is to be had to this Councell, let vs ſee ſome of their beſt ſtuffe: Action.4. one Iohannes ſtepped vp, and ſaid, Maior eſt imago quàm oratio: An Image is greater then prayer. Action.1. Tharaſius the Preſident ſaid: Malum perpetuò idem eſt & aquale:

Euill or ſinne is alwaies equall and the very ſame: & idem eſt errare in magnis & paruis, and to erre in great matters or ſmall, concerning the faith, is all one. Such blaſphemous and erronious concluſions, may very well beſeeme ſuch a blinde Councell. Of the ſame kind is their reſolution for the inuocation of Saints.

Thirdly, this Synode is of no great antiquitie, being celebrate about anno 780. and therefore not much to be regarded. Almoſt 400. yeeres before this the doctrine of the Church was otherwiſe, as out of Ambroſe is moſt euident, whereas he thus writeth in 1. cap. ad Roman. Dicunt per iſtos ire ſe poſſe ad deum, &c. They ſay that by theſe (that is by Saints) they may haue acceſſe vnto God, as by Courtiers we come vnto the King: Goe to, is any man ſo mad, or ſo forgetfull of himſelfe, as to giue the honour of the King to a Courtier? and doe they thinke they doe well, that giue the honour of God to a creature, & relicto Domino conſeruos adorant, and leauing the Lord, to adore their fellow ſeruants? And therefore wee come vnto the King by Courtiers, becauſe the King is a man, and knoweth not to whom he ſhould commit the affaires of the kingdome; but vnto God, frō whom nothing is hid, who knoweth euery mans merits (that is, works) ſuffragatore non eſt opus, ſed mente deuota, wee neede no ſpeaker, but a deuout minde, &c. No doubt this ſaying of S. Ambroſe was agreeable to the doctrine of the Church in thoſe daies: out of the which we may gather theſe three reaſons againſt the inuocation of Saints: firſt, becauſe this were to giue the honour of the King to his ſubiects, of God to a creature. Secondly, Angels and Saints are our fellow ſeruants, and therefore not to be worſhipped, with our inuocation. Thirdly, it is not ſo with God as with Princes: to them wee muſt haue acceſſe by others, becauſe they otherwiſe know not our neceſſities, but God knoweth our hearts.

Bellarmines anſwere, to this ſo euident a teſtimonie, is very ridiculous: firſt, ſaith he, Saint Ambroſe ſpeaketh againſt the Ethnicks, that did worſhip the ſtarres, and calleth them our fellow ſeruants, that is, creatures.

Contra. Firſt, it is a very improper and vnuſuall ſpeech, to call the ſenſeleſſe creatures our fellow ſeruants, and this beggerly ſhift bewraieth the nakednes of their cauſe. Secondly, S. Ambroſe ſpeaketh of ſuch fellow ſeruants, as ſhould admit vs into Gods preſence; but I thinke he is not ſo fooliſh to thinke, that the ſtarres are mediatours vnto God for vs: wherefore it is euident he ſpeaketh of the mediation of Saints.

Secondly, ſaith he, on Gods behalfe, ſuffragatore non eſt opus, we neede no ſpokeſman, but in reſpect of our ſelues, we haue neede, &c.

Contra. A fooliſh and vnlearned diſtinction: for firſt S. Ambroſe maketh this compariſon: We neede a ſpokeſman to the King, becauſe he knoweth not our wants; but to God we neede none, becauſe of himſelfe, he vnderſtandeth our prayers: wherefore there is no neede at all of a ſpokeſman to God. Secondly he ſheweth, that on our behalfe alſo we neede no ſpokeſman, but a deuout minde: a deuout minde, I thinke is not required on Gods behalfe, but on ours. Thus this paltrie popeling wraſtleth by his ſubtiltie with the cleere euidence and light of truth, but euery where proclaimeth the weaknes of his cauſe. And as he anſwereth this place of S. Ambroſe, ſo he dealeth moſt ignorantly and rudely with the reſt; as hereafter may bee ſhewed, if it pleaſe God, more at large: but fully now to anſwere the obiections out of the fathers, would enlarge this volume too much, of purpoſe therefore I doe forbeare: yet here and there in the more waightie controuerſies, I thinke it not amiſſe to giue a taſte.

The Proteſtants.

THat prayer is onely to be made vnto God, and to no other creature beſide, as being an eſpeciall part of the worſhip of God, which we ought not to giue to any other: thus it is prooued out of the word of God.

Argum. 1. Rom. 10. 14. How ſhall they call vpon him, in whom they haue not beleeued? But wee muſt beleeue onely in God, and therfore onely pray to God. Rhemiſt. anſwere: It is true, no more can wee pray vnto our Ladie, nor any Saint in heauen, vnleſſe we beleeue they can helpe vs. So doth Bellarmine anſwere likewiſe.

Anſ. The Scripture euery where teacheth that wee muſt beleeue in God, and that they are curſed that put any confidence in man, Ierem. 17. 5. Againe, they can haue no aſſurance to ſettle their conſcience, but out of the Scriptures: They haue a vaine perſwaſion of the abilitie of Saints to helpe them, but they haue no ground of any ſuch beleefe out of the Scripture.

Boner, as great a patrone of poperie in his time, as any of the Rhemiſts now, he ſaith thus; To truſt to any we bid you not; but to call vpon them, and pray to them, we bid you, Fox pag. 1587. He thought it a groſſe thing, that wee ſhould truſt to Saints, which the new Papiſts ſet downe for good holeſome doctrine.

Argum. 2. Heb. 4. 16. Let vs come with boldnes to the throne of grace: Ergo, we haue no neede of the inuocation of Saints, ſeeing we haue free and bold acceſſe through Chriſt.

Rhemiſt. By this reaſon we ſhould not pray one for another, while we are aliue, Anſ. We doe not put our confidence in the merite and worthines of other mens prayers, as you doe in the interceſſion of Saints. Againe, this mutuall dutie of prayer one for another, is commanded and required of God, as the other is not: wherfore to runne vnto Saints, and not vnto Chriſt, is to doubt either of his readines, or abilitie to helpe vs.

*Argum.*3. Ioh.16.26. Chriſt ſaith, that after he hath by his mediation and interceſſion brought vs into the fauour of God, In that day ſhall you aske the Father in my name, and I ſay not, that I will pray to the Father for you, for the Father himſelfe loueth you. If then the prayer of Chriſt to God his father, ſhall not then be needfull, what vſe is there of the prayer of other creatures? Fulk. 1.*Tim.*2.*ſect.*4.

*Argum.*4. Our Sauiour Chriſt hath taught vs in the Goſpell, to whom wee ſhould direct our prayers, ſaying, Our Father, which art in heauen, &c. Matth.6. This prayer cannot bee ſaid either to Angel or Saint: Ergo, it is contrarie to Chriſts rule to pray vnto them.

Bellarmine anſwereth, by the ſame reaſon, onely God the Father ſhould be praied vnto, neither God the Sonne, nor the holy Ghoſt; for he teacheth vs onely to ſay, Our Father, &c.

Contra. Firſt, here he ſheweth his groſſe ignorance: as though the whole Trinitie in reſpect of vs, and euery one of the perſons, is not our father; though in the reſpect that they haue one to an other, there is but one father and one ſonne: for Chriſt is called the euerlaſting father, Eſay 9. and the holy Ghoſt, Iam.1.17. is named by the Apoſtle, Pater luminum, the father of lights. Secondly, there is not a petition in the Lords prayer but agreeth to the whole Trinitie: as where we pray, Hallowed be thy name, for there is one name of the whole Trinitie, as Matth.28. Goe and baptize in the name of the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt: as S. Ambroſe ſheweth, *lib.*1.*de ſpiritu.cap.*14. Let thy kingdome come: this alſo concerneth the whole Trinitie, which hath but one kingdome: as S. Ambroſe proueth out of that place, Rom.14. The kingdome of God is not meate, but righteouſnes, and peace, and ioy in the ſpirit: the kingdome of God, and of the ſpirit, is all one. So likewiſe, they haue all one will: they all doe together forgiue vs our ſinnes, as Ioh.20. Receiue ye the holy Ghoſt, whoſe ſinnes ye remit, they are remitted. The holy Ghoſt therefore forgiueth ſinnes, as well as the Father, or the Sonne: wherefore it is euident, that the Lords praier is directed to the whole Trinitie in the name of Father. Thirdly, yet Bellarmine is not altogether ſo abſurd, as ſome popiſh Scottiſh Diuines haue been, who were not aſhamed to graunt, that the Lords prayer might bee ſaid to the Saints. See Fox pag.1274.

Auguſtine ſaith, *Pro quo nullus interpellat, & ipſe pro omnibus; hic vnus veruſque Mediator eſt.lib.*2.*cont.Parmenian.cap.*8. He for whom no man prayeth, but himſelfe entreateth for all men, he is the onely true Mediatour: Ergo, Saints no Mediatours, and therefore not to be prayed vnto.

Let vs ſee the teſtimonie of holie Martyrs: Thomas Haukes, It is an abominable blaſphemie againſt God, and his ſonne Chriſt, to call vpon any, to truſt to any, or to pray to any, ſaue onely to Chriſt Ieſus. His reaſon is out of Saint Paul, Rom.10. that we cannot call vpon any, vpon whom we beleeue not: But our beliefe, faith and truſt muſt onely bee fixed vpon God. To this agreeth the concluſion of a generall Councell, *Nicen.*2.*action.*2. Tharaſius Preſident of the Councell thus ſaith, Apertis verbis teſtamur, nos duntaxat in vnum Deum veram latreiam, i. cultum, & fidem noſtram referre & reponere: We doe plainly teſtifie, that we repoſe and referre our faith and truſt only vnto God.

Iohn Lambert holy Martyr: Whereas the Papiſts commonly obiect, that as wee cannot bee admitted into the preſence of the Prince, but by mediatours, and friends going betweene; ſo is it betweene God and vs: he anſwereth, that there is great difference betweene God, and a mortall Prince: For neither hath the Prince the knowledge that God hath, who knoweth and ſeeth all things euery where, &c. neither is he in mercie and gracious dealing like to God: who is of that infinit mercie, that I may as ſoone obtaine of him, that is needfull, as I ſhould by praying to Saints to be Mediatours, &c. And ſo he concludeth, I will pray vnto Saints, when I thinke that God either cannot or will not giue my petition; but that ſhall neuer be: *Ergo, &c.pag.*1109.*reſponſ.ad articul.*14.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER THE Saints departed doe pray for vs.

The Papiſts.

31.Error. THat the Saints in heauen doe not onely pray in generall, but particularly for vs, readie in all our needes by their prayer and mediation to aſſiſt vs: thus they would proue it.

*Argum.*1. 2.Pet.1.15. I will endeuour (ſaith the Apoſtle) that you may haue remembrance of theſe things after my departure. Peter promiſeth to be carefull of them, and to pray for them after his departure, *Rhemiſt.ibid.Bellarm.cap.*18.

Anſ. This which here the Apoſtle promiſeth, he performeth in writing this Epiſtle, whereby they might be put in remembrance, when he was gone. And therefore he ſaith, verſ. 13. I thinke it meete, ſo long as I am in this tabernacle, to ſtirre you vp by putting you in remembrance: he acknowledgeth now onely to bee the time wherein he may doe them good, and therefore deferreth it not. There is no ſillable, which ſoundeth that way, that he would pray for them after his diſſolution.

Argum. 2. Apocal. 5.8. The 24. Elders are ſaid to haue golden vials full of odors, which are the prayers of the Saints, Rhemiſt. in hunc locum. Ergo, the Saints in heauen doe pray for vs.

Anſ. The 24. Elders doe repreſent the Church Militant vpon earth, whoſe conuerſation is in heauen, and they doe continually offer vp their prayers. And that the place is ſo to be vnderſtood, it appeareth verſ. 10. Thou haſt made vs Kings and Prieſts, and wee ſhall raigne vpon the earth: that is, their kingdome is ſpirituall, in fighting againſt, and ouercomming the concupiſcence of the fleſh, and all carnall deſires.

Argum. 3. Iere. 15.1. If Moſes and Samuel ſtood before me, my affection could not be toward this people: therefore Moſes and Samuel being dead, did vſe to pray for the people. Bellarm.

Anſ. Firſt, the contrarie rather may bee gathered, that Moſes and Samuel did not pray for the people being dead: becauſe the Lord ſaith, if they did, &c. but it is not like, that their charitie is leſſe in heauen to ceaſe praying for the people, if the Saints had any ſuch office, ſeeing that Samuel yet liuing ſaid, God forbid, that I ſhould ceaſe praying for this people, 1. Sam. 12.23. Secondly, this place may bee expounded by that Ezech. 14.20. Though Noah, Iob, Daniel, were in the middeſt of the citie, they ſhould but deliuer their owne ſoules: So here, if Moſes and Samuel were liuing to pray for the people, as they vſed to doe, God will not heare them.

Argum. 4. Luk. 16. in the parable, the rich man prayeth for his brethren, much more do the righteous pray for the whole Church: as Reuel. 6. The ſoules vnder the altar, crie, Lord how long doeſt thou not iudge and auenge our blood, &c? Bellarm. cap. 18.

Anſ. Firſt, to the firſt place I anſwere, that it is a parable, or admitting it to be a ſtorie, we muſt needes acknowledge many things to bee ſpoken in parable and allegorie, as that he deſireth a drop of water to coole his tongue, whereas he neither had any tongue, his bodie being left in the graue, neither is water able to aſſwage the paines of hell. Againe, to take the conference between Abraham and the rich man literally, may bee occaſion of many doubts: as how they could one heare anothers talke, there being a great gulfe betweene them: neither had Abraham any ſuch power to ſend Lazarus to the liuing: wherefore it is hard vpon euery part of this parable to ground an argument. Secondly, there is no charitie in hell, how then can there bee any prayer there, which proceedeth of charitie? Thirdly, but be it graunted that the prayer of the rich man is hiſtoricall: it onely ſheweth a generall deſire and wiſh that he hath to his kindred: and ſo wee denie not, but that the Saints in generall doe deſire the conſummation of Chriſts bodie, and the eternall reſt of the reſt of his members yet militant in earth.

To the ſecond place we likewiſe anſwere: firſt, if that prayer or complaint, which the ſoules vnder the altar make, bee ſtrictly according to the letter taken, is it to bee thought, that the Saints haue leſſe charitie in heauen, then they had in earth? for Stephen prayed that his perſecutors might be forgiuen at his death, and doth the ſoule of Stephen now being vnder the altar call for vengeance? This is Hieromes reaſon: They doe not deſire their blood, which perſecuted them, pro eis enim precatio fuſa eſt, &c. for they prayed for them, that the ſin ſhould not be laide to their charge. Secondly, they pray not therefore particularly for the deſtruction of any, but generally, that an end may be made of the tyrannie of Satan: as Hierome expoundeth, Spirituales nequitiæ hic intelliguntur: Spirituall enemies are here vnderſtood, De vir. perfecto. And it is in effect the ſame with the prayer of the Church, Apocal. 22.17. The ſpirit, and the bride ſay come: that is, they do all waite for the finall accompliſhing of Chriſts kingdome. Thirdly, we graunt then that the Saints in heauen doe long both for the conſummation of their owne glorie, and wiſh generally vnto the Church militant the like triumphant end and victorie of their labours: and we confeſſe as much as S. Cyprian ſaith: Magnus illic charorum numerus nos expectat; &c. parentum, fratrum, filiorum de ſalute ſua ſecura, de noſtra ſollicita: A great number of our friends doe there waite for vs, &c. being ſecure of their owne ſaluation, carefull for vs, Serm. 4. de mortalit. But hence it followeth not, that they haue particular knowledge of our manifold neceſſities, and ſo make their particular requeſts vnto God for vs.

The Proteſtants.

THat the bleſſed Saints doe ſing vnto the praiſe of God in heauen, and do magnifie the Lord, and praiſe him with a new ſong of thankſgiuing, which is a kind of prayer, we denie not, Apocal. 5.9. and that they haue a generall deſire and longing, both for vs, for themſelues, and all the elect of God, that the day of our refreſhing were come, and that all the people of God were ioyned in one, and their enemies vanquiſhed and deſtroyed, wee learne alſo out of the Scripture, Apocal.6.9. But that they ſhould offer vp our ſpeciall prayers, and make particular requeſt for vs to God, it no where in the Scripture is found, but rather the contrarie.

*Argum.*1. The Scripture no where teſtifieth, that the Saints in ſuch manner doe pray for vs: Ergo, wee may ſafely bee ignorant of it: nay it were great preſumption, without Scripture to beleeue it.

*Argum.*2. The Saints departed know not our wants, nor what is done in the earth. The liuing know that they ſhall die, but the dead know nothing at all, Eccleſ.9.5. But of this more ſhall be ſaid in the next part. See Auguſtine of this matter. *contro.*8.*quaſt.*2.*part.*3.

*Argum.*3. Saint Paul ſaith, There is one mediatour of God and man, the man Ieſus Chriſt, 1.Timoth.2.5. Ergo, Saints are not our mediatours, and ſo conſequently they doe not pray for vs.

Bellarmine anſwereth, Chriſt is ſaid onely to be our mediatour for three cauſes: firſt, becauſe he is the onely mediatour of our redemption. Secondly, he is a mediatour not by his office onely, but in reſpect of his nature alſo, being both God and man. Thirdly, becauſe he is ſo a mediatour, that he needeth not any other mediatour, as the Saints doe, who are mediatours, but not in the foreſaid reſpects, *Bellarm.cap.*20.

Anſ. Bellarmine hath ſtrengthened our argument well, and giuen three reaſons why the Saints cannot be mediatours in any reſpect at all. Firſt, there can bee no aduocate or mediatour, but the ſame muſt bee the propitiation for our ſinnes, as Saint Iohn ſheweth, Epiſt. 1.chap.2.verſ.2. The Saints are not a propitiation for our ſinnes. Ergo. Secondly, the Apoſtle ſaith, A mediatour is not of one, Galath.3.20. So then he that is the mediatour betweene God and man, muſt not bee of one nature: he muſt be both God and man: Ergo, Saints are no mediatours. Thirdly, he cannot be a mediatour, that hath himſelfe neede of a mediatour, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, that they could not bee our high prieſt, that had neede firſt to offer for their owne ſinnes, and then for the ſinnes of the people, Heb.7.27. and to offer vp our prayers is belonging to the prieſthood: Saints cannot bee our prieſts: Ergo, neither our mediatours. Thus hath Bellarmine reaſoned well for vs againſt himſelfe.

Francis Rebezies holy Martyr, ſheweth in what manner Saints doe pray for vs: who, when a Doctor had put forth this reaſon, The Apoſtles made interceſſion to Chriſt when as he was vpon the earth, why may they not doe ſo now? ſeeing Chriſt then was the interceſſor of the world, as now. He thus anſwereth; So long as they were in the world, they exerciſed their miniſterie, and prayed one for another, as needing humane ſuccours together: but now being in paradiſe, all the prayer they make is this, that they wiſh, that they which be vpon earth may attaine to their felicitie: but to obtaine any thing at the Fathers hand, wee muſt haue our recourſe onely to his ſonne. Fox pag.922.col.2.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER THE SAINTS vnderſtand our prayers, and be alwaies at hand to helpe vs.

The Papiſts.

32.Error. THey affirme three things, which they are driuen to graunt by neceſſitie of argument, while they ſtifly maintaine inuocation of Saints: for firſt they graunt that they know our hearts, and our inward repentance, and ſecret thoughts; for otherwiſe it would not auaile to pray vnto them, yet not of themſelues, but by the reuelation of God, *Bellarm.cap.*20. And of foure opinions of this matter, as that the Saints know our prayers either by the reuelation of Angels, or by their celeritie or agilitie of nature, paſſing from place to place, or at once they ſee in God as in a glaſſe, all things that may concerne them, or elſe they know mens ſecret thoughts, by ſome ſpeciall reuelation from God, as Eliſha deſcried the corruption of Gebezi, 2.King.5. and Samuel had a ſecret reuelation concerning Saul, 1.Sam.9.15. Of theſe foure he preferreth the two laſt, and refuſeth the other.

Anſ. Neither of theſe foure waies can ſtand: not the firſt, for though Angels ſhould reueale to the Saints, yet our thoughts they cannot reueale, becauſe they know them not themſelues: not the ſecond, for Saints doe reſt vnder the Altar, which is Chriſt, Apoc.6. and paſſe not to and fro, ſeeing that Chriſt, as he is man, ſhall be contained in the heauens till his comming againe, Act.3. Not the third, for we ſhall not ſee Chriſt as he is, till he doe appeare, 1.Ioh.3.2. And concerning the laſt, we denie not, but that God may reueale to the Saints ſome things at his pleaſure, as he did to the Prophets: but it hereof followeth not, that all our prayers are reuealed vnto them: for neither were all things reuealed to Samuel, as 1.Sam.16. when he went to anoint Dauid: and Eliſha ſaith, 2.King.4.verſ.27. concerning the Shunamite, Her ſoule is vexed, and the Lord hath not told me.

Againe, what a prepoſterous order is this, and ſuperfluous, God firſt reuealeth vnto them our prayers, and then they ſolicite God in our behalfe? I pray you what neede this, ſeeing God knoweth eth our prayers? Firſt, why is he not as readie of himſelfe to graunt our requeſts, as to ſtay till he be entreated?

Secondly, ſeeing it were in vaine to pray to Saints, if they had not power to helpe vs: they 33.Error.
alſo are vrged to confeſſe, that the Saints are patrones of men, and haue the gouernment of the world committed to them; yea, that they may receiue others into the kingdome of heauen.

*Argum.*1. Apocal.2.26. To him that ouercommeth, will I giue power ouer nations, and he ſhall rule ouer them with a rod of yron: Ergo, the Saints haue the gouernment of men committed vnto them, *Rhemiſt.ibid.Bellarm.cap.*18.

Anſ. The power which our Sauiour here promiſeth, is the participation of his kingly inheritance: firſt, ſpiritually to ouercome the world by faith in this life, and after this life they ſhall be ſet in full poſſeſſion of his royall inheritance. The rod of yron, is the word of God, which is alſo called a two edged ſword, wherby they execute vengeance vpon the heathen, Pſal.149.7. It is the ſword of the ſpirit, whereby the wicked ſhall be deſtroyed. Auguſtine expoundeth it to be the rod of Iuſtice, whereby the good are corrected, and the wicked broken in pieces, *Homil.*2.in Apocal.

Again, it followeth in the text, As a potters veſſell ſhall they be broken. This cannot be vnderſtood of the Church of God: wherefore this place ſerueth not to proue the regiment of the Saints ouer the Church of God. Thirdly, ſeeing this is a promiſe made to euery one of Gods Saints, who are many hundred thouſands, by this reaſon euery one of them ſhould haue a regiment in the Church of God, which were infinite. Laſtly, Chriſt promiſeth that they ſhall rule, with a rod of yron, as himſelfe hath receiued; and chap.3.21. they ſhall ſit with him in his throne: will they inferre hereupon, that the Saints haue the like kingdome and power and glorie with Chriſt? this were very abſurd to graunt, and againſt Chriſt blaſphemous. Wherefore, the meaning of theſe and the like ſpeeches is nothing elſe, but this, that Chriſt ſhall impart and communicate vnto the Saints the glorie of his kingdome, not in ſuch full manner as he himſelfe hath it, but in ſuch ſort, as it is meete for them to receiue. Saint Ambroſe thus expoundeth the like words of our Sauiour, Ioh.17. Father, I will that they whom thou haſt giuen me be with me where I am, &c. Vt ſint mecum, non vt ſedeant mecum, &c. That they may be with me (ſaith he) not ſit with me; where I am, but not as I am; to ſee my glorie: to ſee it, not to haue it; for the ſeruant ſeeth, the maſter poſſeſſeth, *lib.*5.*de fide.cap.*3. And againe, vpon thoſe words, Epheſ.2.6. He hath made vs ſit together in heauenly places in Chriſt: Non vt homines ſedere ſibi ad dextram patiatur Deus, &c. Not that God doth ſuffer men to ſit at his right hand, but to ſit in Chriſt, who is the foundation of all, the head of his Church, who hath in himſelfe merited to our nature the prerogatiue of the heauenly ſeate, &c. *lib.*5.*de fide, cap.*7. Thus Ambroſe ſheweth how the Saints are ſaid to ſit in the heauenly throne, namely in Chriſt, in reſpect that our nature in him is aduanced to that heauenly ſeate; which prerogatiue being complete and full in Chriſt, is in meaſure communicated to his members.

*Argum.*2. Luk.16.9. Make you friends of the vnrighteous Mammon, that when they neede, they may receiue you into euerlaſting habitations: See, the Saints may receiue their friends and benefactors into their eternall manſions, Rhemiſt.ibid.

Anſ. 1. Almes beſtowed vpon the poore doe procure their prayers, but not their patronage. 2. The words are thus parabolically to be vnderſtood: They ſhall receiue you, that is, ſhall giue teſtimonie of you, and your almes ſhall be a teſtimonie of your charitie, and proceeding from a liuely faith, ſhall euerlaſtingly bee rewarded. 3. That it is not meant of the perſons, but of the work, it is plaine, becauſe almes which iſſue from a true faith, ſhal be rewarded at the Lords hand, though beſtowed vpon an hypocrite.

Thirdly, they alſo hold that the Saints at their pleaſure can be preſent with their bodies, and be 34.Error.
amongſt vs, and ſo heare our prayers, *Bellarm.cap.*20.

*Argum.*1. Otherwiſe the Saints ſhould be fettered as it were in heauen, if they remaine and be kept all in one place.

Anſ. They are not fettered when they are limited by the Lord to a place: ſee alſo what a goodly opinion theſe fellowes haue of heauen, making a priſon of it, *Rhemiſt.annot.Apocal.*6.9.

*Argum.*2. They follow the Lambe whither ſoeuer he goeth: Ergo, they may be euery where.

*Anſ.*1. That place, Apocal.14. is vnderſtood of al the elect, yea of thoſe that do imitate and follow Chriſt, liuing vpon earth, as it followeth verſ.4. Theſe are bought from men, being the firſt fruites vnto God, &c. which comprehendeth all the elect both liuing and departed to God. 2. If the ſoules are euery where, becauſe the Lambe is euery where, then Chriſt in his humanitie is euery where, and ſo the Papiſts are become Vbiquitaries.

*Argm.*3. The Deuils are of great dexteritie, and celeritie in paſſing from one place to another: Ergo, much more the Saints.

*Anſw.*1 The argument followeth not: for deuils by propertie of nature together by the ſufferance of God, doe wander vp and downe the world, being thereto appoynted of God: but the ſoules of Saints haue no ſuch office, as we reade in Scripture, to bee curſory ſpirits in the world.

2 Though it ſhould be graunted, that in a ſhort time they are able to change their places: yet it is vnpoſſible, they ſhould be in ſo many places to heare the prayers euery where made vnto them, vnleſſe they could be in diuers places at once.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, it is a great vntruth and blaſphemie to ſay, that the Saints do knowe our thoughts, inward repentance, prayers, as the Rhemiſts affirme.

*Argum.*1. God only is the knower of the heart, neither doth he communicate this propertie of the Godhead to any creature: he may reueale what he thinketh good vnto them: but for them, when they will themſelues, to know our ſecret prayers and meditations (for this is the queſtion) it is impoſſible.

Bernard agreeth with vs, thus wryting: Ioſeph cum præuidiſſet exaltationem ſuam, non tamen præſciuit ſui venditionem, quamuis propior eſſet venditio, quam exaltatio: Though Ioſeph foreſawe his exaltation, yet did he not foreknowe that he ſhould be ſoulde; and yet his ſelling was nearer, then his preferring. By this he ſheweth, that although God may and doth reueale ſome things to the Saints, yet it followeth not, they ſhould knowe all things.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that God onely is the knower of mens hearts naturally, and by his owne power: but the ſaints know them by reuelation.

Contra. 1.Reg.8.39. Salomon ſaith, Thou onely knoweſt the hearts of all men: He ſaith not, God chiefely or principally knoweth the hearts, but onely. If God then onely know our hearts, then the ſaints know them not.

De cura pro mortuis

*Argum.*2. Auguſtine out of thoſe words of the Prophet Iſay 63.16. Abraham is ignorant of vs, and Iacob knoweth vs not, concludeth thus, Si tanti patriarchæ, quid erga populum ex his procreatum ageretur, ignorauerunt, quomodo mortui viuorum rebus atque actibus cognoſcendis adiuuandiſque miſcentur? If ſo great Patriarkes were ignorant what became of the people which was borne of their loynes; how is it like, that other dead can be preſent to vnderſtand, and be helping to mens affaires? And here S. Auguſtine alſo meeteth with the cauillous anſwere of Bellarmine, who ſaith, that the Patriarks vnder the law being dead, knew not the affaires of the liuing, becauſe they were not yet in heauen: but the ſaints now departed are in heauen, and therefore may and doe know our eſtate: for S. Auguſtine reaſoneth cleane contrary, If Abraham ſo great a Patriarke knew not, much leſſe the dead now: Againe, he ſtill very vnlearnedly beggeth the thing in queſtion, ſeeing we haue proued before, that the Patriarkes were in heauen.

This was the confeſſion of one Paul Luther, confeſſor of Gods truth anno.1529. that Saints in heauen cannot helpe vs, and know no more what men doe here in this world, then a man in the North countrey knoweth what is done in the South contrey: Fox.1040.col.2.

Secondly, we acknowledge no patrones, protectors or captaines in heauen, but our Lord God and Sauiour Chriſt.

1 Pſalm.73.25. The Prophet Dauid ſaith, Whom haue I in heauen but thee? and Iacob calleth onely vpon the Lord God, to be the guide of his iourney, Gen.28.20. Vpon which words of the Pſalme ſaint Ambroſe thus noteth, Tu portio mea es, abundas mihi ad omnia, &c. Thou O Lord art my portion, thou ſufficeſt me for all things, I require none other thing, but to haue thee my portion: I neede the helpe of none, being receiued of thee; neither is there any thing in heauen, which I ſeeke beſide thee &c. de interpel.lib.4.c.12. Behold, Chriſt onely in heauen, without the helpe either of Angell, or Saint, ſufficed Ambroſe, and may ſuffice euery faithfull man.

2 By appoynting Saints to be patrones of places and countries, at length they brought in a multitude of popiſh Saints, and were not in ſuperſtition farre behinde the Gentiles, who gloried in the number of their gods: For haue they not allotted ſome to countreyes, as S.George for England, S.Andrew for Scotland, S.Denis for France, S.Patricke for Ireland? So likewiſe diuers Saints were called vpon for diuers diſeaſes, as S.Rombal for the tooth-ach, S.Petronil for the Ague: One for horſe, as S.Loye, S.Antony for pigges, S.Gregory for Schollers, S.George for Souldiers: Euen thus the Heathen inuented diuers gods, Neptune for the ſea, the Satyrs for the woods, the Nymphes for the water, Ceres for corne, Bacchus for wine, Venus for the Troians, Pallas for the Grecians, Iupiter ſtater for the Romanes.

Auguſt.lib.4. de ciuit.Dei. cap.8.

Nay, they were yet more ridiculous, they appoynted many gods for one thing: as for Infants Vagitanus, that made them to crye, Cuninus, that kept them in their Cradle, Adeona, Abeona, to teach them to goe: So for the entrie of the houſe, they had Limentinus the God of the threſhold, Cardea the god of the hinges, Forrulus that kept the doore: for their Corne, they had the Goddeſſe Seia when it was ſworne, Proſerpina when it ſprouted, Nodotus when it knotted, Hoſtilina when it eared, Flora when it waxed white, Runcina when it was cut downe. The like ſuperſtition almoſt raigneth in poperie. But what neede we runne to ſo many for theſe things, when as at the Lords hands we are promiſed, asking in the name of Chriſt, to receiue all things we neede? This great folly of theirs ſheweth what good commeth by the deuiſed patronage of Saints.

Bernard here helpeth vs well, writing vpon that place in the Canticles: My welbeloued is as the apple tree among the trees of the forreſt, Cantic.2,verſ.3. Non comparantur huic omnia ligna ſyluarum,&c. Super.cantic. ſerm.48. All the trees of the wood are not to be compared to this: for although there be fayre and great trees which may ſeeme to helpe, by their prayer, miniſterie, inſtruction, example; yet Chriſt onely the wiſedome of God is the tree of life: the other trees though they haue a ſhadowe of ſolace, yet no refection of life: there is one author of our life, the onely mediator of God and man.

Maſter Tindall holy Martyr hath put to his ſeale: Why ſhould I truſt in Pauls prayer or holines: for if Paul were aliue, and loued me, as he did them of his time, what could he do for me, or wiſh me, but to preach Chriſt, and pray to God for me to open my heart, to giue me his ſpirit, and to bring me to the knowledge of Chriſt? &c. Fox.pag.1250.col.2.artic.16. This holy Martyr with the reſt, were farre from making Saints their patrones, or aduocates.

Thirdly, it is alſo another popiſh fable and dreame, that the Saints may bee preſent euery where, as it pleaſeth themſelues, at their tombes and ſepulchers, and whereſoeuer els they are called for.

*Argum.*1. Act.3.21. The heauens containe the humanitie of Chriſt: it hath pleaſed him there to reſt himſelfe, vntill his comming to iudgement: Ergo, much more are the Saints kept in their reſting places.

*Argum.*2. The Saintes are at reſt, they doe ceaſe from the affaires of this life, Apocal.14.13. They reſt vnder the Altar in the peace of Chriſt, Apocal.6.9. there expecting and waiting the comming of Chriſt to iudgement: Ergo, they doe not wander nor ſtray abroad in the world, neither doe intermeddle with humane affayres.

Auguſtine ſaith, Si rebus viuentium intereſſent animæ mortuorum, meipſum pia mater nulla nocte deſereret, quæ terra marique ſecuta eſt, vt mecum viueret: De cura pro mortuis: If the ſoules of the dead were preſent at the affayres of the liuing, my deuout mother would neuer a night bee from me, who when ſhe liued, followed me by ſea and land, to haue my companie, and to liue with me: Ergo, the Saints departed are not preſent with vs when they would.

Bernard alſo agreeth, writing thus vpon the death of Humbertus: Quandiu viueret in eius laude non aperui os meum, ne forte poſſemus, vel ego adulationis notam, vel ille culpam incurrere vanitatis: ex hoc ſane neutrum iam timetur, nec ego illum video, & forſitan ille me non audit: While he liued, I opened not my mouth in his praiſe, leaſt that I might haue incurred the ſuſpition of flattery, he of vaine glorie: but now neither of theſe is feared, for I neither ſee him, and perhaps he heareth not me: Sermon. in obitum Humbert. Bernard doubteth whether the Saints be preſent to heare vs, and thinketh rather that they doe not.

I will laſtly adde out of their owne decrees.*par.2.cauſ.*13.qu.2.c.29. Fatendum eſt, neſcire mortuos, quid hic agatur, &c. We muſt confeſſe that the dead know not, what is done here: but they doe heare of thoſe that depart hence, not all things, but what they are ſuffred to declare, and what it behoueth them to heare, &c. So then the dead know not all the affaires of the liuing, but ſo much, as it pleaſeth God ſhould be declared vnto them.

THE FOVRTH QVESTION, CONCERNING the reliques of Saints.

THis queſtion hath foure parts. 1 Whether the reliques of Saints are to be worſhipped. 2 Of the tranſlation of reliques. 3 Of the keeping and preſeruing of reliques. 4 Of the miracles wrought at the tombes and reliques of Martyrs.

THE FIRST PART, CONCERNING the worſhip of Reliques.

The Papiſts.

THe reliques of Saints, that is their bodies and bones, and Sepulchres, where they are buried, 35.Error. are to be adored and reuerenced, *Trident in.Concil.ſeſſ.*25. though with leſſe honour ſomewhat, then the Saints themſelues, *Bellarm.de reliquijs ſanctor.lib.2.cap.*21. And not onely their bodies (ſay they) are worthie of due reuerence, but other monuments of theirs, as S.Peters chaire at Rome, Rom.16.verſ.16. the priſon, wherein S.Paul was kept in Malta, *Rhemiſt.Act.*28.1. the chaine that S.Paul was bound with at Rome, Act.27.4. the ſtone that hit S.Stephen vpon the Elbow now to be ſeene at Ancona in Italie, Act.7.ſect.6.

Anſw. As for S.Peters chayre, and S.Pauls chaine, they are neither able to ſhew that Peter ſate in ſuch a chaire, or that it is the very chaine which they ſhew, wherewith Paul was bound. Concerning the priſon houſe at Malta, they ſhew that which neuer was: Paul was a priſoner, but not in priſon there: that of the ſtone that ſmote Stephen vpon the elbowe is a meere fable: See Fulk. vpon that place.

*Argum.*2. Ioſias, when he cauſed the bones of other dead to be burned, yet he commanded them to let the Prophets bones alone, *Bellarm.cap.*3. The diſciples of Iohn came and buried his bodie: an example of dutie and religious deuotion to the dead bodies of Saints, *Rhemiſt. Matth.*14.*ſect.*2. Their bodies are the temples of the holy Ghoſt, and ſhall be rayſed againe to life: Ergo, they muſt be adored and worſhipped, *Trident.Concil.ſeſſ.*25.

Anſw. One anſwere may ſerue for all theſe arguments. We deny not, but that the dead bodies of the faithfull are to be laid vp with reuerence in hope of the reſurrection; but it therefore followeth not, that they muſt be abuſed to Idolatry. Iohns diſciples buried his bodie, but ſhrined it not to be worſhipped: Ioſias made difference betweene the bones of the Idolatrous Prieſts, and of the true Prophet: the one he burned, and thought them vnworthie of honeſt ſepulture; the other he ſuffered to reſt, and enioy the honour of buriall. But of any adoration or worſhipping of his bones, we read not.

*Argum.*3. Iſay 11.10. Erit Sepulchrum eius glorioſum: His graue or ſepulcher ſhall be glorious. This is vnderſtood of the graue of Chriſt, that it ſhould be honoured: wherefore reliques are worthie of honor. *Bellar.cap.*3.

Anſw. Firſt, though the Latine text ſo tranſlate, as the Ieſuite readeth; yet there is no ſuch thing in the originall: the word is מנוחה, [a] which ſignifieth reſt, and ſo the Septuagint tranſlate it, ἀνάπαυσις: ſo that the ſenſe is, his reſt, that is, his Church, ſhall be glorious: and ſo is this word vſed Pſal.132.14. This is my reſt for euer. Secondly, wee denie not, but that (admitting the Latine reading) the place of Chriſts buriall was glorious, and to be honoured, while as Chriſts precious body was there, but that afterwards it remained holy, this text ſheweth not. Thirdly, if Chriſts bodie and the place thereof were to be honoured; how ſerueth this place for the reliques of Saints? Chriſts bodie was to be adored, becauſe of the vniting to the Godhead; but the ſeruants are not to be honoured as the Maſter.

The Proteſtants.

The bodies of Martyrs are reuerently to be brought to the ground, in teſtimonie of our hope of their reſurrection, and their memorie is to be honored, as in prayſing God for their conſtant Martyrdome: ſo the Pſalmiſt ſaith, Right precious in the ſight of God is the death of his Saints, Pſalm.116. as alſo in following their ſteps, and propounding vnto vs their good example: but to adore and worſhip their bones, to kiſſe, and kneele downe at their ſepulchres, is to too groſſe idolatrie, and not to be vſed amongſt Chriſtians.

*Argum.*1. The Lord did of purpoſe himſelfe burie the bodie of Moſes in a ſecret place, which was neuer knowne to the Iſraelites: and this reaſon is generally rendred by moſt writers, leaſt the people of Iſrael ſhould worſhip his bodie, and ſo commit Idolatrie: Ergo, the adoration of the bodies of Saints diſpleaſeth God. Argum.Caluin.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that though the people of Iſrael might by that meanes haue fallen into idolatrie; yet the people of God may now more ſafely honour reliques, becauſe they are not ſo prone to idolatrie.

Anſw. Experience of popiſh idolatrieproueth the cleane contrarie: for the like ſuperſtition and worſhipping of images was neuer ſo common and vſuall, no not in the moſt corrupt times of that Church, as now it is in poperie.

And what danger of ſuperſtition is occaſioned by the keeping of reliques, and other ſuch vnprofitable vſages, I appeale to the late popiſh ſynode *Auguſtenſ.cap.*23. Sedulò moneri populum, nè ceremonias religioſiſſimè inſtitutas in abuſum vertant, aut ſuperſtitionem, ſed ipſis ad exercendam pietatem vtantur: That the people ſhould be continually admoniſhed, that they turne not ceremonies moſt religiouſly inſtituted, to any abuſe, or ſuperſtition, but vſe them for the exerciſe of pietie. If there bee feare of ſuperſtition in the vſe of ceremonies which had a good beginning, much greater danger is there in theſe, that can haue no good vſe, neither euer had any good inſtitution.

*Argum.*2. Our Sauiour Chriſt reproueth the Scribes and Phariſees, calling them hypocrites, becauſe they did garniſh the ſepulchres of the Prophets, whom their forefathers put to death, Matth.23.29. but their doctrine they neglected and regarded not. Such hypocrites are the Papiſts at this day, who commit a double fault; for they contemne the doctrine of the Apoſtles, whoſe memories they would ſeeme to honour: and againe, in the ſuperſtitious honour and worſhip, which they yeeld vnto them, they exceede the bounds of Chriſtian pietie.

3 Their bodies were not to be worſhipped when they were aliue, much leſſe now they are dead. What are they now but earth, duſt and aſhes? according as the Lord ſaid to Adam, Thou art duſt, and to duſt ſhalt thou returne, Gene.3.19. What is this els, but to worſhip the earth, euen duſt and aſhes? So Auguſtine ſaith, Timeo adorare terram ne damnet me, qui fecit cœlum & terram: I am afraid to worſhip the earth, leaſt he condemne me, that made both heauen and earth. Onely in Chriſt (ſaith he) I finde, Quomodo ſine impietate adoretur terra: How the earth, that is, his body, may be worſhipped without any impietie: namely, becauſe of the neere coniunction and vnion of his humane nature with the Godhead in one perſon: for otherwiſe of it ſelfe the bodie of Chriſt is Gods Creature and workemanſhip, and not capable of diuine worſhip. This then is the priuiledge that Chriſt hath, more then all Saints and Martyrs beſide, that in him onely the humanitie is adored.

Concil.Carthag.5.can.15. Placuit à glorioſiſſimis imperatoribus peti, vt reliquiæ non ſolum in ſimulachris, ſed in quibuſcunq; locis, lucis vel arboribus deleantur: We thinke good to make requeſt to the moſt renowned Emperors, that reliques may be taken away, not onely ſuch, as are kept in ſhrines and images, but in what place ſoeuer, woods, or trees: Theſe fathers were ſo farre off from worſhipping reliques, that they would not haue them at all extant.

Concil.Lateranenſ. ſub Innocentio 3.cap.62. Ne reliquiæ ſanctorum oſtendantur extra capſam: That the reliques ſhould not be ſhewed out of the caske or cheſt, where they were kept: It ſhould ſeeme that their meaning was not to haue them worſhipped; vnleſſe we thinke the cheſt and cask ſhould be worſhipped withall.

Their owne decrees alſo witneſſe with vs, part.2.cauſ.1.qu.1.c.65. Si ita Martyrium fecerimus, vt noſtras velimus ab hominibus reliquias honorari: If wee deſire Martyrdome, to the intent our reliques ſhould be honoured of men, it deſerueth puniſhment, and not reward: And if it be a ſinne in them to require it, it is in vs alſo to performe it.

The holy Martyrs haue ſealed this doctrine: Thomas Bilney holy Martyr; Prieſts (ſaith he) take away the offrings, and hang them about their whores neckes, and after that they take them againe from their whores, if they pleaſe them not, and hang them vpon the Images: and is not that a great relicke, when it is hanged there againe? Fox.p.1010. And are not ſuch relickes now meete things to be worſhipped?

Iohn Lambert holy Martyr: That oblations ſhould be offred or done to the ſepulchres and reliques of Saints, God did neuer inſtitute any ſuch thing in the new teſtament, which is the veritie and rule of all Chriſten people to follow and beleeue. And this he further ſheweth by the buriall of Moſes, whoſe graue was hid from the Iewes, leſt they being prone to new fangled worſhipping, ſhould haue fallen into idolatrie: this argument we haue touched before.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE TRANSLAtion of the bodies of Saints.

The Papiſts.

IT is an vſuall thing amongſt them to tranſlate, and carrie from one place to another the bones and relickes of Saints: as they ſay Iohn Baptiſts head was tranſlated from Samaria to Alexandria, and is now at Amiens in France, Rhemiſt.Matth.14.ſect.1. So the bodie of S.Luke was remoued, they ſay, from Achaia to Conſtantinople, and from thence to Padua in Italy, where now it remaineth: Argum.in Luk. Rhemiſt. The ſtone alſo that hit S.Stephen, is now at Ancona in Italy, Act.7.ſect.6. 36.Error.

*Argum.*1. Ioſeph gaue charge concerning his bones when he dyed, and they were remoued from Egypt to the land of Canaan, at the departure of the Iſraelites, Exod.13.Heb.11.22. Ergo, the remouing and tranſlation of Saints bodies or relickes is lawfull, Rhemiſt.Bellarm.cap,4.

Anſw. Ioſeph gaue commandement concerning his bones to teſtifie his faith and hope in the promiſe of God, for the inheritance of the land of Canaan, as it followeth: God will ſurely viſite you and bring you to the land which hee ſware to Abraham; therefore ye ſhall cary my bones hence, &c.Gen.50.24. They were not remoued to be adored or worſhipped: Ergo, no ſuch tranſlation of relickes is hereby proued. Secondly, you can ſhewe no ſuch charge, that Saint Paul, Peter, or any of the reſt, gaue concerning the tranſlation of their bodies, as Ioſeph gaue vnto his poſteritie.

The Proteſtants.

WE denie not, but that the bodies of the dead, before they be interred, may be conueyed vnto the place of their buriall, as Ioſias was carried being dead by his ſeruants from Megiddo to Ieruſalem, where a ſepulchre was prepared for him, 2.King.23.30. But either for the dead to be remoued to be buried in ſome one place more then another, for the holineſſe thereof; or the bones of Saints to be raked out of their graues, and tranſlated, with intent to ſhrine them, and ſet them vp to be adored: they are ſuperſtitious cuſtomes, and not vſed of ancient time among the people of God.

*Argum.*1. That the place profiteth not the dead, but vnto them it is all alike whereſoeuer they are buried: we haue ſhewed afore, 1.part.controuer.9.queſt.2.part.4. The example of Auguſtines mother is notable, and worthie the memorie: She had with great care prouided her a ſepulchre neere vnto her husband, who dyed at Thagaſta in Africa, and was there buried, and was purpoſed her ſelfe to lye by him: but the Lord ſo diſpoſed, that ſhe left her life at Hoſtia in Italie, and being readie to depart, ſhe ſayd thus to her ſonnes: Ponite hoc corpus vbicunque, nihil vos eius cura conturbet: Burie my bodie where you thinke good, take no great care for it. And being asked, if it grieued her not to leaue her bodie ſo farre off from her owne citie, ſhe gaue this godly anſwere: Nihil longe eſt à Deo, nequè timendum eſt, ne ille non agnoſcat in fine ſeculi, vnde me reſuſcitet: Auguſt. lib.confeſſ.9.cap.11. No place is neerer to God then other, neither am I to feare, leaſt the Lord ſhould not as well raiſe me vp in this place, as in mine owne citie: Ergo, in reſpect of the dead, it skilleth not where they are buried.

Argum.2. The other cuſtome of tranſlating of reliques to be worſhipped, is farre more impious and ſuperſtitious: for hereupon it commeth, that the people haue been deceiued with falſe relickes: yea one and the ſelfe ſame relicke is ſaid to be in diuers places. As of S.Iohn Baptiſts head: his face they ſay, is at S.Iean Angelz: the reſt of his head at Malta: his skull at Nemours: his braine at Nouium Raſtrouienſe: his iaw bone at Veſalium: a peece of his eare at S.Floride: his forehead and haires in Spaine at S. Saluadores: and yet for all this his whole head is to be ſeene at S. Silueſters in Rome, and at Amiens in France: Fulk Matthew 14.2. Thus they haue mangled alſo the bodie of S.Peter: halfe (they ſay) is at S.Peters in Rome, halfe at S.Paules: his head at S.Iohn Laterane: his neather iawe with his beard at Poycters in France: at Triers many of his bones, Fulk.Rom.16.ſect.4. See what mockage and cooſening here is, and abuſing of ſimple people? How can their whole bodies be in one place, and yet their parts and bones in another? And where doe they learne thus to diſmember their bodies, and to rake them out of their graues? The honouring of the bodies of Martyrs, is to ſuffer them quietly to reſt in their graues, and not to rotte aboue the ground. Ioſias honoured the Prophets ſepulchre, and would not remoue his bones: herein therefore they diſhonour the Martyrs, and offer violence to their bodies, thinking falſely that they doe great worſhip vnto them.

Auguſtine ſaith, that he which would now renew the ceremonies of the Iewes, that are as it were buried: Tanquam ſopitos cineres eruens, non erit pius deductor aut baiulus corporis, ſed impius ſepulturæ violator.Epiſtol.19. He ſhould be as one raking in the aſhes of the dead, and ſo be rather a violator of Chriſtian buriall, then a bringer of the bodie honeſtly to the ground. So by Auguſtines iudgement, eruens ſopitos cineres, he that pulleth out dead mens aſhes, bones, or relickes, is ſepulturæ violator, a prophaner of their buriall.

Synod. Moguntiac. can.51. Deinceps corpora ſanctorum de loco ad locum, nullus præſumat transferre, ſine conſilio Principis, vel Epiſcopi, & ſanctæ ſynodi licentia: From hence forth let no man preſume to carie the bodies of the Saints from place to place, without the counſell of the Prince or Biſhop, and leaue of the Synode. This Councell miſliked the common and vſuall manner of tranſlating Saints bodies, and therefore maketh a reſtraint for it: this Canon is alleaged among the decrees, part.3.diſt.1.c.37.

We haue alſo further euidence both out of the ciuill and Canon law, Cod.lib.1.tit.6.c.26.Leo. Reliquiæ in ædes publicas non debent illicitè inferri: Reliques muſt not be remoued or carried from their places, into publike or common houſes. This law forbiddeth reliques to be remoued out of the Church.Lib.3.tit.43.leg.14. Valentinian. Nemo ſine Auguſti affatibus,&c. That no man without the leaue of the Emperor ſhould remoue any humane bodie.

Likewiſe in what caſes humane reliques ſhould be remoued, or tranſlated, the law hath determined: as Cod.lib.3.tit.43.leg.1. Si vi fluminis reliquiæ filÿ tui contingantur: If thy ſonnes reliques be beaten vpon by the water, thou mayeſt remoue them, or vpon any other iuſt or neceſſary cauſe ibid.leg.10. Si necdùm perpetuæ ſepulturæ corpus traditum,&c. If the bodie be not yet interred, or committed to ſepulture, it may be remoued. So then there may be ciuill occaſions to remoue bodies, but no religious.

The Canon law alſo agreeth, decret.part.3.diſtinct.1.c.36. Tribus ex cauſis Sanctorum loca tranſmutanda ſunt: The places of the Saints may be changed vpon 3.occaſions, when as perſecution is raiſed in the place: ſecondly, when as the place it ſelfe is difficult, or inconuenient: thirdly, when as, Malorum ſocietate grauantur, they are moleſted with the companie of the wicked. This Canon alloweth Saints bodies to be remoued, eyther when perſecuters would rage againſt their aſhes, or the place is inconuenient, by reaſon of the ouerflowing of water, or otherwiſe; or when the people are readie to abuſe them to idolatrie, or any other vngodlines: but all this while, no mention is made of tranſlating of reliques, to be honoured or worſhipped.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE KEEPING and preſeruing of relickes.

The Papiſts.

37.Error. WE muſt not thinke it impoſſible, that the monuments of Saints, as their garments, relickes, bones, ſhould indure a long time, ſeeing Manna was kept ſo many hundred yeares in the potte, which was placed by the Arke, being a thing ſo apt to putrifie. Rhemiſt. Hebr.9.ſect.4.

Anſw. When we haue a commaundement for the reſeruation of ſuch things, as the Iſraelites had, we may beleeue they will keepe ſo long. And againe, the Iſraelites for all that did not worſhip the pot of Manna, though it were of ſuch long continuance.

The Proteſtants.

THe bodies and bones of men departed neither are to be kept out of their graues, as we haue ſhewed, neither can they be preſerued without corruption.

*Argum.*1. Vnto all Adams ſeede it is ſayd, Duſt thou art, and to duſt ſhalt thou returne: onely the bodie of Chriſt had this priuiledge, Pſalm.16. Not to ſee corruption: Ergo, the bodies of men departed though they were neuer ſo holy, being all the ſeede of Adam, muſt be turned to duſt.

*Argum.*2. If they would glorifie God and ſpeake the trueth, they doe very well know by experience, that the relickes of Saints haue no ſuch promiſe or warrant for their continuance: for moſt, if not all of their relickes, were forged and deuiſed, and no ſuch thing indeed. S. Peters braine at Geneua was found to be a pumice ſtone: S. Anthonies arme was found to be an Harts piſſe: at Towres of late the image of Venus in an Agate was worſhipped for the image of the Virgine Marie: the blood of Hales in England was deſcried to be but the blood of a Drake: the three hoſtes at Calice were but three white counters ſoldred into a marble ſtone. Theſe and many ſuch monuments and relickes of Saints the Church of Rome hath great ſtore: no maruaile now, if they be of long continuance, for ſtones and counters may laſt a great while: and Drakes blood, with other ſuch ſtuffe, is not ſo daintie, but it may be ſtill renewed.

Of ſuch cooſening trickes Auguſtine complayned in his time; ſpeaking of runnagate Monkes, he ſaith: Alij membra martyrum, ſi tamen martyrum, venditant: Alij fimbrias ſuas, & phylacteria magnificant: Some doe boaſt of relickes of Martyrs, which they carrie about, and perhaps they are no ſuch relickes: ſome doe extoll their habite and Monkiſh weede: *De opere Monachorum, cap.*28.

To this place of S. Auguſtine Bellarmine thus anſwereth, cap.5. That S. Auguſtine doubteth onely of ſuch relickes, which were priuilie caried about, not of thoſe which were publikely ſhewed.

Contra. Yea many of your publike relickes were forged; for to what end elſe, was that decree made by Innocent.3.decr.Greg.lib.3.tit.45.c.2, Prælati non permittant, &c. Prelates ſhall not ſuffer thoſe which come to their Churches to worſhip, Varijs figmentis & falſis, &c. to be deceiued with falſe and fained relickes, as the cuſtome hath been in diuers places for luker ſake. So then euen publikelie in their Churches they vſed to deceiue the ſimple people, with forged relickes.

See then, I pray you, what diueliſh idolatrie was this, to cauſe the people to worſhip counters, Drakes blood, Harts ſinewes, and other ſuch baſe creatures, in ſtead of relickes: which, though they were ſuch indeede, ought not to be worſhipped.

Gelaſius decret. de apocryphis, thus writeth of this matter: Scriptura de inuentione crucis dominicæ, & aliæ de inuentione capitis Iohannis Baptiſtæ, nouella quædam relationes ſunt, & nonnulli eas catholici legunt: ſed cum hæc ad catholicorum manus veniunt, beati Pauli præcedat ſententia, Omnia probate, quod bonum eſt tenete: The writings of the inuention of the Lords Croſſe, and of Iohn Baptiſts head, are new reports, and ſome Catholikes reade them: but when ſuch writings come to Catholikes hands, let them remember S. Pauls ſaying, Trie all things, and keepe the beſt. Here we haue the iudgement of a Biſhop of Rome, who thinketh that many relickes, that are ſayd to haue been found, and ſo kept, and preſerued, are but meere forgeries, and foyſted in by heretikes.

THE FOVRTH PART, CONCERNING VISIONS and miracles done at the Tombes and relickes of Martyrs.

The Papiſts.

38.Error. FIrſt, they almoſt make it an ordinarie thing in their Church to worke miracles: Bellarmine ſaith, that it is a ſufficient note of the Church, the glorie or power of miracles, *De eccleſ.lib.4.cap.*14. Chriſt ſaith, that they that doe beleeue in him, ſhall doe greater workes then he. No maruaile then, if the image of our Lady (ſay they) and the like, worke miracles, as Peters ſhadowe did, and that they ſeeme greater then Chriſts: for hee promiſeth that his Saints ſhall worke greater are buried: we haue ſhewed afore, 1.part.controuer.9.queſt.2.part.4. The example of Auguſtines mother is notable, and worthie the memorie: She had with great care prouided her a ſepulchre neere vnto her husband,who dyed at Thagaſta in Africa,and was there buried,and was purpoſed her ſelfe to lye by him: but the Lord ſo diſpoſed,that ſhe left her life at Hoſtia in Italie, and being readie to depart,ſhe ſayd thus to her ſonnes: Ponite hoc corpus vbicunque, nihil vos eius cura conturbet: Burie my bodie where you thinke good,take no great care for it. THE FOVRTH PART, CONCERNING VISIONS and miracles done at the Tombes and relickes of Martyrs.

The Papiſts.

38.Error. FIrſt, they almoſt make it an ordinarie thing in their Church to worke miracles: Bellarmine ſaith, that it is a ſufficient note of the Church, the glorie or power of miracles, De eccleſ.lib.4.cap.14. Chriſt ſaith, that they that doe beleeue in him, ſhall doe greater workes then he. No maruaile then, if the image of our Lady (ſay they) and the like, worke miracles, as Peters ſhadowe did, and that they ſeeme greater then Chriſts: for hee promiſeth that his Saints ſhall worke greater miracles then himſelfe, Rhemiſt. annot. Iohn. 14. ſect. 3. They alſo call vpon vs to confirme our doctrine by miracles, becauſe wee preach newly and extraordinarilie, Rhemiſt. 2. Corint. 12. ſect. 5.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. First, that place alleadged prooueth not ſuch a generalitie and perpetuitie of working miracles: for then euery one that beleeueth ſhould doe greater workes then Chriſt: for our Sauiour ſpeaketh generally, He that beleeueth. Auguſtine doth farre otherwiſe, and in a better ſenſe expound this place: He that beleeueth in me ſhall doe the ſame workes that I doe: Quæ opera, niſi vt ex impio iuſtus fiat? prius ego facio, deinde & ipſe faciet, quia facio, vt ipſe faciat: What works, ſaith he, but that he which beleeueth, of a wicked man ſhall be made righteous? which worke firſt I doe (ſaith Chriſt,) then he himſelfe doth it, becauſe I make him to doe it. Quod vtique in illo, ſed non ſine illo Chriſtus operatur: Mans conuerſion is wrought by Chriſt in man, and not altogether without man, becauſe Chriſt working in vs, doth enable vs by his grace to worke out our ſaluation, Philipp. 2. 12. yet is it not our ſelues that worke, but the grace of God in vs. Then it followeth, he ſhall doe greater workes then theſe: Prorſus maius hoc eſſe dixerim, quam eſt cœlum & terra: The redemption and conuerſion of men, is a greater worke then the heauens or the earth, Tract. in Iohan. 72. Auguſtine therefore doth properly vnderſtand this place, not of outward miracles, but of the wonderfull conuerſion of the heart, which wee are ſaid to worke, becauſe Chriſt worketh it in vs.

Origen alſo long before Auguſtine thus expounded this place, Hom. 7. in Leuit. Chriſtus dicit, qui credit in me, &c. Chriſt ſaith, he that beleeueth in me, ſhal doe greater things then theſe: Verè enim maius mihi videtur, &c. For it ſeemeth indeede a greater thing vnto me, that man being in the fleſh, being armed onely with the faith and word of Chriſt, doth ouercome legions of deuils, though it bee Chriſt that ouercommeth in vs, yet he ſaith it is more, that he ouercommeth by vs, then by himſelfe.

2 As wee denie not but that there may in theſe daies bee miracles wrought: and all ſuch miracles as ſerue to confirme the doctrine deliuered in Scriptures, we doe not refuſe, though wee bee not bound to beleeue any mans report of ſuch miracles, but onely the writings of the Apoſtles and Euangeliſts: ſo we affirme that there is no ſuch neceſſitie of miracles, as in times paſt; neither that we are to be preſſed to ſhew miracles, ſeeing wee profeſſe the ancient Apoſtolike faith, which hath been alreadie confirmed by the miraculous workes of our Sauiour Chriſt and his Apoſtles. Wherefore wee condemne the fabulous hiſtories and reports of popiſh Saints, whoſe liues are fuller of miracles, if we will beleeue them, then were the liues of Chriſt and his Apoſtles. Nay, there is nothing almoſt done in their ſeruice but by a miracle: Chriſts bodie preſent in the Maſſe by a miracle: Diuels chaſed away with holy water: Saints know their thoughts, heare their prayers, are preſent here and there, their bodies many yeeres kept from corruption, and all by miracles. I conclude this point with Auguſtine: Aut non ſunt vera, quæ dicuntur; aut ſi hæreticorum aliqua mira facta ſunt, magis cauere debemus: Either they are not true miracles, which they boaſt of: or if they be, we muſt beware and take heede of them the more.

Thus ſpeaketh alſo Thomas Bilney holy Martyr: The miracles done at Walſingham, Cantuburie, Ipſwich, were done by the diuell, thorough the ſufferance of God, Fox pag. 1001.

Heare alſo what a whole Councel ſaith: Colonienſ. part. 6. c. 23: Miracula ne impudentius iactentur, niſi quæ ſcripturis prodita, aut non à leuibus ſcriptorib. ſumma cum hiſtoriæ fide tradita ſunt: Let not miracles be too much boaſted of, but ſuch as are ſet forth in Scripture, or deliuered by graue writers, with euident truth of hiſtorie. Wee are not bound therefore to beleeue all miracles, which are reported in the popiſh Church. And that there is now no ſuch neceſſitie of miracles, another Councell teſtifieth: Interrelig. Cæſar. cap. 19. Inter initia fidei, interna virtus externis ſignis & miraculis demonſtrabatur, ad confirmationem rudis fidei: nunc verò adulta & corroborata fides, ſigna, quæ infirmis dantur, non requirit: In the beginning of faith, the inward vertue or operation (of the ſpirit) was ſhewed by outward ſignes and miracles, for the confirmation of the weake faith: but now faith being come to perfit growth and eſtabliſhed, needeth not ſuch ſignes as are for the weake.

Eſpenc. 2. Tim. p. 183. To this effect alſo one of your owne writers alleageth Gregorie, Moral. lib. 27. cap. 11. Quid eſt Paule, quod Publij patrem ægrum, &c. What is the cauſe (ô Paul) that by thy prayer thou didſt heale the father of Publius being an Infidell, Act. 28. but thou preſcribeſt to Timothie for his health after the manner of Phiſitions, 1. Timoth. 5? Surely Publius was to be healed by a ſigne, that he might be conuerted to the faith: but Timothie needed no miracle, being alreadie conuerted: Quid ergo mirum, ſi propagata fide, &c. What marueile then, if (the faith being now propagated) miracles are not often done, when as the Apoſtles ſometime did not ſhew miracles in the faithfull? If then in Gregorie his time, almoſt a thouſand yeere ſince, there were ſo few miracles, how much fewer are now to be looked for?

39.Error.

SEcondly, they doe as much maintaine their fabulous viſions and apparitions, as lying miracles: as how Chriſt came in a pilgrimes weede to Gregories table of hoſpitalitie, *Rhemiſt. Hebr.*13.2. Peter beleeued the viſion and apparition ſhewed to Cornelius, at his report, before it was written: Ergo, wee ought to beleeue viſions not written in Scripture, *Rhemiſt. Act.*10. *ſect.*3.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, that of our Sauiour Chriſts appearing, is an hereticall fable, and impugneth the article of our faith concerning Chriſts aſcenſion into heauen, and there remaining till his ſecond comming. Secondly, Peter was not bound to beleeue Cornelius viſion, till he had been by viſion admoniſhed himſelfe: the Apoſtles which were then endued with the gift of diſcerning ſpirits, could better iudge of true viſions, then any man now can: yet wee refuſe not to giue credit to viſions, when they are as credibly reported vnto vs, as this was to Peter: but no viſion, nor miracle, nor Angell from heauen ſhall draw vs away from the doctrine of the Scriptures to beleeue errors. Laſtly, we deny not, but that they may haue viſions; but ſuch, as one Vincentius bragged of, that wrote againſt Auguſtine concerning the originall of the ſoule: He ſaid, that another Vincentius who had been a captaine or chiefe Donatiſt, appeared vnto him in viſion, and badde him write thoſe books: to whom Auguſtine thus anſwereth; Ille qui ſe transfigurat in angelum lucis, in eo tibi eſt transfiguratus, quem tu fuiſſe veluti angelum lucis credidiſti: He that can transfigure himſelfe into an angell of light, did transfigure himſelfe into the ſhape of that man, whom thou eſteemedſt as an angell of light. Such apparitions they may haue, and yet no great cauſe to boaſt of them.

Lib.3.cap.2. de animæ origine.

Such was that viſion that one Polychronius a Monothelite heretike boaſted of in the 6. generall Councell at Conſtantinople, action 15. how that a man appeared vnto him in white, who tolde him that Chriſt had but one will, and that he ſhould write the confeſſion of his faith, and lay it vpon a dead man, and he ſhould raiſe him to life againe: The Councell gaue him the hearing, and prouided a dead bodie for him to worke his skill vpon, who muttered ouer the dead a long time in vaine, and could doe nothing. Such viſions, as this was, popiſh prieſts haue had many: And that we ſlaunder them not, one of their late Popes Paulus 3. ſhall ſpeake for vs: Qui legendas Georgy & Chriſtophori tolli precepit de breuiario: Who commaunded that the legends of George and Chriſtopher ſhould be taken out of the Breuiarie. Thus Paulus Vergerius proteſted in the late Tridentine Chapter, and therefore was excluded. Of ſuch old wiues fables thus was it decreed, *Concil. Colonienſ. part.*6.*cap.*10. Ineptas & aniles fabulas deuitabit (i. concionator) qualia nuper erant quæ ex nullis probatis authoribus, ſed potius ſuſpectiſſim. hominum commentis adferebantur exempla: The preacher muſt take heede of fooliſh old wiues fables, ſuch as of late were reported not out of any approued authors, but from the ſuſpicious deuices of men.

Such is that tale and Monkiſh fable of Pilate, that he ſhould bee ſeene euery yeere in a Iudges habite in a certaine lake, called after his name, vnder a hill not farre from Lucerna in Heluetia; and that he, which chaunceth to ſee him, liueth not a yeere after. This is held to be a ridiculous fable by one of their owne writers, Eſpenc. in 1. *Timoth. p.*159. d. Of the like credit he holdeth that dreame reported by *Chriſtianus Maſſæus, lib.*8. Chronic. how that Trophimus going to Rome to ſee Peter, as he ſailed, buried his wife, dying in trauell, in a Rock, with the childe at her breaſts, and after two yeeres comming that way againe, found his wife aliue, and the little childe playing at her breaſt, who were preſerued by *Mary Magdalen, Eſpenc.*2. *Timoth. p.*183. a. Wee ſee the Papiſts themſelues are aſhamed of theſe fables. The ſame author doubteth not to ſay of the ſecond Nicene, where the worſhip of Images was decreed; That the fathers there, Dæmonum ſpectris, & muliebribus ſomnijs parum verecundè abutebantur, did without ſhame abuſe the viſions of diuels, and womens dreames, to eſtabliſh their opinion.

Let vs heare alſo the complaint of Abbas Cluniacenſ. more then 400. yeeres ſince, who (ſaith he) was aſhamed, when he did ſing in the Church the ſong of S. Benet, Mendacia ad minus 24. Canticum id citato percurrens animo reperi: wherein he found 24. lyes at the leaſt, running ouer the ſong haſtelie in his minde, *lib.*5. *epiſt.*29. Wherefore according to the rule of the Ciuill law, *Cod. lib.*3. *tit.*43. *leg.*6. Alexander. Monumentorum inſcriptiones non faciunt fidem: The ſuperſcriptions of monuments are not to bee beleeued. No more are the fabulous viſions and miracles, which are reported to haue been ſeene, and done at Tombes, to be receiued.

THirdly, they ſay, that the power of working myracles was in the Apoſtles actually, and that they properly did giue health, and other things by their miraculous gift, though they receiued the force and vertue of God. And therefore they finde fault with vs, becauſe wee giue this note, A miracle done by Chriſt by the hands of the Apoſtles.

Firſt, Peter ſaith, That which we haue, giue we to thee, Act.3.6. Secondly, we muſt not thinke, that they had no more power, then as dead inſtruments in the workmans hand, Rhem. in hunc locum.

The Proteſtants.

WE both agree, that the power of working miracles was giuen of God: but herein we differ, they thinke that this power was inherent in the Apoſtles, and that hauing once receiued this power of God, they could execute it themſelues: like as a man hauing the power of ſenſe and mouing by nature, moueth and ſeeth when he liſt himſelfe. But we hold againſt the Pelagians, Gratiam Dei ad ſingulos actus dari, that the grace of God is daily infuſed, and wee haue neede of it for euery act: it is not ſufficient once generally to haue receiued it. So then the Apoſtles were but the inſtruments of Chriſts working: he is better ſaid in them and by them to work miracles, then they in and by him. Neither doth it follow, that they are dead inſtruments: for the horſe (I trow) that draweth in the plough is no dead inſtrument: yet he hath need for euery bout and turning to haue a driuer and a guide: truly we are as vnfit for the Lords yoke by nature, as the horſe is for the plough: and therefore haue neede of the Lords continuall direction. The Apoſtles then gaue that they had, not as owners, but as the Lords agents and inſtruments of his working.

*Argum.*1. Act.3.16. His name hath made this man ſound: and the faith which is by him hath giuen to him this diſpoſition of his whole bodie: from hence we reaſon thus. That which depended vpon the faith of the receiuer, was not actually inherent in the power of the giuer; but this miraculous worke of healing was by the faith of him that was healed: Ergo, it was not actually in the Apoſtles that gaue this gift. Againe, the name of Chriſt did make him ſound: Ergo, properly the Apoſtles gaue not health, but onely as Miniſters, the Name of Chriſt working in, and by them: And Saint Peter himſelfe denieth, that they did this miracle by their owne power or godlineſſe, Act.3.12. wherefore the Apoſtles properly, (as they ſpeake) that is, by a power inherent or reſiant in them, did not worke miracles.

*Argum.*2. If the Apoſtles had the power of working miracles alwayes actually in themſelues, then might they exerciſe the ſame facultie, when they would: but ſo could they not; for S. Paul, when Epaphroditus was ſicke, depended by prayer vpon Gods mercie for his health, Philip.2.27. whom no doubt he would haue cured by miracle, as well as the father of Publius, Act.28.8. if this power had bene alwayes preſent with the Apoſtle: So then, as the Apoſtles had not knowledge and foreſight of all things to come; as S. Paul truſted to haue been deliuered being a priſoner at Rome; as it may appeare, Hebr.13.13. yet did it not ſo fall out; but ſuch things onely, as God did ſee profitable for his Church to be knowne, were reuealed: in like manner, neither could the Apoſtles worke miracles as they were diſpoſed themſelues at all times, but when it pleaſed God thereto to enable them. I will not refuſe herein the teſtimonie of one of their owne, Et alia pleraq; Apoſtolos pro ſua diſcipulorumq; ſalute vtiliter nequiuiſſe conſpicimus: We ſee that the Apoſtles could not do many other things, for their owne, and their diſciples health. Eſpenc.comment.in 2. *Timoth.p.*183.c.

Tractat in Iohan.71. Auguſtine thus writheth: Maiora quam ipſe fecit, dicit eos facturos, ſed in eis vel per eos ſe faciente: He ſaith, they ſhall doe greater workes then he: that is, himſelfe working in them or by them: Ergo, Chriſt wrought miracles by the hands of the Apoſtles, they were his liuely inſtruments in working.

The Papiſts.

41. Error. FOurthly, they doe greatly triumph and reioyce for the miracles which are wrought by the vertue of holy reliques. Firſt, the woman was healed by touching the hemme of Chriſts garment: Ergo, vertue in holy reliques, Rhemiſt. Secondly, napkins that had touched Saint Pauls body wrought miracles, by the vertue giuen vnto them: Ergo, reliques may, *Act.*19.*verſ.*12. Rhemiſt.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. TO the firſt: firſt, the vertue was not in the hemme of Chriſts garment, but he ſaith, it proceeded from himſelfe, Luk.8.46. Secondly, it was her faith that healed her, for many that thronged Chriſt, touched his garments, but receiued no benefite: neither was there any vertue in his garments when the ſouldiers parted them amongſt them. Thirdly, if it pleaſed the Lord to vſe ſome externall ſignes, as of oyle, clay, ſpittle, in healing of men; yet haue we no warrant, that he will doe the like by touching of relickes.

To the ſecond: firſt, the napkins brought from Paul had no ſuch vertue in them: for the text is plaine, that they were wrought by the hands of Paul. Secondly, not all that touched them were preſently healed. Thirdly, they were but as ſignes and tokens to the diſeaſed, that the Apoſtle (when it pleaſed God) might diſpenſe miracles, euen when he was abſent. Laſtly, if they haue to this day miracles wrought by the relickes and monuments of Saints; I feare me, nay, I dare ſay, they are no better then the Donatiſts miracles were, either figmenta mendacium hominum, vel portenta fallacium ſpirituum: either the gloſings and fables of lying men, or the ſtrange workings of deceiuing ſpirits.

*Argum.*1. The Apoſtles by their owne power, vertue, or godlines did not worke miracles, Act.3.12.but there was greater vertue in the liuing Apoſtles,then in dead and ſenceleſſe relickes; Ergo,much leſſe is there any vertue in relickes.

*Argum.*2. If there bee any vertue in relickes, it would appeare as well at one time as another,becauſe the vertue ſhould be abiding in the relickes: but ſo doth it not, for Elias cloake at the firſt ſmiting did not part the waters, till Eliſhah had ſaid,where is the Lord God of Elyah? ſo that the vertue was not in the garment, but in the inuocation of the name of God, 2.King.2. verſ.14.

*Concil.Nicen.*2.*action.*7. Tharaſius the Preſident propoundeth this queſtion: Quamobrem miracula à noſtris imaginibus non eduntur? What is the cauſe that miracles are not wrought by our images? then he anſwereth thus: Miracula non credentibus data ſunt, ſed illis, qui in incredulitate verſantur: Miracles are not giuen to thoſe which beleeue, but to thoſe that beleeue not. This Councell was celebrated at the leaſt 800. yeeres agoe, about anno. 780. whatſoeuer images and reliques did before, wee haue here the warrant of this Councell, that they haue done none ſince.

The holy Martyrs alſo haue confirmed this truth: Thomas Bilney: They gild their gods, and beare them about, and men ſay,they do ſpeake; and if they ſpeake, it is the deuil that ſpeaketh in them,not God,*Fox.*pag.1010.

M.Tindal holy Martyr: When they crie miracles, miracles, remember that God hath made an euerlaſting teſtament in Chriſts blood, againſt which we may receiue no miracles, neither the preaching of the Angels, &c. the end of Gods miracles is good, the end of theſe miracles is euil, *Fox.*pag.1251.col.1.articul.24.

THE FIFT QVESTION, CONCERNING Images, and of the ſigne of the Croſſe.

THe firſt part concerning Images,is ſubdeuided into certaine other articles and poynts. Firſt, of the difference of Idols and Images. Secondly whether it be lawful to haue images. Thirdly, if it be lawfull to worſhip them. Fourthly, what manner of worſhip it ſhould be.

THE FIRST ARTICLE, OF THE DIFFERENCE betweene Idols and Images.

The Papiſts.

THere is great difference (ſay they) betweene an Image and an Idoll: an Image called in Greeke εἰκὼν, is the true ſimilitude of a thing: an Idoll, εἴδωλον, in Greeke, tranſlated ſimulachrum, doth repreſent that which is not, as were the Idols of Venus, Minerua, women Goddeſſes, which was a meere deuiſed thing. Images they confeſſe they haue, but no Idols, *Bellarm.cap.*5. 42.Error.

Firſt, S.Paul ſaith, 1.Cor.10, That an Idol is nothing: that is, doth repreſent a thing that is not: as ſuch were their heatheniſh Idols, Bellar.

Anſw. Firſt, the place is not ſo vnderſtood: for the Apoſtle ſaith, That things offered to Idols alſo are nothing, which were not made to repreſent any thing: But his meaning is this, that of themſelues they are nothing to breede offence, neither were it needfull to ſhunne eating of Idol ſacrifices, or to abhorre an Idol, but that they are abuſed and turned to the ſeruice of diuels, as it followeth in the next verſe. Therefore an Idol is not ſaid to be nothing, becauſe it repreſenteth a thing imagined, but that of it ſelfe, being but wood, or ſtone, or ſuch like, it were not offenſiue, if it were not abuſed to Idolatrie. Secondly, all the portraictures of the Heathen were not Idols in this ſenſe: for Iupiter, Mars, Apollo, Hercules, whoſe Images they had, were men ſometime liuing. Thirdly, you haue images repreſenting nothing: as the pictures of Angels, of God the father, of the holy Ghoſt, which haue no ſhape nor likenes. Againe, you haue alſo your imagined Saints, as [o] S.George, S.Chriſtopher, for there were neuer any ſuch: and therefore you haue Idols as well as the Heathen.

[o] Bellar.lib.1. de ſanctor.beatit.cap.20.

Bellarmine proueth this diſtinction out of *Orig.hom.*8.in Exod. who there affirmeth that then a man maketh a ſimilitude or likeneſſe, when he portraiteth in mettall, ſtone or wood the faſhion of any creature? but an idoll is ſome ſtrange ſhape that is not, as when to a mans bodie is ioyned the head of a dogge, &c. or a man is pictured with two faces, &c. to this purpoſe Origen.

Anſw. 1. This authoritie maketh nothing for them: firſt, if an idoll be nothing els, but a ſtrange and monſtrous ſhape, then had the Gentiles no idols, for they worſhipped the reſemblances and pictures of men. Secondly, Origen in the ſame place ſheweth it to be vnlawfull to worſhip any ſimilitude or likeneſſe as well as any idoll; writing vpon the ſecond Commandement: Thou ſhalt not make to thy ſelfe any idoll, or the ſimilitude or likeneſſe, &c. Thirdly, this was but Origens conceit; for the fathers did confound theſe words, indifferently taking the one for the other: S.

Ambroſe calleth idols Images: Simulachrum verè nihil eſt, quia imago videtur rei mortuæ: A ſimulachre or an idol is nothing, being the image of a dead thing, in 1.*Cor.*10. and S. Hierome alſo, Sicubi fiat imago, dæmones dabant reſponſa: If an Image were made, the diuels gaue anſwere: tradit. in 2.*Paraleip.c.*11.

The Proteſtants.

THough the name Idol haue an odious ſignification in the Engliſh tongue, yet neither the Greeke εἴδωλον, nor the Latine ſimulachrum, doe ſound ſo euill vnto the eares: and in many places of the Scripture we may indifferently reade, idoll or image: for all worſhipping of Images is idolatrie. If we will diſtinguiſh them, they are thus rather to be ſeuered: An Idol is that image, which is ſet vp with an intent to be worſhipped: an Image is a generall name as well to vnlawful pictures ſet vp for Idolatrie, as lawfull, which haue but a ciuill vſe. But that the Papiſts Idols are Images, thus we proue it.

*Argum.*1. The Scripture calleth the Gentiles Idols, images, Rom.1,23. there the word εἰκὼν is vſed: Ergo, idol and Image are taken for one: they haue images ſet vp for religious or rather irreligious vſes, Ergo, Idols.

*Argum.*2. Apocal.9.20. There is mention made of Idols of gold, ſiluer, braſſe, which cannot be vnderſtood of the idols of the Gentiles, which were aboliſhed long agoe: and that prophecie is to be vnderſtood of men liuing after the opening of the ſeuenth ſeale, which is toward the end of the world. Wherefore it muſt needes be vnderſtood of the Papiſts, who are the onely knowne people in the world, that worſhip images: Ergo, they haue Idols.

Auguſtine taketh imago, and ſimulachrum, which is the Latine for the Greeke εἴδωλον, for all one: for the loue of the dead (ſaith he) images were firſt made, whereof the vſe of ſimulachers or Idols did ariſe. Againe, Deus non ſedere in cœlis putandus eſt veluti flexis poplitibus: tale enim ſimulachrum Deo nefas eſt Chriſtiano in templo collocare: God is not to be imagined to ſitte in heauen as with bowed knees: ſuch a ſimulachre or idol it is not lawfull to ſette vp in the temple of Chriſtians: *de fide & ſymbolo, cap.*7. The picture then of God, which the papiſts cal an image, Auguſtine termeth an Idol, for ſimulachrum, by their owne confeſſion, ſignifieth the ſame thing which Idolum doth. *Bellarm.cap.*5.

Likewiſe in the Ciuill law, from whence we may beſt deriue the different vſe of words, an Image and a ſimulachrum or Idoll, is all one: as *Cod.lib.*1.*tit.*27.*leg.*2. Theodoſius; Siquando noſtræ ſtatuæ, vel imagines eriguntur: If our images or pictures be erected, &c. and *tit.*28.*leg.*1. the ſame are called Imperatoria ſimulachra, the Emperors idols: for Bellarmine graunteth, that euery where in the olde Teſtament, where the Latine text readeth, Simulachrum, the Greeke hath the word εἴδωλον.

And yet more plainely it appeareth, that imago, and idolum, are all one in ſignification: for in the *Nicen.*2. generall Councell *action.*6.*tom.*6. Gregorius Biſhop thus ſpeaketh, Nemo ſub prætextu exterminationis imaginum, manus in ea, quæ Deo ſacrata ſunt, inyciat, quia poſſunt transferri in alios vſus huiuſmodi idola: Let no man vnder the colour of pulling downe images, lay his hands vpon things conſecrate to God, for ſuch idols may be tranſlated to other vſes: Here Images and Idols are taken for all one.

Caietanus a learned Papiſt taketh an Image and an Idol to be all one: in 20.*cap.*Exod.

Thomas Hawkes holy Martyr hath ſealed this poynt: That there is no difference betweene an Idoll and an Image: when Boner had thus diſtinguiſhed, If it be a falſe God, and an Image made of him, that is an Idol; but if an image be made of God himſelfe, it is no Idol, but an Image, becauſe he is a true God. The Martyr anſwereth: Lay your Image of your true God and falſe God together, you ſhall ſee the difference: haue not your Images feete, and goe not, eyes and ſee not, eares and heare not, hands and feele not, mouthes and ſpeake not, euen ſo haue your Idols? *Fox. pag.*1589.*col.*2.

THE SECOND ARTICLE, WHETHER IT BE lawfull to haue the Images of the Trinitie, of Chriſt, or of the Angels.

The Papiſts.

43.Error. THat Images may haue a good ciuill vſe, as for decencie or comelines of ſome worke, or for vtilitie of ſtorie, it is of neither part denied: but they further affirme, that it is lawfull to expreſſe the Trinitie by pictures; as God like an olde man, and with the world in his hand; Chriſt, as he walked vpon the earth; the holy Ghoſt in the likenes of a doue; the Angels with wings: and theſe pictures (they ſay) are very meete and profitable to be ſet vp in Churches, Rhemiſt. Act.17. ſect.5.

*Argum.*1. To painte the Trinitie, or any one of them as they appeared viſibly, is no more inconuenient, then it was vndecent for them ſo to appeare, *Rhemiſt.ibid. et Bellarmin.cap.*8.

Anſw. You flatly controll the lawe of God, which ſimply forbiddeth any ſimilitude to bee made of things in heauen or in earth to worſhip God by. And Deut.4.15. God expreſly declareth, that he would not appeare in any viſible ſhape when he gaue the law, leaſt the people ſhould abuſe that ſhape, to make an image of God after it. Againe, the argument followeth not: for God ſawe it was conuenient ſometime by viſible ſignes to appeare vnto men, and yet ſeeth it to be inconuenient for pictures to be made to reſemble him by: for els he would neuer haue forbidden it. Laſtly, though the argument be admitted, yet ſeeing now that all ſuch viſible apparitions of the Trinitie are ceaſed, all ſuch viſible pictures likewiſe ſhould be out of vſe: And if that, when ſuch apparitions were ſeene, yet no ſuch images were tolerated, how much leſſe are they lawfull now, all ſuch viſions being long agoe determined.

*Argum.*2. The Angels were pictured in forme of Cherubims: Ergo, Spirits may be portraicted. *Bellarm.cap.*8.*argum.*1.

Anſw. When you can ſhew an expreſſe commandement for your images, as the Iſraelites had for them, we will yeeld, that they are lawfully made. Againe, how followeth it, God may command images to be made for the vſe of religion: Ergo, men may? for the law bindeth not the Lord who is the lawmaker. But the law ſaith, thou ſhalt not make to thy ſelfe, that is, by thine owne authoritie, any grauen image. The Cherubims alſo were not made publikely to be ſeene and gazed vpon by the people, but were ſet in the holy place: ſo are not your pictures and images which are ſet vp openly in your Churches to entiſe people to idolatrie.

*Argum.*3. The Scripture deſcribeth God by humane members, as by his hands, eyes, feete, &c. therefore he alſo may be ſo deſcribed in picture, Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, if it be lawfull to ſet forth God by picture, as he is deſcribed in Scripture, then make a lyon alſo to ſignifie Chriſt, for he is called the lyon of the tribe of Iuda: picture him alſo with Doues eyes, Rauens lookes, Marble legges, &c. for ſo he is deſcribed Cantic.5. and thus will you make a monſter of Chriſt. Secondly, if an idoll be, as your ſelues define, a picture of that, which is not; then do you make an idoll of God, when you paint him with hands and feete, &c. whereas there is no ſuch thing in God. Thirdly, the Scripture ſo deſcribeth God to our capacitie, for our edifying and inſtruction, becauſe wee cannot otherwiſe vnderſtand the high thinges of God: but there is no ſuch end of pictures; which are ſo farre from edifying, that they are rather occaſion of offence: and therefore the argument concludeth not, from the phraſe of Scripture, to the phantaſie of Painters; from diuine authoritie, to humane preſumption.

The Proteſtants.

TO ſet foorth the Godhead and deuine nature by any picture or image, is impoſſible; and therefore both vnlawfull and inconuenient: but to bring them into Churches, and to make them for ſome vſe of religion, is a high ſteppe vnto groſſe ſuperſtition.

*Argum.*1. Such images of the Trinitie among the Papiſts, are made to reſemble the diuinitie and Godhead: for to what purpoſe els ſhould ſuch images be made? *Fulk. Act.*17.*ſect.*5. They picture God the father like an old man: becauſe in that forme he appeared to Daniel: but how know they whether it were God the Father, rather then God the Sonne, who is as old as God the Father, or then the whole Godhead? They commend alſo the image of God the Father with the world in his hand: which is a lying image, and maketh ſimple people to beleeue, that the world was made onely by God the Father, which was the worke of the whole Trinitie. Some of the Papiſts themſelues, as Abulenſis, Durandus, Pereſius, doe hold, that the image of God ought not to be made, and that it is rather tolerated, then allowed in the Church.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that there are two ſorts of images, or pictures: ſome do expreſſe the very ſimilitude, and nature of a thing, and ſo onely things materiall and corporall may be pictured: ſome images do not properly, but by way of Allegorie and implication expreſſe the thing deciphered, as when Angels are pictured with wings, to ſhew their celeritie, &c. there can be no Image of God made after the firſt ſort, but after the ſecond there may, &c.

Anſw. Firſt, if an image be made of a thing, which doth not expreſſe the nature thereof, as a picture aſcribing to God a bodily ſhape, which he hath not, is but a lying image: ſecondly, the properties of God being infinite, cannot any way by a picture be implyed or ſhadowed forth, as Iſay 40.12. God hath meaſured the waters with his fiſt, and counted heauen with a ſpanne: and verſ.17. all nations before him are as nothing, &c. then it followeth, To whom then will you liken God, or what ſimilitude will you ſet vp vnto him? the Prophet reaſoneth thus, God is omnipotent, infinite, incomprehenſible, therefore by no ſimilitude whatſoeuer can be expreſſed. Thirdly, S. Ambroſe ſaith, Quod inuiſibile eſt, pingi non poteſt, & Deus, qui ab his omnibus alienus eſt, quomodo poteſt imaginem habere viſibilem? That which is inuiſible, can not be pictured, and God, which is farre from any bodily ſhape, how can he haue a viſible Image? Ambroſe in 1. ad Coloſſ. He denieth, that God any way may be viſibly deſcribed.

As for the images of Chriſt in the forme of a Lambe, and the holy Ghoſt in ſhape of a Doue, Bartholomaus Caranza, a Papiſt ſheweth that they were forbidden in the 6.generall Synode, Canon.82.

Bellarmine here anſwereth, that the Councell condemneth not the Image of Chriſt in forme of a Lambe, but preferreth onely the other picture of Chriſt, as a man.

Contra. Firſt, the words of the Canon are theſe, Picturam illius agni Chriſti,&c. in poſterum pro veteri agno erigendam ſancimus: We decree,that the picture of Chriſt, as he is man, be from henceforth erected in ſtead of the picture of the Lambe. If the one picture muſt giue place to the other, what is that els, but to abrogate the one, and eſtabliſh the other? Secondly, Caranza the abridger of the Councels ſo expoundeth the Canon, though it pleaſe Bellarmine to oppoſe himſelfe againſt him.

Concerning the picture of Chriſt as he was man, the Papiſts themſelues confeſſe,and we denie not, but it may better be made then the image of the Trinitie;yet can there not be any true image of Chriſt, as he was in forme of man: for the image doth onely expreſſe his bodily ſhape, not as he was God in the forme of man: and ſo ſuch a picture were dangerous to the weake and ignorant, being a lying image,ſhewing Chriſt onely as man, who was both God and man. And againe, the image, which is made of his bodily ſhape, is no more the image of Chriſt, then of any other man, Fulk. Act. 17.*ſect.*5.

But ſome will ſay, if Chriſts image cannot conueniently be made, becauſe it expreſſeth not his Godhead; by the ſame reaſon we cannot make a picture of a man, becauſe his ſoule being inuiſible cannot be painted.

Anſw. The reaſon is not alike: for he that pictureth a man liuing, ſetteth forth the life, beautie and motion of the bodie; by which effects, by a conſequent, the ſoule is reſembled, which cauſeth and worketh theſe things in the bodie:but in the bodily ſhape of Chriſt, there cãnot be made to appeare any ſuch notorious ſignes of his Godhead.

2. Though it be not ſimplie vnlawfull to expreſſe in painting the viſible ſhapes that were ſhewed in viſion to the Prophets, if it be onely for vſe and ſignification of the hiſtorie, or if there bee any other commendable vſe: yet to make thoſe ſhapes for any vſe of religion, or ſeruice of God, is abominable idolatrie, Fulk. ibid. Epiphanius ſaw in a Church at Anablatha, an image painted in a table, as it had been of Chriſt or a Saint, he tooke it downe and cut it in peeces: affirming that it was contrarie to the ſcripture for any image of a man to hang in the Church of Chriſt. The Eliberine Councel,Canon 36.decreed, that no pictures ſhould be made in Churches. If no pictures, much leſſe carued images, which are a more ſtrong prouocation to idolatrie. The wordes of the Councel are theſe: Placuit picturas in Eccleſia eſſe non debere, ne quod colitur, aut adoratur in parietibus depingatur: Wee thinke good that no pictures ſhould be in the Church, leſt that which we adore and worſhip, ſhould be painted in the walles.

Auguſtine rendreth a reaſon, why it is dangerous to haue images in Churches, where there is yea but the leaſt feare of ſuperſtition: Quis orat intuens ſimulachrum, qui non ſic afficitur, vt ab eo ſe exaudiri putet, nec ab eo ſibi præſtari, quod deſideret, putet? Who (ſaith hee) prayeth beholding an image, and is not ſo affected, as though hee were heard of it, and hopeth not to haue that performed by it, which he deſireth? in Pſal. 113.

Againſt the hauing or making of the image of Chriſt, it was thus reaſoned Conſtantinople 7. generall Synode: as it is alleaged Nicen. 2. action. 6. tom. 3. Ipſam imaginem Chriſti Chriſtum vocant, eſt autem Chriſtus Deus et homo; ſequitur vt imago ſit Dei & hominis, & ſic deitatem circumſcriptibilem,& cum Eutyche confuſionem inducunt,&c. They doubt not to call the image of Chriſt, Chriſt: but Chriſt is both God and man; it followeth then,that the image of Chriſt muſt be the image of God and man;and ſo they make the deitie circumſcriptible, and with Eutyches confound the natures of Chriſt: or els they doe picture the bodie of Chriſt without the deitie, and ſo with Neſtorius they deuide the perſon of Chriſt, and ſeparate the humanitie from the diuine nature: Vel tertiò, illi aliam perſonam conſtituentes dum carnem à deitate ſeparant, quam imagine repræſentari dicunt: quartam perſonam trinitati adijciunt: Or thirdly, they make a newe perſon of Chriſt (while they ſeparate the fleſh from the deitie) which they ſay is repreſented in picture, and ſo adde a fourth perſon to the Trinitie. Theſe abſurdities theſe fathers did foreſee would followe in hauing the pictures of Chriſt.

Againe, they reaſon thus in the ſame place, tom. 3. from the words of our Sauiour Chriſt vttered in the inſtitution of the Sacrament, this is my bodie, &c. doe this in remembrance of mee: Veluti non eſſet vlla alia ſpecies electa ab illo, aut quaſi non poſſet vllo alio typo illorum, quæ ſub cœlo ſunt, incarnatio illius repræſentari: Ecce igitur viuificantis illius corporis imaginem totam, panis ſcilicet ſubſtantiam, quam mandauit apponi: As though hee had choſen no other ſhape, nor any other type of all things vnder heauen, whereby his incarnation could bee repreſented: Behold then all the images of that quickning bodie, the ſubſtance of bread, which he commanded to bee vſed, &c.

Chriſt then hath appointed no other way to be called to our remembrance by, but by the Sacrament.

One other reaſon I will adioyne, alleaged in the ſame place out of Euſebius Pamphilus, tom.4. who thus writeth to Conſtantia the Empreſſe, who had ſent to him for the image of Chriſt: what image (ſaith he) do you require? ſuch an one as may expreſſe the characters of his diuine nature: but I thinke you are ſufficiently inſtructed of this, that no man hath thus ſeen the ſonne but the father: Sed ſerui requiris formæ imaginem: But you require the image of the forme of a ſeruant, which he tooke; but vnderſtand you that it was ioyned to the glorie of his Godhead: in ſo much that his Apoſtles could not behold the glorie of his fleſh in the Mount: much more glorious is it now hauing put off mortalitie: Quis igitur gloriæ & dignitatis ſplendores lucentes & fulgurantes effigiare mortuis & inanimatis coloribus & vmbratili pictura poſſet? Thoſe ſhining and brightſome beames of ſo great glorie, who is able with dead and liueleſſe colours, and a ſhadowed picture to expreſſe?

See alſo the determination of the Ciuill law, Cod.lib.8.tit.12.leg.20.Theodoſ.Valentinian.Baſilicam alicuius imaginis,&c. We forbid the Church to be obſcured with the Images or painted tables of any, &c. This law forbiddeth pictures to be ſet vp in Churches.

One alſo of their owne writers is bold to write thus of Nicephorus, for reporting of S. Luke to haue beene a Painter, and to be the firſt that made the Images of Chriſt and of Marie, and of the Apoſtles: In hiſtoria ſi non mendax, certè valdè audax: He is very bold in his hiſtorie, if not a lyar: Eſpenc.comment.in 2.Timoth.p.173.

This truth the holy Martyrs haue ſealed: Nicholas Shetterden Martyr: The lawe forbiddeth to make any manner likenes, or image of God, Deuter.4.17. you ſawe no ſhape, &c. To whome Wincheſter obiected thus: Yet by your leaue, we may make an image of ſo much as was ſeene, as of Chriſt, of the holy Ghoſt, and the father appeared to Daniel like an old man. The Martyr anſwereth: This is no proofe that we may make images contrarie to the commandement, for the holy Ghoſt appeared like a Doue, yet was he not like in ſhape but in certaine qualities, &c. Fox. pag.1675.col.2.

THE THIRD ARTICLE, WHETHER THE images of Saints are to be worſhipped.

The Papiſts.

THat images are to be reuerenced and worſhipped, ſo it be not with the diuine honour due vnto God, it was concluded in the late Tridentine chapter, ſeſſ.25. confeſſed by our Rhemiſts, 44. Error.
Act.17.ſect.5. maintained by the Ieſuites, Bellarm.cap.12.

*Argum.*1. The braſen Serpent was worſhipped of the people, ſeeing it was ſet vp in a high place, and gaue health to thoſe that looked vpon it: Ergo, images may be worſhipped, Bellarm. The people alſo fell downe before the Arke and Tabernacle, and worſhipped God: Ergo, lawfull, praying, to fall downe before a Crucifixe, *Rhemiſt.annot.Heb.*11.21.

Anſw. Firſt, it was not the Serpent that healed them, but Chriſt who was thereby prefigured, Ioh.3.14. The Serpent was lift vp, that the people might round about the better behold it, and it ſheweth forth alſo the lifting vp of Chriſt vpon the Croſſe. It was not ſet vp to be worſhipped, neither was it worſhipped till the people fell into ſuperſtitiō, & offered incenſe to it, and therfore becauſe the people abuſed that monument, Hezekiah brake it down, 2.King.18. Secondly, it is not al one to fal down before, in, or at the Arke & Tabernacle, and to worſhip God, as to worſhip the Arke or Tabernacle. You doe not only fall downe before a Crucifixe, but worſhip it. Neither is it as lawfull to worſhip before a Crucifixe, as it was before the Tabernacle: for the one was commanded of God, the other is the ſuperſtitious deuiſe of men.

*Argum.*2. As the image of Nabuchadnezzar was for his honor, ſo the image of Chriſt is for his, *Rhemiſt.Reuel.*13.14.

Anſw. A good ſimilitude, if Chriſt himſelfe had not forbidden ſo to be honoured & worſhipped.

*Argum.*3. Man is honoured becauſe he is the image of God: Ergo, images of Saints are to be reuerenced, becauſe they are their images. Bellarm.cap.12.

Anſw. Firſt, man is a liuely image of Gods owne making, images of Saints are the workes of men. Secondly, no image can ſo liuely repreſent a Saint, being but a dead thing, as man who hath a liuing ſoule is the image of God. Thirdly, we do reuerence men with ciuill honour, not with religious worſhip, as they doe their images. Fourthly, though Gods image in man were to be worſhipped: yet it would not followe, that Saints images ſhould: for all diuine worſhip belongeth onely to God: but the Saints themſelues, though they were aliue, are not to be worſhipped, much leſſe their Images.

Argum. 4. The chiefe Iconomachi, that is, enemies or oppugners of Idols, ſay they, are the Iewes, Samaritanes, Mahometanes: yea the diuell himſelfe loueth no images, Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. Firſt,it followeth not,the Iewes and Turkes abhorre images, and therefore Chriſtians ought to loue them : for the heathen hated many vices, which are alſo to be abhorred of Chriſtians. Secondly,they were not the firſt Iconomachi,Image haters : for Moſes was an Iconomach,when he cauſed the golden Calfe to be burnt to powder : Hezekiah an Iconomach, that brake downe the braſen Serpent : Ioſiah an Iconomach, that cauſed the Idols to be deſtroyed, 2.King.23. Nay, God himſelfe was the firſt Iconomach, that forbiddeth Images and Idols to be made in the morall lawe. Thirdly, I pray you where did the Ieſuite learne, that the diuell hateth an image? I am ſure the Scripture ſpeaketh contrarie, that what was offered to Idols was ſacrificed to diuels, 1. Cor.10.20.

The Proteſtants.

THat Images or Idols are not at all to be reuerenced or worſhipped,or to be made, or ſet vp in Churches, or in any other place for any religious, or rather irreligious vſe : thus out of the holy ſcriptures we make it plaine.

Argum.1. The making of any ſimilitude or likenes, to fall downe before it and worſhip it, is flatly forbidden in the ſecond commandement,Exod,20. Ergo,they are not to be worſhipped. So likewiſe,Deut.4.15.Iſai.40.18. and in many other places in the old Teſtament, worſhipping of Images,which is idolatrie, manifeſtly forbidden in the new teſtament, Rom.1.23.1.Cor.10.20. 1.Ioh.5.21 Ergo,not lawfull.

Anſ. One Catharinus a great Papiſt ſaith,that the commaundement in the law againſt Images, was but temporall,and to continue but till the eſtabliſhing of the new Teſtament. But Bellarmine vtterly miſliketh this anſwere,being moſt abſurd,for the morall law is perpetuall, *De imaginib.ſanct.lib.*2.cap.7. They doe giue therefore a more deliberate anſwere : that the Scriptures doe reproue and condemne the idolatrie of the Heathen,which worſhipped their Images as Gods.But ſo doe not they : they make no account of them,as they affirme,for their matter or forme; but for that relation they haue to the things whoſe images they are, *Rhemiſt.Philipp.*2.ſect.2.

Anſ. Firſt, the Iewes alſo in their golden Calfe had a relation to that God that brought them out of the land of Egypt,Exod.32.4.5.The like relation had Ieroboam in ſetting vp of his Calues, 1.King.12.28.for they were not ſo mad as to think that a Calfe brought them out of Egypt.And it appeareth yet more plainly: for Exod.32.5. Aaron ſaith,To morow ſhall be the Lords holie day: the word is Iehouah, which name the Iewes only aſcribed vnto God. So Iudg.17.3. Micah his mother ſaith,that ſhe had conſecrated the ſhekles of ſiluer to the Lord Iehouah, to make a molten Image : wherefore in their Images they had relation to God, and yet were they reproued for their idolatrie. The like relation the Gentiles alſo had in their Idols, as Auguſtine witneſſeth : Non ego illum lapidem colo,&c.adoro,quem video, ſed ſeruio ei quem non video. Quis eſt ille? Numen quoddam inuiſibile quod præſidet illi ſimulachro: I doe not worſhip that carued ſtone or Image : I reuerence that I ſee,but I ſerue or worſhip that I ſee not: that is,a certaine diuine ſpirit,which is preſident in that image. Wherefore popiſh idolatrie can no more be excuſed by this ſhift of reference or relation, then either the Iewes or Gentiles,that pretended the ſame colour.

In Pſal.96.

2 It may be proued by the practiſe of the Popiſh Church in England, that ſimply without any ſuch relation or ſignification they commaunded Images to be worſhipped. Thomas Man Martyr troubled,becauſe he beleeued not in the Crucifixe. Robert Rane of Dorney moleſted,becauſe he ſaid,that an Image grauen with mans hand,is neither God,nor our Ladie,but made for a remembrance of Saints : nor we ought to worſhip any thing,but God and our Ladie,and not images of Saints,which are but ſtocks and ſtones. Miſtriſſe Alice Dolie brought into trouble,for ſaying ; We ſhould not worſhip that thing that hath eares, and eyes,and can neither ſee,nor heare. Theſe good men and women,we ſee,were perſecuted in thoſe daies for denying worſhip to Images,as they were Images. And of later daies,we ſee the popiſh ſect,euen they amongſt them,which had the name of learning,to haue fallen into the ſame idolatrous dotage of their forefathers : as it may appeare by Boners ſetting vp of the Rood in Pauls, at the comming in of King Philip: how he with his Chapleins annoynted the Rood,crept vnto it,and kiſſed it,and ſo ſet him vp in his place, all the Queere in this meane ſeaſon, ſinging Te Deum : Let indifferent men now iudge,whether they made not this Roode their God amight, Fox pag.1472. So then the popiſh practiſe agreeable to their doctrine was,(as it appeareth)that Images were ſimply to be worſhipped.

articl.7.

Fox pag.984.

Argum.2. Apocal.9.20.Worſhippers of Idols of ſiluer and gold are there condemned; which can be no other but the Papiſts : for that prophecie is to bee fulfilled in the latter times towards the end of the world,after the opening of the ſeuenth ſeale and blowing of the ſixt trumpet. But there is no knowne nation in the world , or hath not been many a day,that worſhippeth Images, but the popiſh Synagogue.

Argum.3. Man is the image of God,and yet is not worſhipped : how much leſſe ought we to worſhip carued Images,which are but made with mens hands? As Auguſtine ſaith, Opera hominum non colenda,meliores ſunt artifices: The handie workes of men are not to bee worſhipped, the workmen themſelues are better, and yet not worſhipped. What foule idolatrie is this, to preferre the workes of mens hands, before the worke and image of God, to deſpiſe men, and haue in ſo great regard dead ſtockes and ſtones?

*Argum.*4. Ezechias cauſed the braſen Serpent, which Moſes had made, to bee broken in pieces, becauſe the people worſhipped it, and burnt incenſe to it: Ergo, Images are not to bee worſhipped.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, that the people did honour the braſen Serpent, for the matter ſake, thinking, that the benefit of health proceeded from the image it ſelfe, *cap.*17.

Contra. Firſt, they could not honour it for the matter, it being of braſſe, not of gold, or any other precious mettall. Secondly, neither did the people aſcribe the miracle to the image it ſelfe: for in the text it is added, which Moſes had made: they remembred very well, that it was made by Moſes, at Gods appointment, and ſo was indued with that vertue.

Secondly, ſaith he, they did worſhip it as God, becauſe they offered incenſe to it, which in the old law was accounted a ſacrifice, ibid.

Contra. See firſt how contrarie Bellarmine is to himſelfe: for before, *lib.*1.*de Sanctor.beatitud.c.*13. *argum.*3. he tolde vs, that the ſacrifice of beaſts onely was peculiar vnto God: but odors and incenſe might be giuen to Saints; and that therfore Nabuchadnezzar commaunding odors to be offered to Daniel, did therein no vnlawfull thing. But here he affirmeth the contrarie, that the people in offering incenſe to the braſen Serpent, did giue the honour of God vnto it. Thus well he agreeth with himſelfe.

Secondly, the people were not ſo blind, to think a Serpent to be their God, no more then their forefathers tooke the golden Calfe for God, but they worſhipped it in the remembrance of God: for they were not ſo blockiſh to thinke, that a Calfe did bring them out of Egypt. Thus doe the Papiſts worſhip their Images euen as the people did the braſen Serpent.

Auguſtine ſaith, Noui multos eſſe ſepulchrorum & picturarum adoratores: I know there are many which worſhip ſepulchres & pictures. Of theſe he warneth men to take heed, Noli conſectari turbas imperitorum: Follow not ſuch vnlearned & vnskilfull multitudes. Bellarm. anſwereth, that Auguſtine wrote thus whē he was a yong man, and not fully conuerted, *cap.*16. A ſillie ſhift: yet we wil vouchſafe an anſwere, though it be worthie of none. Let vs heare what Auguſtine thought when he was old, and ſtaied in iudgement: Iam verò artifex melior eſt eis, quem te tamen puderet adorare: In Pſal.113.
melior & tu, quamuis ea non feceris, quoniam, quæ illa non poſſunt facis, melior & beſtia: The workman is better then the image, who gaue faſhion and ſhape vnto it, yet thou wouldeſt bee aſhamed to worſhip him: thou thy ſelfe art better, for thou canſt doe many things which that cannot: nay a bruite beaſt that heareth and ſeeth is better. By this we may ſee what Auguſtine thought of worſhipping of Images.

We haue the glorious teſtimonie of the holie Martyrs: Claudius Monerius burned at Lyons for the truth, anno 1551: Nothing is to bee adored, but that which is not ſeene with the eyes, that is God alone, which is a ſpirit, &c. Images therefore are not to be ſet vp before Chriſtians, ſeeing the nature of man is ſo prone to idolatrie, euer occupied and fixed on thoſe things which lie before his eyes, rather then vpon thoſe which are not ſeene. Fox pag.905.col.1.

Maſter George Wiſehart holy Martyr, reporteth how he had conference with a Iew, as he was ſayling vpon the water of Rhene: and asking him the cauſe of his pertinacie in not receiuing the Chriſtian faith, alleaged this with other, for that Chriſtians did worſhip Images contrarie to the law of God, which will haue God onely to be honoured. Fox pag.1269.col.2.

Iohn Maundrel, William Coberly, Iohn Spicer put to death, for denying the worſhipping Images, pag.1893. with many other that gaue their liues in defence of this truth: The Papiſts for their idolatrie cannot ſhew ſo ſure a ſeale.

I will adde in the end the determination of the 7 generall Councell at Conſtantinople, as it is extant *Nicen.*2.*action.*6.*tom.*6. Qui ab hoc die imaginem auſus fuerit ſibi parare aut adorare in eccleſia, aut in priuata domo conſtituere, aut clam habere; ſi clericus, deponitor; ſi laicus, anathemate percellitor: If any man from henceforth ſhall dare to make him an Image, or to worſhip it in the Church, or ſet it vp in his houſe, or keepe it ſecretlie, if he be of the Clergie, let him bee depoſed; if a lay man, accurſed be he.

Againe, *tom.*5.in fine: Nos qui ſacerdotij dignitate ſuccincti ſumus, ſimul exiſtentes vna voce definimus, omnem imaginem ex quacunque materia improba pictorum arte factam ab eccleſia Chriſtianorum reijciendam veluti alienam & abominabilem: We of the prieſtly dignitie aſſembled together, doe define with one voyce, that euery Image, of what matter ſoeuer, made by the lewd skill of painters, is to be caſt out of the Church of Chriſtians, as a ſtrange and abominable thing. This was enacted anno 780. by the conſent of 300. Biſhops aſſembled at Conſtantinople, in the preſence of two Emperours, Leo, and Conſtantinus.

Our aduerſaries here anſwere, that this aſſemblie at Conſtantinople is not the 7. generall Synode, node, but that which followed at Nice, called Nicen 2. which was kept vnder the Empreſſe Irene and her ſonne Conſtantinus, wherein the adoration of Images was eſtabliſhed: and to this Councel Adrian Biſhop of Rome gaue his conſent, which the other wanted.

Anſ. The Synode of Conſtantinople is rather to be held vniuerſall, then this of Nice. Firſt, it was aſſembled by the authoritie of two Emperours, Leo, and Conſtantinus: whereas this of Nice had but the authoritie of a woman, Irene the Empreſſe: for her ſonne Conſtantine, being then in his nonage, afterward reuoked his conſent, which he gaue in his childhood. Secondly, there were 300. Biſhops preſent at Conſtantinople, a number ſufficient to make a generall Councell, and it came before the other: wherefore then ſhould it not be counted the 7. generall before the other? Thirdly, what though the Biſhop of Rome conſented not? no more did he to that act of the Chalcedon Councell, which giueth the Patriarke of Conſtantinople equall authoritie to the Biſhop of Rome; yet is it held to bee vniuerſall. Againe, it had the Patriarke of Conſtantinoples conſent, who was then Paulus, who is the chiefe of the Eaſt Churches, as the Pope would bee of the Weſt. Wherefore for ought yet alleaged, the 7. generall Councell ſhall be that, which was kept at Conſtantinople, not the other at Nice, and ſo is it held of the Greekes. And of this ſuperſtitious Councell one of their owne giueth this teſtimonie; That the fathers there, Dæmonum ſpectris, & muliebribus ſomnijs parum verecundè abutebantur: did vnſhamefaſtly abuſe the viſions of diuels, and the dreames of women, to proue the adoration of Images, Eſpenc. in 2. Timoth. p. 151. a.

Laſtly, againſt the adoration of Images wee haue the teſtimonie of the Ciuill law, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 14. leg. 7. Martian. Abſit à ſeculo noſtro, &c. Farre bee it, that in our time the accuſtomed honour ſhould be giuen vnto the curſed Idols, incenſe to be burnt vnto them, &c. And becauſe it will bee here anſwered, that this law was made only againſt the Idols of the heathen: ſee further, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 27. leg. 2. Theodoſ. Quando ſtatuæ noſtræ eriguntur, &c. adſit iudex ſine adorationis ambitioſo faſtigio: When our Images are erected, let the Magiſtrate be preſent, without any ambitious or flattring ſhew of adoration. This law forbiddeth the Images of godly Emperours, and ſo alſo Saints, to be adored.

Their owne decrees agree hereunto: Decret. p. 3. diſtinct. 3. cap. 27. Gregor. Sanctorum imagines quòd adorari vetuiſſes, omnino laudamus, &c. We doe euery way commend you, for that you did forbid the images of Saints to be worſhipped. What could bee ſaid more directly againſt the adoration of Images?

The Papiſts.

45. Error. BEllarmine, who is the mouth of the reſt, ſetteth downe theſe two poſitions: Firſt, that Images, though they are not properly to bee worſhipped with diuine honour, neither is it ſafe ſo to teach in the hearing of the people; yet improperly they may haue the ſame worſhip, which properly belongeth to the Saint whoſe image it is. Secondly, there is a religious worſhip properly due vnto Images, as they are conſidered in themſelues, & non ſolum vt vicem gerunt exemplaris, and not only as they repreſent another thing: Bellarm. de Imaginib. Sanctor. lib. 2. cap. 21. 23.

Argum. Bellarmine reaſoneth thus: As the image is to that, whoſe image it is, ſo the worſhip of the image is to the worſhip of the exemplar, paterne, or patrone thereof: but the image, ſecundum quid, after a ſort, is the thing it ſelfe, as a painted man is a man after a ſort: therefore after a ſort alſo the ſame worſhip, which is due to the thing it ſelfe, may be giuen to the image, cap. 25.

Anſ. Firſt, he taketh that to be graunted, which is in queſtion: for we denie, that an image hath any worſhip at all, and therefore it is in vaine to contend, what manner of worſhip it ſhould bee. Secondly, his owne example is againſt him: for as a painted or pictured man, cannot bee ſaid to be a man, but onely the image of a man; ſo neither can the worſhip of the thing bee giuen to the image of the thing. Thirdly, we graunt, as the image is to the thing, ſo is the worſhip, &c. for both ſuch images are idolatrous, and all worſhip giuen vnto them, impious.

The Proteſtants.

WE haue ſhewed before that Images ought not to bee worſhipped at all, and that all religious worſhip is due onely vnto God: wherefore to vs this queſtion is ſuperfluous, with what religious worſhip Images are to be adored; for no religious worſhip at all is due vnto them: yet let vs vouchſafe the while, to ſee the contradictions that are amongſt them, and the abſurdities that they are driuen vnto.

Argum. 1. Our Rhemiſts confeſſe, that Images are not at all to be worſhipped with any diuine honour, Act. 17. ſect. 5. But it was decreed in the idolatrous Councell of Nice the 2. and maintained by Thomas Aquinas, Bonauenture, Caietanus, and other Papiſts, that the image of God is to bee worſhipped with the ſame worſhip that is due vnto God. And Bellarmine commeth not much ſhort of them, that ſaith, impropriè, improperly Images may haue the ſame worſhip: as the Kings Ambaſſadour improperly is honoured as the King. I pray you how farre are theſe men from making their Images Gods? for they ſay they are the Lords deputies and Vicegerents, as the Ambaſſadour is for the King.

Againe, the Rhemiſts affirme, that the images of Chriſt are not to bee honoured or accounted of, but for the reſpect and relation they haue to our Sauiour, *Annot. Philip.*2.2. So the Tridentine Councell determineth, *Seſſ.*25. Honos qui eis debetur, refertur ad prototypa, quæ illæ repræſentant: The honour due vnto them is to be referred vnto thoſe things which they repreſent.

*Nicen.*2.*action.*2. Non ipſum lignum honoratur, ſed ipſum illud, quod in ligno datur contemplandum: The wood it ſelfe is not to bee honoured, but that which in the wood is offered to our contemplation. Likewiſe, *Action.*3. Imagini honor exhibitus, ad ipſum prototypum referatur: The honor exhibited to the Image, muſt be referred to the originall. *Adrian.*1.epiſt. ad Conſtantin. Conſtat ob recordationem ſanctorum, imagines tantum pingi, venerari, coli: It is manifeſt, that Images are worſhipped and reuerenced onely in remembrance of the Saints. But Bellarmine teacheth cleane contrarie, that they haue not onely a reſpectiue honour, as repreſenting other things, but properly and in themſelues conſidered are to bee worſhipped. Wee may ſee by this, how handſomely they agree together.

*Argum.*2. Let vs ſee their abſurdities. Firſt, they hold that all Images are not to bee worſhipped alike: for they make three degrees of religious worſhip; the higheſt, which they call λατρεῖα, due vnto God; the loweſt religious worſhip, which they call δουλεῖα, proper to Saints; the middle or meane worſhip, called by them ὑπερδουλεῖα, as you would ſay, Superſeruice, to bee giuen onely to the Virgin Mary. And as theſe three, Chriſt, the Virgin, the Saints doe differ, ſay they, in honour; ſo their Images accordingly muſt be diſtinguiſhed in their worſhip.

Thus it commeth about, that a Roode of wood repreſenting Chriſt, is more to bee honoured, then an image of our Ladie of ſiluer; and her image, if it be but of ſtone, is more to be reuerenced then a Saints image of gold: and thus the excellencie of nature, which is giuen to theſe things by creation, is inuerted.

If it ſhall be anſwered, that a baſer mettall may be preferred before a more precious kinde, not in reſpect of the matter, but of the higher repreſentation: We replie, that all ſuch repreſentations by images are idolatrous, and therefore cannot obſcure the priuiledge of nature: ſo alſo the braſen Serpent had a good ſignification, yet when it began to be abuſed to idolatrie, Hezekiah made no better account of it, then of a peece of braſſe: and ſo he calleth it, *Nehuſhtan.*2.*Reg.*18.4.

Againe, whereas beſide theſe three deuiſed worſhips, which are properly due (as they ſay) to the Saints, not to their images, the images alſo haue their proper worſhips: they make three other inferiour kindes of worſhip, which doe exceede in degree, as the other ſuperiour kindes doe: ſo as Chriſt hath his λατρεῖα, worſhip, his image muſt haue ὑπολατρεῖα, his vnder-worſhip, (for wee muſt coyne new names for ſtraunge deuiſes) their Ladie Marie hath her ὑπερδουλεῖα, ſuper-ſeruice: her image muſt haue an ὑπουπερδουλεῖα, and vnder-ouer-ſeruice: as the Saints haue their δουλεῖα, ſeruice; ſo their images muſt haue their ὑποδουλεῖα, an vnder-ſeruice. And thus haue wee ſixe kindes of religious worſhip; as Bellarmine hath coyned them, *cap.*25. and yet before the Ieſuite told vs but of two kindes of religious worſhip, and the third a ciuill; three in all, *Lib.*1.*de Sanct.beatit.cap.*12.

But the Scripture acknowledgeth one onely kinde of religious worſhip, and that due only vnto the Lord: Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him onely ſhalt thou ſerue, Matth.4.10. And the Angel forbad Iohn to fall downe before him, giuing a rule for all religious worſhip: Worſhip God, ſaith he, Apocal.22.9.

Now, if our aduerſaries deale plainly with vs, and tell vs in good ſooth, that they would not haue Images to bee adored with diuine worſhip: I aske them, whether to offer incenſe bee not a part of diuine worſhip? They cannot denie it: for Hezekiah therefore brake downe the braſen Serpent, becauſe the people burned incenſe to it, 2.King.18.4. Seeing then the Ieſuite alloweth cenſing and burning of odors before Images, *Bellarm.lib.*1.*de Sanctor.beatit.cap.*13. they giue vnto them diuine honour. The Ieſuites ſimple ſhift, that offering of incenſe was a ſacrifice then, and ſo part of diuine worſhip, but it is none now, is not worth the anſwere, *Bellarm.lib.*2.*cap.*17.

We want not the witneſſe of the Papiſts themſelues: as *Alexander.*3.*p.quæſt.*30.*art.vltim. Durand.lib.*3.*diſt.*9.*qu.*2. Alphonſus à Caſtro, &c. All theſe are bold to affirme, that an Image in it ſelfe is not to be worſhipped at all.

THE SECOND PART OF THIS QVESTION, concerning the ſigne of the Croſſe.

This part alſo is deuided into certaine points or articles.

1 Of the honour due to the true Croſſe of Chriſt, whereon he ſuffered.

2 Of the image of the Croſſe.
3 Of the ſigne of the Croſſe in the forehead,or made otherwiſe with the hand.
4 Of the power and efficacie of the Croſſe.

THE FIRST ARTICLE, OF THE TRVE Croſſe whereon our Sauiour ſuffered.

The Papiſts.

46.Error. THe wood of the Croſſe,both the whole and euery piece thereof (ſay they) is worthie of great worſhip and reuerence: and therefore it hath been worthily viſited in pilgrimages, honoured with feſtiuall daies,reſerued with all deuotion in times paſt, *Rhemiſt.annot.Ioh.*19.ſect.2.

Argum.1. It is highly ſanctified, by the touching, bearing,and oblation of the ſacred bodie of Chriſt,the Altar of that ſupreme ſacrifice,and inſtrument of our redemption: Ergo,to bee worſhipped, Rhemiſt.ibid.Bellarm.lib.2.de Imagin.cap.27.

Anſ. If therefore it was holie becauſe it touched the bodie of Chriſt,and was an inſtrument of his death: by the ſame reaſon, the nayles that pierced him, the ſpeare that gored his ſide,the tormenters that crucified, Iudas that betrayed and kiſſed him: All theſe ſhould alſo be honoured and worſhipped, that handled and touched him, and were inſtruments, occaſions,and procurers of his death.

Againe,admit it was holy,becauſe of Chriſts bodie, it was holy no otherwiſe then the ground where the Angell appeared to Moſes, Exod.3. and to Ioſua chap.5. which Bellarmine elſewhere confeſſeth, was holy, ob præſentiam angeli, becauſe of the preſence of the Angell: that is, it continued not alwaies holy,but was for that inſtant: ſo the Croſſe was holy,becauſe of the neernes and preſence of Chriſts bodie, but this holines remained not afterward.

Argum.2. The Croſſe of Chriſt was found out, ſay they, in Conſtantines time the great,by a ſtrange miracle: for there were three Croſſes digged vp,which had been a long time buried in the earth: the two Croſſes vpon the which the two theeues ſuffered; the third whereon our Sauiour hung: They brought them all three to a woman that then lay very ſicke, they laid the two firſt to her,and ſhe remained as ſhe was; then they applied the third,and ſhe was preſently made whole, Bellarm.ex Ruffino: Ergo,the Croſſe is holy and to be worſhipped.

Anſ. The inuention of the Croſſe by Helena Conſtantines mother, ſeemeth to bee a forged and fabulous ſtorie.

1 Euſebius that writeth of the life of Conſtantine, and the acts of Helena, and regiſtreth diuers matters of leſſe importance, yea he ſheweth how the Mount Caluarie, where the Heathen had built idolatrous Temples,was purged,and in that place (ſay they) the Croſſe was found; yet he maketh no mention at all of the inuention of the Croſſe: which is very like he would not haue omitted,if there had been any ſuch thing.

2 The moſt ancient author that writeth of this matter, is Ambroſe, de obitu Theodoſij, which oration Eraſmus thinketh to be forged in Ambroſes name.

3 There is great diſagreement amongſt writers about this ſtorie. Ambroſe ſaith,the Croſſe was knowne by the title that Pilate faſtened to it. Sozomenus and Nicephorus ſay,the letters were worne out,and it could not be diſcerned by the title. Paulinus ſaith,the way to diſcerne it,was reuealed to Helena: Ruffinus aſcribeth the deuice to Macarius Biſhop of Ieruſalem: Paulinus ſaith, it was knowne by raiſing vp a dead man to life: Ruffinus, by reſtoring a ſicke woman to health, Fulk.annot.Iohn.19.ſect.2. Thus we ſee of what ſmall credit this ſtorie is. And bee it graunted, that there might be ſome ſuch thing found: yet they muſt bring better proofe for that miraculous inuention,before we will beleeue it.

The Proteſtants.

WE are not taught any where in the word of God, to giue any religious worſhip to any creature,nor to adore ſtockes and ſtones, no nor the very Croſſe it ſelfe, whereon Chriſt was crucified,if it were now to be ſeene or had.

Argum.1. If there had belonged vnto the Church any religious care of it, the Apoſtles would (no doubt) haue procured the ſafe keeping thereof, and not haue ſuffered the Church to want it 300.yeeres: and it had been an eaſier ſute for Ioſeph and Nicodemus to begge the Croſſe, then the bodie of Ieſus.

Argum.2. If the Croſſe were to be adored,we are vncertaine which it is, and where to be had; and ſo might worſhip a common piece of wood,for the wood of the Croſſe: for there is no doubt, but this relique is forged and counterfeited as the reſt bee. Euagrius ſaith, the Croſſe was at Apamea: Ruffinus,that it was left at Ieruſalem, and that Helena ſent a piece of it to Conſtantinople: and in many other places there are pieces of the Croſſe to be ſeene,which if they were all laid together (as Eraſmus ſaith) would fill a ſhip: for why? Paulinus witneſſeth, that the Croſſe remaineth whole at Ieruſalem, as though it had been neuer touched, though innumerable pieces bee daily cut off from it, at the requeſt of men. But this fable that goeth vnder the name of Paulinus, the Papiſts themſelues are aſhamed of.

But if the true and right Croſſe were to be had; why might it not be ſerued, if people began to abuſe it to idolatrie, as Hezekiah ſerued the braſen ſerpent? he brake it in peeces, when the people began to make an Idoll of it.

Auguſtine ſayth, Chriſtus ambulauit in mari, &c. Chriſt walked in the Sea, to ſhew vs that our way muſt be through the Sea: but thou, becauſe thou canſt not walke in the Sea, muſt ſayle in a ſhip, and be carried in a piece of wood: Beleeue in him that was crucified for thee: No man can paſſe the ſea of this world, but being borne vp with the croſſe of Chriſt.

Here Auguſtine maketh no reckoning of the wood of the Croſſe, which was eaſier to be had in his dayes, then euer ſince, but aſcribed all to faith and beleefe in Chriſt crucified.

Gelaſius decret. de Apocryphis, writeth thus, Scripturæ de inuentione crucis dominicæ nouellæ quadam relationes ſunt, & aliæ de inuentione capitis Iohannis Baptiſtæ, &c. The writings of the inuention of the Croſſe are but new deuiſed reports, and of the inuention of Iohn Baptiſts head: and therefore he giueth Chriſtians warning to take heede how they reade them. This is the iudgement of a Biſhop of Rome, as touching the finding out of the Croſſe, which he iudgeth to be a fabulous report: this decree Gratian hath remembred, part. 1. diſt. 15. cap. 3.

The teſtimonie of Maſter Hawkes holy Martyr is ſingular: If the Croſſe were of ſuch profite vnto vs, as you ſay, why did not Chriſts diſciples take it vp and ſet it on a pole, and carrie it in proceſſion, with (ſalue feſta dies?) Chadſey: It was taken vp. Hawkes: Who tooke it vp? Helene, as you ſay, for ſhe ſent a piece of it to a place of Religion, where I was with the viſitors, when that houſe was ſuppreſſed, and the piece of the holy Croſſe (which they had in ſuch eſtimation) being called for, it was found to be but a piece of a lath, couered ouer with copper, and double gilt, as though it had been cleane gold: Fox. p. 1589. col. 2. Were they not well occupied now, that thus deluded the people, giuing them ſuch Croſſes to be worſhipped?

THE SECOND ARTICLE, OF THE Image of the Croſſe or Crucifixe.

The Papiſts.

THe Image of Chriſt vpon the Croſſe, whether painted, carued, or grauen, we ſee is had in great honour amongſt our aduerſaries: They kneele downe before their Crucifixe, weare it in their boſomes next to their heart, carrie it in their iourneyes, ſet it vp to bee adored in their Churches. 47. Error.

Argum.* 1. As adoration was done vnto God in old time, at and before the Arke and Tabernacle; ſo it may be done now, at, or before a Crucifixe, relique, image, Rhemiſt. annot. Heb. 11. ſect. 9.

Anſw.* 1. It is not all one to worſhip God at or before a thing, as to worſhip and adore the thing: the Iſraelites worſhipped God, in, at or before the Tabernacle; yet did they not worſhip the Tabernacle, as you doe the Crucifixe.

2. They might worſhip God before the Arke, becauſe they were commanded ſo to doe: but it is not lawfull to fall downe before a Crucifixe, becauſe all ſuch Images are flatly in the ſecond commandement forbidden.

Argum.* 2. The ſigne of the Croſſe appeared to Conſtantine in the ayre, he cauſed the Croſſe to be carried before him as an enſigne in battaile: When the Iewes had leaue of Iulian to build the Temple, there were Croſſes ſeene euery where in their garments, and many ſuch apparitions haue there been of the Croſſe: Ergo, it is to be honoured and worſhipped, Bellarm. cap. 28.

Anſw.* 1. What if Conſtantine cauſed the Croſſe to be carried before him, ſtamped it in his coyne, ſet vp his picture with the Croſſe in his hand? all this wee grant was done, and may bee done againe: It was but a ciuill, no religious vſe of the Croſſe: He worſhipped it not, vnleſſe you will ſay, he ſet vp his owne Image with the Croſſe in his hand to be worſhipped.

2. As for the apparitions of the Croſſe (though we thinke many of them to be forged) yet wee denie not, but that the Lord hath, and may yet ſhew, what ſignes and tokens it pleaſeth him in the heauen, and the earth: yet it followeth not, that the ſigne of the croſſe ſhould therefore be worſhipped, becauſe it was ſhewed to Conſtantine, no more then other ſignes and ſtrange ſights, that many times appeare in the ayre.

For the other apparition of Croſſes in the Iewes garments, we will requite it with another, and yet you ſhall gaine nothing by it. Anno 1505. vnder the raigne of the Emperour Maximilian, there appeared diuers tokens of bloodie Croſſes, the nayles, the ſpunge, the ſpeare, & other ſignes of Chriſts paſſion, in the garments of men and women, yea in their rockes, while they were a ſpinning, reported by Francis Mirandula, Carion, Functius, Melancton, Flaccius: But the popiſh Chronologers nologers make no mention of it, as Chriſtianus Meſſæus, and others of that profeſſion. As the Croſſes in the Iews garments, that went about to eſtabliſh their ceremonies againe, did ſhew, that do what they could, the Goſpell, that is, the preaching of his Croſſe, ſhould take place, as it did: ſo theſe ſignes in Germany did portend, that the Goſpell in Germany ſhould be preached, though the Papiſts ſtriued neuer ſo much againſt it. But it is a farre fetcht concluſion to inferre hereupon, that the ſigne or Image of the Croſſe is to be adored.

The Proteſtants.

THe image of the Croſſe of Chriſt, is neither to be painted, carued, grauen, for any religious vſe, nor to be adored or worſhipped: but men ſo doing do fall into the grieuous and high offence and ſinne of Idolatrie. And yet we graunt, that the ſigne of the Croſſe is not to be deſpiſed, ſcorned or contemned: and therefore it was enacted by Theodoſ. that whoſoeuer did picture the croſſe vpon the ground, or pauement, that is, in contempt of it, ſhould be grieuouſly puniſhed, *Cod.lib.*1. *tit.*11.*leg.*1. The like is decreed *Trul.Synod.can.*73. Likewiſe Honorius made a law, that the Iewes ſhould not burne the ſigne or picture of the Croſſe, *lib.*1.*tit.*12.*leg.*10. but it followeth not, the ſigne of the Croſſe muſt not be deſpiſed, or contemned, therefore it is to be worſhipped: for though the image of the Prince be not of the ſubiects to be worſhipped, yet there is no good ſubiect, that will rend it in pieces, or deface it: wherefore that the ſigne of the Croſſe is not to be adored, thus it may appeare.

*Argum.*1. The Scripture neuer calleth the Croſſe, whereon Chriſt ſuffered, the holy Croſſe, as the Papiſts doe, but rather curſed: for S. Paul prooueth that Chriſt became accurſed for vs, becauſe he dyed vpon the Croſſe, according to the Scripture, Curſed is euery one that hangeth on a tree. How then is it now honoured, which was then accurſed? And if all Croſſes are worthie honour, becauſe of Chriſt his Croſſe, then why not all nayles, and ſpeares? for with them he was pierced; all thornes alſo, becauſe of his crowne of thornes: yea, and all horſe-mangers too, becauſe he was layd in a Cribbe?

Bellarmine anſwereth, that we worſhip al Croſſes, becauſe they are all Images of Chriſts Croſſe: ſo are not all ſpeares, and thornes, &c. *cap.*30.

Contra. As there were other ſpeares and thornes, &c. then thoſe wherewith Chriſt was crucified; ſo were there alſo other croſſes, then that, vpon the which he ſuffered: for S. Peter and S. Andrew were crucified, and tormented vpon the Croſſe: and S. Ambroſe ſaith, Aliæ cruces nihil mihi proſunt, ſola crux Chriſti mihi vtilis eſt, &c. Other croſſes do nothing profit mee, onely Chriſts Croſſe is profitable vnto me, lib.6.in Luc. Therefore all croſſes are not Images of Chriſts Croſſe: ſo then he hath anſwered iuſt nothing.

*Argum.*2. They are vncertaine of what faſhion the Croſſe of Chriſt was, whether like the Greeke letter, ϒ. or this letter, x. or the Greeke TAV. T. or of this faſhion, †. or of this, ✠. which is the vſuall forme of their Croſſes: how then dare they worſhip that which they know not, and are vncertaine of?

In Pſal.118. Contro.26. 3 All thoſe reaſons which wee brought before againſt the worſhipping of Images, *part.*1.*huius quæſt.articul.*3. may be vrged againſt the adoration of Crucifixes.

Auguſtine thus writeth, Hanc intuentes ſalutiferam crucem, omne calumniantium ſuperborum virus expellimus: By beholding this helpefull, or healthfull croſſe, we are able to auoyd the poyſon of all proud venemous cauillers. He ſpeaketh not of any Crucifixe that they had in ſight, but of the fruitfull meditation of the paſſion of Chriſt: as he ſaith a little before, Dum vigilantiſſima & diligentiſſima pietate Chriſtus crucifixus attenditur: When with diligent and watchfull and godly attention we conſider Chriſt crucified. Loe, this was Auguſtines Crucifixe, to meditate vpon the death of Chriſt.

Though the picture of Chriſt crucified haue bin vſed of auncient time, yet was it not then adored, but put onely to a ciuill vſe, to call to remembrance the ſtorie of Chriſts paſſion. *Concil. Nicen.*2.*action.*2. Tharaſius the Preſident ſaith thus, Epiſtol.ad Antiochen.Epiſcop. Agnus, qui peccata mundi ſuſtulit iuxta humanam effigiem configuratus erigitur, &c. The Lambe of God, which taketh away the ſinne of the world, is figured in his humanitie, that we may be drawne to the memorie of his incarnation, and may be lead as by the hand, to thinke of his moſt holeſome death and paſſion.

*Action.*4. of the ſame Councell, Germanus writeth thus, Epiſtol.ad Thomam Epiſcop.Claudiopol. Apud Chriſtianos ſanctorum virorum imagines nihil aliud ſunt, quam fortitudinis eorum delineatio, &c. Among Chriſtians the pictures of holy men are to no end els, but to deſcribe their fortitude and excellent vertue, and to admoniſh vs to glorifie and praiſe God for them. Quæ hiſtorica narratio per auditum docet, ea tacens pictura per imitationem oſtendit: That which in hiſtorie is taught by hearing, in picture is ſhewed by imitation. Here is no mention made of any worſhipping of Images, Croſſes, or Crucifixes: but the vſe of pictures onely is to bring the hiſtorie to remembrance.

We haue alſo the ſeale of Martyrs: Thomas Man condemned for that he ſaid he would not beleeue in the Crucifixe, neither worſhip it, pag.815.col.2.artic.7. Franciſcus San Romanus martyred at Burges in Spaine anno 1540. for refuſing to do homage to a wooden Croſſe, ſaying, it was not the manner of Chriſtians to worſhip wood, pag.930.

THE THIRD ARTICLE, OF THE SIGNE of the Croſſe in the forehead, or made ouer any thing with the hand.

The Papiſts.

THey ſay, it is an holy and venerable ſigne, and meete to be vſed, to croſſe the forehead, and other parts, to bleſſe themſelues and their meats with croſſing and ſuch like, Rhemiſt. 48. Error.

*Argum.*1. Iacob croſſed his hands when he bleſſed his ſonnes; it is like our Sauiour did lift vp his hands in the forme of the croſſe, when he bleſſed. It is a conuenient memoriall of the death of Chriſt: and therefore to be vſed, *Rhemiſt.annot.Luk.24.ſect.*5.

*Anſw.*1. Iacob layde his hands after that forme, becauſe of the preſent occaſion: for the younger ſonne that ſhould be the greater, was placed at his left hand, and the elder at the right.

2. Seeing the Scripture expreſſeth not in what manner Chriſt lifted vp his hands, it is great preſumption for you to ſay, it was done in the ſimilitude of the Croſſe.

3. How can it be a conuenient memoriall of Chriſts death, being neither ordained of Chriſt, nor taught by his Apoſtles ſo to be?

*Argum.*2. Ezech.9.4. The Angell is commanded to ſigne with Tau, the foreheads of thoſe which mourned, &c. this, ſaith Bellarmine, was none other then the ſigne of the Croſſe, *cap.*29.

Anſw. Firſt, though the word Tau, there vſed, be the name of an Hebrue letter, yet it ſignifieth a ſigne, and is ſo tranſlated by the Septuagint, σημεῖον, giue them, or marke them with a ſigne in their foreheads. Secondly, the Hebrue Tau, hath this forme ת, though in the Greeke language it hath another faſhion, yet this figure hath no affinitie with the ſigne of the Croſſe; wherefore they haue gayned nothing, though it be granted, that they were marked with Tau. Thirdly, this ſigne, which the Angell maketh, none but the godly receiue, and they are all deliuered from deſtruction: but many a wicked and reprobate man is marked with the ſigne of the Croſſe: Ergo, this was no ſuch ſigne.

*Argum.*3. Apocal.7.3. Hurt not the earth, til we haue ſealed the ſeauants of God in their forehead: This is the ſigne of the Croſſe, *Rhemiſt.ibid.Bellarm.cap.*29.

Anſw. It is the ſigne proper to Gods elect, and therefore not the ſigne of the Croſſe, which many reprobates haue receiued. Let them heare their owne expoſitors; *Bruno, in 2.ad Timoth.*2. thus writeth, Deum ſuos conſignare,&c. That as a Captaine giueth his ſouldiers ſome ſigne, whereby they are knowne: ſo God giueth his a ſigne, which the diuell ſeeing, leaueth them, as not appertaining to him; Hoc Signum eſſe diuinam Electionem,&c. This ſigne is the diuine election: and Anſelme vpon theſe words 2.Timoth.2. God knoweth, who are his: Hoc cordi ſuo bonus impreſſum ſignum: let a man print this ſigne in his heart, and ſay to himſelfe, what doth it profit mee, to ſeeme outwardly iuſt, and be inwardly wicked? And then he further ſaith, Talis cogitatio eſt diuini ſigilli impreſſio: Such a cogitation is an impreſſion of this ſigne: And this is the ſigne, which the Elect are marked with.

The Proteſtants.

THough we finde that the ſigne of the Croſſe hath been of ancient time vſed in Baptiſme, and is now in ſome reformed Churches without popiſh ſuperſtition: yet this ridiculous and ſuperſtitious abuſe of the ſigne of the Croſſe, which is common and vſuall among the Papiſts, to croſſe themſelues, their foreheads, their eyes, mouth, lippes, to croſſe themſelues going foorth, and returning home, thinking thereby to be ſufficiently ſhended and preſerued from euill, we doe vtterly condemne, and haue worthily aboliſhed.

*Argum.*1. This cuſtome of croſſing hath no warrant from Scripture, neither was practiſed by the Apoſtles. Yet S. Paul ſpeaketh of diuers croſſes, as he calleth the fruite and efficacie of Chriſts death the croſſe of Chriſt, 1.Cor.1.17. Alſo the croſſe is taken for the Goſpell which is the preaching of the Croſſe, Phil.3.18. enemies to the croſſe of Chriſt, that is, his Goſpell. The Croſſe is alſo taken for the affliction that followeth the Goſpell: Galath.6.14. I reioyce in the croſſe of Chriſt. But of any ſuch ſigne of the croſſe to be made, the Apoſtle no where ſpeaketh: wherefore hauing no warrant in the word, it is a tradition of men, and therefore not after Chriſt, Coloſſ.3.8. This is alſo confeſſed in their owne Canons, that this vſe of ſigning with the Croſſe hath no warrant in the word: decret.p.1.diſtinct.11.c.5. Quæ Scriptura ſalutifera crucis ſignaculo,&c. What Scripture doth teach vs to ſigne with the moſt holeſome ſigne of the Croſſe, &c.

Cod.lib.9.tit.47.leg.17.Conſtant. Nemo eſt ſignandus in fronte, nemo in facie ſcribatur: No man muſt be ſigned in the forehead, or marked in the face.

Valentinus the Heretike was the firſt that made any great account of it, *Irenæus lib.*1.*cap.*1.therefore not to be vſed amongſt Chriſtians. Nos ab alienis noſtræ fidei demonſtrationes non recipimus: We therefore will not borrow demonſtrations of our faith from ſtrangers and aliens, *Nicen.*2.*action.*5.ſuch as Heretikes are.

*Argum.*2. Matth.23.5. Chriſt reproueth the Phariſies for their phylacteries, that is, certaine writings of the lawe in parchment, which they bound to their foreheads, and for their broad fringes, which were notwithſtanding commanded by the ° law. If our Sauiour reproued them for abuſing the things rightly inſtituted at the firſt: much more worthie of blame is the ſuperſtition of Chriſtians that hath no ground nor warrant at all.

°Numb. 15.31. Deut. cap.6. verſ. 8.

In Iohan. tract.43.

Auguſtine ſaith, Chriſtus elegit, vt in cruce penderet, vt ipſam crucem in cordibus fidelium figeret: Chriſt made choiſe of that kinde of death to hang vpon the Croſſe, that his Croſſe might be fixed in faithful mens hearts: he ſaith not in frontibus, in the forehead, though in ſome editions that word be foyſted into the text, but in cordibus, in their hearts.

THE FOVRTH ARTICLE, OF THE POWER and efficacie of the Croſſe.

The Papiſts.

49.Error. THe ſigne of the Croſſe (ſay they) hath two notable and powerfull effects: one is to driue away diuels and euil ſpirites, to heale and cure diſeaſes: the other is to ſanctifie and bleſſe creatures, as our meates and drinkes, which is done by the ſigne of the Croſſe, *Rhemiſt.*1.*Tim.*4 *ſect.*12.13.Bellarm.cap 30.

*Argum.*1. That the ſigne of the Croſſe, euen ex opere operato, as Bellarmine ſaith, by the very act, and making of the ſigne, yea by a Iew, Infidell or Pagan, hath power to driue away the diuell, they would thus proue it: Dauid by his Harpe droue away the euill ſpirit from Saul: the Angell did the like with the fiſhes liuer, in the ſtorie of Tobie: Rhemiſt.ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, we muſt haue better Scriptures then Apocryphall ſtories to build our faith vpon: The good Angels of God haue power from God to driue away euill ſpirits, though they vſe no externall ſignes: yet it followeth not, that euery man may doe that which is granted to the Angels, though we ſhould admit the ſtorie. Secondly, Dauid not ſo much by the ſound of his Harpe refreſhed Saul, as by his godly ſongs and muſicke chaſed away the ſpirit: neither did the euill ſpirit depart from him, but he for the while found ſome eaſe; his phantaſticall and melancholy fits which Sathan wrought vpon, being by his pleaſant harmonie ſomewhat alayed. This alſo your own gloſſe confeſſeth, *decr.p.*2.*cauſ.*33 *diſtinct.*1.*cap.*60.Saul non poterat,&c.Saul could not returne to his right minde, Niſi coram eo Dauid pſalleret: vnleſſe Dauid did ſing before him: It was not then the ſound, but the Song that helped Saul. Thirdly, all this being granted, yet haue they not proued by theſe examples, that Pagans & Infidels, by the ſigne of the Croſſe, may chaſe away euill ſpirits.

50.Error. *Argum.*2. That things are hallowed and bleſſed by the ſigne of the Croſſe, they alſo prooue it, becauſe the Croſſe being an holy ſigne in it ſelfe, doth communicate holines vnto the things ſigned with the Croſſe, *Bellarm.cap.*30.

Anſw. Firſt, we deny the ſigne of the Croſſe, as they vſe it, to be an holy, but rather a ſuperſtitious and deceiueable ceremony. Secondly, though it were holy, yet being abuſed, it cannot transferre any holines to other things: for in the lawe the ſacrifices of the wicked, though they lay vpon the Altar, were not thereby ſanctified, but were an abomination, being not offered in a right faith: Nay there is no outward ceremonie ſo holy, as that it can impart the holines to another thing; as it is ſhewed Hagg.2.13. Though a man did beare holy fleſh in the skirt of his garment, yet was it not thereby holy.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, it is a deceitfull toy that they beare the people in hand: the diuell at the ſigne of the Croſſe will fly away: For the weapons of our warfare (ſaith S.Paul) are not carnall, 2.Cor.10.4. but the ſigne of the Croſſe is an externall and carnall, no ſpirituall weapon: and therefore preuaileth not againſt ſpirituall powers. Act.19. The diuell would not giue place when Ieſus and Paul were named, much leſſe at the ſigne of the croſſe.

Auguſtine ſaith: Signum Chriſti expellit exterminatorem, ſi cor noſtrum recipiat ſaluatorem: The ſigne of Chriſt doth expell the deſtroyer, when our heart receiueth our Sauiour: *Tractat.in Iohan.*50. So it is not the ſigne in the forehead, but the faith of the heart, that maketh Sathan afraide: if ſometime he auoyd when men ſigne themſelues, he is diſpoſed to play with them, that he may deceiue them more ſtrongly.

Secondly, we know no ſuch meanes to ſanctifie creatures by: They are bleſſed and ſanctified for our vſes (as S.Paul ſaith) by the word and prayer, 1.Tim.4. Prayer therefore without warrant of the word is but preſumption. The Greeke Scholia, by the Word, vnderſtand ſermonem, qui eſt in gratiarum actione, the thankeſgiuing vſed before meate, and by prayer, Fidelium precem, the requeſts of the faithfull, whereby meates are ſanctified: Here is no mention at all of the Croſſe. They therefore hauing no word for their ſuperſtitious croſſings, inuocations, incantations, popiſh bleſſings, doe deceiue themſelues and others, in thinking that the creatures in ſuch order are ſanctified vnto them.

*Nicen.2.action.6.tom.*3. this reaſon was vſed againſt Images, and it may very well ſerue alſo againſt the ſigne of the croſſe: Neque precationem vllam, qua ſanctificari poſſet, imago habet, ſed manet communis & inhonorata vt pictor eam abſoluit: An image hath no forme of prayer appoynted, whereby it ſhould be ſanctified, but remayneth prophane and vnholy, as it commeth from the workemans hand: ſo may we ſay of the ſigne of the croſſe, that it cannot ſanctifie, vnleſſe it be firſt ſanctified it ſelfe; it cannot be ſanctified without prayer of faith, and faith is built vpon the word: ſuch ſanctification by prayer, the ſigne of the croſſe hath none. Ergo.

*Concil. Laodicen. can.*32. Non oportet hæreticorum benedictiones accipere, quia maledictiones magis ſunt, quam benedictiones: We muſt not receiue the bleſſings of heretikes, becauſe they are curſes rather then bleſſings: yet Bellarmine ſaith, there is vertue in the ſigne of the croſſe made by a Iew, Pagan, infidel, or whoſoeuer: but this Councel ſaith, that the benedictions of ſuch are maledictions.

Wherefore we doubt not to conclude, that the ſigne of the croſſe as it is vſed by papiſts, is a ſuperſtitious and idolatrous ſigne; and that as one Robert Cooper confeſſor of the truth ſomtime ſaid, the bleſſing with a ſhooe ſole is as good as a Popiſh Biſhops bleſſing done no otherwiſe, then by croſſing, Fox.pag.1043.c.2.

AN APPENDIX CONCERNING THE name of Ieſus.

The Papiſts.

THe name of Ieſus (they ſay) ought to be worſhipped by capping and kneeling thereunto, by wearing it in their caps, and ſetting it vp in ſolemne places: alleaging for their purpoſe that of S. Paul, that at the name of Ieſus al things ſhall bow, Philip.2.10. Yea, they ſay, that Proteſtants by aboliſhing the name and image of Chriſt, do make a way for Antichriſt, *Rhemiſt.annot.Philip.*2 *ſect.*2. *Apocal.*13.17. 51.Error.

The Proteſtants.

1. THe bowing at the name of Ieſus, as it is vſed in Poperie, to bend the knee at the ſound thereof, is not commaunded in this place: which ſheweth eſpecially the ſubiection of all creatures, of Turkes, Iewes, Infidels, yea of the diuels themſelues to the power and iudgement of Chriſt. Secondly, Proteſtants haue onely taken away the ſuperſtitious abuſe of the name of Ieſus. Thirdly, the kneeling at the name of Ieſus is ſuperſtitiouſly abuſed in poperie: for the people ſtoupe onely at the ſound, not vnderſtanding what is read, and ſo make an Idoll of the letters and ſillables, adoring and worſhipping the very name when they heare or ſee it: And againe, in ſitting and not vayling at the name of Chriſt, Immanuel, God the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt, and bowing onely at the name of Ieſus, Fulk.ibid. Fourthly, due reuerence may be vſed to our Sauiour without any ſuch ceremonie of capping or kneeling, Fulk. Neither do we binde any of neceſſitie to vſe this reuerence to the name of Ieſus, as the Papiſts do, which think that Chriſt cannot otherwiſe be honoured: neither doe we iudge and condemne thoſe that doe vſe it, being free from ſuperſtition, and grounded in knowledge, and carefull not to giue offence: for ſuperſtitious and offenſiue ignorance is not in any caſe to be defended. Fiftly, this outward reuerence to the name of Ieſus was firſt taken vp amongſt Chriſtians, becauſe of all other names it was moſt derided and ſcorned of the Pagans and Iewes: and therefore they did the more honour it. But now there is greater danger of popiſh ſuperſtition in abuſing holy things, then of prophane Paganiſme in vtterly contemning them: and therefore there is not ſuch neceſſarie and iuſt occaſion of vſing this externall geſture now, as was in former times: It was not vſed of neceſſitie then, much leſſe now.

*Synod.Moguntin.cap.*59, it was thus decreed: Pari religione ad nomen ſaluatoris noſtri D.Ieſu Chriſti, ſimiliter ad Euangelium, &c. Let men with like deuotion at the name of our Lord and Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt, as likewiſe at the Goſpell, the Magnificat, Benedictus, Nunc dimittis, Gloria in excelſis, Gloria patri, and other parts of the diuine ſeruice, ſo compoſe themſelues by bowing the knee, vncouering the head, and the like geſture of the whole bodie, as they may ſeeme to haue their minde occupied in thoſe things that are done. I note out of this decree three things: firſt, that they ſhould bow at the name of Chriſt, as well as when Ieſus is named. Secondly, that the like reuerence ſhould bee vſed when as other Pſalmes are ſung, and when mention is made of the Father, and the holy Ghoſt, as in the Gloria patri. Thirdly, that this geſture ſhould not bee done in reuerence rence to names,words,or ſillables ſo pronounced,but onely to declare our attention. Thus then we ſee that this ſuperſtitious cuſtome in bowing to the name of Ieſus onely, is contrarie euen to their owne popiſh Canons and decrees. The like thing alſo was decreed Synod. Auguſtenſ.cap.23.

To this effect alſo Gregor.10.ſext decretal.lib.3.tit.23.c.3. Quandocunque recolitur,&c. Whenſoeuer that glorious name is rehearſed, cordis genua flectant, let them bow the knees of their heart, which at the leaſt let them teſtifie by the inclination of the head. So then the reuerence of the heart is more requiſite,when Ieſus is named,then the geſture of the bodie.

THE SIXT QVESTION, CONCERNING Temples and Churches.

This queſtion hath diuers parts: Firſt, of the forme and ſituation of Churches. Secondly, of the end and vſe of Churches. Thirdly, of their ornaments. Fourthly, of the dedication of Churches. Fiftly, of things hallowed and conſecrated for Churches.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE SITVATION of Churches.

The Papiſts.

52. Error. The Churches and Temples of Chriſtians (ſay they) are moſt conueniently and haue been of ancient time builded toward the Eaſt, Bellarmine libro tertio,capite tertio,de ſanctis.

*Argum.*1. Paradiſe was built in the Eaſt,Gen.2.8. and therefore wee ought to pray that way, for deſire we haue to our countrie.

Anſ. Firſt,Paradiſe was then Eaſtward vnto Moſes and the Iſraelites being in the Wildernes, when he wrote this ſtorie:but it cannot be Eaſt to al chriſtian nations:for Paradiſe being planted in Eden,which was part of Meſopotamia,muſt needes be Weſt to the Perſians, South to the Scythians and Tartarians, North to the Æthiopians: wherefore this reaſon is not generall for all Churches in Chriſtian nations. Secondly,it ſkilleth not where that earthly Paradiſe is ſituate: our heauenly Paradiſe is in heauen,which is euery where open to all true beleeuers.

*Argum.*2. We looke for Chriſt to come in the Eaſt to iudgement, therefore wee pray toward the Eaſt: As the lightning ſhineth from the Eaſt to the Weſt, ſo ſhall the comming of the ſonne of man bee, Matth.27.24. Therefore he ſhall appeare toward the Eaſt,Bellarm.ibid.

Anſ. Firſt,by that ſimilitude of the lightning,the ſuddennes of his appearing, not the place is declared. Secondly,it is great preſumption to define that which the Scripture hath not reuealed: Chriſts comming is onely generally ſet downe, he ſhall come in the clowdes, Matth.24.30. And wee ſhall be caught vp in the clowdes, 1.Theſſal.4.17. There is no particular deſcription of the place.

The Proteſtants.

To vs it is no matter,which way Churches are builded,wee may turne our ſelues in prayer as well toward any one part of the heauens,as another: Neither do we refuſe to pray in Churches builded toward the Eaſt. But that our Oratories and places of prayer ought rather to bee builded that way,then any other; out of the Scripture it cannot bee proued, and wee hold it as a meere ſuperſtitious opinion.

*Argum.*1. S.Paul exhorteth men euery where to lift vp pure hands, 1.Tim.2.8. He ſaith, In euery place,without exception,whether toward the Eaſt or the Weſt,or whereſoeuer.

*Argum.*2. If any place were more daungerous then other to pray in,it is not ſo ſafe,and perhaps more perilous to pray toward the Eaſt: for Idolaters were wont to turne them toward the Eaſt,and to worſhip the Sunne riſing,Ezech.8.17. And for this cauſe the holy place in the Tabernacle was toward the Weſt,Exod.26.27. And it was the cuſtome of the Iewes to pray Weſtward,leaſt they ſhould be entiſed to worſhip the Sunne riſing in his ſtrength. And therefore the Ieſuite maketh but a bad argument: The Iewes prayed toward the Weſt: Ergo, Chriſtians muſt pray toward the Eaſt: nay,rather contrarie, becauſe they turned their back to the Eaſt,for feare of Idolatrie; Chriſtians,if any place were to be regarded more then other, ought vpon the ſame ground alſo to follow the ſame cuſtome, for as much as all men by nature are prone to Idolatrie: and the reaſon of their ſo praying,ſeemeth rather to bee morall,then ceremoniall. This I ſay not, as though I commended the Iewes ſuperſtitious praying toward the Weſt, but only to ſhew that they haue better reaſon for their cuſtome, then our aduerſaries haue for their ſuperſtitious turning toward the Eaſt. But to Chriſtians all places are alike.

Auguſtine ſaith, Cum quis quærit orationem, collocet membra, ſicut ei occurrit: If any man bee deſirous to pray,let him place his bodie, as occaſion ſerueth: he ſaith not toward the Eaſt, or toward the Weſt, ad Simplician.lib.2.quaſt.4.

Concil.Conſtantinop.6.cap.7.Singulis diebus quiſque duabus vicibus oret, mane & veſpere,&c. Euerie day let euery man pray twice, morning and euening: if he bee in his iourney, or in the woods, or fields, whereſoeuer the morning and euening houre findeth him, ſo let him doe: knowing that God is euery where preſent. If God bee euery where preſent, then as well in the Weſt, or any other part of heauen, as in the Eaſt: therefore it ſkilleth not which way a man turneth himſelfe in prayer.

Walter Brute holy confeſſor hath ſealed this truth, who ſaith; It is the cuſtome of Necromancers to turne their face to the Eaſt, as to a place more apt for their prayers: As Balaam being hired to curſe the Iraelites, when he could not accompliſh his purpoſe in one place, remoued to another, &c. Fox pag.497.col.2. It is not ſeemely therefore for Chriſtians in their prayers to imitate the ſuperſtitious manner of the Heathen, in preferring the Eaſt before the Weſt, or one place before another.

AN APPENDIX OF THIS PART, CONCERNING the forme and faſhion of Churches.

The Papiſts.

53.Error. THey would haue their Churches to be built as Salomons Temple was, which conſiſted of three parts: there was firſt the porch or court for the people; then the holy place where the Altar ſtood, and the Prieſts offered ſacrifice; and laſt of all the moſt holy place, where the Arke and Mercie ſeate were placed. So they haue the Church porch, then the bodie of the Church, and aboue that, their Sanctuarie, as they call it, or the Queere or Chauncell, which was ſeparated from the reſt, by ſteps or ſtaires, hangings or curtaines, and other partitions. And here muſt ſtand their Altar, Bellarm.lib.3.de cultu Sanctor.cap.3.

The Proteſtants.

COncerning the faſhion and forme of Churches, and the diuiſions and partitions within, wee will not much contend, ſo theſe conditions be obſerued: Firſt, that all ſuperſtition bee auoided, in making one place of the Church holier then the reſt, wherein the Papiſts mightily offend: for the Queere or Chauncell was for their Prieſts and ſingers, the other part of the Church for lay men, they were not to enter into that holy place: and thus according to the places, they deuided the congregation: as though one part were more holie then the other. The people alſo were made to beleeue, that to be buried in the Chauncell, but eſpecially vnder the Altar, was more auaileable for the dead, then to be buried in the Church. But where learne they that our Churches ought to haue a Sanctuarie as the Iewiſh Temple had? that was an euident type, and is now accompliſhed in our Sauiour Chriſt, who is now entred into the heauens, as the high Prieſt then entred into the holy place to make attonement for the people, Heb.9.24. This therefore is very groſſe, to reuiue and renue againe Iewiſh types and figures: as their owne ordinarie gloſſe ſaith, De quatuor concilys primitiuæ Eccleſiæ: Externi ritus & cæremoniæ legis, quia hæc fuerunt vmbra Chriſti tum venturi, & myſteriorum eius, ideo adueniente veritate Euangelica, illicita facta ſunt & euanuerunt: The externall rites and ceremonies of the law, becauſe they were a ſhadow of Chriſt to come and of his myſteries, therefore the truth of the Goſpell being come, are made vnlawfull, and vaniſhed away. Salomons Temple then, with the Sanctuarie and prieſthood thereof, which were ſhadowes of things to come, are no preſidents or patternes for Chriſtians to follow.

But if herein notwithſtanding they will imitate the building of Salomons Temple, to haue a Sanctuarie, why doe they not alſo build toward the Weſt, as the Temple was? why bring they not their Altar downe into the bodie of the Church? for in their holy place there was no Altar. And indeede, Altar we acknowledge none, as afterward ſhall be proued. But we ſee no reaſon why the Communion Table may not bee ſet in the bodie of the Church, as well as in the Chauncell, if the place be more conuenient and fit to receiue the Communicants. But I pray you, why is your Altar rather ſet in your Sanctuarie, then the Font or Baptiſterie? they are both Sacraments, as well Baptiſme as the Lords Supper: why ſhould one be preferred, as holier then the other?

Secondly, all things in the Church ought to be done vnto edifying; and therefore wee allow no ſuch partitions, as doe hinder the edifying of the people, and exclude them from hearing; as in popiſh Churches the Prieſt is pued or mued vp by himſelfe a great way off, that his voyce can hardly be perceiued of the people. The Miniſter is ſo to ſtand and turne himſelfe, as he may bee beſt heard and vnderſtood of the people: as Ezra had a pulpit of wood to ſtand in when he read the law, Nehem.8.4.

Auguſtine thus writeth, Cum Epiſcopus ſolus intus eſt, populus & orat cum illo, & quaſi ſubſcribens ad eius verba, reſpondet, Amen: While the Biſhop or Paſtor prayeth within, the people both prayeth together with him: and ſubſcribing to his words, anſwereth, Amen. By this it appeareth, that though in Auguſtines time the Miniſter had a place for himſelfe (as it is meete he ſhould) yet he ſo diſpoſed himſelfe, that his prayer was heard of all the people: for otherwiſe how could they pray with him, and ſubſcribe or giue aſſent to his words?

THE SECOND PART, OF THE END and vſe of Churches.

THis part hath three ſeuerall points. Firſt, whether the Churches of Chriſtians are built to offer ſacrifice in. Secondly, whether they be in themſelues places more holy then others. Thirdly, whether they may be dedicated to Saints.

THE FIRST POINT OR ARTICLE, WHEther our Churches are for ſacrifice.

The Papiſts.

54.Error. THe principall end of Churches is for the ſacrifice of Chriſtians, and in that reſpect they are truly called Temples: they are not onely for prayer, the preaching of the word, and adminiſtration of the Sacraments, but chiefly for the externall ſacrifice of the Maſſe, Bellarm.cap.4.

Argum.1. The Churches of Chriſtians haue Altars, therefore ſacrifices: that they haue Altars, he thus proueth: Firſt, 1.Cor.10.21. You cannot bee partakers of the Lords table, and the table of diuels. By the table here is meant the Altar; for the table of the Heathen was their altar, wherein they ſacrificed to their Idols.

Anſ. Firſt, a table is one thing, an altar another: and very vnproperly is an altar called a table: this place in any wiſe mans iudgement maketh more againſt them then with them. Secondly, Saint Paul ſpeaketh not here of the ſacrifices of the Heathen nor of their altars, but of the feaſts which they made in their Idolatrous Temples, which was done vpon tables, of ſuch ſacrifices as had been offered to Idols: vnto the which feaſts S. Paul forbiddeth Chriſtians to come, as it appeareth in the reſt of the chapter, and more plainly, chap.8.10.

Argum.2. Heb.13.10. We haue an altar, of which they haue no power to eate that ſerue at the Tabernacle: That is, the altar whereon Chriſts bodie is offered, Bellar. Rhemiſt. in hunc locum.

Anſ. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh expreſſely of participation of the ſacrifice of Chriſts death, (as it is manifeſt in the two verſes next following) which is by a Chriſtian faith, and not in the Sacrament onely, whereof none can be partakers that remaine in the ceremoniall obſeruations of the Leuiticall ſacrifices: For the Apoſtle ſpeaketh manifeſtly, verſ.12. of the ſuffering of Chriſt without the gate: Chriſt therefore is the altar, yea our Prieſt and ſacrifice too. Further, you abuſe this place to proue your materiall popiſh altars, which are many: but the Apoſtle ſaith, we haue an altar, ſpeaking of one. This expoſition Richard Woodman holy Martyr hath ſealed, that Chriſt is the true altar wheron euery true Chriſtian ought to come and offer, he proueth by the conference of theſe two places of the Goſpell, Matth.5.23. If thou bringeſt thy gift to the altar, and remember that thy brother hath ought againſt thee, &c. Likewiſe, Matth.18. Where two or three are gathered in my name, there am I in the midſt: whereſoeuer then people are gathered together in Chriſts name, there is he in the midſt; and where he is, there is the Altar; ſo that wee may bee bolde to come and offer our gift, Fox pag.1991.col.2.

The Proteſtants.

THe Churches of Chriſtians are the houſes of prayer, made to that end, that they ſhould come together to heare the word of God read and preached, receiue the Sacraments, and offer vp their ſpirituall ſacrifices of praiſe and thankſgiuing: other externall ſacrifices, or Altars wee acknowledge none.

Argum.1. The temple of the Iewes was called an houſe of prayer, that is, principally for praier, Marke 11.17. Moſes was read and preached in their Synagogues, Act.15.21. Much more are the Churches of Chriſtians appointed for preaching and praier, Act.20.7. The firſt day of the weeke, which is the Lords day, they came together to breake bread, and Paul preached vnto them: Ergo, the adminiſtration of the word and Sacraments with prayer, is the chiefe and onely cauſe of the holie aſſemblies of Chriſtians.

Argum.2. Altars we haue none in our Churches: Saint Paul calleth it the Lords table, 1.Corinth.10.21. where we receiue the Sacrament of the bodie and blood of Chriſt. And he calleth it bread, which is broken, 1.Cor.11.26. But bread is ſet vpon tables, not ſacrificed vpon altars.

Auguſtine alſo calleth it, Menſam Domini, the Lords table, Epiſt.59. and Epiſt.50. He ſheweth how cruelly the Donatiſts handled Maximian a Catholike Biſhop, beating him with clubs, euen in the Church, lignis altaris effractis immaniter ceciderunt, and wounded him with the wood of the Altar, which they had broken downe. Where though he improperly call it an Altar, yet was it a Communion table framed of wood, and made to be remoued, not faſtened to the wall, as their popiſh altars were.

*Damaſus epiſtol.*4. Chorepiſcopi miniſterio preſbyterorum contenti ſint, atque menſæ Domini participes tantummodo exiſtant: Let the locall Biſhops be content to miniſter as Prieſts, and to be partakers onely of the Lords table: He ſaith the Lords table, not the Lords Altar.

And that Churches are ordeined for the word of God, prayer, and the ſacraments, wee haue euident teſtimony of Councels. *Synod. Moguntin.cap.*40. Templa orationis, diuini cultus & Sacramentorum officinas, &c. They call our Temples or Churches, the ſhops of prayer, the diuine worſhip, and the Sacraments.

*Colonienſ.part.9.cap.*13. Conſecratur templum, &c. vt ab omnibus pariter conuenientibus Deo laudes ſoluantur, diuinum verbum audiatur, ac eccleſiaſtica ſacramenta miniſtrentur: The Church is conſecrate, that of all men aſſēbled together, praiſe ſhould be rendred to God, the word of God heard, and the Sacraments of the Church miniſtred.

Yet further we haue the teſtimonie of their owne law, *decret.p.*1.*diſtinct.*43.*c.*5. Oratorium hoc ſit, quod dicitur, &c. Let the Oratorie be that, which it is called; neither let any thing els be there done, then that which agreeth to the diuine Miniſterie: and in the ſame place cap 6. In Oratorio præter orandi & pſallendi cultum, &c. In the Oratorie beſide ſinging and praying, let nothing be done, &c. *decret.part.*3.*diſtinct.*1.*c.*21.Ioannes: Eccleſias Arrianorum, &c. The Churches of the Arrians, whereſoeuer you finde them, Diuinis precibus & operibus conſecrate: Conſecrate to diuine prayers, and workes. By theſe Canons it appeareth, that Churches are eſpecially conſecrated and ordayned for prayer.

Maſter George Wiſeheart holy Martyr: *Churches ſhould be ſuſtained and vpholden, that the people ſhould be congregate vnto them, there to heare of God: for whereſoeuer is true preaching of the worde of God, and lawfull vſe of the Sacraments, vndoubtedly there is God himſelfe. Fox.*pag.1270.col.2. This then is the right and proper vſe of Churches, as we haue ſeene.

THE SECOND ARTICLE, WHETHER CHVRCHES are more holy places in themſelues.

The Papiſts.

55.Error. GOd (they ſay) rather dwelleth and is preſent in Churches, then elſe where: and therefore it is more auaileable for a man, euen to make his priuate prayer in the Church.

*Argum.*1. The Temple of Salomon was ordained euen for the prayers of priuate men: and Salomon prayeth vnto God, that they might be heard, 1.King.8.38. So Anna prayed in the Tabernacle, 1.Sam.1. And the Apoſtles went vp to the Temple to pray, Act.3.1. Ergo, prayers made in the Temple are more auaileable, *Bellarm.cap.*4.

Anſw. 1. See what Iewiſh arguments here are: becauſe the Lord gaue an eſpeciall bleſſing to his Temple amongſt the Iewes, that was the onely place for ſacrifices, and alſo a peculiar priuiledged place for prayer: therefore he will bind and tye himſelfe to ſome certaine place now. But our Sauiour ſaith cleane contrary vnto the woman of Samaria, The houre commeth, when ye ſhall neither in this mountaine, nor in Ieruſalem worſhip my Father, Iohn 4.21. The prayers and ſacrifices of Chriſtians are now no more tyed and limited to places. 2. That was but a type vnto the Iewes, that as then God would be onely heard in his Temple: ſo his name is now onely truely inuocated and called vpon in his Church.

3 It is falſly alleadged that the Apoſtles went vp, onely to pray, to the Temple: they went vp at the ninth houre of prayer, when the people were accuſtomed to goe vnto the Temple, that they might preach the Goſpell vnto them.

*Argum.*2. Daniel praied with his window open Eaſtward to Ieruſalem, where the Temple was, Dan.6. Anna departed not out of the Temple, but gaue her ſelfe to continuall faſting and prayer: Ergo, priuate prayers are more auaileable in the Church; *Bellarm.cap.*4.

Anſw. Firſt, the argument followeth not from the vſe of the Iewiſh Temple, to the practiſe of Chriſtians now: for we denie not, but that there was an eſpeciall bleſſing promiſed to thoſe that prayed in the Temple of Salomon, according to the requeſt which he made at the dedication of the Temple: If any man pray in this place, then heare thou in heauen. 1.Reg.8.31. But now the prophecie of Malachie is fulfilled, Malachie 1.11. that incenſe ſhould vnder Chriſt be euery where offered vnto God: this difference betweene the Temple of the Iewes, and of Chriſtians, Origen maketh, *tract.*35.in Matth. Vir quidem Iudaicus non dubitat de huiuſmodi, &c. A Iew doth nothing doubt of this, that is, that one place is more holy for prayer then another, but he that is departed from Iewiſh fables to Chriſts doctrine, doth ſay that the place doth not make one prayer better then another.

Secondly, Daniel openeth not his window to Ieruſalem, in reſpect of the holineſſe of the place, but to make it knowne, that he prayed to God, that was there worſhipped, and to ſhew his confidence in Gods promiſes for their returne thither: Anna alſo continued in the Temple, as being the fitteſt place for her widowes ſtate, and ſolitarie life, being ſequeſtred from all humane encumbrances, and in reſpect of the helpes of religion by the ſacrifices and common prayers; not in regard of any inherent holineſſe there.

The Proteſtants.

WE preferre publike prayers made by the congregation in the Church, before priuate prayers, not becauſe of the place, but in reſpect of the congregation, whoſe prayers ioyntly altogether are more feruent and effectuall, then the prayer of one man: But if wee compare publike prayer with publike, and priuate with priuate, wee doubt not but that the one and the other being made in faith, may as well be heard out of the Church, as in it.

*Argum.*1. The promiſe of our Sauiour is generall, Whereſoeuer two or three are gathered together, I am in the middeſt amongſt them, Matth. 18.20. So Saint Paul, I will that men euery where lift vp pure hands, 1. Timoth. 2. Ergo, they may be heard praying in faith in any place.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of publike prayer, which is done in the Church, as it may appeare by the beginning of the chapter, verſ. 1. I exhort, that ſupplications, prayers, interceſſions be made, &c. which is vnderſtood of common and publike prayer; Bellar. cap. 4.

Anſ. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh not onely of publike, but of priuate prayer alſo: firſt, becauſe Kings, for whom the Apoſtle would haue interceſſions made, are not onely publikely, but alſo priuately to be praied for. Secondly, the Apoſtle would haue thẽ pray euery where: but in euery place there is not a Church to pray in. Thirdly, it is the ſame, with that the Apoſtle ſaith elſewhere, 1. Theſſal. 5. verſ. 17. Pray continually: which is vnderſtood of priuate prayer.

*Argum.*2. So our Sauiour ſaith, When thou prayeſt, enter into thy chamber: he ſaith not, go to the Church. Bellarmine ſaith, he entereth into his chamber, that prayeth without vainglorie, whether he doe pray ſecretly or openly.

Anſw. Our Sauiours words are plaine without allegorie, for he ſpeaketh of ſhutting the doore of the chamber: and there is a manifeſt oppoſition betweene the Phariſies praying in the corners of the ſtreets, and the frequencie of people, and the others praying in ſecret. And whereas Bellarmine obiecteth, that the ſhutting of the doore cannot literally be vnderſtoode, becauſe that Chriſt himſelfe prayed in the mountaines often, but in his chamber wee doe not reade, that hee praied: the anſwere is readie: firſt, by ſhutting of the doore Chriſt vnderſtandeth praying in ſecret, as it is in the text, God, which ſeeth in ſecret ſhall rewarde thee openly: Secondly, no maruell, if Chriſt is not read to ſhut the doore, for he had no houſe, nor place, where to reſt his head: Thirdly, in that Chriſt praied in the mountaine, but in the Temple he prayed not, but preached, Luk. 21. 37. it teacheth vs, that euery where our praiers are acceptable vnto God.

Argum. 3. Our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith, that vnder the Goſpell, neither in that mountaine, nor in Ieruſalem God will be worſhipped, but in ſpirit and truth, Iohn 4.21. Ergo, the worſhip of God is not tied to any place.

Bellarmine anſwereth, Chriſt ſpeaketh not of the place, but of the manner of worſhip: that is, that henceforth God would not be worſhipped, after the manner of the Samaritanes and Iewes: for afterward the Apoſtles praied in the temple at Ieruſalem, Bellarm. cap. 4.

Contra. Firſt, our Sauiour ſpeaketh both of the place and manner: for ſo the woman propoundeth the queſtion of the place of worſhip, verſ. 20. Our Fathers worſhipped in the mountaine, and ye ſay that in Ieruſalem, &c. And our Sauiour anſwereth her accordingly, fitly, and appertinently to the matter: for otherwiſe the anſwere ſhould not be fitting, if the woman ſhould aske one thing, and Chriſt anſwere another. Secondly, Bellarmine ignorantly diſtinguiſheth that, which is not to be diſtinguiſhed, for to be addicted to a certaine place of praier, is of, or belonging to the manner of praier: wherefore, Chriſt comprehendeth both in one ſpeech, that though praier afterward might be made both in the mountaine, and at Ieruſalem, yet they ſhould not pray, with that opinion of holines in the place, as before; as the Iewes and Samaritanes did.

Lib. ſententiar. Auguſt.

Auguſtine ſaith, Quid ſupplicaturus Deo locum ſanctum requiris? volens in Templo orare, in te ora: & ita age ſemper, vt Dei Templum ſis, ibi enim Deus exaudit vbi habitat: When thou art about to pray, what needeſt thou to go to any ſacred place? wouldeſt thou pray in the Temple or Church? ſee that thou be the Temple of God, and there the Lord will ſooneſt heare where he dwelleth.

Bernard hath an excellent ſpeech of this matter: Habent ſanctitatem, ſed propter corpora veſtra, &c. Your Churches are holie, becauſe of your bodies: as your ſoules are holie, becauſe of the ſpirit that dwelleth in you; your bodies holie, becauſe of your ſoules; ſo this houſe is holie becauſe of your bodies: not in themſelues therefore are they holie, &c.

Concil. Conſtantin. 6. cap. 7. Singulis diebus quiſque duabus vicibus oret, &c. Euery day let euery man pray twice, morning and euening; in the Church, if he be in the Church: but he that is in his iourney, or vpon any occaſion in the woods or fields, whereſoeuer the morning or euening ſeaſon findeth him, let him pray there, knowing that God is euery where preſent. Euery place therefore hath Gods preſence, and therefore is alike in it ſelfe ſanctified for prayer.

Gangrenſ. Concil. in ſubſcriptione. Omnem locum ædificatum in nomine Dei honoramus, & congregationem in Eccleſia factam ob vtilitatem communem recipimus: We do honour euery place built in the name of the Lord, and do reuerence or receiue the congregation or aſſembly made in the Church, for the common vtilitie. Churches then are holy places and to be reuerenced, becauſe of their holy vſe, and for the holy aſſemblies there made: the people aſſembled for diuine exerciſes make the place holy, not the place the people. As it is ſaid of the Iſraelites, Non propter locum gentem, ſed propter gentem Dominus locum elegit: God did not chooſe the nation for the place, but the place for the nations ſake; Concil. Aquiſgran. lib.2.cap.24.

Likewiſe, Cod.lib.3.tit.43.leg.2. Locus, in quo ſepelitur corpus, efficitur religioſus: The place is made religious, or holy for the buriall of the dead. If the preſence of the dead make the place holy, much more the aſſemblies of the liuing: wherefore the place is not holy of it ſelfe, but becauſe of the preſence.

Decret.p.2.cauſ.13.qu.2.c.15. Iuxta altare nemo ſepeliatur, That no man ſhould bee buried neere to the Altar. But if there were an inherent holines in the Altar, it were an iniurie to the dead to barre them from the more holy place.

I cannot here omit the notable ſentence of Origen: Locum ſanctum in terris non requiro poſitum, ſed in corde, &c. I doe not ſeeke an holy place in the earth, but in the heart: the holy place is rather ſo to be taken, quàm ſi putemus ſtructuram lapidum, &c. then to thinke, that the building of inſenſible ſtones is the holy place, Hom.5. in Leuit.

Maſter Tindall holy Martyr hath ſealed this truth: Chriſt taking away the difference of places, will be worſhipped in euery place: Neither is there in his kingdome one place holy, another prophane, but all places are indifferent, neither canſt thou more heartely and better beleeue, truſt, and loue God in the Temple at the Altar, in the Churchyard, then in thy barne, kitchin, vineyard, bed, &c. And to be ſhort, the Martyrs of Chriſt haue honoured him in darke dungeons and priſons. Fox pag.1254.col.1.

THE THIRD ARTICLE, WHETHER CHVRches and Temples may be dedicated to Saints.

The Papiſts.

THey nothing doubt, but as Churches may bee conſecrated, and dedicated to the honour of 56.Error. God, ſo they may be alſo vnto Saints.

Argum.1. The Temple of Salomon was not only built for ſacrifices and praier, but for the Arke of God alſo: as Dauid ſaith to Nathan: Now I dwell in an houſe of Cedar trees, and the Arke of God remaineth within curtaines, 2.Sam.7.2. But there is as great honour, yea and greater, due to the reliques of Saintes: Ergo, it is lawfull to build Temples vnto them; Bellarmine capite quarto.

Anſ.1. When you haue a commaundement to build Churches for reliques, as they had to build a Temple for the Arke, ye may be bold to doe it.

2. To build a Temple for the Arke, was all one as to build an houſe for the Lord: for it was the Mercie ſeate of God: it pleaſed the Lord to dwell betweene the Cherubims, there to ſhew euident tokens of his preſence. And whereas Dauid conſulted to build an houſe for the Arke, the Lord doth thus anſwere him by his Prophet: Shalt thou build me an houſe for my dwelling? ver.5. So the Temple was made in the honour of God, being made for the Arke. It was all one, for the Arke to dwell there, and the Lord himſelfe to dwell there. This argument therefore maketh nothing for them.

The Proteſtants.

TO build Churches and religious houſes in the name and honour of Saints, and to make them Patrones and protectors of thoſe places, and there to call vpon them, and make prayers vnto them, all which is defended by our aduerſaries, we hold it vtterly vnlawfull, as tending to manifeſt impietie, and idolatrie.

Argum.1. No diuine worſhip is to be giuen to Saints, therfore no Churches to be made in their names: for it is part of the diuine worſhip to haue Temples.

Auguſtine ſaith, Nos non Martyribus Templa, ſacerdotia aut ſacra conſtituimus, quoniam non ipſi, ſed Deus eorum nobis Deus eſt: De ciuitate Dei, lib.8.cap. vlt. We doe not ordaine Temples, Prieſthoods, or ſacrifices for Martyrs: for not they, but their God, is both their God and ours. None therefore is to haue a Temple but God. But marke I pray you their diſtinction: They ſay, that Religious houſes as they are Temples, are onely conſecrated to God, but as they are Baſilica, palaces, ſumptuous buildings, the ſelfe ſame Churches may be dedicate to Saints. Like as (ſaith he) one and the ſame altar of ſtone, as it is an altar is conſecrated to God : and it may be alſo the tombe of ſome Martyr, and ſo alſo dedicate to the remembrance of the Martyr, *Bellarm.cap.*4.

Anſ. If one and the ſame Church may be conſecrate both to God and to ſome Saint beſide, I pray you who is the principall patrone of that Church; God or the Saint? You will ſay, I am ſure, God is. But I will prooue the contrarie, becauſe it hath the name of the Saint : It is called by the name of Saint Peter, Saint Paul, or ſome other, not by the name of God. Thus they are not contented to make Saints Gods fellowes, but will euen thruſt him out of place, giuing vnto Saints the honour of Gods houſe.

Secondly, the inſtance or example of the altar, which he alleageth, cannot ſerue his turne. Firſt, ſuch altars of ſtone to be ſacrificed vpon are not agreeable to the times of the Goſpell, the Church hauing alwaies of ancient time vſed tables, not altars, as I haue ſhewed before out of Saint *Auguſtine, error.*54. And Origen thus witneſſeth of his times, Veniente principe ſacerdotum, &c. The prince of prieſts being come, the prieſt in figure ceaſed, &c. the temple made of ſtones is deſtroyed, to giue place to the temple made of liuely ſtones : effoſſum eſt altare, quod erat deorſum, &c. the altar below was broken downe, becauſe the heauenly altar had appeared, *Tract.*11.in Matth. Wherefore if Communion tables were in vſe, not altars, they could not ſerue for Tombes or Sepulchers. Secondly, the vſe of altars being admitted, yet they ought not to be made places of buriall: *Decr. par.*2.*cauſ.*13.*qu.*2.*c.*15. Prohibendum eſt ſecundum maiorum inſtituta, &c. We forbid according to the decrees of our elders, that none be buried in the Church, prope altare verò, but neere vnto the altar in no caſe. Thirdly, though it were a lawfull place for buriall vnder the altar, yet cannot the ſame place be conſecrate to the honour both of God and the Martyr; ſeeing God will not part ſtakes with any, or deuide his honour.

Thirdly, this ridiculous diſtinction, betweene a Temple, and a Baſilica, or palace, is contrarie to antiquitie : *Cod.lib.*8.*tit.*12.*leg.*20. Baſilicam inauratam nullius imaginis obumbratione fuſcari, &c. We forbid, that the Baſilica be obſcured with the ſhadowing forth of any image. This law admitteth not the image of any in the Church ; how then can the Church be conſecrate to any Martyr, as patrone, whoſe image is not ſuffered to be there? Here then, Baſilica, is taken for a temple dedicate to the honour of God. And in the Councell of Wormes, Can.48. it is forbidden, vt nulla baſilica, that no Baſilica, that is, Church, be dedicate in the name of the dead : Ergo, not of Saints departed.

See alſo what one of your owne writers ſaith : Loca publica, &c. oratoria, tum Dominica Latinis, tum baſilicæ & eccleſiæ Græcis : The publike places of prayer are called Oratories and the Lords houſe of the Latines, of the Greekes Baſilicæ, &c. So that the one name of Temple is the Latine, the other of Baſilica is the Greeke, Eſpenc. in 1.*Timoth.*39.b. Thus doth it appeare how full of trifling the Ieſuite is in his ſophiſticall diſtinctions.

*Argum.*2. How names are to be giuen to places, wee cannot better learne, then of thoſe ancient founders of names, the holy Patriarkes : As Abraham, Geneſ.22.14. calleth the mountaine Iehouah-yreh, The Lord hath ſeene. So Iacob giueth holy names to the place where he met the Angels, Geneſ.32.2. and where he wreſtled with the Angell, verſ.31. They, as wee ſee, gaue holy and reuerent names vnto places, not made peculiar for Gods ſeruice, but onely for ciuill vſe for the places to be called and knowne by : how much more ought Churches and houſes of God to bee called by his name?

We therfore conclude, that Churches ought not to be erected in Saints names, to worſhip them thereby, and make them our Patrones, Mediators, and preſenters of our prayers : for this were great Idolatrie : Euen like as the Heathen called their Temples by the names of their Idols, Venus, Iupiter, Diana, and the like: Yet we refuſe not to call our Churches by the names of Saints, as they haue been called of olde, becauſe wee are not inuentors of names and termes, which inured by continuall cuſtome can hardly bee left. We vſe them onely as ciuill termes to diſtinguiſh places by : if any otherwiſe vſe them, for any religious purpoſe, they doe amiſſe. And yet we denie not, but that the names of holie men may be ſafely remembred, by thankeſgiuing vnto God for ſuch excellent inſtruments, and ſetting before our eyes their good example. And concerning the names which haue been ſuperſtitiouſly giuen in times paſt vnto Churches and other places (though it were to be wiſhed, that they neuer had been ſo giuen) yet now we vſe them (ſetting apart all ſuperſtition) as ciuill names of difference, as S.Luke deſcribeth the ſhip of Alexandria, wherein they were carried, whoſe badge (ſaith he) was Caſtor and Pollux, Act.28.11. In a ciuill matter of deſcription, he refuſeth not to vſe the names of the Heathen Gods. Auguſtine alſo giueth a good rule concerning ſuch names. He ſpeaketh of the names of daies, which were called after the names of Heatheniſh Idols, as the 4. day in the weeke, which wee call Wedneſday, was then called, and is yet in the Latine tongue, Dies Mercurij, Mercurie his day. Sic dicitur à paganis, & à multis Chriſtianis, ſed nolumus vt dicant, & vtinam corrigantur : melius de ore Chriſtiano ritus loquendi eccleſiaſticus procedit : So is it called of the Heathen, and of many Chriſtians, but I would not haue them called ſo,and I wiſh they were amended : for a Chriſtian kind of ſpeaking beſt becommeth a Chriſtian. Sed ſi quem forte conſuetudo contraxerit,&c.ſciat illos omnes homines fuiſſe : But if cuſtome preuaile with a man ſo to ſpeake,let him vnderſtand that all they were but men whom the Heathen take for Gods.

So ſay we,it were to be wiſhed,that we had names voide of all ſhew of ſuperſtition: but ſeeing for our ſpeaking we muſt be ruled by cuſtome,let vs know that thoſe Saints,by whoſe names places are called,are no Gods,nor Gods fellowes,nor patrones, or Mediators for vs, nor any way to be worſhipped : but,they are the fellow-ſeruants of all faithfull Chriſtians,to be reuerenced with a Chriſtian dutie of loue,not a religious worſhip of ſeruice.

Let vs ſee the conſent of antiquitie : Concil.Gangrenſ.can.5.Eccleſia,domus Dei,&c. The Church is called the houſe of God : Ergo,not of any Saint. And in the ſubſcription of the Councell : Omnem locum in nomine Dei ædificatum honoramus : Wee doe honour euery place built in the name of God. It was the generall vſe of thoſe times,onely to build Churches to the honour, and in the name of God.

*Concil.Vormatienſ.can.*48. Vt nulla baſilica ſub defunctorum conſtructa nomine dedicetur: That no Church built in the name of the dead, or departed this life, ſhould bee dedicated. But the Saints were ſometime liuing,and now are dead to the world,&c.

The holy Martyrs haue ſealed this truth: Iohn Lambert alleageth out of Auguſtine,that the Angels will not we ſhould build any Churches in reuerence of them, but would that with them wee ſhould honour the originall maker and performer of all. Fox pag.1108.

Maſter Tindall holy Martyr: To build a Church in the honour of our Ladie,or any other Saint is in vaine,they cannot helpe vs.Fox pag.1247.col.2.artic.10.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE ADORNING and beautifying of Churches.

The Papiſts.

THe Temples and Churches of Chriſtians, they would haue built in the moſt ſumptuous and coſtly manner ; yea,in beautie to exceede the palaces of Princes,with ſiluer, gold, ſilke,veluet; to be decked and adorned,Bellarm.cap.6. 57.Error.

*Argum.*1. The Tabernacle of the Iewes was of exceeding beautie: the curtaines thereof, of ſilke; the veſſels, euen to the ſnuffers for the Lampes, were of gold: the Prieſts garment had a breaſtplate of gold, ſet about with precious ſtones : Therefore why ſhould not the Temples of Chriſtians be in like ſort adorned,and ſet forth? as Iſay prophecieth, that the Glorie of Lebanon ſhall come,the Firre,Oliue,and Boxe tree to beautifie my Sanctuarie,Iſay 60.13.which is literally to be vnderſtood,Bellarm.ibid.

Anſ. Firſt,if the Ieſuite had turned his argument and reaſoned thus: the Temple of the Iewes was gorgeous,and ſumptuous,and beautifull to the eye : therefore Churches of Chriſtians ought not to be ſo now; he had reaſoned much better : for their ſeruing of God was externall; now God will be worſhipped in ſpirit. All things were done vnto them in types and figures : the outward glorie of their Temple was a liuely figure of the ſpirituall beautie of the Church of Chriſt. Secondly,where you would haue the prophecie of Iſay to bee literally vnderſtood,you haue made a good argument for the Iewes : for then they ſhall haue their Sanctuarie reſtored againe, which the Prophet ſpeaketh of by name. Thirdly,if that place of Iſay haue a literall ſenſe,why not that alſo,54.10. I will lay thy ſtones with Carbuncle, and thy foundation with the Saphires : I will make thy windowes of Emeraulds, and thy gates ſhining ſtones? Say alſo that this ſhall be literally performed : and ſo according to this groſſe ſenſe,the prophecie of Haggie ſhall alſo bee fulfilled; The glorie of the laſt houſe ſhall bee greater then the firſt,Hagg.2.verſ.10. But I thinke you neuer ſaw Church built in this goodly manner, in beautie ſurpaſſing the Iewiſh Temple,nor neuer ſhall.

*Argum.*2. The widow is commended for caſting into the offringes of God all ſhee had, Luk.21.1. The woman that beſtowed the precious ointment vpon Chriſt, is ſaid to haue done a good worke : Ergo,by the ſame reaſon it is a good worke to beſtow ſumptuouſly vpon Churches, which are the houſes of God, Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. Firſt,the argument doth not follow, for the bodie of Chriſt is more worth then ſtones, and the offrings of the Altar of more value, then the tiles of the Church : if extraordinarie coſte be fitte to be beſtowed vpon the one, it is not ſeemely for the other. Secondly, the widow caſt in all ſhe had, and would ye haue men alſo to beſtow all they haue vpon ſtone walles? Chriſts example is extraordinarie, and it was once done for his buriall : how then can you draw an extraordinarie Preſident to an ordinarie practiſe?

The Proteſtants.

THat the Churches of Chriſtians, and places of prayer, ought decently to be kept ; yea, and with conuenient coſt and ſeemely beautie to be built and repaired, and Church veſſels with other neceſſarie furniture, to be of the beſt, not of the worſt ſort, we doe both commend it, and practiſe it : the Ciuill law ſaith, Ornare ſepulchrum, non eſt prohibitum : It is not forbidden to adorne a ſepulcher. Cod.lib.3.tit.43.leg.7, much leſſe a Church. And we learne by the example of our Sauiour (that caſt out of the Temple ſellers of doues and money changers, and would not ſuffer them to carrie veſſels through it, Marke 11.15.16.) that the houſe of prayer ought to be reuerently regarded : but yet it followeth not, that ſuch immoderate and exceſſiue coſt ſhould be beſtowed vpon the walles of the Church and Idols, to garniſh and beautifie Idolatrie, and poore people in the meane time to want. A Matrone ought to go comely and decently apparelled, though not tricked vp with the iewels and ornaments of an harlot.

*Argum.*1. Our Sauiour Chriſt reproueth the Scribes and Phariſies, becauſe they drew the people to be good vnto the Altar, and to beſtow largely vpon them, and ſo leaue their parents helpeleſſe, Matth.15.5. And he often doth inculcate that golden ſaying, I will haue mercie and not ſacrifice : it is better to ſuccour the liuing temples of God, which are the bodies of his poore children, then to beſtow ſuperfluous coſt vpon dead temples of ſtone.

*Argum.*2. Chriſt alſo doth rebuke them, becauſe like hypocrites they did garniſh the ſepulchres of the prophets, and yet perſecuted their doctrine, Math.23.29. So all popiſh Phariſees are worthie of blame, that take greater care in garniſhing the temples and tombes of the holy Apoſtles and Martyres, then they doe in ſetting forth their holy doctrine, and preaching the Goſpell, nay they doe contemne, perſecute, and hate that doctrine, for the which thoſe holy men dyed : ſo that this prouerbe was very well deuiſed of them ; In times paſt we had golden Prieſts and wooden Cuppes, now we haue wooden Prieſts and golden Cuppes.

*Argum.*3. Chriſt in the day of iudgement ſhal condemne the wicked, for omitting the works of mercie, as Matth.25. becauſe they did not feed and cloath the poore, &c. he ſaith not, becauſe they did not beſtow gold and ſiluer vpon Churches.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the leſſe ſinners are there remembred, whereby it is gathered that the greater ſinners ſhall be much more puniſhed: Chriſt ſaith not, Go into hel fire becauſe ye oppreſſed the poore, but becauſe ye did not cheriſh them: yet if this be a ſinne, the other much more; ſo if he be damned, that gaue no almes, much more he that did not build, or repaire the Church: cap.6.in fine.

Contra. Firſt, Is it true then in popiſh diuinitie, that hee that buildeth not a Church, that is able, ſhall be damned ? if this were ſo, or men could be ſo perſwaded, wee ſhould haue Churches ynow, and too many : and I thinke many a pope Catholike man amongſt themſelues, hath not bin a builder of Churches. Againe, it is moſt abſurd to ſay or thinke, that not to repaire a Church with ſuperfluous coſt, is a greater ſinne, then not to refreſh a man readie to die : for the one is a liuing member of Chriſt, the other is but a dead ſtone : he may be aſhamed to broach ſuch ſtuffe. Thirdly, it is no ſinne at all not to beſtow princely coſt in garniſhing of a Church (for moderate and ſeemely coſt, we ſpeake not againſt) much leſſe a greater ſinne.

In Pſal.105. part.2.

Auguſtine exhorting the people to be liberall to their Biſhops and Paſtors, thus writeth further : Forte eccleſiam fabricat, forte vtile aliquid in domo Dei molitur, expectat vt attendas, expectat vt intelligas ſuper egenum. Perhaps he is in building a Church, and doing ſome profitable worke in the houſe of God, he looketh that thou ſhouldeſt attend, and conſider of his neede. By this it appeareth, that Churches were not ſuperfluous coſtly in Auguſtines time : for nothing was done, but what was thought neceſſarie and profitable: and the builders (which were then for the moſt part their Biſhops) were not of any great abilitie, to beſtow ſuperfluous coſt : nay they were not able to finiſh the neceſſarie workes, without the beneuolence and contribution of the people.

Apolog.Bernard.

Bernard in his time much complayned of the ſuperfluous coſt that was beſtowed vpon Churches : Domum Dei decet ſanctitudo, quæ non tam politis marmoribus, quam ornatis moribus delectatur: & puras magis diligit mentes, quam ſuperauratos parietes: Holineſſe becommeth Gods houſe, which is rather delighted with vnpolluted manners, then poliſhed marble ; with pure wits rather, then painted and gilded walles: ad milites templi.cap.5. Againe ſaith he: Omitto oratoriorum immenſas altitudines, immoderatas longitudines, &c. I omitte to ſpeake of the exceſſiue height of their oratories, the vnreaſonable length, the ſuperfluous breadth, the curious paintings: Quæ dum orantium in ſe retorquent aſpectum, impediunt affectum, & mihi quodammodo repræſentant antiquum ritum Iudæorum: Which while they draw vnto them the ſight or aſpect of him that prayeth, do hinder his affection, and do ſeeme to me to repreſent the old rite of the Iewes : &c. If Bernard had liued in theſe late popiſh times, I thinke, he ſhould haue been talked withall for this ſpeech : he ſaith contrarie to Bellarmine, who vntruely affirmeth, that the gorgeous ornaments of Churches do ſtirre vp deuotion, and not hinder it: whereas S. Paul alſo ſaith, We walke by faith, not by ſight. 2.Cor.5.7. Whereupon it may bee inferred, that the ſight of the eye doth hinder the faith of the heart.

Zepherinus Biſhop of Rome thought he had done enough, when he brought glaſſe veſſels into the Church for the vſe of the Sacrament, in ſtead of wooden. But when Vrbanus after him, for glaſſe veſſels gaue them ſiluer, it was then thought, that nothing could be added: but now gold vpon gold, pearles, precious ſtones, and all the coſtlines that may be, is thought too little to adorne the popiſh Maſſe: Wherein they forget the auncient decree of Euſebius Biſhop of Rome, Non in ſerico panno, aut tincto, ſed puro lineo ſacrificium altaris conſecretur. That the ſacrifice of the Altar, (for ſo ſignificantly they called the Sacrament of the Lords bodie) ſhould not be conſecrate in ſilke, or ſtained or coloured cloth, but in pure and plaine linnen.

*Cod.lib.*1.*tit.*5.*leg.*17.Iuſt. It is made lawful for the redeeming of captiues, to ſel the ornaments, veſſels and veſtments of the Church: & this reaſon is giuen, Quia non abſurdum eſt, animas hominum quibuſcunq; veſtimentis præferri: It is not abſurd to preferre the ſoules of men before veſſels & veſtments whatſoeuer: Ergo, it is a better worke to cloth the naked, then to hang a Church, &c.

Likewiſe *decret.part.*2.*cauſ.*12.*qu.*2.*cap.*70. Aurum ſacramenta non quærunt: The Sacraments need no gold. Againſt ſuperfluous ornaments there is extant the decree of Clemens 5. *Clementin. lib.*5.*tit.*11.*c.*1. Deus ad animum ſibi miniſtrantium reſpicit principalitèr, non ad manum: God chiefly reſpecteth the mind of him that miniſtreth, not his hand: neither will he be ſerued with ſuch veſſels and inſtruments, as are not agreeable to the condition of thoſe, which ſerue him, &c. Superfluitie, coſtlines, or curioſitie in Church veſſels is not ſeemely, &c. Likewiſe *extrau.com.lib.*1.*tit.*5.*c.*1.*Ioannes.*22. decreed againſt the begging Friers, Quod plures campanas, becauſe they had many belles in their Churches, that from henceforth, they ſhould haue but one: yet of all other ſuperfluous ornaments, ſome ſuperfluous coſt in a ring of bels ſeemeth to be more tolerable.

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE DEDICAtion of Churches.

The Papiſts.

58.Error. THe ſuperſtitious dedication of their Churches, with the Annual memories therof, they would warrant by the example of our Sauiour Chriſt, who was preſent at the feaſt of the dedication, which was inſtituted by Iudas Mac. Ioh.10.22. and by his preſence allowed it, Rhem.in eum loc.

Iacob alſo conſecrated the Altar with oile, before the times of the law, and called it the houſe of God: & vnder the law Moſes did conſecrate the Tabernacle, & the altar with oile. *Exo.*14.*Bell.c.*5.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. FIrſt, a thankſgiuing to God for the reſtitution of the temple after the horrible prophanation thereof, is a thing approued by Gods lawe, but it is not neceſſarie to keepe a yeerely memorie thereof: for neither was there any ſuch inſtituted by Ezechiah, after the prophanation of the Temple by Achaz and Vrias; nor by Ioſias, after the ſame had been moſt horribly polluted by Manaſſes and Amon; nor by Zorobabel, Eſdras or Nehemiah, after it was reedified, when it had been vtterly deſtroyed by the Chaldees.

Againe it is moſt abſurd, that by the example of Iacob, and Moſes, he pleadeth for the reſtitution of Iewiſh ceremonies: for S. Paul ſaith, theſe were ſhadowes of things to come, but the bodie is in Chriſt, Coloſſ.2.17. The bodie therefore being come, the ſhadow vaniſheth: hee might by the ſame reaſon as well bring in Iewiſh ſacrifices, becauſe Iacob before the Law, and Moſes vnder the law offered ſacrifices: but herein I refuſe not the triall of your owne law, *decret.part.*2.*cauſ.*12.*qu.*2.*cap.*71. Tunc hæc probabantur à Domino, &c. Then theſe things were allowed of God (ſpeaking of the ornaments of the Tabernacle) when as the Prieſts offered ſacrifice, &c. all theſe things went before in figure, &c. So may we ſay, of oyle, ſalt, oyntment, hyſſope, with other ceremonies of the Iewes: what haue we to do with them now? they were as handmaids to waite vpon the externall ſacrifices, which being aboliſhed, they alſo ſhould ceaſe.

3. Your popiſh hallowing of Churches hath nothing like vnto it, but yͤ name: for you vſe a number of fooliſh ceremonies, & many of them groſſe ſuperſtitions, in yͤ dedication of your Churches.

Firſt, there are twelue Croſſes painted round about in the Church, and twelue burning Lampes ſet ouer againſt euery one of them, one againſt one: hereby (ſay they) the twelue Apoſtles are ſignified, that by the preaching of the Croſſe gaue light to the whole world. 2. They vſe oyle in annointing their altar, & other veſſels, ſhewing hereby that they are conſecrate to holy vſes. 3. They ſprinkle water, burne incenſe, ſet vp Taper light: this ſheweth (ſaith the Ieſuite) that the place is conſecrate to prayer, & other holy actions. 4. They ſprinkle aſhes round about the Church, and write in the floore the Greeke & Latine Alphabet from one ſide of the Church to the other. This betokeneth (ſay they) the preaching of faith, which is the foundation and ground of al righteouſnes, which was firſt taught in the Greeke & Latine tongue. 5. They beat vpon the Church doore, and call vpon Saints and Angels: that is, (ſay they) to command Sathan to depart, *Bellar.cap.*5.

Firſt, they offend in the number of their fooliſh ceremonies, exceeding herein the manner of the Iewiſh dedication: ſo that vnto them it may be ſaid, as Paul to the Galatians; How turne you againe to impotent and beggerly rudiments? 4.9.

Secondly, they haue no warrant for their friuolous ſhadowes and ſignifications: Coloſſ.2.17 which are but ſhadowes of things to come, but the bodie is in Chriſt: we haue the bodie, what need any more ſhadowes? Chriſt will not now be worſhipped with Croſſes, aſhes, characters, candle light, and ſuch apiſh toyes.

Thirdly, ſome of theſe ceremonies are impious, and ſacrilegious: the inuocation of Angels and Saints, is a robbing of God of his honour, who onely is to be prayed vnto.

Epiſtol.119. Auguſtine ſaith of ſuch inuentors of newe rites and ceremonies, Ipſam religionem, quam Deus pauciſſimis ſacramentis liberam eſſe voluit, oneribus premunt: They cumber religion with burdenſome ceremonies, which the Lorde hath made free with a fewe Sacraments.

Neither hath this ceremonious rite of dedicating Churches, any ſuch ſignification as the Ieſuite ſetteth downe, to be applied to the materiall Church: but as Bernard ſaith: In nobis ſpiritualiter impleri neceſſe eſt, quæ in parietibus viſibiliter præceſſerunt, It muſt neceſſarily be in vs ſpiritually fulfilled, which viſibly is done to the walles: *de dedicat. eccleſ. ſerm.*1.

*Concil. Colonienſ. part.9. cap.*11. Docendus eſt populus dedicatione eccleſiæ ſignificari dedicationem Eccleſiæ catholicæ, ac cuiuſlibet hominis Chriſtiani, qua dedicatur Deo. The people muſt be taught, that by dedication of the Church is ſignified the dedication of the whole Catholike Church, and of euery Chriſtian man, whereby he is conſecrate to God.

THE FIFT PART, OF THINGS HALLOWED and conſecrate for Churches.

The Papiſts.

59.Error. THey maintaine their ſuperſtitious and popiſh bleſſing with the Croſſe, the hallowing of waxe, fire, palmes, aſhes, holy bread, holy water, ſalt, oyle, and ſuch like: which haue power, as they would beare vs in hand, to driue away diſeaſes and euill ſpirits, Rhemiſt. annot. 2. *Tim.*4. *ſect.*12.13. *Bellarm. lib.*3. *cap.*7.

*Argum.*1. Firſt, for the hallowing of theſe creatures to holy vſes, and making of them actually holy, they alleadge that ſaying of S. Paul, 1. Tim.4.5. Euery creature of God is good, and is ſanctified by the word of God and prayer: Ergo, theſe creatures may be ſanctified to holy vſes, as the water alſo in Baptiſme, and bread and wine in the Euchariſt: for the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not here onely of the common benediction of meates, but of a more high and exact applying of creatures to holy vſes, Rhemiſt.

Anſw. S. Paul here ſpeaketh onely of the common and ordinary vſe of Gods creatures, as of meates and drinkes for euery mans priuate vſe: and he ſheweth how they are ſanctified by the word of God, which permitteth vnto the faithfull the free vſe of them; and by prayer: not that they are vncleane by nature, but by pollution of ſin; and by this meanes are made holy and cleane. Secondly, we confeſſe alſo, that ſome things ſet apart for the ſeruice of God, are more ſpecially called holy, as the Arke, Altar, and Temple: but it is not lawfull to ſeuer what creatures we will from the common vſe, and conſecrate them to the ſeruice of God, but ſuch as are appoynted by his word; as water in Baptiſme, and bread and wine in the Lords Supper haue the warrant of Gods word, as none of your popiſh trumperie haue: neither are theſe creatures ſo conſecrate holy in themſelues, to conferre or impart their holineſſe to other things, but are ſo called in reſpect of the holy vſe, for the which out of the word of God they are appoynted.

*Argum.*2. For the efficacie and power of theſe hallowed things, they thus reaſon. The bitter water giuen to the adulterous woman cauſed her thigh to rot, if ſhe were guiltie, otherwiſe it made her fruitfull, Numb.5. Eliſæus healed the bitter water with caſting in ſalt: the Apoſtles healed the ſicke with annoynting them with oyle, Rhemiſt. Bellarm. ibid. Ergo, theſe ſanctified creatures may doe the like.

Anſw. Firſt, the bitter water of it ſelfe had not that power, but by vertue of that oth, with the which the woman was charged. Againe, it hath the warrant of the word, as yours haue not. Secondly, Eliſæus and the Apoſtles had the ſpirit to worke miracles, ſo haue not you: and they might haue done that they did without any ſuch meanes. Againe, it was common ſalt, and ordinary oyle which they vſed, not bleſſed before, after your popiſh manner.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, we hold that no ſuch things ought to be ſeparated for holy vſes, becauſe they haue not the warrant of the word of God: for all things that are ſanctified, are ſo ſanctified by the word of God and prayer, 1. Timoth.4.5. But they haue not the word of God for their warrant, neither doe they vſe any prayer of faith, but a ſuperſtitious kind of croſſing. Nadab and Abihu were conſumed with fire, becauſe they offered ſtraunge fire, not taken from the Altar: that is, they preſumed of their owne authoritie, without Gods commandement, to conſecrate a ſtrange element to Gods ſeruice, and were puniſhed, Leuit.10. Ergo, it is dangerous without Gods word, to conſecrate any ſuch things.

Interrelig. Cæſarea. in præfation. thus wee reade: Si quid in ceremonijs ſuccreuerit, ex quo ſuperſtitio cauſari poſſit, illud tollatur: If any thing haue growne by the ceremonies of the Church, which may giue occaſion of ſuperſtition, let it bee remoued. But ſuch are popiſh rites and cermonies: Ergo, &c.

See the confeſſion of the holy Martyrs: Iohn Fortune, being asked what he ſaid to the ceremonies of the Church: anſwered by the words of our Sauiour Chriſt, All things that are not planted by my heauenly father, ſhall be plucked vp, Matth.15. And againe, In vaine doe men worſhip me with mens traditions and commaundements. Chriſt openly rebuked the Scribes, Phariſees, Prieſts, for making Gods commaundement of none effect, to ſupport their owne tradition. The Biſhop of Norwitch replied; Thou lieſt, there is not ſuch a word in all the Scriptures, Fox pag.1919. So cunning were theſe popiſh Biſhops in Scripture.

Concerning the ſprinkling and waſhing with holy water, Auguſtine thus writeth of the ſame or like cuſtome of waſhing: Ne ad ipſum baptiſmi ſacramentum videretur pertinere, multi hoc in conſuetudinem recipere noluerunt: nonnulli de conſuetudine auferre non dubitarunt: Many would not receiue that cuſtome, leaſt it ſhould ſeeme to bee another baptiſme: and ſome haue not doubted cleane to take it away. Epiſtol.119. cap.18.

I will obiect againſt them a conceit of one of their Popes: Innocent.3. who decreed, that, Oleum non conſecratum, &c. Oyle not hallowed or conſecrated may be mingled with hallowed oyle, in the dedication of Churches; Decret. Greg. lib.3. tit.40. c.3. Thus wee ſee that they themſelues hold not alwaies the conſecrating of theſe toyes neceſſarie.

Secondly, though ſuch things were rightly hallowed, yet haue they no ſuch power: Chriſt ſheweth the way, whereby euill ſpirits are chaſed away; by prayer and faſting, Mark.9.29. And therefore to coniure creatures, to expell Sathan, without the word of God, is no better then a kinde of Magicke and enchantment.

Synod. Moguntin. cap.39. Paſtores ſedulò doceant, effectus, qui inde petuntur, non ipſarum rerum efficaciæ, ſed diuinæ virtutis operationi, per fortiſſimi nominis Domini inuocationem tribuendos eſſe: Let the paſtors diligently teach, that the effects (of theſe ceremonies of holie bread, holie water, &c.) are not to be aſcribed to the efficacie of the things themſelues, but to the working of the diuine power, by calling vpon the moſt powerfull name of God: Ergo, theſe hallowed things haue no ſuch power of themſelues.

Thomas Haukes holy Martyr hath put to his ſeale: who vpon theſe words, Act.19. God ſo wrought by the hands of Paul, that there went partlets and napkins from him, &c. which gaue health; inferreth, that it was God that wrought, not the ceremonies, Fox pag.1588. If theſe ceremonies wrought not of themſelues warranted by the Apoſtles, much leſſe ſuch as are inuented by men.

THE SEVENTH QVESTION, OF PILGRIMAGES and Proceſſions.

The Papiſts.

60.Error. FIrſt, they hold that pilgrimages made to Ieruſalem and the holy land, as they call it, to Rome, and to the memories of Saints in other places, to aske and obtaine their helpe, are godly and religious, and to bee much vſed of Chriſtians, *Concil. Trident. ſeſſ.25. Bellarm. cap.*8. The halt and lame went vp to Ieruſalem to be healed in the poole of Betheſda, Iohn 5. Certaine Greekes came vp to worſhip at the feaſt, Iohn 12.20. The Eunuch went vp in pilgrimage to Ieruſalem, Act.8. Ergo, it is lawfull and requiſite, *Rhemiſt. Bellar. cap.*8.

Anſ. Firſt, when you can proue that ſuch miracles are wrought at the memories of Saints, as the Scripture teſtifieth of this poole, men may be bold to goe vnto them for their bodily health, as we ſee there is reſort vnto Bathes: but not for any religion. Secondly, the Grecians, that viſited Ieruſalem, were Iewes that dwelt amongſt the Gentiles, or Proſelytes, which were bound to viſite the Temple at Ieruſalem. Thirdly, the Eunuch went not vp in pilgrimage to Ieruſalem, but to worſhip: for there was yet no other knowne place of the world, where God was worſhipped.

Secondly, their ſolemne proceſſions, eſpecially vpon Palme Sunday, with carying the Sacrament about, ſtrawing of ruſhes, bearing of Palmes, ſetting vp of boughes, hanging vp rich clothes, the Quire and Queriſters ſinging: they would warrant by that action of our Sauiour Chriſt, Mat.21.8. when he came riding to Ieruſalem, and the people ſtrawed their garments in the way, Rhemiſt. annot. Mat.21. ſect.1. 61.Error.

Anſ. Firſt, your proceſſions are horrible abuſings and prophanations of the Lords inſtitution, who ordained his Supper to bee eaten and drunke, not to bee caried about in proceſſion like an heatheniſh Idol. Secondly, that which the people and Chriſts diſciples did, they had warrant for out of the Scripture: but who required this theatricall pompe at your hands? The riding of Chriſt vpon an aſſe was before prophecied of, Zachar.9. and the childrens crying out in the temple, Pſalm.8. The cutting downe of Palme branches was a ceremonie belonging to the feaſt of Tabernacles, truly accompliſhed by our deliuerance in Chriſt. But you haue turned the holy myſterie of Chriſts riding to Ieruſalem, to a Maygame, and Pageant play.

The Proteſtants.

First, that no places ought to be frequented, or reſorted vnto for religions ſake, or more holines, or for the health of the ſoule: we proue it out of the word of God.

S. Peter ſaith, That in euery nation he that feareth God is accepted with him, Act.10.35. Ergo, one nation is as holy as another. And now our Sauiour ſaith, That God will not be worſhipped at Ieruſalem, or in Mount Garrizin, but in ſpirit, and truth, Ioh.4. He therefore that ſeeketh places to worſhip God in, as though he were rather to be found in one place then another, hath left the ſpirituall worſhip.

Auguſtine thus writeth concerning pilgrimage: He wiſheth men to ſeeke them teachers and inſtructors, by whom they might be taught: Deerat in ea terra, quam incolebas? quæ cauſa vtilius cogeret peregrinari? But is there no teacher in the Countrey where thou dwelleſt? what better cauſe canſt thou haue to trauaile, and goe in pilgrimage to ſeeke one in other countries? *De vtilit. credend.cap.*7.

Thus he would haue men to play the pilgrims, not to runne gadding to reliques and Images, but to ſeeke for teachers and inſtructors.

Againſt this ſuperſtitious vſe of pilgrimages it was thus decreed: *Conc.Cabilonenſ.ſub Carolo, can.*44.45. Sunt presbyteri, qui negligenter viuentes, in eo ſe purgari à peccatis putant, ſi præfata loca attingant, Romam ſcilicet ſeu Turonem: ſunt quidam laici qui ſe impunè peccare putant, &c. There be prieſts, who liuing diſſolutely, do thinke themſelues purged from their ſinnes, by going to Rome or Turraine: there be certaine lay men, which thinke they may ſinne without controulement, by reſorting to theſe places to pray: ſome mightie men, which vnder the pretence of going on pilgrimage do oppreſſe the poore: ſome poore men which do it, vt maiorem habeant mendicandi materiam, to begge more freely: Non attendentes quod ayt B.Hieronymus, Non Hieroſolymam vidiſſe, ſed Hieroſolymis bene vixiſſe, laudandum eſt: They marke not what Hiereme ſaith, it is not prayſe worthy to haue ſeene Ieruſalem, but to haue liued well at Ieruſalem: which ſentence of S. Hierome is approued in their decrees. *par.*2.*cauſ.*12.*c.*71. We ſee then much hurt, but litle good to come by pilgrimages.

Let vs heare the determination of one of their Popes: *Innocent.*3.*decret.Gregor.lib.*3.*tit.*34.*c.*7. gloſſ. Quia iam impletum eſt verbum Dei dicentis, &c. Becauſe now the word of Chriſt is fulfilled, ſaying, The houre ſhall come, and now is, when neither in this mountaine, nor at Ieruſalem, yee ſhall worſhip the father, &c. Videri poterat, quod non minus in eccleſia tua, quam Orientali terra proficeres pijs orationibus: It might ſeeme, that you might as much profite by your praiers in your owne Church at home, as in the Eaſt Countrie: meaning, that which they call the holy land. Here wee haue the determination of a Pope againſt the neceſſitie of pilgrimages, and that warranted by Scripture.

See the confeſſion of holy Martyrs: William Sweeting perſecuted to death, for ſaying to his wife, that it were better for her to keepe at home, and attend vpon her buſineſſe, then to go on pilgrimage, Fox pag.818. Iſabel Morwin, for ſaying, ſhe would go no more on pilgrimage while ſhe liued, for all Saints (ſaid ſhe) are in heauen, pag.827.col.2. Thomas Geffrey perſecuted for ſaying, That true pilgrimage was barefoot to go and viſit the poore, weake, and ſicke; for they are the true Images of God, pag.827.col.1. Miſtreſſe Cotiſmore, for ſpeaking theſe words, That if ſhe went to her chamber and prayed there, ſhee ſhould haue as much merite, as though ſhee went to Walſingham in pilgrimage: and that folkes go on pilgrimage more for the greene way, then any deuotion, pag.835.col.2.

Secondly, as touching the popiſh pompous proceſſions, they are both ſuperſtitious, in reuiuing and renewing the Iewiſh ceremonies, ſuch as the feaſt of Tabernacles was, which are all now aboliſhed as ſhadowes by the comming of Chriſt: and they are plainely idolatrous, for they carrie about their breaden god in proceſſion, and make an Idoll of a peece of baked wheat: but Paul ſaith, The Sacrament ought to be receiued with thankſgiuing in the Churches and congregations of Chriſtians, 1.Cor.11.33. not to be caried about to be gazed vpon in the fields. Seemly proceſſions, void of ſuperſtition, which are vſed for ciuill purpoſes, as to maintaine the limits and bounds of townſhips, and withall by the ſight of Gods bleſſing vpon the creatures to be ſtirred vp to thankfulnes, we neither miſlike nor condemne.

*Conc.Colon.part.*9.*cap.*8. Vt proceſſiones per agros & campos amplius non peragantur, &c. That proceſſions ſhould be no longer made through the fields, becauſe that by occaſion of ſuch walking, which was inſtituted for the appeaſing of God, many ſinnes are committed: Wherefore it ſeemeth better to vs, that theſe and ſuch like ſupplications from henceforth ſhould be made within the compaſſe of the Church. Popiſh proceſſions, as we ſee, are heere by a popiſh Councell abridged. This alſo hath been the iudgment of the holy Martyrs: Thomas Spicer, Iohn Deny put to death, for refuſing to follow the Croſſe in proceſſion, p.1912.col.2.artic.6.Ralfe Allerton for refuſing to carry the Croſſe in proceſſion.p.2018.col.1.

AN APPENDIX CONCERNING THE HOLY Land, and holy warres for the ſame, as they were called.

The Papiſts.

THey which are but a little acquainted with ancient ſtories, ſhall find, that there were neuer in 62.Error. Chriſtendome ſuch bloudy warres, and for ſo long a time, as thoſe, which were at the inſtigation of the Popes, taken in hand by chriſtian Princes for the recouery of the holy land; in ſo much that they were made to beleeue, that it was a meritorious worke: Whereupon King Richard the firſt, calling to minde his rebellion and diſobedience to his father, in part of ſatiſfaction, purpoſed a voyage into the Holy land, as it was called, to redeeme Chriſts patrimonie from the Infidels, Fox.pag.235.Bellarm.de laicis.lib.3.cap.16. For why? they ſay, it is an Holy land: for if the places of Gods apparition are counted holy, Exod.3.5.Ioſ.5,15.much more the places of Chriſts natiuitie, buriall, paſſion, and reſurrection. Saint Peter calleth the place where Chriſt was transfi- 2.Pet.1.18. gured, The holy mount, Rhemiſt.1.Tim.4.ſect.10.

Anſw. The places where God appeared in times paſt, were holy for that time onely of Gods preſence, not for euer after: and the mount is called holy in reſpect of the time, wherein the transfiguration was, not that the holineſſe of the place doth alwayes continue: for that place which Iacob called Bethel, the houſe of God, Geneſ.28. is by the Prophet called Bethauen, the houſe of wickedneſſe, Oſe.4.15. becauſe of the idolatries there committed: What was now become of the holineſſe of the place? So the mount of Oliues, which for the fruitfulneſſe thereof was called Mons Miſchcha, the mount of oyle; was afterward termed Mons Maſchchith: the mountaine of corruption, becauſe of the idolatrie there committed, 2.Reg.23.13.

This alſo is Origens iudgement of the holineſſe of places, Nec ipſa Ierico locus erat ſanctus, &c. Hom.6.in Ioſ. Neither was Ierico an holy place, but becauſe the Prince of Gods warfare was there, it was called holy: The place alſo where Moſes ſtood, was not holy of it ſelfe, but becauſe the Lord ſtood with Moſes, Præſentia Domini ſanctificauerat locum: The preſence of the Lord did ſanctifie the place. If then the holy preſence made thoſe places holie, they were no longer holy, then they had that preſence.

Nicen.2. action.4. ex Leontio: Sion tanquam illius ciuitatem, &c. We reuerence Sion, as his citie: Nazareth, as his countrie: Iordane, as his lauer: not worſhipping the region it ſelfe, or the ſtones, but him that there appeared, and was conuerſant, euen Chriſt our Lord. The land therefore is not holy in it ſelfe, but it was holy becauſe of Chriſt, while hee was conuerſant there.

The Proteſtants.

TO warre againſt the Turkes vpon iuſt cauſe, as to ſeeke to defend our ſelues from their inuaſions, and to maintaine the confines and bounds of Chriſtendome, to deliuer Chriſtians vniuſtly and cruelly kept in ſlauerie vnder him, we hold it lawfull: but to wage battaile with him, onely for a ſuperſtitious deuotion to the land of Paleſtina, to recouer it out of his hand, we ſee no warrant at all for it.

*Argum.*1. The euill ſucceſſe that Chriſtians haue had againſt them, and the ſhamefull ouerthrowes that they haue ſuſtained at their hands, doe euidently ſhewe, that God was not pleaſed with thoſe ſuperſtitious warres. While Princes had a good quarrell, ſeeking onely to maintaine their owne, and to deliuer Chriſtian countries from the thraldome of the Turkes, God proſpered them, as the famous victories of Scanderbeius, and Iohannes Hunniades obtayned againſt Amurathes the 8. Turkiſh Emperour, doe notably teſtifie: but thoſe ſuperſtitious and pope-holy warres, though ſometimes they had good ſucceſſe, yet in the end al went to wracke. And as their cauſe was not good, ſo neither were the meanes that they vſed: for they brought S.George, and S.Denys into the field againſt the Turkes, and left Chriſt at home. If the Iſraelites could not be deliuered from the Philiſtims by the preſence of the Arke, but thirtie thouſand fell before them, and all becauſe of their ſinnes: let not men thinke that popiſh Saints can defend them, while their liues remaine vnreformed at home.

*Argum.*2. That the heathen are not to be prouoked to warre, but vpon iuſt cauſe, that is, when they prouoke vs; it appeareth by the example of the Iſraelites, who as they came from Ægypt, ſent vnto the King of Edom and Moab, that they might haue leaue to walke through their land:

but they not graunting ſo much, yet the people of God offered them no violence, but went a longer iourney about, Iudg.11.17.

De Ciuitat. Dei lib.19. cap.7. Auguſtine ſaith, Sapiens geſturus eſt iuſta bella : ſed multo magis dolebit iuſtorum neceſſitatem extitiſſe bellorum : A wiſe man will take iuſt warre in hand : but it more grieueth him that he hath iuſt cauſe to warre. And what he meaneth by iuſt warre, he further ſheweth : Iniquitas partis aduerſæ iuſta bella ingerit gerenda ſapienti. The iniquitie or iniuries of the aduerſe part, doth giue vnto a wiſe man occaſion of iuſt warre. Iuſt warre therefore ariſeth, when men are prouoked by iniuries.

In the Ciuill law, the citie of Rome is called ſacra Vrbs, the holy citie, and that vnder the heathen Emperors : Cod.lib.4.tit.33.leg.2. Diocletian. Wherefore this title is not onely proper to Ieruſalem.

Looke your owne decrees, part.1.diſtinct.40.c.9. there you ſhall finde, that Gratia, non locus, ſaluat animam : Grace, and not the place, doth ſaue the ſoule : Extra Paradiſnm factus, &c. Man made without Paradiſe in an inferior place, was found better : and the woman made in Paradiſe in a better place, was found worſe. Wherefore it is in vaine ſo much to contend for the holineſſe of the place.

Lateranenſ. ſub Iulio.2.ex oration. Ægidy Viterbienſ. epiſcopi: Freta initio ſuis armis eccleſia Africam capit, Europam obtinuit, &c. The Church in the beginning vſing her owne weapons, obtayned Africa, Europa, Aſia, not by violence, or by ſword, but by religious actes : But ſince the ſpouſe hath changed the golden robe of the ſpirit, for the Iron weapons of madde Aiax, ſhee hath loſt Aſia, Ieruſalem, Africa, Egypt. Thus he ſpake in the hearing of the Pope, inſinuating thus much, that rather by religious acts the Turke might be wonne, then by forceable warre ſubdued.

THE EIGHT QVESTION, CONCERNING holy and feſtiuall dayes.

THis queſtion hath diuers parts. Firſt, of holy dayes in generall. Secondly, of the Lordes day. Thirdly, of the feſtiuall dayes of Chriſt and the holy Ghoſt. Fourthly, of Saints holy dayes.

THE FIRST PART, OF HOLY dayes in generall.

The Papiſts.

63.Error. FIrſt, they hold that holy and feſtiuall dayes, are in themſelues, and properly and truely, more ſacred and holy, then other dayes are, Bellarm.cap.10.propoſit.2. Apocal.1.10. I was in the ſpirit (ſaith the Apoſtle) on the Lords day : God reuealeth ſuch great things to Prophets rather vpon holy dayes, then prophane dayes : Ergo, ſome dayes holyer then other, Rhemiſt. Apocal.1. ſect.6.

Anſw. God giueth not his graces in reſpect of times, but according to his owne pleaſure. Times of prayer he chuſeth often, and of other godly exerciſes, not for the worthines or holines of the times, but for the better diſpoſition of his ſeruants in ſuch exerciſes, to receiue them: yet this was not perpetually obſerued; for God appeared to Moſes keeping of ſheepe, Exod.3. to Amos following his heard, Amos 7.

Argum.2. If holy dayes were not in themſelues holier then other dayes, then it would follow, that all feſtiuall dayes ſhould be of the like holineſſe, not one more holy then another: but ſo are they not, for the Lords day is the chiefe of all the reſt : Ergo. Bellarm.lib.3.cap.10.

Anſ. Firſt, we grant, that as feſtiuall dayes in themſelues are not holier then other dayes, but in reſpect of the vſe, ſo neyther are they in the nature of the day more holy one then another; yet in reſpect of the inſtitution one feſtiuall may be preferred before another : as the Lords day is more holy, becauſe it was inſtituted of God, the other feſtiuals of the Church ; and in reſpect of the religious vſe and obſeruation thereof, being more ſtrictly to be kept, then any other feſtiuall whatſoeuer ; but not in the nature of the day is it more excellent, for then it could not haue bin changed : wherefore firſt the argument followeth not, as I haue ſhewed.

Secondly, I am glad, that he giueth the Lords day the preeminence ; yet their popiſh practiſe is contrarie : for whereas they diuide their feaſts, into duplex feſtum, & ſimplex : double feaſtes, and ſingle feaſts : they make 4. kinds of duplex feſtum, principall double, more double, leſſe double, inferior double ; yet the Lords dayes are none of this number, as may be ſeene in the Calendar of their Maſſe booke according to the vſe of Sarum.

Argum.3. Chriſt in his Birth conſecrated the manger, where he lay ; in his death the Croſſe whereon he ſuffered; riſing againe the Sepulcher, where he was buried: why ſhould not the daies as well of his birth, paſſion, reſurrection, be conſecrated, and before other dayes preferred? Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, we denie not, but that theſe Feſtiuals of our Sauiour are to be preferred before other dayes, but not as in their nature more holy, but in reſpect of the vſe, and commemoration of the holy actes of Chriſt. Secondly, the places of Chriſts birth, paſſion, reſurrection, were holy, not by any inherent or naturall holineſſe, but in reſpect onely, and during the preſence of Chriſt: ſo are the Feſtiuals of Chriſt holy in regard of the commemoration of the holy actions of Chriſt, and not otherwiſe: Wherefore Bellarmine hath gained nothing by theſe reaſons.

The Proteſtants.

WE graunt that the Lords day being commaunded of God, and ſo diſcerned from other daies, may be ſaid to be holier then the reſt, in reſpect of the preſent vſe, but not in the nature of the day: for then could it not haue been chaunged from the laſt day in the weeke to the firſt: as water in Baptiſme is holier then other waters, becauſe of the ſacred vſe, not in it ſelfe, as by a qualitie of holines inherent. And as for other feſtiuall daies, which haue not the like inſtitution, they are appointed onely of the Church, for Chriſtian policie and orders ſake, for the exerciſe of religion: but this now Popiſh, and before time Iewiſh diſtinction of daies, as being by their nature holier then other, is flatly againſt the Apoſtles rule, Rom.14.5. One putteth difference betweene day and day.

Anſ. Bellarmine anſwereth firſt, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of thoſe, whereof ſome thought good to faſt euery day, ſome onely certaine daies, and both of them did well: and this is the iudging betweene day and day, whereof the Apoſtle ſpeaketh.

Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtle maketh no mention at all of faſting, but of eating: wherefore this diſcerning of daies was not in any ſuch reſpect of faſting, or not faſting. Secondly, verſ.6. the Apoſtle maketh the obſeruing, and not obſeruing of daies, and eating or not eating, to be two ſeuerall things, and he bringeth them in as diuers inſtances: wherefore it is not agreeable to the Apoſtles meaning to confound them into one, as Bellarmine doth. Thirdly, the Apoſtle, ſaying, He that obſerueth, or obſerueth not the day; obſerueth, and obſerueth not vnto the Lord, verſ.6. approueth not the obſeruation of daies: But firſt we muſt conſider the times, when as yet ſome ceremonies of the Iewes remained, which the Apoſtles did for ſome while beare with, for feare to offend the weake. Secondly, the perſons muſt be reſpected, of whom the Apoſtle treateth, not ſuch as obſtinately maintained Iewiſh rites, but the weake in faith, verſ.1. that did all of conſcience, whom the Apoſtle would haue gently and charitably dealt with, and not rigorouſly to bee condemned: as verſ.15. Deſtroy not by thy meate, for whom Chriſt died: But what is this to theſe times, when as all Iewiſh ceremonies ought long agoe to be buried? or to the perſons of our aduerſaries, who not of weaknes and conſcience, but profeſſedly and purpoſely maintaine the difference of daies? Thirdly, the Apoſtle ſaying, he obſerueth to the Lord, &c. he ſaith none other thing, then before verſ.4. why iudgeſt thou another mans ſeruant? he ſtandeth or falleth to his owne maſter: he obſerueth, or not obſerueth to the Lord, that is, he is left to Gods iudgement.

*Argum.*2. Saint Paul ſaith, You obſerue daies and moneths, times, and yeeres, I am afraid of you, leaſt I haue beſtowed on you labour in vaine, Galath.4.10.11. And againe, Coloſſ.2.16. Let no man condemne you in reſpect of an holy day, or of the new moone, or of the Sabboth, which are but a ſhadow of things to come, but the bodie is in Chriſt. From hence we reaſon thus, out of the firſt place, That which hindreth, and deſtroyeth the faith of the Goſpell, is to bee auoided; but the obſeruation of daies cauſeth the Apoſtles labour to be in vaine, and ſo deſtroyeth the preaching of the Goſpell: Ergo. Againe, all figures ought to ceaſe, the bodie being come; obſeruation of daies was in figure, Chriſt is the bodie. Ergo.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the Iewiſh obſeruation of daies, and not of the feſtiuals of Chriſtians: for S.Paul himſelfe obſeruing the feaſts of Chriſtians, as of Pentecoſt, Act.20. did make difference of daies.

Contra. Firſt, the feaſt of Pentecoſt, which Paul obſerued at Ieruſalem, was a feaſt of the Iewes: for as yet the Iewiſh feſtiuals were not aboliſhed, as it may appeare. 1. By the name, it being called the feaſt of Pentecoſt, that is the feaſt of fiftie daies, or the feaſt of weekes: which was a feaſt appointed in the law. 2. Becauſe it is kept at Ieruſalem, whereas it was not neceſſarie to keepe the Chriſtian feſtiuals there. 3. Saint Paul comming to Ieruſalem, did other things according to the law, as he purified himſelfe, Act.21.24. 4. The feſtiuals of Chriſtians were not yet eſtabliſhed. Secondly, though wee graunt it was a feaſt of the Chriſtians, yet the Apoſtle made no ſuch difference of daies, but onely for the holy vſe. Thirdly, theſe places ſerue as well againſt popiſh, as Iewiſh obſeruation of daies, for there is no difference.

Bellarmine would ſeeme to make a treble difference, betweene the Iewiſh feſtiuals and theirs. Firſt, the Iewiſh feſtiuals after Chriſt haue a falſe ſignification, but ours haue a true.

Contra. Firſt, the Iewiſh Sabboth hath a true ſignification yet in remembring the creation of the world. Secondly, ſome of yours haue a falſe ſignification, as the feaſt of the aſſumption of Mary, which is a fable.

Secondly, the chiefe end of their Sabboth, was to ſignifie things to come; but the end of ours is to acknowledge Gods benefits.

Contra. 1. So alſo the Sabboth now is a ſymbole of our euerlaſting reſt, Hebr.4. as theirs was a type of our reſt in Chriſt. 2. The Iewes alſo vpon the Sabboth remembred Gods benefits, as of the creation, Exod.31.17.

Thirdly, the chiefe part of their feſtiual, was to abſtaine from bodily labour: but the chiefe part of ours is to be occupied in diuine ſeruice. Bellarm.ibid.

Contra. Firſt, their Sabboth conſiſted not onely in bodily reſt, but ſpirituall duties alſo, as in not doing their owne will, nor ſpeaking a vaine word, Iſay.58.13. Secondly, your Sabboth hath no ſpirituall duties, but a ſuperſtitious and idolatrous ſeruice, in worſhipping of Idols, inuocation of Saints, and ſuch like: So then in the obſeruation of daies there is no difference betweene the Iewes and Papiſts.

Auguſtine ſaith; Nos dominicum diem & paſcha celebramus, ſed quia intelligimus, quò pertineant, non tempora obſeruamus, ſed quæ illis ſignificantur temporibus, Cont. Adimant.cap.16. We keepe the Lords day and the feaſt of Eaſter, not obſeruing the times, but remembring what is ſignified by thoſe times: that is, for what cauſe they were ordained: Ergo, obſeruers of times are reproued.

Leonis Epiſtol.4.cap.4. Notum ſit dilectioni veſtræ vniuerſos dies Chriſti, &c. Be it knowne to your brotherhood, that all the daies of Chriſt are conſecrate with innumerable vertues: yet if wee ſhould indifferently honour the memorie of all his acts, all daies ſhould bee holy, becauſe euery one of them is full of his miracles. Hence I gather, that daies in themſelues are not one holier then another, in as much as they all and euery of them were beautified and adorned with ſome miracle of Chriſt.

The ſcrupulous obſeruation of daies is forbidden by the Imperiall law of Theodoſ.Cod.lib.6. tit.30.leg.17. and by the Canon law, part.2.cauſ.26.qu.7.c.17. Ad animæ periculum pertinent ſuperſtitioſæ temporum obſeruationes: Superſtitious obſeruation of daies bringeth daunger to the ſoule, as the Apoſtle ſaith, I feare I haue laboured in vaine amongſt you.

The Papiſts.

64. Error. 2. THey affirme the keeping and ſanctification of holy daies to bee neceſſarie, Rhemiſt.annot. Galath.4.ſect.5. and that we are bound in conſcience to keep the holy daies appointed of the Church, although no offence or ſcandale might follow and enſue vpon the neglecting of thẽ.

Eſther 9. Mardocheus and Eſther appoint a new feſtiuall day, not inſtituted of God, and binde euery one to the obſeruing thereof, that none ſhould faile to obſerue it, verſ.27. Ergo, men bound in conſcience to keepe feſtiuall daies. Bellarm.cap.10.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt, though we refuſe not ſome other feſtiuall daies, yet we acknowledge none neceſſarie, more then are of the holie Ghoſts appointing in the Scripture. Secondly, wee denie that the conſtitutions of the Church for holy daies doe binde Chriſtians, in reſpect of the daies themſelues, in conſcience to keepe them, otherwiſe then they may giue offence by their contempt and diſobedience to the holeſome decrees of the Church: for it ſelfe in it owne nature is indifferent; neither can the Church make a thing neceſſarie in nature, which God hath left indifferent: nothing bindeth abſolutely in conſcience, but that which is neceſſarie by nature: wherefore keeping of holy daies, being not inioyned but left indifferent in the word, bindeth no otherwiſe then wee haue ſaid. Thirdly, the example of Eſther ſheweth that the Church hath authoritie to appoint for ciuill vſes, daies of reioycing: that feſtiuall day then begun did not binde the obſeruers in conſcience, no otherwiſe then they were bound in all lawfull things to obey their gouernours, for their conſent was required, and they promiſed both for themſelues and their ſeede to keepe that day, Eſth.9.27. Whereby it appeareth that they were not bound abſolutely in conſcience to obſerue it.

Argum. If Chriſtians were bound in conſcience to keepe all holy daies which are enioyned them in the popiſh Church, their burden ſhould be greater then the Iewes was (ſeeing they haue a great number of holy daies more) yet the Iewes yoke was ſuch, as neither they, nor their forefathers were able to beare. Act.15.10.

Bellar. anſwereth: firſt, that the yoke of the Iewes is heauier, in reſpect of the hard obſeruances, as that it was not lawfull to ſeeth meate, to kindle a fire on the Lords day, thrice a yeere they went vp to Ieruſalem, they were enioyned to eate vnſauourie and vnleauened bread: it was not heauie in reſpect of the multitude of their feaſts, but of other ceremonious rites, cap.10.

Contra. Firſt, the popiſh yoke euen in reſpect of their hard iniunctions is more intolerable then the Iewes was: your pilgrimages to Rome, to Ieruſalem, to other remote places, are more then their going vp to Ieruſalem: your preſcription to faſt bread and water is harder, then to eate vnleauened leauened bread, and yet you vſe that to: not to eate an egge in Lent is more, then not to dreſſe meate vpon the Lords. Secondly, the heauines of the Iewiſh yoke did much ſtand in the multitude of their feaſts, as Iſay.1.14. if they were a burden to the Lord, much more vnto men: and therefore the popiſh yoke inioyning the keeping of many more holie daies, is much more grieuous.

Auguſtine ſpeaking of the Sabboth, ſaith thus: Hæc eſt dies quam fecit Dominus, exultemus & lætemur in ea: This is the day which the Lord hath made, let vs reioyce and bee glad therein, Pſal. 118.24. This onely holy day, he ſaith, is of the Lords making, and therefore of all other neceſſary to be kept. De tempor. Serm.36.

Synod. Moguntin.cap 61. Sanctorum celebritates in diem dominicum incidentes, cenſemus ſubmouendas, &c. We think it meete, that holy daies falling within the Lords day ſhould be remoued, and tranſlated to the day before, or after, that the ſolemnitie of them all may bee reſerued and referred to their Lord, &c. The Lords day we ſee, is preferred before the reſt, as being of neceſſitie onely to be kept, and the reſt to giue place to it.

This truth alſo hath been ſealed: Ioane Iohn, the wife of Lewis Iohn, perſecuted for ſaying, That God commanded no holy daies to be kept but the Sabboth day, Fox pag.803.col.2.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE Lords day.

The Papiſts.

CONcerning the Lords day, our aduerſaries doe graunt: firſt, that it is the moſt ancient of all Chriſtian feſtiuals, *Bellar.cap.*11. Secondly, that it was inſtituted by the Apoſtles, ibid. Thirdly, that it ſucceeded in ſtead of the Iewiſh Sabboth, ibid. Fourthly, that it is the moſt excellent, and to be preferred before all other holy daies, *Bellarm.cap.*10. Theſe points are on both ſides condeſcended vnto, and whatſoeuer elſe is affirmed agreeable to Scripture.

The ſeuerall points wherein our aduerſaries and wee doe differ about the Chriſtian Sabboth, are theſe:

First, the principall exerciſe of the Sabboth, ſay they, is for the people to come to the Church and heare Maſſe, which their abominable and idolatrous ſacrifice they make the proper worke of the Sabboth, *Catechiſm. Roman.pag.*649. 65. Error.

The Proteſtants.

THe Sabboth was ordained for the people to aſſemble together to heare the word read, Act.15 verſ.21. and preached; and to receiue the Sacraments, Act.20.7. and to offer vp their praiers: theſe were the proper exerciſes of the Sabboth: as for the popiſh ſacrifice of the Maſſe, wee finde no mention at all thereof in Scripture.

*Concil. Moguntiac.can.*34. Nunquam deſit diebus dominicis, aut feſtiuitatibus qui verbum Dei prædicet: Let there bee neuer wanting, vpon the Lords daies and other feſtiuities, one that ſhould preach the word of God.

Colonienſ.part.9.cap.9. Dies dominicus à temporibus Apoſtolorum celebris, vt in vnum omnes pariter conuenirent, ad audiendum verbum domini, ad audiendum quoque ſacrum & communicandum, &c. The Lords day hath been obſerued ſince the Apoſtles time, that all might meete together to heare Gods word, to heare alſo and receiue the Sacraments. Theſe then are the principall exerciſes of the Lords day. And yet more euidently it was thus decreed, *Synod. Auguſtenſ.cap.*18 Euangelia & epiſtolæ diebus dominicis lingua Germanica exponantur, eoque tempore nulla miſſa, ne populum ab auſcultatione diſtrahi contingat, celebretur: Let the Goſpels and the Epiſtles bee expounded vpon the Lords daies in the Germane tongue, and at that inſtant let no Maſſe bee celebrated, leaſt the people be drawne away from hearing. From hence wee reaſon thus: That whereunto other exerciſes giue place, is the chiefe exerciſe of the Lords day; but other giue place, as the ſaying of Maſſe, to preaching and expounding of Scripture: Ergo, &c.

The Papiſts.

2. WE diſſent about the reſt of the Sabboth: they allow ſuch workes to bee done vpon the Sabboth, as ſhall be permitted by the Prelates and Ordinaries, and ſuch as by long cuſtome haue been vſed, *Bellarm.cap.*10. 66. Error.

The Proteſtants.

WE hold, that as the Lords day was inſtituted of God, ſo the manner of celebrating and keeping it holy, is to bee learned out of the word, and neither cuſtome nor authoritie ought to giue libertie for ſuch workes vpon the Lords day, as are not warranted by the word.

Firſt, we graunt that we are not ſo neceſſarily tyed to the reſt of the Sabboth as the Iewes were: for thoſe things are aboliſhed which appertained to the Iewiſh Sabboth: Firſt, the preſcript of the day. Secondly, the ceremonious exerciſes of the Sabboth in the ſacrifices and other rites of the Law. Thirdly, the typicall ſhadowes and ſignifications of their Sabboth, as firſt it betokened their reſt in Canaan; then the reſt and peace of the Church by Chriſt, Hebr. 4. 3. 5. Fourthly, the ſtrickt and preciſe reſt, wherein Chriſtians haue more libertie then the Iewes had: and againe, they obſerued their reſt, as being properly and ſimply, and in it ſelfe a Sabboth dayes duety; but we doe conſider it, as being referred to a more principall end: as making of vs more fit for ſpirituall exerciſes.

Secondly, we allow theſe workes to be done: Firſt, opera religioſa or pietatis, the religious workes, and conferring to pietie: as the Prieſts did ſlay the ſacrifices vpon the Sabboth, and yet brake not the reſt of the Sabboth, Matth. 12. 5. ſo the people may walke to their pariſh Church, though ſomewhat farre off: the Paſtor and Miniſter may goe forth to preach; yea, and preaching is of it ſelfe a labour of the body, to ſtudy alſo and meditate of his ſermon, to ring the bels to call the people to the Church: all theſe are lawfull, as being helpes for the exerciſes of religion. Secondly, opera charitatis, the workes of mercie are permitted, as to viſite the ſicke, the Phiſition to reſort to his patient; yea, to ſhew compaſſion to brute beaſts, as to helpe the ſheepe out of a pitte, Matth. 12. 11. Thirdly, opera neceſſitatis, the workes of neceſſitie, as the dreſſing of meate and ſuch like, Matth. 12. 1. 3. Our Sauiour excuſeth his Apoſtles for plucking the eares of Corne, when they were hungry. As for opera voluntaria, workes of pleaſure and recreation, we haue no other permiſſion to vſe them, then as they ſhall be no lets or impediments vnto ſpirituall exerciſes, as the hearing of the worde, and meditating therein, and ſuch other: Otherwiſe they are not to be vſed.

Auguſtine ſaith, ſpeaking of the Iewes, who did greatly prophane their Sabboth, in ſporting and daliance: Melius toto die foderent, quàm toto die ſaltarent; It were better for them to digge all day, then to daunce all day: euen ſo verily it were better for many poore ignorant people, that vpon the Sabboth giue themſelues to drinking, and quaffing, and gaming, if they ſhould goe to plough or cart all the day. But as for other ſeruile workes, as to keepe Faires and Markets vpon the Lords day, to trauell themſelues, their ſeruants, and beaſts vpon the Sabboth, it is flat contrary to the commandement of God, and the practiſe of the Church, Nehem. 13. 16. where there is no extreame and vrgent neceſſitie: ſo that it is not to be doubted, but that as the keeping of the Lords day is a morall commandement; ſo alſo the manner of the obſeruing thereof in ſanctifying it, and reſting therein, is morall: the ceremonies of the reſt being aboliſhed, that is, the Iewiſh ſtricktnes thereof, and the opinion which they had of their reſt, as being ſimply a part of the ſanctifying of the Sabboth. But we do conſider it, as referred vnto more principall duties, and obſerue it, not as of it ſelfe pleaſing God, but as making vs more fit for ſpirituall exerciſes. Contrary to theſe rules, we acknowledge neither power in ordinaries, nor priuiledge in cuſtome, to diſpence with the Sanctification of the Sabboth.

In Pſal. 32. part. 1.

Decret. part. 1. diſtinct. 86. cap. 24. Gregor. writeth ſharpely to one Ianuarius an old Biſhop, becauſe he preſumed vpon the Lords day, exarare alterius meſſem, to enter vpon anothers harueſt, to ſpoyle it: By this we may ſee what great diſcretion popiſh Ordinaries haue, in preſcribing Sabboth day workes.

Concerning ſuch ſanctification of the Sabboth as we ſpeake of, which conſiſteth partly in abſtaining from all corporall labors, and worldly affaires, partly and chiefly in giuing our ſelues to ſpirituall exerciſes, we haue the full conſent of antiquitie.

Concerning the firſt: Concil. Aurel. 3. can. 27. Die dominico cum caballis, bobus, vehiculis itinerari non debere: That none ought to trauell with horſe, oxen, carts vpon the Lords day. Cabilonenſ. can. 18. Ruralia opera nemo facere præſumat: Let no man vpon this day preſume to do any country work, as to ſow, to reape, to plough. Matiſconenſ. 2. can. 1. Nullus cauſarum actiones exerceat: That no man ſhould goe to law. Colonienſ. part. 9. cap. 10. Markets and Faires are forbidden to be kept. Moguntin. cap. 61. Tripudia, ſaltationes, profana ſpectacula non permittenda: Dauncing, and leaping, and all prophane playes and ſights muſt be forbidden.

As touching the affirmatiue part of this ſanctification, in ſequeſtring our ſelues to ſpirituall exerciſes, thus alſo it hath been decreed: Trullam. can. 19. Vt omnibus diebus ſed præcipuè dominicis populum doceant pietatis eloquia: That vpon all dayes, but chiefly on the Lords dayes the paſtors inſtruct the people: preaching of the word is one chiefe worke of the Lords day: the receiuing of the Sacraments is another, Colonienſ. part. 9. cap. 9. Populus conueniat ad communicandum: the people muſt come together to communicate. Prayer is another Sabboth worke: Matiſconenſ. 2. cap. 1. Die dominico quiſque ſeipſum precibus & lachrimis afficiat: Vpon the Lords day let euery man giue himſelfe to prayer and teares. Giuing of thankes and prayſing of God is proper alſo for the Lords day: Synod. Colonienſ. part. 9. cap. 9. Dies illa tantum orationibus, hymnis, Pſalmis tranſigatur: Let that day onely be ſpent in prayer, Hymnes and Pſalmes, and ſpirituall ſongs. Aurelianenſ. 2. can. 20. Vincti in carceribus, &c. Let the Biſhops viſite thoſe on the Lords dayes that are bound in priſon. Conſtantin. 6. cap. 8. tantummodo vacandum eſt orationi, & celebrationi eleemoſynarum: Vpon this day, they muſt giue themſelues only to prayer, and celebrating of almes. Here be other exerciſes of the Lords day. And thus, as we ſee, the auncient Canons doe teſtifie with vs for the ſanctification of the Lords day.

To theſe Canons agree the imperiall lawes : which bid, Omnium Iudicum & artium officia ceſſare, &c. Both the offices of Iudges, and artificers ſhops to ceaſe and be ſhut vp vpon the Lordes day, *Cod.lib.3.tit.12.leg.3.Theod.*and that no playes or enterludes ſhould be kept vpon that day, or any ſuch games, ibid.leg.10.Leo,et Anthem. Yet workes of neceſſitie are excepted, as in time of haruest and ſeede time,*leg.3.*and cauſæ piſtoriæ,Bakers cauſes,as touching the making of bread, are excepted, leg.5.Valentin. Likewiſe workes of charitie, as in according and reconciling men, are tolerated, leg.10. as alſo manumitting and ſetting bond-men at libertie, leg.8.Valentin. Thirdly, workes of pietie are excepted, as doing of Iuſtice in executing of malefactors and offenders, leg.9.Honor.Theodoſ.

The Papiſts.

THey affirme that the Apoſtles altered the Sabboth day, from the ſeuenth day to the eight, 67.Error. counting from the creation ; and they did it without Scripture, or any commandement of Chriſt : ſuch power (ſay they) hath God left to his Church.This then they hold,that the Sabboth was changed by the ordinarie power and authoritie of the Church,not by any eſpeciall direction from Chriſt : thereupon it followeth, that the Church, which (they ſay) cannot erre, may alſo change the Sabboth to any other day in the weeke,Rhemiſt.Apoc.1.ſect.6.

The Proteſtants.

1. THe Apoſtles did not abrogate the Iewiſh Sabboth, but Chriſt himſelfe by his death, as he did alſo other ceremonies of the Lawe: and this the Apoſtles knew both by the Scriptures, the word of Chriſt and his holy ſpirite.

2 They did not appoint a new Sabboth of their owne authoritie : for firſt they knew by the Scripture,that one day of ſeuen was to be obſerued for euer, for the ſeruice of God and exerciſe of religion,although the preſcript day according to the Law were abrogate : for the Lord before the morall law was written,euen immediately after the creation,ſanctified the ſeuenth day,ſhewing thereby,that one of the ſeuen muſt be obſerued ſo long as the world endured. Secondly,they knew there was the ſame reaſon of ſanctifying the day of Chriſts reſurrection,and the reſtitution of the world thereby,as of ſanctifying the day of the Lords reſt, after the creation of the world. Thirdly,they did it by the direction of the Spirite of God,whereby they were ſo directed and gouerned,that although they were fraile men by nature, and ſubiect to error : yet they could not decline in their writings and ordinances of the Church, from the truth, which aſſurance of Gods ſpirit in the like meaſure the Church hath not now ; but ſo farre forth is promiſed to be led into all truth, as ſhe followeth the rule of truth expreſſed in the Scriptures. Wherefore the Church hath no authoritie to change the Lords day,and to keepe it vpon Monday or Tueſday,or any other day ; ſeeing it is not a matter of indifferencie, but a neceſſary preſcription of Chriſt himſelfe, deliuered by the Apoſtles : for the Lords day began in the Apoſtles time, and no doubt by their Apoſtolike authoritie directed by the ſpirit of Chriſt, was inſtituted, Act.20.7. Apocal.1. verſ.10.Neither can there come,ſo long as the world continueth,ſo great a cauſe of changing the Sabboth,as the Apoſtles had by the reſurrection of Chriſt. Wherefore the lawe of the Sabboth,as it is now kept and obſerued, is perpetuall.

Conſtantin.6.can.8. Diei dominici,quia in eo Deus lucem condidit, in eo Manna in eremo pluit, &c. tanta debet eſſe reuerentia, &c. The Lords day muſt be had in great reuerence, becauſe vpon this day God created the Light, it rained Manna in the Wilderneſſe : Chriſt then vouchſafed to be borne : on this day the ſtarre appeared to the Wiſe men: Chriſt fed fiue thouſand men with fiue loaues and two fiſhes : on this day he was baptized, roſe againe, ſent downe the holy ſpirit vpon his diſciples, &c. theſe are the reaſons why we doe now keepe the Lords day vpon the firſt in the weeke : but greater reaſons than theſe, ſhall neuer fall out vpon any other day : *Ergo,*the Lordes day cannot be remooued to any other day of the weeke.

THe obſeruation of the Lords day is not deliuered by blinde tradition,but hath teſtimonie of holy Scriptures,1.Corinth.16.2. Act.20.7. Apocal.1.10. and the obſeruation thereof is according to Gods commaundement, not after the doctrine of men, Fulk.ibid. Bellarmine out of theſe three places proueth the Lords day to be inſtituted in the Scripture : de cultu. ſanctor. lib.3.c.11.

Leon.epiſtol.79.cap.1. In hac mundus ſumpſit exordium, in hac per reſurrectionem Chriſti mors interitum,vita accepit initium,&c.On this day the world tooke beginning by the reſurrection of Chriſt, death was deſtroyed, and life entred: on this day the Apoſtles receiued commiſſion to preach: Chriſt entred in to his diſciples, the doores being ſhut,&c. Ergo, the Lords day is no humane tradition, but a diuine inſtitution: Theſe workes, whereby the Lords day is ſanctified, were the workes of the Trinitie,and ſet forth in Scripture: Ergo, the Lords day is inſtituted of God and grounded vpon Scripture.

Decret.part.1.diſt.76.c.5. Leo, Quòd die dominica ordinationes Sacerdotum celebrentur, &c. That orders muſt be celebrated vpon the Lords day, it is not grounded onely vpon cuſtome, but on the Apoſtles doctrine in Scripture,&c. and he proueth it out of the 13.of the Actes: But this can not be ſhewed out of Scripture, that Orders ſhould be kept vpon the Lordes day, but that the Scripture euidently teſtifieth for the Lords day it ſelfe.

69.Error. 5. THey teach that the Lords day is commanded,and likewiſe kept for ſome myſticall ſignification,not onely for the remembrance of benefites alreadie accompliſhed;as of the reſurrection of Chriſt,and the Aduent or comming downe of the holy ſpirite: but alſo to betoken vnto vs things to come, as our reſt and glorie in the kingdome of God, Bellarmin. de cultu ſanctor. lib.3.cap.11.

The Proteſtants.

1. WE graunt, that the Sabboth may be ſo applyed, both to call to remembrance things already, as vpon that day done: as the reſurrection of Chriſt,and the deſcending of the holy Ghoſt. Some thinke alſo that Chriſt vpon that day was baptized,vpon that day turned water into wine,fed fiue thouſand with a few loaues, came vnto his Apoſtles after his reſurrection the doores being ſhut,and that as vpon this day he ſhall appeare to iudgement: but vpon what ground I know not. Certaine it is,that vpon this day Chriſt roſe againe,and that the holy Ghoſt came downe then vpon his Apoſtles. We deny not but that the keeping of the Lords day holy, may fitly bring vnto our remembrance theſe things: yea and that it may be a type and ſymbole vnto vs in ſome ſort, both of things ſpirituall, as to betoken our ceaſing and reſting from the workes of ſinne,Heb.4.10.and 1.Pet.4.1. as alſo of things to come, as the kingdome of heauen is called a Sabboth,Iſai.66.23.

Auguſt.de tempor. ſerm.154.

But we dare not,neither will affirme, that the Sabboth was ordayned and conſtituted for any ſuch end: for the commandement of the Sabboth now to vs is onely morall,not typicall or ceremoniall,as the Iewiſh Sabboth was; but looke wherein the Sabboth was morall to the Iewes,ſo it is kept ſtill: As in theſe two poynts it was morall to them; firſt, to be a ſigne betweene them and the Lord,and to diſtinguiſh them from other people,Exod.31.17. And ſo alſo the right keeping of the Lords day is a notable outward marke of difference betweene the Church of God and all others. Secondly,that vpon the Sabboth they ſhould reſort together,and heare the lawe read and preached,Act.15.21. And for this cauſe,namely,the exerciſe of religion,are Chriſtians chiefly bound to the Sabboth. It may (I ſay) fitly be drawne to reſemble heauenly and ſpirituall things: but that is not any end of the inſtitution. The Iewes had two kindes of types, typos factos, and typos deſtinatos, types made and applyed, and types appointed and ordayned of God to ſhadow forth ſome notable thing: as the Paſchall Lambe, was typus deſtinatus, of our Sauiour Chriſt, as they were not to breake a bone of the Lambe; ſo was it accordingly perfourmed in Chriſt. They had alſo many types beſide,that were not deſtinated to ſignifie any certaine thing: of ſuch S. Paul ſpeaketh,1.Corinth.10.6.11. So we ſay of the Sabboth, that it is not typus deſtinatus, it is not inſtituted for any ſhadow or ſignification, though it may be fitly applied to ſuch an vſe.

Matiſconenſ.2.can.1. Ipſe eſt dies requietis perpetuus,ipſe nobis per ſeptimi diei vmbram inſinuatus noſcitur in lege & Prophetis: This is a day of reſt for euer, this is knowne to haue been inſinuated by the ſhadow of the ſeuenth day in the law: ſo then the Lords day was rather ſhadowed foorth, then it doth ſhadowe;it had ſhadowes,it ſelfe is no ſhadowe.

Colonienſ.part.9.cap.9. Dies dominicus à temporibus Apoſtolorum ſemper in eccleſia celebris fuit, vt tum in vnum omnes pariter conuenirent: The Lords day hath been alwaies celebrated in the Church ſince the Apoſtles time,that the people might come together to heare the word of God,&c. For this end then the Lords day was appoynted principally,not to be a ſhadow of things to come.

The Papiſts.

70.Error. 6. THey ſay that we are not bound vpon the Sabboth by any peculiar commandement to abſtaine from ſinne,more then vpon any other day: neither that the internall act of religion appertaineth to the keeping of the Sabboth,but the externall: that any ſinne committed vpon the Sabboth is not thereby the greater: neither that we are more bound vpon the Sabboth to ſeeke for internall grace then vpon any other day, Bellarm.lib.3.cap.10.propoſ.4.

*Argum.*1. Bellarmine reaſoneth thus, the internall act of religion is the end of this commandement,but the meanes tending to the end,not the end it ſelfe,are commaunded.

Secondly, the internall worſhip is preſcribed in the firſt commandement: for this is the order: In the firſt precept, the worſhip of the heart; In the ſecond, the worſhip of the mouth; In the third, the worſhip or ſeruice of God in our workes is preſcribed.

Thirdly, it were dangerous to appoint ſo many holy dayes, for this were but to entangle mens conſciences, if ſinne be more grieuous committed vpon feſtiuals, *cap.*10.

Anſw. To the firſt we anſwere; Firſt, that it is vntrue, that the meanes onely, and not the end is commanded: for loue is the end of the commandement, 1.Timoth.1.5. and yet is commanded, and one of the greateſt commandements, Matth.22.39. So in the 7. Commandement the end is, not to commit adulterie; the meanes tending to adulterie, as chambering and wantonneſſe are likewiſe prohibited, Rom.13.13. ſhall we ſay therefore that adulterie it ſelfe is not forbidden? ſo admit that the internall ſanctification of the Sabboth is the ende, yet it may be and is commanded. Secondly, though it be the end, in reſpect of the meanes tending vnto it, as the corporall reſt, and the externall exerciſes of religion; yet it is alſo as a meane referred to the principall end of all, which is the glory of God; and therefore may be commanded, according to Bellarmines owne rule.

To the ſecond, we anſwere: Firſt, though ſome internall act of religion be preſcribed in the firſt Commandement; Thou ſhalt haue no other gods; and as to loue God, and feare him: yet that internall act, which is peculiar for the Lords day, is onely preſcribed in the fourth commandement. Secondly, he very fondly deuideth the firſt table into 3. precepts, whereas it containeth foure; as Origen ſheweth by this reaſon: ſome men thinke, ſaith he, that theſe two are one Commandement: Quod ſi ita putetur, &c. which if it be ſo, then are there not ten commandements, what is become then of the Decalogue? therefore the firſt Commandement is, Thou ſhalt haue no other Gods: the ſecond, Thou ſhalt make no grauen image, &c. thus farre *Origen. hom.*8. in Exod. Thirdly, to make a grauen image to worſhip it, is an externall act of religion, yet this is forbidden in the ſecond commandement, which Bellarmine ioyneth to the firſt, therefore his diuiſion is not good, referring all external actes of religion to this fourth, or as he maketh it, the third Commandement.

To the third we anſwere; Firſt, that other holy dayes are not enioyned with the like ſtrict precept of ſanctification, as the Lords day is, which is of Gods inſtitution onely; the other were ordeined by the Church, ſome are the meere inuentions of men, as popiſh holy dayes: but the ſpeciall ſanctifying of a day to an holy vſe, dependeth vpon Gods commandement and inſtitution.

Secondly, it is Bellarmines owne poſition, that men are bound in conſcience to keepe the Feſtiuals of the Church, *cap.*10. *prop.*3. whereas we do not ſo affirme: therefore it is he himſelfe, and not we, that doth lay ſnares by the ſuperſtitious obſeruation of holydaies, to entangle mens ſoules and conſciences. Thirdly, we yeeld vnto him, that it is very hurtfull to appoint ſo many holy dayes, as they do, which in deed is nothing els but to clogge mens conſciences with a multitude of ceremonies, which are burdenous to the Church.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. First, we graunt that all ſinne, as of theft, adulterie, and the like, are in their owne nature alike, at what time ſoeuer they are committed; yet they may be made more heynous by the circumſtances: as of the place, as ſacriledge is greater than common theft; ſo why not of the time?

Secondly, if that which is no ſinne vpon the worke-day, be a ſinne vpon the Sabboth, as to digge, to plough, to cart; then that which is a ſinne of it ſelfe, as to ſteale, to commit adulterie, muſt needs be greater and more hainous being done vpon the Sabboth: for beſide the ſinne, hee alſo prophaneth the Sabboth, which is the breach of another commandement. Thirdly, the internall act of religion, is properly commaunded in the ſanctifying of the Sabboth: for it cannot be ſanctified by the externall act of going to Church, and hearing the worde, vnleſſe a man be inwardly in the deuotion of his heart prepared for thoſe holy exerciſes. So inward grace is more ſought for vpon the Sabboth, not in reſpect of that inward deſire which we haue vnto them, which ought alwaies to be alike feruent in vs, if it were poſſible, but becauſe of thoſe outward meanes, of hearing the word, publike prayer, receiuing the Sacraments, which are vpon the Sabboth: for the which we ought more eſpecially to prepare & examine our ſelues, Eccle.4.17. 1.Cor.11.28.

The Prophet Eſay doth teach vs, how the true Sabboth muſt be kept, Chap.58. verſ.13. If thou turne away thy foot from the Sabboth, from doing thy will on my holy day, &c. and ſhalt honour the Lord, not doing thine owne wayes, nor ſeeking thine owne will, nor ſpeaking a vaine word, &c. Abſtinence from ſinne then is chiefly required vpon the Lords day: wee muſt not doe our owne waies. So is it decreed, Colonienſ. part. 9. *cap.*10. Blaſphemijs ac periurijs nomen Domini profanatur, ac Sabbatum, quod nos admonet, vt quieſcamus peruersè agere, & benefacere diſcamus, contaminatur: By blaſphemies and periuries the name of God is prophaned, and the Sabboth, which teacheth vs to leaue doing peruerſly, and to learne to doe well, is polluted.

Auguſtine ſaith, ſpeaking of the Iewiſh women: Quanto melius fœminæ eorum lanam facerent, quam illo die in neomenijs ſaltarent: ſpiritualiter obſeruat Sabbatum Chriſtianus, abſtinens ſe ab opere ſeruili, ideſt, à peccato: Tract. 3. in Iohan. Their women might be better occupied in ſpinning at home, than in dauncing vpon this day: for a Chriſtian doth ſpiritually keepe the Sabboth, in abſtaining from all ſeruile worke, that is, from ſinne. They then that doe obſerue the Sabboth onely in externall acts, doe but carnally keepe it.

Concil. Matiſcon. 2. can. 1. Eſtote omnes in hymnis & laudib. Dei corpore & animo intenti, die dominico, quiſque ſeipſum lachrymis & precibus afficiat: Let euery man bodie and ſoule be occupied in ſetting forth the praiſe of God: vpon the Lords day let euerie man giue himſelfe in his affection to teares and praiers. Here is more than the externall act of religion required: intention and affection, are inward things. Againe in the ſame Canon, Exhibeamus deo liberam ſeruitutem, non quia hoc à nobis Deus expetit, vt corporali abſtinentia diem Dominicum celebremus, ſed quærit obedientiam, per quam nos calcatis terrenis actibus ad cœlum vſque miſericorditer prouehat: Let vs yeeld vnto God our free ſeruice: for God requireth vs not by bodily abſtinence to keepe the Lords day, but he looketh for our obedience, by the which we ſhould tread vnder our feet all earthly and carnall acts, and ſo bee lifted vp in meditation euen vnto heauen. Obedience then is eſpecially required vpon the Lords day.

The Papiſts.

71. Error. 7. THey hold it a thing vnlawfull for Chriſtians to faſt vpon the Lords day, Bellarm. lib. 3. de cultu ſanctor. cap. 11.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt, we graunt that this opinion is very auncient, and that in Tertullians time it was receiued in many Churches: and they thought it as vnlawfull to bow the knee vpon the Lords day, Tertul. lib. de coron. Militis. Die dominico ieiunare nefas ducimus, & de geniculis adorare: Wee count it vnlawfull to faſt vpon the Lords day, and to pray kneeling.

So likewiſe, Trullan. Synod. can. 90. Ne dominicis diebus genua flectamus: that wee bow not our knees vpon the Lords day: but the Papiſts obſerue not the one, why then ſhould they bind themſelues to the other? Ignatius maketh faſting vpon the Sabboth as great an offence, as the killing of Chriſt himſelfe, Epiſtol. ad Philip. But, I truſt, they will not ſay ſo.

Epiſt. 86. Secondly, the reaſons why faſting is not to be vſed vpon the Lords day, becauſe the Ieſuite ſetteth downe none, I will ſupply out of Auguſtine: firſt, Sentio (ſaith hee) ad ſignificandam requiem ſempiternam (vbi eſt verum Sabbatum) relaxationem, quàm conſtrictionem ieiunij aptius conuenire. I think that to ſignifie the eternall reſt, which is the true Sabboth, libertie rather, than the vrging of faſting doth moſt fitly agree. But to this we anſwere, that this ſignification of eternall reſt, is no eſſentiall part of ſanctifying the Sabboth, nor no end of the inſtitution, as we haue ſhewed afore, though it may haue ſuch an application: and therefore this reaſon prooueth not ſuch a neceſſitie of not faſting vpon the Sabboth. Secondly, Die dominico ieiunare magnum eſt ſcandalum: It is a great offence to faſt on the Lords day, becauſe the Manichees made choice of that day to faſt in. Per quod factum eſt, vt ieiunium Sabbathi horribilius haberetur, By the which (ſaith hee) it came to paſſe, that the faſt of the Sabboth was more abhorred, Auguſtin. ibid. But this reaſon now bindeth not vs, becauſe the name and hereſie of the Manichees is now worne out, and therefore there is no feare of any ſcandale to ariſe that way.

Thirdly, we graunt that the Lords day is not the fitteſt time for publike faſts: firſt, becauſe it is a day of reioycing: ſo wee read that the people in Nehemiah his time, were forbidden to mourne and weepe, after the lawe was read vnto them by Ezra, becauſe it was a day of ioy and mirth, Nehem. 8. 11. Secondly, the day of ſolemne and publike faſting ought to be ſet apart from other daies, and to be proclaimed ſolemne, and to be ſpent wholly in ſpirituall exerciſes, euen as the Sabboth, with vacation and reſt from other bodily labours, as we may read, 2. Chron. 20. 3. Nehem. 9. 1. And therefore any day is more fit than the Sabboth, becauſe that is a holy day alreadie vnto the Lord: but when we will humble our ſelues before the Lord by faſting and praier, ſome day would only for that purpoſe be conſecrate vnto God: that may be as a voluntarie ſacrifice: whereas we are bound of neceſſitie to keepe the Lords day.

But concerning priuate and particular faſts, when men by themſelues haue occaſion to giue themſelues to prayer, whereof S. Paul ſpeaketh, 1. Cor. 7. 5. Such priuate exerciſes may bee better performed vpon the Sabboth, becauſe of the ordinarie exerciſes of the word, which are notable meanes to kindle and ſtirre vp true deuotion in him, which at that time will humble himſelfe; yea and publike faſts, though not ordinarily, yet when there is iuſt occaſion, may bee kept vpon the Sabboth: as we read Act. 20. 7. how that Paul continued his preaching till midnight: whereof Auguſtine writeth thus, Neceſſarius ſermo reficiendi corporis cauſa interrumpendus eſſe non viſus eſt profecturo Apoſtolo: The neceſſarie preaching of the Apoſtle, he thought not good, for the refreſhing of their bodies to breake off, being readie to depart. We conclude therefore, that it is lawfull to faſt vpon the Lords day, though it bee not alwaies expedient. And Auguſtine very well determineth this matter: Ego in Euangelicis, & Apoſtolicis literis video præceptum eſſe ieiunium: quibus autem diebus non oporteat ieiunare, & quibus oporteat, præcepto domini, vel Apoſtolorum non inuenio definitum: I finde both in the Euangelicall and Apoſtolicall writings, that faſting is commanded: but vpon what daies we ought to faſt, vpon what wee ought not, I do not finde it defined, Epiſt.86. Wherefore to faſt or not to faſt vpon the Lords day, or vpon any other, being not determined in Scripture, is left as a thing indifferent to the Church of God.

Concil.Gangrenſ.can.18.Si quis tanquam hoc continentiæ conuenire iudicans die dominico ieiunauerit, aut in eiuſdem diei contemptum, anathema ſit: If any man doe faſt vpon the Lords day, as iudging it more agreeable to a continent life, or in contempt of the day, let him be accurſed. The Councell doth not ſimply forbid faſting vpon this day, but that it ſhould not bee done ſuperſtitiouſly, with an opinion of greater holines, nor in contempt of the day, which is to Chriſtians a day of reioycing.

So likewiſe Carthaginenſ.4.can.64. Qui dominico die ſtudioſè ieiunat, credatur non catholicus: He that of purpoſe doth faſt on the Lords day, let him bee counted not Catholike. A man may faſt then vpon the Lords day, ſo it be not of a ſuperſtitious or wilfull purpoſe.

In their owne decrees it ſtandeth thus: Decret.par.1.diſt.76.cap.Vtinam omni die ieiunare poſſimus, &c. I would we might faſt euery day, which in the Acts of the Apoſtles wee reade, that S.Paul did, and the reſt of the faithfull with him in the daies of Pentecoſt, and vpon the Lords day.

The Papiſts.

8. THe name Sunday, is an heatheniſh calling, as all other weeke-daies in our language: ſome impoſed after the names of Planets, as in the Romanes time: ſome by the name of certaine Idols, which the Saxons did worſhip: which names the Church vſeth not, but hath appointed to call the firſt day the Dominike, after the Apoſtle, Apocal.1.10. the other by the name Feries, vntill the laſt of the weeke, which ſhe calleth by the old name Sabboth, becauſe that was of God, not by impoſition of the Heathen, Rhemiſt.annot. Apocal.1.ſect.6. 72.Error.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt, as the name of Sunday, and the reſt, is of the heatheniſh beginning, and therefore were better to be otherwiſe termed, as the firſt, ſecond, or third from the Lords day, as the Iewes called their daies from the Sabboth: ſo your terme of Feries, is no leſſe heatheniſh, deriued from the word feria, or feriæ, which were ſo called, à feriendis victimis, of ſtriking the heatheniſh ſacrifices, as Sextus Pompeius ſaith, Fulk.ibid.

2. We haue other names alſo that might be reformed, as of our moneths: as March is ſo called of Mars, Iune of Iuno, Ianuary of Ianus, which were Heathen Gods: Iuly and Auguſt doe beare the names of men: yea, and if we might be inuentors of new names, the termes of Chriſtmas, Michaelmas, Candlemas, ſhould not ſtand in force, nor any more bee vſed, which are as offenſiue as the reſt: for as for the names of Heathen Idols, the moſt part are ignorant of them; but the vulgar terme of Maſſe, is to too well knowne, and too much loued of many of our countrie men. Now for the name Sunday, which is ſo great a mote in your eye, if there were no more but that, Auguſtine ſheweth, how it might be fauourably expounded, Dies magni ſolis celebramus illius ſolis, de quo dicit ſcriptura, orietur vobis ſol iuſtitiæ: Wee doe keepe Sunday holy, namely, of that great Sunne, whereof the Scripture ſpeaketh, the Sunne of righteouſneſſe ſhall ariſe. So in the Ciuill law, Cod.lib.3.tit.12.leg.3. it is called, dies ſolis, Sunday: though the other name, dies Dominicus, the Lords day, be preferred; as ibid.leg.7.Valentin. Dies ſolis Dominicos rite dixere maiores, the Sundaies, our anceſtors rightly called the Lords dayes. Auguſt.cont. Fauſt.18.5.

3. We wiſh that all theſe termes might be laid downe, as Auguſtine ſaith, Nolumus vt dicant, & vtinam corrigantur vt non dicant: Wee would not haue men ſo to ſpeake, and I wiſh they were reformed. But ſeeing by continuall cuſtome mens tongues are inured to ſuch termes, let them know, that they are vſed onely as ciuill names, to call things by, not for any religion or myſterie in them contained, or ſignified. In Pſal.93.

And here I doe commend Hieromes two rules concerning heatheniſh names: the firſt, where he ſaith, Libr.de veſte ſacerdotal.in Iob, Arcturum & Orionem, &c. In Iob we reade of Arcturus, and Orion, and other names of the ſtarres, not that the Hebrues doe ſo call them: ſed quòd nos non poſſumus, quæ dicuntur, niſi conſuetis vocibus intelligere, but becauſe wee cannot vnderſtand what is ſaid, but vnder the common termes. So then, where vſe and cuſtome hath obtained to haue things called by ſuch names, and they are knowne by no other, there neceſſitie doth diſpenſe with Heatheniſh names.

His other rule is this, that ſuch Pagan termes, which haue no neceſſarie vſe, but proceed of prophanenes or wantonnes, ſhould bee left: Abſit, vt de ore Chriſtiano ſonet, &c. God forbid, that a Chriſtian mouth ſhould ſound, Iupiter, Hercules, &c. quæ portenta ſunt magis, quam nomina, which are monſters rather, then names. This is a good caueate for young Students, that they ſhould in their exerciſes,as declamations,diſputations,Comedies,Tragedies,auoid and decline thoſe monſtrous Heatheniſh names,which yet are too rife among them.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE FESTIVAL dayes of Chriſt and the holy Ghoſt.

73.Error. THe feaſts of Eaſter and Whitſontide, and other ſolemnities of Chriſt, were preſcribed (they ſay) by the Apoſtles, *Rhemiſt.Matth.*15.*ſect.*2.to be kept vpon certaine daies, and that Peter did appoint that Eaſter ſhould not be kept the 14.day of the firſt Moone,as the Iewes obſerued it, but the Lords day after. And of the feaſt of Pentecoſt mention is made, 1.Corinth.16.8. Ergo, theſe feaſts were inſtituted of the Apoſtles,*Bellarm.cap.*12.13.

Bellarmine to proue the celebration of Eaſter,as it is now obſerued in the Latine Church,to be Apoſtolicall,alleageth the 8.Canon of the Apoſtles,which decreeth,That he which obſerued Eaſter before the vernall Equinoctium, whether Biſhop or prieſt,ſhould be depoſed.

Anſ. It is a cleere caſe,that thoſe Canons are forged and falſely aſcribed to the Apoſtles: 1. In the laſt Canon the Goſpell of S.Iohn is counted among the Canonicall bookes of the new Teſtament,which was not at that time written, when theſe Canons are ſaid to haue been made by the Apoſtles aſſembled together: for Saint Peter,a principall compoſer of theſe Canons,is brought in ſpeaking, Can.28. who was put to death before S.Iohn writ his Goſpell. 2. Of what validitie theſe Canons be,it appeareth in the Trullane Councel, Can.12. where they forbid Biſhops after their conſecration to haue ſocietie with their wiues, directly contrarie to the 5.Canon of the Apoſtles: and they giue a reaſon thereof, Statum eccleſiaſticum in pulchriorem ordinem reducentes: Their meaning was to bring the ſtate eccleſiaſticall to a more beautifull order, whereas the Apoſtles in the beginning of the Goſpell, ad fidelium imbecillitatem ſe demittebant,did ſubmit themſelues to the imbecillitie of the weake. But if they were the Canons of the Apoſtles indeede, what boldnes had this been,ſo lightly to reuerſe their decrees? 3. In the laſt Canon there are three bookes of the Macchabees made Canonical,whereas the Papiſts themſelues receiue but two:why then doe they themſelues tranſgreſſe the Apoſtles Canons? 4. Gelaſius,decret.de Apocryphis,doth in direct termes make,Librum canonum Apoſtolorum,the booke of the Canons of the Apoſtles Apocryphal. The authoritie therefore of theſe forged Canons doth little moue vs.

Againe, Bellarmine vrgeth a diuine teſtimonie, as he calleth it,how that Paſchaſinus reporteth, that in Pope Zozimus time there being a queſtion about the time of the celebration of Eaſter:the Pope with the Weſt Church appointing the 25.of March, the Eaſt Church the 22. of Aprill, it ſo fell out,that in a certaine Church in Sicilie,a certaine fountaine,that vſed euery yeere to fill it ſelfe againſt Eaſter day for thoſe that ſhould bee baptized, was emptie vpon the 25.of March,but was full the 22.of Aprill: whereby the Pope and the Weſt Church,did perceiue themſelues to be in an error,and the Eaſt Church in the right,*Bellar.cap.*12.

Anſ. Firſt,if this tale beare any credit,it ſheweth, that the Eaſt Church was ſounder,concerning the celebration of Eaſter, than the Pope. Secondly, this miracle alloweth that Eaſter day ſhould be kept after the 20.day of Aprill,contrary to the decree of the Nicen Councell: which limited the time for Eaſter from the 21.of March to the 20.of Aprill,and no further. Thirdly, this fained miracle is of like credit to that viſion, which Pope Pius affirmeth to haue been ſhewed to one Hermes: how that an Angell appeared vnto him, commaunding him to keepe Eaſter vpon the Lords day,*decret.p.*3.*diſt.*3.*cap.*21. But if the celebration of Eaſter were grounded vpon the inſtitution of the Apoſtles, they neede not bring ſuch beggerly ſtuffe, by lying miracles and viſions,to make proofe of their matter.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt, we graunt that it is expedient for the Church to keepe the memoriall of the Natiuitie,Paſſion,Reſurrection,Aſcenſion of Chriſt,and of the comming of the holy Ghoſt;and the daies inſtituted for the remembrance thereof,no doubt, ought to bee had in greater account, then any other holy daies inſtituted by the Church. Secondly, it cannot bee prooued, that they were preſcribed by the Apoſtles;or if they were,but as indifferent ceremonies, which are ſubiect to alteration,and in the which the religion or worſhip of God doth not conſiſt. Certaine it is,that Concil.Aurel. 4.cap.1. before the time of Conſtantine the great,there were not many feſtiuall daies kept,in ſo much, that the feaſts of the Natiuitie of Chriſt, Eaſter, Pentecoſt, were not vniformally obſerued for many yeeres after,as appeareth by diuers Councels. And before Conſtantines time, there was great con-
Tolet.10.c.1. tention betweene the Biſhop of Rome and the Biſhops of the Eaſt,about the celebration of Eaſter; they alleaging the conſtitution of Saint Iohn, the other of Saint Peter: wherefore it is like that the Apoſtles appoynted no ſuch certaine daies: for then the Church would not haue broken them.

Thirdly, Pentecoſt, whereof Saint Paul ſpeaketh, was the feaſt of the Iewes, which, with other ſolemnities of theirs, the Apoſtles obſerued not as a portion of Chriſtian religion, but taking occaſion of the meeting of the Iewes in thoſe feſtiuall daies: and ſo doe we obſerue thoſe holy daies for order and edification of Gods people, that vſe to aſſemble at ſuch times, *Fulk. Mat.*15.*ſect.*3.

Fourthly, what cauſe is there, why Eaſter and Whitſontide ſhould be tied to the Lords day, and the Natiuitie of Chriſt, which Bellarmine confeſſeth, was vpon the Lords day, ſhould indifferently bee kept vpon any day? but that hereby we vnderſtand, that it is an indifferent matter, whether they ſhould be kept vpon the Lords day, or any other, and whether vpon any certaine day, or to be left to the diſcretion of the gouernours of the Church to be obſerued, as any other occaſion ſhall be offered, *Fulk annot. Apocalypſ.*1.*ſect.*6.

Laſtly, wee ſhewed Auguſtines opinion, in the firſt part of this queſtion, how he vnderſtandeth that ſaying, Pſal. 118. This is the day which the Lord hath made, onely of the Sabboth: thereby inſinuating, that other holy daies either were not inſtituted of God at all, or elſe not with the like neceſſitie.

Let vs ſee further the conſent of antiquitie: that the obſeruation of Eaſter is no Apoſtolicall conſtitution it appeareth: 1. Becauſe there was no vniforme order ſet downe for it before the firſt Nicen Councell, where, as Theophilus Alexandrinus witneſſeth, theſe three rules were made for Eaſter: the firſt, that it ſhould not be kept before the 21. of March, nor after the 20. of Aprill, becauſe their Equinoctium did fal then vpon the 21. of March, and Eaſter muſt in no wiſe be kept before the Equinoctium. The ſecond, that they ſhould wait for the 14. day of the firſt Moon from the 21. of March, till the 14. of Aprill. The third, that they ſhould obſerue the firſt Lords day after the 14. of the firſt Moone, and ſo keepe their Eaſter. This order was begun in the Nicen Councell, not by the Apoſtles: Ergo, it is not Apoſtolicall.

2. Neither after the Nicen Councell did this order hold: for in Pope Zozimus time, the Weſt Churches kept Eaſter the 8. from the Calends of Aprill, that is the 25. of March: the Eaſt Churches the 22. of Aprill: *Leon. epiſtol.*61. Againe, *Leo. epiſtol.*62. maketh mention how Theodoſius the Elder committed this matter to the Biſhop of Alexandria, to compoſe the cycle of the Paſch: who committed in his account a great error (as Leo ſaith) for in the 76. yeere of his order, Eaſter fell vpon the 24. of Aprill, whereas by the order of the Nicen Councell, it ſhould not exceede the 20. day. Further, the ſame Leo writeth, *Epiſtol.*92. that whereas ſome appointed the next Eaſter then comming vpon the 15. from the Calends of May, ſome vpon the 8. he writ to the Emperour Martian, who according to the order of the Eaſt Church, would haue it kept the 8. day: and thereunto Leo conſented. This could not then be an Apoſtolicall decree, whereof there was no more certaintie.

But that the feſtiuities of Chriſt and the holy Ghoſt are to be preferred before other holy daies, wee willingly graunt: as *Cod. lib.*3.*tit.*12.*leg.*7. by the conſtitution of the Emperours, Valentin. Theodoſ. Arcad. the feaſts of the Paſch, the Natiuitie, and Epiphanie, are eſpecially authorized. And *Decret. par.*2 *cauſ.*7.*qu.*1.*c.*29. the Natiuitie of our Lord, Epiphanie, the Paſch, and Pentecoſt, are reckoned vp for the principall feaſts.

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE ſolemnities of Saints.

The Papiſts.

1. THey hold that holy daies may be dedicated vnto Saints, for their honour and worſhip: as Chriſt promiſed that the charitable act of Mary Magdalen wrought vpon him ſhould bee recorded and remembred, Matth. 26. verſ. 13. Hereby wee learne that the good workes of Saints may bee recorded to the honour of Saints in the Church, whereof ariſe their commemorations and holy daies, *Rhemiſt. annot. Matth.*25.*ſect.*1. 74. Error.

The Proteſtants.

THe good workes of Saints may bee remembred to the honour of God, without their holy daies and commemorations: Chriſt inſtituted no holy day of Mary Magdalen, nor commanded an image of her fact to bee made, but a memorie of her in preaching the Goſpell. Secondly, we graunt, that Chriſtian ſolemnities may bee kept, as things indifferent, which the Church may retaine or abrogate as it ſhall ſeeme beſt for edification, not obſerued of neceſſitie as a part of the worſhip of God, not conſecrate to the honour of Saints; ſeeing all diuine worſhip is wholly to be reſerued to God, not to be giuen to any other: For times and ſeaſons, the Scripture ſaith, the Lord hath put only in his owne power: therfore he is only to haue the honour of them, Act. 1. 7. Thirdly, what honor is due vnto Saints Auguſtine ſheweth: Colimus martyres eo cultu dilectionis, & ſocietatis, quo & in hac vita coluntur ſancti homines dei: We do honor Martyrs with the ſeruice of loue and fellowſhip, as holy men are honoured in this life. But it is not lawfull to conſecrate times and Contra Fauſt. lib. 2. cap. 21.

daies to holy men liuing, therefore neither to Saints departed: for one and the ſame kinde of honor is due to them both.

*Leon.*1.*epiſtol.*4.*c.*4. Notum ſit dilectioni veſtræ vniuerſos dies Chriſti innumeris conſecratos fuiſſe virtutibus, &c. Be it knowne to your brotherhood, that all the dayes of Chriſt are conſecrate with his innumerable vertuous acts: yet if we ſhould indifferently honour all the workes of Chriſt, all dayes ſhould be holy dayes, for they are all full of the miracles of Chriſt. From hence we collect theſe two arguments againſt Saints dayes. 1. The miracles of Chriſt are more forcible to conſecrate an holy day, then the acts of Saints; but all his miracles make not holy dayes: Ergo. 2. By the ſame reaſon, that all Chriſts acts haue not their feſtiuals, becauſe then all dayes ſhould be feſtiuall, we doe alſo exclude Saints dayes, becauſe that if all Saints ſhould haue their commemorations, the dayes of the yeere would not ſuffiſe thereto: and we ſhould haue none but feſtiuals.

*Cod.lib.*3.*tit.*12.*leg.*4. a law was made by Conſtantinus the Emperour, that none but the Prince ſhould, ferias condere, erect daies of recreation for the people. If ciuill holy daies muſt be appointed only by the Emperour the Lord of the earth; in the Church holy dayes ſhould be grounded vpon the inſtitution of Chriſt Lord and King of his Church.

The Papiſts.

75.Error. 2. They maintaine, that there may be holy dayes and commemorations of all Saints, as Chriſt promiſeth there ſhould be of Mary Magdalene, *Rhemiſt.Matth.*25.*ſect.*1.

The Proteſtants.

Ex Tileman. Loc.28. This is another principall fault, which we finde and complaine of in their holy dayes: that they haue peſtred the Church with ſuch a number of Saints and Saints dayes. Firſt, as we haue partly ſhewed before, they appoynted a ſeuerall Saint almoſt for euery purpoſe, as here we haue ſet it downe:

Saint Leonard for captiues.
Saint Rochus for the peſtilence.
Saint George for warre.
Saint Anna giues riches.
Saint Nicholas and Chriſtopher for the ſea.
Saint Apallonia for the toothake.
Saint Otilia for the eyes.
Saint Margaret for women in trauell.
Saint Laurence keepeth from the fire.
Saint Catherine giueth wit and learning.
Saint Iohn againſt poyſon.
Saint Quirine for the fiſtula.
Saint Protaſius and Geruaſius, helpe to bewray theft.

And thus it is true of them, as Ieremie complayned of the Idolatrous Iſraelites: that their gods were after the number of their cities, Ierem.2.28. In like manner alſo haue they multiplied their Saints dayes: for beſide the feſtiuals of Chriſt, the holy Ghoſt, and of the Apoſtles, they haue added theſe beſides.

Here we haue 20. more: all theſe ioyned together will make a round ſumme: we ſhall haue very neere 200. play dayes enough; Of which number ſome are blaſphemous, as to keepe the Conception of Mary, in remembrance that ſhe was conceiued without ſinne: ſome of them fabulous and forged; as the Aſſumption of Mary, in memorie of her Aſſumption in body to heauen, which is a meere fable: But all the reſt are idolatrous and ſuperſtitious, ordained for the honor and worſhip of creatures. And thus haue they cumbred the people of God with their infinite obſeruations. So that the Lord ſaith to them, concerning their feaſts, as vnto the Iſraelites: They are a burden vnto me, I am weary to beare them, Iſai. 1.14.

In Auguſtines time, or who elſe it was that made thoſe Sermons, when there were nothing ſo many feſtiuals, as now among Papiſts, yet more than needed, he writeth thus in a ſermon vpon a feſtiuall: Latus ſum hodierno die propter tantam feſtiuitatem: ſed aliquantulum triſtis, quia non video tantum populum congregatum, quantus congregari debuit: I am glad to day, becauſe of this feſtiuall day: and ſomwhat grieued withall, that the people reſort not in ſuch frequencie, as they ſhould. We may ſee by this, that euen then the people began to waxe wearie of their many holy daies. De diuerſ. ſerm. 47.

Bernard in his time complained of this multitude of feaſts: Patria eſt, non exily frequentia hæc gaudiorum, & numeroſitas feſtiuitatum ciues decet, non exules: This frequencie of mirth belongeth to our countrey, not to exile, and the multitude of feaſts becommeth citizens in heauen, not exiles vpon the earth. To this purpoſe there is a notable ſaying, *Opuſc. Tripartit. lib.*3. *cap.*1. *tom.*2. Concilior. Vulgare eſt, quod malæ mulieres dicunt, quòd plus lucrantur in vno die feſto de peccato ſuo, quam per totam ſeptimanam, &c. It is a common thing in the mouthes of naughtie women, that they gaine more by their ſinne in one holy day, than all the weeke beſide, and ſo of other ſinnes: Et ideo videtur, quod acceptum eſſet Deo, quòd pauciara feſta eſſent in eccleſia: And therefore it ſeemeth to be acceptable to God, that there ſhould be fewer holy daies in the Church, &c.

*Cod. lib.*3. *tit.*12. *leg.*7. Valentin. Theodoſ. Beſide the feſtiuities of Chriſt, as the Natiuitie, Epiphanie, Paſch: onely, the feſtiuals of the Apoſtles are enioyned to be kept.

Likewiſe, *Bonifac.*8. though a corrupt Pope, yet herein not ſo ſuperſtitious as the reſt, enioyneth, that the feaſts of the twelue Apoſtles, the foure Euangeliſts, and the foure Doctors of the Church, Gregorie, Auguſtine, Hierome, Ambroſe, ſhould bee ſolemnely kept aboue the reſt: and in that decree there are no other holy daies particularly named: *Sext. decret. lib.*3. *tit.*22. *cap.*1.

Maſter Tindall holy martyr hath ſealed this trueth: The multiplication of holy daies, of feaſts of Corpus Chriſti, the viſitation of our Ladie, is a wicked face and colour, and indeed fooliſh, vnprofitable, vaine, Fox. p.1253. col.1.

The Papiſts.

76. Error. THey inioyne ſanctification and neceſſarie keeping of all their feſtiuities and holy daies: and ſo make no difference betweene the obſeruation of holy daies appointed of God, and others ordained of men, requiring the like ſtrictnes in keeping of them all, Rhemiſt. annot. Gal. 4. *ſect.*5. And Bellarmine alſo affirmeth, that men are bound in conſcience to keepe all the feſtiuals of the Church, *cap.*10. *prop.*3.

The Proteſtants.

THere are no daies neceſſarie to be kept, but thoſe that are of the Lordes appointment: the reſt, being void of ſuperſtition, may be celebrated as indifferent: and therefore not to bee commaunded with the like ſtrictneſſe, as is the Lords day. There is greater libertie vpon holie daies for bodily labour, than vpon the Sabboth: for bodily reſt vpon the ſeuenth day is commanded of God: bodily labour vpon all other daies permitted, and may without offence of conſcience be vſed, when it is not by the lawfull authoritie of the gouernours of the Church vpon iuſt occaſion reſtrained, as during the time of publicke praiers and faſts, hearing of the word, and ſuch like.

The reſt of the Sabboth, ſo farre as it helpeth our preparation and fitnes to ſpirituall exerciſes, and is a part of ſanctifying the Lordes day, bindeth ſimply in conſcience, becauſe it is the commaundement of God: but the reſt vpon holy daies doth not in it ſelfe binde vs, no otherwiſe than by reaſon of offence, that may ariſe by our contempt of the conſtitutions of the Church.

We find that Simon Iſlip, Archbiſhop of Canterburie, directed his letters patents to all Parſons and Vicars, wherein hee ſtreightly charged them and their pariſhioners vnder paine of excommunication, not to abſtaine from bodily labour vpon certaine Saints daies, which before were wont to be hallowed and conſecrated to vnthriftie idlenes, Fox. p.393. Ergo, by their own iudgement, all the feſtiuities of their Church are not to be kept alike.

Reformat. Ratiſpon. artic. 20. In minoribus feſtiuitatibus liberum cuique facimus, &c. In the ſmaller feaſts, we giue leaue to euerie man, after hee hath heard Maſſe, to returne to his labour, whereby he may prouide ſuſtenance for him and his.

Synod. Treuerenſ. cap. 10. Vſque in meridiem in feſtis diebus feriari volumus, & facto ſacro, cuique ad labores, & negotia ſecularia redire liceat: Wee will haue men to keepe holy daie vpon the feſtiuals till noone, and then to returne to their labours and worldly buſines, hauing firſt ſerued God. All feſtiuals therefore are not with the like ſtrictnes to be obſerued.

This truth hath alſo been ſealed: Iſabel Tracher perſecuted, becauſe ſhe did worke vpon holie daies. Fox. p. 829. col. 1. William Wingraue, Thomas Hawkes, with other perſecuted for the like, for ſaying, That God biddeth vs worke one day as well as another, ſauing the Sundaie. p. 985. col. 1.

Auguſtine maketh three degrees of feſtiuall daies: in the firſt and higheſt degree he placeth the Lords day: Quomodo Maria virgo, mater domini, principatum tenet inter omnes mulieres; ita inter cæteros dies, hæc omnium dierum mater eſt: As amongſt women the virgine Marie, the mother of our Lord, is the chiefe; ſo this daie is the mother and chiefe of all other daies: ſpeaking of the Sabboth of Chriſtians, De tempore Serm. 36.

In the next place or degree hee putteth the feſtiuals of Chriſt, and the holy Ghoſt, as the commemorations of his Natiuitie, Paſſion, Reſurrection, Aſcenſion: as in his ſermon vpon the Aſcenſion day he thus ſaith, Conditoris baſilicæ huius S. Leontij hodiè depoſitio eſt: ſed dignetur obſcurari ſtella à ſole: To day wee haue the commemoration of the depoſition or ſepulture of S. Leontius the founder of this Church: but let not the ſtarre thinke much to be obſcured of the Sunne. So in the third ranke he counteth the commemorations of holy men, which vnto the feſtiuities of Chriſt were but as the ſtarre to the Sun. We will adde a fourth place or degree, diſtinguiſhing betweene the commemorations of the holy Apoſtles, and other ſuperſtitious and popiſh Saints daies, which our Church hath worthily thruſt out at the doores.

Let vs ſee their owne decrees: Decret. part. 3. diſtinct. 3. c. 1. Reliquas feſtiuitates, &c. Vpon other feſtiuals, neque cogendi ad feriandum, &c. men muſt neither bee conſtrained to play, or ceaſe from worke, nor yet be forbidden: Therefore by this decree all their feaſts are not of neceſſitie to be kept. Againe, ibid. cap. 12. Peruenit ad nos, &c. It is come to our eare, that certaine doe forbid to worke vpon the Saturday, who are nothing elſe but the preachers of Antichriſt. But the Papiſts forbid to worke vpon Saturdaies being their holy daies: Ergo, by the determination of Gregorie, they are Antichriſts preachers.

AN APPENDIX TO THIS PART, OF THE VIGILES AND NIGHT WATCHES ANNEXED TO FESTIUALL DAIES.

The Papiſts.

77. Error. 1. THey were wont vpon Saints eeues to giue themſelues to faſting, and watching. But their night vigiles or watches they doe not now ſo ſtrictly obſerue, becauſe of the great abuſes which did grow thereupon, Bellarm. cap. 17. Yet they haue not altogether left them, for they haue their Nocturnes or midnight Mattens, and their prime houres in the morning, Rhemiſt. annot. Act. 10. ſect. 6.

The Proteſtants.

THe Chriſtians in time of perſecution had their antelucanos hymnos,their early and timely ſongs and hymnes: they met together to worſhip God, before the Sunne riſe,becauſe they could not ſafely,neither were ſuffered to aſſemble in the day time. But that is no reaſon,why now the Church ſhould vſe vigiles or nocturnes, ſeeing wee now haue free exerciſe of religion in the day time: no more then Pauls example is to be vrged,that prayed by the riuers ſide with the people, and there preached vnto them,becauſe in idolatrous cities they could haue no places of meeting, that therefore we now ought to doe the like,hauing Churches and Oratories to aſſemble in. Auguſtine,if the ſermon be his,thus witneſſeth: Iubente Ambroſio ceſſabant vigiliæ Mediolani, quia cùm vigilabant per noctem,ad eccleſiam,ludendo & chorizando conueniebant: At Millaine by Ambroſes commaundement the vigiles ceaſed,becauſe the people,when they watched,did come by night,daunſing,and ſporting and playing,to the Church. Ad fratres in eremo ſerm.

Decretum Teleſphori,Vt nocte natiuitatis domini miſſas celebrarent, reliquis verò temporibus non ante horam diei tertiam,&c. That Maſſe ſhould bee celebrate the night before the natiuitie of our Lord, at other times not before the third houre of the day,becauſe Chriſt was crucified at that houre,&c. Here vigiles are forbidden,except onely one night in the yeere. This Canon is rehearſed *diſtinct.*1. *cap.*48.

*Synod.Colonienſ.ſub Adulpho.part.*1.*cap.*7.Ne Canonici & Vicarij Cleri noſtri Colonienſis vigilijs defunctorum,&c. Leſt that the Canons and Vicars of our Clergie at Colen,ſhould be hindered from frequenting more neceſſarie leſſons by the vigils of the dead, which they were wont to performe at ſeuen in the morning; we will,that from henceforth vigils ſhall begin at two in the afternoone, that they may bee finiſhed before euening prayer. Here vigils and night watches are cleane cut off,and turned to day-exerciſes.

And how well they kept their vigils may appeare by that decree of Innocentius, decr.Greg.lib.3. *tit.*41.*cap.*9. Dolentes referimus,&c. Wee ſpeake it with griefe, that certaine, not onely inferiour prieſts,but prelates,ſpend the time in eating and drinking vntill midnight,&c.

The Papiſts.

2. THey haue alſo another ſuperſtitious cuſtome, to ſet vp waxe candles, and Taber-light before Images,and vpon the Altar,to carrie them about in proceſſion, and euen at midday, and high noone: And Bellarmine would authoriſe this cuſtome by the continuall burning of the Lampes day and night,as he ſaith,in the Tabernacle among the Iewes. 78.Error.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt,we ſay of this, as we did of the vigiles of the Church before: that Chriſtians in thoſe daies in their night aſſemblies vſed candle light, as S.Hierome ſaith, anſwering thus to Vigilantius: Cereos non clara luce accendimus, Wee doe not burne candles at noone day, as you doe falſely cauill: but thereby to temper,or qualifie the darknes of the night,&c. But it followeth not, that the vigiles being now left, wee ſhould burne candles at noone day: and that this was their cuſtome, to burne their Lampes onely in the night, Auguſtine ſheweth, where he ſpeaketh of thoſe that did vow ceram ad luminaria noctis, waxe candles for the lights of the Church in the night. De tempor. ſerm.7.

Secondly,it is vtterly vntrue, that the Lampes in the Tabernacle burned all day: the contrarie is proued,that they were lighted in the euening,and ſo burned al night,for thoſe that kept the watch in the Temple,2.Chron.13.11.and that in the morning againe they were put out,1.Samuel 3.verſ.3. The Prieſts ſhall ſet the Lampes on fire, inter duas veſperas, betweene the two twilights,that is,the euening and morning,Exod.30.8. And he ſhall dreſſe them to burne from the euening to the morning,Leuit.24.3. And S.Hierome vpon thoſe words,1.Sam.3.*before the lampe of God went out,&c.*thus writeth: Intelligi oportet,antequam lux diurna fieret: It muſt be vnderſtood before it was day,when the lampe was put out. That therefore which the Ieſuite made for an argument for himſelfe,wee will vrge againſt him: that ſeeing the lampes amongſt the Iewes, who abounded in types and ceremonies,were burnt onely in the night, and not vpon the day; it is ſhame for thoſe that would bee counted Chriſtians,in ſuperſtitious cuſtomes,to exceede and goe beyond them.

THE NINTH QVESTION, CONcerning the Virgine Marie.

THis queſtion ſtandeth of many parts. Firſt, whether the bleſſed Virgin Marie were conceiued without ſinne. Secondly, whether ſhe vowed virginitie before the Angell was ſent vnto her. Thirdly,of the aſſumption of her bodie into heauen. Fourthly,of the dignitie and preeminence that ſhe hath (as they affirme) aboue all other Saints, yea, and the Angelles too. Fiftly, of the merites of the Virgin Mary and of the Aue Maria.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER THE VIRGIN Marie, were voyd of originall and actuall ſinne.

The Papiſts.

79.Error. 1. ALl men are borne in ſinne,Chriſt only excepted,and his mother for his honour : Rhemiſt. Rom.5.ſect.9.

Anſ. It is no more diſhonour for Chriſt to be borne of a ſinner, than to haue taken his fleſh, and lineally deſcended, according to his humanitie, of Thamar that committed inceſt with Iuda, and Rahab which was an harlot, Matth. 1.3, 5. Secondly, it maketh more for the honour of God that Chriſt was borne without ſinne of a woman which was a ſinner, and more ſetteth forth his power,than otherwiſe,leaſt he ſhould be thought to haue deriued his puritie from his mother.

80.Error. 2. They hold, that there was no actuall ſinne in the Virgin Marie,no not in the leaſt and ſmalleſt ſinnes, which they call veniall, Rhemiſt. 1. Iohn. 1. ſect. 5. Shee was eſpecially protected, and preſerued from ſinning by the grace of God.

Anſw. That God is able cleerely to ridde his children from ſinne, and to preſerue them from falling thereinto,we denie not : but, ſeeing you haue no ſcripture for this priuiledge, that ſhould be beſtowed onely vpon Marie, to be free from ſinne : but rather the contrarie is prooued out of ſcripture, That all haue ſinned, Rom. 3. 23. it is too raſh and bold an aſſertion, contrarie to the will of God,to aſcribe any thing to his power.He is as able to exempt all from ſinning as one:vnleſſe therefore you can ſhewe ſome eſpeciall warrant out of Gods word, for Maries freedome, by your reaſon, all the children of God ſhall be freed from ſinne as well as Marie, becauſe God is able to doe it.

Let vs heare Bellarmines opinion : he ſaith that men are ſtained three waies with originall ſin. Firſt,the whole poſteritie of Adam may be ſaid to haue ſinned potentially in Adam, being at that time in his loynes. Secondly, as ſoone as the bodie beginneth to haue any being in the wombe. Thirdly, when as the ſoule is inſpired into the bodie : hee confeſſeth, that the Virgine Mary was conceiued as all other are,after the two firſt waies: that is,if we either reſpect her being in Adams loynes, or the firſt conception of her fleſh : but concerning the third, her ſoule was without ſpot of originall ſinne, in the verie inſtant of the infuſion thereof into her bodie. And this he ſaith is a godly and probable opinion, though it be not yet determined in their Church as a point of faith: De amiſſion.grat.lib.4.cap.16.

Anſ. This diſtinction,which the Ieſuite hath coyned,concerning theſe three kinds of conception in ſinne,is both verie friuolous and vntrue : for the firſt is none at all : if all that were in Adams loynes, when he ſinned, may be ſaid to be conceiued in ſinne, then our Sauiour Chriſt alſo, which were blaſphemie to affirme. The other two kinds make indeed but one : for to be conceiued in originall ſinne, implyeth a pollution both of bodie and ſoule : And the time of the conception is more properly referred to the beginning of the knitting of the fleſh in the womb, than to the inſtant of the infuſion of the ſoule : as Dauid in the Pſal. 51. 5. ſaith, In ſinne hath my mother conceiued me : But the mother conceiueth onely the fleſh : the ſoule is infuſed and inſtilled of God,as the Ieſuite alſo thinketh.Wherfore in graunting that the virgine Marie was in her fleſh conceiued in originall ſinne,he affirmeth in a maner the ſame that we doe : for how can the ſoule remaine vnſpotted, comming into a bodie alreadie infected with originall ſinne ? But let vs examine ſome of his reaſons.

Argum. 1. Adam was a figure,as S. Paul ſaith,of him that was to come,that is, of Chriſt : but Adam was created of the earth,before it was curſed : Ergo,Chriſt alſo muſt be borne of the Virgin Marie void of curſe, and ſo free from originall ſinne : *Bellar.cap.*15.

Anſ. Firſt, the Ieſuit knoweth that theſe are but weake arguments, that are drawn from types and allegories,and conclude not. Secondly, Adam was a forme or figure of Chriſt, but not in all things,neither in this,which the Ieſuit vrgeth : but Auguſtine ſhall ſpeake for vs both, wherein he was a figure : Adam forma futuri eſt, i. Chriſti,&c. Adam was a figure of Chriſt to come, becauſe, as he was cauſe of death by eating the forbidden meat, euen vnto thoſe of his linage, which did not eat of the tree: ſo Chriſt vnto thoſe,which are of him,although they haue done nothing righteouſly in themſelues, hath giuen righteouſnes by his croſſe. Cont. Iulian. lib. 1. The words alſo of the Apoſtle doe carrie the ſame ſenſe : for in the ſame verſe he ſaith,That death hath reigned euen ouer thoſe, that ſinned not after the manner of the tranſgreſſion of Adam, verſ. 14. that is,ouer children : ſo that this muſt be the meaning: That as Adams ſinne extended to thoſe that committed it not, ſo Chriſts righteouſneſſe is applyed to thoſe that wrought it not : herein then is Adam a figure of Chriſt. 3. And yet if we ſtretch this allegorie to this point,which the Ieſuit vrgeth, it will onely enforce the virginitie of Marie, not her freedome from ſinne : as Auguſtine elſewhere maketh this alluſion : Adam de terra virgine natus, Chriſtus de Maria virgine procreatus : As Adam De tempor. Serm.77.

was made of the earth, being yet a virgine that had brought forth none before; ſo Chriſt alſo was borne of the virgine Mary.

Argum.2. Thou art all faire my loue,and there is no ſpot in thee,Cantic.4.7. this is vnderſtood of the virgine Mary: Ergo, ſhe was without ſpot,Bellar. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, S. Paul I thinke vnderſtood this place better than the Ieſuit doth: the Apoſtle applyeth it to the Church of Chriſt, That he might make it to himſelfe a glorious Church,without ſpot or wrinckle,Epheſ.5.27. Secondly, Chriſt maketh it without ſpot by ſanctifying it and waſhing it in his bloud: this place therefore ſerueth not for any originall pureneſſe by nature.

The Proteſtants.

THat the virgine Mary was both conceiued in ſinne, and was alſo ſubiect to actuall ſinnes in her life, as other of the children of God: thus out of the ſcripture we doe declare it.

1 How elſe can the word of God be true,that ſaith, All haue ſinned,Rom.3.23.and 5.12? They will anſwer,that Mary had an eſpeciall priuiledge: then let them ſhew it out of the word of God, and we wil beleeue it:otherwiſe the generall concluſion muſt ſtand,that All haue ſinned. Againe, Marie her ſelfe in her ſong,calleth Chriſt her Sauiour,Luk.1.47. Ergo, ſhe was a ſinner: for how elſe could ſhe be ſaued from her ſinnes which ſhe had not? If they anſwere as they do,that Chriſt Fox.p.801. was her Sauiour only, becauſe he preſerued her from ſinne: we doe thus reply. Firſt, that a Sauiour in ſcripture is defined to be hee that ſaueth the people from their ſinnes, Matth.1.21. not that preſerueth onely. Secondly, if Mary were free from originall ſinne, as they ſay ſhe was, ſhe needed not a Sauiour to keepe her from ſinne, for ſhe might haue preſerued her ſelfe.

Argum.2. Mary died: Ergo,ſhe was a ſinner: for ſinne brought death into the world, Rom.5.12. If ſhee had had no ſinne, ſhee had not died. Chriſt indeed, though he were no ſinner, yet hee bare our ſinnes, and therefore dyed for vs.

Theſe places alſo may be vrged: In whome, that is,in Adam,all haue ſinned,Rom.5.12.As in Adam all die, ſo in Chriſt we ſhall be made aliue, 1.Cor.15.22. and Chriſt died for all, 2.Corin.5.15. Therfore the virgine Mary alſo ſinned,and was dead in Adam,and Chriſt died for her: Ergo, ſhe was a ſinner.

Anſ.1. Mary ſinned potentially in Adams loynes: and in that reſpect wee confeſſe ſhee was redeemed by the bloud of Chriſt: and though by nature ſhe had an abilitie to ſinne,yet was ſhee preuented by grace, Bellar. cap.16.

Contra.1. If ſhe ſinned onely as ſhe was in Adams loynes,then all that were in Adames loynes ſinned,ſo Chriſt ſhall be counted in the number of ſinners. 2. As we ſinned in Adam,ſo we are made righteous by Chriſt; but we are not potentially made righteous, but verily and indeed: Ergo, if Mary haue life and righteouſnes in Chriſt, ſhe ſinned more then potentially in Adam. 3. She was preuented, you ſay, by grace, and kept from ſinne, Vt ſimul eſſe, & iuſta eſſe inciperet: That ſhe began to haue her being, and to be iuſt at one time. How then is it true,as you confeſſe, that Mary was redeemed by the bloud of Chriſt, and that Chriſt dyed for her? For Chriſt dyed for vs,while we were yet ſinners, Rom.5.8. and reconciled vs being enemies,verſ.10. Ergo, Mary was ſometime both a ſinner, and an enimie to God, if ſhe haue any benefit by Chriſts death: for redemption and freedome purchaſed,betokeneth bondage and ſlauerie before.

Chriſt checked and rebuked his mother,Ioh.2.4. Woman what haue I to doe with thee? Ergo, it ſeemeth ſhe was not without fault. Rhemiſt. Anſw. It was rather a doctrine to others, to teach them not to doe any thing for reſpect of kinred, againſt reaſon, then a reprehenſion to Mary. We reply: But I pray you, how could the Apoſtles learne to beware of that fault, if it had been no fault in Mary? How could they be admoniſhed in her,if ſhe were not firſt her ſelfe admoniſhed? And the manner of ſpeech ſheweth, it was a rebuke, Chriſt ſaluting her by no other name,then if he had ſpoken to any other woman.

Argum.3. The Papiſts themſelues are in a ſtagger,and dare not conſtantly affirme,that Mary was conceiued without ſinne,but put in this clauſe(as many godly deuout men iudge) Rhemiſt. Rom.5.ſect.9. And Bellarmine ſaith, In maiori parte Eccleſiæ pie credi: That the greater part of the Church doth ſo godly beleeue,yet he dare not determine vpon it himſelfe,De cult.ſanct.lib.3.c.16. But why are they afraid to hold it as an vndoubted truth, ſeeing Pope Sixtus hath cleerly deter- Fox.p.800. mined,that it was ſo,forbidding the Dominicke Friers to preach the contrary,and hereupon erected a newe holy day of her Conception? Here then they are driuen to a great ſtreight: for either they muſt abſolutely hold, that ſhe was not conceiued in ſinne, againſt the Maſter of ſentences, and Thomas Aquinas,with other Schoolemen; or els hold the contrarie, and ſo confeſſe the Pope to haue been in error.

I maruaile, that the Ieſuite is not aſhamed to ſay, that Pope Sixtus the fourth left this queſtion of the virgine Maries conception vndetermined; ſeeing he erected an holy day in memorie of her conception: and tooke part with the Franciſcanes, that held her pure and vndefiled conception,againſt the Dominickes that maintained the contrary: yea and the ſame Pope vpon this occaſion added this clauſe to the Aue Marie: Et benedicta ſit Anna mater tua, de qua ſine macula tua proceſſit caro virginea: And bleſſed be Anna thy mother, of whom thy virgins fleſh proceeded without blot of originall ſinne: granting alſo great Indulgence, and releaſe of ſinnes, to all thoſe that would inuocate the bleſſed Virgine with the ſame addition. For all theſe euident and ſubſtantiall proues, which make this matter as cleere as noone day: yet Bellarmine would face vs downe, that this Pope holy father concluded no ſuch thing, but left it as a matter indifferent, cap. 15. It was alſo thus determined, Concil. Baſilienſ. ſeſſ. 36. Doctrinam illam diſſerentem glorioſam Virginem ſemper immunem fuiſſe ab omni originali & actuali peccato, tanquam piam & catholicæ fidei conſonam definimus, nullique de cætero licitum eſſe contrarium prædicare, aut docere: This doctrine, that the glorious Virgine was free from all ſinne originall and actuall, we define to be a godly doctrine and conſonant to the faith, and that no man teach the contrary. And extrauag. commun. lib. 3. tit. 12. cap. 2. Sixtus 4. decreeth all thoſe to be heretikes, which affirme the Virgin Marie to haue been conceaued in originall ſinne. How then is this matter left vndetermined?

De ſanct. virginit. cap. 4. Auguſtine ſaith, Beatior Maria percipiendo fidem Chriſti, quàm concipiendo carnem Chriſti: materna propinquitas nihil Mariæ profuiſſet, niſi fœliciùs Chriſtum corde, quàm carne geſtaſſet. Marie was more happie in perceiuing the faith of Chriſt, then in conceiuing the fleſh of Chriſt: neither had it profited her to be the mother of Chriſt, if ſhe had not more happily borne him in her heart, then ſhe did in her wombe. But what neede had Marie to beleeue in Chriſt, if ſhe had been pure from her natiuitie, and had no ſinnes to be forgiuen her?

In Pſal. 34. conci. 2. Auguſtine yet more plainly ſaith, Maria ex Adam mortua propter peccatum Adæ: Adam mortuus eſt propter peccatum, & caro domini ex Maria mortua eſt propter delenda peccata: Marie dyed being borne of Adam, becauſe of the ſinne of Adam: Adam dyed becauſe of his owne ſinne: Chriſt dyed in the fleſh to take away our ſinnes: Ergo, Marie by his ſentence was borne in the ſinne of Adam.

Auguſtine further ſaith, Nullus exiſtit homo, de quo in hac vita conſtituto veraciter dici poteſt, quod nullum habeat peccatum excepto vno mediatore: There is no man liuing of whom it may be truly ſaid, that he hath no ſinne, our Mediator onely excepted: Contr. Pelag. lib. 2. 29. What now is become of the Virgine Marie? ſhe is found to be a ſinner with the reſt.

Leo epiſtol. 91. cap. 9. thus writeth againſt the Priſcillianiſts that ſaid, the children of promiſe were borne of women, but conceiued of the holy Ghoſt: Quod catholicæ fidei repugnans, atque contrarium eſt, &c. Which aſſertion, ſaith he, is repugnant and contrarie to the Catholike faith, which confeſſeth that euery man receiueth life in his mothers wombe, that contagion of ſinne and mortalitie remayning, which is deriued into the offſpring from the firſt parent: but they are regenerate and made the children of promiſe by the holy Ghoſt in the Sacrament of Regeneration, not in the wombe of fleſh: but in the efficacie of Baptiſme. Here this Catholike Biſhop concludeth all men vnder originall ſinne in the wombe, there is no exception made of the Virgine Marie.

Origen ſaith; Solus Chriſtus ſine macula eſt, &c. Onely Chriſt is without ſpot, who did no ſinne, &c. hom. 1. in Leuitic. and S. Hierome. Concluſit Deus omnes ſub peccato, &c. God hath ſhut vp all vnder ſinne, to haue mercie vpon all, onely he is excepted, which did no ſinne, neither any guile found in his mouth, Algaſ. quæſt. 8. If onely Chriſt be excepted, then not the virgin Marie.

See the Teſtimonie of Maſter Philpot holy Martyr: Praiſed be God, that hath giuen you this ſorrowfull heart in reſpect of righteouſneſſe, and I pray you let me be partaker of theſe godly ſorrowes for ſinne, which be the teſtimonie of the preſence of the holy Ghoſt: did not the ſword of ſorrow pierce the heart of the elect and bleſſed mother of our Lord? did not Peter weepe bitterly for his ſinnes? &c. pag. 1833. Epiſtol. ad Ioan. Careleſſ. This holy Martyr confeſſeth, that the virgin Mary was a ſinner, and that ſhe ſorrowed for her ſinne.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER MARY vowed Virginitie before the Annuntiation.

The Papiſts.

81. Error. THey would gather and conclude ſo much out of the anſwere of Marie to the Angell, who told her, ſhe ſhould conceiue and beare a ſonne: How can this be (ſaith ſhe) ſeeing I know no man? That is, ſhe plainely declareth, ſhe could haue no child by knowing a man, becauſe of her vow, for otherwiſe ſhe needed not haue asked ſuch a queſtion, how a woman might haue a ſonne promiſed her, if ſhe had married to haue carnall copulation. Rhemiſt. Luke 1. ſect. 13. Bellarm. de Monachis cap. 22.

Anſw. Firſt, Origen thinketh, that this queſtion of the Virgin Marie (how can this be) proceeded from doubtfulneſſe, and ſome incredulitie or hardnes of beliefe: as thus he writeth, homil. 1. in Geneſ. Si dixiſſet Scriptura, creſcite, &c. If the Scripture had ſaid, encreaſe and multiplie, not adding further, he made them male and female, he might haue beene incredulous of this bleſſing, as the virgin Marie was of the Angels bleſſing, ſaying, how can this be? Wherefore Bellarmine needed not ſo to take vp Caluine, as deuiſer of a new fantaſie, in imputing ſome doubting to the Virgin; ſeeing this ancient father before him long agoe ſo affirmed.

Secondly, Ambroſe maketh this to be the cauſe why Marie ſo anſwered, ſhe had read the Prophecie of Eſay, that a Virgin ſhould conceaue and bring forth a ſonne, and therefore knew very well, that this holy child ſhould be otherwiſe conceaued, then by the knowledge or helpe of man, Fulke ibid. Thirdly, as alſo the Angell deliuering at once his whole meſſage, and ſhewing what manner of childe it ſhould be, euen the ſonne of the moſt High, who ſhould ſit on the throne of Dauid, and of his kingdome there ſhould be no end: that is, that the child ſhould be the Sonne of God: ſhe ſtraightwayes conceiued that ſuch a holy ſeede could not be borne of man, and therefore asketh, How without man he might be borne. Sic Caluin. Beza.

Bellarmine replieth, Firſt, that it is like the Virgin Mary was ignorant of the Prophecie of Iſay, that Chriſt ſhould be borne of a Virgin, *lib.*1.*de monach.cap.*22.

Contra. Firſt, it is a wonder, that they which do in other things aduance the Virgin Marie aboue the ſtate of a woman or creature, making her equall to the Angels, ſhould now ſo much depreſſe her, imputing vnto the mother of Chriſt ſo groſſe ignorance, as not to know the moſt manifeſt Prophecies of Chriſt. Secondly, it is vntrue, that ſhee knew not the Prophets, as may appeare by her ſong, *Luc.*2.*verſ.*55. As he hath ſpoken to our forefathers, to Abraham, and his ſeede.

Secondly. ſaith he, ſhe was a moſt humble Virgine, and therefore would not curiouſly ſearch after the manner, how this child ſhould be borne, ibid.

Contra. Firſt, it is no curioſitie, to deſire to be further inſtructed for the confirmation of our faith, but godly ſimplicitie: as it was no curioſitie in Gedeon to deſire to be confirmed in his calling by the ſigne of the fleece, Iudg.6.36. Secondly, it proceedeth rather of pride and curioſitie, not to ſeeke to be confirmed, or to refuſe the meanes of our further ſtrengthning, as Ahaz is reproued, becauſe hee would not aske a ſigne of the Lorde for his further confirmation, Iſay 7.12.

The Proteſtants.

THat Mary, as ſhe was an entire virgin before the birth of Chriſt, ſo that ſhe continued alſo a virgin all her life after, we doe verely thinke, and condemne their opinion that hold the contrarie: but that ſhe vowed or purpoſed virginitie, before the meſſage of the Angell was brought vnto her, it is raſhly without Scripture, nay rather againſt it, affirmed.

*Argum.*1. The text is plaine, that they had a purpoſe to conſummate their mariage: when as Mary was betrothed to Ioſeph, before they came together, Matth.1.18. Ergo, there was a meaning to come together, if ſhe had not in the meane time been found to be with childe of the holie Ghoſt: for otherwiſe, it ſhould ſeeme to haue beene a mockerie on Maries behalfe, to promiſe mariage to Ioſeph, without any purpoſe to performe the dutie of mariage. But if it were done with both their conſents, then mocked they with God, who inſtituted mariage for ſome end and purpoſe, which could not be attained out of mariage: for they ſhould haue maried neither for auoyding fornication, nor for procreation, which are the two chiefe ends of mariage: as for the third, which is mutuall comfort, it ariſeth of the former.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that this vow of Mary was no hinderance to their mariage, in as much as ſhe knew by reuelation, that Ioſeph would neuer exact mariage duties of her: *Bellarm.lib.*2.*de monach.cap.*22.

Contra. 1. Thus they build their fanſies vpon deuiſed dreames and ſpeculations, Scripture they haue none for Maries vow, and therefore they ground it vpon their owne conceits. 2. If Marie had any ſuch reuelation, it is like alſo it was reuealed vnto her, for what cauſe Ioſeph ſhould forbeare her companie; but this is contrarie to the Scripture: for it appeareth by the annunciation of the Angell vnto Marie, when ſhe muſed with her ſelfe, what manner of ſalutation that ſhould bee, Luk.1.verſ.28. that ſhe was not vſed or accuſtomed to ſuch reuelations and viſions. 3. Your Maſter of Sentences thinketh that Ioſeph alſo purpoſed virginitie, *lib.*4.*diſtinct.*30.b. If they both purpoſed virginitie, and yet contracted mariage, how was it not a kinde of mockerie, or deceit in them? 4. Your owne Doctors are vncertaine what to hold: Thomas Aquinas thinketh, that Mary made not an abſolute vow before the eſpouſals; Scotus affirmeth ſhe did: wherefore agree firſt among your ſelues, and let vs know your mind, and you ſhal haue our anſwere.

*Argum.*2. It was not the manner among the Iewes to vow virginitie, but it was rather a ſhame and reproch to remaine and die a virgin: and therefore Iephtahs daughter lamented her virginitie, Iudg.11.38. How then could Mary bee induced contrarie to the cuſtome of the Church, to vow virginitie? Yea Auguſtine confeſſeth as much: Hoc mores Iſraelitarum recuſabant: The manners of the Iſraelites did not ſuffer it, *de Virginit.cap.*4. though he himſelfe elſewhere, and in the ſame place ſeemeth to incline to the contrarie opinion.

Againe, if Mary vowed virginitie, ſhe vowed alſo againſt the bearing of children, and ſo her vow ſhould haue hindred the accompliſhment of that meſſage, which the Angell brought vnto her: for ſhe vowed not to bee a mother, if ſhe vowed any thing, then had ſhe vowed againſt her ſelfe, who was choſen then to be the mother of our Lord.

The Arauſicane Councell ſaith: Concil.2.can.11.Nemo quicquam rectè Deo vouerit, niſi ab ipſo acceperit, ſicut legitur, quæ de manu tua accepimus, damus tibi, 1.Chron.29. No man can rightly vow any thing to God, vnleſſe he haue receiued it of God, as wee reade, that which we haue receiued at thy hands we giue vnto thee: Mary therefore ſhould not haue done well to haue vowed virginitie, hauing not at that time receiued the gift, when ſhe eſpouſed her ſelfe to Ioſeph. It is ſufficient for vs to know, that Mary was both before Chriſts natiuitie, and after ſo continued an vndefiled virgin: As Ambroſe ſaith, Synod.Telenſ. Quæ eſt illa porta, quæ manet clauſa, & nemo pertranſibit per eam ſed ſolus Deus Iſrael, Ezech.44.nonne hæc porta Maria eſt, per quam in hunc mundum redemptor intrauit? What is that gate which remaineth ſhut, and no man ſhall paſſe thorough it but onely the God of Iſrael? is not the Virgin Mary this gate, by the which the Redeemer came into this world?

Let vs ſee their owne decrees: Part.2.cauſ.27.qu.2.cap.44. Inuenta eſt habens in vtero,&c. Mary was found to be with childe, of Ioſeph, who though he did not touch her, yet knew almoſt all the ſecrets, vxoris futuræ, of her that was to be his wife. And cap.40.Licentia maritali, By the right and power of an husband Ioſeph found her to bee with childe, &c. This then being knowne to Ioſeph, that ſhe was with childe, and not to others, ſheweth, that ſhe was in ſubiection to Ioſeph, as his eſpouſed wife: and therefore no ſuch vowed virginitie.

Saint Ambroſe alſo thus writeth: Ecce ancilla, apparatus eſt officij; contingat mihi, conceptus eſt voti: Behold thy handmaid, here is the yeelding of her dutie and obedience; be it vnto me according to thy word, here is the conceiuing of her vow, lib.2.in Luc. Saint Ambroſe maketh this to bee her vow, namely, that ſhe might beare this holy childe without the ſeede of man: and this vow taketh beginning after the annunciation, not before, which was long after the eſpouſals.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE ASſumption of the Virgin Marie.

The Papiſts.

82.Error. THey report the ſtorie of the death and departure of the Virgin Mary, after this manner: At the time of her death after ſhe had liued ſixtie three yeeres, all the Apoſtles, being diſperſed into diuers nations, were miraculouſly brought together to Ieruſalem, to ſolemnize her funerall. They buried her in Gethſemani: and for three daies together the Angels were heard to ſing melodious ſongs: At three daies end alſo Saint Thomas came; who being deſirous to ſee her bodie, and not finding it in the graue, they thereupon aſſuredly deemed that her body was aſſumpted into heauen, *Rhemiſt.Act.*1.*verſ.*14.

*Argum.*1. It is beſt agreeable to the priuiledge of the mother of God, not to ſee corruption, Rhemiſt.ibid. Seeing alſo her ſonne was exempted from corruption, & natura Mariæ excipitur, the nature of Marie muſt be excepted: caro enim Ieſu eſt caro Mariæ, the fleſh of Ieſus is the fleſh of Marie. And ſeeing Chriſt came to fulfill the law, which ſaith, Honor thy parents: it is very like, eum in morte ſpeciali gratia eam honoraſſe, that he did honor her by ſpeciall grace in her death. Theſe reaſons and other are to be read in a forged booke amongſt Auguſtines workes, bearing title, De aſſumptione Mariæ.

Anſ. Firſt, there is no credit to bee giuen to the forged writings which paſſe vnder the name of Saint Denis, and Athanaſius, out of whom they doe report the aſſumption of Mary, nay their owne leſſon, which they reade vpon the Aſſumption day, doth controll and confute the other. Firſt, that ſtorie ſaith, that without doubt ſhe was taken vp in bodie: but your leſſon leaueth it as vncertaine, whether ſhe were raiſed vp in bodie or not. Secondly, the forged ſtorie ſaith, ſhe was buried in Gethſemani, which was in Mount Oliuet: your leſſon ſaith, that the place of her buriall is in the midſt of the valley of Iehoſaphat, which is betweene Mount Oliuet and the citie, Fulk.ibid.

Secondly, it followeth not becauſe Chriſt tooke fleſh of the Virgin, that therefore ſhe ſhould alſo as well be exempted from corruption: for he tooke fleſh alſo of Dauid, and other his progenitors, who by the ſame reaſon ſhould be made immortall. And if ſhe were priuiledged by being the mother of Chriſt, from ſeeing corruption; why not alſo from hauing any ſinne? for her ſonne after the fleſh ſaw neither.

Thirdly, Chriſt alſo both did and might honour his mother as he was man, though ſo great a priuiledge be not graunted vnto her. The reuerence which was to bee done to his mother, was in regard of his manhood, and ſo was he obedient vnto them, Luk.2.51. and ſo long as he liued in the fleſh: and therefore he did care for her euen vpon the croſſe, commending her to the diſciple whom he loued. But he neither was to honour her as he was God, and therefore not to free her from corruption, which had bin a worke of his Godhead: and the naturall affection and honour due vnto parents ceaſeth after this life. It were then too groſſe a conceit, to thinke that Chriſt hath ſuch regard now of the Virgin Mary in heauen, as he had of her, being his mother, in the daies of his fleſh: for Chriſt, as he is not now knowne after the fleſh, 2.Corinth. 5.16. ſo neither knoweth he any after the fleſh.

The Proteſtants.

THis vncertaine report of the aſſumption of Mary, with other circumſtances thereof, wee hold to be a very counterfeit ſtorie, and worthie of no credit.

*Argum.*1. If it were a matter of ſuch waight, as they make it, who haue erected a new found holy-day of the aſſumption of Mary, ſurely the Scriptures would not haue been ſilent therein: eſpecially Saint Iohn (as Auguſtine ſaith) to whoſe charge ſhe was committed, would haue left ſomewhat in writing of that matter: for (ſaith he) Nullus fidelius id narrare potuerit, for no man could more truly and faithfully make relation thereof.

De Sanct. ſerm.35.

*Argum.*2. That generall ſentence pronounced vpon Adam and all Adams ſeede, muſt needes alſo take place in the Virgin Mary, Thou art duſt, and to duſt ſhalt thou returne, Geneſ.3.19. Chriſt onely is excepted, and that by the teſtimonie of the word of God: wherefore, vnleſſe this priuiledge of the Virgin could bee proued out of Scripture, as Chriſt is, wee muſt needes hold her ſubiect to that generall law of corruption.

Auguſtine ſaith, Aſſumptio eius in apocrypha non in catholica reperitur hiſtoria: The aſſumption of Mary is found in an Apocryphal, that is, an obſcure and vncertaine, not a Catholike or authenticall ſtorie.

Gelaſius decr. de Apocryphis: Liber qui appellatur tranſitus ſeu aſſumptio Mariæ, Apocryphus: The booke called the paſſage, or aſſumption of Mary, is Apocryphall: And in the end of the decree, he doth anathematize this booke and other the like, cum ſuis authoribus hæreticis, with heretikes the authors thereof. Gelaſius thought ſome heretike to bee the inuentor of this fable of Mary her aſſumption.

There is a booke intituled, Of the aſſumption of Mary, bearing S.Hieromes name, the author thereof ſeemeth to be more reaſonable concerning this point, than our new Maſters of poperie: firſt, whereas the tombe, where Mary is ſaid to haue been buried, was found emptie; the like (ſaith the author) many doe report of Saint Iohn the Euangeliſts graue, that there was nothing, but Manna, found therein: Veruntamen, quid horum verius cenſeatur, ambigimus, Wee are in doubt, which of theſe ſhould bee moſt true. Secondly, after the ſame manner diuers learned doe thinke (ſaith he) that they roſe for euer, that were ſeene in the citie, out of their graues, at the reſurrection of Chriſt, and Dauid amongſt the reſt: and therefore Saint Peter durſt not ſay, whoſe bodie, but whoſe graue is with vs, Act.2. for his bodie being riſen, the graue was emptie. Like to this fanſie he thinketh the ſtorie of Maries aſſumption to be. Thirdly, he thus concludeth, Melius Deo totum, cui nihil eſt impoſſibile, committimus &c. It is better to leaue this matter to God, to whom nothing is impoſſible, then to define of our owne authoritie, that which wee cannot prooue. Thus farre that author.

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE HONOR and worſhip of the Virgin Mary.

The Papiſts.

THey doe aſcribe vnto her a kinde of religious honor, more then to any of the Saints beſide: For whereas they call the worſhip of Saints, δουλεῖα, ſeruice; the honour of the Virgin, they tearme, ὑπερδουλεῖα, a higher kinde of ſeruice, *Bellar. de Sanct. lib.2. cap.*15. They call her Regina mundi, ſcala cœli, thronus Dei, ianua paradiſi, The Queene of the world, the ladder of heauen, the throne of God, and gate of paradiſe: yea, they giue her iuriſdiction ouer her ſonne, Iube natum, command thy ſonne, Iure matris impera filio, commaund thy ſonne by the right of a mother: Coge Deum, compell God to be mercifull to ſinners, annot. Fulk. 1.15.

83.Error.

Againe, they ſay, ſhe is to be honoured with the feaſts of her Natiuitie, Aſſumption, and Conception: for the other two, of her Purification, and Annunciation, are not proper to the Virgin, but concerne Chriſt: the one his Conception, the other his Preſentation, Rhemiſt. actor. 1. *ſect.*7.

Argum. She her ſelfe propheſieth of all Catholike generations, that they ſhould bleſſe her in keeping her feſtiuities and memorials: but if theſe feſtiuities of her Conception and Aſſumption be not kept, ſhe ſhould haue none at all: and ſo bee thought worthie of leſſe remembrance, than any other Saint, *Galat.*4. *ſect.*5. Rhemiſt.

The Proteſtants.

1. WE doe not celebrate any feſtiuall daies in the honour of creatures, neither of the Virgine Marie, nor any other Saint, but onely to the honor of God: and therefore the feaſts of the Annuntiation, and Purification, may much better be receiued, becauſe they belong and are referred vnto Chriſt, then the other feſtiuities of the aſſumption and conception of Marie, the inſtitution whereof was moſt ſuperſtitious: the one for the fayned aſſumption of her body, which your owne writers are vncertaine of; the other to maintaine the hereſie of the Franciſcanes, that ſhe was conceiued and borne without ſinne. As for the memorie of the Virgine Marie, it may better be kept, then by ſuch feſtiuities: as our Sauiour Chriſt taught to keepe the remembrance of Marie Magdalen, by preaching the Goſpell, Matth.26.13.*Fulk.annot.Act.*1.7. And if they onely are Catholike generations, that call her bleſſed in keeping theſe feſtiuities in her memoriall: then there were no Catholike generations for many hundred yeeres after, and ſo doe you condemne the age of the Apoſtles: for neither then, nor many yeeres after were theſe ſuperſtitious feſtiuities heard of. But Marie ſaith in her ſong, From henceforth, euen from this time forward, ſhall all generations call me bleſſed: ſo that, if her bleſſednes had conſiſted in the memorie of thoſe dayes, they ſhould immediately haue been kept, eſpecially the day of her natiuitie.

2 We doe allow all praiſe giuen vnto the virgin, without the diſhonor of God and her Sonne and Sauiour Chriſt: we doe acknowledge the honour that God vouchſafed her, not to be a meritorious or principall efficient cauſe of our redemption, but onely an holy veſſell, and inſtrumentall cauſe of the conception and birth of Chriſt, by whoſe only merit and worthines our redemption is perfited, as by a proper and principall, and onely meritorious efficient cauſe thereof. And therefore, thoſe are blaſphemous titles which are giuen vnto her, to call her the ladder of heauen, and gate of Paradiſe, and ſuch like: and ſo in a manner to make her our redeemer. Auguſtine ſaith, Shee was more happie, in that ſhee conceiued the faith of Chriſt, than in conceiuing the fleſh of Chriſt. If then theſe titles be vnmeet for her, in reſpect that ſhe receiued the faith of Chriſt, which is common to all the children of God, then are they more vnfit, in that ſhe conceiued the fleſh of Chriſt.

De ſanct.virgine, cap.3.

3 It is great preſumption to thinke, that the virgine Mary may commaund her Sonne in heauen, ſeeing ſhe had no authoritie to commaund him vpon earth, in any thing pertaining to his office, Ioh.2.4. And now likewiſe that carnall reſpect of children to their parents ceaſeth in the kingdome of God.

As for that ſuperioritie and higher kind of honour which ſhe hath aboue all the Saints beſide, wee find no warrant out of ſcripture. Shee is reſpected now in heauen, not as ſhe bare the fleſh of Chriſt, but as ſhee liued by faith in Chriſt: ſhe alſo reioyced in God her Sauiour. The Scripture therefore maketh one condition and eſtate of all that ſhall be ſaued: and ſaith generally of all, of others as well as the virgine Chriſts mother, That they ſhall be as the Angels in heauen, Mat. 22.30. Yea, our Sauiour ſheweth, that Whoſoeuer doth the will of God, is his ſiſter, brother, and mother, Matth. 12.50. By the which we learne, that other the faithfull ſeruants of God may by their faith in Chriſt, be as well accepted of God as if they had borne Chriſt in the fleſh. Where then is that high dignitie which ſhee hath, as the mother of Chriſt, aboue all Saints? Auguſtine ſaith: Tu concinis ſine fine choris coniuncta, Angelis & Archangelis ſociata: Thou (O Virgine) doeſt reioyce being ioyned vnto the heauenly quire, being aſſociated to Angels and Archangels. He maketh her not Lady or Queene of heauen, but onely a fellow companion of the Saints and Angels.

Serm.35.de aſſump.Mariæ.

*Synod Moguntin.cap.*45.ſancti qui vitæ huius curſum beato fine clauſerunt,&c. The Saints departed, as the moſt noble members of Chriſt, muſt be honored of vs with that dutie and worſhip of loue and fellowſhip, which the Saints liuing are to be worſhipped withall. If then the moſt noble members of Chriſt are no otherwiſe to be adored, then holy men vpon earth, the Virgine Marie can haue no greater honour: for more ſhe cannot be, then a moſt noble member of Chriſt.

This truth hath been ſealed: Helen Stirke perſecuted, becauſe lying in childe bedde, ſhe refuſed to call vpon the name of the Virgine Marie, being thereto exhorted by her neighbours, but onely vpon God, for Ieſus Chriſts ſake, Fox.pag.1267.

Saint Hierome hath this ſentence writing againſt Heluidius; Inuocandus eſt Spiritus ſanctus, vt Mariæ virginitatem ſuo ſenſu, ore meo defendat,&c. The holy Spirite muſt be called vpon, to defend the virginitie of Marie by my tongue, &c. the Lord Ieſus muſt be inuocated, to deliuer from all ſuſpition the ſacred wombe, &c. God the father muſt be prayed vnto, to declare the mother of his Sonne to be a Virgin. And why, I pray you, doth he not alſo call vpon the virgin Marie to defend her owne virginitie, if ſhe be to be prayed vnto?

And concerning the feſtiuities of Marie, if you would indeed haue them ſo ſolemnely kept aboue other holy dayes, what meaneth then your owne darling Boniface 8. to preferre the feaſts, not onely of the Apoſtles and Euangeliſts, but of the foure Doctors of the Latine Church, making no mention at all of Maries feſtiuals ? for theſe are the words of the decree, Sext.decretal. lib.3. tit.22. cap.1. Meritò prouidit, Apoſtolos, Euangeliſtas et confeſſores in vniuerſali eccleſia honorificentiæ maioris impendus attollendos,&c. This Sea hath worthily prouided that the Apoſtles, Euangeliſtes and Confeſſors,ſhould through the vniuerſall Church be more highly extolled, that they may be ſo much the more honoured of the Church, as they haue more, then others, lightned the ſame. This decree preferreth the commemorations of S. Ambroſe,Gregorie,Hierome,Auguſtine, before the memorie of the virgine Marie.

AN APPENDIX OR FIFT PART, OF THE merites of the Virgine,and of the Aue Maria.

The Papiſts.

1. THey doe teach and holde, that ſhee onely amongſt all women deſerued to beare the redeemer of the world, and ſo by her merites obtayned that fauour to be the mother of Chriſt. 84.Error.

Argum. The Angell ſaluteth her, and calleth her, Full of grace, which ſheweth the prerogatiue that ſhee had aboue other women, and the worthineſſe that was in her, Rhemiſt. Luk.1. ſect.12.15.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw.1. WE acknowledge that herein ſhe was bleſſed aboue all other women, in that ſhe was choſen to be the mother of our Sauiour, and that ſhe was indued fully with the graces of the holy Ghoſt : but thoſe graces ſhe had not of her ſelfe, but of the free gift of God, without her merites : and S. Hierome ſheweth how ſhe was full of grace, Sancta Maria, quia conceperat eum,&c. Holy Marie, becauſe ſhe conceaued him, in whom the Godhead dwelled bodily, is ſaluted full of grace, tom.4.ad Principium; ſhee was full of grace, becauſe ſhee was filled with Chriſt:and as S. Ambroſe ſaith,quia gratiæ replebatur authore,becauſe ſhe was repleniſhed with the Author of grace, *lib.2. in Luc.*It was not then her owne grace, but the grace of Chriſt.

2 The word κεχαριτωμένη, ſignifieth freely beloued, not ful of grace, as it is likewiſe taken, Epheſ. 1.6. ἐχαρίτωσεν ἡμᾶς,He hath made vs accepted in his beloued Sonne.

3 She her ſelfe confeſſeth her ſelfe in her ſong,to be of a low degree,poore in ſpirit,and hungry, whom God in mercy looked vpon,Luk.1.50.whereas God ſent away the proud and rich : as the proud Phariſie that thought himſelfe rich of good workes, obtayned nothing of God, Luk.18. Wherefore if ſhe had ſtoode vpon her owne deſerts,ſhe had made her ſelfe rich, not poore : neither ſhould ſhe haue magnified the mercy of God, but his iuſtice : for when a reward is giuen according to deſert,it is of his iuſtice and not mercy.

Saint Ambroſe thus concludeth;Simul ancillam dicendo, nullam ſibi prærogatiuam tantæ gratiæ vendicauit,&c. and in calling her ſelfe handmaid,ſhee challengeth no prerogatiue of ſo great grace, for being to bring forth one, that was humble and meeke, it became her alſo to be humble.

And S. Hierome vpon thoſe words, Luc.1.48. From henceforth ſhall they call me bleſſed : Animaduerte, quòd beatam ſe eſſe dicit, non proprio merito, aut virtute,&c. Marke, that ſhee calleth her ſelfe bleſſed, not by her owne merite or vertue, but by the mercie of God dwelling in her,&c.dialog.1. aduerſ.Pelag.

Auguſtine thus commenteth vpon the words of her ſong, Magnificet anima mea Dominum, & recordetur, quòmodo nullis ſuis præcedentibus meritis, ſed ſola dei bonitate ſit ab iniquitate ſaluata: Let my ſoule praiſe the Lord,and remember, how that not by any merites going before, but through the onely gracious goodnes of God,it is deliuered from ſinne. De ſanct. virginit. Serm.35.

Bernard ſaith, Regina miſericordiæ dicitur, vt ſoli tribuamus diuinæ miſericordiæ non meritis, quod ſuper omnem creaturam præcellens,&c. She is called the Queene of mercy,that we ſhould aſcribe it only to Gods mercy,not her merits,that ſhe is exalted aboue all other creatures,Serm.ſuper ſalue Regina:Ergo,Marie not ſaued by her merites,nor conſequently the mother of Chriſt,by her merites, but onely by the meere fauour of God.

This truth alſo wanteth not the ſeale, Helen Stirke perſecuted becauſe ſhe affirmed in effect, That there was no merites in the Virgine, which procured her that honour, to be the mother of Chriſt, and to be preferred before other women, but Gods free mercy only exalted her to that eſtate,*Fox.*pag.1267.

The Papiſts.

2. THey much commend the often vſing of the Aue Marie, which is done (ſay they) to the honour of Chriſt and our Lady. 85.Error.

Argum. They be the very ſumme and abridgement of the whole Goſpell : and therefore to be vſed, Rhemiſt.Luc.1.ſect.11.

The Proteſtants.

1. YOu do ſhamefully abuſe thoſe words, in making a prayer of them, which was but a forme of ſalutation vſed by the Angell: neither can you ſay them in that ſenſe they were vttered in by the Angell. Alſo you offend in the vaine repetition of them vpon your beades, as the heathen did, Matth.6.7. and in committing idolatry, in the inuocating of the Virgine, and praying vnto her in theſe words: who is a creature,and not a God to be called vpon.

2 What myſterie ſoeuer be contained in theſe words,yet the people vnderſtand nothing at all. And though we denie not but that the words are holy and myſticall,yet it followeth not that they ſhould be vſed for a prayer.

Fox.p.800.

3 What great account they make of the Aue Marie, it may appeare by this: that they thinke they may alter and change it, and adde to it at their pleaſure: as by Pope Sixtus the fourth, there was a clauſe more added vnto the common Aue Marie, in this manner: Haile Marie full of grace, the Lord is with thee,bleſſed art thou amongſt women, and bleſſed is the fruit of thy wombe Ieſus Chriſt,and bleſſed is Anna thy mother, of whom thy virgines fleſh hath proceeded without blotte of originall ſinne. What a fearefull thing is this, that they ſhould thus dare to adde vnto the Scriptures? How can they now eſcape that iudgement that is threatned againſt al thoſe that doe adde,or take, ought to or from the word of God? Apocal.22.18.

That the Aue Marie is no prayer,nor to be vſed as a prayer ,we haue the glorious teſtimonie of the holy martyrs, Claudius Monerius Martyr, being asked whether it were not good to ſalute the Bleſſed Virgine with the Aue Marie, made this anſwere: When ſhe was on earth, ſhe had then neede of the Angels greeting,for then ſhe had neede of ſaluation,as well as another: but now ſhe is bleſſed,that no more bleſſing can be wiſhed to her,Fox.pag.905.col.1.

Benet Romaine,a French Martyr,becauſe he refuſed to ſay the Aue Maria,was tormented of the Friers,pag.926.col.2.

Maſter Latimer B. Martyr, moleſted and troubled for affirming, that the Aue Maria was a ſalutation onely and no prayer,pag.1736.col.2.

Thus farre of ſuch queſtions and controuerſies, as concerne the kingdome of Chriſt, which is his Church: of the which we haue now entreated at large: firſt in generall of the whole, and then of the ſeuerall parts and members thereof in order. Now follow thoſe controuerſies, which belong vnto the Prieſthood of Chriſt,the third excellent and glorious office of our Sauiour: which his Prieſthod is partly ſeene in his interceſſion and mediation for vs, partly in his ſacrifice, where we are to handle the great and waightie controuerſies of the Sacraments, by the which the ſacrifice of his death is applyed vnto vs.

THE TENTH GENERALL CONTROVERSIE, CONCERNING THE INTERCESSION AND MEDIAtion of Chriſt,whether he be only our Mediator and Interceſſor.

The Papiſts.

86.Error.

THey ſeeme in theſe very words to confeſſe, that Chriſt is the onely ſingular aduocate and patron of mankinde,that by himſelfe alone,and by his own merites procureth all grace and mercie, none asking or obtaining either grace in this life,or glory in the next, but by him.But this letteth not, but that there may be other inferiour mediatours, though not in that ſingular ſenſe,Rhemiſt.annot.1.Tim.2.ſect.4.

Argum. Chriſt is the only Sauiour and Redeemer of the world,yet the name of Sauiour and Redeemer is giuen to men in the Scriptures, as Iudg. 3.9.Othniel is called a Sauiour: Act.7.35.Moſes a Deliuerer or Redeemer: and all this without derogation to him,that in more excellent manner is the onely Sauiour of the world: Ergo,there may be alſo many mediators,in an inferiour degree to that ſingular mediatour, to offer vp our prayers,Rhemiſt.ibid.

*Anſw.*1. If Chriſt be ſufficient to procure all grace and mercy vnto vs, what need then the mediation or inuocation of Saints? for we muſt either doubt of his power, in ioyning other helpers with him, or make queſtion of his good will and readines to helpe vs, in making other mediators vnto him.

2 They make other mediators and interceſſors beſide Chriſt, euen in that high and ſingular degree: for not onely Chriſt by their doctrine, by his merites procureth grace, but other Saintes alſo by their merites, are our mediators: as it is plaine to ſee in that popiſh prayer, Tu per Thomæ ſanguinem,&c. By the blood of Thomas, which for thée he did ſpend, make vs, Chriſt, to climbe, whither Thomas did aſcend. In this blaſphemous prayer and a thouſand ſuch, they pray onely to Chriſt as God, not as Mediator; men departed, and many of them no Saints, they make their onely Mediators by their owne proper merites. See Fulke ibid.

Againe, their Saints are not onely interceſſors for grace, but conferrers of grace and helpe, which is the higheſt degree of Mediation. They appoint ſeuerall Patrones amongſt the Saintes for all purpoſes: S. Apollonia for the toothach: Saint Rooke for the peſtilence: Saint Petronil for the ague: Saint Gregorie for Schollers.: Saint Morris for Souldiers: Saint Luke for Painters: Saint Criſpin for Shoomakers: Saint Nicholas for the ſea: Saint Iodocus for corne: Saint Vrbane for wine. And thus do they not onely (as they beare vs in hand) pray for theſe graces and bleſſings, but they haue power themſelues to beſtow them.

*Anſw.*3. Concerning the name and title of Sauiour and Redeemer, we anſwere: firſt, men are called in the Scripture Deliuerers and Sauiours, in reſpect of ſome temporall deliuerance, not of the ſpirituall or eternall redemption, which belongeth onely to Chriſt: but you make your Saints mediators of eternall redemption. Secondly, they whom the Scripture calleth Redeemers and Sauiours, were appointed by God for ſuch temporall deliuerance: but you cannot ſhew the like appointment for Saints to be mediators of eternall ſaluation, though in an inferiour degree to Chriſt. Thirdly, ſeeing the name of God and Chriſt is giuen to men in the ſcriptures, as to Princes and Prophets: why may you not as well ſay, that there may be many Gods and Chriſts properly, though in an inferiour degree to him which is onely God and Chriſt, as to appoint other inferior Redeemers, Sauiours and Mediators?

See more of their arguments for the mediation of Saints againſt the onely mediation of Chriſt. contr.9.qu.3.par.2.

The Proteſtants.

WEe acknowledge but one onely Mediatour as well of interceſſion as redemption, euen Ieſus Chriſt our Lord: to whom and through whom all our prayers and ſupplications ought to be made: to him we onely pray, as being one God with the Father and the holy Ghoſt: by him and through him we onely pray, as being the onely Mediatour betweene God and man.

*Argum.*1. S. Paul ſaith, There is one Mediatour of God and men, the man Ieſus Chriſt, 1.Tim.2.5. Hence we do frame this argument: The Mediatour betweene God and men, muſt himſelfe be both God and man: but ſo is none but Chriſt: Ergo, he is the onely Mediatour. Bellarmine here anſwereth making a diſtinction of Mediators, whom at large with his ſophiſticall diſtinction ſee confuted, Contr.9.qu.3.part.2.argum.Proteſtan.3.

*Argum.*2. He is onely the Aduocate and Mediatour for our ſinnes, that is the propitiation for our ſinnes, 1.Iohn 2.1. Chriſt onely is the propitiation for our ſinnes: Ergo, the onely Mediatour.

I will adioyne other arguments for the ſole mediation of Chriſt out of the fathers, grounded vpon the Scriptures.

*Argum.*3. If any were ioyned with Chriſt in the office of mediation, the Angels are moſt like, being the next in dignitie to the Trinitie of all Gods creatures: but the Angels are not our mediatours: for Saint Paul ſaith, Galath.3. The law was giuen by the Angels in the hand of a Mediatour: wherefore Angels are not mediatours. Saint Auguſtine ſaith: Quem inuenirem, qui me reconciliaret tibi, an eundum mihi ad angelos? Whom ſhould I finde to reconcile me vnto thee? ſhould I goe to the Angels, &c. *lib.confeſſ.*10.*cap.*42.

*Argum.*4. There is one and the ſame Mediatour, both of the Law and Goſpell, as the Apoſtle ſaith, The law was giuen in the hand of a Mediatour, that is Chriſt, Galat.3.19. Thus Origen, Chryſoſtome, with moſt of the Greeke interpreters, expound this place: but the Saints could not be mediatours of the law, being not yet borne: Ergo, neither are they mediatours of the Goſpell.

*Argum.*5. There is the ſame Mediatour of the recreation of man, and redemption, which was of the creation: as Athanaſius ſaith, Vt creaturæ exiſterent, opus fuit mediatore: A mediatour was neceſſarie, that the creatures might haue a being, Epiſtol.de ſynod. Nicen.decret. But Chriſt only was the Mediatour of the creation of man, Heb.1.2. by him he made the worlds: Ergo, onely of the redemption.

*Argum.*6. He is the onely true Mediatour, as Auguſtine ſaith, Pro quo nullus interpellat, ſed ipſe pro omnibus : For whom no man prayeth, but he prayeth, for all. But the Saints had one neede of an others prayers, Chriſt onely needeth the interceſſion of none: Ergo, he is the only Mediatour.

Cont.Parmen.lib.2.c.8. Auguſtine thus further writeth vpon this place : Si Apoſtolus ita diceret,&c. If the Apoſtle had ſaid thus: If any man ſinne, you haue me a mediatour with the Father, and I doe by my prayer obtaine pardon for your ſinnes (as Parmenianus in a certaine place maketh the Biſhop a mediatour betweene the people and God:) Quis ſicut Apoſtolum Chriſti, & non ſicut Antichriſtum intueretur? Who would behold him as an Apoſtle of Chriſt, and not as Antichriſt? It is then Antichriſtian doctrine, in Auguſtines iudgement, to make any other mediatours or interceſſors beſide Chriſt.

Decretal.Gay.Licèt in conſpectu Domini pretioſa mors iuſtorum, nullius tamen inſontis occiſio redemptio fuit mundi: Although in the ſight of God, precious be the death of his Saints; yet the ſlaying of no Innocent (but Chriſt) is the redemption of the world. Againe, Non eſt redemptio captiuitatis humanæ, niſi in ſanguine eius qui dedit ſe redemptionem pro omnibus, ibidem : There is no redemption of mans captiuitie, but in his blood, that gaue himſelfe a redemption for all : Ergo, there are no more Sauiours, Redeemers, or Mediatours, but Chriſt.

Likewiſe, *Extrau.commun.lib.*3.*tit.*11.*c.*1.*Ioann.*22.Expediens immo neceſſarium æſtimamus, vt ad illum, qui ad dextram patris reſidet in excelſis,&c. We thinke it expedient, yea neceſſarie, that to him that ſitteth at the right hand in the higheſt, whom both the windes and Sea obey, wee lift vp our heart with our hands,&c. This Canon maketh no mention of any inuocation of Saints, but of praying vnto Chriſt, as not onely expedient, but neceſſarie.

I will adde alſo the teſtimonie of a learned Papiſt of their owne ſide : Maneat igitur ſuus Chriſto mediatoris,&c. Wherefore the title of Mediatour betweene God and man, reconciling and appeaſing, doth remaine vnto Chriſt, as proper vnto him, and not communicable with any creature, either man or Angell : Eſpenc.in 2.*Timoth.p.*202.d.

This doctrine hath been ſealed : Richard Feurus a French Martyr ; I beleeue, as in the worde of God is teſtified, Ieſus Chriſt to be yͤ only mediatour, and aduocate for al ſinners: albeit the Virgin Mary be a bleſſed woman, yet the office of an aduocate belongeth not vnto her, Fox.p.912.col.1.

Iohn Lambert holy Martyr : The Scripture vſeth to ſpeake but of one Mediatour, which ſignifieth a maker of peace or attonement betwixt God the Father and man, 1.*Tim.*2. there is one God and one Mediatour,&c.*Fox.pag.*1109.*reſponſ.ad articul.*15.

HERE FOLLOW SVCH CONTROVERSIES, as concerne the Sacraments of the Church.

OF the Sacraments then, we muſt firſt intreate in generall, and afterward handle them in particular.

THE ELEVENTH GENERALL CONTROVERSIE, OF THE SACRAMENTS IN GENERAL.

THis Controuerſie containeth diuers queſtions : firſt, of the nature and definition of a Sacrament. Secondly, of the efficacie and vertue of the Sacraments. Thirdly, of the number and order of the Sacraments, the difference and preeminence amongſt them. They thus follow in their order.

THE FIRST QVESTION, OF THE NAME, nature, and definition of a Sacrament.

FIRST, OF THE NAME OF a Sacrament.

The Papiſts.

Argum. Epheſ.5. verſ.31. Saint Paul calleth Matrimonie a Sacrament; This is a great Sacrament,&c.

Anſ. Firſt, the Apoſtle expoundeth himſelfe, This is a great myſterie, but I ſpeake concerning Chriſt and his Church: So then this myſterie is not in the coniunction of man and woman, but in the ſpirituall vniting of Chriſt and his Church; as S. Ambroſe alſo expoundeth this place: Sacramentum grande in vnitate viri & fæminæ. He ſignifieth that there is a great Sacrament, or myſterie, in the vnitie of man and woman: then it followeth, Nec hoc prodit, ſed aliam cauſam flagitat,&c. But the Apoſtle alleageth not this, but requireth a greater cauſe, that is of Chriſt and his Church. Secondly, if it ſhall be anſwered, that the ſpirituall vnion of Chriſt and his Church, is ſignified in Matrimonie, which is the externall ſigne or ſacrament thereof: Wee graunt, that there is ſuch a myſticall ſignification in Matrimonie; but it followeth not, that it is therefore a Sacrament, as Baptiſme and the Euchariſt are: for it being inſtituted in Paradiſe, cannot be a Sacrament of the Goſpell. Thirdly, they doe not well to tranſlate, Sacrament, ſeeing the Greeke word is myſterium, which ſignifieth a ſecret and myſticall thing, which name, as they well know, is giuen to many things in Scripture, which are no Sacraments. Wherefore this place ſheweth no ſuch ſpeciall vſe of this word Sacrament.

The Proteſtants.

THis word Sacrament, being the Latine of the Greeke word, μυςήριον, wee refuſe not to vſe, being fitly applied to the myſteries of Baptiſme and the Lords Supper, though in this ſpeciall ſenſe and ſignification, it cannot be found vſed in Scripture: the name (myſterie) is diuerſly read in the Scripture, taken ſomtime in the good part, as Rom.16.25. 1.Tim.3.16. the Goſpel is called a myſterie: ſometime in the euill, as 2.Theſſ.2.7. The myſterie of iniquitie: Apoc.17.5. the whore of Babylon is called a myſterie; yet as a ſpeciall name for the Sacraments of the Church, we finde it not expreſſed in Scripture: yet notwithſtanding we doe receiue it as a fit terme, to ſignifie the myſteries of religion.

Argum. Like as the Church of God in the diuiſion of Arrius, vſed the name, homouſion, though it were not read or found in Scripture, to expreſſe one and the ſelfe ſame ſubſtance of the Trinitie: the Arrians obiected, that the word was not to bee vſed, becauſe the Scriptures had it not: Saint Ambroſe anſwereth, Quæro ſi ita credi liceat, ſi nominari non liceat: I aske, if it be not lawfull ſo to beleeue, though not to vſe that name: If we may beleeue ſo, why not alſo profeſſe, or name it ſo? de fide orthodox.cap.3. So we ſay, that this word Sacrament being agreeable to the Scriptures in this ſenſe, which we vſe it, wee ſtand not ſo much vpon the very acception of the word in Scriptures. But as S. Hierome ſaith, Non eſt nobis cura de vocabulo, cum ſenſus ſit in tuto: Wee care not much for the word, agreeing vpon the ſenſe: aduerſ.Lucifer.

SECONDLY, OF THE DEFINITION of a Sacrament.

WE thus define a Sacrament, to be an outward viſible ſigne, repreſenting an holy, inward, ſpirituall grace, inſtituted of Chriſt, to be vſed in that manner he hath appointed, to ſeale vnto vs the promiſes of God, and to aſſure vs of the remiſſion of ſinnes, by the righteouſneſſe of faith in Chriſt, Rom.4.11.

Some things there be in this definition, that are agreed vpon betweene vs and our aduerſaries: as that the Sacraments are outward ſignes of ſpirituall and holie graces, and that there muſt be a conueniencie and agreement betweene the ſigne and the thing ſignified: that not euery thing may be repreſented by a Sacrament, but an holy and ſpirituall grace: that a Sacrament ought to be inſtituted by a diuine not an humane authoritie, Bellarm.de Sacram.in gener.lib.1.cap.9.

The ſeuerall points then wherein wee diſſent from them, and which they miſlike in this definition, are theſe: Firſt, concerning the authoritie of inſtituting a Sacrament, which wee affirme to be deriued onely from Chriſt, and manifeſtly to be proued out of the Scriptures. Secondly, of the forme and matter of the Sacraments. Thirdly, of the inſtrumentall or miniſteriall cauſe, which is the Miniſter. Fourthly, of the vſe and end of a Sacrament, whether it be a ſeale of the promiſes of God, and inſtituted for that end.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE EFFICIENT CAVSE, that is, the author or inſtitutor of a Sacrament.

The Papiſts.

THey doe willingly graunt, that neither the Apoſtles then had, nor the Church now hath authoritie to inſtitute Sacraments: but that this power is onely in Chriſt, and that the Apoſtles did but declare and deliuer that which they receiued of Chriſt: yet for the triall of this, they re- 89.Error.

fuſe to be iudged by the expreſſe word of God, but flie vnto their traditions, which they call the word of God not written, Bellarm.lib.1.de Sacram.cap.14.& 23.

Argum. The ſacrament of Baptiſme, and of the Euchariſt, were inſtituted without expreſſe warrant of Scripture: for at that time the new Teſtament was not written, when Chriſt ordained thoſe myſteries: Ergo, for the other Sacraments we neede not the expreſſe commaundement of Scripture, Bellarm.lib.1.cap.14.

Anſ. Firſt, the traditions of our Sauiour giuen vnto the Apoſtles concerning thoſe two Sacraments, were afterward written by the Apoſtles, and expreſly ſet downe in Scripture: and therefore we doubt not, but that they were of Chriſts inſtitution. But your traditions being not committed to writing, concerning your other forged ſacraments, are iuſtly ſuſpected, ſeeing the Apoſtles ſhould haue as well been charged with all the Sacraments, if Chriſt had inſtituted them, as with onely two. Secondly, how followeth it, the word of God was ſometime vnwritten, therefore it is ſo ſtill? or Chriſt, who was the author of the word written, might inſtitute Sacraments without expreſſe Scripture: Ergo, the teſtimonie of Scripture is not neceſſarie now?

The Proteſtants.

WE hold no Sacraments to bee of Chriſts inſtitution, but thoſe onely which the Scripture teſtifieth to haue been commaunded by Chriſt, as Baptiſme, Matth.28.19. the Lords Supper, Luk.22.20. The other which haue no teſtimonie of Scripture, were not appointed by Chriſt.

*Argum.*1. Saint Paul ſaith, That the Scriptures are able to make the man of God abſolute and perfect to euery good worke, 1.Timoth.3.17. But how can the Miniſter of God bee perfectly furniſhed and prepared for the worke of the Miniſterie, if he haue not ſufficient direction out of the Scriptures concerning the Sacraments of the Church? for how can he abſolutely execute euery part of his office, if he faile in the right vſe of the Sacraments? Ergo, ſeeing the Scriptures are able to make him perfect, from thence he receiueth ſufficient inſtruction for the Sacraments.

*Argum.*2. Saint Paul ſaith, ſpeaking of the Sacrament, I haue receiued of the Lord, that which I haue alſo deliuered vnto you, 1.Cor.11.23. wherefore no Sacraments ought to bee deliuered to the Church, but ſuch as haue beene receiued of Chriſt: and what is receiued of Chriſt, cannot bee ſhewed but out of the Scripture. Wherefore their opinion is more reaſonable amongſt the Papiſts, that denie all the Sacraments to haue been inſtituted of Chriſt, as Hugo, and Peter Lumbard, with other, becauſe they cannot finde all their Sacraments in Scripture, than Bellarmines aſſertion is, who graunteth, that all the Sacraments are of Chriſts inſtitution: but for the proofe thereof, he runneth from Scripture to tradition.

Auguſtine ſaith, Chriſtus ſacramentis numero pauciſſimis, obſeruatione facilimis, &c. Chriſt hath ioyned his people together by the Sacraments, few in number, eaſie in obſeruation: ſuch are Baptiſme, and the partaking of his bodie and blood. Then it followeth: Et ſi quid aliud in ſcripturis canonicis commendatur: And if any other Sacrament be commanded in the Canonicall Scripture, *Epiſt.*118. Ergo, we muſt attend vpon the Scripture and written word of God, if we wil be inſtructed aright concerning the Sacraments.

Concil.Florentin.ſeſſ.7. Andreas Coloſſenſ. Velim à vobis ampliſſimi patres doceri, &c. I would gladly learne of you (honourable fathers) whether the moſt ſacred Goſpell doe not containe the moſt certaine doctrine of our religion: I thinke, you will not (ſuch is your godlines) make other anſwere, then that the moſt abſolute knowledge of our faith is there comprehended. If the Goſpell then doe teach the perfect rule of faith, and religion, then it muſt needes inſtruct vs concerning the Sacraments, without the which our religion is not perfect.

S. Hierome ſaith, Ergo vt ad inſtitutionis plenitudinem, verbum Domini, hoc eſt Euangelium, &c. For the fuller inſtitution, I pray you diligently reade the word of the Lord, that is the Goſpell: let vs in no wiſe reſt vpon our owne iudgement, &c.

Maſter Philpot holy Martyr: Our Sauiour ſaith, Verbum quod locutus ſum, &c. The word that I haue ſpoken ſhall iudge you in the latter day; if the word ſhall iudge vs then, much more ought it to be a iudge of our doings now: Fox pag.1805. Ergo, wee ought to enterpriſe nothing in religion, without the warrant of Gods word in Scripture.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE FORME OF A Sacrament, and the manner of conſecration; and of the matter: firſt of the forme.

The Papiſts.

90. Error. THe Sacrament is not conſecrated (ſay they) by all the words of the inſtitution, but by a certaine forme of ſpeech to be vſed ouer the elements: as theſe words to be ſaid ouer the bread, This is my bodie: and the like ouer the wine, This cup is the new teſtament, &c. And in Baptiſme theſe:

In the name of the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt. Theſe are the formes of the Sacrament, and very words of conſecration,though ſpoken in a ſtraunge tongue, without further inuocation of the name of God, or giuing of thankes,or without a ſermon,which we require (as they ſay)as neceſſarie to the eſſence of a Sacrament, *Rhemiſt.*1.*Corinth.*11.*ſect.*11.15.*Bellarm.lib.*1.*de Sacrament. cap.*19.

Argum. Saint Paul ſaith, The cup of bleſſing which wee bleſſe, 1.Corinth.10.16. The Apoſtle referreth the benediction or bleſſing to the cup or Chalice, which is nothing elſe but the conſecration thereof, Rhemiſt ibid.

Anſ. Firſt,we deny not,but that to bleſſe here doth ſignifie to ſanctifie or conſecrate: but that is not done by a magicall murmuration of words ouer the Sacrament, but by the whole action according to Chriſts inſtitution,in diſtributing,receiuing,giuing of thankes: as the Apoſtle afterward ſaith in the ſame verſe,the bread which we breake,&c. which we breake,ſaith he, as before of the cup,which we bleſſe,ſhewing thus much,that the benediction conſiſteth not onely in the pronouncing of the words,but in the whole action,of taking, receiuing, breaking, diſtributing,giuing of thankes,&c. Secondly,as for the words which Chriſt vttered in the inſtitution,we rehearſe them not, as a magicall charme to bee ſaid ouer the bread and wine to conuert their ſubſtance: but to declare what they are made to vs by force of Chriſts inſtitution, namelie, his bodie and blood.

91.Error. Bellarmine alſo affirmeth,that the words of the inſtitution doe not ſerue at all for the inſtruction of the people,but onely to conſecrate the elements;and therefore they may be as well repeated in Latine,ſaith he,as in the vulgar tongue,becauſe God vnderſtandeth all languages,*cap.*19.

Argum. The words to be vſed in Baptiſme: In the name of the Father,of the Sonne,and of the holy Ghoſt,are words of inuocation or benediction,not of inſtruction.Ergo.

Anſ. Firſt,and doth he thinke, that in theſe words there is no inſtruction? how then ſaith the Apoſtle,whatſoeuer is written,is written for our learning and inſtruction,Rom.15.4. If theſe words then be written in Scripture,they are for our learning. Againe, when the whole Trinitie is named,is it no point of inſtruction to the people to know in whoſe name they are baptized? which certaine diſciples of Epheſus were ignorant of, that had not heard, whether there were an holie Ghoſt, Act.19.2.

Secondly,it is no good reaſon,that the Sacraments may bee celebrate in any tongue, becauſe God vnderſtandeth: for ſo it ſhould not be neceſſarie to vſe any tongue,becauſe God vnderſtandeth the thoughts: the prieſts intention then by this reaſon might ſerue without any words at all. Againe, if the words containe a prayer and inuocation, it is fit the people ſhould vnderſtand it, that they may giue conſent and ſay Amen to the prayer.

The Proteſtants.

B*Ellarmine* chargeth vs with three great vntruths: firſt,that we hold,that the words of inſtitution are not neceſſarie in euery Sacrament,but Baptiſme onely. Secondly,that wee ſay,a ſermon is of the eſſence of the Sacrament. Thirdly, that the words of inſtitution doe not ſerue at all towards conſecration,or benediction of the elements: but our opinion is this; We doe not hold, that it is an eſſentiall part of the Sacrament, alwaies to haue a ſermon before it, as they vnderſtand a ſermon; which notwithſtanding were moſt conuenient,and alwaies to bee wiſhed: but this wee affirme, that the ſacrament cannot be rightly miniſtred,vnleſſe there bee a declaration, and ſhewing foorth of the Lords death,not onely in the viſible action of breaking and diſtributing the elements; but alſo in ſetting foorth the end of the Lords death out of the word of God, with an exhortation to thankfulnes, which is alwaies obſerued amongſt vs in the daily celebration and receiuing of the Sacrament. Concerning the words of the inſtitution, wee alſo graunt, that they are neceſſarily to be vſed in the celebration of the Sacrament; but not as the Papiſts vſe them: For firſt,they make them not all of one value, but out of the whole inſtitution, picke out certaine conſecratorie words,as they call them: as, This is my bodie,This is the cup; whereas the other words,Take ye,eate ye, drinke ye,doe this in remembrance: doe as well belong to the inſtitution, as the other. Secondly, they ſay, that the words of inſtitution doe not ſerue any thing at all for the inſtruction of the people, to ſhew them the right vſe of the Sacrament, but onely for benediction and conſecration of the elements,*Bellarm.cap.*19. Thirdly,they doe hold,that onely by the pronouncing of thoſe words, the elements are conſecrated: whereas by the whole action, and celebration of the Sacrament, the giuing, receiuing, inuocation, thankſgiuing, according to Chriſts inſtitution, the conſecration is performed vpon the elements: *Fulk.*1.*Corint.*10.*ſect.*4.

*Argum.*1. That the words of inſtitution rehearſed, doe helpe as well to admoniſh and ſtirre vp the people to a thankfull remembrance of the death of Chriſt, as to conſecrate and bleſſe the elements,it is manifeſt: whereas Chriſt ſaith, as the words are vſually rehearſed, Doe this in remembrance of me: And S.Paul ſaith, That by receiuing the Sacrament, wee doe ſhew foorth the Lords death, 1.Cor.11.26.Ergo,the people are by the words pronounced,inſtructed and admoniſhed,and taught the right vſe of the Sacrament.

Argum.2. That the words of inſtitution doe helpe toward the benediction or conſecration of the elements,wee denie not; but not by them alone, but prayer alſo and thankſgiuing, and the whole action beſide of receiuing. To the conſecration or ſanctifying of any creature, two things are required: the word of God, and prayer, 1.Timoth.4.5. Neither the word ſanctifieth without prayer, nor prayer without the word: Ergo, to the ſanctifying and conſecrating of the Sacrament,the bare rehearſall of the inſtitution ſufficeth not, without inuocation and prayer.

Auguſtine ſaith, Accedat verbum ad elementum, & fiet Sacramentum: Let the word be ioyned to the element,and it is become a Sacrament. And in another place,he ſheweth what word he meaneth: Faciente verbo,non quia dicitur, ſed quia creditur,hoc eſt verbum fidei,quod prædicamus: The word effecteth this, not becauſe it is ſpoken or vttered, but becauſe it is beleeued: this is the word of faith,ſaith the Apoſtle, which we preach: Thus farre Auguſtine tract.in Iohan.80. Wherefore it is not the muttering of a few words in a ſtrange tongue, after the manner of inchaunters, that by any ſecret force giuen vnto them hath power to conſecrate: but the vnderſtanding,hearing,and beleeuing the inſtitution of Chriſt,with calling vpon the name of God, and thankſgiuing before him.

Alſo one of your great Maſters Innocent.3.thus decreeth: That two things are required in Baptiſme,the word and the element; Iuxta quod de verbo veritas ayt &c. Out of the word the truth thus ſaith, Goe and preach the Goſpell to euery creature, baptizing them. Here he vnderſtandeth by the word,the word preached: Decret. Greg.lib.3.tit.42.c.5.

Origen. in 15.Matth. Origen thus writeth: Quod ſanctificatur per verbum Dei & obſecrationem,non ſuapte natura ſanctificat vtentem,&c. That which is ſanctified by the word of God,doth not of it ſelfe ſanctifie the vſer, or receiuer: for ſo it ſhould ſanctifie him,that eateth vnworthily,&c.therefore then the bread of the Lord is profitable to him that eateth,when with a pure conſcience,and vnpolluted minde he is made partaker,&c. We ſee then that conſecration and benediction conſiſteth in the whole action of prayer,thankſgiuing,and faithfull receiuing,not in the pronouncing of certaine words.

Synod. Auguſtenſ.c.15. Volumus populum,quid in cuiuſque ſacramenti collatione agatur in concionibus & ſacramentorum adminiſtratione frequenter doceri: We would haue the people, when any Sacrament is conferred to be taught in Sermons, and in the adminiſtration of the Sacraments, what is there done. We ſee then that the words vſed in the diſtribution of the Sacraments,ſerue not onely to conſecrate,but to teach and inſtruct the people.

AN APPENDIX OF THIS PART, WHETHER THE forme of words in the inſtitution of the Sacraments may not be by ſome addition,or other alteration changed.

The Papiſts.

92.Error. THe words of inſtitution may be changed two manner of wayes: either ſubſtantially, when the ſenſe is alſo altered with the words; or accidentally, when the elements, or ſillables are only changed,but the ſenſe remaineth the ſame. If there be a change in the ſubſtance of the words, the Sacrament is imperfect: if the alteration be of the forme onely of words, and not of the ſenſe, the Sacrament is not deſtroyed: but he ſinneth that doth ſo alter them. Wherefore it is not lawfull any way at all to alter or chaunge the forme of words, Bellarm.cap.21.lib.1.

Argum.1. It is not lawfull to adde or take, to or from the words of Scripture, much leſſe to change the words appointed to be vſed in the Sacrament, Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. To adde or detract to or from the word of God, with a purpoſe and intent, to wreſt it to a contrary meaning,and deſtroy the true ſenſe thereof,cannot be done without great impiety: and ſuch is the manner of all heretikes: But to alleadge Scripture, in keeping ſtill the full ſenſe, though we miſſe of the words, is not to be counted ſo heynous a ſinne: we ſee the holy Apoſtles in citing textes of Scripture, doe not alwayes bind themſelnes to the very words, as Act.7.43. Heb.10.5. The Apoſtle ſaith, A body thou haſt ginen me: In the Pſalme we reade, Pſal.40.6. Mine eares haſt thon opened: diuers words,yet the ſame ſenſe: and in other ſuch places many.

De doctrin. Chriſtian.lib. 4.cap.5. Auguſtine ſaith very well, they that vnderſtand the Scripture, though they keepe not alwayes the words, are better then they that reade and vnderſtand not: Sed vtriſque ille melior, qui & cum volet,eas dicit,& ſicut oportet,intelligit: But he is better then both,that both remembreth the words, and keepeth the ſenſe too: yet he alſo deſerueth prayſe,that beareth the ſenſe in minde,though he cannot the words.

Argum.2. To change the matter of the Sacrament, as the water in Baptiſme, &c.is vnlawfull, for this were to deſtroy the Sacrament: Ergo,neither are the words to be changed. Bellar.ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, how then can your ſelues be excuſed, that in the Euchariſt, take away the one part of the matter, namely the Wine, and when you vſe it, you mingle it with water, what is this els, but to change the matter of the Sacrament? Secondly, there is not the like reaſon of the words and the matter, for the element cannot be altered or changed without corruption of it, but ſome alteration in the words may be, and yet the ſenſe remaine whole and ſound ſtill: wherefore from the change of words, to the change of the things, the argument followeth not.

The Proteſtants.

NO ſubſtantiall change (we confeſſe) is to be admitted in the forme of inſtitution, which may alter the ſenſe: neither is any particular man by himſelfe to make any accidentall change, and bring in a new forme of words, but the publike and vniforme order of the Church muſt be kept; yea, and the Church likewiſe is bound both to reteine the true ſenſe, and, as neere as may bee, the very words: but where occaſion ſerueth, to make ſome ſmall accidentall change of the words, the ſenſe being nothing diminiſhed, it is not condemned as an vnlawfull and ſinfull act.

*Argum.*1. The Euangeliſts report not all the ſame forme of words, which ſhould be vttered by our Sauiour, neither yet S.Paul fully accordeth with them, in the preciſe and ſtrickt forme of inſtitution: as by comparing of them together, it may be ſeen, Matth. 26. verſ.27.	S.Luke.cap.22.	S.Paul.

Take, eate, This is my body.	This is my body which is giuen for you, do this in remembrance of me, verſ.19.	Take, eate, this is my body which is broken for you, do this in remembrance of me, 1.Cor.11.24.
Verſ.28. This is my blood of the newe teſtament, that is ſhed for many for the remiſſion of ſinnes.	This cup is the newe teſtament in my blood which is ſhed for you.	This cup is the newe teſtament in my blood: this doe as oft as you drinke it in remembrance of me.

If it had beene a ſinne, to haue miſſed in ſome termes and ſillables, no doubt the ſpirit of God would not haue ſuffered theſe holy writers to haue made the leaſt ſcape. Is it to be thought a ſinne in the Church, which in ſteade of Take ye, eate ye, in the plurall number, hath appointed the Sacrament to be miniſtred particularly in the ſingular number, to euery of the communicants, ſaying, Take thou, eate thou, drinke thou? Wherefore all accidentall change of words carieth not with it a guilt of ſinne.

*Argum.*2. In the other ſacrament of Baptiſme, the preſcript words are to baptize in the name of the Father, of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghoſt, Matth.28. yet your owne Canons allow ſome change, and alteration in them: as *decret.part.3.diſtinct.4.c.*24. Nicolaus alloweth Baptiſme pronounced onely in the name of Chriſt: *cap.*30. Pelagius approueth Baptiſme celebrated onely in the name of the Lord: *cap.*86. Zacharias determineth the Baptiſme of a certaine Prieſt, that ſpake falſe Latine, ſaying, in nomine patria, filia & ſpirita ſancta, to be good Baptiſme: the Maſter of ſentences alſo alloweth of Baptiſme onely in the name of Chriſt, *lib.4.diſtinct.3.b.* wherefore in their owne iudgement the words may be altered.

Auguſtine indeede ſaith, Certa ſunt verba euangelica, &c. The words of the Goſpell are certaine, whereby baptiſme is conſecrated. But yet he ſaith elſwhere, In ipſo verbo aliud eſt ſonus tranſiens, aliud virtus manens: In the word ſpoken the ſound which paſſeth, is one thing, the vertue or ſenſe of the words which abideth, is another. It is then the ſenſe of the words, not the ſound or ſillables, that is certaine and permanent. Contr.Donat. de baptiſ.lib.6. cap.25. Tractat.in Iohan.80.

Againe, Auguſtine ſaith, Si non ſanctificatur aqua, &c. If the water be not ſanctified, when ſome words vnskilfully are pronounced, many as wel good, as bad men ſhould not baptize at all, &c. and this ſentence is rehearſed in the decrees, *part.3.diſt.4.c.*72. If a change proceeding of error may be tolerated, much more a change tending to edifying may be admitted, as when for, Take yee, eate yee, we ſay in the ſingular, Take and eate.

Dominicus a Soto, their owne darling, is of opinion, that the Greekes do truely baptize, ſaying thus, baptizetur ſeruus, let the ſeruant of Chriſt be baptized in this water: and yet the Latine Church vſeth to ſay: Ego baptizo, I baptize thee: Wee ſee then that there may be ſome alteration. Qu.1 art.8.

OF THE MATTER OF the Sacraments.

The Papiſts.

FOr the matter of the Sacraments, they hold it not neceſſarie to be a viſible and palpable element, but it is ſufficient, ſay they, if it be any way ſenſible, as to the eares if it be but audible onely: for in penance, they haue no materiall part, but the ſound of the words: *Bellarm.cap.*14. *lib.*1. 93. Error.

Argum. The ſenſe of hearing in the Sacraments ought not to be excluded, ſeeing they are the moſt excellent ſignes, that are perceiued of that ſenſe. Bellarmine ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, which is the moſt excellent, and fitteſt ſenſe for the Sacraments, it is not left to vs to determine, but therein we muſt follow the inſtitution of Chriſt. Secondly, the ſenſe of hearing is not permitted in the vſe of the Sacraments, ſeeing that hearing is of the word, Rom. 10. 17. which accompanieth the Sacraments. Thirdly, though hearing be the moſt excellent ſenſe for inſtruction, for faith commeth by hearing, Rom. 10. yet the ſight of the eyes ſerueth moſt fitly to confirme the weake, as it may appeare in Thomas, Iohn 20. 25. And that which we haue by hearesay, is made more euident by ſight; as Iob ſaith, 42. 5. I haue heard of thee, by the hearing of the eare, but now mine eye ſeeth thee.

The Proteſtants.

WEe define a Sacrament onely to be a viſible and tractable ſigne, obiect to the eye, taſte, and feeling, not to the eare, or any other ſenſe.

Argum. Our reaſon is this, Chriſt hath inſtituted onely two Sacraments, Baptiſme and the Euchariſt: the ſcripture in the new Teſtament maketh mention of no more: but the matter of theſe Sacramentes is onely obiect to the ſenſes of ſeeing, taſting, handling: Ergo: to this purpoſe S. Iohn, That which our eares haue heard, which we haue ſeene with our eyes, and our handes haue handled of the word of life, &c. 1. Iohn 1. 1. Theſe are the three ſenſes, wherewith Chriſt is receiued, and perceiued of vs; the word we do heare with our eares; with our eyes and hands, wee ſee Chriſt, and feele him in the Sacraments.

Hugo a popiſh writer, thus alſo defineth a Sacrament, Sacramentum eſt materiale, vel corporale elementum, &c. A Sacrament is a materiall, or corporall element; lib.1.part.9.cap.2. but a ſound is not a materiall, or corporall element: Ergo, it is no Sacrament.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE INSTRVMENTAL cauſe of the Sacraments, that is, the lawfull Miniſter.

SOme things are yeelded vnto of both ſides: Firſt, that no man ought to take vpon him to adminiſter the Sacraments, vnleſſe he be thereunto lawfully called and ordained by the Church, ſauing that they make exception of Baptiſme, which in caſe of neceſſitie, as they teach, may be giuen by the hands of lay-men or women: but of this matter we ſhall haue fitter occaſion afterward to conſider. Secondly, it is agreed, that the efficacie or vertue of the Sacrament, dependeth not of the faith or honeſty of the Miniſter: but a faithfull man may receiue the Sacrament worthily, euen at the hands of an vnworthy Miniſter.

The Papiſts.

94. Error. THe point of difference betweene vs, is this: They doe teach that the efficacie, perfection, and being of the Sacrament, doth neceſſarily depend of the intention of the Miniſter, ſo that they hold it to be no Sacrament, if the Miniſter haue not, Intentionem faciendi, quod facit eccleſia, A full purpoſe and intent in miniſtring the Sacrament, to do that which the Church doth; that is, to conſecrate the elements, & to make a Sacrament, Trid. Conc. ſeſſ.7.can.11. Bellar. c.27. So that by this rule, if the Miniſters intention be not wholy vpon the buſines he hath in hand, it ſhal be no Sacrament.

Argum. If the Miniſters intention were not neceſſary to make a Sacrament, when it chanceth that the Goſpell is read at the table by a Miniſter, there being both bread and wine ſet before him, and he in reading ſaith, This is my body, and This is my bloud, ſtraightwayes all that bread and wine ſhould be conſecrate, and become a Sacrament; but becauſe his intention is wanting, it is none, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. 1. But what if the Miniſter ſhould haue a fantaſticall conceit and intent, as he readeth, to conſecrate all the bread and wine vpon the table, then it ſhould ſeeme by your rule, that it muſt needes be a Sacrament, which were euen as abſurd a thing as the other? Secondly, there are other lets and impediments, from hauing a Sacrament at the table, then the intention of the Miniſter being wanting or kept backe: for the elements are not conſecrated, nor the Sacrament made by the bare pronouncing of the words; but the whole inſtitution ought to be obſerued: there muſt be eating, drinking, taking, and doing, all in the remembrance of the death of Chriſt: there muſt be diſtributing, receiuing, inuocation, thankſgiuing: the whole action in the Sacrament, is the conſecration thereof: theſe things then being wanting, there can be no Sacrament.

The Proteſtants.

IF the Sacrament be adminiſtred aright according to the inſtitution of Chriſt, whatſoeuer the Miniſter be, howſoeuer affected, be he neuer ſo prophane in his heart, without any godly purpoſe or intention; yet to the worthie receiuer it ceaſeth not to be a Sacrament, Caluin. in antidot. concil. Tridentin. ſeſſ.7.can.11.

Argum. 1. The word of God, with what intention ſoeuer it be preached, yet may haue his effect, and worke faith in the hearer. So Chriſt be preached (ſaith S. Paul) whether vnder pretence, or ſincerely, I therein ioy, Philip. 1.18. Ergo, the Sacraments alſo may haue their efficacie, without the intent of the Miniſter, Argum. Lutheri.

He alleadgeth alſo how Alexander B. of Alexandria ratified and confirmed the baptiſme, which Athanaſius being a child, conferred in ſporte vpon other children.

Bellarmine anſwereth to the firſt: 1. that there is not the ſame reaſon of the word and the Sacraments: for the word hath not a ſacramentall effect, neither doe the Sacraments ſerue to beget or reuiue faith, as the word doth, and therefore the word may profite without an intention, ſo cannot the Sacraments.

Contra. Though the word and the Sacraments worke not the ſame particular effect, becauſe in the Sacraments our ſenſes are more liuely touched, yet they tend both to the ſame generall end, that as the word preached begetteth faith; ſo the Sacraments increaſe and nouriſh it (as it followeth in the nexte ſection to be proued:) wherefore if the word, though the preachers intention be wanting, may beget faith, why may not the Sacraments likewiſe without the Miniſters intention nouriſh faith?

2 The Ieſuite diſtinguiſheth, Aliud eſt intendere non concionari, aliud intendere concionari, ſed ad malum finem: That it is one thing to intend not to preach; an other to haue an intention to preach, but for an euill end: of the latter (ſaith he) ſpeaketh S. Paul: and ſo he truly is ſaid to baptize, that hath an intention ſo to doe, though to an euill end: cap.28. reſpon. ad argum. 1.

Contra. 1. It is not likely that a man that is ſober minded, of diſcretion and well in his wittes, ſhould not intend to doe that thing which he doth: what intention then call you this when a man preacheth, or miniſtreth the Sacraments, to intend not to doe it, whereas the action proceedeth from the intention: and therefore this diſtinction is friuolous. 2. The Miniſter muſt haue an intent to doe that, which the Church doth: but the Church doth baptize to a good end, therefore his intention by their owne learning, will not ſerue to baptize, vnleſſe it be for the right ende. Whereas therefore he anſwereth, that Athanaſius had an intent to baptize indeede, though for a wrong ende, namely for ſport: it is both falſe, that he had ſuch an intent to make a Sacrament, being a childe, and ſporting himſelfe among his companions; and if he had, it ſhould haue been inſufficient, becauſe he propounded not to himſelfe the right end. Wherefore no ſuch intention is neceſſarie.

Argum. 2. If the effect of the Sacrament conſiſteth vpon the intention of the Miniſter, then ſhould euery man be vncertaine whether any thing be wrought in him, or he haue receiued any benefit by the Sacrament, becauſe he knoweth not the intent of another mans heart, and ſo ſhould he be depriued of the ſpirituall comfort, which he might reape by the Sacrament, Caluin.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that we may haue a certaine morall and humane, that is, a coniecturall certitude of the Sacrament, though it depend of the Miniſters intention, ibid.

Contra. The Sacraments muſt worke not a coniecturall, but an infallible certitude in vs: as it is thus ſhewed: To haue Chriſt dwelling in vs is a ſacramental worke, Ioh. 6.56. as the Papiſts vnderſtand that place of the ſacramentall eating, but we ought to be ſure of Chriſts dwelling in vs: 2. Cor. 13.5. Know ye not your ſelues how that Chriſt Ieſus is in you, &c. Ergo, we muſt be ſure of the ſacramentall worke.

Auguſtine ſaith: Sacramentum Baptiſmi tam ſacrum eſt, vt nec homicida vel ebrioſo miniſtrante polluatur: The Sacrament of Baptiſme is ſo holy, that it cannot, either by a murtherer or drunken perſon miniſtring it, be defiled. And I pray you, is it not like to be a good intention, that ſhould enter into the hearts of ſuch lewd and wicked men? Therefore without any good intention, euen by the hands of ſuch, may the Sacraments be giuen.

Tractat. 5. in Iohan.

Synod. Colonienſ. Gratia ſacramentorum non ex ipſa externarum rerum virtute, nec ex merito miniſtri, ſed ex interna & diuina operationis virtute æſtimanda eſt: The grace of the Sacraments muſt not bee eſteemed by the vertue of things externall, or the worthines of the Miniſter, but by the inward vertue of the diuine operation. But the intention of the Miniſter is no diuine thing: Ergo, &c.

We haue further euidence from their owne writings, Innocent. 4. cap. Si quis puerum, &c. affirmeth, that it is a Sacrament, etiamſi non gerat in mente facere, quod facit eccleſia, although the prieſt do not thinke in his minde to doe that, which the Church doth.

Decret. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 41. cap. 7. Innocentius decreeth againſt thoſe, qui ſuppreſſis verbis, which ſuppreſſing the words of conſecration, per hoc, quod intendit, &c. doth thinke, by that, which he intendeth, not to prouoke God, &c. From whence we may reaſon thus; Intention being preſent maketh not a Sacrament; therefore being abſent, it deſtroyeth it not.

Catharinus a learned Papiſt holdeth no ſuch intention to be requiſite, Opuſcul de intentione Miniſtri: and he alleageth Thomas in 4. diſtinct. 6. qu. 1. art. 2. q. 1. Non requiri mentalem intentionem Miniſtri, ſed ſufficere expreſſionem verborum, &c. That an intention of the minde is not neceſſarie in the Miniſter, but only an expreſſing of the words, wherein is contained the intention of the Church. Of the ſame minde alſo is the Maſter of Sentences, lib. 4. diſt. 13. b.

This doctrine alſo is ſealed: Maſter Bland holy Martyr; It is a great abſurditie that the intent of the Miniſter conſecrateth, and not the word of God: for ſo ſhould mans intent bee ſtronger then Gods word. Againe, becauſe the Sacrament is not the ſame to an vnbeleeuer, which it is to a beleeuer, the beleeuer muſt needes haue ſomewhat to doe in the conſecration, ſo that all is not in the Miniſters intention: Fox.pag.1671.col.2.

Nicholas Sheterden Martyr: Thus it ſhould bee euer doubtfull, whether the people worſhip Chriſt or bread, becauſe it is doubtfull what the Prieſts doe intend. Againe, if the minde of the Prieſt, and not the words, doe make the bread Chriſts bodie, as they ſay, if the Prieſt do then mind his harlot, or any other vaine thing, that thing ſo minded was there made, and ſo the people ſhould worſhip the Prieſts harlot in ſtead of Chriſts blood: Fox pag.1673.col.2.

THE FOVRTH PART, WHETHER THE SAcraments be ſeales of the promiſes of God.

The Papiſts.

95.Error They vtterly denie, that the Sacraments be pledges and ſeales vnto vs of the promiſes of God, or that thereby our faith is nouriſhed and confirmed, and wee aſſured of free remiſſion of ſinnes by the death of Chriſt: neither that the Sacraments were ordained for any ſuch end, Bellar. lib.1.de Sacram.cap.14.

*Argum.*1. If the Sacraments confirme vnto vs the promiſes of God in his word, then muſt they of neceſſitie be more euident, and better knowne vnto vs, then is the word of God: for that which is leſſe knowne, and not ſo notorious, cannot perſwade vs of that, which wee haue better knowledge of. But ſuch are the Sacraments, which are not ſo euident, being called myſteries of religion, as are the words of God: Ergo, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſ. Firſt, it is ſtrange to ſee, that you ſhould now contend for the euidence, and plainenes of Scripture, which you haue locked vp from the people, with no other pretence, then becauſe they are hard and obſcure, and dangerous to be read of the ſimple. Secondly, you doe not well in comparing the word and the Sacraments together: for they cannot be diuorced or ſeparated: for the word giueth life to the Sacraments, the Sacraments againe giue liuely teſtimonie and witnes to the truth of the word. But let this bee the queſtion, not whether the writing by it ſelfe, and the ſeale by it ſelfe are of greateſt force; but whether an inſtrument with a ſeale be not of greater euidence and ſtrength, then without it: So the word of God, which doth but beate vpon the ſenſe of hearing, muſt of neceſſitie, not in it ſelfe, but in reſpect of vs, worke more effectually, being ſealed by the Sacraments, where wee receiue inſtruction by two other ſenſes of ours, the ſight, and the taſte.

*Argum.*2. If the Sacraments are appointed to be ſeales of the promiſes of God, for the increaſe and ſtrengthening of our faith, then children ſhould not be baptized at all, becauſe they haue no faith to be ſtrengthened, *Bellarm.cap.14.argum.*4.

Contra. 1. This argument taketh away onely this vſe of the Sacraments in children, ſo that it holdeth notwithſtanding in all other. Secondly, although in children the ſeale goeth before, and righteouſneſſe of faith followeth after, as Circumciſion was to Iſaac, as Auguſtine ſheweth, and they as yet, when they are baptized, haue no faith to make preſent vſe of the Sacrament; yet when they come to yeeres of diſcretion, they are prouoked and ſtirred vp, by the remembrance of the ſeale of faith giuen in Baptiſme: which was indeede receiued but once, but the vſe and benefit thereof remaineth all the life long: ſo that this notwithſtanding the Sacraments are ſeales of faith, whether the ſeale goe before faith, or follow after.

*Argum.*3. If the Sacraments bee ſeales of the grace of God, to euery one that receiueth them, then they ſhould many times bee falſe ſignes, when as many vnworthie receiuers are not made partakers of grace, nor of the promiſes of God, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſ. Firſt, yet notwithſtanding are the Sacraments true and certaine ſeales on Gods behalfe, the obſtacle and impediment is in thoſe that beleeue not: The Sun is a true light to the world, yet to him that wilfully ſhutteth his eyes, it giueth no light; yet is it a true light notwithſtanding. Secondly, by this reaſon, they may make Chriſt a falſe redeemer of the world, as they make the Sacraments falſe ſeales: for euery one is not redeemed by the death of Chriſt, but only thoſe which beleeue: wherefore faith is required in them, which by the Sacraments will be aſſured of Gods promiſes.

Bellarmine replieth, Fides eſſe debet certa, Faith muſt bee certaine, and dependeth not of this condition, ſi homo credat, if a man beleeue: faith muſt be abſolute, not conditionall.

Contra. Firſt, he ſpeaketh moſt abſurdly, that faith muſt not haue any ſuch condition, if a man beleeue: as though faith could bee without beleefe: for what is beleefe, but an act of faith? Secondly, faith indeede is not conditionall, but abſolute: but faith is the condition it ſelfe, for ſaluation is not promiſed in Chriſt to any, niſi ſub conditione fidei, but vnder the condition of faith: As Philip anſwereth to the Eunuch, who ſaid, What letteth me to be baptized? If thou beleeueſt (ſaith he) with all thy heart, thou maiſt, Act.8.verſ.37. Here Baptiſme is graunted with the condition of faith.

The Proteſtants.

THat the Sacraments are ordained of God, to be pledges and ſeales of his promiſes made vnto vs in Chriſt, that as verely as the externall elements are applied to the outward man; ſo our ſoules ſpiritually are refreſhed with an aſſured hope of the remiſſion of our ſinnes in Chriſt, and ſo the Sacraments to be ſeales only of the righteouſnes of faith, and not giuers or workers of grace in vs: it is euident out of the Scripture.

Argum.1. Abraham receiued the ſigne of circumciſion, as the ſeale of the righteouſnes of faith, Rom.4.1. Circumciſion then was to Abraham a ſeale of the righteonſnes of faith, that is, that he was iuſtified by faith: Ergo, ſo are all other Sacraments.

Rhemiſt. Indeede Circumciſion was a ſeale to Abraham, for he was iuſt before, and receiued this Sacrament, as a ſeale thereof afterward. But it followeth not, that it was ſo in all: for in Iſaac his ſonne, and ſo conſequently in the reſt, the Sacrament went before, and iuſtice followed, annot. Rom.4.ſect.8. So anſwereth Bellarmine alſo, that vnto Abraham onely circumciſion was a ſeale of the righteouſnes of faith, Lib.1.de Sacram.cap.17. And he further ſaith, that the ſeale of the righteouſnes of faith, and of Gods promiſe or couenant, are not all one.

Anſ. Firſt, the promiſe of God, and the righteouſnes of faith, in effect are all one: for on Gods behalfe, it is a promiſe or couenant, on our part it is called the righteouſnes of faith: and thus the Apoſtle taketh them for the ſame, Rom.4.13. The promiſe was made to Abraham through the righteouſnes of faith. And verſ.14. If they, which are of the law, be heires, faith is made voide, and the promiſe of no effect: the nullitie of faith, and of the promiſe is all one.

Secondly, the Apoſtle ſetteth forth the example of Abraham, to ſhew how all men are iuſtified before God, and what is the vſe of the Sacraments in all men: and therefore it is no extraordinarie or exempt caſe, but the common caſe of all the faithfull, that righteouſnes (ſaith the Apoſtle) might be imputed to them alſo, Rom.4.11.

Thirdly, although Iſaac with many other, were firſt circumciſed, and after iuſtified: yet this is perpetuall, they were no more iuſtified by circumciſion, then Abraham, who was iuſtified before he was circumciſed, but by faith onely: and therefore the Sacraments are ſeales of the iuſtice of faith, whether the iuſtice of faith goe before, or follow after.

So Auguſtine ſaith, In Iſaac, qui octauo die circumciſus fuit, præceſſit ſignaculum iuſtitiæ fidei, & quoniam patris fidem imitatus eſt, ſecuta eſt in creſcente ipſa iuſtitia, cuius ſignaculum in infante præceſſerat: In Iſaac, who was circumciſed the eight day, the ſeale of the righteouſnes of faith went before: and becauſe he did follow his fathers faith, as he grew, iuſtice it ſelfe followed, the ſeale whereof went before in his infancie: Ergo, circumciſion was a ſeale as well to Iſaac as to Abraham, and ſo conſequently to all.

De Baptiſ. contr. Donatiſt. lib.4.c.24.

Argum.2. Geneſ.17.11. Circumciſion is called the ſigne of the couenant betweene God and Abraham: but Baptiſme is ſucceeded in the place of Circumciſion: Ergo, it alſo is a ſigne of Gods couenant.

Bellarm. It was a commemoratiue, not a confirmatiue ſigne; it brought to their memorie the couenant of God, it confirmed not their faith.

Contra. Firſt, verſ.9. The Lord ſaith, Thou ſhalt keepe my couenant, thou, and thy ſeede after thee, &c. Circumciſion then was a ſigne of keeping Gods couenant: but the couenant is not kept by memorie, but by faith: wherefore Circumciſion was not a ſigne to ſtirre vp the memorie onely, but alſo to helpe their faith. Secondly, the Apoſtle expounding this place, Rom.4.11. ſaith, it was a ſeale of the righteouſnes of faith: Ergo, it ſerued not for memorie, but for faith. Your owne Maſter alſo doubteth not to call Circumciſion, ſignaculum iuſtitiæ fidei, the ſeale of the righteouſnes of faith, lib.4.diſt.1.g.

Argum.3. Saint Peter ſaith, that in Baptiſme the ſtipulation or taking to witneſſe of a good conſcience before God, ſaueth vs by the reſurrection of Chriſt, 1.Pet.3.21. Whereby we doe gather, that Baptiſme is a ſeale vnto vs of Gods promiſes in Chriſt, being a liuely repreſentation of his reſurrection, and a pledge vnto vs and aſſurance of the remiſſion of ſinnes, without the which our conſcience cannot be quieted before God, as here the Apoſtle affirmeth.

Bellarmine replieth: firſt, that there is great difference betweene the teſtimonie and couenant of God, and the teſtimonie of a good conſcience: Baptiſme is here ſaid onely to ſeale or confirme the teſtimonie of our conſcience, cap.17.reſponſ.ad argum.5.

Contra. To ſeale vnto vs the promiſe of God, and to ſeale or confirme the peace of conſcience, tend both to the ſame end: for we cannot be at peace with God, vnleſſe we bee iuſtified by faith, Rom.5.1. and faith is an apprehenſion of Gods promiſes. Wherefore in Baptiſme we cannot haue peace of conſcience by the inward worke of the ſpirit, vnleſſe by faith wee bee aſſured of Gods promiſes.

Secondly, Baptiſme is here ſaid, not to ſeale vnto vs our iuſtification, but actually indeede to ſaue and iuſtifie vs, as the Arke did actually ſaue Noah from the deluge.

Contra. Firſt, if he will ſo ſtrictly vrge the figure of the Arke, then it muſt follow, as then Noah was not in hope onely, but in act ſaued from the waters; ſo wee alreadie are not onely aſſured by faith in Baptiſme, but actually ſaued indeede from euerlaſting deſtruction, which is contrarie to the Scriptures, which teach, that the ſpirit of promiſe, wherewith we are ſealed, is the earneſt penie of our inheritance, vntill the redemption: ſo that our deliuerance and redemption is not yet accompliſhed, but onely in hope and aſſurance. Secondly, Baptiſme is ſaid to ſaue vs by the reſurrection of Chriſt, becauſe by faith confirmed in Baptiſme, wee haue an infallible aſſurance in the death of Chriſt, of our ſaluation: as our Sauiour ſaith, Ioh.5.24. He that beleeueth is paſſed from death to life: he is as ſure thereof by faith, as if it were alreadie done. Wherefore this place of S. Peter, notwithſtanding his obiections, doth prooue directly that remiſſion of ſinnes is ſealed vnto vs in Baptiſme: firſt, becauſe it is a liuely repreſentation of the death and reſurrection of Chriſt, whereby we haue remiſſion of ſinnes. Secondly, becauſe wee haue peace of conſcience before God, as the Ieſuite expoundeth this place, which cannot be without remiſſion of ſinnes.

Epheſ.1.13.

Synod. Colonienſ. part.7. cap.2. Excitanda eſt fidelium fides & deuotio in Deum, vt credentes, ac diuinum myſterium intelligentes, ad Dei ac Saluatoris noſtri gratiam participandam accedant: The faith of the faithfull and their loue toward God muſt be ſtirred vp, that beleeuing, and vnderſtanding the diuine myſterie, they may come to bee partakers of the grace of God our Sauiour. Here wee ſee that by occaſion of celebrating the Sacraments, our faith is more liuely ſtirred vp.

This truth alſo is ſealed: Iohn Careleſſe Martyr; A Sacrament being miniſtred according to Chriſts inſtitution, is a viſible ſigne of an inuiſible grace, and hath the promiſe of Gods mercie annexed to it, Fox. p.1928. The Sacraments then of the Goſpell are ſeales of Gods promiſes.

THE SECOND QVESTION, OF THE efficacie and vertue of the Sacraments.

THis queſtion alſo hath diuers parts: Firſt, whether the Sacraments doe giue or conferre grace by the worke wrought. Secondly, of the difference of the Sacraments of the old and new Teſtament. Thirdly, whether the Sacraments of the new law doe imprint a ſigne or character in the ſoule, that can neuer be put out. Fourthly, of the neceſſitie of the Sacraments.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER THE SACRAments of themſelues doe giue or conferre grace.

The Papiſts.

96. Error. THe Sacraments giue grace, ex opere operato, by the worke wrought, that is, by force and vertue of the worke and word done and ſaid in the Sacrament, Rhemiſt. Act.22. ſect.1. So that not faith onely iuſtifieth, but the Sacraments alſo, and other workes of religion, Rhemiſt. Rom.6. ſect.5. The Sacraments then are immediate inſtruments and efficient cauſes of our iuſtification, not mediately, as they nouriſh and increaſe our faith, but properly and in themſelues: Faith in the receiuer giueth no efficacie to the Sacrament, but onely taketh away the lets and impediments which might hinder the efficacie of the Sacrament: as the drines of the wood maketh it to burne the better, yet is it no efficient cauſe of the burning, which is the fire onely, but onely a helpe. Thus they compare the Sacrament working of it ſelfe, to fire that burneth, and faith is as the drying of the wood, but a diſpoſing and preparing of the heart, Bellarm. lib.2. de Sacram. cap.1.

Argum.1. Be baptized and waſh away thy ſinnes, in calling on the name of the Lord, Act.22. ver.16. The Sacrament of Baptiſme doth of it ſelfe waſh away ſinnes, Rhemiſt. And wee ſee in S. Iames, that remiſſion of ſinnes is annexed to the vnction with oyle, Rhemiſt. 1. Timoth.4.14. Ergo, the Sacraments giue and conferre grace.

Anſw.1. To the firſt we anſwere, that the text ioyneth with the Sacrament, the inuocation of the name of God, to the which ſaluation is promiſed, Rom.10.13. Whoſoeuer ſhall call vpon the name of the Lord ſhall be ſaued: Wherefore that place maketh nothing for your purpoſe. Secondly, in the other place health of body is promiſed by the gift of miracles, but remiſſion of ſinnes is ſaid to be obtained by the prayer of the Elders. The prayer of faith ſhall ſaue the ſicke, Iam.5.15.

Argum.2. S. Paul ſaith, He hath cleanſed his Church, by the lauer of water in the word, Epheſ.5.26. Ergo, Baptiſme is an inſtrumental cauſe of our iuſtification; Bellarmine.

Anſ.1. It is not vnuſuall in the Scripture to call the ſigne or Sacrament by the thing ſignified: as Exod.12.11. the Paſchall Lambe is called the Paſſe-ouer, whereas it was but a ſigne and memoriall thereof. So Baptiſme is called, The lauer of regeneration, Tit.3.5. becauſe it is a ſure ſigne of our regeneration by the holy Ghoſt. Secondly, the Apoſtle in this place expoundeth himſelfe: for he ſaith, that we are waſhed by water in the word: that is, the outward element doth ſend and referre vs to the word and promiſe of God, whereof it is a ſeale.

*Argum.*3. Marke 16.16. He that ſhall beleeue, and be baptized, ſhal be ſaued. Here ſaluation is aſcribed to Baptiſme: and not to faith ſealed or confirmed by Baptiſme, for it were very prepoſterous, to put the effect before, and the cauſe after. Bellar.lib.2 cap.3.argum.2.

Anſw. Firſt, beliefe is ſet before Baptiſme, becauſe they, which were then to be baptized, were adulti, men of ſufficient yeeres, in whom faith and confeſſion of their ſinnes was firſt required: as Matth.3.6. They were baptized, confeſſing their ſinnes. Secondly, that ſaluation dependeth of faith, not of Baptiſme, it may appeare, Iohn 5.24. Hee that beleeueth, is paſſed from death to life: hee that beleeueth ſhall be ſaued: and it followeth, in this place, Hee that will not beleeue, ſhall be damned; Hee ſaith not, hee that will not be baptized: Baptiſme is ioyned notwithſtanding to beliefe, that no man ſhould neglect or deſpiſe the ordinance of God.

*Argum.*4. Our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith; Except a man be borne of water and the ſpirit, he cannot enter into the kingdome of heauen. Iohn 3.3. Here water in Baptiſme is made the cauſe of regeneration and newneſſe of life. Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. Though it be admitted, that by water here we may vnderſtand the Sacrament of Baptiſme, which notwithſtanding doth receiue a more fit and proper interpretation, as ſhall afterward be declared more fitly in the queſtion of the neceſſitie of Baptiſme; yet this place enforceth not any thing for the element, ſeeing that the ſpirit is ioyned, which giueth the efficacie to the water; as Auguſtine ſaith, to whom the Maſter of ſentences ſubſcribeth: Viſibilis ſanctificatio, quæ fit Sacramento tenus, ſine inuiſibili prodeſſe non poteſt, cùm illa ſit omnis illius vtilitas: The viſible ſanctification, which is in the Sacrament onely, doth not profite without the inuiſible, wherein conſiſteth all the vtilitie of the other. Mag.lib.4.diſtinct.4 d.

The Proteſtants.

THe Sacraments haue no power to giue or conferre grace to the receiuer: neither are they immediate inſtruments of our iuſtification: inſtrumentall meanes they are to encreaſe and confirme our faith in the promiſes of God: of themſelues they haue no operation, but as the ſpirit of God worketh by them, our internall ſenſes being moued and quickened by thoſe externall obiects. Neither doe we ſay, that the Sacraments are bare and naked ſignes of ſpirituall graces: but they doe verily exhibite and repreſent Chriſt to as many, as by faith are able and meete to apprehend him. So to conclude, looke how the word of God worketh being preached, ſo doe the Sacraments; but the word doth no otherwiſe iuſtifie vs, but by working faith at the hearing thereof: So Sacraments doe ſerue for the encreaſe of our faith: faith is not a ſeruant and handmaide to the Sacraments; (as the Ieſuite declared by the homely ſimilitude of the fire and drie wood) but faith is the more principall, and the Sacraments haue no other vſe or end, then as they are helpes for the ſtrengthening of our faith. Grace of themſelues they can giue or conferre none.

*Argum.*1. Rom.1.17. The iuſt ſhall liue by faith: Ergo, he liueth not, that is, he is not iuſtified by any worke wrought, as by the Sacraments, but onely by faith: faith therefore giueth life and efficacie to the Sacraments.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Apoſtle ſaith not, the iuſt onely liueth by faith; wherefore, although he liue by faith, he may alſo liue by the Sacraments, and other workes.

Contra. Firſt, if life be by faith, and beſide the life of the ſoule, other things are ſuperfluous; then all other meanes to life are ſuperfluous beſide faith: for what els is to be deſired but to liue? but life is by faith, therefore faith is of it ſelfe ſufficient, becauſe the effect of faith, which is life, is ſufficient: wherefore no other helps are requiſite vnto life. Secondly, to liue by faith, and for Chriſt to liue in vs, are all one, as Galat.2.20. Thus I liue, not I now, but Chriſt liueth in me; and that I now liue in the fleſh, I liue by the faith of the Sonne of God, &c. We reaſon thus: The iuſt liueth only by Chriſt; but Chriſt liueth in vs onely by faith: for the Apoſtle ſaith, In that I liue, I liue by faith. Ergo, there is no life but by faith.

*Argum.*2. The Apoſtle ſheweth, Rom.4.10.11. that righteouſneſſe was imputed to Abraham by faith, before he was circumciſed, and that circumciſion was added afterward as a ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of faith: Ergo, as Abraham was not iuſtified by circumciſion, but by faith, no more are we by the Sacraments.

Bellarmine hath nothing els to anſwere, but that this onely was a priuiledge granted to Abraham, to haue circumciſion as a ſeale and teſtimonie of his faith, *reſp.ad argum.*3.

Contra. The Apoſtle ſaith contrary, verſ.11. that he ſhould be the father of them that beleeue, not being circumciſed, that righteouſneſſe might be imputed to them alſo: the father and the ſonnes are iuſtified one and the ſame way: Abraham was not iuſtified by circumciſion, but by faith: Ergo. And verſ.23. it was not written for him onely, &c. but for vs, &c.

*Argum.*3. Saint Peter ſaith, Baptiſme ſaueth vs, not the putting away of the filth of the fleſh, but in that a good conſcience maketh requeſt vnto God, by the reſurrection of Chriſt, 1.Pet.3.21.Ergo, it is faith in the reſurrection of Chriſt, which worketh in vs peace of conſcience, and not the outward waſhing, that ſaueth or iuſtifieth.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that by the reſurrection is not vnderſtood faith in the reſurrection, but mention is made thereof, becauſe when we are baptized, we doe repreſent the reſurrection of Chriſt, and by Baptiſme do riſe vp to newneſſe of life.

Contra. Firſt, if by the reſurrection of Chriſt, nothing els were ſignified, but the repreſentation of Chriſts reſurrection in Baptiſme; it were an improper ſpeech to ſay, Baptiſme ſaueth by the reſurrection, that is, Baptiſme ſaueth by Baptiſme: wherefore ſeeing that the reſurrection of Chriſt giueth life and efficacie to Baptiſme, it is our faith in the reſurrection of Chriſt, which ſaueth vs in Baptiſme. Secondly, the Apoſtle ſaith, not the waſhing of the fleſh ſaueth: Ergo, not the externall act of the Sacrament, but the teſtimonie of a good conſcience; what is that els, but the aſſurance of faith, whereby the conſcience is ſetled as the Apoſtle ſheweth, Rom.5.1.

*Argum.*4. The Apoſtle ſaith, Epheſ.5.26. That he might cleanſe it and ſanctifie it, by the waſhing of water through the word. Here our cleanſing and ſanctifying is not aſcribed to the water, but to the word of God, that is, his gracious promiſe in Chriſt, apprehended by faith, which els where the Apoſtle calleth the word of faith, Rom.10.8.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that by the word here is not vnderſtood the word preached, that begetteth faith, but the word of conſecration in the Sacrament, *reſp.ad argum.*5.

Contra. Firſt, neither do we vnderſtand in this place, the word preached, as though there could be no Baptiſme without a ſermon, nor yet the word of conſecration: for though the conſecratorie word ioyned to the element doth make it a ſacrament, yet doth it not make it alwayes a cleanſing and ſanctifying ſacrament to preſent the receiuer without ſpot and blameles, as it followeth in the ſame place, but onely in the faithfull and beleeuers. Secondly, the word therefore that cleanſeth, is the word of faith, whereby our hearts are purified: Act.15.9. which is begotten in vs by the preaching of the word, and confirmed by the Sacacraments.

Auguſtine thus writeth: Aliud eſt aqua ſacramenti, aliud aqua, quæ ſignificat ſpiritum dei: iſta viſibilis eſt, & abluit corpus, & ſignificat, quid fit in anima, per illum ſpiritum anima mundatur & ſaginatur. The water of the Sacrament is one thing, the water which ſignifieth the ſpirit is another: the one is viſible, and waſheth the fleſh, and ſignifieth what is done in the ſoule: but by the ſpirit the ſoule is cleanſed. The Sacrament of Baptiſme then, by this fathers ſentence, and ſo all other Sacraments, doe not giue grace, but ſignifie onely and repreſent grace.

*Synod.Colonienſ.part.9.cap.*13. Quod præter preces, aſperſiones, & vnctiones, aliarumq; rerum ſolennia adhibentur, &c. In that beſide prayer, we vſe ſprinkling, annoynting, with other externall rites, therein lyeth a myſterie, not that theſe dead things are capable of grace, but when theſe things are viſibly done, Chriſtians are admoniſhed, that God worketh by the inuiſible vertue of his ſpirit. The externall things therefore worke not, but are ſignes of the inward working of the ſpirit.

We want not the witneſſe of their owne decrees: *Decret.part.3.diſtinct.4.c.*145. Melior Centurio nondum baptizatus, Simone baptizato, &c. The Centurion being not yet baptized was better, than Simon baptized: for he before Baptiſme was repleniſhed with the holy ſpirit; the other after Baptiſm was poſſeſſed with an vncleane ſpirit. How then is grace annexed to the Sacrament, when as both he that wanteth the Sacrament, may haue grace; and he that hath the Sacrament, wanteth grace?

Heare alſo an euident teſtimonie of one of your owne writers: Conſtat in omni ſcriptura, ieiunam eſſe & languidam operam noſtram, etiam Apoſtolicam, etiam Chriſti, &c. It is apparant throughout the whole Scripture, that our outward endeuour is weake, and of no force, yea the labour of the Apoſtles, and of Chriſt himſelfe, vnleſſe it bee helped by the inward worke of the ſpirit, &c. Eſpenc. in 2*.Timoth.p.*97.

This doctrine hath the ſeale of Martyrs: George Carpenter gaue his life in teſtimonie thereof, that the very element of water in Baptiſme doth not giue grace, pag.884. Biſhop Ridley holy Martyr: That the Sacrament is but an inſtrument, but the inward vertue of Chriſt giueth grace to the Sacrament. pag.1452.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE DIFFErence of the olde and new Sacraments.

The Papiſts.

97.Error. THe ſacrifices and ceremonies of the old law were ſo farre from giuing ſpirit, grace, remiſſion, iuſtification, and thereupon the entrance into the ioyes of heauen, that they were but meere ſhadowes, obſcurely repreſenting the graces of the new Teſtament: whereas the Sacraments inſtituted by Chriſt, containe and giue grace, and iuſtification, *Rhemiſt.Heb.10.ſect.*3.

*Argum.*1. They were but ſhadowes of good things, not the image of the things themſelues, Heb.10.1.They were but ſhadowes and repreſentations of the Sacraments of the new Teſtament: *Ergo,*they had not the ſame efficacie or power,Rhemiſt.ibid.

*Anſw.*1. Their Sacraments were onely ſhadowes of Chriſts ſacrifice, not of our Sacraments, though theſe come in the place of the other, and are anſwerable and correſpondent vnto them. Secondly,neither doe the Sacraments of the new teſtament giue grace or iuſtification,but are onely liuely teſtimonies of grace and reconcilation wrought by the death of Chriſt. Thirdly,their Sacraments were as effectuall to aſſure the Fathers of grace and remiſſion of ſinnes by Chriſt,as our Sacraments are to vs.

*Argum.*2. The Sacraments of the new law or Goſpell doe giue grace and iuſtification, ſo did not the Sacraments of the old law : *Ergo,*there is not the ſame efficacie of them both. Againe,Saint Paul calleth them impotent and beggerly rudiments,Galath.4.9.ſo are not the Sacraments of the Goſpell : *Ergo:Bellarm.lib.*2.*de Sacram.cap.*14.*argum.*4.

*Anſw.*1. The Sacraments of the new law are no more able by any efficacie in themſelues to iuſtifie vs,then the Sacraments of the old : It is the propertie of faith onely to iuſtifie vs, Rom.3.28.and cap.5.1.Being iuſtified by faith,we are at peace with God: Where it cannot be anſwered, that faith iuſtifieth but in part,for that is perfect iuſtification which worketh peace of conſcience in vs, but faith bringeth ſuch iuſtification : *Ergo,*it iuſtifieth perfectly. Therefore in this reſepect,the Sacraments differ not,becauſe neither of them iuſtifie,but are ſeales only of the righteouſnes of faith, Rom.11.4.

To the ſecond place we anſwere : firſt, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of the Sacraments of the law,but of other ceremonious rites,as the obſeruation of dayes,moneths,yeeres. Secondly,he reſpecteth that preſent time, when ſuch ceremonies ought of right to haue ceaſed and giuen place, the Goſpell being now reuealed,and therefore he calleth them beggerly,becauſe of the ſuperſtitious vſe of them,not hauing in this ſpeech any relation to the originall and firſt inſtitution. Thirdly,they are ſaid to be impotent, not in reſpect of our Sacraments (and yet we deny not, but that as our Sacraments haue a more cleere ſignification, and liuely repreſentation of holy things; ſo the other being herein compared, may be called more impotent) but as they are ſet againſt iuſtifying faith : in reſpect whereof out Sacraments are weake and impotent : as S.Paul ſaith, That neither circumciſion is any thing,nor vncircumciſion,but faith working by loue, Galat.5.6. where faith is ſet againſt all other things whatſoeuer,as being of no value,that is weake aud impotent to iuſtifie, whether appertaining to the circumciſed or vncircumciſed (as there are no Sacraments but belong to either of theſe orders.) Wherefore onely faith is auaileable and ſtrong to iuſtifie,all other things impotent and weake.

*Argum.*3. Coloſſ.2.11.In whom (ſaith the Apoſtle)*ye are circumciſed with circumciſion made without hands,&c.through the circumciſion of Chriſt, in that you are buried with him through Baptiſme, &c.*Here circumciſion made with hands is oppoſed to circumciſion made without hands, that is Baptiſme : ſo that which could not bee wrought by circumciſion, is wrought by Baptiſme: Ergo, there is not the ſame effect of circumciſion and Baptiſme,*Bellarm.loc.*7.

Anſ. Firſt, Baptiſme is not the circumciſion made without hands,for as much as in Baptiſme there is the miniſtrie of the hands of men, as well as in circumciſion : but by circumciſion without hands the Apoſtle vnderſtandeth,the ſpirituall circumciſion of Chriſt, as he himſelfe expoundeth it. Secondly,as the externall circumciſion of it ſelfe profited not,ſo alſo the Apoſtle ſaith of Baptiſme,that,wee are buried with him in Baptiſme,&c.through the faith of the operation of God,&c. So it is faith by the operation of God, not the outward act of Baptiſme : wherefore out of this place no difference can be gathered.

*Argum.*4. Bellarmine heapeth vp many places together; as Iſay.1.11.What haue I to doe with the multitude of your ſacrifices : Rom.4.10. Abraham was counted iuſt being vncircumciſed : Galat.4. they are called beggerly elements : Coloſſ.2. the ſhadowes of things to come : *Ergo,*the Sacraments of the old law did not conferre grace.

Anſ. Firſt,the Prophets did not ſimply condemne the ſacrifices,but becauſe they were offered in ſinne and hypocriſie: and therefore the Prophet ſaith,Iſay.1.16. waſh you, make you cleane. Secondly, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the times of Chriſt, when as the old ſacrifices and ceremonies were out of date : the figures were to ceaſe,the bodie being come. Thirdly, they are called impotent and weake, not in reſpect of the Sacraments of the Goſpell, but being compared to faith, which is the complement both of their Sacraments and ours. Fourthly, we graunt, that the ſacrifices of the law did not conferre grace,no more doe the Sacraments of the Goſpell : wherefore he hath ſaid nothing, vnleſſe he had proued, that our Sacraments doe conferre grace, which theirs did not.

The

The Proteſtants.

WE doe holde and conſtantly affirme and teach, that the Fathers in the law receiued no leſſe the truth and ſubſtance of Chriſt by faith in their Sacraments, then we doe in ours: although in reſpect of more cleere and lightſome ſignification, our Sacraments doe farre exceede theirs, and ſo alſo may more liuely ſtirre vp our faith: yet the ſubſtance and effect both of their Sacraments and ours, was all one and the very ſame.

*Argum.*1. S. Paul ſpeaketh plainly, that the Iſraelites did all eate the ſame ſpirituall meate, and all drinke of the ſame ſpirituall rocke, and the rocke was Chriſt, 1. Cor. 10. 3. 4. Therefore Chriſt was exhibited as well to them in their Sacraments, as he is in ours.

Bellarmine anſwereth. Firſt, they did all eate the ſame ſpirituall meate amongſt themſelues, not the ſame together with vs. So alſo ſay the Rhemiſts, that they amongſt themſelues did all feede of one bread, and drinke of the ſame rocke. The Apoſtle ſaith not, that they and we doe eate and drinke of the ſelfeſame meate and drinke, Rhemiſt. in hunc locum.

*Anſw.*1. Yes the Apoſtle ſaith ſo in effect, that there is one and the ſelfe ſame ſpirituall meate and drinke to vs all, both to them and vs: for what doe we eate and drinke but Chriſt? and ſo doe they: The rocke, ſaith the Apoſtle, was Chriſt. Secondly, Auguſtine ſaith ſo expreſly, that they did eate the ſame ſpirituall meate, and drinke the ſame ſpirituall cup that wee doe: Quicunque in Manna Chriſtum intellexerunt, eundem, quem nos cibum ſpiritualem manducauerunt: De vtilitat. pœnitent. c. 2. They which in the eating of Manna did vnderſtand Chriſt, did eate the ſame ſpirituall meate that wee doe: Ergo, Chriſt was as well preſent by faith to them in their Sacraments, as he is to vs in ours.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Auguſtines meaning is, that their Sacraments and ours had not the ſame efficacie, but the ſame ſignification onely, becauſe both theirs and ours doe ſignifie Chriſt.

Contra. 1. He hath not anſwered to this place of Auguſtine, wherein he affirmeth, that they did eate the ſame ſpirituall meate with vs: and if they did eate the ſame ſpirituall meate, then not in ſignification only, but in vertue and efficacie their Sacraments are equall with ours. 2. That Chriſt gaue the ſame vertue and efficacie to both Sacraments, Bernard plainly affirmeth, Serm. de cœna Domini, or who elſe vnder his name: Chriſtus pro ſalute mundi ſemel factus eſt hoſtia ſalutaris: omnibus ſacramentis tam pracedentibus quam ſubſequentibus virtutem dedit & efficaciam, vt tanta & tali hoſtia ſanctificarentur omnes liberandi per illam: Chriſt to ſaue the world was once made an acceptable ſacrifice: to all the Sacraments both going before and following after he gaue vertue and efficacie, that all might be ſanctified with this worthie ſacrifice, for whoſe deliuerance it was appointed.

Secondly, Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Manna is called a ſpirituall meate, either in reſpect of the cauſe, which was heauenly and ſpirituall, it being wrought by a miracle; and ſo alſo the water; and therfore the rocke is ſaid to be Chriſt, not becauſe Chriſt was the author, or the efficient cauſe to bring the water out of the rocke: or elſe in reſpect of the ſignification onely, not becauſe it had any ſpirituall effect. His reaſons are theſe:

Firſt, the beaſts and birds did drinke of the ſame water, therefore it was not ſpirituall. Secondly, we reade of no ſpirituall promiſe made to thoſe, that did eate Manna, or drinke of the rocke; ſuch as are annexed to the Sacraments. Thirdly, our Sauiour ſaith, your fathers did eate Manna, and are dead, and Moſes did not giue you bread from heauen, Ioh. 6. wherefore it was a corporall foode onely, not ſpirituall.

Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith they did all eate the ſame ſpirituall meate, that is both amongſt themſelues and with vs, as we haue ſhewed: but to vs it is ſpirituall meate, not in reſpect of the author onely, but in regard of the ſpirituall efficacie; therefore it was ſo vnto them: And in that the Apoſtle ſaith, they did drinke Chriſt ſpiritually, this betokeneth not the ſignifying onely, but the exhibiting alſo of Chriſt vnto them: for this were a ſlender eating and drinking of Chriſt, to haue him ſignified onely and ſhadowed forth, vnleſſe they ſhould verely bee made partakers of him.

Secondly, wee anſwere to his reaſons: to the firſt, that it letteth not the rocke to bee ſpirituall drinke, becauſe the cattell alſo did drinke thereof: for your ſelues denie not, but that your conſecrated hoſt may be deuoured of myce and dogs: And againe, the cattell alſo and beaſts went thorow the red ſea as well as the Iſraelites, yet was it a Baptiſme to the Iſraelites, though not to the other: and Sacraments are ordained for men, and not for beaſts.

To the ſecond: the Apoſtle ſaith, they dranke of the ſpirituall rocke, which rocke is Chriſt; they therfore did ſpiritually drinke Chriſt: but to thoſe that eate and drinke Chriſt, ſpirituall promiſes are made, as Ioh. 6. 54. Whoſoeuer eateth my fleſh, &c, hath eternall life, &c. wherfore ſo many of them, as by faith did ſpiritually in Manna eate Chriſt, and in the rocke drinke Chriſt, were made partakers of this ſpirituall promiſe.

To the third we anſwere: that Moſes indeede gaue but the materiall Manna, but Chriſt concurring with Moſes outward miniſterie, gaue himſelfe the true bread from heauen: like as in the Euchariſt, the Miniſter giueth the externall elements, Chriſt working together giueth the ſpirituall grace. Wherefore our Sauiour ſaith not, that the Iſraelites had not the true bread, for elſewhere he teſtifieth, that Moſes wrote of him, Ioh.6.46. but that beſide the materiall Manna, whereof their fathers did eate, and yet died, there was another ſpiritual and heauenly bread exhibited to all beleeuers both of the old and new Teſtament: for vnleſſe they alſo vnder the law, had eaten the fleſh of Chriſt and drunk his blood, they could not haue had life, as our Sauiour ſaith, verſ.53. but ſome of them had life: Ergo, they did eate the true bread of heauen.

*Argum.*2. In Circumciſion, which was a Sacrament of the old law, there was promiſe of remiſſion of ſinnes and of life euerlaſting, as there is in Baptiſme: Ergo, there is the ſame vertue and efficacie both of the old and new Sacraments.

That to Circumciſion was annexed the promiſe of life eternall; firſt, it appeareth Geneſ.17.7. where the Lord maketh this couenant with Abraham, whereof circumciſion was a ſigne, I will be thy God, and the God of thy ſeede: that is, thy God for euer, not onely in this world, but the next: for our Sauiour expoundeth it, Matth.22.32. I am the God of Abraham, Iſaac, Iacob: he is not God of the dead, but of the liuing. Secondly, Epheſ.2.12. the Apoſtle ſaith, that the Gentiles being vncircumciſed, were ſtrangers from the couenant of promiſe, and had no hope, and were without God in this world: therefore circumciſion was a couenant of Gods euerlaſting promiſes.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, that Abraham was reputed righteous and iuſt before Circumciſion: Ergo, to him in Circumciſion there was no promiſe made of remiſſion of ſinnes, which he had alreadie.

Contra. We ſay not, that Circumciſion cauſed remiſſion of ſinnes: for then the effect could not goe before the cauſe; but that it was a ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of faith, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Rom.4.11. and of remiſſion of ſinnes: and ſo it may be, whether righteouſnes goe before circumciſion, as in Abraham, or follow after, as in Iſaac. So wee reade, Act.10.47. that the holy Ghoſt went before, and then Baptiſme followed: the thing ſignified appeared firſt, and then the ſigne or ſeale was added: Can any man forbid water (ſaith S. Peter) that theſe ſhould not be baptized, which haue receiued the holy Ghoſt, as well as we?

Secondly, ſaith Bellarmine, the Lord, in ſaying, I will be thy God, and of thy ſeede, maketh no promiſe of euerlaſting ſaluation, but of temporall protection peculiar to that people, both to the good and bad: and the ſaying of Chriſt, he is not God of the dead, &c. doth but implie that God is God not of thoſe that are not, but of thoſe that are, whether they be good or bad.

Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtle by ſeede vnderſtandeth Chriſt: he ſaith not, to thy ſeedes, as ſpeaking of many, but to thy ſeede, as of one, euen Chriſt, Galath.2.16. wherefore this promiſe, I will be thy God, and of thy ſeede, hath a ſpirituall relation to Chriſt. Secondly, this couenant appertained not to the wicked, but is applied onely by the Apoſtle to the faithfull, Heb.13.5. He hath ſaid, I will not leaue thee, nor forſake thee. Thirdly, to bee God of Abraham, Iſaac, Iacob, is to bee God not onely of thoſe which are, but, that are liuing with God: for if God be not God of the dead in reſpect of this life, how much leſſe of thoſe that are dead eternally: and the Apoſtle ſpeaketh euidently, Epheſ.2.15. of whom is named the whole familie in heauen and earth, that God doth onely name and call himſelfe by thoſe, whether liuing or departed, that are of his familie.

Thirdly, it was not the want of Circumciſion, but the want of faith, that made the Gentiles ſtrangers from the couenant: for Iob and Cornelius were not circumciſed, Bellarm.ibid.

Contra. So may it bee ſaid of Baptiſme, that many which haue it not among the Turkes and Iewes, if they contemne it not, may by Gods extraordinarie mercie be ſaued, if they beleeue; yet Baptiſme hath the promiſe of life eternall: ſo though ſome vncircumciſed might beleeue, yet ordinarily the circumciſion had the promiſe of life and ſaluation in Chriſt.

*Argum.*3. Leuitic.5.verſ.12.13. He ſhal bring his offring to the Prieſt, &c. who ſhal make attonement for him, as touching his ſinne, and it ſhall be forgiuen him: Ergo, the ſacrifices of the law had promiſe of remiſſion of ſinnes by the force of Chriſts death repreſented in the ſame.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the ſacrifices did purge the offerers ſinnes onely in reſpect of the temporall puniſhment, and ſome legall vncleanneſſe, but they did not cleanſe them ſimply before God in reſpect of euerlaſting puniſhment: and this may appeare, for that the ſacrifices were not ordained for all ſinnes, but of ignorance onely committed againſt the ceremonies of the law. *Bellarmine c.*17.*reſp.ad argum.*2.

Contra. Firſt, it is falſe, that the ſacrifices ſerued onely to purge ſinnes of ignorance, for Leuitic.6.2.3. there are ſacrifices preſcribed for the ſinnes of deceite, robberie, oppreſſion, falſe ſwearing, which were voluntarie ſinnes, and not of ignorance.

Secondly, it is alſo vntrue, that the temporall puniſhment was onely pardoned, and not the ſinnes truely remitted. Firſt, where the Prieſt is ſaid to make attonement, the word is כפר caphar: which ſignifieth to reconcile, to remoue wrath: and it is vſed, Pſal.79.9. Be mercifull vnto our ſinnes, ſinnes,&c. will he now ſay, that the Church here prayeth onely for the mitigation of temporal puniſhment? wherefore, if the Prieſt made attonement for them, and Gods wrath was appeaſed for their ſinne, then was it verily remitted. Secondly, there is confeſſion of the ſinne required. Leuitic. 5.5. and reſtitution, Leuitic. 6.4. but where there is confeſſion, and reſtitution, there is repentance; and where repentance is, there is remiſſion of the ſinne it ſelfe before God.

*Argum.*4. Coloſſ. 2.11. S. Paul. ſaith, In whom yee are circumciſed by circumciſion made without handes, by putting off the ſinful bodie of the fleſh, through the circumciſion of Chriſt, &c. Here the Apoſtle affirmeth, that the ſpirituall circumciſion, which did accompany the ſacramentall circumciſion, in them that did beleeue, was effectuall to the putting off the bodie of ſinne: We ſay not, that the externall act of circumciſion onely had this effect, but the inward grace in the circumciſion of the heart in all true Iſraelites working with the circumciſion of the fleſh, was auaileable to the remiſſion of ſinnes: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Rom. 2.28. He is not a Iew, which is one outward, neither is that circumciſion, which is outward in the fleſh, &c.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that in circumciſion not the whole bodie, but one part onely was circumciſed, and therefore it did not ſerue to the putting off the whole bodie of ſinne.

Contra. Neither when Chriſt waſhed Peter, did he waſh any thing but his feete, though Peter would haue had his hands and head alſo waſhed: yet was the waſhing of his feete ſufficient, Iohn 13.10. ſo though in circumciſion the outward ſigne onely touched one part, yet the inward circumciſion thereby repreſented, was ſufficient to purge the whole inward man.

We want not here their owne witneſſe againſt themſelues, decret. part. 3. diſtinct. 2. cap. 81. Inquit Apoſtolus (omnes eandem eſcam ſpiritualem manducarunt) &c. The Apoſtle ſaith, they did all eat the ſame ſpirituall meate: the ſame ſpirituall meat indeed, but another corporall, becauſe they did eate Manna, and we ſome other thing: and hee addeth, and they all dranke the ſame ſpirituall drinke; they one thing, and we another; ſed ſpecie viſibili, but in outward ſhew; Quod tamen idem eſt virtute ſpirituali, which is notwithſtanding the ſame in the ſpirituall vertue: This Canon affirmeth, that they did eate the ſame ſpirituall meat, not amongſt themſelues, but with vs, which though it were in ſhape diuers, yet in vertue is the ſame: Ergo, there is the ſame efficacie and vertue, both of the old and new Sacraments.

The Maſter of ſentences alleageth thus out of Gregorie: Quod apud nos valet aqua Baptiſmi, hoc egit apud veteres, vel pro paruulis ſola fides, &c. That which the water of Baptiſme is to vs, faith only was in time paſt to children, and to the elder ſort, the vertue of the ſacrifices, &c. or the myſterie of Circumciſion, lib. 4. diſtinct. 1. g. If Circumciſion was auaileable then, as Baptiſme is now, then the vertue and ſubſtance of the Sacraments was the ſame.

Likewiſe Innocentius 3. thus decreeth, decret. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 42. c. 3. Originalis culpa remittebatur per Circumciſionis myſterium, et damnationis periculum vitabatur: Original ſinne was remitted by the myſterie of circumciſion, and the perill of damnation auoided. Here is an euident teſtimonie of one of their moſt learned Popes, that remiſſion of ſinnes was had by the Sacraments of the old law.

Further, it is the opinion of ſome of their beſt ſchoolemen, that circumciſion did conferre iuſtification, ex opere operato, by the very worke that was wrought; which efficacie the reſt of theirs aſcribe only to the Sacraments of the new Teſtament; thus holdeth Alexander, Bonauenture, Scotus, Gabriel: ſo that in their opinion, between Circũciſion a Sacrament of the old Teſtament, & the reſt of the Sacraments of the new, there was no difference: yea, as Bellarmine confeſſeth, it is Communis ſententia Theologorum, the common ſentence of popiſh diuines, that the old ſacraments did onely iuſtifie ex opere operantis, by the worke of the doer, that is, the faith and deuotion of the receiuer: and the new Sacraments do no more; for though we truely hold, that we are iuſtified onely by faith, not by the Sacraments, yet by them is iuſtifying faith confirmed; and without the faith of the receiuer, they are altogether vnprofitable: for S. Paul biddeth euery man to examine himſelfe before, 1. Cor. 11.28. which examination, is to prooue, whether they be in the faith, 2. Cor. 13.5. Wherefore neither old nor new Sacraments are profitable without faith.

See alſo this doctrine ſealed: Iohn Frith holy Martyr; They did all eate the ſame ſpirituall meate, and did drinke the ſame ſpirituall drinke, all one ſpirituall thing, but not all one corporall matter: for they did eate Manna, and we another thing, but the ſelfe ſame ſpirituall thing that we doe: Fox. pag. 1033.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE CHARACTER or badge, which (as they ſay) is imprinted in the ſoule by the Sacraments.

The Papiſts.

98. Error FIrſt, there is a certaine ſeale, and ſpirituall marke or badge, imprinted by the Sacraments, in the ſoules of the receiuers, which can neuer bee blotted out, neither by ſinne, apoſtaſie, or hereſie.

reſie. Secondly, but it perpetually remaineth for the cogniſance of their Chriſtendome, and diſtinction from others, that were neuer of Chriſts fold, by which alſo they are conſecrated and deputed to God. Thirdly, this indeleble Character, is giuen by three Sacraments onely, Baptiſme, Confirmation, Orders; which is the cauſe they are not reiterable, nor euer to be receiued but once, *Rhemiſt.annotat.2.Corin.1.ſect.7.Trident.Concil ſeſſ.7.can.9.Bellar.lib.2.de ſacram.cap.*19.

*Argum.*1. 2.Corin.1.22.He hath ſealed vs, and giuen the earneſt of the ſpirit into our hearts Likewiſe, Epheſ.1.13.Ye were ſealed with the holie ſpirit of promiſe. Epheſ.4.30.Greeue not the ſpirit of God, by whom ye are ſealed againſt the day of redemption. This ſealing is nothing elſe, as they ſay, but an imprinting in the ſoule of this indeleble marke or character.

Anſw. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh manifeſtly of the ſpirituall and inward ſeale of the ſpirit of God, whereby the promiſes of God are ſealed and aſſured vnto vs, whereof Baptiſme is an outward ſeale in our bodies. Secondly, it is an abſurd thing to holde, that he that hath vtterly and maliciouſly renounced Chriſtianitie, and blaſphemed Chriſt himſelfe, ſhould ſtill retaine this Character of Baptiſme, as cogniſance of his Chriſtendome. Thirdly, Baptiſme is not reiterable, that is, to be iterated or repeated, not becauſe it leaueth an indeleble character in the minde of the baptiſed; which is but a meere deuiſe and fanſie: but becauſe, as it ſufficeth once to be borne in the fleſh, ſo once to be borne againe, and to be regenerated by the ſpirit, (of the which regeneration, Baptiſme is a ſeale and pledge) it is ſufficient. As for confirmation, and orders, we acknowledge them to be no Sacraments: and therefore to haue no ſuch indeleble character.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that theſe places cannot be vnderſtood, of the ſealing or aſſuring of Gods promiſes by his ſpirit in our hearts in the Sacrament: firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith, he hath ſealed vs, not ſealed the promiſes.

Contra. Firſt, in the ſecond place the Apoſtle ſaith, we are ſealed with the ſpirit of promiſe: to bee ſealed with the promiſe, and to haue the promiſe ſealed vnto vs, are all one. Secondly, in the firſt place, where he ſaith, he hath ſealed vs, a little before he ſaid, in him the promiſes of God, are yea, and Amen, verſ.20. What is that elſe, but the promiſes are ſealed in him?

Secondly, the Apoſtle ſaith, after you beleeued, ye were ſealed, Epheſ.1. that is, in Baptiſme, which commeth after faith, *Bellar.cap.*20.

Cont. Firſt, here Bellarm. leaueth the Vulgar text, which readeth, credentes, beleeuing, and preſſeth the Greeke word of the preter tence, πιστεύσαντες, hauing beleeued: ſo inconſtant are they, ſometime preferring the Latin, ſometime the Greeke. Secondly, though Baptiſme came after faith then, it is miniſtred before faith now. Thirdly, it followeth not: this ſeale was after faith: Ergo, in Baptiſme: for vpon their very beleeuing they were ſealed. Fourthly, wee denie not, but that Baptiſme is a ſeale of the righteouſnes of faith, as S. Paul ſpeaketh of Circumciſion, becauſe thereby the promiſes are ſealed to vs: yet there is no ſuch character in Baptiſme, as there was not in Circumciſion.

Now further, that theſe places cannot be vnderſtood of any ſuch character, or marke, or infuſed, inherent, or imprinted qualitie in the ſoule by their three Sacraments, it may thus appeare.

Firſt, 2.Cor.1.22. As we are ſaid to be ſealed, ſo alſo are we annoynted: but our annoynting, or oyntment, is the holie Ghoſt, 1.Ioh.2.20. as the Rhemiſts themſelues expound it: Ergo, the ſame is alſo the ſeale.

Secondly, He hath ſealed vs, and giuen the earneſt of his ſpirit in our harts: the ſame is both the ſeale, and the earneſt, the ſpirit of God is our earneſt vntill the day of redemption: Ergo, alſo the ſeale.

Thirdly, Epheſ.4.30.We are ſealed to the day of redemption: which is not in Baptiſme, as Bellarmine fondly expoundeth, taking of for in, and redemption for Baptiſme: for this ſeale none haue, but they for whom the inheritance is purchaſed, Epheſ.1.14. but all that are baptized ſhall not be ſaued: Ergo, there is no ſuch ſeale in Baptiſme.

Fourthly, as we are ſealed, ſo doe wee ſeale: Ioh.1.33. He that receiueth his teſtimonie, hath ſealed that God is true: If by being ſealed wee receiue a character, then by ſealing wee giue a character: theſe places then ſerue not his turne.

*Argum.*2. They which were baptized with Iohns baptiſme, were afterward baptized againe, Act.19.4,5. And this was the reaſon thereof, becauſe Iohns baptiſme did not imprint an indeleble character in the ſoule, as Chriſts baptiſme did, *Bellar.cap.*22.reſp.ad 3.ration.

Anſw. Firſt, it cannot be proued, that the Apoſtles baptized thoſe that had receiued Iohns baptime, neither hath that place, Act.19.5. any ſuch meaning: ſee the full anſwere for this afterward, *Contr.*12. of Baptiſme, *qu.*7.*arg.*2.Papiſtar. Secondly, though that after Iohns baptiſme they had been baptized againe, it followeth not, that it was becauſe of any ſuch character. Hierome giueth another reaſon: Ioannis baptiſma imperfectum, &c. Iohns baptiſme was imperfect, and did not giue remiſſion of ſinnes, therefore they were baptized againe with Iohns baptiſme, aduerſ.Luciferian. Though this be an error alſo, yet it is againſt them.

The Proteſtants.

THat by Baptiſme and ſome other ſacraments, there is imprinted in the ſoule a marke, or character, which can neuer bee blotted out, no not by Apoſtaſie; and that this is the cauſe why Baptiſme cannot be iterated, wee holde it to bee a meere deuiſe, and inuention of men.

*Argum.*1. Where the ende and fruites of Baptiſme are vtterly extinguiſhed, there cannot remaine any character or badge, or ſigne of Baptiſme: The fruites of Baptiſme are repentance, and regeneration by the ſpirit: But it is poſſible for theſe, in ſome that are baptized, to bee vtterly loſt, as in them that fall away by Apoſtaſie, they cannot be renewed by repentance, Hebr. 6.6. Therefore in ſuch there is not to be found any character, badge or ſigne of Baptiſme, which they haue vtterly renounced: onely the memoriall thereof is kept before God, they being ſo much worſe, then they that were neuer baptized, becauſe they haue wilfully reiected their profeſſion.

Argum. 2 The cauſe why Baptiſme is but once to be giuen, is not, as they alleage, becauſe it leaueth ſuch a ſure marke behinde, ſo deeply died in the ſoule, that it cannot be blotted out. There are other cauſes that come neerer the trueth: Firſt, as God is but one, who maketh a couenant with vs in Baptiſme; and the faith but one, into the which we are entred by that Sacrament: ſo Baptiſme is one and the ſame, Epheſ. 4.5. and as it ſufficeth once to be borne in the fleſh; ſo once to be regenerated by the ſpirit in Baptiſme. Secondly, the inſtitution of God is another cauſe, who hath appointed the other Sacrament often to be receiued, 1.Corinth.11.25. But for the iteration of Baptiſme, wee haue no ſuch commaundement. Thirdly, Baptiſme commeth in the place of Circumciſion: as that was but once miniſtred, ſo likewiſe it muſt be in the other. Fourthly, In Baptiſme God maketh a perpetuall couenant with vs, which he alwaies remembreth; and therefore neede not to be put in minde, by the often vſing of that Sacrament. Theſe and the like reaſons may be alleaged, why baptiſme is not often to be required: and not that, which by them without any ground is pretended.

Bellarmine thus obiecteth againſt theſe reaſons: Againſt the firſt, that Baptiſme is not iterated, becauſe it is our ſpirituall birth: Firſt ſaith he, we are alſo borne by the word, yet ſermons are often repeated. Secondly, though our carnall birth cannot be iterated, yet our ſpirituall may, as in the reſurrection: for as the bodily death is but once, the ſpirituall often; ſo the ſpirituall birth may be renued, as the carnall cannot.

Contra. Firſt, though faith is begotten by the word, Rom.10.17. and we by faith are made the children of God, yet becauſe Baptiſme is a ſeale and confirmation of this faith, it is properly called in Scripture, the lauacre of regeneration or new birth Tit.3.5. Secondly, the reſurrection is a regeneration of the bodie, not of the ſoule, and therefore improperly alleaged. Thirdly, as the bodie dieth but once, no more doth the ſoule, when it finally falleth away from God, whereof the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, Heb.6.6. That if they fall away, they cannot be renued by repentance: but as the bodie once borne, may be in danger of death by ſicknes, and not die; ſo the ſoule may be weakned and decay by ſinne, and ſo be renued: as the Apoſtle ſaith, our inward man is renued daily, 2.Cor. 4.16. but the ſoule once begotten vnto God, cannot die by ſinne, becauſe his ſeed remaineth in him, neither can he ſinne, that is vnto death, becauſe he is borne of God. 1.Iohn.3.9. Here the Apoſtle euidently ſpeaketh, that the ſpirituall birth cannot be loſt.

To the Second he obiecteth, that as in Scripture it is not written, that Baptiſme ſhould be iterated; ſo neither it is found, that it ſhould not.

Contra. Firſt, in that the often receiuing of the Euchariſt is commaunded, 1.Cor.11.25. but no ſuch charge giuen of Baptiſme, it is euident that the holy Ghoſt in this reſpect hath ſet a difference betweene them: if the Scripture had beene ſilent as touching both, there had beene ſome colour in Bellarmines obiection, but now there is none. Secondly, it is vntrue that the Scripture forbiddeth not Baptiſme to be iterated: for Iohn.13.10. our Sauiour ſaith, that he which hath his feet waſhed, that is, is regenerate in his affections, whereof Baptiſme is a ſeale, need not to be waſhed, but more euidently, Hebr.6.6. He that falleth away cannot be renued by repentance: that is, as the Rhemiſts expound it, it is impoſſible to be baptized againe. Annot. in hunc locum.

Leo alſo in his decree, proueth thus out of Scripture that Baptiſme is not to be iterated: Lauacrum ſemel initum nulla iteratione violetur: The lauacre once entred vnto muſt not by any iteration be violated, the Apoſtle thus ſaying, one God, one faith, one Baptiſme: decr.p.2.cauſ.1.qu.1.c.51.

Thirdly, he obiecteth, that circumciſion was therefore not repeated, becauſe it left a character, or ſcarre in the fleſh, as Baptiſme doth in the ſoule, which print of circumciſion was a cognizance betweene the Iewes and the Gentiles, Bellarm.cap.22.

Contra. The outward marke in the fleſh by circumciſion, was not that mark, wherby the Iewes were diſcerned, but the circumciſion of the heart: Firſt, becauſe circumciſion was a ſigne betweene the Lord and them, Gen.17.11. But the Lord looketh to the heart. 1.Sam.16.7. not to the outward appearance. Secondly, the women amongſt the Iewes were counted among the circumciſed, and diſcerned from heathen women: but they were not circumciſed in the fleſh, therfore it was the inward circumciſion, whereby they were ſanctified, as by their faith: this your Maſter confeſſeth. lib.4 diſtinct.3.g. Thirdly, the marke in the fleſh, being in the ſecret parts, and remote from the eye could be no cognizance to know a Iew by: If the fleſhly marke were any thing, it ſhoulde haue beene in the hand, or forehead; as the Angell is commaunded, to marke them in the foreheads, Ezech.9.4. Fourthly, the Apoſtle ſaith, he is not a Iew, that is one outward: neither is that circumciſion which is in the fleſh, Rom.4.28. wherfore the fleſhly mark was no cauſe of the not iterating of circumciſion.

Fourthly, to the firſt reaſon he obiecteth, that the perpetuitie of Gods couenant made in Baptiſme can be no cauſe why it is not iterated: Firſt, becauſe God maketh no couenant in Baptiſme: for a couenant is made betweene two conſenting: but children in Baptiſme being without faith, cannot conſent. Secondly, God couenanteth as well with vs in the word, and in the Euchariſt; yet that is often preached, the other often receiued. Thirdly, Gods couenant is alwaies conditionall; ſo to him that keepeth not the condition it is not perpetuall.

Contra. Firſt, Bellarmines firſt reaſon is ridiculous: for though children in their own perſon cannot conſent, yet are they within the couenant, which God maketh to vs and our ſeed. Gen.17. Otherwiſe Gods couenant ſhould be weaker then the couenant of men, who do make couenants for themſelues and their ſeed: as Dauid and Ionathan. 1.Sam.20.42. And againe, if circumciſion were a ſigne of Gods couenant, how much more Baptiſme which is more excellent: and S.Peter perſwadeth the Iewes to be baptized, becauſe the promiſe was made to them, & their ſeed. Act.2.39. therfore it is great impudēcy in him to deny ſo manifeſt a truth, that there is no couenāt made in Baptiſme.

Secondly, there is difference between the writing of a couenant, and the ſealing, as Nehem.9.38. the people make a couenant with God, they both write it and ſeale it: ſo the word of God, is as the writing of the couenant, & therfore is repeated; Baptiſme is as the ſure ſeale, that remaineth inuiolable: Likewiſe God couenanteth with vs in the Euchariſt: but it is a diuers couenāt from that in baptiſme: for this is the couenant of adoption, which once ſufficeth; the other of continual feeding and preſeruation, and therefore may be often vſed: as in circumciſion there was a couenant made, whereby the Iſraelites became his people; in the paſſeouer a promiſe and couenant of protection and preſeruation. Exod.12.27.

Thirdly, Gods couenant in it ſelfe remaineth ſtedfaſt, though men be deceitfull: and therefore it is called a couenant of ſalt. 2.Chro.13.5. ſo that God doth not make a new couenant, when men returne vnto him, but remembreth the old, as Exod.31.13. Remember Abraham, Iſaac and Iacob, to whom thou ſwareſt, &c. And Saint Paul thus reaſoneth, Epheſ.4.5. One Lord, one faith, one Baptiſme: from the conſtancie of God, to the ſtablenes of Baptiſme: wherefore Bellarmine hath babled much, and ſaid little: other arguments might alſo be adioyned, as theſe.

*Argum.*3. Circumciſion vnder the law was the ſame in effect, which Baptiſme is vnder the goſpell: ſo the Maſter of ſentences confeſſeth. lib.4. diſtinct.4.g. but circumciſion left no indeleble character in the ſoule, as Bellarmine confeſſeth. cap.19.propoſ.7. Ergo, neither doth Baptiſme.

*Argum.*4. There was no character imprinted in the ſoule of Chriſt by Baptiſme: confeſſed by *Bellarmine. cap.19.propoſ.*8. but we are baptized with the ſame baptiſme, that Chriſt was baptized with: vnleſſe they will ſay, that the head and members are baptized with diuers baptiſmes; which were moſt abſurd, and contrarie to the Apoſtle, who ſaith, There is one Lord (that is Chriſt) and one faith (that is in Chriſt) and one baptiſme (that is in the name of Chriſt:) but if Chriſts baptiſme were diuers, there ſhould not be one Lord, one baptiſme.

Ambroſe alſo ſaith. ſerm.41. Ergo fratres tingi debemus eodem fonte, quo Chriſtus, &c. Therefore brethren, we muſt be dipped in the ſame fountain with Chriſt, that we may be the ſame, that Chriſt is.

We haue alſo their own witnes againſt them: Durandus ſaith, that this character is but reſpectus rationis, a relation or reſpect vnto the miniſter, no permanent or infuſed qualitie, in 4. diſt.4. qu.1. Scotus holdeth, that it cannot be proued by any manifeſt teſtimonie of Scripture. diſt.6. c.9. Gabriel doubteth, whether the Church hath defined it. ibid. qu.2.

Innocent 3. ſaith, that they which are baptized being madde, or aſleep, characterem non ſuſcipiunt, do not receiue this character: Ergo, Baptiſme doth not alwaies imprint a character.

Greg.lib.3. tit.42.c.3.

Auguſtine is flat againſt them, for the iteration of confirmation: Manus impoſitio non ſicut baptiſmus repeti non poteſt. Quid enim eſt aliud, niſi oratio ſuper hominem? The impoſition of hands is not as Baptiſme, neuer to be iterated againe: for what is it elſe, but praier ouer a man? de baptiſ. cont. donat. lib.3.c.16. Confirmation in his opinion may be iterated, & therfore imprinteth no ſuch character.

Neither doth Orders leaue any ſuch character behinde it: Concil. Agathenſ. can.50. Clericus falſum teſtimonium dicens, &c. A Cleargie man bearing falſe witneſſe, let him be depoſed from his office: Et laicam tantummodo communionem accipiat: Let him communicate only as a lay man. What is now become of your indeleble character?

See the teſtimonie of Walter Brūte holy confeſſor: The Pope ſaith, that in the adminiſtration of euery Sacrament he doth imprint a certaine character or marke into the ſoule of him that receiueth. &c. I know that in a Sacrament are two things: the ſacramentall ſigne, which is giuen to man of man, the ſpirituall grace giuen of Chriſt.

In giuing of Orders the Biſhop doth imprint the corporall markes, but of the ſpirituall markes I know none, &c. pag. 500. The reaſon is, that man in the miniſtery of the Sacrament conferreth onely the external things, but this inuiſible character is internal, & therfore not conferred by man.

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE NECESſitie of the Sacraments.

THey willingly grant, that no Sacraments are abſolutely neceſſary in their nature, but in reſpect of the inſtitution and commaundement of God; for he is as able to worke without Sacraments, as with them. In this point, we are agreed: the points of difference are theſe.

The Papiſts.

99. Error. 1. THeſe three Sacraments are abſolutely and ſimply neceſſarie, as they are inſtituted of God: Baptiſme vnto all: penance to thoſe that fall after Baptiſme: Orders ſimply neceſſary to the whole Church. And thus they vnderſtand neceſſarie, that without the which a man cannot be ſaued: without the reſt of the Sacraments men may be ſaued, ſo there be no negligence or contempt, Bellarm. lib. 1. de ſacram. cap. 22. yea, he is not aſhamed to ſay, that the Sacraments are more neceſſary then faith: his reaſon is, becauſe without the Sacramēts, as Baptiſme, or the deſire therof, none, neither children nor others, can be ſaued: but without faith children are ſaued, Bellarm. lib. 1. de ſacram. cap. 22.

Anſw. Firſt, he may be aſhamed ſo impiouſly to contradict the Scriptures: for our Sauiour ſaith, One thing is neceſſary, Luk. 10. 42. ſpeaking of Maries diligent hearing of the word, whereby faith is obtayned, Rom. 10. 17. ſo that faith comming by the hearing of the word, is the onely or chiefe neceſſary thing. Againe, Mark. 16. 16. our Sauiour ſaith, He that ſhall beleeue and be baptized, ſhall be ſaued; but he that beleeueth not, ſhall be damned: he ſaith not, he, that is not baptized, but he, that beleeueth not: therefore faith is more neceſſary then baptiſme.

Secondly, it is vntrue, that none can be ſaued, no not children without baptiſme: ſeeing that Dauids child dying the ſeuenth day, before it was circumciſed, 2. Sam. 12. 18. was ſaued, as Dauid himſelfe ſaith, verſ. 23. I ſhall goe to him: and there was as great neceſſitie of circumciſion then, as of baptiſme now: Likewiſe the children which Herod ſlew, from two yeeres and vnder, ſome of them being but newly born, were neither circumciſed, nor baptized, yet we hold thē all to be innocēts.

Thirdly, children are not capable of faith, as they are of baptiſme, and therefore in them there can be no compariſon between faith & baptiſme: ſeeing one is required in them, & not the other.

Fourthly, this argument may better be returned vpon his owne head: that ſeeing children without baptiſme may be ſaued, as they are an holy ſeed, 1. Cor. 7. 14. and ſo vnder the couenant, of the which Sacrament they are capable; but none can be ſaued without faith, that are capable of faith, that therefore faith is more neceſſary then baptiſme.

The Proteſtants.

THough the Sacraments being appointed for our comfort, are neceſſary & profitable as holeſome meanes to be vſed for the increaſe of our faith, and much to be deſired & ſought for: yet God hath not laid ſuch a neceſſitie vpon any of them, as that the want of them ſhould cauſe hazard of ſaluation. The theefe vpon the croſſe was ſaued both without Baptiſme & Penance: I pray you what penance did Peter after his thrice denial of Chriſt, but that he wept bitterly, & earneſtly repented him of his fall? as S. Ambroſe ſaith, lachrymas Petri lego, ſatisfactionem non lego: I read of Peters teares, not of his ſatisfaction. Such repentance we hold to be neceſſary, but a Sacrament of penance we acknowledge none. So the ordaining of miniſters to preach, is the ordinary meanes to beget men vnto the faith; yet many haue beene called without ſuch preaching: as Paul was conuerted by the voyce of Chriſt from heauen, Nabuchadnezzar was called by the great miracle of the preſeruation of the three children in the firy ouen.

So Auguſtine ſaith Vndique vocat nos Deus ad pœnitentiam, vocat per lectorem, vocat per tractatorem, vocat per intimam cogitationem, vocat per flagellum correptionis, vocat per miſericordiam conſolationis: God calleth vs euery way to repentance; he calleth, by the reader, by the preacher, by the inward thought, by the ſcourge of correction, by the mercy of conſolation in Pſalm. 102. God therefore may call and inſtruct vs by more waies then one, he is not tyed to any.

The Papiſts.

100. Error. 2. THe Sacraments of the new law are neceſſary to ſaluation, that is, it is impoſſible to obtaine the grace of iuſtification, by faith alone, without the celebrating of the Sacraments, ſine ſacramentis, aut eorum voto, or at leaſt, hauing a will, purpoſe, and deſire to celebrate and vſe them, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 7. can. 4.

The

The Proteſtants.

A Neceſſitie of the Sacraments we graunt, as alſo of other profitable meanes, as of preaching the word, of prayer, and the like: but no ſimple or abſolute neceſſitie, as we haue ſaid: neither are the Sacraments neceſſarie at all to any ſuch purpoſe (being ordained for no ſuch vſe) as to be a meanes to applie the grace of iuſtification vnto vs: but our iuſtification is onely applied and apprehended by faith, as Saint Paul concludeth, Rom. 3. 28. that a man is iuſtified by faith onely, without workes of the law: yea, all workes whatſoeuer are excluded, as deſtroying grace, Rom. 11. verſ. 6. The Sacraments are profitable inſtruments, to ſtirre vp the gift of faith, and other graces in vs, but not by their proper worke to iuſtifie vs.

Auguſtine ſaith: Primò fides catholica Chriſtiano neceſſaria eſt, per ipſam renaſcimur in baptiſmate, & ſalutem æternam impetramus: Firſt of all, the Catholike faith is neceſſarie for a Chriſtian, by the which in Baptiſme wee are borne againe, and obtaine eternall ſaluation. He ſaith not that Baptiſme but that faith is neceſſarie, and that it is faith which giueth life to the ſacrament; it worketh not by it owne proper act: which is contrarie to Bellarmine, who ſaith, that fides non tribuit vim ſacramentis, that faith doth not adde any force to the Sacraments, lib. 1. de ſacram. cap. 22. whereas the Apoſtle ſaith, that he which eateth the bread, and drinketh the cup of the Lord vnworthily, eateth and drinketh his owne damnation, 1. Cor. 11. 27. ſo that the worthie receiuing conſiſteth in the examination of our ſelues, verſ. 28. and to examine our ſelues, is to proue whether we are in the faith, 2. Corinth. 13. 5. Wherefore by faith wee are made worthie receiuers, and the Sacrament is vnto vs to life, which was before vnto death.

De tempor. Serm. 53.

Bernard alſo ſaith: Nos ſi ſanguinis teſtimonium non habemus, id eſt Martyrij, &c. If we haue not the witneſſe of blood, that is of Martyrdome, let vs haue the witneſſe of the ſpirit and water: for without the ſpirit, neither blood, nor water ſufficeth: yea, if we haue the ſpirit without both blood and water, the witneſſe thereof is ſufficient. Baptiſme then is not neceſſarie, and if it bee not, none is.

Synod. Trullan. can. 59. In oratorio priuato baptiſmus nullatenus peragatur, ſed ad catholicas eccleſias accedant: ſi quis contrà fecerit, Clericus deponatur, laicus excommunicetur: In a priuate oratorie, Baptiſme muſt in no caſe be adminiſtred; but they muſt goe to the common Church: if any man doe contrarie, if a Clergie man, he ſhall be depoſed; if a lay man, excommunicate.

It ſhould ſeeme that Baptiſme was not in thoſe dayes counted ſo neceſſarie, ſeeing they forbad it to be kept in priuate houſes.

THE THIRD QVESTION, OF THE NVMBER and order of the Sacraments.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE number.

The Papiſts.

THeir generall ſentence and opinion is this, that there are ſeuen Sacraments, neither more or leſſe: Baptiſme, the Euchariſt, Confirmation, Penance, Matrimonie, Orders, extreame Vnction. If any man ſay that any of theſe are not truly and properly Sacraments, or that they are not all of Chriſts inſtitution, let him be anathema or accurſed, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 7. can. 1.

101. Error.

Argum. 1. The number of ſeuen is myſticall, propheticall, perfect: the Prophet commaunded Naaman to waſh himſelfe ſeuen times, 2. King. 4. The Altar muſt bee cleanſed ſeuen dayes, Exodus 29. 37. Iob offered ſeuen bullocks and ſeuen rammes for his friends, Iob. 42. So in the Apocal. ſeuen Churches, ſeuen Angels, ſeuen Starres, ſeuen Candleſtickes, ſeuen Thunders, and the like: And why not alſo ſeuen Sacraments? Bellar. lib. 2. cap. 26. Rhemiſt. annot. Apocal. 1. ſect. 3.

Anſw. Firſt, the number of ſeuen is ſometime applied, to deſcribe myſteries of wickedneſſe, as well as of godlineſſe: As the beaſt with ſeuen heads, Apocalypſ. 17. 8. is called a myſterie, or as your Vulgar Latine hath it, a ſacrament. And with greater reaſon may wee conclude, that this beaſt with ſeuen heads, is Antichriſt, with his ſeuen popiſh ſacraments, than you out of Naamans ſeuen times waſhing, can picke out ſeuen ſacraments. But if you will needes make a myſterie of ſeuen: it may as well be a myſterie of iniquitie as of godlines, euen the myſterie of the beaſt with ſeuen heads, as wee haue ſaid. Secondly, what though the number of ſeuen, and of ſome other numbers, bee ſometime myſticall and ſignificatiue, when it pleaſeth the Lord in his word ſo to applie and appoynt them? doth it therefore follow, that men vpon their owne heads, may ſuperſtitiouſly applie numbers to ſacramens, prayers, faſtings, times, as though there were any religion in numbers, or that the Lorde had the rather reſpect vnto ſuch things, becauſe of the number?

*Argum.*2. Man hath ſeuen wounds to be healed or cured: Ergo, there ought to be ſeuen ſacraments as remedies againſt the ſame: Baptiſme is a remedie againſt originall ſinne, Penance againſt actuall, extreame Vnction againſt the reliques of ſinne, Confirmation againſt infirmitie of faith, the Euchariſt againſt malice, Matrimonie againſt concupiſcence, Orders againſt ignorance: Bellarm.lib.2.cap.26.

Anſw. Firſt, the Sacraments are not properly of themſelues remedies againſt ſinne: no otherwiſe than they are tempered with faith, from whence they haue their whole ſtrength and vertue. Secondly, if they were ſuch remedies, what neede ſo many? as though one medicine may not heale diuers diſeaſes. Thirdly, the Ieſuite hath not well matched the diſeaſes and remedies together: firſt, the efficacie of Baptiſme, which ſetteth forth our ſpirituall waſhing by the blood of Chriſt, ſerueth as well againſt actuall, as originall ſinne: ſeeing we are cleanſed from both by the blood of Chriſt. Secondly, if Baptiſme ſerue againſt originall, and Penance againſt actuall ſinne, what other ſinne remaineth to bee helped by the other remedies? Thirdly, if Matrimonie be auaileable againſt concupiſcence, why doe ye forbid your luſtfull and belly-fed prieſts to marrie? and if Orders helpe ignorance, how commeth it to paſſe that you haue ſo many doltiſh and ignorant Maſſe-prieſts?

Bellarmine hath other arguments, ſhewing in particular that euery one of their ſeuen are Sacraments, which ſhall be anſwered in their ſeuerall places.

The Proteſtants.

THis word or name, Sacrament, may be taken two wayes: firſt, generally for any myſticall ſigne or ſymbole, which may repreſent an holy thing: and ſo wee will graunt, that there may bee not onely ſeuen Sacraments, but ſeuen and ſeuen; which are more properly ſymboles and ſignes, than Sacraments: As the couering of the head in the woman is a ſymbole of ſubiection, 1.Cor.11.10. the Sabboth day a ſymbole or ſacrament of the heauenly reſt, Hebr.4. In this ſenſe Auguſtine calleth the myſterie of the Trinitie a ſacrament: yea hee ſaith, the ſacrament of fire, becauſe therein in ſome ſort, by the vndeuided and inſeparable properties thereof, the heate, light, and ſhining brightnes; the Trinitie, ſaith he, is ſhadowed forth. Wherefore euery ſigne or ſymbole of a holy thing, that hath a ſpirituall ſignification, either found in ſcripture, or deuiſed by men, is not by and by a ſacrament.

De ſymbol. lib.3.cap.9.

Secondly, if wee will take a ſacrament in the ſtrict and proper ſenſe, there are eſpecially three things required thereunto. Firſt, that they doe not onely ſignifie, but exhibite and repreſent vnto vs after a liuely manner, the ſpirituall things which are ſignified. Secondly, they muſt haue the inſtitution and perpetuall commaundement of Chriſt. Thirdly, the ſacraments of the new law muſt ſucceede in the place of the old. Hereupon wee will inferre, that there are but two ſacraments in the new Teſtament, Baptiſme, and the Lords Supper.

*Argum.*1. Theſe two alone are not onely ſignes of heauenly things, but ſeales and pledges vnto vs thereof, whereby our faith is ſtrengthened, and our hope confirmed in the promiſes of God: as the remiſſion of ſinnes is repreſented in Baptiſme, Act.2.38. the death of Chriſt ſhewed forth in the Euchariſt, 1.Corin.11.26. The like commendation is not giuen of any other of their ſacraments.

*Argum.*2. Chriſt onely commaunded theſe two ſacraments to be vſed for euer in his Church: to ſuch ſpirituall purpoſes, as Baptiſme is inſtituted and commaunded, Matth.28.19. the Lords Supper likewiſe, Matth.26. Many other ceremonies Chriſt vſed himſelfe, as lifting vp of hands, the tempering of clay and ſpittle, his Apoſtles impoſition of hands, and annoynting with oyle: But hee hath not laid his commaundement vpon theſe ceremonies, inioyning vs perpetually to keepe them, as he hath charged vs with the other two.

*Argum.*3. The ſacraments of the new Teſtament ſucceede in the roome of them of the old: Baptiſme ſtandeth in ſtead of Circumciſion, the Lordes Supper is come in place of the Paſchall Lambe. But they cannot ſhew what old ſacraments, thoſe fiue other newly inuented, Confirmation, Orders, Penance, Matrimonie, extreame Vnction, doe ſucceede and ſupplie: Ergo, they are none. And beſide, if all theſe ſhould bee ſacraments, and ſo ſeuen in all: wee ſhould haue more in number than the Iewes had, which is not to be admitted: for they had but two ordinarie ſacraments, Circumciſion, and the Paſchall Lambe: two extraordinarie, as their baptiſme in the red ſea and the clowde, and their eating of the Manna, and drinking of the rocke, 1.Cor.10.2.3. So they ſhould haue but foure ſacraments, for your ſeuen. Other legall rites, ceremonies, and ſacrifices they had, and many typicall ſhadowes and ſignifications, but no more ſacraments than wee haue heard.

Other arguments we haue in particular againſt their fiue ſacraments, which I referre to their ſeuerall places, which being prooued to be no ſacraments at all, they muſt needes faile of their ſeuen.

Auguſtine yeeldeth to haue no more ſacraments than onely two: As Eue was made out of Adams ſide as he was aſleepe: Sic ex latere domini dormientis in cruce manauerunt ſacramenta, ex quibus formaretur eccleſia: So out of the Lords ſide ſleeping vpon the croſſe, the ſacraments of the Church iſſued: that is, water and blood: by the which he vnderſtandeth the two ſacraments. Tract. in Iohan.119.& expoſit.in Pſal.56.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that though Baptiſme be fitly vnderſtoode by water, and the Euchariſt by blood, which iſſued out of Chriſts ſide, yet are not the other ſacraments excluded: as Heb.6.2. there is mention onely made of Baptiſme and impoſition of hands, yet were there more ſacraments, *Bellarm.cap.*27.

Anſw. Firſt, we doe not greatly vrge this analogie, to proue two ſacraments: but onely ſhew what Auguſtines iudgement was herein: neither can the proportion hold, if there ſhould be more ſacraments than two: for as out of Adams ſide onely Eue was made: ſo out of Chriſts ſide the ſacraments iſſued, whereof the Church conſiſteth: if this collection be good, there can bee no more but two ſacraments: vnleſſe they can ſhew, that ſomewhat elſe beſide water and blood was ſhed from Chriſts ſide. Secondly, that place to the Hebrues is not like: for the Apoſtles purpoſe is not to ſet downe there all the ſacraments of religion, but onely ſuch principles, as young beginners were to learne, who after theſe beginnings were admitted to the Euchariſt.

Now laſtly in defence of this truth, that Chriſt hath left onely two ſacraments to his Church, many holy Martyrs haue giuen their liues: As Thomas Whittle, Bartlet Greene, with fiue other, condemned for denying the ſeuen popiſh ſacraments, Fox pag.1844. Likewiſe thirteene holy Martyrs burned at Stratford the bow for the ſame cauſe. pag.1914.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE ORDER AND degree of the ſacraments among themſelues.

The Papiſts.

IF any man ſhall ſay, that theſe ſeuen ſacraments are of equall dignitie, and not one in ſome reſpect to be preferred before the other, let him bee accurſed, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ.7.can.3. In diuers reſpects one ſacrament may excell another, as Baptiſme excelleth the reſt, becauſe of remiſſion of ſinnes thereby effected, or, as we ſay, repreſented. Orders excell, in reſpect of the Miniſter, becauſe they are onely, ſay they, conferred by a Biſhop. Matrimonie excelleth, in reſpect of the ſignification, the coniunction of Chriſt and his Church. But ſimply the Euchariſt exceedeth all, becauſe of the ſubſtance of the ſacrament, the reall and bodily preſence of Chriſt, *Bellarm.lib.2. cap.*28. 102.Error.

Anſw. Firſt, that Baptiſme and the Euchariſt exceede all the other, wee doe eaſily admit: for we hold them to be no ſacraments: and therefore wee ſtand not vpon their ſeuerall priuiledges. Secondly, neither Baptiſme is more excellent than the Lords Supper, becauſe it repreſenteth the remiſſion of ſinnes: for that alſo is inſinuated in the other: for how can we ſhew forth the Lords death, which is done in that ſacrament, vnleſſe wee call to minde the benefits purchaſed by his death, as remiſſion of ſinnes? Neither doth the Euchariſt goe beyond Baptiſme, in regarde of a more full preſence of Chriſt: for hee is not otherwiſe preſent in one ſacrament, than in the other, preſenting himſelfe in both ſpiritually to be apprehended of the worthie receiuer: as for that carnall and groſſe preſence of the bodie of Chriſt in the ſacrament, wee acknowledge none: as afterward it ſhall more fully appeare, when we come in order to that queſtion.

Auguſtine ſheweth, that Chriſt is no otherwiſe preſent in the Euchariſt, than in the preaching of the worde, for the manner of his preſence: Euchariſtia panis noſter quotidianus eſt, & quod vobis tracto, panis quotidianus eſt, & quod in eccleſia lectiones quotidie auditis, panis quotidianus eſt: The Euchariſt or Sacrament of thankſgiuing is our daily bread, that which I handle and preach to you, is our daily bread, that which you heare read daily in the Church, is our daily bread. If Chriſt then be no more really preſent in the ſacrament than in the word, what is become of the preeminence, that the one ſacrament in that reſpect ſhould haue aboue the other? De diuerſ. ſerm.

The Proteſtants.

THat the one ſacrament ſhould be ſo much extolled aboue the other, namely, the Lords Supper to be preferred before Baptiſme, as the more worthie and excellent ſacrament, wee finde no ſuch thing in the word of God: but that both of them are of like dignitie in themſelues, and to be had equally and indifferently in moſt high account: thus it is proued.

*Argum.*1. They are both commaunded and inſtituted by the ſame authoritie of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt: as Baptiſme, Matth.28.19. the Lords Supper, Luk.22.19. Doe this in remembrance of me: neither is one by the firſt inſtitution aduanced aboue the other. Secondly, there is the ſame matter and ſubſtance of both ſacraments, Chriſt Ieſus with all his benefits, as Baptiſme is ſayd to ſaue vs by the reſurrection of Chriſt, 1.Pet.3.21. and the cup, and the bread in the Euchariſt are a communion of the bodie and blood of Chriſt, 1.Corinth.10.16. Thirdly, one and the ſame end of them both, which is the increaſe and ſtrengthening of our faith in the promiſes of God: as Rom.6.5. we are ſaid to be graft in Baptiſme to the ſimilitude of Chriſts death and reſurrection: and 1.Corinth.11.26. the receiuing of the Communion is a ſhewing forth of the Lords death: Ergo, they are both of equall dignitie and worthines.

*Argum.*2. As Circumciſion was vnder the Law to the Paſſeouer, ſo is Baptiſme now vnto the Euchariſt: but Circumciſion then was equall in dignitie, and commaunded vnder as great a puniſhment, as the celebration of the Paſſeouer, and eating of the Paſchall Lambe: for both are enioyned vnder the ſame paine of being cut off from the congregation. Circumciſion, Geneſ.17.14. the Paſſeouer, Exod.12.19. Ergo, Baptiſme, and the Lords Supper are Sacraments of equall dignitie and excellencie.

I might vrge them alſo with their owne fanſies: for by like reaſon, as Bellarmine would preferre Baptiſme before faith, becauſe children are ſaued without faith, and yet not without Baptiſme (in their opinion) ſo becauſe without Baptiſme children cannot be ſaued, as they hold, and yet may without the other Sacrament: therefore Baptiſme is more neceſſarie, and ſo conſequently more worthie: wherefore they doe contrarie themſelues in their owne fanſies.

Let them ſay now, which is the more worthie thing, Baptiſme, or the word preached? no doubt they will preferre Baptiſme: for they holde that the ſacraments doe giue grace by the worke wrought, and ſo doth not the word: yea, they are offended, becauſe wee ſay, that the ſacraments are no otherwaies inſtruments of our iuſtification, than the word preached is; but that the one worketh by the hearing, the other by the ſenſes of ſeeing, handling, taſting: but they all ſerue to one end, namely, to beget and increaſe faith in vs. This our aſſertion they vtterly miſlike, Bellar. lib.2.de ſacram.cap.2. Whereby it appeareth, that they prefer Baptiſme before the word. We then thus reaſon out of Auguſtine: he thus writeth: Dicite mihi, quid plus videtur vobis, verbum Dei, an corpus Chriſti? reſpondere debetis, quod non ſit minus verbum Dei: Tell me, which is the chiefer in your opinion, the word of God, or the bodie of Chriſt? (that is the ſacrament of his bodie:) ye muſt anſwere, that the word of God is not inferiour, *Homil.*26.

Hence we frame this argument: The word of God is equiualent to the Sacrament of the Lords bodie: Baptiſme is equiualent to the worde of God, by our aduerſaries owne confeſſion: Ergo, alſo it is of equall value and dignitie with the other Sacrament.

THE TVVELFTH GENERALL CONTROVERSIE, OF THE SACRAMENT OF BAPTISME.

THis controuerſie ſtandeth vpon diuers queſtions. Firſt, of the name, and definition of Baptiſme. Secondly, of the parts of Baptiſme. Thirdly, of the neceſſitie of Baptiſme. Fourthly, of the Miniſter of Baptiſme. Fiftly, of the parties which are to be baptized. Sixtly, of the effects of Baptiſme. Seuenthly, of the difference of Chriſts Baptiſme and Iohns. Eightly, of the ceremonies of Baptiſme.

THE FIRST QVESTION, OF THE NAME and definition of Baptiſme.

COncerning the name, there is no queſtion betweene vs, for the name of Baptiſme hath the originall and beginning from the Scripture: S. Paul vſeth this word, Coloſſ. 2. verſ. 12. We are buried with him through Baptiſme. And againe, Heb. 6. 2. All the queſtion is about the definition of Baptiſme.

The Papiſts.

1. Error. THey define Baptiſme to be a Sacrament of regeneration by water in the word: that is, not which ſignifieth and ſealeth vnto vs our regeneration, and aſſureth vs of remiſſion of ſinnes: but actually iuſtifieth and regenerateth vs, Bellarm. lib. 1. de Baptiſm. cap. 1.

Argum. Bellarmine groundeth his definition vpon thoſe words of our Sauiour, Iohn 3. 5. Except a man be borne of water and the ſpirit: and Epheſ. 5. 26. That he might ſanctifie it by the waſhing of water through the word: Hence he would inferre, that we are ſanctified by the water in Baptiſme. Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. It is manifeſt by thoſe places, where the ſpirite and the word are ioyned to the outward waſhing by water; that the efficacie is not in the water, but in the ſpirit, and the word or promiſe of God, which is apprehended by faith: theſe places proue that Baptiſme is a Sacrament, ſigne and ſeale of regeneration, but no efficient or working cauſe thereof.

The Proteſtants.

WE rather, according to the Scriptures define Baptiſme, to be a ſigne or ſeale of our regeneration and new birth, whereby we are aſſured, that as verily by faith in the bloud of Chriſt we are cleanſed from our ſinnes, as our bodies are waſhed with water, In the name of the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghoſt: So that Baptiſme doth not actually beſtow remiſſion of ſinnes by the worke wrought, but is a pledge and ſeale of the righteouſnes of faith, as S. Paul ſaith of Circumciſion, Rom. 4. 11. For it is not the waſhing of the fleſh by water, but the eſtabliſhing of the heart with faith and grace, that ſaueth vs, 1. Pet. 3. 21. See this poynt handled more at large, Controuerſ. 11. next before, queſt. 2. part. 1.

Auguſtine ſaith, Per fidem renaſcimur in baptiſmate: by faith we are borne againe in Baptiſme, De tempor. Serm. 53. It is then the proper act of faith, to regenerate vs, not of Baptiſme; the vſe and end whereof, is to ſtrengthen and increaſe our faith.

Wee haue againſt this actuall iuſtification, by water in Baptiſme, the euident teſtimonie out of their owne decrees, decret. p. 2. cauſ. 1. qu. 1. c. 54. Vnde iſta tanta virtus aquæ, &c. From whence is this ſo great vertue of the water, that it toucheth the bodie, and cleanſeth the heart, Niſi faciente verbo, but by the working of the word; Non quia dicitur, ſed quia creditur: not becauſe the word is ſpoken, but beleeued.

Cauſ. 27. qu. 2. c. 45. gloſſ. Fides eſt cauſa, quare in Baptiſmo à peccatis mundamur: Faith is the cauſe, that our ſinnes are cleanſed in Baptiſme.

Decret. 3 diſt. 4. c. 1. Sine Sacramento viſibili, et fide inuiſibili nemo ſaluatur: Without the viſible Sacrament, and inuiſible faith, no man is ſaued.

Ibid. c. 8. Per fidem et Baptiſmum, &c. By faith and Baptiſme wee are freed from our ſinne. And yet more euidently cap. 39. of the ſame diſtinction, vpon thoſe words of our Sauiour, Iam vos mundi eſtis, and now you are cleane through the word, that I haue ſpoken vnto you; Quare non ayt, mundi eſtis propter Baptiſmum, &c. Why doth he not ſay, you are cleane becauſe of Baptiſme, wherewith ye are waſhed, (but becauſe of the word) but becauſe the word cleanſeth in the water. We ſee then, that the vertue of the Sacrament dependeth vpon faith, ſo that Bellarmines aſſertion, That faith addeth no force to the Sacrament, lib.1.de Sacram.c.22. is not onely repugnant to Scripture, but contrarie to their owne Canons.

THE SECOND QVESTION, OF THE parts, which are the matter and forme of Baptiſme.

AS touching the matter: that is, the externall element vſed in Baptiſme, there is no queſtion betweene vs, but that it ought to be plaine and common water, Act.10.47. S.Peter ſaith, Can any man forbid water, that theſe ſhould not be baptized? Wherefore we condemne the fooliſh and vngodly practiſes and inuentions of heretikes, that either exclude water altogether, as the Manichees, with others; or doe vſe any other element, as the Iacobites, that in ſtead of water burned them that were to be baptized, with a whot yron; or as the Æthiopians, which are called Abiſſines, that vſed fire in ſtead of water: miſconſtruing the words of the Goſpell, Matth.3.11. That Chriſt ſhould baptize with the holy Ghoſt and with fire: which is not literally to be vnderſtood, but thereby is ſignified the internall and forceable working of the ſpirit, which kindleth zeale and loue in our hearts as fire. Bez.Matth.3. verſ.11.

Concerning the forme of Baptiſme: we all agree, that no other is to be vſed, then that preſcribed by our Sauiour Chriſt: To baptize in the name of the Father, the Sonne, and holy Ghoſt: that it is neither lawfull to change this forme in ſenſe, as many heretikes haue done, nor yet in words, as to leaue out any of the three perſons in Trinitie, and incluſiuely to vnderſtand them by naming of one: for whereas ſome alleage that place, Act.2.38. Be ye baptized in the name of Ieſus Chriſt, for remiſſion of ſinnes; to proue, that it is lawfull onely in the name of Chriſt to baptize, we are to vnderſtand, that the forme of Baptiſme is not in that place expreſly ſet downe, but the ſcope onely and end of Baptiſme, which is to aſſure vs of remiſſion of ſinnes in the name of Chriſt, as Beza very well noteth vpon that place: Wherefore it is a manifeſt Error, which is imputed to Pope Nicholas, who defineth Baptiſme in the name of Chriſt onely to be ſufficient, decret.part.3. diſtinct.4.c.24. Bellarmine would helpe this matter, and ſaith, that he bringeth in S. Ambroſe authoritie, but determineth nothing himſelfe, whereas the very words of the Pope are theſe, Conſtat eos denuò non eſſe baptizandos: It is euident, that ſuch are not to be baptized againe, namely, they, that were baptized onely in the name of Chriſt: what are theſe els, but definitiue words? Wherefore wee allow rather the decree of Alexander 3.decret.Greg.lib.3.tit.42.c.1. Si quis non dixerit, ego baptizo: Vnleſſe a man ſay, I baptize thee in the name of the Father, of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghoſt, he baptizeth not: this is agreeable to the Scripture, where Chriſt commandeth his diſciples to baptize in the name of the Father, of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghoſt, Matthew 28. but the very forme of ſpeech, as whether to ſay, I baptize, or according to the vſe of the Greeke Church, Bee thou baptized, is not of like neceſſitie, as to vſe the name of the Trinitie. The poynt then of difference betweene vs, concerning the forme of Baptiſme is this.

The Papiſts.

2.Error. THey are bolde to affirme, that this forme of Baptiſme, to baptize in the name of the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghoſt, is not fully concluded out of Scripture, but deliuered by tradition: for (ſay they) the commaundement of Chriſt, to baptize in the name of the Trinitie, Matth.28. may be vnderſtood thus: to baptize them into the faith of the Trinitie, or by the authoritie of the Trinitie. And it were ſufficient, by thoſe words, to doe and performe it in act, without ſaying the words; were it not, that we haue otherwiſe learned by tradition, that this very forme of words is to be kept, Bellarm.de baptiſm.lib.1.cap.3.

The Proteſtants.

WE neede no tradition for this matter; the very forme which is to be vſed in Baptiſme, is plainely proued out of the Scriptures: for that commandement of Chriſt, Goe and baptize, &c. doth neceſſarily imply a forme of ſpeech to be vſed. We graunt, that in the Scriptures, this word (name,) is taken for power, vertue, authoritie, as Act.3.6. In the name of Ieſus ariſe and walke. So alſo, as there is a Baptiſme with water, there may be a baptizing with fire, Matth.3.11. Wherefore if part of the commandement be to be taken properly and literally, as this, Goe and baptize, why not the reſt alſo, In the name of the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghoſt? If then the whole commandement be properly and plainely vnderſtood: how can they baptize in the name of the Trinitie, vnleſſe the Trinitie be ſpoken and named?

Secondly, it appeareth alſo out of other places of Scripture, that this forme was vſed in the Apoſtles time: As Act.10.47. Can any man forbid water, why theſe ſhould not be baptized, which haue receiued ceiued the holy Ghoſt,as well as we? As if S.Peter ſhould haue reaſoned thus: theſe haue receiued the giftes of the Holy Ghoſt: Ergo, they may be alſo baptized in the name of the holy Ghoſt. Likewiſe, Act.19.2. When the brethren at Epheſus had anſwered Paul, that they had not heard, whether there were a holy Ghoſt: he ſaith vnto them, Vnto what then were you baptized? By this interrogatorie it appeareth, it was their manner to baptize in the name of the holy Ghoſt, and ſo conſequently of the whole Trinitie. We haue no cauſe then to flie vnto tradition, this matter being ſo plainely decided by the Scripture.

*Auguſtin. tract. in Iohann.*80. Vpon thoſe words of our Sauiour, Iohn.15.3. You are cleane thorough the word, which I haue ſpoken vnto you. Detrahe verbum, & quid eſt aqua niſi aqua? Accedit verbum ad elementum, & fit ſacramentum: Take away the word, and what remaineth in Baptiſme but bare water? Let the word be ioyned to the element, and it maketh a Sacrament. The forme then of Baptiſme, is the word, which Chriſt ſpake: and where elſe ſpeaketh Chriſt, but in the Scriptures? Ergo, the forme of Baptiſme, is the word of Chriſt, preſcribed and commaunded in the Scriptures. Away therefore with your vncertaine and deceitfull traditions. Our Baptiſme is builded vpon a ſurer foundation: namely, the word of God.

*Concil.Florentin.ſeſſ.*7.Andreas Coloſſenſ.Velim à vobis ampliſſimi patres doceri,&c. I would learne of you (reuerend fathers,) whether the moſt holy Goſpell doe conteine the moſt perfect doctrine of our religion: I thinke (ſuch is your godlineſſe) that you will not anſwere otherwiſe, but that the moſt abſolute knowledge of our faith, is therein conteined: Ergo, the perfect doctrine of Baptiſme is expreſſed in the Goſpell.

The Maſter of ſentences thus determineth this matter: lib.4.diſtinct.3.g. Non tunc illam formam Chriſtus,&c. Chriſt did not firſt giue that forme of Baptiſme to his Apoſtles, when he ſent them to preach to the Gentiles, but before when he ſent them to preach to the Iewes: ſo that the inſtitution of Baptiſme may be better ſaid to haue bin made when Chriſt was baptized of Iohn in Iordane, &c. Tunc ergo inuocato nomine Trinitatis,&c. Then was the Baptiſme of Chriſt inſtituted, the name of the Trinitie being inuocated, which there appeared in myſterie, &c. Your Maſter groundeth the forme of Baptiſme in the name of the Trinitie, vpon the Baptiſme of Chriſt, where the whole Trinitie appeared in myſterie, the Father ſpake from heauen, the holy Ghoſt deſcended like a Doue, the Sonne himſelfe was in the waters: wherefore here is no neede to runne vnto tradition.

Hereunto the holy Martyrs giue conſent: The word of God written by the Prophets and Apoſtles, left and conteined in the Canonicall bookes of the whole Bible, I doe beleeue to conteine plentifully all thinges neceſſarie to ſaluation, &c. *Iohn Bradford,*pag.1626. But the doctrine of Baptiſme is neceſſarie to ſaluation to be knowen, both concerning the forme & matter: Ergo.

THE THIRD QVESTION, OF THE neceſſitie of Baptiſme.

The Papiſts.

THey affirme, that Baptiſme is ſimply neceſſarie to ſaluation by Gods appointment: ſo that all which die vnbaptized, vnleſſe the want of Baptiſme be recompenced either by Martyrdome or penance, muſt needes periſh, and be depriued of eternall life, Concil.Trident.ſeſſ.7.can.7. Bellar. lib.1.de Baptiſ.cap.4. 3.Error.

Argum. Ioh.3.5.Our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith, Vnleſſe a man be borne of water and the ſpirit, he cannot enter into the kingdome of God: Ergo, it is neceſſarie to ſaluation to bee baptized, Bellarm.ibid.Rhemiſt.in hunc locum.

Anſw. Firſt, it is not neceſſarie by water here to vnderſtand materiall water, but the purifying grace of Chriſt, which is called the water of life, Iohn 4.11. Water then is here added as an Epithete of the ſpirit, becauſe it clenſeth and purgeth as water: as Iohn 7.38. He that beleeueth, out of his bellie ſhall flow riuers of waters of life: Quid aqua ſit (ſaith Auguſtine) euangelium interroga: Inquire of the Goſpell, what this water is. Then it followeth, verſ.39. This ſpake he of the ſpirit, which they that beleeued in him, ſhould receiue. By water then it is no rare thing, to vnderſtand the ſpirit. Secondly, why may not water bee here figuratiuely taken, to expreſſe the working of the ſpirit, as fire is added to the ſpirit, Matth.3.11. He ſhall baptize with the holy Ghoſt and with fire? What greater neceſſitie is there in this place, to vnderſtand water literally, than fire in the other? Tractat.in Epiſtol. Ioh.6.

Obiect. Bellarmine replieth: that water muſt needes be here vnderſtood literally: firſt, becauſe the words in Scripture, if there follow not apparent abſurditie, muſt be properly vnderſtood. Secondly, if water be not here ſignified, then it will bee hard to proue, that Baptiſme ought to bee miniſtred only with water: for other places, where mention is made of water, do proue that men may be baptized with water; but they proue not, that they cannot be baptized with other things: Lib.1.de Baptiſm.cap.4.

Anſ. Firſt, it is true that where any abſurditie may follow, the words are not to be taken properly: as when Chriſt ſaid (this is my bodie) becauſe it is an abſurd thing and inconuenient to eate mans fleſh, wee ſay the ſpeech is figuratiue: but it followeth not of the contrarie, that where no abſurditie followeth, there the words are properly to bee taken, as Matth. 3. where mention is made of Baptiſme with fire; it were no very abſurd thing, if Chriſt had ſo appointed, for children to be ſomewhat ſinged with fire, as they were in the law circumciſed and cut with a knife: yet fire properly is not there vnderſtood. Secondly, if the element of water were here ſignified, a great abſurditie would follow, that for want of a little ſprinkling of water, children ſhould bee vtterly loſt. Thirdly, wee haue other places to prooue the neceſſitie of water in Baptiſme beſide this place: As firſt, the example of Chriſt, Matth. chapt. 3. who was baptized onely in water. Againe, the commaundement of Chriſt, Matth. chap. 28. Goe and baptize: which worde ſignifieth properly to waſh with water: As alſo the practiſe of the Apoſtles that onely vſed water, Act. 10. Saint Peter ſaith, Who can forbid water? &c.

Thirdly, as you expound theſe words of Baptiſme, ſo ye doe applie another place, Ioh. chapt. 6. verſ. 53. to the other Sacrament: Vnleſſe you doe eate the fleſh of the Sonne of man, and drinke his blood, you ſhall not haue life in you. If this bee ſpoken of the Sacramentall eating and drinking of Chriſt, as the Rhemiſts take it; then belike there is as great neceſſitie of the Euchariſt, as of Baptiſme: and ſo indeede Auguſtine ſometime thought, that the one was as neceſſarie to ſaluation as the other: Sine Chriſti carne & ſanguine, nec paruuli vitam habere poſſunt in ſemetipſis: Without the fleſh and blood of Chriſt, neither can infants haue life in themſelues. And therefore it was the cuſtome of thoſe times, to giue of the Sacrament to children: Paruulis adhuc & infirmis ſtillantur quædam de Sacramentis: Some part of the Sacrament is inſtilled and powred into the mouthes of young and tender children.

Cont. 2. epiſt. Pelag. lib. 4. c. 4. in Pſal. 64

But our aduerſaries in no wiſe will admit that the Euchariſt is as neceſſarie as Baptiſme: wherfore they doe thus comment vpon our Sauiours wordes: That they alſo doe eate the fleſh of Chriſt and drinke his blood, which ioyne in heart and deſire to bee partakers of the Sacrament, and ſo myſtically, and ſpiritually doe receiue it, Rhemiſt. Ioh. 6. ſect. 8. And why, I pray you, may there not bee as well a myſticall and ſpirituall receiuing of Baptiſme without the Sacrament, as of the Euchariſt or Lordes Supper, ſeeing this place, Iohn 6. 53. doth as neceſſarilie enforce the receiuing of this Sacrament, as that place, Iohn 3. 5. doth lay a neceſſitie vpon Baptiſme?

Fourthly, If this ſaying of Chriſt, Except a man bee borne of water, &c. doe implie a neceſſitie of Baptiſme, then Baptiſme began to bee neceſſarie immediatlie vpon this ſpeech of our Sauiour: for he ſaith not, except a man ſhall bee, but except hee bee, niſi renatus fuerit, in the preter tenſe. But Bellarmine himſelfe ſaith, that Baptiſme began not to bee neceſſarie, till after Chriſts death, cap. 5. therefore it is not like, that any ſuch neceſſitie ſhould bee laid at all vpon Baptiſme. For it had been great reaſon, that Chriſts baptiſme, which was giuen while he liued in the fleſh, ſhould haue been as neceſſarie as his Apoſtles baptiſme, which was miniſtred afterward.

Laſtly, the Maſter of Sentences thus expoundeth this place: Intelligendum eſt de illis, qui poſſunt & contemnunt baptizari: It is to be vnderſtood of thoſe, which may, and yet contemne to be baptized: vel ita intelligendum eſt, &c. or it muſt be thus vnderſtood: Vnleſſe a man be borne againe of water and the ſpirit, &c. that is by that regeneration, which is done by water and the ſpirit: but that regeneration is not onely by Baptiſme, but by repentance, &c. lib. 4. diſt. 4. e. If either of theſe expoſitions be receiued, children dying without Baptiſme ſhall not bee condemned: for firſt, they doe not contemne Baptiſme, if they dye without it. Secondly, that regeneration, which others haue by the ſpirit and water, others by repentance, is ſupplied vnto them by the couenant of grace.

Or wee refuſe not the interpretation of this place, which Innocentius 3. one of your Popes hath in his decree, Decret. Gregor. lib. 3. tit. 42. cap. 3. where hauing recited this place of ſcripture, Vnleſſe a man be borne of water and the ſpirit, &c. with diuers other places, he inferreth thus: Ex vi literæ ſatis patet prædictas authoritates, &c. By the very letter it is apparant, that the foreſaid authorities muſt onely be vnderſtood of thoſe that are of age, which haue a multitude of ſinnes, and cannot be vnderſtood of little ones, which onely haue originall ſinne, and ſo alſo is that authoritie to bee reſolued, he that beleeueth and is baptized, ſhall be ſaued. If ye will bee iudged then by your holy father, this place cannot be enforced againſt infants, that dye vnbaptized.

The Proteſtants.

WE acknowledge no greater neceſſitie in Baptiſme, then in the other Sacrament: both which we graunt to be neceſſarie as helpes and props, and profitable meanes to increaſe our faith: but not ſo ſimplie neceſſarie, as that without them (there being no neglect, or contempt had of them) it were impoſſible to be ſaued.

Argum.1. The children of the faithfull are holie alreadie, euen before they bee baptized: for they are within the couenant, and to them alſo belongeth the promiſe. The Lord ſaith, I will bee thy God, and the God of thy ſeede, Geneſ.17.7. And S.Paul ſaith, that the children of the faithfull are holie, 1.Corinth.7.14. If the Lord then be the God alſo of children, and if they bee holie, being borne of the righteous ſeede, how can they poſſiblie periſh, although they dye vnbaptized?

Bellarmine anſwereth. Firſt, that the promiſes made to Abraham, were temporall, not ſpirituall.

Contra. Saint Paul ſheweth, they were ſpirituall: by ſeede (not ſeedes) vnderſtanding Chriſt, Galath.3. ſo that the promiſes made to Abraham, and his ſeede, were ſuch, as were to bee accompliſhed in Chriſt.

Bellarmine. 2. Such ſpirituall promiſes, as were made to Abraham, belonged not to the carnall poſteritie of Abraham, but to the true ſonnes of Abraham, that is, his faithfull ſeede, cap.4. reſponſ.ad obiect.1.

Contra. We graunt, that only ſuch as beleeued, after they came to yeeres capable of faith, were the true ſonnes of Abraham, though otherwiſe both carnally begotten of his ſtocke, as alſo outwardly ſigned with circumciſion: but no ſuch condition of faith was required in infants: but they were ſaued euen dying before circumciſion by the couenant of grace, which was made to Abraham and his ſeede, Geneſ.17.7. before circumciſion, which is the ſigne of the couenant, was giuen.

Bellarm. Thirdly, the children are ſaid to be holie: either after a ciuill kinde of holines, that is to ſay, they were legitimate: or elſe becauſe the beleeuing parent doth conſecrate the children vnto God, and ſo they are made holy by Baptiſme, and are brought vp in godlines: or elſe, the vnbeleeuing part is ſaid to be ſanctified by the beleeuing, in that he is taught the right vſe of mariage; whereas Infidels doe abuſe matrimonie, and vſe it immoderatly, and at ſuch times, as they ought to abſtaine, whereby their children are vncleane, and their mariage polluted, Bellarmine ibid.

Contra. Firſt, no ſuch ciuill ſanctification, that is legitimation, can bee here vnderſtood: for though both the parents were Infidels, yet are their children legitimate, they being lawfully linked together in mariage: but now the Apoſtle ſaying, The vnbeleeuing huſband is ſanctified by the wife, meaneth a further degree of ſanctification, then is betweene both being Infidels. Secondly, neither doth the Apoſtle meane, that the children are holie by any act of holineſſe wrought vpon them by the beleeuing parent, as by conſecrating them vnto God, or bringing them to bee baptized, or ſeeing them well brought vp; but ſuch an holines, as whereby both the vnbeleeuing parent is ſanctified, and his ſeede alſo: But firſt, by godly education the children onely are ſanctified, it is nothing to the ſanctification of the parents. Secondly, neither are all children made holie or vertuous, by their good education, as Eſau wanted no good bringing vp, as well as Iacob, yet he is called a prophane perſon, Heb.12.16. but the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of all the children of ſuch, that they are holie. Thirdly, and again the Apoſtle meaneth not only ſuch children as are brought to Baptiſme, or of age to be nurtured, but all the children and ſeede of the faithfull parent: wherefore it cannot be ſo vnderſtood. Fourthly, yet further, it is poſſible that an adulterer may haue a care for the good education of his adulterous ſeede, as Auguſtine had for his ſonne Aderdatus, and yet their vnlawfull copulation is not thereby ſanctified.

Thirdly, this ſanctification cannot be vnderſtood of the right vſe of mariage: firſt, becauſe that although the abuſe of mariage in the parents is a pollution to them, yet it extendeth not to their ſeede. Secondly, it is poſſible for Infidels to attaine to this ciuill gift, as moderatly and ſoberly to vſe their wiues, as ſome of them had the gift of perpetuall continencie, doth it therefore followe, that their ſeede ſhall be holie? Thirdly, yea this infirmitie in the immoderate vſe of mariage is incident to the mariage of the faithfull: as Auguſtine ſaith, Naturalis vſus, licèt immoderatus, venialis eſt in vxore, &c. The naturall vſe, though it be immoderate, is pardonable in the wife: huius delicti, non habent hortatrices nuptias, ſed deprecatrices: Mariage is not an exhorter thereunto, but an intreater: *de nupt. & concup.c.*11. ſhall the children therefore of the faithfull bee vnholie? So then none of theſe three expoſitions, which Bellarmine hath brought, can ſtand.

Wherefore the meaning of the Apoſtle is this, that the children of parents, where one of them is a beleeuer, are holie, that is within the couenant; and being within the couenant, they are alſo partakers of the promiſe: Where we ſee a difference betweene the law of Chriſt, and the lawes of men: for by the Ciuill law, partus ſequitur ventrem, the birth did follow the wombe, the childe did follow the condition of the mother; as Cod.lib.5.tit.5.leg.3.Conſtantin. If the father were a free man, the mother a ſeruant, ſo ſhould the childe be: So likewiſe decreeth Gregor.9.decr.Greg.lib.1.tit.18.c.8. But the rule of Chriſt is more fauourable, that if either father or mother are free in Chriſt, that is beleeuers, the child is free alſo, that is holie: ſo that the faith of the one of them is more auaileable to include the ſeede within the couenant, then the infidelitie of the other to exclude it. So then the vnbeleeuer is ſanctified by the beleeuer, that is, is made a fit inſtrument, notwithſtanding his infidelitie to conuey the holie ſeede. And the Ciuill law hath a rule not much vnlike the ſaying of the Apoſtle here, Uxor concreſcat marito: The wife doth increaſe and grow with her husband, *Cod lib.5.tit.4.leg.28.Iuſtinian.* Like as the wife, though a ſeruant, being maried to a man of honourable order, was partaker of his honor: ſo likewiſe faith in either partie, being the true honor of a Chriſtian, doth ſanctifie the other in this behalfe.

*Arg.*2. Circumciſion was as neceſſarie to the Iſraelites, as Baptiſme is to vs: but their children, which died before the eight day, when they were to be circumciſed, periſhed not: for Dauid doubteth not to ſay of his childe that died the ſeuenth day, I ſhall goe to him, he cannot returne to me, 1. Samuel. 12.18.23. He pronounceth that the childe was ſaued. And Bellarmine confeſſeth, that ſome of the children that Herod ſlew were not eight daies old, and ſo not circumciſed; yet they were all ſaued and are counted innocents, *lib.1.de Baptiſ.c.6.prop.*1. Ergo, neither children dying without Baptiſme now are condemned.

The Maſter of Sentences anſwereth, that either children dying before circumciſion did periſh and were damned, or elſe in caſe of neceſſitie they might circumciſe before the eight day, *lib.*4. *diſtinct.1.l.*

Contra. His firſt aſſertion is very cruell and vncharitable, and contrarie to the Scripture: for Dauids childe was ſaued dying before the eight day; and ſome of the children that Herod did ſlay might be vnder eight daies old, and ſo not circumciſed, and yet they are all held to bee innocents and Saints.

His ſecond aſſertion hath no ground, ſeeing that in the inſtitution of circumciſion, Geneſ. 17. it is limited to the eight day: ſo that they which circumciſed before that day, did contrarie to the inſtitution.

Bellarmine anſwereth: that it is vncertaine, whether the Iewes had any other remedie againſt ſinne for their children dying before circumciſion, becauſe the Scripture maketh no mention thereof: but now it is certaine, there is no remedie beſide Baptiſme for infants, *Bellar.cap.*4.

Anſ. Firſt, neither Circumciſion then, nor Baptiſme now, is a remedie againſt originall ſinne, but a ſigne onely and ſeale of our ſpirituall waſhing by the blood of Chriſt. Secondly, if the Iewes had another remedie for their children, ſhall we thinke that the Goſpell hath laid an harder yoke vpon infants, then the law did? Thirdly, infants then, and now dying before the Sacrament, haue one common remedie to be ſaued by, namely the couenant of grace, in that the Lord promiſed, to be their God, and the God of their ſeede: and the children by the Apoſtle are called holie, 1. Corinth. 7.14.

*Argum.*3. The holy Ghoſt may be giuen without Baptiſme, ſo it be not contemned and neglected, when it may bee had: therefore life eternall may bee had without Baptiſme: for the holie Ghoſt is able without the Sacrament, to regenerate vs, and bring vs to eternall life.

The firſt is proued, Act. 10.47. Who can forbid water, that theſe ſhould not be baptized, which haue receiued the holy Ghoſt, as well as wee? They had the holy Ghoſt before and without Baptiſme, as Auguſtine ſaith, Adhuc loquente Petro, non dico nondum imponente manum, ſed nondum baptizante, venit ſpiritus ſanctus: While Peter yet ſpake, before he laid on his hand, or baptized them, the holy Ghoſt came: Ergo, Baptiſme not neceſſarie.

*Argum.*4. You your ſelues make two exceptions, of Martyrs, and them that doe penance, which may bee ſaued without Baptiſme: Ergo, Baptiſme is not ſimplie neceſſarie. And if our Sauiour ſpeake of Baptiſme, Iohn 3. verſ. 5. as ye ſay he doth, there is no priuiledge for any, no not for Martyrs, for all muſt be borne of water and the ſpirit: that is, ſay you, baptized. Neither are your two exceptions generall enough: for the theefe vpon the croſſe was ſaued, and yet neither dyed a Martyr: for he himſelfe confeſſeth, that he was righteouſly puniſhed, Luk. 23.41. neither did he any ſuch penance, or made any ſuch ſatisfaction, as you require.

*Argum.*5. If all children dying without Baptiſme are damned; then it would follow, that an infinite number of children ſhould periſh without their fault, which were a moſt cruell and vncharitable thing to affirme.

Bellarmine anſwereth: that Gods iudgements are moſt iuſt, though they be ſecret, neither are children damned without their fault, becauſe they haue originall ſinne: but it is moſt certaine, that there is no remedie for children without Baptiſme, *cap.*4.

Contra. Firſt, it is true, that Gods iudgements and decrees are moſt iuſt, though wee perceiue them not, and ſo are they full of mercie to: but it is not apparant out of Scripture, that God hath ſet downe any ſuch decree for the children of the faithfull vnbaptized, but the contrarie; as Mark. 10.14. they brought little children vnto our Sauiour, who ſaid, of ſuch is the kingdome of heauen: he ſaith not of little ones baptized, but ſimply of little ones being the ſeede of the faithfull, as theſe were. Secondly, though children haue originall ſinne, yet ſeeing Baptiſme is appointed as a remedie againſt it,which they dying before,are depriued of without their fault; how then conſequently are they not condemned without their fault, ſeeing that which ſhould preſerue them from condemnation (as they ſay) is denied vnto them without their fault? Thirdly, that there is no remedie for children dying without Baptiſme, it is contrary to the decree of Innocent.3 decret.Gregor.tit.42.c.3. Abſit vt vniuerſi paruuli pereant,&c. God forbid, that all children ſhould periſh,whereof ſo great a multitude daily dieth; but that the merciful God,who would haue none to periſh,hath for them alſo prouided ſome remedie to ſaluation.Some alſo of your own Doctors, as Caietanus,Gabriel, with others, doe hold, that there is ſome remedie for children departing before Baptiſme.

Laſtly,it was the hereſie of the Hierarchites, qui regnum cœlorum paruulos habere negant, which denied,that children did goe to heauen, decret.par.2.cauſ.24.q.3.c.39. How farre now are the Papiſts from this hereſie, that exclude all children out of the kingdome of God, that are not baptized?

Bernard thus writeth of this matter: *Nequaquam poſſum omnino deſperare ſalutem, ſi aquam non non contemptus, ſed ſola prohibeat impoſſibilitas: Epiſtol.*77.I cannot altogether deſpayre of their ſaluation,that are not baptized,if it bee not done of contempt, but when as Baptiſme cannot poſſiblie be had.

Againe,in the ſame place he ſaith: Vide etiam, ne forte ob hoc Saluator cum diceret: qui crediderit,& baptizatus fuerit,ſaluus erit,cautè & vigilanter non repetierit, qui baptizatus non fuerit,ſed tantum,qui non crediderit, condemnabitur: nimirum intuens ſolam interdum fidem ſufficere ad ſalutem, & ſine ipſa ſufficere nihil: See alſo if our Sauiour Chriſt for this cauſe, when he had ſaid,he that beleeueth and is baptized,ſhall be ſaued,did not of purpoſe in repeating the ſentence,omit to ſay, hee that is not baptized; but onely,he that beleeueth not ſhall be damned: for he ſaw, that faith onely may ſuffice to ſaluation,but without faith nothing can ſuffice.

Clement.epiſtol.4.Bonum eſt,& puritati conueniens etiam corpus aqua diluere; bonum dico, non quaſi principale illud, in quo mens purificatur,ſed quod ſit ſequela illius boni hoc, in quo caro diluitur: It is good and conuenient to waſh the bodie in water,good I ſay,but not that principall good,whereby the minde is purified, but a ſecond or a conſequent good thing to that,&c. There is then a more principall thing in Baptiſme then the waſhing of water, which is the ſpirituall grace: without this a man cannot be ſaued,without the other he may.

Richard Woodman holy Martyr thus witneſſeth; The Scripture ſaith, he that beleeueth and is baptized, ſhall be ſaued; and he that beleeueth not ſhall be damned: but no Scripture in all the new Teſtament ſaith,that he which is not baptized,ſhall be damned: neither dare I ſay ſo for all the goods vnder heauen: Fox pag.1994.

AN APPENDIX, WHETHER THE WANT OF Baptiſme may be by any other meanes ſupplied.

The Papiſts.

4.Error. OVr aduerſaries make three kindes of Baptiſme, Baptiſmum fluminis, Baptiſmum ſanguinis, Baptiſmum flaminis: The Baptiſme of water, the Baptiſme of blood, which is Martyrdome, and the Baptiſme of the ſpirit,which is contrition and penance: By theſe two,the firſt, ſay they, may be ſupplied.

They affirme, that Martyrdome, and penance or contrition, doe by the very act or worke wrought remit ſinnes, and iuſtifie the workers, and not in reſpect of the faith onely, which is in Martyrs or penitent perſons, Bellarm.cap.6.lib.1.de Baptiſm.

Argum. The Innocents,which were ſlaine by Herod, were ſaued onely by their martyrdome, they had neither faith, nor workes. So the theefe vpon the croſſe was not onely iuſtified by his faith,but by the act and worke of contrition.

Anſ. Firſt,it is not neceſſarie to hold all thoſe children to be Martyrs,and ſo to bee ſaued: for Macrobius writeth,that one of Herods ſonnes,which was nurſed in thoſe parts, was ſlaine among the reſt: the infants which were ſaued, were within the promiſe, and belonged to the couenant, and ſo could not bee loſt: their ſaluation depended of their free election before God; it was not purchaſed by the very act of their dying.

Secondly, the theefe alſo vpon the croſſe was iuſtified by his faith and beliefe in Chriſt. And therefore Auguſtine doth chiefly commend his faith: Tunc fides eius de ligno floruit, quando diſcipulorum emarcuit: Then his faith did as it were bud and flouriſh out of the tree of the croſſe, when the faith of the diſciples withered.

Argum.2. Many Confeſſors haue greater charitie, than Martyrs, and yet they had not remiſſion of all their ſinnes,as Martyrs haue. And a man being not yet iuſt or righteous, yet chooſeth rather to dye,than denie Chriſt;this man cannot deſerue any thing,being not iuſtified,and therefore it is his martyrdome, which by the very act wrought, doth purchaſe forgiuenes of ſinne, Bellarm. rat. 2. & 5.

Anſ. Firſt, that Confeſſors may haue greater charitie, than Martyrs, it is contrarie to the ſaying of our Sauionr, Iohn 15. No man hath greater loue than this, to giue his life for his friends. Secondly, Confeſſors dying in the faith of Chriſt, doe finde forgiuenes of ſinnes as well as Martyrs: as Reuelat. 14. 13. Bleſſed are they which dye in the Lord, not onely they which dye for the Lord, but in the Lord, that is in the faith of Ieſus. Thirdly, they which giue their liues for Chriſt, being not iuſt before, are either in that inſtant conuerted, as the theefe vpon the croſſe, and ſo they are ſaued by their faith: or elſe if they dye rather of manlines and ſtomacke, then of faith, Saint Paul in this caſe ſaith, that dying without loue the fruite of faith, their death doth not profit them, 1. Corinth. 13. 3.

The Proteſtants.

NEither the outward worke of Martyrdome nor contrition doe iuſtifie, or giue remiſſion of ſinnes: but the faith onely of Martyrs and penitent perſons, whereby they apprehend Chriſt.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul ſaith, 1. Corinth. 13. 3. That if a man giue his bodie to be burned, and haue no loue, it profiteth not: Ergo, it is not the outward act of martyrdome, but an effectuall and liuely faith working by loue, which pleaſeth God.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, that this place proueth not, that charitie of neceſſitie muſt goe before martyrdome, but that there muſt bee charitie in martyrdome, by the force whereof there is charitie infuſed into the Martyrs heart; ſo that it is not poſſible he ſhould dye without charitie. Secondly, it may be ſaid as well of Baptiſme, as of Martyrdome, that it ſaueth not without charitie, and yet it giueth, or conferreth grace.

Anſ. Firſt, neither doe we hold it neceſſarie, that faith and charitie ſhould alwaies goe before martyrdome in time: for faith may be wrought in an inſtant, as in the theefe vpon the croſſe; but that faith and charitie doth ſanctifie the death of the Martyr, which is proued by this place. Secondly, charitie is not infuſed or effected by martyrdome, for then martyrdome ſhould alwaies bring forth this effect; and then were the Apoſtles ſpeech needleſſe, and his ſuppoſition falſe, if a man giue his bodie to be burned and haue no loue, &c. for by their ſaying the bodie cannot bee giuen to be burned without loue, if loue bee the effect of martyrdome: But contrariwiſe martyrdome is the effect and fruite of faith, and charitie; as Rom. 5. 8. Chriſts loue is herein commended, that he died for vs: his loue appeareth by the fruites and effects, namely his dying for vs. Thirdly, neither doth Baptiſme conferre grace, but is a ſeale onely of the righteouſneſſe of faith: neither is it true, that it profiteth not without faith, ſeeing infants haue neither faith nor charitie, to whom Baptiſme is profitable by the couenant of grace: Wherefore the inſtance of Baptiſme is not herein like to the other; and yet in thoſe that are of yeeres, and capable of faith, neither Baptiſme, or Martyrdome is auaileable without faith.

Argum. 2. Neither is the bare worke of ſorrow and contrition in it ſelfe acceptable to God: for there is a worldly repentance that cauſeth death; there is a godly repentance not to be repented of, which worketh in vs care, zeale, feare, deſire, which are the fruits of faith, 2. Cor. 7. 10. 11. Ergo, it is faith onely that maketh all our works to be accepted before God: for without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe him, Heb. 11. 6.

We want not here their owne teſtimonie: Decret. par. 3. diſt. 4. cap. 37. Baptizandus confitetur fidem ſuam, &c. He that is to be baptized confeſſeth his faith before the prieſt, and being asked anſwereth: the ſame doth the Martyr before the perſecutor, who alſo confeſſeth his faith, &c. Wherfore it is the confeſſion of the faith, that maketh martyrdome acceptable.

Dominicus a Soto, and Martinus Ledeſmius two archpapiſts doe holde, that martyrdome doth not conferre grace by the worke wrought, and therein conſent with vs, in 4. diſt. 3. qu. vn. art. 11.

The Papiſts.

5. Error. 2. MArtyrdome and contrition or conuerſion of the heart vnto God, though they be no Sacraments, yet may ſupplie the lacke of Baptiſme, Bellarm. ibid.

Argum. 1. Martyrdome in the Scriptures is rightly called a Baptiſme: as Chriſt ſpeaking of his death, ſaith, I muſt bee baptized with a Baptiſme, Luk. 12. 50. And therefore it may fitly ſtand in ſtead of Baptiſme.

Anſw. If euery thing, that hath the name of Baptiſme, may be vſed in place thereof; then adde vnto your number of ſuch deuiſed ſupplies, the Phariſaicall waſhing of cups, for they are called Baptiſmata calicum, the Baptiſmes, or clenſings of cups, Mark. 7. 4.

Argum. 2. Martyrdome hath the ſame effects, that Baptiſme hath, namely the conforming of vs to Chriſts paſſion, more liuely than in Baptiſme; for the conformation in Baptiſme is but ſacramentall, the other reall. Likewiſe it remitteth both ſinne and the puniſhment thereof, as Baptiſme doth: Ergo, it is a kinde of Baptiſme.

Anſw. Firſt, that the want of Baptiſme may by other meanes be recompenſed, as by Martyrdome, by faith in Chriſt, by the deſire and earneſt purpoſe of the heart, we denie not; yet we hold not any of theſe to be as Baptiſme. Secondly, the conforming of vs onely to Chriſts death and ſuffrings, maketh not Baptiſme; for then we ſhall haue ſo many Baptiſmes as ſuffrings, becauſe therein we alſo are made partakers of Chriſts ſuffrings, 1.Pet.4.13. not onely when we die for Chriſt, but if we be but rayled vpon. And againe, Baptiſme doth graffe vs not onely into the ſimilitude of Chriſts death, but of his reſurrection alſo, Rom.6.5. which Martyrdome doth not. And yet further, we are two wayes conformed to Chriſts death, by imitation, as in dying for Chriſt; by application, as when the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt and the merites of his death, are ſealed vnto vs in the Sacraments: the firſt conformation of vs is in Martyrdome; the ſecond is not, which is ſacramentall. Thirdly, neither Baptiſme, nor Martyrdome do actually remitte ſinne, but declare the ſame to be remitted, Baptiſme as a ſeale, Martyrdome as an effect and conſequent of faith and charitie: ſo that herein alſo they are vnlike.

The Proteſtants.

WE neede not any ſuch ſupplies to make good the want of Baptiſme, neither is it ſafe ſo to doe

1. It is great preſumption and boldnes, without warrant of Gods word, to giue the effect and bleſſing, which God hath annexed to the Sacraments, to any other externall worke: for what is this els, but to inſtitute other Sacraments, then Chriſt left? And ſhall we not thinke, that God by his ſpirit can better ſupply the loſſe and the want of the Sacraments, then we by our owne inuentions can helpe our ſelues? And whereas Bellarmine ſaith, that they haue the like inſtitution of Chriſt for Martyrdome, as for Baptiſme; when he can ſhew it out of the Scriptures, wee will beleeue him: Chriſt hath inſtituted Martyrdome, to ſhew our obedience, but not to be a ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of fayth, whereunto he hath appointed Baptiſme.

2. Concerning contrition of the heart, if you vnderſtand by it true repentance, and withall a vowe and true deſire to receiue the Sacrament of Baptiſme, which cannot be obtained becauſe of ſome remedileſſe neceſſitie; then in ſuch a caſe it ſtandeth as auailable, as if a man had been actually baptized: for thus the Rhemiſts expound themſelues, *annot.Iohn.*3.2. I pray you what greater neceſſitie is there now of Baptiſme, then of the other Sacraments? For this true, and we willingly grant: that euery man that ſhall bee ſaued, muſt either receiue the Sacraments, or haue a deſire vnto them: for the neglect and contempt of the Sacraments without repentance, is a ſinne damnable. And thus you ouerthrow your ſelues, making Baptiſme neceſſarie without neceſſitie.

3. Auguſtine admitteth none of theſe ſupplies, but only Martyrdome: Nemo fit membrum Chriſti, De animæ niſi aut baptiſmate Chriſti, ant morte pro Chriſto: No man is made the member of Chriſt, but ei- Origin.lib.1.
ther by the baptiſme of Chriſt, or in dying for Chriſt. Here Auguſtine maketh but one ſupply of cap.9.
Baptiſme, they make two. When men follow their owne inuentions, there can bee no agreement.

Bernard ſpeaketh fully for vs: Si martyrium vicem baptiſmi poſſit implere, quod non facit pœna, ſed ipſa fides, quod dare alteri valet, ſola non poterit obtinere? æquè enim magnam fortaſſis deus in corde cuiuſpiam in pace morientis inſpicit fidem, martyrio quidem non interrogatam, ſed martyrio idoneam: If martyrdome may ſupply the roume of Baptiſme, which not the paine maketh, but faith, how commeth it to paſſe, that it ſelfe cannot obtaine that, which it giueth to another? for God may finde as great faith in a man that dieth in peace, who is not called to martyrdome, yet fit to be a Martyr: Epiſt. 77. His reaſon is this, that martyrdome of it ſelfe cannot ſtand for Baptiſme; ſeeing of it ſelfe it is nothing: but faith both without baptiſme and martyrdome is auailable.

Their owne decrees thus teſtifie, *decret.p.*3.*diſtinct.*4.*c.*34. Quibus rebus oſtenditur,&c. whereby it is euident, that the Sacrament of Baptiſme is one thing, the conuerſion of the heart another, &c. but they do both tend to mans ſaluation: there is not then one and the ſame effect of both.

THE FOVRTH QVESTION, WHETHER women and Lay-men ought to baptize.

The Papiſts.

THey holde, that not onely Lay-men, but Pagans, that are not baptized themſelues; yea and 6.Error women alſo, may be miniſters of Baptſime, in a caſe of neceſſitie, Bellarm.cap.7.

Argum. Exod.4. Zipporah circumciſed her ſonne, and the Lord was pleaſed therewith, and went away from Moſes, whom he came againſt to haue ſlaine him: Ergo, women may as well now miniſter Baptiſme.

Anſw. Firſt, there is not the like ſtrict neceſſitie of Baptiſme, as there was then of Circumciſiou: for if euery man childe were not circumciſed the eight day, the Lord threatned to cut him off from among the people, Geneſ.17.14. But Baptiſme is not tyed or limited to any ſuch time or number of dayes. Secondly, there was great neceſſitie, which enforced Zipporah to circumciſe her childe: for they had neglected the time, and paſſed the ſtint of dayes: wherefore the Lord ſtrooke Moſes with ſicknes; and being not able himſelfe to performe that dutie, his wife in great haſte taketh the childe and cutteth him, to ſaue her husbands life: but ſhe in great indignation caſt away the fore-skin from her, knowing that ſhe was conſtrayned to commit an vnwomanly act. There cannot be any ſuch neceſſitie of Baptiſme, as there was then of Circumciſion; which was to be done within a certaine compas of dayes. Thirdly, you may as well proue by this example, that a woman may baptize, the Biſhop, Prieſt, or Deacon ſtanding by, (which notwithſtanding you hold vtterly vnlawfull) as that it is lawfull for her to baptize: for Zipporah did it in the preſence of Moſes.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that God was well pleaſed with Zipporahs act, in that Moſes preſently thereupon recouered, and the Angell left him: Ergo, it was lawfully done.

Anſw. Firſt, there is great difference betweene the neceſſitie of Circumciſion then, and Baptiſme now: for then the childe muſt not paſſe eight dayes vncircumciſed: and therefore Zipporahs doing herein was, becauſe of the imminent daunger and preſent neceſſitie, more tolerable. Secondly, in that God tooke off his hand from Moſes, it appeareth that God accepted of the act done; but it followeth not, that he approued the manner of the doing: As it cannot be gathered, that becauſe the plague ceaſed among the Philiſtines, 1.Sam.6. after they had ſent home the Arke with a gift, that this their offering was perfectly acceptable before God: or that the Samaritanes who ſerued God and their Idols together, did therefore pleaſe God, becauſe they were deliuered from the Lions, 2.King.17. But God in mercie accepted this maimed ſeruice, rather then none at all: So Zipporahs act was rather allowed, then that it ſhould haue been altogether left vndone.

*Argum.*2. Philip being but a Deacon baptized, Act.8. and Ananias a meere Lay-man baptized Paul, Act.9. Therefore other beſide Miniſters may baptize, *Bellarm.cap.*7.

Anſw. Firſt, Philip, though at the firſt a Deacon, yet afterward was called to be an Euangeliſt, Act.21.8. and ſo admitted both to preach and baptize. Secondly, it is too boldly affirmed that Ananias was but a Lay-man: though the Scripture make no mention of his calling by the Apoſtles: yet was it ſufficient that he was called of God extraordinarily to baptize Paul, as Paul was ſo called to be an Apoſtle. It followeth no more that he was a lay man, becauſe he was not called by the Apoſtles, then that Paul was ſo for the ſame cauſe.

The Proteſtants.

NEither Lay-men, of what calling ſoeuer, nor yet Midwiues, or any other women, ought to be ſuffered in a well reformed Church to baptize infants: neither are they authorized ſo to do amongſt vs.

*Argum.*1. The commiſſion and charge to baptize, was giuen onely by our Sauiour Chriſt to his Apoſtles, and all lawfull Miniſters their ſucceſſors, Matth.28.19. Ergo, Lay-men and women, in baptizing, goe beyond the commiſſion of Chriſt.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that when Chriſt gaue this commiſſion, there were many preſent beſide the Apoſtles.

Contra. We deny not, but that many beſide might be preſent, but he ſpake onely to his eleuen diſciples, who are immediatly named before verſ.17. vnleſſe you will ſay, that he made all the reſt (thoſe fiue hundred whom Saint Paul ſpeaketh of) Apoſtles alſo: for he ſendeth them into all the world, Mark.16.14.

*Argum.*2. The preaching of the Word, and adminiſtration of the Sacraments, are and ought alwayes to be ioyned together. And the care and charge of both is committed to Paſtors and Miniſters lawfully ordayned: Goe, ſaith our Sauiour, and teach all nations, baptizing them, Matth.28.19. But it is not lawfull for women to preach the word, 1.Cor.14.verſ.35. Ergo, not to baptize.

Bellarmine alſo would thus returne the argument: that as in caſe of neceſſitie it is lawfull both for lay men and women to teach, as Aquila and Priſcilla inſtructed Apollos, Act.18. ſo may they alſo in caſe of neceſſitie baptize.

*Contra.*1. Priuately to teach and inſtruct, is a common dutie of all Chriſtians, and not incident onely to the Miniſterie: ſo euery houſholder may teach his familie, the mother the children; this dutie lay men and women may performe: But they are not to meddle with publike teaching, nor conſequetly with the Sacraments, which though they be in priuate places miniſtred, yet are publike actions: Aquila and Priſcilla publikely taught not, but priuately expounded to Apollos the way of God. The like ſtorie hath Theodoret, *lib.*3.*c.*14. how that a heathen Prieſts ſonne vnder Iulian the apoſtata, was conuerted by a woman: and it was the office of the widowes of the Church priuately to prepare, and inſtruct ſuch of their owne ſexe, as were to bee baptized, to teach them how to anſwere, when they came to Baptiſme, as may appeare, *Carthag. ſynod.4.can.*12. but they were neuer admitted to any publike office in the Church. Secondly, it followeth not, though it be granted, that vpon an extraordinary occaſion, as in the conuerſion of ſome Countrie (as the people Iberi were conuerted, by the preaching of a woman) where there is no ſet Miniſterie, Lay men and women may baptize, that therefore it is lawfull for them to do it in a ſetled Church, and where there is an ordinarie calling.

Argum.3. If it be lawfull for ſuch to baptize, it is onely in the time of neceſſitie: but there is no ſuch neceſſitie, as wee haue ſhewed, of Baptiſme: Ergo, it is not at all lawfull for them.

Auguſtines iudgement is this: If a Lay-man doe giue Baptiſme: Neſcio an piè quis dixerit eſſe repetendum: I cannot tell whether any man may ſafely or godly ſay, that it is to be iterated or repeated. He doth not allow Lay-men to baptize: but is of opinion, that they are not to be baptized againe, that receiue baptiſme at their hands. Yet he ſpeaketh vncertainly, (I cannot tell ſaith he) and ſo wee will conclude with Auguſtine: Si Laicus baptiſmum dederit, nulla cogente neceſſitate, alieni muneris vſurpatio eſt: If a Lay-man doe baptize, where there is no neceſſitie, it is an vſurping of another mans office. But there is no ſuch neceſſitie to cauſe him ſo to do: Ergo. This teſtimonie of Auguſtine is ratified, decret.part.2.cauſ.1.queſt.1.c.87. Lib.2.cont. Parmen.cap. 13.

Concil. Carthag.4.can.99. Mulier quamuis ſancta & docta viros in conuentu docere non præſumat: can.100. Mulier baptizare non præſumat: Let not a woman, though neuer ſo holy or learned, preſume to teach men in an aſſembly: Let not a woman preſume to baptize: this Canon is ratified, diſt.4.c.21.

Cod.lib.2.tit.13.leg.4. Per mulieres aliena negotia agi non poſſunt, Buſineſſe not belonging to women, can not be done by them: but to baptize, is not appertaining to women. Leg.18. Alienam ſuſcipere defenſionem, virile eſt officium, et vltra ſexum muliebrem eſſe conſtat: To take the defence of an other, is a mans office, and beyond the Sexe of women: ſo may it be ſaid much more of Baptiſme, that it exceedeth their ſexe: tit.56.leg.6. Mulier non poteſt eſſe arbiter: A woman cannot be a Iudge, that is, in her owne perſon to ſit in iudgement, and to receiue the triall of cauſes; how much leſſe can a woman haue the office of a Miniſter to baptize: for the chiefe ciuill authoritie may reſt in a woman, though the execution thereof be put ouer to others; but women can neyther haue authoritie, nor execution to baptize.

See alſo their owne Canons, decret.part.3.diſtinct.2.c.29. Ne Presbyteri laico vel fœminæ corpus domini tradant deferendum ægrotis: That Prieſts deliuer not the bodie of the Lord to a lay man or woman to be carried to the ſicke: If women and lay men cannot conſecrate the one Sacrament, neither can they miniſter the other, for they are both of equall dignitie, and of the like neceſſitie.

Decret.Greg.lib.5.tit.7.c.14. Gregor.9. Interdicas laicis, cuiuſcunq; ordinis cenſeantur, vſurpare officium prædicandi: Forbid lay men, of what degree ſoeuer, to vſurpe the office of preaching: If it be not lawfull for them to preach, much leſſe to baptize.

And concerning the Baptiſme of Pagans it is decreed thus by Gregor.2.decret.par.3.diſt.4.c.52. Quos à Paganis baptizatos aſſeruiſti, denuò baptizes: Baptize them againe in the name of the Trinitie, whom thou affirmeſt to haue beene baptized by the Pagans: Ergo, the Baptiſme of Pagans is no Baptiſme, for then it ſhould not be iterated, or repeated.

THE FIFT QVESTION, OF SVCH AS are to be admitted to Baptiſme.

Of the baptiſme of Infants. *Part.*1.

THat infants are to be baptized, it is fully agreed and concluded betweene vs. Which poynt we doe ſtrongly maintayne by the Scriptures againſt the Anabaptiſts of our age. But herein we diſſent from our aduerſaries,

The Papiſts.

1. THey affirme, that the baptiſme of children and infants is grounded vpon tradition, and not vpon Scripture, Bellarm.lib.4.de.verbo dei.cap.9. 7. Error.

The Proteſtants.

IT were very hard, if we had no more certaine ground for the baptizing of infants, then tradition, which is but a feeble weapon to fight againſt heretickes withall: we haue manifeſt proofes out of the Scripture for it.

Firſt, they belong vnto the couenant: Geneſ.17. I will be thy God, and the God of thy ſeede: Ergo, they haue right to the ſigne of the couenant.

Secondly, they are called holy, which are borne of faithfull parents, 1.Cor.7.14. Ergo, are not to be denied Baptiſme.

Thirdly, they are redeemed by the bloud of Chriſt, who dyed for all the children of God, Ioh.11.52.To them belongeth the kingdome of God, Mark.10.14.Ergo, alſo Baptiſme, which is a pledge of remiſſion of ſinnes and eternall life.

Fourthly, it is alſo proued by the practiſe of the Apoſtles, who baptized whole families, with all that thereunto belonged, Act.16.33. Theſe with other effectuall reaſons to the ſame purpoſe ſee more at large, *Epiſtol.Iohan.Philpot.martyr.pag.*1840.&41.

Fiftly, Auguſtine alſo proueth it out of Scripture, by comparing our Baptiſme with the Circumciſion of the Iewes: Veraciter conijcere poſſumus, quid valeat in paruulis baptiſmi ſacramentum, ex circumciſione carnis, quam prior populus accepit: How auaileable Baptiſme is in little ones, we may geſſe by the circumciſion, which the former people in the law receiued: Ergo, not onely by tradition, but chiefly by Scripture the lawfulnes of childrens Baptiſme is confirmed. De Baptiſ. contr.Donatiſt.lib.4.cap. 24.

So alſo Innocentius the 3.one of their moſt learned Popes, proueth the Baptiſme of children by Scripture, *decret.Greg.lib.*3.*tit.*42.*c.*3. Cùm ergò circumciſio tam adultis, quàm paruulis ex præcepto Domini &c. Seeing that Circumciſion by the commandement of God, was conferred both vpon children, and the elder ſort; Baptiſme alſo, which ſucceedeth in the place thereof, and is more generall both to men and women, muſt likewiſe be conferred to both.

The Papiſts.

8.Error 2. BAptiſme, they ſay, giueth grace and faith to the infant that had none before, *Rhemiſt.Galat.*3.*ſect.*6. This then is their opinion, that infants, though actually and fully they haue not faith, as other haue, yet there is a certaine habite of faith and hope infuſed into them in Baptiſme; ſo that partly they do beleeue of themſelues, and partly by the faith of others, namely of them that bring them to Baptiſme, *Bellarm.lib.*1.*de baptiſm.cap.*11.

Argum. Without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, Heb.11.6.Rom.3.28.We hold that a man is iuſtified by faith: Ergo, children, if they haue no faith, are neither iuſtified, neither yet doe pleaſe God: Epheſ.3.1.Chriſt dwelleth in our harts by faith: but he dwelleth in children; Ergo, they haue faith. Bellarm.

Anſw. Firſt, theſe places doe as well proue that children haue an abſolute, perfect, and actuall faith: (for it is a perfect faith that iuſtifieth vs, and maketh vs acceptable to God) which I am ſure our aduerſaries will not yeeld vnto. Secondly, the iuſtification and ſaluation of children dependeth of the free election of God, Rom.9.11.that the purpoſe of God might remaine according to election, ſaith the Apoſtle: And that which faith worketh in thoſe that are of vnderſtanding, the ſpirit of God is able to effect in infants, by ſome ſecret way, beſt knowne to himſelfe.

Thirdly, it is manifeſt, that theſe places are to be vnderſtood of thoſe that are of yeeres, and capeable of faith, as it followeth, Epheſ.3.18. That you may be able to comprehend with all Saints &c. Faith then is of them, that are able to comprehend; but this comprehenſion, capacitie and vnderſtanding is not in children: Thus alſo one of your principall pillers *Innocent.*3.vnderſtandeth theſe and the like places, as that, He that beleeueth, and is baptized, ſhal be ſaued: Hæc tota authoritas de adultis: all theſe authorities muſt be vnderſtood of thoſe, that are of yeeres, *decret Greg.lib.*3.*tit.*42.*c.*3. Fourthly, Chriſt dwelleth in Infants by his holy ſpirite, though they haue no faith: ſo then the argument followeth not, Chriſt dwelleth in them: Ergo, they haue faith, for in the kingdome of heauen fayth ſhall ceaſe, yet then ſhall we be the habitation of Gods ſpirite.

Bernard alſo thus anſwereth this obiection: Sine fide impoſſibile eſt placere Deo, & ſine fide non ſunt, qui in fidei teſtimonium baptiſmi gratiam perceperunt: Without faith indeed it is impoſſible to pleaſe God: and they are not altogether without faith, which in teſtimonie of their faith, haue receiued the grace of Baptiſme: *in Cantic.ſerm.*66.Children then haue no otherwiſe faith, then as they haue receiued Baptiſme the ſigne and Sacrament of faith,

The Proteſtants.

THat infants neither haue faith in themſelues, nor yet are profited or furthered to their ſaluation by the faith of others, it is thus prooued.

*Argum.*1. S.Paul ſaith, Faith commeth by hearing, and hearing by the word of God, Rom.10.17. But infants can neither heare nor vnderſtand the word of God: Ergo, no faith is wrought in them.

*Argum.*2. There is no habituall or potentiall faith that pleaſeth God: but the iuſtifying faith is alwayes actuall, working by loue, Galath.5.6. Ergo, children haue either no faith, or it muſt needes be an actuall or working faith.

*Argum.*3. Infants are not iuſtified, nor relieued or helped forward towards their ſaluation by the faith of thir parents, or Godfathers, when they are baptized: for the Scripture ſaith, The iuſt ſhall liue by faith, Rom.1.17.that is, by his owne faith, not the faith of another.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that they do not affirme, that children are iuſtified, or do liue by the faith of their Parents, and of others, but that their faith is profitable to the Infants, being by this meanes brought vnto Baptiſme, and becauſe they do profeſſe their faith in Baptiſme by the mouth of others. *Bellarm.cap.*11.*propoſ.*5.

Contra. Firſt, that it is a benefite to be borne of faithfull Parents, who are carefull to bring their Infants to be baptized, and to ſee them well brought vp, we graunt: but what is this to the ſtate of Infants before God? Secondly, the confeſſion of their faith by others is profitable, to put them afterward in remembrance of their ſolemne promiſe made in Baptiſm; but before God, they are no more helped, by the confeſſion of anothers mouth, then by the beleefe of anothers heart: wherefore it is not eyther the faith of the Parents, or the confeſſion of the witneſſes, that ſupplieth the lacke of both in Infants, but the grace of God inwardly working, as Auguſtine well ſaith, as it is alleaged in the decrees; *decret.par.3.diſtinct.4.c.*34. Gratia omnipotentis implere credenda eſt,&c. The grace of the Almightie doth ſupplie that, which they, by the infirmitie of age, can neither beleeue with the heart to righteouſneſſe, nor confeſſe with the mouth to ſaluation.

Auguſtine denyeth that children are illuminate in their minds, when they are baptized: Si illuminati eſſent, ipſum baptiſmum læti ſuſciperent, cui videmus eos cum magnis fletibus reluctari: If they were illuminate, they would ioyfully receiue Baptiſme, which we ſee them to ſtriue againſt with great crying. And why ſhould the Apoſtle ſay, Be ye not children in vnderſtanding, 1.Cor.14.20. if ſo bee their mindes were illuminate? Wherefore that ſaying in the Goſpell, ſayth he, This is the light that lighteneth euery one that commeth into the world, Iohn 1.9. whereby they would proue, that children doe receiue light at their very firſt comming into the world, is thus to be vnderſtood, Quia nullus hominum illuminatur, niſi lumine illo veritatis: Becauſe no man is lightened, but only by that light. What now is become of that lumen fidei, the light of faith, which you ſay is infuſed into children in Baptiſme?

De peccat. merit. & remiſſ. lib. 1. cap. 25.

How children are to bee counted beleeuers, Maſter Philpot holy martyr doth thus teſtifie: That children are accounted of Chriſt in the Goſpell among the number of ſuch as beleeue, it appeareth by theſe words: He that offendeth one of theſe little babes, which beleeue in mee, &c. Matt.18. where plainly Chriſt calleth ſuch, as be not able to confeſſe their faith, beleeuers, becauſe of his meere grace he reputeth them for beleeuers: pag. 1841. Not that they haue any beleefe in themſelues, but they are ſo reputed by grace: God doth of his meere mercie as well accept of them thorough grace in Chriſt, as if actually they did beleeue.

*Decret.part.3.diſtinct.*4 *c.76. Infans licet fidei non habet affectum, reſpondetur ſidem habere ob fidei ſacramentum:* The Infant although he haue not faith in his affection, is ſaid to haue faith, becauſe hee hath the Sacrament of faith. *c.129. Fidem nondum habet in cogitatione,* the Infant hath not faith in his mind or cogitation: as before he ſaith, they haue not faith in affection, ſo neither in their cogitation, that is, they haue neither the act, nor habite of faith: contrary to the decree of the Tridentine Concel. *ſeſſ.6.c.7. In Baptiſmo fidem infundi, et menti inhærere*: That faith is infuſed in Baptiſme, and fixed in the mind of infants.

Neither are children helped by their Godfathers faith, for what if they bee all vnbeleeuers, by this reaſon ſuch children ſhould be Baptized in no faith: Richard Woodman Martyr, pag. 1995.

Theſe reaſons alſo to the ſame effect, may be gathered out of their owne decrees: as firſt, *decr. par.2.cauſ.1.qu.4.c.*3. Ne parentum illos error impediat,&c. The error of the parents being heretikes doth not hurt or hinder the children. If the error of the parents hinder not, then their faith profiteth not. Secondly, *decret.p.3.diſtinct.4.c.*114. It is decreed, that the Infant is not baptized, being in the mothers wombe, the mother being at that inſtant baptized. If the mothers faith doth not profite the child, being not yet Anima ſeparatim viuens: A ſoule liuing by it ſelfe, while it is in the wombe, as it is *ibid. ca.*129. much leſſe when the child is now borne, and made a liuing ſoule by it ſelfe.

AN APPENDIX OF THE POPISH vſe in baptizing of bels.

The Papiſts.

THey begin now to be aſhamed of the blind practiſes of their ſuperſtitious and ignorant forefathers: for Bellarmine flatlie denieth, that bels are baptized amongſt them: but they are only conſecrate and hallowed for diuine vſes, as other Church veſſels are, *lib.4.de Roman.pontific. cap.*12.

9.Error.

The Proteſtants

IT is a great ſhame for them, to deny ſo manifeſt a thing. For in the hallowing of bels, firſt there were Godfathers choſen: Secondly, they gaue names to the bels: Thirdly, the bels had new garments put vpon them, as is accuſtomed to be done to Chriſtians in their Baptiſme: Fourthly, the Baptizing of bels was onely permitted to the Biſhops ſuffragane, whereas their Prieſts and Deacons did vſually baptize infants: all this ſheweth, that it was not onely a Baptiſme, which they beſtowed vpon bels, but in a more principall kind, then common Baptiſme was. This was one of the greeuances which the princes of Germany complained of in the aſſembly at Noremberg, that the ſuffraganes exacted of the people ſuch great ſummes of money for the baptizing of bels. With what face then can they deny this vngodly cuſtome of theirs, in Chriſtening and baptizing of bels.

An.973. Pope Iohn.14. at the coronation of Otho the Emperor, gaue vnto the great bel of the Church of Laterane his own name: the Chriſtening of bels in yͤ popiſh Church teſtified by B. Ridley holy martyr pag. 1779. col.2. Which ſupeſtitious vſe in baptizing of bels, thereby aſcribing vnto them a ſpirituall power againſt euill ſpirits, thunder, lightening, &c. hath been condemned in ſome of their Councels. *Concil. Colonienſ. part.9. cap.*14. They correct the error of former times of thoſe that thought, that diuels were frayed away with the ſound of bels: Qui potius precibus ipſis territi abſcedant, illiſq; ſubmotis fruges, mentes & corpora fidelium ſeruentur: Diuels rather are frayed away by prayers, vnto which men are called by the bels: and ſo the euil ſpirits being remoued, the bodies and ſoules of men are preſerued, and their corne, &c.

THE SIXT QVESTION, OF THE EFfects and fruites of Baptiſme.

THe partes of this queſtion are theſe: firſt, whether our ſinnes are wholy remitted and cleane taken away in Baptiſme. Secondly, whether Baptiſme ſerueth only for the remiſſion of ſinnes that are paſt. Thirdly, of the liberties and priuiledges, which are obtained by Baptiſme: which parts are now ſeuerally to be handled.

10.Error. THe ſins which are paſt, they affirme, not onely by the grace of Chriſt receiued in Baptiſme, to be forgiuen and pardoned, and no more imputed, but euen wholy to be raſed and rooted out: Et tolli omne illud, quod veram habet & propriam rationem peccati: And al that wholy to be taken away, which hath the nature and qualitie of ſinne, *Concil. Roman.*4. *ſect.*7. *Bellarm. cap.*13.

Anſ. Firſt, if ſinne in Baptiſme were wholy remoued, not onely the guilt, but the very ſtaine and blot of ſinne: how commeth it to paſſe, that many which are baptized, doe fall afterward into deadly ſinnes; yea there is no man that liueth without ſinne? If ſinne once haue been vtterly expelled and baniſhed out of the fleſh, how commeth it in againe? If their iuſtification haue once cleerely rid them from ſinne, how can they be ſubiect to it againe? for the grace of iuſtification, being once obtained, can neuer be loſt: the gifts of God are without repentance, Rom.11.29.

2 The Scripture is true, that Chriſt by his blood, cleanſeth, waſheth, taketh away our ſinnes: not by actually purging vs from all corruption, but in freely acquiting and diſcharging of vs before God, both of the guilt and puniſhment of ſinne: ſo the Scripture ſaith, Bleſſed are they whoſe iniquities are forgiuen, and to whom the Lord imputeth no ſinne, Rom. chap.4. verſ.7.8. Our ſinnes therfore may be truly forgiuen, though ſome corruption of ſinne doe ſtill remaine in vs.

3. The Apoſtle ſaith, Epheſ.5.27. That he might make it to himſelfe a glorious Church, without ſpot or wrinkle: ſignifying, that not here, or now, but then and there the Church ſhall bee perfectly cleane, and without ſpot, when it ſhall be made glorious: but now although ſhe bee cleanſed, by the waſhing of water in the word; yet ſhe ſaith truly of her ſelfe, in reſpect of her infirmities that remaine, I am blacke, Cantic.1.4.

*Argum.*2. Rom.5.19. As by one mans diſobedience many were made ſinners, ſo by the obedience of one ſhall many be made righteous: but in Adam we are verely made ſinners: Ergo, by Chriſt wee are truly made righteous without ſinne, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſ. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſheweth, that this compariſon betweene Adam and Chriſt is not to bee vrged in euery point: as verſ.16. The gift is not ſo, as the offence: for the guilt is of one offence to condemnation, the gift is of many offences to iuſtification: The compariſon is betweene one, and one; as in one we dye al, ſo in one we are al made aliue: It holdeth not in the manner: for our corruption from Adam is natural, but our iuſtification by Chriſt is ſupernatural. Secondly, we grant, that in Chriſt wee are truly made righteous by the imputation of his righteouſnes; yet it followeth not that we ſhould be void of ſinne: for Chriſts righteouſnes which is imputed by faith is one thing, our owne righteouſnes another; that is perfect, and maketh vs righteous before God, the other is imperfect. Thirdly, holding their ſenſe, the compariſon may very well ſtand: for as in Adam though we all are made ſinners; yet, they ſay, there doe remaine, pura naturalia, certaine pure naturals ſtill, notwithſtanding the corruption of our nature: ſo though we be iuſtified and made righteous by Chriſt, there may bee found in vs, ſome impure naturals and dregs of corruption ſtill.

*Argum.*3. 2.Cor.6.14. What fellowſhip hath righteouſnes with vnrighteouſnes, light with darkneſſe? Ergo, after we are once made righteous, and receiued the light, there remaineth no darkneſſe or vnrighteouſnes of ſinne, Bellarm.ibid.

Anſ. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of light and darkneſſe in the ſame, but in diuers ſubiects, as verſ.15. What fellowſhip hath the beleeuer with the Infidell? Secondly, though in the righteous ſome imperfections remaine, yet there is no fellowſhip, but a continuall warre and ſtrife betweene the ſpirit of God and the corruption of our nature; as Galath.5.17. They are contrarie one to the other, ſo that ye cannot doe the things ye would. Thirdly, though ſome relickes of ſinne remaine in the faithfull, yet they doe not raigne in them, Rom.6.12. but as darkneſſe toward the riſing of the Sunne is mixed with the light; yet ſo, that the light ouercommeth, and chaſeth away darkneſſe: ſo ſaith the Apoſtle, Rom.7.25. In my minde I ſerue the law of God; in my fleſh (that is the corruption and darkneſſe of my nature) the law of ſinne.

The Proteſtants.

THere are three things to be conſidered in ſinne: firſt, the ſtaine or blot, corruption or remnant of ſinne in vs. Secondly, the guilt, fault, and offence of ſinne. Thirdly, the puniſhment and ſtipend due vnto it. By our ſpirituall waſhing in the blood of Chriſt, whereof Baptiſme is a ſeale, both the guilt, and puniſhment of our ſinnes are not onely hid and couered in Gods ſight (as our aduerſaries doe falſely charge vs to ſay:) but they are truly forgiuen vs for Chriſts ſake, and ſhall neuer be remembred any more. But yet there is left in vs ſome remnant of ſinne ſo long as we liue in this fleſh, which in the end together with the corruption and mortalitie of the bodie, ſhall be cleane taken away.

*Argum.*1. If we ſay we haue no ſinne, we deceiue our ſelues, and the truth is not in vs, 1.Ioh.1.8. Ergo, there are none liuing at any time voide of ſinne, no not in their Baptiſme. Saint Paul alſo exhorteth to bee renewed in minde, and to put on the new man, and put off the old, Epheſ.4.23. Ergo, there remaineth ſome ſinne and corruption after Baptiſme: what neede elſe this renewing of the minde, and putting on the new man afterward?

Bellarmine anſwereth: Theſe and ſuch like places muſt be vnderſtood of ſuch ſinnes as are committed after Baptiſme, or elſe of the mortifying of the ſenſes and corrupt inclinations which may prouoke vnto ſinne, but properly are not ſinne.

Contra. The Ieſuites twofold anſwere is at once ouerthrowne by that place of the Apoſtle to the Coloſſians, chap.3.verſ.5. Mortifie your earthly members, fornication, vncleannes, &c. Here firſt it appeareth, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not onely of corrupt inclinations, but of the ſinnes themſelues; as fornication, couetouſnes, &c. Againe, he ſaith, Lie not one to another, ſeeing you haue put off the old man, with his workes, verſ.9. Here the Apoſtle ſheweth, that though in Baptiſme they had put off the old mans workes, that ſinne did no longer raigne in them: yet there remained ſome corrupt inclination ſtill, which he warneth them to take heede of. The ſeedes then of ſinne and corruption were not vtterly extinguiſhed in Baptiſme.

Thirdly, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not onely of ſinnes committed after Baptiſme, but euen of that corruption, which remaineth in Baptiſme, Saint Auguſtine ſheweth, as he is alleaged by *Gratian.decr.par.*3.*diſt.*4 *cap.*146. Nam in baptiſmo, quamuis plena fiat remiſſio peccatorum, &c. For in Baptiſme, though there bee full remiſſion of ſinnes, yet there is no perfect chaunge, becauſe there remaineth ſtill ſome corruption not only in the bodie, but the minde, which is the inner man: which if it were perfectly renewed, the Apoſtle would not ſay, that he is renewed from day to day, 2.Cor.4. verſ.16. Fourthly, if ſinnes were fully taken away in Baptiſme, they could not afterward returne againe: for whom God loueth, he loueth to the end, Ioh.13.1. ſo that they ſhould not commit ſinne after Baptiſme: as now followeth to be ſhewed.

*Argum.*2. If ſinne be vtterly extinguiſhed in Baptiſme, then they which are baptized can ſinne no more: for ſinne being once extinct, reuiueth not, neither returneth being aboliſhed, as the Apoſtle ſaith, with one offring hath he conſecrated for euer them that are ſanctified, Heb.10.14. Wherefore if they be perfectly conſecrated in Baptiſme by the extinction of ſinne, they are for euer conſecrated: but we ſee, that the baptized may afterward commit ſinne. Ergo.

Anſ. Bellarmine graunteth, that the baptized may loſe the grace of God, and ſo conſequently the remiſſion of ſinnes receiued in Baptiſme: and this grace being loſt, they may afterward ſinne notwithſtanding, *cap.*14 *propoſ.*1.

Contra. It is a great queſtion among the Papiſts themſelues, whether ſinnes remitted in Baptiſme doe returne againe,ſome holding that they may returne,ſome that they may not. The Maſter of Sentences dare giue no reſolution in ſo doubtfull a queſtion, but leaueth vs in the briers, concluding thus: Alicui parti non præiudicans ſtudioſo lectori iudicium relinquo: Not being preiudiciall to either part, I leaue the iudgement hereof to the reader, *lib.*4 *diſtinct.*22.b. But others of better account then the Maſter,doe reſolue,that ſinnes once forgiuen,returne not: as *Greg.decr. par.*2.*cauſ.*33.*diſt.*4.*c.*14. Qui recedit à Chriſto.&c. non in id quod remiſſio eſt,cecidit,&c. He that departeth from Chriſt,doth not fall againe into that, which is remitted, but he ſhall be condemned to death for his latter ſinnes,which was due vnto thoſe that were remitted. But yet more plainly *Gelaſius,ibid.c.*24. Diuina clementia dimiſſa peccata in vltionem vlterius redire non patitur: The diuine clemencie doth not ſuffer ſinnes once remitted,to returne vnto our puniſhment. And the Maſter of Sentences better remembring himſelfe,alloweth theſe ſayings of Auguſtine: Sacramenta in ſolis electis efficiunt,quod figurant: The Sacraments doe onely effect that, which they figure in the elect. And, Communis eſt baptiſmus omnibus baptizatis, ſed non virtus baptiſmi: Baptiſme is common to all that are baptized, but not the vertue of Baptiſme, that is remiſſion of ſinnes, *lib.*4.*diſtinct.*1.a.b. Wherefore the elect in Baptiſme finde remiſſion of ſinnes for euer,ſo that their ſinnes are no more imputed vnto them; the reſt doe not at all obtaine that grace.

*Argum.*3. Originall ſinne is not taken away in Baptiſme,therefore ſome ſinne remaineth ſtill: And that this originall corruption is properly called ſinne,and is ſinne indeede,Saint Paul ſheweth euidently,Rom.7.verſ.7,8.where he nameth luſt and concupiſcence ſinne.

De peccat. merit.& remiſſ.lib.1.c.25 Auguſtine thus writeth: Meminiſſe debemus peccatorum omnium plenam remiſſionem fieri in baptiſmo,hominis verò qualitatem non totam continuò mutari: Wee muſt remember, that all our ſinnes are fully remitted in Baptiſme: but the qualitie of man (that is, the corruption, and ſtaine or blot of ſinne)is not wholy changed. This ſentence of Auguſtine is ratified,*decret.par.*3.diſtinct. 3.*c.*146.

*Concil.Mileuitan.cap.*8.Placuit, vt quicunque verba ipſa dominicæ orationis,vbi dicimus,Dimitte nobis debita noſtra,ita volunt à ſanctis dici,vt humiliter, non veraciter hoc dicatur, anathema ſit: quis enim ferat orantem, & non hominibus ſed ipſi Deo mentientem: Wee decree, that whoſoeuer taketh thoſe words of the Lords prayer,where we ſay, forgiue vs our debts, ſo to bee ſaid of holie men,that they rather ſay ſo of humilitie, then truly, let him bee accurſed: for ſo he that prayeth, ſhould lie vnto God,not vnto men. But this they muſt needes ſay,which affirme ſinne vtterly to be taken away: for being taken away,it remaineth not: and ſo they haue no cauſe to pray for remiſſion of ſinnes which are cleane wiped away before.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER BAPTISME ſerue onely for remiſſion of ſinnes paſt,and not for the ſinnes alſo to come.

The Papiſts.

11.Error. CHriſts death applied to man by Baptiſme, wipeth away all ſinnes paſt, for new ſinnes other remedies be daily requiſite, *Rhemiſt.Heb.*10.*ſect.*4. The Councell of Trent holdeth them accurſed,that thinke all ſinnes to bee forgiuen, fide Baptiſmi ſuſcepti, by faith of Baptiſme receiued, *ſeſſ.*7.*can.*10.

Hereupon their ſaying ariſeth, that Baptiſmus eſt prima tabula poſt naufragium: that Baptiſme is the firſt boord of refuge after ſhipwracke: & pœnitentia eſt ſecunda tabula poſt naufragium: Penance is the ſecond boord of refuge: So that if a man doe fall after, he muſt vſe other helpes and meanes for the remiſſion of ſinnes: for Baptiſme is not auaileable for ſinnes afterward committed, *Bellar.cap.*18.

*Argum. It is impoſſible,*ſaith the Apoſtle, for them that haue been once lightened, and taſted of the heauenly grace,if they fall away, to be renewed by penance, Heb.6.6.that is,they which fall away from faith and grace,after Baptiſme,cannot be baptized againe, or be illuminated,or renouated, by ſo eaſie a cleanſing of ſinnes,as the Sacrament of Baptiſme did yeeld: for to be illuminate,to bee renewed,and to crucifie Chriſt,are proper vnto Baptiſme,wherein we are illuminate,renewed,and imitate Chriſts death: *Ergo,*Baptiſme is not auaileable for remiſſion of ſinnes, which men fall into afterward, *Bellarm.cap.*18.

Anſ. Firſt, he very vnskilfully here confoundeth Baptiſme and repentance, whereas the Apoſtle doth diſtinguiſh them,verſ.1,2.making repentance from dead workes,and the doctrine of Baptiſme two diuers things; and they themſelues ſay,that Baptiſme is the firſt table of refuge,penance the ſecond: how then can they by repentance here enforce Baptiſme? And I marueile, that Bellarmine hath ſo ſoone forgotten himſelfe, that whereas he ſaid before, *lib.*2.*de Sacram.c.*22.reſp. ad 2.*ration.ſolid.*that it is not found in Scripture,that Baptiſme ſhould not be iterated, he remembred not this place,where after his ſenſe, the Apoſtle denieth repentance the ſecond time by the Sacrament of Baptiſme.

Secondly, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of this or that kind of repentance, but generally of al, ſhewing, that there is no hope of remiſſion nor grace to repent left for thoſe which fall into the grieuous ſinne of apoſtaſie, which he here deſcribeth; for they crucifie againe the Sonne of God, and make a mocke of him, verſ.6. And that the Apoſtle vnderſtandeth the ſinne of apoſtaſie, and the ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt, it appeareth by comparing that other place, Heb.10.29. with this: for there they are ſaid, to tread vnder foote the Sonne of God, and to deſpite the ſpirit of grace. The Apoſtle then cutteth off ſuch from all hope of grace, and repentance; not only barreth them from ſome ſpeciall kinde of repentance: as he ſaith, Heb.10.26. if wee ſinne willingly, that is obſtinately and of malice, there remaineth no more ſacrifice for ſinne, that is, there is no remedie at all.

Thirdly, that children are not illuminated in Baptiſme, Auguſtine denieth, as we haue ſeene before, queſt.5 part.2. and Bellarmine moſt abſurdly taketh the crucifying of Chriſt in the good part, whereas the Apoſtle doth giue it as a reaſon, of their great impietie, why they cannot be renewed, becauſe they doe crucifie to themſelues the Sonne of God, and make a mocke of him. The ſecond clauſe expoundeth the former: They crucifie Chriſt, that make a mocke of him: which can in no ſenſe be taken in the good part: And ſo doth Origen very well expound thoſe words: Vides, quia in peccantibus, &c. We ſee that in ſinners Chriſt is not ſaid onely to dye, but to bee crucified; but in the holy Ghoſt is ſaid to liue, &c. Hom.2.in Iudic.

The Proteſtants.

THe externall act of Baptiſme neither wipeth away ſinnes going before, or comming after: but it is the inward working of the ſpirit of God, which by the vertue of Chriſts death, teſtified and ſhewed forth in Baptiſme, that waſheth away our ſinnes. And Baptiſme is a ſeale of remiſſion of ſinnes, for the confirmation of our faith, euen of thoſe which are committed after Baptiſme, as well as of ſinnes done before: and although the ceremonie of Baptiſme bee not repeated, yet the vertue of Gods ſpirit teſtified thereby, remaineth to our liues end.

*Argum.*1. Mark.16.16. He that ſhall beleeue and be baptized, ſhall be ſaued. Wee reaſon thus, Baptiſme is a ſeale of that faith, whereby men are ſaued, or to the which ſaluation is promiſed: but that faith beleeueth remiſſion of all ſinnes both paſt and to come: therefore Baptiſme alſo ſealeth vnto vs the remiſſion of all our ſinnes, going before or following after. And here is no other thing required, but for a man to beleeue, and to apprehend Gods couenant made in Baptiſme.

Anſ. This promiſe of Chriſt is conditionall, that ſo long as they continue beleeuing, Baptiſme is a ſufficient remedie: but if they fall away from faith, then Baptiſme ſufficeth not: for if there were not a condition, then apoſtataes ſhould be ſaued, becauſe they once beleeued: ſic Bellar.c.19. reſponſ.ad argum.1.

Contra. Firſt, there neede no condition of perſeuerance to bee annexed to faith, ſeeing it is a propertie of true faith, neuer finally to be loſt: otherwiſe our Sauiour would not haue ſaid, Ioh.5. verſ.24. He that beleeueth, hath paſſed from death to life: he pronounceth as though it were alreadie done, which is but in faith, becauſe of the aſſurance thereof: wherefore apoſtataes and backſliders though they ſeemed once to beleeue, yet had no true faith, as S. Iohn ſaith, 1.2.19. they went out from vs, but were not of vs. Secondly, to admit his condition, then if a man doe continue a beleeuer, Baptiſme is a ſufficient remedie for all ſinnes that followe after: for euen in the faithfull there are ſinnes committed after Baptiſme: and if it bee ſufficient for ſinnes, that follow in ſome, why is it not by the ſame reaſon in all?

*Argum.*2. The promiſe of Baptiſme is, that we being iuſtified by his grace, ſhould be made heires of eternall life, Tit.3.5,7. But this promiſe of iuſtification is generall againſt all ſinnes before Baptiſme, and after: Ergo, ſo is Baptiſme.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that iuſtification by Chriſt is promiſed as wel in the Euchariſt as in Baptiſme; and therefore it followeth not, that they, which after their fall are iuſtified by Chriſt, are iuſtified by Baptiſme, Bellarm.ibid.

Contra. We graunt that iuſtification by Chriſt is exhibited in both the Sacraments, and that both of them, as Sacraments, are remedies againſt ſinnes committed afterward: ſo then the argument thus followeth very well; Iuſtification by Chriſt is a remedie againſt all our ſinnes whatſoeuer: Baptiſme is a ſeale of iuſtification by Chriſt: Ergo, it is auaileable for remiſſion of all ſinnes. We doe not inferre Baptiſme onely is a ſeale thereof, which Bellarmine ſuppoſeth, neither doe wee conclude, that Baptiſme onely is auaileable: it is ſufficient that Baptiſme hath this vertue and efficacie, together with other helpes and remedies, as to extend it ſelfe to the ſinnes of the whole life.

*Argum.*3. Baptiſme is a ſigne and ſeale of our myſticall waſhing in the blood of Chriſt: but all our ſinnes both before and after are waſhed away by the blood of Chriſt: Ergo, Baptiſme doth aſſure vs of a perfite remiſſion of all our ſinnes.

Bellarmine denieth the aſſumption, that we are iuſtified formally by the righteouſnes of Chriſt, but by our owne righteouſnes inherent in vs, reſp. ad argum. 4.

Contra. This is a great blaſphemie, and contrarie to the Apoſtle, who ſaith, that I might bee found, not hauing mine owne righteouſnes, which is by the law, but the righteouſnes of God through faith, Philip. 3. 9. The righteouſnes of God by faith, is not our owne righteouſnes: but wee are iuſtified by the righteouſnes of God. Ergo.

So ſaith Auguſtine: Eodem lauacro regenerationis, & verbo ſanctificationis, omnia prorſus mala hominum regeneratorum ſanantur, etiam quæ poſterius humana ignorantia aut infirmitate committuntur: By the ſame lauer of regeneration, and word of ſanctification, all the ſinnes in men regenerate are healed; yea euen thoſe, which by humane ignorance afterward are committed: Non vt Baptiſma, quoties peccatur, toties repetatur, ſed quia ipſo, quod ſemel datur, fit, vt non ſolum anteà, verùm etiam poſteà quorumlibet peccatorum venia fidelibus impetretur: Not that Baptiſme, ſo oft as a man ſinneth, is to be repeated; but by vertue of that which is once giuen, it commeth to paſſe, that the faithfull haue remiſſion of their ſinnes, not onely before, but alſo after: Ergo, Baptiſme hath it force not onely for the preſent, but it reacheth vnto the time following.

Bellarmine anſwereth to this authoritie by a diſtinction, that Baptiſme, though not immediatly, yet mediatly ſerueth to purge ſinnes done afterward, becauſe he that is baptized, by that grace, which he receiued in Baptiſme, obtaineth remiſſion of ſinnes.

Contra. Firſt, neither doe wee ſay, that Baptiſme worketh immediatly, for the Sacraments are inſtruments and meanes of grace, and ſo mediate workers. Secondly, as he confeſſeth the ſinnes following to be remitted in Baptiſme, no otherwiſe are the ſinnes paſt, but by the grace of Chriſt ſealed vnto him, that is baptized, in Baptiſme.

Concil. Viennenſ. ſub Clem. 5. Credimus Baptiſma, quod celebratur in aqua, &c. eſſe tam adultis, quam paruulis communiter perfectum remedium ad ſalutem: Wee beleeue that Baptiſme celebrated with water, in the name of the Father, the Sonne, and holy Ghoſt, is both to little ones, and men of yeeres, a perfect remedie to ſaluation: If it bee a perfect remedie, then it is auaileable againſt all ſinne.

Synod. Moguntin. cap. 11. Credimus baptiſmi virtute, omne prorſus peccatum, tam originale quam actuale, remitti: We beleeue, that by the vertue of Baptiſme, all ſinne both originall and actuall is remitted. If all ſinne, then none is excluded.

Alſo wee haue plentifull teſtimonie from their owne decrees: Part. 1. diſtinct. 23. c. 2. In baptiſmate omnia peccata, &c. In Baptiſme all ſinnes whatſoeuer, not onely originall, but voluntarie, are remitted. Part. 3. diſtinct. 4. c. 136. Regenerante carne tantummodo contrahitur, &c. By the generation of the fleſh originall ſinne onely is contracted, by the regeneration of the ſpirit, there is not onely remiſſion of originall, but of voluntarie ſinnes. Clementin. lib. 1. tit. 1. c. 1. Nos attendentes generalem efficaciam mortis Chriſti: We conſidering the generall efficacie of Chriſts death, which by Baptiſme is applied to all, that are baptized, doe hold their opinion to be more probable, that thinke, not onely the fault to be remitted in Baptiſme, but grace alſo infuſed. By this grace infuſed in Baptiſme, euen the ſinnes afterward are remitted; how could the generall efficacie elſe of Chriſts death be ſet forth in Baptiſme?

The Maſter of Sentences alſo confeſſeth, that in thoſe, which come fainedly to Baptiſme, poſtea cum pœnituerint, baptiſmus incipit prodeſſe, Baptiſme beginneth to profit them afterward, vpon their repentance, lib. 4. diſt. 4. e. Wherefore by their owne ſentence Baptiſme is effectuall for afterward, as well as for the time paſt.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE LIBERTIE and priuiledges obtained by Baptiſme.

The Papiſts.

12. Error. 1. THey haue defined, that a man, by Baptiſme, is not onely debitor fidei, ſed etiam vniuerſæ legis Chriſti implendæ, is not onely a debter of the faith, but is made a debter to performe the whole law of Chriſt, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 8. can. 7. that is, Baptiſme is not onely a ſigne of free iuſtification by faith, neither doth he which is baptized profeſſe himſelfe onely by faith to bee iuſtified, but partly alſo by his workes, and the keeping of the commaundements of Chriſt, Bellarm. lib. 1. de Baptiſ. cap. 15.

Argum. Matth. 19. 17. Chriſt ſaith to the young man, if thou wilt enter into life keepe the commandements. 2. Cor. 5. 10. Euery man ſhall receiue according to that, which he hath done, whether good or euil. Ergo, we are bound to keepe the law, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſ. Firſt, Chriſt maketh that anſwere to the young man, to the intent he ſhould know himſelfe, who thought, that by his owne workes he might attaine vnto life: for otherwiſe the doctrine of the Apoſtle is plaine, that life is not by the law, as he ſaith, Galath. 3. 21. If there had been a law, which could haue giuen life, ſurely righteouſnes ſhould haue been by the law. Secondly, the Apoſtle ſaith, that wee ſhall receiue according to our workes: but he ſaith not, for our workes ſake: for as Bernard ſaith, our workes are via regni, non cauſa regnandi, are the way to the kingdome, not the cauſe of the kingdome. Thirdly, theſe places alleaged are altogether impertinent, for they onely ſhew, that we are bound to doe good workes, which we denie not, not that wee profeſſe to be ſaued by our workes.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. IN Baptiſme wee make profeſſion of our obedience, to die vnto ſinne, and riſe vp to newnes of life, Rom.6.2. yet not thereby to be iuſtified: but in being baptized wee ſhew our faith and hope, onely to looke for remiſſion of ſinnes and ſaluation of our ſoules by the death of Chriſt.

*Argum.*1. Circumciſion, in place whereof Baptiſme is giuen to vs, is called by the Apoſtle a ſeale of the righteouſnes of faith, Rom.4.11. not of the righteouſnes of works: much more then is Baptiſme, which is a Sacrament of the Goſpell, a pledge vnto vs of the iuſtice of faith.

*Argum.*2. By Baptiſme wee are freed from the curſe of the law: for it is a Sacrament of the death of Chriſt, and of all the benefits thereof: and Chriſt by his death hath borne for vs the curſe of the law, Galath.3.13. but if by Baptiſme wee binde our ſelues to the obſeruance of the law, to be iuſtified and finde life thereby, wee muſt needes fall into the curſe, becauſe wee are not able to keepe the commaundements. Wherefore ſeeing Baptiſme deliuereth vs from the curſe, it alſo exempteth vs from the workes of the law, to finde life and iuſtification thereby.

Their owne decrees are for vs: Part.3.diſt.4.c.3. Ab ira Dei nullus liberatur niſi per fidem mediatoris, &c. No man is deliuered from the wrath of God but by the faith of the Mediatour. But in Baptiſme we are deliuered from the wrath of God: Ergo, in Baptiſme onely we profeſſe to be ſaued by the faith of the Mediatour.

*Cap.*8. Per fidem & baptiſma iuſtificamur à peccatis: By faith and Baptiſme we are iuſtified from our ſinnes: Ergo, nothing elſe in Baptiſme requiſite, but faith.

The Papiſts.

2. ALthough Chriſtians are bound by ſolemne vow in Baptiſme to walke in obedience before God, and to keepe his commaundements: yet are they not therefore freed and exempted from the obſeruance of the lawes and ordinances of men, which they are bound in conſcience to keepe, and vnder paine of damnation, *Bellarm.cap.*16. 13.Error

The Proteſtants.

BAptiſme onely bindeth vs to keepe the commaundements of God; and ſo farre forth alſo to obey men, as they commaund things lawfull: but wee muſt not bee brought in bondage to mens traditions, and obſeruations, ſeeing we are the Lords free men, and by Baptiſme conſecrate to his ſeruice.

Argum. Matth.28.19. Goe and teach, baptizing them, &c. and teaching them to obſerue all that I haue commanded you: Ergo, Baptiſme bindeth vs onely to the obſeruation of Gods precepts. 1.Cor.7.23. Ye are bought with a price, be not the ſeruants of men: Baptiſme is a ſigne of the death of Chriſt, the price of our redemption: Ergo, we are freed from all meere humane ſeruice, in receiuing of Baptiſme. For this cauſe is it called the Baptiſme of Chriſt. Auguſtine ſaith, Contr.Petil. lib.3.55. Paulus dixiſſe legitur Euangelium meum: baptiſmum autem Chriſti nemo Apoſtolorum ita vnquam miniſtrauit, vt auderet dicere ſuum: Paul is read to haue ſaid, My Goſpell: but neuer any of the Apoſtles durſt call the Baptiſme of Chriſt their Baptiſme: Ergo, ſeeing it is the Baptiſme of Chriſt, and we are onely baptized in his name, not in our owne name, or the name of men: we muſt onely hope to be ſaued by faith in him, and become his ſeruants wholy.

Bellarmine anſwereth, firſt Chriſt in bidding his Apoſtles to obſerue all, that he had commanded, doth alſo implie, that they ſhould teach to bee obſerued the lawes of Prelates, for that is one of his commandements alſo: Luk.10.16. He that heareth you, heareth me. Secondly, S. Paul forbiddeth not the ſeruice of men abſolutely, but as it is contrary to the ſeruice of God: *Bellarmine cap.*16.

Contra. To the firſt we replie, 1. To heare the Apoſtles and Miniſters of the Church teaching the ſame that Chriſt taught, is to heare Chriſt himſelfe, and ſo is one of his commandements: but when Prelates do clogge mens conſciences with ſuperſtitious rites, contrary to the doctrine of Chriſt, as popiſh Prelates doe, they are not to be heard, nor obeyed: no, an Angell is not to be receiued preaching otherwiſe, then Chriſt and his Apoſtles haue laid the foundation, Galat.1.8. Secondly, concerning the lawes of Prelates, it muſt be conſidered, that they are of three ſorts: for eyther they are as touching faith and doctrine, which, if they be agreeable to the doctrine of the Apoſtles, are of the ſame authoritie, and ſimply to be receiued: either they are of externall orders and politike conſtitutions, which, though obedience muſt be yeelded vnto; yet they do not ſimply bind in conſcience, as the lawes of God, but onely ſo farre, as we are bound in conſcience generally, do obey our Superiours in all lawfull things; eyther they are the meere deuiſes, and ſuperſtitious inuentions of men, ſuch as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, Coloſſ.2.21. Touch not, taſt not, handle not, which are after the doctrines of men, &c. The firſt kind wee profeſſe obedience to in Baptiſme abſolutely, becauſe they are no other but the precepts of Chriſt; to the ſecond not abſolutely, but as we haue ſaid; to the third not at all.

To the ſecond we replie, firſt, that to be a ſeruant of men, is no ſenſe allowed in the Scripture; as Matth.6.24. No man can ſerue two Maſters: and Galath.1.10. If I ſhould pleaſe (that is ſerue) men, I ſhould not be the ſeruant of Chriſt: ſo, when we ſerue men for the Lords ſake, in lawfull things; we ſerue not men, but God. Secondly, to yeeld to the ſuperſtitious iniunctions of Prelates, ſuch as moſt in Poperie are, is a meere ſeruice of men: for ſuch the Apoſtle calleth the precepts and doctrines of men, Coloſſ.2.22. and therefore obedience to ſuch is contrary to our dutie and ſeruice to God.

Laſtly, as touchiug the ceremonious rites and obſeruations of men, their owne decrees do teſtifie for vs, par.1. diſtinct.12.c.12. Quamuis ne hoc inuenri poſſit, &c. Although it appeare not, how they are againſt the faith, yet they do oppreſſe Religion with ſeruile burdens, which God in mercie hath left free with moſt few and manifeſt Sacraments, ſo that the condition of the Iewes is more tolerable, who were ſubiect onely to legall preſcriptions, not to humane preſumptions: if ceremonies not apparantly contrarie to the faith, muſt be reſtrained for their multitudes, how much more ſuch as do oppugne the faith.

The Papiſts.

THey hold, that notwithſtanding the vow of Chriſtianitie, and obedience made ſolemnely in Baptiſme, yet other vowes made before or after vnto God or Saints, as vowes of ſingle life, to go in pilgrimage, to offer to ſuch a Saint, and ſuch like do ſtand ſtill in force, and ought to be performed: Bellarm.c.17. And, whoſoeuer ſhall ſay, that ſuch vowes made after Baptiſme, do derogate to the faith profeſſed in Baptiſme, as to Baptiſme it ſelfe, let him be accurſed, concil. Trident. de Baptiſmo can.9.

The Proteſtants.

THat all ſuch vowes being ſome of them impoſſible, ſome of them impious, and ſuperſtitious, ſome ſuperfluous and vnneceſſary, are diſanulled by the vow of Baptiſme, neither can ſtand in force without great derogation to the ſame, thus we doe proue it.

*Argum.*1. The things which are vowed are either commaunded, or not commaunded: ſuch things, which are commaunded vs of God, wee doe profeſſe and vow to keepe in Baptiſme, as to forſake the diuell, the world, and the fleſh: but ſuch things as are not preſcribed of God, but commaunded of men, wee doe not vow in Baptiſme to keepe; nay, they are contrarie to our vow in Baptiſme, whereby we are made the ſeruants onely of God, and not of men: Ergo, vowes of ſuch things are contrarie to the vow of Baptiſme.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that wee are bound rather by Baptiſme to keepe our vowes, becauſe wee vow to keepe all Gods commaundements, whereof this is one, not to breake our vowes, cap.17.

Contra. All lawfull vowes and promiſes of obedience are indeede faithfully to bee performed vnto God: but vnlawfull vowes, ſuch as are many in Poperie tending to ſuperſtition, are neither to bee made, nor being made are to bee kept: neither doth God commaund vs to performe ſuch vowes; but they are like Iepthahs vow, and Herods oth, both which might better haue been reuoked, then performed, as they were.

*Argum.*2. If other vowes to be made after Baptiſme are requiſite, then were the vow in Baptiſme inſufficient, other vowes being added thereunto: but now it is moſt ſufficient. Ergo.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the argument followeth not, for after Baptiſme receiued, it is neceſſarie to heare the word of God, and to celebrate the other Sacraments; yet theſe doe not make Baptiſme inſufficient for the proper end thereof, which is the ſaluation of man: no more then doth the acceſſion of other vowes derogate to the ſufficiencie of the vow in Baptiſme, Bellar. ibid.

Contra. Firſt, there is no compariſon betweene the word of God and the Euchariſt (which are of Gods inſtitution, and therefore to bee vſed as neceſſarie helpes of our faith,) and the vnprofitable inuentions of men, which are not ordained of God: they cannot derogate to Baptiſme, hauing all one author; but the other doe, for as much as mans inuentions cannot ſtand together with Gods inſtitution. Secondly, the word preached, and the Euchariſt doe not make Baptiſme inſufficient, becauſe they haue all their ſpeciall vſes and ends; Baptiſme to ſeale vnto vs our new birth, the word to beget faith, and the Euchariſt to confirme it: but like as, if another Baptiſme ſhould bee added to the firſt, the one were a derogation to the other; ſo many vowes comming after the vow of Baptiſme, muſt needes make the firſt inſufficient.

Auguſtines iudgement is this: De tempor. ſerm.7. Sunt multi, qui vouent, &c. There bee many that vow, one a cloake, another oyle, another a waxe candle; another, that he will drink no wine; another, that he will faſt; another, that he will eate no fleſh: this is not the beſt, nor the perfecteſt kind of vowing; God neyther careth for thy comely apparell, nor for thy oyle, or faſting : but offer that vnto him, which he hath redeemed, that is, thy ſoule.

Likewiſe Origen thus writeth, homil.13.in Exod. Non vult Moſes vt offeras aliquid quod extra te eſt,&c. Moſes will not haue thee offer any thing without thee : Take (ſaith he) from among your ſelues, and offer vnto God, as euery man hath conceiued in his heart. What, doth ſiluer or gold grow within me? offer vnto God gold for the Tabernacle, that is, the faith of thy heart : this then is the onely vow, which we offer vnto God, which we promiſe and profeſſe in Baptiſme.

THE SEVENTH QVESTION, OF THE DIFference betweene the Baptiſme of our Sauiour Chriſt, and the Baptiſme of Iohn.

The Papiſts.

THe Baptiſme of Iohn (they ſay) was of another kind then Chriſts Baptiſme was, neither was it ſufficient without Chriſts Baptiſme, nor had the like force or efficacie, as his Baptiſme had: and therefore ſuch as had been baptized of Iohn, were afterward admitted to Chriſts Baptiſme, Concil.Trident.ſeſſ 8.*can.*1.*Bellarm.lib.*1.*de baptiſ.cap.*20.21. 14. Error.

*Argum.*1. Matth.3.11.Iohn himſelfe ſaith, I baptize you with water, but he ſhall baptize you with the holy Ghoſt : Ergo, Iohns Baptiſme and Chriſts not all one : for Iohns Baptiſme gaue not the holy Ghoſt, Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. Iohn ſpeaketh not of diuers Baptiſmes, but of diuers operations and miniſteries, in one and the ſame Baptiſme : for Iohn, as all other miniſters doe, did but giue water ; and Chriſt working together with them, giueth the holy Ghoſt. But it will be anſwered, that Iohn ſaith not, he doth baptize, but he ſhall baptize : Ergo, Chriſt did not baptize together with Iohn by his ſpirit. *Bellarm. cap.*21.

Anſw. The ſame Iohn in another place ſpeaketh of Chriſt in the preſent tenſe, Ioh.1.33. This is he which baptizeth with the holy Ghoſt : Ergo, Chriſt did both then baptize with his ſpirit, and afterwards alſo more manifeſtly, when the gifts of the ſpirit began to be ſhed forth more plentifully vpon men. Alſo he ſaith, Behold the Lambe of God that taketh away the ſinnes of the world, Ioh.1.29. he euen then, when Iohn baptized, did take away ſinnes. And againe, Iohn teſtifieth of him, verſ.16. of his fulnes haue we all receiued: euen then Chriſt baptized with the ſpirit, which was to receiue of his fulnes.

Bellarmine replieth : firſt, that Chriſt is ſaid to baptize with the ſpirit, not that then hee baptized, but to ſignifie, that when he baptized, he ſhould not onely baptize with water, but with the ſpirit. Secondly, Chriſt did not then take away ſinnes, but it is ſignified, that he afterward by his death ſhould take away the ſinnes of the world. Thirdly, they receiued of his grace and fulnes, but by other meanes, than by the baptiſme of *Iohn. Bellarm.cap.*21.

Contra. Firſt, if Chriſt then onely began to baptize with the ſpirit, when he baptized with water, it would follow, that he neuer baptized with the ſpirit : for it is certaine that he baptized not with water, Ioh.4.2. Againe, that he at that inſtant baptized with the ſpirit, it is euident by Iohns words, verſ.33. Hee that ſent mee to baptize, ſaid vnto mee, vpon whom thou ſhalt ſee the ſpirite come downe,&c. this is he which baptizeth with the holy Ghoſt : Chriſt then immediatly at the comming downe of the ſpirite, baptized with the ſpirite: vnleſſe they wil ſay he receiued the ſpirite in vaine.

Secondly, it is very groſſe and abſurd to ſay that Chriſt did not take away the ſinnes of the world before his death; for the Prophet Dauid ſaith, Pſal.32.1. Bleſſed are they, whoſe ſinnes are forgiuen: euen vnder the law by faith in Chriſt to come they found remiſſion of ſinnes. Thirdly, that Iohns Baptiſme and miniſtrie was not an inſtrument of the grace of Chriſt, it is contrary to the Scripture, *Luc.*1.16. He ſhall turne many of the children of Iſrael to the Lord their God.

Laſtly, that Chriſt and Iohn baptized together, the one viſibly, the other inuiſibly, S. Ambroſe thus teſtifieth, vpon theſe words, I baptize you with water : Cito probauit,&c. He proueth that he is not Chriſt, becauſe he worketh viſibly, &c. The bodie is waſhed with water, the ſoule by the ſpirite : we do one thing, and call vpon another ; Sed hac inter ſe diuiſa eſſe non poſſunt,&c. But theſe things cannot be deuided, in 3.cap.Luc.

*Argum.*2. Saint Paul baptized tweelue men at Epheſus with Chriſts Baptiſme that had receiued Iohns before, Act.19.4.5. Ergo, Iohns Baptiſme was not the ſame that Chriſts was, Bellarmine.

Anſw. There can be no ſuch thing gathered out of that place, for thoſe words in the 5.verſ. When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Ieſus, are parte of the narration which Paul maketh of Iohns Baptiſme : ſo that the ſenſe is this, they that heard Iohns doctrine, were baptized in the name of the Lord Ieſus. It is not ſo to be read, as though they were baptized againe of Paul but he layeth onely his hands vpon them, that had before receiued the baptiſme of Iohn.

Bellarmine replyeth, that this place cannot be ſo expounded: for if the fourth and fift verſes containe onely a narration of Iohns Baptiſme, then were the people baptized twiſe: for in the fourth verſe it is ſaid, Iohn baptized with the Baptiſme of repentance. And againe, in the fift verſe, when they heard it they were baptized.

Contra. Firſt, it followeth not that they were twiſe baptized, becauſe the word is here twiſe vſed: for firſt the Apoſtle ſetteth downe Iohns office in whole together, and then proſecuteth the two parts thereof; firſt his preaching in the fourth, and then his baptiſme in the fift verſe.

Secondly, but that this is a narration, not of Saint Luke concerning Saint Pauls baptiſme, but of Saint Paul concerning Iohns baptiſme; thus it appeareth: firſt, by the Greeke particles μὲν in the fourth verſe, and δὲ in the fift, which doe one anſwere to another, and ſhew a neceſſary coherence and connexion of both verſes together. Secondly, Iohns preaching and his baptiſme doe beſt agree together: Iohn preached to the people that they ſhould beleeue in Ieſus Chriſt, verſ.4. and then it followeth, they were baptized in the name of Ieſus, verſ.5. So then Iohn baptized in his name, whom he preached: but he preached Ieſus Chriſt, therefore he baptized alſo in his name: and if he baptized in Ieſus name, then would not Saint Paul haue baptized them againe. Thirdly, how is it like, that theſe men being at Epheſus, ſo farre off from Iudea, where Iohn baptized, and ſo long time after, not leſſe then 30. yeeres from the death of Iohn Baptiſt, could haue been baptized of Iohn? wherefore they are ſaid to bee baptized to Iohns baptiſme, not that they were baptized by the hands of Iohn, but had receiued that baptiſme, whereof Iohn was the firſt Miniſter, for Chriſt baptized not, but Iohn in Chriſts name. Fourthly, if Saint Paul had baptized them, it is moſt like he would haue baptized them in the name of the holy Ghoſt, whereof they doubted: but they are baptized in the name of Ieſus: that is, the people that heard Iohn, not the twelue men, whom Paul found at Epheſus. Fiftly, the Apoſtles by laying on of handes without Baptiſme conferred the holy Ghoſt, as it may appeare, Act.8.17. where Simon would haue giuen money, that on whomſoeuer alſo he laid his hands, they might receiue the holy Ghoſt: neyther do we find, that the impoſition of hands, was vſed in Baptiſme. So then as Act.8.16. it is ſaid; The holy Ghoſt as yet was come downe vpon none of them, but they were baptized onely in the name of the Lord Ieſus: and it followeth, Then layd they their hands vpon them, and they receiued the holy Ghoſt: they are not baptized againe, but onely confirmed with laying on of hands: ſo in this place, they had receiued the Baptiſme of Iohn, which was nothing els, but to be baptized in the name of Ieſus, and then the Apoſtle layeth on his hands, and they receiue the gift of the holy Ghoſt: they are no more baptized, then the diſciples at Samaria, Act.8.16. Laſtly, S. Ambroſe iudgement vpon this place is this, lib.1. de ſpirit.c.3. Iohannes in remiſſionem peccatorum in aduenientis Ieſu nomine non in ſuo baptizabat, &c. Iohn did baptize in the name of Chriſt, not his owne name for the remiſſion of ſinnes: but they in the 19. of the Actes had not receiued Baptiſme in the name of Chriſt, as Iohn vſed to baptize: and therefore they were baptized in the name of Chriſt Ieſus, neither was Baptiſme iterated in them, but renewed, for there is but one Baptiſme: S. Ambroſe, though hee thinke, that theſe twelue were baptized by S. Paul; yet ſo thinketh, becauſe indeed they had not receiued Iohns Baptiſme, which hee holdeth to be one Baptiſme, with the Baptiſme of Chriſt.

Argum. 3. The Baptiſme of Iohn had not the inuocation of the Trinitie, as the Baptiſme of Chriſt hath: Ergo, it is not the ſame: Bellarmine cap. 20.

Anſw. Firſt, that there was the preſence and inuocation of the Trinitie in the Baptiſme of Iohn, it appeareth Matth. 3. where, when Chriſt came to Iohn to be baptized, God the father ſpake from heauen, God the Sonne was in the water, the holy Ghoſt deſcended in the likeneſſe of a Doue: and Iohn 1.33. He that ſent me to baptize with water: Here is the authoritie of God the father in Iohns Baptiſme: Said vnto me, vpon whom thou ſhalt ſee the ſpirit come downe, &c. hee it is that baptizeth with the holy Ghoſt; here is the name and authoritie of God the Sonne, and of the holy Ghoſt. The Maſter of ſentences is of this opinion; Tunc inuocato nomine Trinitatis, inſtitutus eſt in Iordane Baptiſmus, &c. Then in Iordane the name of the Trinitie being inuocated, Baptiſme was inſtituted, when the myſterie of the Trinitie appeared: lib.4.diſt.3.g. Secondly, Iohn vſed the ſame forme in baptizing, which the Apoſtles did; they baptized in the name of the Lord Ieſus, Act.2.38. Act.8.16. and ſo did Iohn, Act.19.4. and this S. Ambroſe teſtifieth, that Iohn baptized in the name of Chriſt, lib.1. de ſpiritu, c.3. and therefore it is not vnlike, but that Iohn baptized in the name of the Trinitie, as the Apoſtles did: though the name of Ieſus onely be expreſſed, becauſe thereby is ſignified the end and ſcope of Baptiſme for remiſſion of ſinnes, rather then an exact, and preciſe forme of Baptiſme.

The Proteſtants.

That Iohns Baptiſme was not diuers from Chriſts Baptiſme, but was all one with it in propertie and effect, and that they which were baptized by Iohn, were baptized in the name of Chriſt, and therefore needed not againe to be baptized: thus it is made manifeſt out of Scripture.

*Argum.*1. Iohns Baptiſme differed not in the matter of the Sacrament, for he baptized with water as Chriſts Apoſtles did. There was alſo the ſame forme of both, the word of God: for Iohn alſo taught the people to beleeue in Ieſus Chriſt that was to come, Act.19.4. There was alſo the ſame ſcope and end of Iohns Baptiſme: For he preached the Baptiſme of repentance, for remiſſion of ſinnes, Mark.1.4. Ergo, it was the ſame with the Baptiſme of Chriſt.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Iohn did not baptize vnto remiſſion of ſinnes, but vnto repentance: his Baptiſme did incite and ſtirre vp to repentance, and ſo conſequently they which repented, obtayned remiſſion of ſinnes.

Contra. Firſt, Iohn preached the Baptiſme of repentance to remiſſion of ſinnes, Luk.3.3. which is all one with the Baptiſme which Peter miniſtred, Act.2.38. Repent and be baptized in the name of the Lord Ieſus, for remiſſion of ſinnes: repentance and remiſſion of ſinnes is the ſcope both of Iohns and Peters Baptiſme. Bellarmine replieth, that repentance went before Peters Baptiſme, as a preparation vnto it, but it followed Iohns as the effect. Contra. Firſt, it appeareth, Luk.3.12. that the Publicanes which came to be baptized, firſt confeſſed their ſinnes, ſaying, Maſter, what ſhall we doe? and therefore repentance alſo went before Iohns Baptiſme. Secondly, if Iohns Baptiſme wrought repentance, then conſequently alſo it aſſured them of remiſſion of ſinnes: for where there is true repentance, there is remiſſion. Thirdly, S. Ambroſe, as I haue ſhewed, ſaith, that Iohn did baptize in remiſſionem peccatorum: for remiſſion of ſinnes.

*Argum.*2. If the baptiſme inſtituted by Chriſt were another Baptiſme, then Iohns was, and yet he himſelfe was Baptized of Iohn: then it would follow, that we are baptized now with another Baptiſme, then Chriſt himſelfe was, for he receiued Iohns Baptiſme: but this were very abſurd to ſay, that there is not the ſame Baptiſme of the head and the members, of Chriſt and his Church: Ergo, Iohns Baptiſme all one with Chriſts.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that it was more conuenient for Chriſt to receiue Iohns Baptiſme, then his owne, leaſt he ſhould haue been thought himſelfe to ſtand in neede of regeneration.

Contra. 1. Iohn alſo baptized for remiſſion of ſinnes: therefore if there had been any ſuch danger, Chriſt might haue been thought to neede remiſſion of ſinnes, by receiuing Iohns Baptiſme. 2. Chriſt was not baptized for any cauſe in himſelfe, but to giue an example to vs: For ſo it became him to fulfill all righteouſnes: not to preſcribe lawes to others, whereof he had not been the firſt practizer himſelfe: ſo was he circumciſed, his mother purified: ſo did he celebrate his laſt Supper with his Apoſtles, not for his owne vſe, but for our example: In his owne perſon for our benefite to conſecrate theſe holy inſtitutions.

Againe, the Apoſtles were baptized with none other, then Iohns Baptiſme, for Chriſt baptized none: neither doth the Scripture make mention of any Baptiſme that they receiued, ſauing when he waſhed their feete, Iohn 15. S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh doubtfully, as hee is alleaged alſo, *decret. part.*3. *diſtinct.*4.*c.*147. Apoſtolos intelligimus iam fuiſſe baptizatos, &c. We vnderſtand that the Apoſtles were baptized, eyther with the Baptiſme of Iohn as ſome thinke, or which is more credible, with the Baptiſme of Chriſt: but it is contrarie to the Scriptures, that Chriſt baptized any, Ioh.4.1. therefore they were baptized with Iohns Baptiſme: ſeeing then that both Chriſt and his Apoſtles receiued Iohns Baptiſme, it muſt needs be the ſame with Chriſts.

So witneſſeth Leo 1. *Epiſtol. cap.*6. and it is rehearſed in the decrees, *part.*3. *diſt.*3.*c.*14. Sic voluit Chriſtus baptizari, &c. Chriſt ſo was baptized, as it pleaſed him to be circumciſed. And a little after: He did conſecrate in himſelfe the Sacrament of his owne baptiſme, ſo ſhewing himſelfe, as he is the chiefe, ſo in all things to be the firſt: Chriſt therefore was baptized with his owne Baptiſme.

S. Ambroſe alſo thus ſaith, *Serm.*41. Ergo fratres tingi debemus eodem fonte, quo Chriſtus: Wherefore brethren we muſt be dipped in the ſame fountaine with Chriſt, that we may be the ſame that he is. And the Maſter of Sentences ſaith, Inſtitutio facta eſt baptiſmi, &c. Baptiſme was inſtituted, when Chriſt was baptized in Iordane: Ergo, Chriſt was baptized with his owne baptiſme.

*Argum.*3. The Apoſtle ſaith, Epheſ.4.5. One Lord, one faith, one baptiſme: but Iohns faith was the ſame with Chriſts faith, for he taught the people to beleeue in Chriſt, Act.19.4. Ergo, his baptiſme was one with Chriſts.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, by this reaſon wee may proue, that Moſes and Dauid had alſo the baptiſme of Chriſt, for they had the ſame faith, &c.

Contra. Firſt, he anſwereth very abſurdly, ſeeing the Apoſtle ſpeaketh manifeſtly of thoſe times then preſent: therefore he ſhould haue firſt ſhewed that Moſes and Dauid had any Baptiſme at all, and then wee would alſo haue anſwered, what kinde of Baptiſme it was. Secondly, and yet that Baptiſme wherewith Moſes and the Iſraelites were baptized in the red ſea, and the clowd, was ſpiritually the ſame that Chriſts Baptiſme is, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, 1.Cor.10.2.

Secondly, ſaith he, it would alſo follow by this reaſon, that heretikes haue not the Baptiſme of Chriſt, becauſe they haue not the ſame faith: and therfore the Apoſtle doth not thus reaſon, There is one faith,therefore one Baptiſme : but exhorteth them to vnitie, becauſe they had all one faith, and one Baptiſme.

Contra. Firſt, heretikes haue the Baptiſme of Chriſt, if they baptize in the faith of Chriſt; otherwiſe they haue not the ſame Baptiſme : for an heretike baptizing in the name of the Trinitie, baptizeth in the faith of the Trinitie, howſoeuer he beleeue to himſelfe : and therefore this obiection notwithſtanding, there is one faith and one Baptiſme. Secondly, how could the Apoſtle perſwade to vnitie, becauſe they had all one Baptiſme,writing to the Epheſians, amongſt whom there were ſome,that had receiued onely Iohns Baptiſme, Act.19.43.if Iohns Baptiſme and Chriſts had not beene all one? Thirdly, S. Ambroſe proueth that Iohns Baptiſme could not be iterated, by this place,vnum Baptiſmum,one Baptiſme,*lib.*1.*de ſpirit.c.*3.And ſo alſo Leo enforceth this place, that Baptiſme is not to be iterated,becauſe there is but one.

Decret.p.2. c.1.qu.7. c.51.

Bellarmine denieth,that the proper end and ſcope of Iohns Baptiſme was for remiſſion of ſinnes: yet Auguſtine granteth it, who notwithſtanding being carried away with the error of that time, doth elſewhere put ſome difference betweene the Baptiſme of Iohn and Chriſt: Si quis contendat in baptiſmo Iohannis dimiſſa eſſe peccata,non ago pugnaciter: If any man wil contend,that remiſſion of ſinnes alſo was giuen in Iohns Baptiſme, I will not be againſt it. There being then the ſame proper end and ſcope of both theſe Baptiſmes,how can they chooſe but be all one?

De Baptiſt. cont.Donatiſt.lib.5.c.14.

I will laſtly vrge againſt them their owne Maſter, who thinketh, that they which did not Spem ponere in Baptiſmo Ioannis,put their truſt in Iohns Baptiſme were not baptized againe, *lib.*4.*diſt.*2.f. but none by him baptized ſo did; for hee taught them to beleeue in Chriſt. Act.19.4. Ergo, his Baptiſme was not iterated, and ſo conſequently was the ſame with Chriſts Baptiſme.

THE EIGHT QVESTION, OF THE CEREmonies and rites of Baptiſme.

The Papiſts.

15.Error

THey haue brought into the Sacrament of Baptiſme a multitude of ſuperſtitious ceremonies, whereby they haue greatly polluted the holy ſacrament of Baptiſme, mixing therewith their owne inuentions.

Firſt before Baptiſme,they haue deuiſed theſe toyes to be vſed.Firſt,they doe exorciſe,coniure, and exufflate the euill ſpirit from the partie to be baptized. Secondly, they touch the eares and noſtrels with ſpittle, that his eares may be opened to heare the word, and his noſtrels, to diſcerne betweene the ſmell of good and euill. Thirdly, the Prieſt ſigneth his eyes, eares, mouth, breaſt, forehead,noſtrels,with the ſigne of the croſſe,that all his ſenſes thereby may be defended.Fourthly, then hallowed ſalt is put into his mouth, that he may be ſeaſoned with wiſedome, and be kept from putrifying in ſin. Fiftly, the partie is annoynted then with oyle in his breaſt,that he may be ſafe from euill ſuggeſtions,and betweene the ſhoulders,which ſignifieth the receiuing of ſpirituall ſtrength.

Secondly,theſe ceremonies doe accompany Baptiſme it ſelfe. 1. The font and water therein is conſecrated and hallowed,in the name of the Father,the Sonne,and holy Ghoſt. 2. He is thrice dipped in the water, to ſignifie the being of Chriſt 3. dayes in the graue.

Thirdly,after Baptiſme,they haue this vſe, 1. He is annointed with holy Chriſme in the top of the head, and thereby is become a Chriſtian. 2. A white garment is put vpon him, to betoken his regeneration. 3. A vaile is put vpon his head, in token that he is now crowned with a royall Diademe. 4. A burning taper is put into his hand, to fulfill that ſaying in the Goſpell, *Let your light ſo ſhine before men.&c. Bellarm.lib.*1.*de Baptiſm.*25.26.27.*Catechiſm. Rom.p.*310.*Gabr.Biel.lib.*4.*diſtinct.*6.*quaſt.*3.

The Proteſtants.

AGainſt theſe popiſh ceremonies,which they vſe in Baptiſme,we doe reaſon thus.

1. It is contrary to the rule of the Goſpell,that there ſhould be ſuch types,ſhadowes,ſignifications,brought into the ſeruice of God,as they make in Baptiſme : for ſeeing we haue the bodie which is Chriſt,all ſuch ſhadowes ought to be aboliſhed.Coloſſ.2.17.

2 In one Sacrament they haue forged and found out many, as their chriſme, oyle,ſalt,ſpittle: which they make not onely ſeales of holy things,but giuers and conferrers of grace,which is more then any Sacrament can haue : and it is contrary to the Scripture : for the ſpirit of God is as the winde that bloweth,where it liſteth,Ioh.3. It is not tied to creatures, elements, externall ſignes, as they include the ſpirit (as it were) in theſe outward things, which haue power (as they affirme) to giue wiſdome, ſtrength, power againſt the diuell, and ſuch like. But S.Paul ſaith, that the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, 2.Cor.10.4. The meanes whereby Chriſtians both obtaine ſpirituall graces and ſhend them from euil, are ſpiritual : For if in Chriſt Circumciſion auaile not any thing, which was notwithſtanding inſtituted of God; but faith is all in all, Galath.

lath.5.6. much more vaine and vnauailable are the deuiſes and inuentions of men.

3 This beggerly company of ceremonies doth alſo deface and impugne the ſincere and pure inſtitution of Chriſt: None of thoſe ceremonies were vſed when Chriſt himſelfe was baptized, Matth.3.which notwithſtanding had been moſt fitte,conſidering the worthines of his perſon that was baptized: Neither did Chriſt giue any ſuch thing in charge to his apoſtles,but biddeth them onely preach, and baptize in the name of the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghoſt, Matth.28.19. nor yet were any ſuch ceremonies in vſe in the Apoſtles time, S.Peter ſaith, Act.10.47. Can any man forbid water,that theſe ſhould not be baptized? He calleth not for oyle, ſalt, ſpittle, or any ſuch thing,but onely for water.

Auguſtine vtterly miſliketh this comberſome rabble of needles ceremonies, Ipſam religionem, quam Deus pauciſſimis ſacramentis liberam eſſe voluit, oneribus premunt, &c. They doe cumber religion with their burdenſome inuentions, which Chriſt made free with a very fewe Sacraments: ſo that the Iewes caſe was more tolerable, who though they knew not the libertie of the Goſpell,yet were ſubiect to the legall ceremonies,not to the inuentions of men.

Epiſtol.119. cap.1.alleaged decret.part.1. diſt.12.cap.12.

And is it not euen thus (I pray you) in the popiſh Church? for neuer was Iewiſh Circumciſion ſtuffed with the third part of ceremonies,which their Baptiſme is defiled withall.

Againſt the ſuperſtitious vſe of ſome of theſe ceremonies, as againſt the thrice dipping of the child in the water,we haue the manifeſt decree,Concil.Toletan.4.cap.5. and it is ratified decret part.3.diſt.4.cap.85. Propter vitandum ſchiſmatis ſcandalum, vel hæretici dogmatis vſum, ſimplam teneamus baptiſmi merſionem,&c. To auoide the ſcandale of ſchiſme,and the vſe or faſhion of heretikes; let vs in Baptiſme dippe but once, leſt they, which vſe to dippe thrice, ſeeme to approue in ſo doing the heretikes aſſertion, following their cuſtome, who deuide the deitie, as they doe number their dippings. THE THIRTEENTH GENERALL CONTROVERSIE, OF THE SACRAMENT OF THE LORDS SVPPER, OR EVCHARIST.

THis Controuerſie hath two partes: Firſt, of the Sacrament it ſelfe. Secondly, of the ſacrifice, which they ſay, is offered vp in the Sacrament: which they call the ſacrifice of the Maſſe.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE SACRAment of the Euchariſt.

THis part of the controuerſie ſtandeth vpon diuers queſtions:Firſt,whether the body of Chriſt be really and ſubſtantially in the Sacrament. Secondly, whether the elements of bread and wine be changed,conuerted,and tranſubſtantiate into the very body and fleſh of Chriſt.Thirdly, whether the Euchariſt remaine a Sacrament after the vſe and celebration. Fourthly, of the outward elements in this Sacrament. Fiftly,of the words of conſecration. Sixtly, of the proper effect of the Lords Supper. Seuenthly, of the manner of celebrating it. Eightly, whether it ought to be miniſtred in one kind.Ninthly,whether it is to be adored.

THE FIRST QVESTION, CONCERNING the reall preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament.

The Papiſts.

16.Error. Fox.1135. articul.1.6. articul. IN the Sacrament of the Euchariſt, vnder the formes of bread and wine, by the efficacie of the word of Chriſt ſpoken by the Prieſt, is really, verily, and ſubſtantially preſent, the natural body and bloud of Chriſt, which was conceiued of the virgine Marie; the ſame body, that is now in heauen, Rhemiſt. Matth.26.ſect.4. yet after another manner: For he is in heauen according to the naturall exiſtence of his bodie: in the Sacrament, he is really preſent in his fleſh, yet ſacramentally by his omuipotent power, Concil.Trid.ſeſſ.13.can.1.

*Argum.*1. The figures muſt be inferiour to the things that are figured and repreſented: the Sacraments of the lawe were figures of the Sacraments in the Goſpell: therefore they ought to be inferior. But vnleſſe the bread and wine ſhould be the verie blood and fleſh of Chriſt in the Sacrament: their Sacraments in the law ſhould not onely not be inferior, but farre ſuperior to ours. As for example, the Paſchall Lambe is in nature to be preferred before bread, and the ſlaying of the Lambe did more liuely repreſent the death of Chriſt, then the breaking of bread; the eating of fleſh doth alſo better ſet forth the ſpirituall nouriſhing, then the eating of bread. Wherefore, vnleſſe we beleeue a reall preſence in the Sacrament, their ſacrifices, in dignitie and excellencie, ſhould farre exceede and excell ours, Bellarm.lib.1.de ſacram.Euchariſt.cap.3.

*Anſw.*1. It is not true, that their Sacraments were figures of ours: But S.Paul ſheweth, that both their Sacraments and ours doe figure out and repreſent the ſame thing, as the ſpirituall eating and drinking of Chriſt, 1.Cor.10.2.3. Our Sacraments are indeed figures correſpondent and anſwerable to theirs, and theirs alſo had a certaine reference and relation to ours: but they were not types of ours: for then our Sacraments ſhould be the body of theirs, whereas Chriſt is the bodie both of their Sacraments and ours. S.Peter ſaith, that Baptiſme is an antitypon, a figure anſwerable to the ſauing of the eight perſons in the flood, 1.Pet.3.21. They are correſpondent one to the other, and had mutuall relation and reſpect one to the other. But that was not properly a type of Baptiſme, but both baptiſme and that are figures and ſignes and liuely repreſentations of our ſaluation in Chriſt.

2. If the reall preſence of Chriſt onely commendeth the Sacrament, and aduanceth it before the rites of the Law, which in all other reſpects are better: by this argument Baptiſme ſtill remaineth inferior to the Sacraments of the Law: for you affirme no reall preſence in Baptiſme, as you doe in the Euchariſt: and in all other reſpects it muſt needes giue place to Circumciſion; for the cutting off of the fleſh is a more liuely repreſentation of regeneration, then is the waſhing by water: and the fleſh of man is in nature more precious then water. So by this reaſon, though you haue wonne credite for the Euchariſt, yet you haue loſt it for Baptiſme.

3. We anſwere therefore, that although the reall preſence be ſet apart, yet our Sacraments are more excellent then theirs. Firſt, the price and worth of things in their nature are not to bee weighed in a Sacrament, but they muſt be conſidered in reſpect of the vſe, to the which they are ordayned by the inſtitution. Fleſh, you ſay, is better then bread: ſo is wine and milke better then water in their nature: but in Baptiſme water is better then they, becauſe Chriſt hath now ſet it apart for a more holy vſe. Secondly, the ſlaying of the Lambe doth more liuely repreſent, ſay you, the death of Chriſt, then the breaking of bread.

Anſ. Wee graunt, that if breaking of bread had been vſed in the Law, it had not been then ſo ſignificant as the ſlaying of beaſts: but the breaking of bread now in the light of the Goſpell, in this abundance of knowledge and inſtruction, being a ſigne of a thing alreadie done and finiſhed, muſt needes be more pregnant and liuely in repreſentation, then the killing of ſacrifices in the law, which were types of things to come, the myſterie of the Goſpell being not yet opened to the world. And againe, the words of inſtitution, and conſecration vſed and pronounced in the Sacraments of the new Teſtament, are cleerer and more ſignificant, then any preſcribed in the ſhadowes of the Law, and therefore doe make a more liuely and effectuall repreſentation in the elements. Wherefore our Sacraments are more excellent then theirs, in reſpect of the more cleere light and fuller ſignification, which they haue by the word of God, and the preaching of the Goſpell ioyned vnto them: as the Apoſtle ſaith, his Goſpell was not hid, 2.Cor.4.3. and Ieſus Chriſt, was by his preaching deſcribed in their ſight, Galath.3.1. We neede not deuiſe any other way of excellencie for our Sacraments, then this, which we haue ſaid, agreeable to the Scriptures.

Bellarmine anſwereth: Firſt, that it is but an accidentall thing in our Sacraments, that they betoken a thing done and paſt, and therefore for all this eſſentially the elements of the Sacraments of the Law are better.

Contra. Firſt, as though the excellencie of the accident doth not make the thing, being in ſubſtance leſſe worthie,more excellent: as wine in the nature and ſubſtance thereof is more worthie then water, yet water in Baptiſme in reſpect of the accidentall vſe is more excellent then wine. Secondly,it is not now a thing accidentall in our Sacraments to repreſent a thing alreadie done;but it is of,and belonging to the nature of them,which otherwiſe were no Sacraments.

Secondly,ſaith he,the Euchariſt ordained by Chriſt, at his laſt Supper, did repreſent his death to come; and therefore in this reſpect, was no more worthie then the Sacraments of the old law, which did ſhew alſo things to come,*Bellar.cap.*4.

Contra. Firſt,as Iohn Baptiſt was greater by the teſtimonie of our Sauiour, than a Prophet, becauſe they did long before prophecie of him;but he did point him out with the finger,being alreadie come: ſo the laſt Supper of Chriſt repreſenting his death,then inſtant,is more excellent than the Sacraments of the law,foreſhewing it long after to bee fulfilled. Secondly,he hath gained nothing by this reaſon,but a derogation to Chriſts laſt Supper,ſeeing that our Sacraments now doe demonſtrate Chriſts death alreadie paſt. But as the Paſſe-ouer at the firſt inſtitution thereof being eaten the eeuen before their deliuerance,was no leſſe excellent then the feaſts of the Paſſe-ouer,afterward celebrated in remembrance of their deliuerance paſt: no more is Chriſts laſt Supper going before his death, herein inferiour to the celebration of the Lords Supper now ſince his death.

Thirdly,the words of inſtitution are not of the eſſence of the Sacrament, which they ſay make the elements more excellent;the words of conſecration are of the eſſence,which are by them denied,and refuſed,as words of enchauntment,Bellarm.ibid.

Contra. Firſt,an accidentall excellencie may make the ſubiect more excellent, as I haue ſhewed; as the acceſſion of honour,being but an accident,yet maketh one man more worthie than an other. Secondly,the words of inſtitution doe make a Sacrament, and therefore are of the eſſence thereof,giuing the forme,as the elements yeeld the matter. Thirdly,words of conſecration we refuſe not ſimplie,but your words of conſecration, therein miſliking theſe three things: Firſt, that you make not all the words of inſtitution,conſecratorie;but ſome few of them. Secondly,that by the very ſillables of thoſe words pronounced without relation to the prayers of the Church, the elements ſhould be conuerted. Thirdly, that onely by the words of conſecration the Sacrament is made; whereas the whole action, of giuing, receiuing, diſtributing, giuing of thankes, doth helpe toward the conſecration. Fourthly, you doe then graunt, that the words of conſecration doe make the Sacraments of the Goſpell more excellent: wherefore not the reall preſence only.

Argum. 2.Ioh.6.55.Chriſt ſaith,My fleſh is meate in deede,and my blood is drinke in deede: he that eateth my fleſh and drinketh my blood,dwelleth in me,and I in him.

Firſt,this place muſt be vnderſtood not of any ſpirituall eating or drinking of Chriſt without the Sacrament, but is properly meant of the manducation and eating of him in the Sacrament. Firſt,verſ.51.The bread (ſaith Chriſt) *that I will giue:*he ſpeaketh of a thing to come,for the Sacrament was afterward inſtituted: but if this bread were to be taken for his word, and the eating thereof for beleeuing in him; in this ſenſe the bread was giuen alreadie.

Anſ. Chriſt alſo ſpeaketh in the preſent tenſe,verſ.32.My father giueth you the true bread from heauen: And,I am the liuing bread that came downe from heauen: if any man eate of this bread he ſhall liue for euer,verſ.51. He ſaith not,he that ſhall eate,but he that euen now eateth. And afterward he ſpeaketh of the time to come; The bread that I ſhall giue,becauſe his death and paſſion was not yet finiſhed: therefore he ſaith,The bread that I ſhall giue, is my fleſh, which I will giue for the life of the world: But he ſpeaketh euery where of the eating of his fleſh in the preſent tenſe,verſ.35.50.51.53.which cannot be vnderſtood of the ſacramentall eating,the Sacrament being not yet inſtituted,but of a ſpirituall manducation.

Secondly,ſay they,thoſe words being applied to the Sacrament, muſt needes alſo bee vnderſtood properly and literally,for the very eating of the fleſh of Chriſt,and drinking his blood,not tropically,or figuratiuely.

The fleſh of Chriſt,which Chriſt promiſeth to giue them to bee eaten,he preferreth before the Manna, which their fathers did eate in the wilderneſſe: the true bread which he giueth them, is more excellent then the bread of Manna. But if the bread in the Sacrament doe but ſignifie the fleſh of Chriſt,and be not it in very deede,it ſhould be no better then Manna,which alſo did ſignifie and ſhew forth Chriſt,Bellarm.cap.6.

Anſ. Firſt, Chriſt compareth not the materiall Manna,and the ſacramentall bread together, but he ſpeaketh of the true bread, which is himſelfe, as verſ.33. The bread of God is he, which commeth downe from heauen: The Sacrament, neither ſacramentall bread was yet giuen or inſtituted, neither yet could be eaten: but this bread, whereof Chriſt ſpeaketh,was euen at that time giuen; as verſ.32.My father giueth you the true bread from heauen: and it was euen then to be eaten:ver.58. He that eateth of this bread,ſhall liue for euer: So then the true bread,that is, Chriſt is preferred before Manna. Secondly, the ſacramentall bread, without any carnall preſence, is more excellent then Moſes Manna,being a more liuely and full repreſentation of the ſpirituall manducation of Chriſt.

Thirdly,that Chriſt ſpeaketh of a ſacramentall eating and drinking of Chriſt, Bellarmine thus further proueth : becauſe that the Iewes vnderſtood Chriſt to ſpeake of the very eating of his fleſh,and were offended at it : neither doth Chriſt correct their opinion,as he doth inſtruct Nicodemus ignorance,Ioh.3.further expounding himſelfe : and if Chriſt had meant onely, that hee ſhould bee ſpiritually eaten, they needed not to haue taken any offence,*Bellar.cap.*5.*argum.*3.

Contra. Firſt,it is falſe,that our Sauiour correcteth not the error of the Capernaites, ſeeing hee further thus expoundeth himſelfe,verſ.63.The fleſh profiteth nothing,the words that I ſpeake are ſpirit and life : ſhewing,that he muſt be ſpiritually vnderſtood. Secondly,it is true,that they needed not to haue taken offence at Chriſts ſpeech, being altogether of a ſpirituall eating, if they had rightly conceiued him : but becauſe they vnderſtoode him groſly of a carnall eating, as the Papiſts doe, thereof proceeded the offence. This argument he might very well haue concealed, for it maketh moſt againſt himſelfe.

Fourthly,this diſtinction of ſpeech vſed by our Sauiour Chriſt,and ſo often repeated,to eate his fleſh,and drinke his blood, verſ.54.56. ſheweth, that hee ſpeaketh of the ſacramentall eating and drinking vnder the ſignes of bread and wine:for otherwiſe in the ſpirituall receiuing of Chriſt by faith,it is all one to eate him and drinke him,Bellarm.arg.4.

Contra. Firſt, you your ſelues alſo make no difference betweene the ſacramentall eating and drinking of Chriſt,miniſtring onely vnder one kinde:wherefore you are anſwered by your owne practiſe. Secondly,the Scripture ſpeaking of the ſpirituall participation of Chriſt by faith, doth often vſe this diſtinction of eating and drinking,to ſhew, that Chriſt is the abſolute foode of our ſoule ; as Ioh.6.verſ.35.He that commeth vnto me ſhall neuer hunger, and he that beleeueth in me ſhall neuer thirſt. And Ioh.4.14.Whoſoeuer drinketh of this water,ſhall neuer be more a thirſt : which places are onely vnderſtood, of the receiuing of Chriſt ſpiritually by faith.

Now on the contrarie ſide we will proue,that this place contained in the 6.chapter of Iohn,cannot be ſo vnderſtood as they expound it.

Firſt,Chriſt ſpeaketh not only of the ſacramental eating of his fleſh,and drinking of his bloud, but generally of the ſpirituall participation by faith, whether in the Sacrament or without,which is wrought in vs by the holy Ghoſt.

*Argum.*1. If it be vnderſtood of the Sacrament, then it will follow that no man can be ſaued, vnleſſe he doe receiue the Sacrament : for Chriſt ſaith,verſ.53.Except you eate my fleſh and drinke my bloud,you cannot haue life in you. This,I am ſure,they wil hardly graunt,that the Euchariſt alſo ſhould be neceſſarie,as they make Baptiſme,to ſaluation.

Bellarmine anſwereth : firſt, by this reaſon not the ſacramentall eating onely of Chriſt, but the ſpirituall alſo,which is by faith,is excluded: for infants haue no faith,whereby they ſhould eate or drinke Chriſt. Secondly,this place then of neceſſitie muſt bee vnderſtood of men of yeeres,who either in act, or at the leaſt in vow and deſire muſt bee partakers of the Sacrament : and this appeareth,becauſe Chriſt ſaith,verſ.53.*Except ye eate,&c.*ſpeaking to thoſe that heard him: but treating of the neceſſitie of Baptiſme,he ſaith not,*except ye be borne of water,&c.*but in generall words, except a man be borne of water,&c. And beſide Chriſt ſpeaketh of eating of bread, whereas children are fed with milke,and not bread,*cap.7.reſp.ad argum.*3.

Contra. Firſt, though infants haue no faith, yet the life of Chriſt is applied vnto ſo many of them as are ſaued by the ſecret operation of Gods ſpirit : for ſeeing Chriſt giueth life vnto the world,and he no otherwiſe giueth life,then as he is the true bread of God,ver.33.for it is the propertie of bread to giue life : then infants alſo,if they haue life and ſaluation in him, muſt alſo ſome waies be made partakers of this bread. Secondly,be it graunted,that this place is properly vnderſtood, of thoſe that are, adulti,of yeeres (which we will not much ſtand vpon) yet it will followe vpon their expoſition, that many, which are preuented by death, before they receiue the Communion,ſhould be damned : for although they doe much in heart and vow deſire it, this is not ſacramentally, but ſpiritually by faith to eate Chriſt : which wee ſay is the true meaning of this place. Thirdly,why may not alſo that place of Baptiſme,Ioh.3.Vnleſſe a man bee borne of water,&c. be expounded of thoſe of perfect age, as well as this? They haue therefore put an anſwere in our mouthes for that place ſo much vrged for the neceſſitie of Baptiſme. The difference,which Bellarmine pretendeth, is nothing : for in this place alſo,verſ.54. Chriſt ſpeaketh in the third perſon, whoſoeuer eateth my fleſh,&c.hath eternall life : ſo that the contrarie, though pronounced in the ſecond perſon,*except ye eate,&c.*verſ.53.appeareth to haue the ſame meaning. Fourthly, his obiection,that children eate milke, not bread, is nothing : ſeeing our Sauiour ſpeaketh not of materiall,but ſpirituall bread : and therefore, as men of yeeres may be fed with ſpirituall milke, 1.Corinth.3.2.ſo children in yeeres may be nouriſhed with ſpirituall bread.

*Argum.*2. That Chriſt ſpeaketh of that bread, which is ſpiritually eaten by faith,it is euident out of the text, verſ.47. He that beleeueth in me hath euerlaſting life. Verſ.48.I am the bread of life. And verſ.50.This is the bread, that commeth downe from heauen, that he that eateth of it, ſhould not dye. By this it appeareth, that to beleeue in Chriſt, is to eate Chriſt.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Chriſt indeede ſpeaketh of the true bread, which is himſelfe, communicated vnto vs by faith: as alſo he maketh mention of the ſacramentall bread, verſ.51.The bread that I will giue is my fleſh.

Contra. It is euident that Chriſt ſpeaketh in this place of one and the ſame bread, which is himſelfe: firſt, he ſaith, I am the liuing bread, verſ.51. And againe, the bread that I will giue is my fleſh: but Chriſt and his fleſh are all one; and therefore Chriſt and his fleſh are one and the ſame bread. Secondly, verſ.58. Chriſt ſpeaketh of the bread which came down frõ heauen; but the ſacramentall bread commeth not from heauen: Ergo, Chriſt ſpeaketh not of that bread. Thirdly, the effects of the bread are the ſame, he that eateth Chriſts fleſh, hath eternall life, verſ.54. And, he that eateth the bread, that came from heauen, ſhall liue for euer, verſ.58. Wherefore the bread Chriſt, and the fleſh of Chriſt, are taken for the ſame.

*Argum.*3. Chriſt ſaith, He that eateth my fleſh ſhall liue for euer, verſ.54. but euery one that eateth Chriſt ſacramentally, is not ſaued: wherefore Chriſt ſpeaketh not of a ſacramentall eating.

Bellarmine anſwereth, the words of Chriſt muſt bee vnderſtood conditionally, if they doe eate Chriſt aright: as in like manner the Scripture ſaith, Ioel.2. Whoſoeuer calleth vpon the name of the Lord, ſhall be ſaued: and yet it is ſaid Prou.1. They ſhall call vpon me, but I will not heare: becauſe they call not aright.

Contra. This condition is ſomtime requiſite to be vnderſtood in ſuch things, as may be without it: as in prayer, becauſe all prayer is not in truth: and therefore S. Iames ſaith, The prayer of faith (not euery prayer) ſhall ſaue the ſicke, Iam.5. But in this caſe of eating and drinking Chriſt this condition is ſuperfluous, becauſe it is impoſſible to eate and drinke Chriſt, if it bee not done aright: a man may eate the bread, and drinke the cuppe of the Lord vnworthily, as the Apoſtle ſaith, 1.Cor.11.27. but he cannot eate or drinke Chriſt vnworthily: for he either eateth him not at all; or if he doe, it muſt bee effectuall: for Chriſt himſelfe ſaith, verſ.55. My fleſh is meate indeede: wherefore he that eateth Chriſt, if he doe eate him at all, muſt needes haue meate indeede, and ſo conſequently be nouriſhed to eternall life.

*Argum.*4. Theſe words, verſ.51. The bread that I will giue is my fleſh, cannot in their owne ſenſe be vnderſtood of the Sacrament, ſeeing they themſelues hold, that the bread, after tranſubſtantiation, is annihilate, and is bread no more.

Bellarmine is here driuen to this ſhift, to ſay, that bread is not here taken properly, but generally for meate.

Contra. Firſt, he himſelfe in his anſwere to our firſt argument obiected, that infants were not comprehended in this generall ſpeech of Chriſt, except ye eate, &c. becauſe they eate not bread, but milke: where he taketh bread properly, and not for any meate; for milke alſo is meate: and yet forgetting himſelfe, he taketh it here improperly. Secondly, if Chriſt ſpeake not of bread properly, then neither of drink properly: then not of the Sacrament, which is celebrated not with a-ry meate, but onely with bread.

*Argum.*5. If Chriſt hath relation to the Sacrament, then muſt it of neceſſitie be miniſtred in both kindes; for in euery place he ioyneth both theſe together, the eating of his fleſh, and drinking of his bloud: but this is contrarie to their practiſe.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the fleſh and blood of Chriſt is as fully receiued vnder one kinde as both, as he himſelfe ſaith, verſ.57. He that eateth me, ſhall liue by me: ſo that he which eateth Chriſt doth both eate and drinke him, *reſponſ. ad argum.*10.

Contra. Firſt, to eate and drinke Chriſt ſpiritually by faith is all one: but ſacramentally to eate him, and drinke him, are two diuers things; for otherwiſe the one element were ſuperfluous. Secondly, Bellarmine himſelfe, *cap.*5.*argum.*4. enforceth this diſtinction of eating and drinking, to be vnderſtood of the Sacrament, where Chriſt is both eaten and drunk vnder the formes of bread and wine, whereas ſpiritually, ſaith he, it is all one, to eate and drinke Chriſt; but now forgetting himſelfe, he would take away this diſtinction: wherefore all this while he hath ſaid nothing.

Auguſtine alſo thus writeth vpon theſe words, Hoc eſt manducare illam eſcam, & illum bibere potum, in Chriſto manere, & illum manentem in ſe habere: This it is to eate that fleſh, and to drinke that drinke, to abide in Chriſt, and to haue him abiding in vs: But this may be done without the Sacrament: Ergo, it is not neceſſarie to vnderſtand it of the Sacrament. Tract. in Iohann.26.

Secondly, though we ſhould graunt, that this whole treatiſe Ioh:6. may fitly be referred to the Sacrament, yet the words muſt be taken figuratiuely, for the ſpirituall eating and drinking of Chriſt in the Sacrament, and not otherwiſe.

*Argum.*1. Verſ.35. Chriſt ſo expoundeth his owne words: I am the bread of life, he that commeth to me ſhall not hunger,and he that beleeueth in me ſhall not thirſt. To eate then, and to drinke Chriſt,is to beleeue in him.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt,if the bread in the Sacrament be but figuratiuely the fleſh of Chriſt, and not the very fleſh it ſelfe, then Chriſt ſhould giue no better thing than Moſes did, who alſo gaue them Manna,which was a type and figure of Chriſt,*cap.6.reſp.ad argum.*1.

Contra. Firſt,though Manna to the faithfull amongſt the Iſraelites were not onely a materiall, but a ſpirituall food,as the Apoſtle ſheweth,1.Cor.10.3.yet in this place mention is made thereof,as it was a materiall foode:as verſ.35.Moſes gaue you not bread from heauen; but as Manna repreſented Chriſt it was a heauenly bread: wherefore the ſacramentall bread compared with the materiall Manna,is much more excellent. Secondly, Manna ſignified Chriſt, yet darkly and obſcurely:but in the Euchariſt he is after a more liuely and ſenſible manner exhibited and repreſented vnto vs;and therefore in reſpect of the ſpirituall vſe alſo it excelleth.

Secondly, ſaith he,they asked a ſigne,and miracle of Chriſt, verſ.30. but in the repreſentation of Chriſts fleſh onely there is no miracle, neither in apprehending him by faith,Bellar.ibid.

Contra. Firſt,the comming of the true bread from heauen, which Chriſt giueth here as a ſigne, verſ.32. and the incarnating of the Sonne of God, is the greateſt miracle in the world, which the Angels doe wonder at,and deſire yet to behold,1.Pet.1.12. Secondly, to beleeue in Chriſt and to apprehend him by faith, is called by the Apoſtle a great myſterie, 1.Timoth.3.16. And Auguſtine ſaith,Prorſus maius hoc dixerim,quàm cœlum & terra: I ſay it is a greater worke, than the heauen and the earth, *Tract.*71.in Iohan.

*Argum.*2. Chriſt vnderſtandeth another manner of eating of his fleſh, then the Capernaites did. But they imagined that Chriſt would giue his very fleſh and bloud to be eaten: and therefore they went away offended,and ſaid, This is an hard ſaying, verſ.60. Therefore Chriſt to correct their erronious conceit,ſaith vnto them,that His words were ſpirit and life,that is, ſpiritually to be vnderſtood,verſ.63.

So Auguſtine interpreteth thoſe words of Chriſt,as if he had ſaid, Spiritualiter intelligite, quod locutus ſum: You muſt vnderſtand ſpiritually, that which I haue ſaid. You ſhall not eate this body which you ſee,nor drinke that bloud,which ſhall be ſhed for you: Sacramentum vobis aliquod commendaui, ſpiritualiter intellectum viuificabit vos: I haue commended a certaine myſterie and Sacrament vnto you,which being ſpiritually vnderſtood,ſhall quicken you.

Origen thus interpreteth this place,Hom.7.in Leuit.Propterea caro eius verus cibus,& ſanguis eius verus potus.&c. Therefore his fleſh is very meate, and his blood very drinke:for by the fleſh,and blood of his word,he nouriſheth mankinde.

Bernard alſo thus expoundeth theſe words: *Quid eſt manducare eius carnem, & bibere eius ſanguinem, niſi communicare paſſionibus eius, & eam conuerſationem imitari, quam geſſit in carne? Serm.*3 in Pſalm. What is it to eate his fleſh and drinke his bloud, but to communicate with his paſſions, and to imitate his conuerſation in the fleſh?

Againe,in another place: Qui manducat carnem & bibit ſanguinem meum, &c. hoc eſt, qui recolit mortem meam,& exemplo meo mortificat membra ſua, quæ ſunt ſuper terram, habet vitam æternam: lib. de diligendo deo: He that eateth my fleſh, and drinketh my bloud: that is, he which remembreth my death in his minde,and by my example doth mortifie his earthly members, hath eternall life. This father applieth not theſe words,as we ſee,to the ſacramentall eating.

Laſtly, concerning this place enforced out of the ſixt of Iohn, diuers of the Papiſts and of the more learned ſort amongſt them doe hold, that it is not to be expounded of the Euchariſt: as *Gabriel. lection.*84.ſuper canon. Miſſæ. Nicolaus Cuſanus epiſt. 7.ad Bohemos. Thomas Caietanus 3.*par. qu.*8.*artic.vltim.Ruardus.Tapper.in explicat.artic.*15.Louanienſ. So that we want not their owne teſtimonie againſt them.

The Papiſts.

*Argum.*3. Chriſt in the inſtitution of this Sacrament,ſaid vnto his Apoſtles,after he had giuen thankes and bleſſed: Hoc eſt corpus meum: This is my body: that is, that which is contayned in this bread,or vnder the formes of this bread,is my very body,Bellar.cap.9. So that theſe words muſt needes be taken properly,not to be a trope or figure.

1. It is not the manner of the Scriptures to ſet downe flat precepts and commandements, and directorie rules in obſcure termes, or figuratiue ſpeeches, but plainely and euidently: therefore it is not like,that Chriſt,being now to preſcribe vnto his Apoſtles the perpetuall Lawe and forme of this Sacrament,would ſpeake obſcurely.

2. Though he ſpake by parables and ſignes to the Phariſies, yet there was no cauſe why he ſhould ſo doe,none being preſent but his Apoſtles,Bellarm.ibid.

*Anſw.*1. It is very well,that you will now (though I thinke vnawares)grant vnto vs,that the precepts and rules in Scripture are ſet downe ſimply and plainly: wherefore the Scriptures cannot not be ſo hard and obſcure, as you would beare vs in hand they are: for if the precepts and rules of faith be euidently in Scripture expreſſed, as you ſeeme to confeſſe, what reaſon haue you to keepe backe the people from the reading of Scripture?

2 It is falſe that the Scriptures vſe no figures nor tropes, in the declaration of the lawes and Sacraments of the Church: for ſaith not S. Paul, ſpeaking of the Sacraments of the Iewes, Petra erat Chriſtus, the rocke was Chriſt, 1. Cor. 10.4. that is, ſignified Chriſt? Likewiſe in the 17. verſe, We that are many are one bread: that is, our ſpirituall vnitie and coniunction is repreſented, in that we are partakers of one bread.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that where the Apoſtle ſaith, the rocke was Chriſt, he ſpeaketh not of the materiall or viſible rocke, but of the ſpirituall, and inuiſible: they dranke of the ſpirituall rocke that followed them, ſaith the Apoſtle, verſ. 4. and then it followeth, the rocke was Chriſt. This proueth no trope in the Sacrament, which was the materiall, not the ſpirituall rocke, Bellarm. cap. 9.

Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtle calleth the materiall rocke ſpirituall, as verſ. 3. he called the viſible Manna, ſpirituall meate, as Auguſtine ſaith, Spirituale aliquid ſignificantem, in Pſal. 77. Becauſe it had a ſpirituall ſignification. Secondly, it may appeare to be ſo, both becauſe this ſpirituall rock, that is, the water out of the rocke, is ſaid to followe them; that is, the water did runne along by them for their continuall vſe: but Chriſt went before them in a pillar of fire, he ſhould improperly be ſaid to follow them. Againe, they all dranke of this ſpirituall rocke; but of the true ſpirituall water none but the faithfull drinke.

3. Sometimes our Sauiour would ſpeake darkly, being alone with his Apoſtles, thereby to ſtirre them vp more diligently to attend vnto his words, as when he biddeth them beware of the leauen of the Phariſies, Mark. 8.15. Yet this ſpeech of our Sauiour Chriſt vttered in the hearing of his Apoſtles, This is my bodie; was neither ſo darke nor obſcure, that the apoſtles neede much be troubled about the vnderſtanding. Nay, many things being ſpoken in borrowed and metaphoricall words, are vttered with greater grace, and carrie a fuller ſenſe: When Chriſt ſaid, I am the doore, Ioh. 10.9. I am the vine, Ioh. 15.1. he ſpake by a figure as he doth here, for neither was he a vine, or a doore, as the bread was not his body: yet which of the Apoſtles was there, that vnderſtood him not, when he called himſelfe a vine, and a doore? Neither could they doubt of our Sauiour Chriſts meaning here.

Thirdly, theſe words, ſaith Bellarmine, This is my bodie, neither any other ſpeech of Scripture is to be taken figuratiuely, vnleſſe ſome other Scripture doe ſhew it ſo to bee taken, or it bee repugnant to ſome article of the faith, as this ſpeech of Chriſt is not: for whereas they alleage, that it is contrarie to the article of Chriſts aſcenſion, we Catholikes doe beleeue the aſcenſion of Chriſt, and yet hold the reall preſence of Chriſt notwithſtanding, Bellarm. cap. 9. argum. 3.

Anſ. Firſt, other places of ſcripture, which muſt bee vnderſtood in a figure, as where Chriſt ſaith, I am the doore, the vine, &c. doe alſo inſinuate how Chriſt is to be vnderſtood here. Secondly, if they did beleeue the aſcenſion of Chriſt aright, as S. Peter doth, Act. 3.21. ſaying, whom the heauens muſt containe vntill &c. they would not containe him in earth vnder the formes of bread and wine, who muſt yet bee contained in heauen: for if Chriſt could bee contained in diuers places at once, the Angell had not reaſoned ſoundly, Matth. 28.6. he is not here, for he is riſen.

Bellarmine againe thus reaſoneth from the words themſelues: firſt, this article (hoc, this) cannot ſignifie bread, which both in Latine, and in Greeke, is of the maſculine gender; but the article is of the neuter: therefore by (this) Chriſt vnderſtandeth his bodie contained vnder thoſe formes.

Contra. 1. This article (hoc) is vſed ſubſtantiuely, not adiectiuely, and ſignifieth as much as this thing, and therefore is put in the neuter gender: neither is it ſo ſtrange or vnuſuall a thing (as the Ieſuite taketh it) to demonſtrate ſome thing in ſight in ſuch generall termes, not naming the thing: As Ioh. 6.9. There is a boy which hath fiue barly loaues and a few fiſhes, (both in the maſculine gender) ſed quid hæc ſunt, &c. but what are theſe things, which is put in the neuter? 2. If Chriſt by (this) did meane his bodie, there ſhould be a tautologie or idle repetition of the ſame thing, as if he had ſaid, this body is my bodie.

Secondly, he vrgeth theſe words, my body which is giuen for you: but his true body, not the figure of his body, was giuen for vs: Ergo, he meaneth his true and naturall body.

Contra. As Luke readeth, This cup is the new teſtament in my bloud, ſhed for you: where the participle ἐκχυνόμενον, ſhed, agreeth with ποτήριον, the cup, not with (αἵματι) in my bloud; as the Euangeliſt ſaith the cup was ſhed, by a double figure, firſt taking the cup for the wine, and ſecondly wine for Chriſts bloud: ſo this ſenſe may very well hold, this bread is my body, that is, a ſigne of my body, which is giuen for you.

Thirdly, if, this is my bodie, be nothing elſe, but this is a ſigne of my bodie, why may we not pronounce in like manner of the ſacrifices and Sacraments of the Law, which were alſo ſignes and ſymboles of Chriſt; and likewiſe of Baptiſme, and of the word of Chriſt, that they are his very bodie, and fleſh, becauſe they are ſignes thereof: but the Scripture ſo ſpeaketh not, but onely of the Euchariſt: Ergo, it is not a figuratiue ſpeech.

Contra. Firſt, although a reaſon might eaſily be rendred, why the Sacraments of the law ſhould not haue their denomination of the body & blood of Chriſt, as the Euchariſt hath, becauſe Chriſts death was not then ſo plainly deſcribed, as at the inſtitution of the Lords Supper; yet we ſee that this phraſe of ſpeech is alſo vſed of thoſe legall Sacraments: as the rocke is ſaid to be Chriſt, 1. Corinth. 10.4. being but a type of him: and Chriſt is called the Paſſe-ouer, or Paſchall Lambe, 1. Corith. 6.7. Secondly, though in Baptiſme the water in Scripture bee not ſo euidently called Chriſts blood, as the cup in the Euchariſt (the reaſon whereof is plaine, becauſe in Baptiſme the blood of Chriſt is ſet forth as the worker of our regeneration, and new birth; but in the Euchariſt it is propounded as our ſpirituall drinke, and nouriſhment) yet wee ſee, that the Scripture is not ſilent in this behalfe, as Ioh. 7.38. the water is called the ſpirit: and Tit. 3.5. the waſhing the new birth: and Reuel. 7.14. They haue made their long robes white in the blood of the Lambe: the waſhing of water in Baptiſme, whereby they are ſanctified in the worde, Epheſ. 5.26. is called the blood of Chriſt. Thirdly, as touching the word of God, it may alſo in ſome ſenſe be called the very fleſh of Chriſt: for by hearing of the word Chriſt commeth in vnto vs, and ſuppeth with vs, Reuelat. 3.20. but he dwelleth in vs onely by eating his fleſh, and drinking his blood, Ioh. 6.56. wherefore the hearing of his word, is the very eating of his fleſh. And ſo Origen expoundeth, Carnibus & ſanguine verbi, &c. He doth feede vs with the fleſh and blood of his word, Hom. 7. Leuitic.

Contra. Now on the other ſide, we will make it plaine, that theſe words of Chriſt are ſpoken tropically.

Argum. 1. Where Chriſt ſaith according to S. Luke, This cup is the new Teſtament in my bloud, Luk. 22.23. wee muſt needes admit a double trope or figure: for firſt, the cup is taken for that which is contayned in the cup. Secondly, the wine in the cup was not the new teſtament, but a ſigne of the new teſtament. If then in one part of the Sacrament he ſpake by a figure, why not alſo in the other, when he ſaith, This is my body, that is, a liuely ſigne and ſeale thereof?

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, that in theſe words, this cup is the new teſtament, &c. a trope muſt needes be admitted; but ſuch a trope, as doth explicate it ſelfe: for, whereas Chriſt ſaith, Drinke ye all of this, and, which is ſhed for you, euery man may vnderſtand of himſelfe, that not the cup it ſelfe is drunken, or ſhed, but the liquor in the cup. And againe, Matthew and Marke doe thus write, this is my blood, who doe ſhew vs how Saint Luke is to be expounded, ſaying, this cup, &c. that is, the blood in the cup, cap. 11. reſp. ad argum. 8. but all the Euangeliſts ſay, this is my bodie: therefore the like figure cannot be admitted in theſe words.

Contra. Firſt, as men vſe not to drinke or ſhed cups, ſo neither to eate humane fleſh, or mens bodies: and therfore common vſe will find out a trope in the one ſpeech as well as in the other: as well, when Chriſt ſaith, take, eate, this is my bodie; as when he ſaith, drinke of this cup. Secondly, euery figuratiue ſpeech in Scripture, though it bee not expounded by another place, yet may bee vnderſtood to be figuratiue by the nature and propertie of the thing ſpoken of: as S. Paul ſaying, the rocke is Chriſt, though he expound not himſelfe, yet euery man knoweth that a ſtone cannot be Chriſt, no more can bread be his bodie, but in ſignification. Thirdly, yet our Sauiour himſelfe expoundeth theſe words: this is my bodie, in another place, where he had ſaid, the bread is my fleſh, Ioh. 6.51. and then ſhewing his meaning he ſaith, verſ. 63. the fleſh profiteth nothing, my words are ſpirit and life: ſo then he muſt bee vnderſtood ſpiritually. Fourthly, neither doth Matthew, ſaying, this is my blood of the new teſtament, expound S. Luke, this cup is the new teſtament in my blood: for if by the cup, be vnderſtood blood; then the meaning ſhould be this, this blood is the new teſtament in my blood, which were abſurd. But Bellarmine would take away this abſurditie by a diſtinction, ſaying, that blood is taken here diuerſly; in the firſt place for the blood in the Sacrament; in the ſecond, for his blood ſhed vpon the croſſe, and he maketh this to bee the meaning: this blood here contained vnder the ſhew of wine, is my new teſtament conſecrated in my blood vpon the croſſe.

Contra. Firſt, thus he will make Chriſt to haue two diuers bloods, one in the Sacrament, which is the teſtament; the other ſhed vpon the croſſe, whereof it is a teſtament. Secondly, he ſaith, Matthew expoundeth Luke: but S. Matthew ſpeaketh of the blood ſhed vpon the croſſe: which is ſhed for many, verſ. 26. then Luke alſo ſaying, this cup, that is my blood in the cup, ſpeaketh of the blood ſhed vpon the croſſe: ſo that blood in the firſt and ſecond place, is to be taken for the blood ſhed vpon the croſſe.

Secondly, as he graunteth a figure, in theſe words (this cup) ſo he denieth any figure at all in the words following (is the new teſtament) for the blood of Chriſt in the Sacrament is the teſtament it ſelfe: and a teſtament (ſaith hee) is taken two waies, either it ſignifieth the will of the teſtator it ſelfe, or elſe the authenticall inſtrument, wherein the will of the teſtator is contained; and ſo Circumciſion was both a ſigne of Gods couenant, and the couenant it ſelfe, that is the inſtrument, whereby the couenant was applied: and ſo is the Euchariſt both a ſigne of the teſtament made in Chriſt, and ſo S. Matthew ſaith the blood of the teſtament; and it is the teſtament it ſelfe, that is, the authenticall inſtrument; and ſo Saint Luke ſaith, It is the Teſtament in my blood. Bellarmine ibid.

Contra. Firſt, the authenticall inſtrument of a Teſtament being vnder witneſſe and ſeale, is not the Teſtament it ſelfe, but onely a ratification of it; and ſo are the Sacraments ſeales and ratifications vnto vs of Chriſts Teſtament. Secondly, there is no Teſtament without death, Hebrues 9.16. wherefore the Euchariſt is not the Teſtament, vnleſſe they will haue Chriſt dayly to die in the Sacrament. Thirdly, circumciſion is called the couenant, becauſe it was the ſigne onely thereof; and ſo S. Paul the beſt expounder of Moſes, calleth it the ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of faith, Rom. 4.11. Fourthly, the Euangeliſts ſpeake all of the ſame Teſtament, and S. Luke ſpeaking figuratiuely is to be expounded by Matthew, who ſayth, The blood of the Teſtament; which anſwereth to the figure of the Law, for Moſes ſprinkling the blood ſaid, This is the blood of the Teſtament, Heb. 9.20. So then the blood is not the Teſtament, but of the Teſtament, that is, a ſigne thereof.

Argum. 2. It is no vnuſuall phraſe in the Scripture to ſay, (this is) that is, ſignifieth, as Geneſ. 17.10. Circumciſion is called the couenant it ſelfe, where it was a ſigne onely of it, and ſo is it called, verſ. 11. and Exod. 12.11. the Lambe is called the Lords Paſſeouer, which it betokened onely: and S. Paul calleth the rocke Chriſt, being onely a figure of him, 1. Cor. 10.4. In the ſame ſenſe Chriſt ſaith, This is my bodie: that is, exhibiteth and repreſenteth vnto you my bodie.

Bellarmine his beſt anſwere here is, that in all theſe examples alleaged, in the ſame place the trope or figure is expounded; as, where circumciſion is called the couenant, it is alſo ſaid to be the ſigne of the couenant: and Exod. 12.11. the Lambe is ſaid to be the Lords Paſſeouer, that is, the ſacrifice of the Lords Paſſeouer, verſ. 27. and 1. Cor. 10. where the rocke is ſaid to be Chriſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the ſpirituall not materiall rocke, which followed them, which ſpirituall rocke indeed is Chriſt. Bellarmine reſp. ad argum. 6. cap. 11.

Contra. Firſt, it is ſufficient for our purpoſe to ſhew in Scripture, that (this is) is taken for (this ſignifieth) though the explication of the Trope be not inſerted ſtraightway in the ſame place; neither is this maner of figuratiue ſpeech alwayes expounded, as Galat. 4.25. Agar is the mountaine Sina in Arabia; that is, ſignifieth, or figureth that place, where the Law was giuen: which explication, though it be not directly mentioned, yet is neceſſarily implied. Secondly, this figuratiue ſpeech of Chriſt notwithſtanding (this is my bodie) is as I ſhewed by himſelfe expounded Iohn 6.51. where hauing ſaid, the bread is my fleſh, as here (this is my body) he further openeth his meaning verſe 63. My words are ſpirite and life, that is, ſpiritually to be vnderſtood. Thirdly, the Apoſtle ſaying the rocke was Chriſt, ſpeaketh of the material rocke, which was a figure of Chriſt, not of the inuiſible rocke. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith, the rocke was, not, is; but Chriſt is alwayes the inuiſible rocke. Secondly, they did all drinke of this rocke, but they all did not ſpiritually receiue or drinke Chriſt: for verſe 5. With many of them God was not pleaſed: but with all the faithfull he was pleaſed: wherefore they did drinke all of the materiall, not of the ſpirituall rock. Thirdly, it is called ſpirituall, as Manna is called ſpirituall meate, for the ſpirituall ſignification: So then, here we haue the very like trope vſed by the Apoſtle, and yet not expounded. Fourthly, all figuratiue ſpeeches of Scripture, though their interpretation be not expreſſed, yet is implied by ſome conſequence: and ſo where Chriſt ſaith, This is my body, we are forced to vnderſtand a figure by implication, it being an vnwonted and inhumane thing to eate mans fleſh.

Argum. 3. Chriſt in ſaying, this is my bodie, did demonſtrate or ſhew ſomething in ſight: for a thing abſent or inuiſible cannot be demonſtrated: but Chriſts body, which they imagine was hid vnder the formes, was not ſeene: Ergo, it could not be ſhewen.

Bellarmine here runneth, as it were in a maze; one while he ſaith, (Hoc) non demonſtrare accidentia: That the word (this) doth not demonſtrate the accidents of the bread: and againe he affirmeth, Formalitèr in hac propoſitione demonſtrari ſpecies: That formally in this propoſition (this is my body) the ſhewes or outward ſhapes are demonſtrated: and he refuſeth to ſay with Scotus, that (this,) is as much to ſay, as this ſubſtance: but with Aquinas, this ſubſtance contained vnder the forme of bread. c. 11. reſponſ. ad argum. 1.

Contra. Firſt, it is pretie ſport to ſee how they buſie themſelues about the meaning of this word (Hoc) ſome ſay it ſignifieth Chriſts bodie, but this Bellarmine himſelfe miſliketh: ſome, as Scotus, expound it, (hoc ens) this thing: neither doth Bellarmine agree vnto this, but ſaith with Thomas, that (hoc) is this thing, or ſubſtance contained vnder the forme of bread: thus are they at their wits end, neither vnderſtanding what they ſpeake, nor whereof they affirme, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, 1. Tim. 1.7. Secondly, this Pronoune (hoc) neither betokeneth Chriſts bodie, for that were to ſay, this, that is, my body, is my body, which were abſurd to affirme the ſame thing of it ſelfe: nor yet the forme onely of bread, for they will not ſay, that the ſhape of the bread is Chriſts bodie:

neither yet doth it demonſtrate any other ſubſtance vnder the ſhew of bread, becauſe it is inuiſible, and cannot be demonſtrated, neither in their owne learning can there be any new ſubſtance before the words of conſecration be all vttered: wherefore it remaineth, that this demonſtratiue (hoc) muſt be referred to the bread, which Chriſt conſecrated to be a figure of his body.

*Argum.*4. That which Chriſt did take, he bleſſed, that which he bleſſed, he brake, that which he brake, he gaue to his diſciples: but he tooke bread, bleſſed bread, brake bread: therefore alſo he gaue bread, and ſo conſequently, the demonſtratiue, hoc, this, ſheweth the bread.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that betweene Chriſts taking and giuing, there commeth bleſſing; ſo that he bleſſed that he tooke, and by bleſſing changed it, and ſo gaue it: And they themſelues alſo confeſſe, that he gaue not the ſame bread, which he tooke; for he tooke common bread, but gaue ſacramentall bread: ſo as we ſay, he ſtroke Peter, ſlew him, and buried him, and yet Peter was not buried aliue, though he were ſtriken aliue; ſo it followeth not that Chriſt gaue the ſame bread he tooke. *Bellarm.c.*11.*reſp.ad argum.*1.

Contra. Firſt, S. Matthew ſaith, He bleſſed, S.Luk.22.19. He gaue thankes; ſo that bleſſing and giuing thanks is al one, which was an action directed vnto God, not vnto that which was bleſſed: neyther was the bread by this bleſſing changed into Chriſts bodie; becauſe the words of conſecration were not yet vttered: And againe after he had bleſſed, he brake it, but hee brake not his bodie, but the bread. Againe, the words are plaine, Matth.26.26. Ieſus tooke bread, and when hee had giuen thankes, he brake and gaue to his diſciples: what elſe now did Chriſt breake and giue, but bread, that he tooke? for otherwiſe no conſtruction can be made of the words. Secondly, wee ſay there was a ſacramental change of the bread, after Chriſt had bleſſed it, but it was a change in the qualitie, not in the ſubſtance; ſo that notwithſtanding this change, Chriſt gaue the ſame thing he took, though otherwiſe qualified. And the example brought in, is not to the purpoſe: for the ſame Peter in ſubſtance is buried, that was ſtricken, though altered in condition, before aliue, now dead: but they ſay there is no bread at all remaining, ſo that in their meaning Chriſt deliuereth another thing, then he tooke, contrarie to the words of the text. Thus then it appeareth by theſe reaſons alleaged, whatſoeuer is obiected to the contrary, that theſe words of our Sauiour, this is my bodie, cannot be otherwiſe then figuratiuely taken, and ſo S. Auguſtine expoundeth: Non dubitauit Dominus dicere, hoc eſt corpus meum, cum daret ſignum corporis ſui: The Lord doubted not to ſay, this is my bodie, when he gaue a ſigne of his bodie: *cont. Adimantum.cap.*12.

The Papiſts.

Other arguments out of the Scriptures are alleaged by them for proofe of the carnall and reall preſence, which muſt not here be omitted.

*Argum.*4. Bellarmine vrgeth that place 1.Cor.10.16. The cuppe of bleſſing which we bleſſe, is it not the communion of the blood of Chriſt? the bread which wee breake, is it not the communion of the bodie of Chriſt? From this place he draweth three arguments: firſt, the Apoſtle maketh mention of benediction and conſecration, whereby the wine is conuerted into Chriſts blood, which conſecration needed not, if there were but a figuratiue conſecration, but the firſt inſtitution would ſuffice: as therefore we ſee in Baptiſme no ſuch kinde of conſecration vſed, *cap.*12.

Contra. Firſt, we graunt a conſecration neceſſarie, whereby the elements are ſanctified and ſeparated from the common vſe to a ſpeciall holy vſe in the Sacraments; neither are the bread and wine otherwiſe conſecrated in the Euchariſt, then the water in Baptiſme, which is ſanctified by the word of God. Secondly, wee graunt alſo that to this conſecration the inſtitution of Chriſt in his word ſufficeth: for the word being applied to the element, as Auguſtine ſaith, maketh a Sacrament: if they require to their conſecration any thing more then Chriſts inſtitution, it is a meere humane and ſuperſtitious inuention. Thirdly, the argument then followeth not, the elements are bleſſed and conſecrated, and therefore conuerted into another ſubſtance: it is ſufficient that they are turned to another vſe: as the Paſchall Lambe was ſeparated from the flocke, and ſet apart for an holy vſe, Exod.12.3. yet remained a Lambe ſtill: the vſe was altered, the ſame nature was reſerued.

Secondly, the Apoſtle ſaith, the bread which we breake: by breaking he vnderſtandeth, the oblation and immolation of the bodie of Chriſt; as 1.Cor.11.25. Saint Paul thus rehearſeth the words of Chriſt, this is my bodie, which is broken for you, that is, offered vp in ſacrifice: but bread is not broken, or offered in ſacrifice: Ergo, it is the body of Chriſt, Bellar.ibid. And againe, this clauſe, the bread which we breake, muſt anſwere to the former, the cup which we bleſſe: that ſeeing the Apoſtle ſpeaketh there of conſecration, ſo he doth here of oblation, which is done by the words of conſecration.

Contra. Firſt, there is great difference betweene that ſaying of Chriſt rehearſed by Saint Paul, this is my bodie, which is broken for you, and this of the Apoſtle, the bread which we breake: for there he ſpeaketh of his bodie, here of bread, but bread is not his bodie: there his bodie is broken by the tormentors vpon the croſſe, here the bread is broken by beleeuers in the Sacrament. Againe, as in the firſt inſtitution Chriſt firſt brake the bread, and then ſaid, this is my bodie giuen for you: ſo breaking was one thing, the giuing, or offering his bodie, another: ſo is it here. Secondly, as the cup is conſecrated by bleſſing and prayer in part, ſo is the bread conſecrated in part by breaking and diſtributing: for not by the words of benediction onely, but by the whole action of giuing, receiuing, thankſgiuing, are the elements conſecrated: ſo that in this ſenſe, one part of the ſentence fitly anſwereth to the other.

Thirdly, the Apoſtle ſaith, the bread is the communion of the bodie of Chriſt, that is, wee are reallie and corporallie made partakers of the bodie of Chriſt in the Sacrament: for if there were but a repreſentation of Chriſts fleſh onely, and not his very fleſh indeede, the Apoſtle ſhould haue reaſoned but weakly, perſwading them from the ſacrifices of the Gentiles, and eating of things ſacrificed to idols, if he had not alſo inuited them to a more excellent ſacrifice and a better table, where the very fleſh of Chriſt is preſent, and not the figure onely: for this were to offer a ſilke garment painted onely, in ſtead of a true ſilken one.

Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtle meaneth a ſpirituall communion of the bodie of Chriſt, as it followeth, verſ.17. We that are many, are one bread, and one bodie, becauſe we are partakers of one bread: as wee are one body amongſt our ſelues, ſo are we one bodie with Chriſt: but we are myſtically one body amongſt our ſelues: Ergo. Likewiſe the Apoſtle ſaith, the bread is the communion, and wee are partakers of one bread: if it remaine bread ſtill, then is it not the bodie of Chriſt. And the Apoſtle further ſheweth how we are ioyned vnto Chriſt, Epheſ.2.22. in whom ye are built together, to be the habitation of God by the ſpirit: So then by the ſpirit wee are vnited vnto our head: and following the truth in loue wee grow vp vnto him, Epheſ.4.15. Secondly, the Apoſtle reaſoneth not, as Bellarmine pretendeth, promiſing one fleſhie ſacrifice for another: but his reaſon ſtandeth thus, That as they which communicate in the Sacrament, are partakers of Chriſt; ſo they that communicate with the ſacrifices of idols, haue fellowſhip and communion with diuels, to whom they are offered: and therefore ſaith the Apoſtle, I would not that ye ſhould haue fellowſhip with diuels, verſ.20. Thirdly, the Sacrament of Chriſt being celebrated with bread, is a better banket, then the ſacrifices of diuels furniſhed with fleſh: like as the Wiſeman ſaith, Better is a drie morſell, if peace be with it, than a houſe full of ſacrifices with ſtrife, Prou.17.1. ſo to eate bread in the remembrance of Chriſt with peace of conſcience, according to his owne inſtitution, is much better, then to be fatted with the ſacrifices of idols, which maketh ſtrife betweene vs and God: and who will not preferre the linnen garment of a chaſt matrone, before the ſilken ornaments of a ſtrumpet?

*Argum.*5. Saint Paul ſaith, 1.Corin.11.29. He that eateth and drinketh vnworthily, doth eate and drinke his owne iudgement, not diſcerning the Lords bodie. And verſ.27. he is guiltie of the bodie and blood of Chriſt: they cannot be guiltie of that which they receiue not: neither in the vnworthie receiuing of any other Sacrament are they made guiltie of the bodie and blood of Chriſt, but onely in this: Ergo, the bodie and blood of Chriſt are really preſent: Rhemiſt annot. in hunc locum, and *Bellarm.cap.*13.

Anſ. Firſt, it is falſe that none els but they which prophane the Euchariſt are guiltie of the blood of Chriſt: for as in Baptiſme alſo the faithful are made partakers of the body and blood of Chriſt, as it is confeſſed out of Auguſtine in your owne decrees, *par.*3.*diſtinct.*4.*c.*131. Nulli eſt aliquatenus ambigendum, &c. No man muſt doubt, that then euery faithfull one is made partaker of the bodie and blood of our Lord, when in Baptiſme he is made a member of Chriſt: So they which prophane Baptiſme, are guiltie of Chriſts blood, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of ſuch, that they doe tread vnder foote the Sonne of God, and doe count the blood of the teſtament an vnholy thing, wherewith they were ſanctified, Heb.10.29. Secondly, as theſe doe tread vnder foote the Sonne of God, and prophane the blood of the teſtament, not really or perſonally, but in the malice and prophanenes of their hearts; ſo are the wicked guiltie of Chriſts blood, in as much as they prophane the holy ſignes thereof: for the defacing of the Kings image or ſeale redoundeth to the diſhonour of the King himſelfe; ſo they are guiltie of the blood of Chriſt, not which they receiued in ſubſtance, but in abuſing the ſignes and ſeales thereof exhibited vnto them.

Bellarmine replieth: firſt, if the diſhonour of the image be the diſhonour of the King, how then dare you deface the images of Saints, which tend to their diſhonour? Secondly, an iniurie is not done to an image, if it be by chaunce rather than purpoſed violence defaced: but many may receiue the Euchariſt vnworthily, that maliciouſly doe not contemne it. Thirdly, if it bee ſuch a ſinne to abuſe the image of Chriſt in the Euchariſt, then for ſuch to heare the word alſo, which is alſo the image of Chriſt.

Contra. Firſt, if you can ſhew, that God hath commaunded Images to be erected for the honor of Saints, as the Kings ſeale and image is for his honor; then we will graunt alſo that it is a diſhonor to deface them. Secondly, though euery vnworthie receiuer be not malicious againſt Chriſt, yet he is a contemner and deſpiſer, ſeeing that he cannot be ignorant, but that it is the ſeale and image of Chriſt, as not the violator onely, but the contemner of the Kings image is an offender. Thirdly, an vnworthie hearer of the word is alſo a tranſgreſſor, as the vnworthie receiuer:

and the Apoſtle ſaith of ſuch, as fall away hauing had a taſte of the word, they do crucifie the ſonne of God, Hebr.6.6. in the which ſenſe the vnworthie receiuer is here ſaid to be guiltie of Chriſts blood, and ſo alſo doth crucifie Chriſt to himſelfe.

The Proteſtants.

THat Chriſt is preſent with all his benefites in the Sacrament, we doe willingly graunt: neither doe we thinke that the elements of bread and wine are bare and naked ſignes of the body and blood of Chriſt, but Chriſt is verily by them exhibited vnto vs, and ſpiritually by faith, we are truly made partakers of his precious body and blood; not that Chriſt deſcendeth from heauen to vs, but we aſcend by faith and in ſpirit vnto him: yea, we confeſſe as much as Bernard ſaith, whoſe ſpeech they themſelues allow, In ſacramento exhiberi veram carnis Chriſti ſubſtantiam, ſed ſpiritualiter non carnaliter: That the very ſubſtance of Chriſts fleſh is exhibited vnto vs, in the Sacrament, but ſpiritually, not carnally. This Bellarmine acknowledgeth to be true, though he would not haue the word (ſpiritually) to be vſed, leaſt it might be, as he ſaith, by vs miſconſtrued. This then is our faith and iudgement, that we are verily in this Sacrament engrafted into the body of Chriſt, and doe truly eate his fleſh and drinke his blood: but all this is done ſpiritually only and by faith: As for their carnall eating and deuouring of Chriſt, we vtterly reiect, and condemne it.

Cap.2.lib.1.

*Argum.*1. In the receiuing of the Sacrament there is a double coniunction, we are ioyned to Chriſt, and make one body alſo amongſt our ſelues: ſo ſaith S.Paul, 1.Cor.10.16.17. We are made partakers of the body of Chriſt, and we that are many are one bread, and one body: but our participation with the myſticall body of Chriſt is ſpirituall: Ergo, alſo our communication with his naturall body, Fulk.in hunc locum.

*Argum.*2. If the body of Chriſt be in the Sacrament, then is it eaten, and torne with the teeth: And what is eaten goeth into the belly, and is caſt out into the draught, Mark.7.19. I pray you, what is now become of the body of Chriſt? doth it paſſe the ſame way that other meates doe?

Bellarmine anſwereth, *lib.*1.*cap.*11.*ad argum.*5. that they are the accidents of the bread and wine which are eaten, and chawen, or rent by the teeth, and not the body of Chriſt: and yet the body of Chriſt goeth downe into the ſtomacke, but no further: but when the formes of bread and wine begin to be corrupted there, the body of Chriſt goeth away, *Bellarm.cap.*14.

*Anſw.*1. This is new learning, that the accidents of meate are chawen in the mouth, and not the meate it ſelfe: and that the formes onely, not the ſubſtance is altered, and corrupted in the ſtomacke. Say alſo that men are nouriſhed with accidents and not with the ſubſtance: If the Prieſt chaunce to drinke too deepe of the chalice, and ſo become drunke, I pray you what is it that maketh him ſo light headed? Is it, thinke you, the accidents onely of wine? Surely a drunken man would not ſay it. If a Mouſe chance to creepe into your pixe, and fill her hungry belly with your god-amight, what is it that the Mouſe feedeth vpon? trow you they be accidents onely? for you ſay that the conſecrated hoſt goeth no further then the ſtomacke: and yet it is too much that the houſell of Chriſtians ſhould be houſed in a mouſes belly. Theſe are but ridiculous and light queſtions, yet ſuch as haue troubled your graueſt and ſageſt heads, and remaine vnanſwered.

2 Bellarmine denieth, that the body of Chriſt being eaten, goeth any further then the ſtomacke: But our Rhemiſts goe further; they ſay, that we are made a peece of his body and blood: they ſhould rather haue ſaid that his body and blood is made a peece of vs, being conuerted into our ſubſtance. But ſilly men, wee pittie them: If wee ſhould preſſe them ſtill with theſe queſtions, they would ſooner runne mad, then finde out any reaſonable and ſober anſwere for vs.

Rhemiſt 1. Corinth.10. ſect.5.

It ſhall not be amiſſe to ſee the iudgement of other Popiſh doctors of this matter, that it may appeare to the world, how well they agree together.

Lib4.diſt.12. b.c.d.

The Maſter of ſentences rehearſeth foure opinions: firſt, ſome thinke, that in the Sacrament there is ſaid to be a fraction, breaking, or diuiſion of Chriſts bodie, becauſe it ſeemeth ſo to be, but is not. Secondly, others thinke, that as there is the outward forme of bread, and yet no bread; ſo there is a fraction, and yet nothing broken. Thirdly, ſome are of opinion, that the very body of Chriſt is ſenſiblie handled by the Prieſt, and verily broken, and rent with the teeth. A fourth opinion there is, that not the bodie of Chriſt, but the accidents onely are chawne and diuided by the teeth. The firſt opinion of theſe is ridiculous, that Chriſts bodie ſeemeth to be broken, and is not, and maketh the Euchariſt but a kind of iuggling tricke: the ſecond is impoſſible, that there may be a fraction without breaking: the third is groſſe and abſurd, to thinke that Chriſts bodie may be deuoured: the fourth is vnreaſonable, as I haue ſhewed, that accidents may be deuided without a ſubſtance: To this opinion ſubſcribeth the Maſter, as likewiſe Bellarmine; yet is it contrary to the decree of Nicolaus, who receiued the confeſſion of Berengarius vnder this forme, Corpus & ſanguinem Domini ſenſualiter non ſolum Sacramento, ſed in veritate manibus ſacerdotum tractari, frangi, & fidelium dentibus atteri: That the bodie and blood of Chriſt is ſenſible not onely in Sacrament, but verily handled by the Prieſt, broken and rent with the teeth of the faithfull: *par.*3.*diſtinct.*2.*c.*42. How then dare they preſume to goe againſt the determination of a Pope, to ſay the accidents of bread onely are eaten, and not the bodie of Chriſt it ſelfe?

A ſecond doubt there is, what becommeth of the bodie of Chriſt, when it is eaten: Bellarmine thinketh, it goeth but downe to the ſtomacke: the Rhemiſts thinke, as we haue ſeene, that we are made a piece of his bodie and blood: ſo alſo Leo in his decree, *p.*3.*diſt.*2.*c.*38. In carnem ipſius tranſeamus, &c. Taking the heauenly food, let vs be changed or paſſe into his fleſh. Clemens 5. determineth the contrary, *lib.*3.*Clementin.tit.*16. Hic panis ſumitur, ſed verè non conſumitur; manducatur, ſed non tranſmutatur, quia in edentem minimè transformatur: This bread is aſſumed, not conſumed; it is eaten, but not changed nor transformed into the eater: But another decree granteth, that the bodie of Chriſt may be conſumed, and mingled with other meates; to ſay no more: and therefore they which haue eaten the Lords bodie in the morning, are enioyned to faſt till the ſixt houre, which is noone, Ne putent ſancta portioni miſcere cibum, &c. Leaſt they ſhould mixe with the holy portion the meate, that goeth into the draught, *decret.par.*3.*diſt.*2.*c.*23. And another decree puniſheth thoſe with 40. dayes penance, that chaunce to vomite vp the Euchariſt. *ibid.decret.*28. So then by their learning, Chriſts bodie may be vomited vp: thus are they deuided in their fooliſh imaginations.

A third doubt there is moued: that if a mouſe, dogge, or cat chance to eate the Euchariſt, what it is that they eate? their iudgement in time paſt, hath beene, that it is the very Sacrifice it ſelfe, which the mouſe eateth: as *decret.p.*3.*diſt.*2.*c.*94. Qui bene non cuſtodierit ſacrificium, &c. He that keepeth the ſacrifice negligently, ſo that a mouſe or other beaſt chance to eate it, muſt do penance 40. dayes: but hee that looſeth it, that it cannot be found, 30 dayes. Thus they thought, that Chriſts bodie might both be eaten of beaſts, and be in danger to be loſt. But the Maſter of ſentences being aſhamed of this, asking the queſtion, what it is, that beaſtes do eate, when they meete with the hoaſt, maketh this clarkelie anſwere, Deus nouit, God knoweth: *lib.*4.*diſt.*13. Thus they wearie themſelues with their reſtleſſe brainſicke fantaſies.

*Argum.*3. Chriſt in his fleſh is aſcended vp to heauen, and there muſt remaine till his comming againe, Act. 3.21. Againe he ſaith, The poore you ſhall haue alwayes, but me alwayes you cannot haue, Mar. 14. Ergo, Chriſt being now in his humanity in heauen, cannot be preſent in yͤ Sacrament vpō earth.

Bellarmine anſwereth to the firſt place, that the carnall preſence of Chriſt dooth not draw him out of heauen: his naturall body remayneth there ſtill: yet by his omnipotent power he can make his body to be in many places at once, *cap.*14.

Anſw. If Chriſts body be in heauen and in earth, and in many places at once, it muſt either be his owne naturall body which was borne of the Virgin Marie, or he muſt euery day creat himſelfe a new body: but this were to too abſurd to be granted, that euery day there ſhould be a new Chriſt. Neither can the firſt be admitted: for a naturall body hath a naturall preſence; but ſo hath not Chriſts body in the Sacrament: for it is not there naturally, being without ſhape or forme, neither viſible nor ſenſible. And how can it ſtand with the propertie of a true naturall body, to be in 1000. places at once? for ſo muſt Chriſts bodie needes be, and in more too, ſeeing he is kept and hanged vp in euery popiſh Church. And further, if totus Chriſtus, whole Chriſt, be in the Sacrament, both with his bodie & ſoule; you muſt either graunt, that there are many whole Chriſts, ſeeing he is in many places at once: or elſe if there be but one whole Chriſt, his humanitie muſt be diſperſed euery where as his Godhead is: & ſo are you againſt your wils become Vbiquitaries.

Againe, if this be not a good argument, Chriſts bodie is in heauen, and therefore not in the Sacrament; then the Angels reaſon is not good, Matth. 28.6. Hee is not here, for hee is riſen: but if this be a good conſequence in the Angels argument, becauſe Chriſts bodie was not in more places then one, at once, it doth alſo neceſſarilie follow in the other.

Bellarmine to the ſecond place anſwereth, that as we alwaies haue the poore, ſo haue we not Chriſt, that is viſiblie, to annoynt his bodie, or to doe other ſuch ſeruices of loue and dutie vnto him: yet this letteth not, but that we may haue his preſence inuiſible in the Sacrament: ſo alſo anſwere the Rhemiſts, Matth. 26. ſect. 3.

Contra. Firſt, we reade in Scripture but of two ſorts of Chriſts preſence, one as he is God preſent in his power and diuinitie, and ſo he is with his Church alwaies, Mat. 28.20. the other, as he is man, by which preſence he ſaith, me you cannot haue alwaies with you, Mat. 26.11. If they can ſhew vs a third kinde of preſence out of Scripture, ſuch as they imagine, we will heare them: Secondly, our Sauiour commendeth the woman, that ſhe had wrought a good worke vpon him, verſ. 10. and ſaith, they ſhall not haue him any more in ſuch ſort, that is, to worke a good worke vpon: but if Chriſts bodie were preſent in the Sacrament, it were a good worke, to adore it, to adorne it with cloth of golde, and to giue all outward reuerence to it: but Chriſt is not bodily preſent now, to haue any good workes miniſtred vnto him: Ergo, he is no waies either viſiblie, or inuiſiblie preſent in his bodie.

Argum.4. Matth.15.17. All that entreth into the mouth, goeth into the bellie and is caſt out into the draught; the bodie of Chriſt is not caſt into the draught, but bread onely: Ergo, the bodie of Chriſt doth not enter in at the mouth.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Chriſt ſpeaketh onely of ſuch meate, as is receiued to nouriſh the bodie: for after the reſurrection Chriſt did verilie eate, and yet it was not caſt into the draught, that he did eate, becauſe he eate not for nouriſhment. And whereas we anſwere, that this example is vnfitly alleaged, becauſe Chriſt ſpeaketh of mortall men, that eate, but he was then immortall: he replieth, that in like manner Chriſt ſpeaketh of mortall and corruptible meate, not of immortall and incorruptible, ſuch as his bodie is: *Bellarm.c.*14 reſp. ad argum.2.

Contra. Firſt the words of our Sauiour are generall, Whatſoeuer entreth in at the mouth; and therefore nothing, that goeth that way, can be excepted: Secondly, the way for immortall and incorruptible foode is not to goe in by the mouth into the bellie; for that which is corruptible is not capable of that, which is incorruptible, and immortall, as S. Peter ſheweth; You are borne anew not of mortall ſeede but immortall, by the word of God, &c. Then it followeth, verſ.24. All fleſh is graſſe, &c. but the word of the Lord endureth for euer: fleſh which is graſſe and corruptible is not capable of the immortall ſeede of the word, no more is it of the immortall foode of Chriſts bodie: wherefore they may as well ſay that mortall foode may goe into the ſoule, as immortall into the bellie. Thirdly, the ſame thing that is caſt into the draught, firſt commeth in by the mouth: then I aske of them, what it is that goeth out into the draught? not the accidents of bread, (that were abſurd) nor yet Chriſts bodie, (it were impious once to thinke it) Ergo, the ſubſtance of bread goeth forth, and came in by the mouth before. Bellarmine ſaith he will not meddle with this queſtion now, what is become of the accidents of bread, being corrupted in the ſtomacke: yet I would his leyſure had ſerued him to haue reſolued this doubt now: but I thinke we muſt giue him a longer day to conſult with the Popes chayre, and then tell vs his mind. The Papiſts are all here in ſuch a ſtreite, that they know not how honeſtlie to winde themſelues out: for ſeeing they affirme, that Chriſts bodie entreth in at the mouth, and ſomewhat muſt goe forth againe, they muſt graunt, that it is either the accidents of bread, or bread it ſelfe, or ſome new ſubſtance ſupplied in that inſtant, or the verie bodie of Chriſt, which commeth out of the bodie: but not the firſt, for it is a ſubſtance that is caſt forth into the draught, and the accidents of bread are corrupted and gone; and where there is corruption, there of neceſſitie is a ſubiect and a ſubſtance: It is not bread, for that they ſay was chaſed away before, and annihilated: it is no new ſubſtance; for the ſame thing, that commeth in by the mouth, goeth forth againe: therefore it followeth, that it is the ſubſtance of Chriſts bodie: for how can they ſhift it, ſeeing Chriſts bodie being once eaten muſt remaine? for our Sauiour ſaith, He that eateth my fleſh, and drinketh my bloud remaineth in me, and I in him; Iohn 6:56. and if Chriſts fleſh remaine, no other ſubſtance commeth vnto it, neither of bread, nor any other, (for this is the Lutherans conſubſtantiation, which the Papiſts abhorre.) They haue therefore but two euaſions, one is to ſay, that Chriſts fleſh goeth from the bodie, as it came into it, as a Popiſh Prieſt reaſoning with Robert Smith martyr, was not aſhamed to graunt, ſaying further, that it was no greater derogation to Chriſt, then to be ſpit vpon: Fox. pag. 1691. But this ſo great blaſphemie our aduerſaries ſeeme in words to miſlike: yet holding the carnall preſence, they are driuen ſo to ſay, or elſe to ſay nothing. The other way to ſatisfie all doubts, is to leaue theſe filthie dregs of error, and with Origene to confeſſe the truth: Quod ſi quicquid ingreditur per os, &c. If that whatſoeuer entreth in by the mouth, goeth into the bellie, &c. euen that meate, which is ſanctified by the word and praier, in reſpect of the materiall part thereof, goeth into the bellie, and ſo out into the draught. Wherefore it is bread, and not the Lords fleſh, that is eaten in the Sacrament, and ſo deliuered againe, as all other meates are.

In cap.15. Matth.

Ad Dardan. epiſt.57.

Hearken what Auguſtine ſaith, Cauendum eſt ne ita diuinitatem adſtruamus hominis, vt veritatem corporis auferamus: We muſt take heede we doe not ſo maintaine the diuine nature of the man Chriſt, that we take away the nature of his bodie.

Argum.5. The fathers in the law did eate the ſame ſpirituall meate, and drinke the ſame ſpirituall drinke in their Sacraments that we doe, 1.Corin.10.2.3. but they did not eate the fleſh of Chriſt, nor drinke his blood, but onely ſpiritually by faith: Ergo, no more doe we.

Bellarmine here anſwereth no otherwiſe then he did before, that the Apoſtle meaneth not, that the Iſraelites did eate the ſame ſpirituall meate that we doe, but the ſame meate among themſelues, both good and bad, Bellarm.lib.1.de Euchar.cap.14.reſponſ.ad loc.12.

Contra. We haue likewiſe ſhewed before, that they did ſpiritually eate and drinke the ſame meate and drinke, that wee doe, namely Chriſt: as the Apoſtle ſaith the rocke, whereof they dranke, was Chriſt, 1.Corin.10.4. See alſo Auguſtines iudgement before of this place, and likewiſe Bernards, Controuerſie 11.queſtion 2.part 2.

Here Bellarmine firſt refuſeth Auguſtines expoſition, ſaying that the Apoſtle doth euidently ſhew, that they did eate the ſame meate onely amongſt themſelues, becauſe that all both good and bad did eate the ſame meate; but the good onely amongſt them, did eate the ſame ſpirituall meate with vs,in our aduerſaries iudgement: ſecondly, he ſaith,that Auguſtine did meane, that they did eate the ſame meate in ſignification onely, not in vertue and efficacie: Bellarm. cap. 14. *reſp.ad loc.*12.

Contra. Firſt,it is euident by the Apoſtles words,that he meaneth the ſame ſpiritual meate and drinke both among themſelues,and together with vs: for the rocke (ſaith he) was Chriſt: but Chriſt is our ſpirituall foode,as well as theirs. Secondly, his reaſon, that all both good and bad did eate the ſame meate, doth make againſt his expoſition, as well as ours: for it was the ſame ſpirituall meate whether amongſt themſelues, or the ſame with ours: but the wicked did not eate it, as it was ſpirituall meate. We ſay then,that it was the ſame ſpirituall meate ſacramentally to all both good and bad,though effectuallie onely to the beleeuers: as Chriſt ſaid to all his Apoſtles, Drinke ye all of this, for this is my blood,&c. Matth.26.26. It was ſacramentallie Chriſts blood to them all, amongſt whome Origene thinketh that Iudas was one, and that he receiued the Sacrament with the reſt, *Tract.*35. in Matth. yet it was ſo effectuallie onely to his faithfull Apoſtles. Thirdly, that Auguſtine meaneth,it was the ſame ſpirituall meate with ours,not in ſignification onely, but in vertue alſo and efficacie, it is euident by his owne words,rehearſed in the decrees, *part.*3.*diſt.*2. *c.*81. Aliud illi, aliud nos, ſed ſpecie viſibili, quod tamen idem eſt virtute ſpirituali: They did eate one thing,we another, but in outward ſhew,which is the ſame in ſpirituall vertue.

*Argum.*6. There remained wine ſtill after the conſecration and diſtribution amongſt the Apoſtles: for Chriſt ſaith, He will drinke no more of the fruite of the vine, Matth.26.29. So S. Paul calleth the other element bread after the conſecration, 1.Cor.10.17. We that are many are one bread,becauſe we are partakers of one bread. Likewiſe, cap.11.26. Ergo, there remaineth ſtill bread and wine in the Sacrament. And therefore no bodie of Chriſt: for they cannot be there both together,as they teach.

Bellarmine anſwereth, firſt, that Chriſt ſaying, I will drinke no more, &c. meaneth that wine which was vſed in his legall ſupper,at the eating of the paſchall Lambe, before he inſtituted his laſt ſupper: as Luke maketh manifeſt mention of two cups, which our Sauiour gaue to his diſciples,one before the conſecration,the other after: *cap.*11.*reſp. ad argum.*10.

*Contra.*1. That Chriſt ſpake theſe words after the inſtitution of his laſt ſupper, it appeareth both by S. Matthew and Marke, who both agreeing together report theſe words as ſpoken after. 2. S.Luke indeed chap.22.verſ.17. firſt ſpeaketh of the cup,and afterwards of the diſtribution of the bread,and againe of the cup, verſ.20. But as Auguſtine ſaith, he ſpeaketh in the firſt place by way of anticipation,meaning the ſame cuppe, which was giuen after Supper. Bellarmines anſwere here is,that Auguſtine was deceiued, *cap.*11.*reſp. ad argum.*10. But it further may be ſhewed thus: The Euangeliſtes ſet downe three things concerning the cup: Firſt, that Chriſt gaue thankes. Secondly,that he gaue it to his diſciples. Thirdly,he ſaid, This is my blood of the new Teſtament: Now Matthew and Marke ioyne all theſe three together: Luke doth report them ſunderly: In the firſt place,he ſaith,Chriſt gaue thankes,and ſaid, Take this and deuide it amongſt you; that is,as the other Euangeliſtes ſay, drinke ye all of this: and then in the ſecond rehearſall of the cup,he ſupplieth that which is wanting,namely this clauſe: This cup is the new teſtament in my blood, or my blood of the new teſtament. So then before he ſpake of the Sacrament, both becauſe of the Euchariſticall act,the giuing of thankes,and the words of inſtitution,take,drinke,or deuide.

Bellarmine to the ſecond place anſwereth: firſt, S. Paul calleth it bread after conſecration, becauſe it hath the ſhew,and ſhape of bread: as the braſen ſerpent,was called a ſerpent,and Angels in Scripture are called men,becauſe they ſo appeared: *reſp.ad argum.*13.

Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of ſuch bread as is eaten and broken, 1.Corinth.11.26. As often as ye ſhall eate this bread: and 1.Corinth.10.16. The bread, which we breake: but not the ſhape,but the ſubſtance of bread is eaten and broken. Secondly,the Angels did not appeare onely in the ſhape of men, but had mens bodies indeed, their feete were waſht, they did eate and drinke with Abraham and Lot: the braſen ſerpent was not onely in ſhew, but in ſubſtance and throughout of braſſe: theſe examples helpe you not. Thirdly, the Apoſtle calling it bread after conſecration ſo many times: thrice in the 10. chapter verſe 16.17. and thrice chapter 11. verſe 26,27,28. muſt be taken to ſpeake properlie,and to call the thing as it is.

Secondly,it is called bread,becauſe it was bread before: as Exod.7.12. Aarons rod is ſaid to deuoure the Sorcerers rods, whereas it was then a Serpent, and not a rod; but ſo called, becauſe it was a rod before, Bellarm.ibid.

Contra. Firſt,there is mention made in the text, how Aarons rod was turned into a Serpent; if you can ſhew the like Scripture for the turning of the bread into Chriſts body,you ſhal ſay ſomewhat. Secondly, Aarons rod was turned into a Serpent, and then returned to bee a rod againe:

you likewiſe muſt ſhew that the ſubſtance of bread returneth againe, or elſe this example is not like. Thirdly, Aarons rod was(being turned)a Serpent in ſhew,and not a rod: but in the Euchariſt the ſhew of bread remaineth ſtill by your own confeſſion : herein alſo this example is vnlike.

Thirdly, ſaith he, it is called bread, either after the Hebrue phraſe, which taketh generally bread for meate ; or elſe becauſe it is the true ſubſtantiall bread indeed, as our aduerſaries doe expound it, in the ſixt of Iohn, where Chriſt is called the true bread, Bellarm.ibid.

Contra. Firſt, that the Apoſtle meaneth bread properly, not generally any meate, it thus appeareth, 1.Cor.10.16. the bread which we breake,&c. it is proper to bread to bee broken, and not ſo proper for other meate, which is rather cut and diuided then broken. Againe, there is no other meate vſed in the Communion to betoken Chriſts bodie, but the breaking of bread. Secondly, neither doth the Apoſtle ſpeake here of ſpirituall bread, as Ioh.6. but of materiall bread, as ver.17. we are one bread,&c. becauſe we are partakers of one bread: this bread is not the fleſh of Chriſt, for the congregatiõ, though they make one myſticall bodie, cannot be ſaid to be Chriſts fleſh, as they are ſaid to be one bread, and one bodie : they are Chriſts bodie myſticall, but not his reall and fleſhie bodie. Again, the eating of bread, and drinking of the cup, are both taken alike, 1.Cor.11.26. but the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of a materiall cup, yet by a figure comprehending the wine in the cup: therefore he alſo inſinuateth materiall bread.

*Argum.*7. Luk.24.39. Chriſt ſaith, handle me, and ſee me, a ſpirit hath not fleſh and bones, as yee ſee me haue: but Chriſts bodie in the Sacrament, can neither bee handled nor ſeene : Ergo, it is not there.

Bellarmine anſwereth : The argument followeth very well affirmatiuely, This is ſeene and felt: Ergo, it is a bodie, and ſo our Sauiour reaſoneth : but negatiuely it followeth not, It is not ſeene, nor felt: Ergo, no bodie : for a bodie may be couered with another bodie, and God may blinde the eyes, that they ſhall not ſee, as when Chriſt paſſed in the middeſt amongſt them, that would haue throwne him downe headlong, Luk.4. Bellarm.reſp.ad argum.6.

Contra. Firſt, the argument followeth as well negatiuely, as affirmatiuely, where there is no other impediment: It cannot bee felt or ſeene: Ergo, no bodie ; as in the Sacrament there is no ſuch impediment : neither in the obiect, for there is the ſame thing ſeene and felt, which was before; neither is Chriſts bodie hid vnder another bodie : nor yet is our ſight hindred, or a miſt caſt before our eyes, as he pretendeth there was, when Chriſt eſcaped from the Nazarites (and yet the text ſaith not he paſſed inuiſible, but eſcaped miraculouſly, as at other times:) wherefore there being no impediment, the argument followeth ſtrongly. Secondly, our Sauiour reaſoneth thus: See my hands and feete, for it is I: I am here: Ergo, you may ſee my hands and feete: which were no good reaſon, if Chriſts bodie could bee preſent, and neither hands, nor feete ſeene. Wherefore as the Apoſtles were perſwaded by ſeeing and handling of Chriſt, that his bodie was preſent; ſo vnleſſe we may be ſo perſwaded, we are not bound to beleeue Chriſts bodily preſence.

*Argum.*8. Ioh.6.63. It is the ſpirit that quickeneth, the fleſh profiteth nothing: Ergo, the fleſh of Chriſt is not eaten otherwiſe then ſpiritually in the Sacrament.

Bellarmine and the Rhemiſts likewiſe anſwere, that by fleſh here is not vnderſtood the fleſh of Chriſt, but their fleſhly vnderſtanding of Chriſts words : for the Capernaites thought groſſely, that Chriſt would diuide his fleſh, and giue it amongſt them to bee eaten : and they alſo erred, in taking Chriſts fleſh, for the fleſh of a meere man : wherefore he onely reproueth their carnall vnderſtanding of Chriſt, whereas he ſaith, his words were ſpirit and life, that is ſpiritually to bee vnderſtood ; Bellarm.reſp.ad argum.7.Rhemiſt.in hunc locum.

Secondly, be it graunted, that Chriſt ſpeaketh of his fleſh, that it profiteth not; yet it followeth not, that it is not in the Sacrament : for by the ſame reaſon, there ſhould bee no bread there neither, becauſe of it ſelfe it alſo profiteth not, Bellarm.ibid.

Contra. Firſt, we doe not ſo conclude, the fleſh of Chriſt profiteth not of it ſelfe: Ergo, it is not in the Sacrament : but by warrant of theſe words, wee ſay that Chriſts fleſh is not otherwiſe, but ſpiritually to be eaten, and therefore his carnal preſence is not requiſite at all: for Chriſt ſaith not, that the ſpirit and the fleſh quicken, but that the ſpirit onely quickeneth, which is the ſpirituall eating of his fleſh: for to all other purpoſes the fleſh of Chriſt is profitable, as that it was borne, died, and roſe againe for vs : but as touching any fleſhly eating it profiteth not at all. Secondly, that Chriſt ſpeaketh of his fleſh, it is euident : for Chriſt remoueth the offence, which they tooke at his words, ſaying, verſ.52. How can this man giue vs his fleſh to eate? and therefore he telleth them that his fleſh would not profit them to bee eaten, otherwiſe then ſpiritually. And thus Auguſtine expoundeth it, as he is alleaged in their owne decrees, par.3.diſt.2.c.44. Caro non prodeſt quicquam, ſed quomodo illi intellexerũt,&c. The fleſh profiteth nothing, but as they vnderſtood it : for they ſo vnderſtood fleſh, as it is ſold, and cut out in the ſhambles, &c. Here S. Auguſtine expoundeth this place of the fleſh of Chriſt. But becauſe Bellarmine ſeemeth to take aduantage of theſe words of Auguſtine, as though he ſhould not condemne all carnall eating of Chriſt, but onely in ſuch groſſe manner,as the Capernaites imagined : It followeth in the ſame place, Gratia eius non conſumitur morſibus: His gracious fleſh is not conſumed with biting : that is, is not eaten at all. And againe, *Donec ſeculum finiatur, ſurſum eſt Dominus:*As long as the world endureth,the Lord is aboue: Corpus Domini, in quo reſurrexit vno loco eſſe oportet: The bodie of the Lord, wherein he roſe againe, muſt be but in one place;but the veritie of his bodie is diffuſed euery where. Here S.Auguſtine affirming,that Chriſts bodie is no where now, but in heauen, ſheweth, that it cannot any kinde of way,either viſibly or inuiſibly be eaten in the earth. Thirdly, the Papiſts are the Capernaites of theſe times : for they imagined,that Chriſts fleſh ſhould be eaten with the mouth,whether after a viſible or inuiſible manner,it is not expreſſed;and ſo doe the Papiſts hold. Againe, the Capernaites dreamed of a dead mans fleſh without life : and ſo the Papiſts doe ſeparate Chriſts fleſh from the ſpirituall vertue thereof, affirming that wicked men may eate Chriſts fleſh,and yet receiue no grace or vertue by it. And this impious diſtinction betweene the veritie and vertue of Chriſts fleſh,Innocentius 3.ſeemeth to be the author of: *Decr.Greg.lib.*3.*tit.*41.*c.*6. Diſtinguendum eſt ſubtiliter inter tria,&c. We muſt ſubtilly diſtinguiſh betweene three things in the Sacrament; the viſible forme of the bread and wine ; the veritie which is of the fleſh of Chriſt; the vertue in vnitie and charitie : What doe they now elſe, in diuiding the veritie of Chriſts fleſh from the vertue thereof, but together with the Capernaites, make it a meere humane and dead fleſh without life or vertue ? Fourthly,that this place is to be vnderſtood only of the ſpirituall eating of Chriſt, I haue ſhewed before at large, in the anſwere to the ſecond argument of the Papiſts for the reall preſence,whither I referre the reader.

*Argum.*9.Ioh.12.26.Our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith,*Where I am,there ſhall my miniſters be,*that is,they ſhall be with him in his glorie. But now Chriſt is in glorie: Ergo, his Miniſters and Saints are with him:but they are not in the Euchariſt : Ergo, neither is Chriſt preſent bodily there. Wherefore, they muſt confeſſe that it is either glorious to Chriſt to be in the Sacrament,or inglorious : if it be glorie to him,the Saints muſt be there preſent to ſee and be partakers of his glorie : if it be inglorious,it is the greateſt ſacrilege in the world to depriue Chriſt of his glorie.

Bellarmine at the firſt ſight maketh light of this argument,(which indeede wee our ſelues doe not vrge,as any of our beſt reaſons)yet it doth ſo trouble him, that he knoweth not which way to turne himſelfe ; anſwering by a diſtinction, ſuch as it is:for as Chriſts holy ſoule, while it is in the Euchariſt,doth behold God,ſo is it in glorie : but to be in the Euchariſt vnder the formes of bread and wine,is no glorie to him,and therefore the preſence of his Saints is not neceſſarie there. Secondly,he granteth notwithſtanding,that the Angels are there preſent with Chriſts bodie,attending vpon him : *reſponſ.ad argum.*8.

Contra. Firſt,he hath giuen vs an anſwerleſſe anſwere : for ſtill wee vrge as before, either it is glorious for Chriſt to be in the Euchariſt,or inglorious : he granteth both,that is partly glorious, partly inglorious,that Chriſt being there is in his fathers glorie,and is not : if hee bee any way in glorie, then muſt his Saints bee with him, according to his promiſe,for they are euer with him, 1.Theſſ.4.17.and *they follow the Lambe whither ſoeuer he goeth,*Reuel.14.4. If it be in part not glorious for Chriſt to bee there, they doe more then in part commit blaſphemous ſacrilege againſt Chriſt,to pull him from his glorie in heauen. Secondly,you giue the Angels a good office to attend vpon Chriſt to ſee him diſhonored: If the Sun withdrew his light in the paſſion of Chriſt, & could not endure to ſee the Son of God ſacrificed in his own ſhape;how much leſſe can the angels endure to ſee him offered vp vnder the baſe formes of bread and wine ? The Angels doe ſtill deſire to behold Chriſt in his glorie, 1.Pet.1.12. but to ſee him diſhonoured, and vnclothed of his glorie, they haue no will or deſire at all. This ſillie argument of ours (as he counteth it) doth make this great Rabbin ſpeechleſſe,that he is conſtrained to lay his hand on his mouth.

*Argum.*10. Ioh.16.28.I leaue the world,and goe to the father : Ergo, Chriſt is no more in his humanitie in the world;and ſo conſequently not in the Euchariſt. But here it will be,and is anſwered,that Chriſt hath left the world,in his viſible preſence,but yet inuiſiblie his body may be in the world ſtill.We then further ſay,that therefore Chriſt ſent the holy Ghoſt to comfort the diſciples, and to ſupplie his abſence,and to be in his ſtead : but if Chriſt were bodily preſent ſtill,there needed no ſuch ſupplie.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt,that the comming of the holy Ghoſt did not ſupplie euery preſence of Chriſt, for he ſaith,Ioh.14.18.I will not leaue you comfortleſſe, but I will come vnto you ; but onely the viſible preſence of Chriſt,whom they ſhould no longer ſee, nor heare,as they did : ſo that the comming of the ſpirit doth not take away the inuiſible preſence of his fleſh. Secondly,as the holie Ghoſt did verely deſcend, yet remained in heauen ſtill : ſo Chriſt verely aſcended as hee is man,and yet remaineth ſtill in the Euchariſt, *reſp.ad argum.*9.

Contra. Firſt,the holy Ghoſt ſupplieth not the preſence of Chriſts diuine nature,for ſo Chriſt and his ſpirit are one,and the one cannot be preſent without the other: but it ſupplieth his whole bodilie preſence, as may thus appeare : Firſt, there is mention made, Iohn.14.of two kindes of Chriſts comming againe to the world : the one is by his ſpirit, and ſo he ſaith, Ioh. 14. verſ. 13. I will not leaue you comfortleſſe, but will come againe vnto you. And verſ. 23. If any man loue me, &c. my father and I will come vnto him, &c. Thus Chriſt in ſpirit and power is alwaies preſent, as his father is, and this preſence the ſpirit ſupplieth not. The other comming is in his body, and ſo he ſaith, ver. 3. I will come againe, and receiue you to my ſelfe, that where I am, there may ye be alſo. This is his comming in the end of the world : but in the Euchariſt Chriſt doth not receiue vs to glorie to himſelfe: Ergo, he commeth not there in bodie.

Secondly, Ioh. 16. 7. If I goe not away, the comforter will not come: but the comforter is come: Ergo, Chriſt in bodie is gone, not onely after his viſible but inuiſible manner : for Chriſts bodilie preſence, as it was comfortable, is taken away; and therefore he ſaith he will ſend another comforter, Ioh. 14. 16. but the inuiſible preſence of Chriſts bodie is comfortable: now as he was our comforter in his fleſh, he is abſent : for what neede a ſecond comforter, if the firſt be ſtill preſent? Ergo, in reſpect of his inuiſible bodily preſence he is abſent.

Thirdly, Ioh. 16. 15. He ſhall take of mine and ſhew it vnto you : But if Chriſt himſelfe be preſent, might he not rather take of his owne himſelfe and ſhew vnto vs?

Secondly, Bellarmine in comparing the holy Ghoſt and Chriſts humanitie together, that Chriſts bodie may be in heauen and earth at once, as the holy Ghoſt is, is become an vbiquitarie, bringing in an omnipreſence of Chriſts bodie, and ſo is not farre from the Eutychian hereſie, in confounding Chriſts humane and diuine nature together.

Argum. 11. Our bodies in the reſurrection ſhall be like to Chriſts bodie, Philip. 3. 21. who ſhall chaunge our vile bodie, that it may bee faſhioned or conformed to his glorious bodie : but our bodies in the reſurrection ſhall haue no ſuch propertie or qualitie, to be in many places at once: Ergo, neither now is Chriſts bodie at once in many places.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Chriſts bodie is in many places, it doth not ariſe from any propertie of a glorious bodie, but from Gods infinit power, reſponſ. ad argum. 14. c. 14.

Contra. Firſt, ſo doth the conforming of our bodies to Chriſts glorious bodie ariſe from the power of God : as it followeth in the ſame place, according to his mightie power, whereby he is able to ſubdue all things to himſelfe : wherefore euen the properties of our transfigured bodies ſhall bee wrought by the mightie power of God : and therefore herein is no difference betweene Chriſts glorified bodie and ours. Secondly, our Sauiour prayeth, Iohn. 17. 21. that as he and his father are one, ſo we may be one with him : Like as then Chriſt as he is God, is one with his father; ſo wee in our glorified bodies ſhall be one with Chriſt as he is man. And further he ſaith, verſ. 22. the glorie that thou gaueſt me, I haue giuen them : It followeth then, that all the properties of Chriſts glorified bodie ſhall by his diuine power be communicated to ours : but our bodies ſhall haue no ſuch omnipreſence then, no more hath Chriſts bodie now.

Argum. 12. Chriſt is there onely in bodie, where he is to be ſought: but he is to be ſought only aboue in heauen, Coloſſ. 3. 1. Seeke thoſe things that are aboue, where Chriſt ſitteth at the right hand of God: Ergo, Chriſt is bodily onely in heauen, and not in earth.

Bellarmine anſwereth, to ſeeke Chriſt aboue is not vnderſtood of the place, but of the eleuating and lifting vp of the affection : for otherwiſe Aſtronomers and ſtarre-gazers ſhould be the deuouteſt men, that are alwaies looking vpward : ſo they that ſeeke Chriſt in the Sacrament, may haue their heart aboue, cap. 14. reſponſ. ad argum 15.

Contra. Firſt, neither doe we ſpeake of a ſeeking of Chriſt aboue onely in place without eleuating of affection, as the Apoſtles were rebuked, Act. 1. for gazing after Chriſt into heauen; but of ſuch a ſeeking of Chriſt in the heauenly place, as hath our heart and affection alſo : as it followeth verſ. 2. Set your affection on heauenly things. Secondly, howſoeuer this word, aboue, may otherwhere be referred to the affection, and not to the place; yet it is euident, that the Apoſtle here meaneth, the heauenly place aboue, where Chriſt ſitteth at the right hand of God: but Chriſts bodie in the Euchariſt ſitteth not at the right hand of God (for then you muſt ſay alſo that the formes of bread and wine, vnder the which you ſay Chriſts bodie is, doe ſit there together with Chriſt:) Ergo, Chriſt is not to be ſought aboue in the Euchariſt. Thirdly, verſ. 2. the Apoſtle to things aboue oppoſeth things on the earth, or earthly things : but bread and wine are earthly things : Ergo, for Chriſt to be vnder earthly things, is not to be aboue.

Argum. 13. Chriſt ſaith, Doe this in remembrance of me : but we remember onely things abſent; Chriſt is in the Euchariſt remembred : Ergo, he is abſent.

Bellarmine anſwereth, the Apoſtle ſheweth what it is, to doe it in remembrance of Chriſt, that is, to ſhew the Lords death, till he come, 1. Cor. 11. 26. ſo then the death of Chriſt is remembred, which is in deede abſent and paſt, and not preſent, Bellarm. cap. 11. reſp. ad argum. 9.

Contra. Firſt, if the Euchariſt bee a remembrance of Chriſts death, and ſo conſequently of his ſacrifice, then is it not a ſacrifice ; for it cannot be both the thing it ſelfe, and a memorie of it to : ſo though you ſhould gaine here by the reall preſence, you haue loſt in your ſacrifice. Secondly, Chriſts death cannot be remembred without a memorie alſo of his bodie,for it was his bodie that died: neyther is Chriſts death, himſelfe; but his bodie, that dyed, is himſelfe:wherefore in remembrance of me, muſt be vnderſtood of his bodie, that died, which is therefore abſent, becauſe it is remembred. Thirdly, if the Euchariſt be a ſhewing of the Lords death till he come, and you ſay, hee commeth ſtraight vpon the words of conſecration : then is the Euchariſt eyther not at all , or a very ſhort while, a ſhewing of his death : And thus you confound your ſelues.

Laſtly, we muſt vnderſtand, that this their deuiſed and forged opinion of the reall preſence of Chriſt, is of no antiquitie in the Church : neither was there any queſtion about it for 1000. yeeres after Chriſt, till the time of Berengarius, who liued about Anno 1060. who was ſore troubled, for maintaining the trueth againſt the carnall preſence, and vnder Pope Leo the 9.and Nicholas the 2.was conſtrained twiſe to recant:yet there was no publique law or decree made in the Church concerning tranſubſtantiation , till the Councell of Laterane , which was held vnder Pope Innocent the 3. Anno 1215.

And that this groſſe opinion ſauoureth not a whit of antiquitie , it may appeare by the reſolute iudgement of Auguſtine: Sacramenta ex ſimilitudine ipſarum rerum nomina habent , ſecundum quendam modum ſacramentum corporis Chriſti, corpus Chriſti eſt,&c. The Sacraments, becauſe of ſome likeneſſe, do beare the names of the things themſelues : as the Sacrament of the body of Chriſt is after a certaine manner called his bodie.

Epiſtol.23.

Chriſtus corporis ſui figuram diſcipulis commendauit : Chriſt did commend to his diſciples a figure of his bodie. Quid paras dentem & ventrem? Crede, & manducaſti. Why doeſt thou make ready thy teeth and thy belly ? Beleeue in Chriſt, and thou haſt eaten him.

Comment. in Pſal.3.

Secundum præſentiam maieſtatis ſemper habemus Chriſtum : ſecundum præſentiam carnis rectè dictum eſt diſcipulis, Me ſemper non habebitis: According to the preſence of his Maieſtie we haue Chriſt alwaies : according to his carnall preſence, it was truely ſaid to his diſciples, You cannot haue me alwayes. By theſe and many ſuch places in this ancient father, it is manifeſt , that in thoſe dayes there was no ſuch opinion held of the carnall preſence.

Bernard alſo teſtifieth euidently for this point. Vſquè hodiè eadem caro nobis , ſed ſpiritualiter non carnaliter exhibetur,&c. The ſame fleſh of Chriſt euen to this day is exhibited, but ſpiritually not carnally : we haue the true ſubſtance of his fleſh, but in ſpirit and power : we haue Chriſt, not as the Angels in the preſence of his Maieſtie, as the Apoſtles in the ſight of his humanitie, but as the Church hath Chriſt in faith in the Sacraments.

Againe, Cibus iſte non eſt ventris, ſed mentis : iſte eſt panis Angelorum qui neſcit putreſcere, non vadit in ſeceſſum, ſed tendit in excelſum : This foode is of the minde, not of the bellie , this is the bread of Angels, that putrieth not, it goeth not into the draught, but aſcendeth aloft:Sermon.in cœna Domini.

We haue the teſtimonie alſo of the 7.generall Councel, *Conſtantinop.*as it is alleaged. *Nicen.*2. *action.6.Tom.*3. vpon theſe words of our Sauiour , Hoc eſt corpus meum : This is my bodie ; they thus inferre : Ecce igitur viuificantis illius corporis imaginem totam , panis ſcilicet ſubſtantiam, quam mandauit apponi, ne ſcilicet humana effigie figurata , Idololatreia induceretur : Behold therefore the whole or onely image of that quickening body,the ſubſtance of bread,which he commanded to be ſet before them,leaſt if it had had an humane ſhape,they might haue committed idolatrie to it. They ſay, the ſubſtance of bread, not the forme onely was deliuered the Apoſtles , and , that it was the image and figure onely of Chriſts bodie.

Let vs ſee, what their owne decrees ſay for this matter, *decret.par.*3.*diſt.*2.*c.*44. Non hoc corpus, quod videtis, manducaturi eſtis,&c. You ſhall not eate this bodie, which you ſee , nor drinke that blood, which they ſhall ſhedde vpon the Croſſe,&c. *ibid.c.*49.Dupliciter intelligitur caro Chriſti & ſanguis,vel ſpiritualis illa & diuina,&c. The fleſh and blood of Chriſt is vnderſtood two wayes, eyther his diuine and ſpirituall fleſh, whereof he ſaith, my fleſh is meate indeed,&c. or his fleſh, which was crucified vpon the Croſſe. But Chriſts fleſh ſuppoſed to be in the Euchariſt,is neyther ſpirituall (for a ſpirituall preſence we denie not) and they hold a carnall preſence, which is not ſpirituall : neither is it his fleſh or blood vpon the Croſſe, for that the former Decree denieth to be eaten, or drunke : Ergo, there is no fleſh of Chriſt preſent at all.

Againe, *diſtinct.*4.*c.*131. Nulli eſt ambigendum,&c. It is not to be doubted,but that they which are baptized, are made partakers of the bodie and blood of Chriſt,&c. Againe , Origen ſaith, *tract.*35.in Matth. Potus iſte, quem Deus ſanguinem ſuum fatetur,&c. This drinke, which God calleth his blood, is the word ; ſo then Chriſts blood is in Baptiſme, it is in the word, but yet there is no carnall preſence : Ergo, his bodie and blood may be and are in the Euchariſt , and yet no carnall preſence. And S. Ambroſe ſpeaking of Baptiſme, ſaith, *lib.*1.*de Sacram.c.*2. Si hoc eſt corpus Chriſti, hic et Angeli conſtituti ſunt,&c. If the bodie of Chriſt be here, then the Angels alſo are preſent, for where the body is, there will the Eagles be gathered together: The body of Chriſt is then as well in Baptiſme, as in the Euchariſt, and yet there is no reall preſence.

Ibid.cap.87. Chriſtus ipſe conuiua,et conuiuium;ipſe comedens, et qui comeditur,&c. Chriſt is both a gueſt, and the feaſt; he himſelfe eateth, and is eaten: but Chriſt did not eate his owne fleſh; and yet he did eate, that which his Apoſtles eate: Ergo, his fleſh was not in the Euchariſt. Wherefore we ſay with Origen, tract.35.in Matth. Ipſe eſt panis,et manducat nobiſcum panem: He is the bread, and eateth bread with vs: He did eate bread therefore with his diſciples,and not his owne fleſh, cap.47. Quid paras dentes & ventrem,&c. What doeſt thou prepare thy teeth and thy bellie? beleeue, and thou haſt eaten Chriſt: *Ergo,*Chriſts fleſh is not preſent in the Euchariſt to be eaten with the mouth, and ſo to goe downe into the bellie. Likewiſe cap.76. De hac hoſtia,&c. Of this hoaſt,which is done in remembrance of Chriſt,it is lawful to eate; but of that hoaſt,which Chriſt offered vpon the Croſſe, it is lawfull for none to eate of it ſelfe: but Chriſts fleſh which they ſay is in the Euchariſt, is the ſame, that was offered vpon the Croſſe: Ergo, it is not to be eaten of any. This euidence and witneſſe againſt the reall preſence we haue from their owne decrees: whereunto I will adioyne one other euident place, decret.par.3.diſt.2.c.55. Dicit ſacerdos,&c. The Prieſt or Miniſter ſaith, Make this a reaſonable and acceptable oblation, Quod eſt figura corporis et ſanguinis Domini,&c. which is a figure of the bodie and blood of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. If the oblation then be a figure of Chriſts bodie and blood, it is not the bodie and blood it ſelfe.

We will adioyne the glorious teſtimonie of the holy Martyrs,with ſome of their reaſons.

Biſhop Ridley holy Martyr: That which Chriſt did take, on the which he gaue thankes, the which he brake,he gaue to his diſciples,he called his body: but he tooke bread,gaue thankes ouer the bread,brake bread: *Ergo,*it was very bread which he called his body.

Againe, the carnall preſence of Chriſt deſtroyeth the inſtitution of the Lords Supper, which was commanded to be continued vntill the Lord himſelfe ſhould come: if therefore he be now really preſent in his fleſh, then muſt the Supper ceaſe: for a remembrance is not of a thing preſent,but of a thing paſt and abſent. See more arguments of this worthie Martyr, Fox.pag.1443. and 1387.

Maſter *Bradford:*The Sacrament is no otherwiſe Chriſts body,then Circumciſion was the couenant of God, and as Baptiſme and the water of Baptiſme is regeneration. Here when it was denyed,that no where in the Scriptures it could be ſhewed,that Baptiſme & the Lords Supper were coupled together: The Martyr bringeth forth that place, 1.Cor.12. As we are baptized into one body, ſo are we, potati in vno ſpiritu, we haue drunke of one ſpirit: then was it anſwered, that Paul had no ſuch words: vid.plur.p.1619.col.1.

M.*Bland,*diſputing with one M.Milles a popiſh Prieſt, about the carnall preſence, driueth him to confeſſe, that men were made drunke with the qualities and accidence, not the ſubſtance of wine,and that mice might liue with the accidence of bread,pag.1672

R.Smith, compelleth a popiſh doctor to confeſſe, that the body of Chriſt being eaten in the Sacrament,goeth downe into the belly,and ſo is caſt into the draught: ſaying further,that it was no more a derogation to Chriſt, then to be ſpit vpon: to whom the Martyr anſwereth: if the Iewes being his enemies, did but ſpit in his face, and wee being his friends throw him into the draught, which of vs haue deſerued the greater damnation, Fox.p.1691. Thus it may appeare how groſſe this popiſh opinion is, the patrones whereof are conſtrained to fall into ſo many vnreaſonable abſurdities: for this truth againſt this carnall and groſſe manner of Chriſts preſence, theſe holy Martyrs, with thouſands, yea 10. thouſands more, haue not doubted to giue their liues

Theſe and many other arguments of the Martyrs, both againſt the reall preſence and tranſubſtantiation I had collected together, and digeſted them into ſome order: but committing the copie to a deceitfull meſſengers hand, to cary it to the preſſe, by his negligence it was loſt: and ſo I was put to a ſecond trouble, and others depriued of my ſimple collections: which I had no leaſure to frame anew,the preſſe ſtaying for worke: let this therefore ſerue for a iuſt excuſe (Chriſtian Reader) if thy minde be not fully ſatisfied here in this behalfe. And I pray God forgiue him his fault, that hath put me to this trouble, and hindred the profit of many, and deliuer me heereafter from the hands of ſuch.

AN APPENDIX TO THIS QVESTION, WHETHER it ſtand with the power and will of God, that Chriſts bodie ſhould be carnally preſent in the Sacrament.

The Papiſts.

27.Error. THere are two difficulties or impoſſibilities,which do hinder the real preſence of Chriſts body in the Sacrament: Firſt, it would follow, that a naturall body, ſuch as Chriſts is, might be in two places at once: for they ſay, that it is in heauen, and in the Euchariſt all at once. Secondly, that a naturall body may be in a place, and yet not occupie or fill a place: for if Chriſts body be in the Sacrament, it occupieth no place: the compaſſe of a thinne and round cake is not anſwerable to the proportion of Chriſts body.

Notwithſtanding both theſe difficulties, it is agreeable both to the power and good pleaſure of God, that the body of Chriſt ſhould be included in the Sacrament, Bellarm.

Argum. 1. It is poſſible for the body of Chriſt to be in many places at once; and it alſo ſtandeth with his will: as Act.9.4. Chriſt appeared to Saul, either vpon the earth, or in the ayre next to the earth: for how could he either heare the voyce of Chriſt ſitting in heauen, or ſee the light ſo far off? Ergo, Chriſt was in two places: he appeared to Paul vpon earth, and he was at the ſame time in heauen, from whence he ſhall not moue till the day of iudgement, Bellarm. de ſacram. Euchariſt. lib.3. cap.3. Rhem. Act.9 ſect.1.

Anſw. 1. The text is plaine, that Chriſt ſpake from heauen, from whence the light ſhined, verſ.3. he was neither in the ayre nor vpon the earth. 2. Doe you make queſtion, whether Paul could ſee a light, or heare a voyce from ſo farre; ſeeing that the Sunne, whoſe body is ſo farre diſtant from vs, doth diſperſe his beames ouer the face of the earth, and the voyce of the thunder is heard very farre? Will ye deny Chriſt to haue that power, which we ſee to be in his creatures? 3. And why was it not as poſſible, that Chriſt from heauen ſhould be heard and ſeen of Paul, as he was ſeene of Stephen ſitting on the right hand of God? Act.7.56.

Bellarmine replieth: firſt, that it is certaine, that Paul did ſee Chriſt in the way to Damaſcus, for the text ſaith, that the other which were with him, ſaw no man, Act.9.7. Whereby is inſinuated, that Paul did ſee: and againe Act.22.14. Ananias ſaith to Saule, God hath appointed thee, &c. that thou ſhouldeſt ſee that iuſt one, and heare the voyce of his mouth: and Act.26.16. Chriſt ſaid to Paul, I haue appeared vnto thee for this purpoſe, &c. 1.Cor.9.1. Haue I not ſeene the Lord? and 1.Cor.15.8. Laſt of all, He was ſeene alſo of me: out of theſe places he inferreth, that Paul did ſee Chriſt.

Contra. Firſt, we denie not, but that Paul did ſee Chriſt in his humanitie, which might be as well at other times as now, as Act.22.18. At Ieruſalem he ſaw Chriſt ſpeaking vnto him: and 2.Cor.12. He was taken vp into the third heauen, &c. where no doubt he ſaw Chriſt. Secondly, neither doe wee ſtand vpon it, but that Chriſt alſo was ſeene of Paul, as hee went to Damaſcus, though it doe not appeare out of the text, but the contrarie rather: for Saul at the very firſt ſhining of the light, before he heard any voyce, fell downe to the ground, and was ſtricken blinde, Act.9.4. and verſ.8. the words of the text are, That he ſaw no man: wherefore it may be doubted whether at this time he ſaw Chriſt with the eyes of his fleſh. Thirdly, the authorities alleaged may be eaſilie anſwered: the firſt, Act.9.7. as the men are ſaid to haue ſeene no man, ſo verſ.8. it is ſaid of Saul: the ſecond 22.14. That Paul ſhould ſee that iuſt one, and heare his voyce, may be vnderſtoode of the viſion that followeth, verſ.18. where Chriſt was both ſeene, and heard of Paul: the third Act.26.16. That Chriſt appeared, doth not enforce any ſight of his perſon, as that place doth not, Act.7.2. where in the ſame word God is ſaid to haue appeared to Moſes: the fourth, and fift places proue, that Paul ſaw Chriſt, but not at this time: yet we denie not, but that Paul did and might ſee Chriſt in his iourney, though neither this place, nor the other Scriptures alleaged, doe neceſſarilie conclude it.

Secondly, Bellarmine anſwereth, that Chriſt was ſeene of Paul in the earth, or in the ayre neere to the earth: firſt, becauſe the light of Chriſts bodie was ſo great, that it blinded Paul, which it could not haue done, if Chriſts bodie had been ſo farre off. Secondly, the other men ſaw the light, and heard the voyce, but their eyes and eares could not reach vp to heauen: Thirdly, they heard the voyce, but could not diſtinctly vnderſtand it, as Paul did, therefore Chriſt was neerer to Paul: but if the voyce had been from heauen, they ſhould all haue heard it alike. Fourthly, if Paul had ſeene Chriſt in heauen as Stephen did, he would not haue doubted, who it was, as now ſuddenly ſeeing a man ſtand before him, he asketh, who art thou Lord?

Contra. Firſt it was a light paſſing the brightnes of the ſunne, Act.26.13. If then the ſunne be able to dazle the eyes, how much more this exceeding light that came from Chriſt, though it ſhined from heauen, as the ſunne doth likewiſe? and if ſuch a brightnes came from a cloude, that it gaue light to all the hoſt of Iſrael, how much more this light that came from Chriſt. Secondly, though their eyes and eares could not reach to heauen, yet Chriſt by his power could cauſe the brightnes and ſound to deſcend to them. Thirdly, it was not the neerenes of the place that cauſed Paul to vnderſtand the voyce, and not the reſt, but becauſe it pleaſed Chriſt ſo to diſpoſe their hearing, as Iohn 12.28. There came a voyce, not out of the ayre, but from heauen, which Chriſt heard and vnderſtood, but they that ſtood by perceiued it not, ſome of them ſaying it was a thunder: ſo was it in this place. Fourthly, Stephen confeſſed Chriſt as ſoone as he ſaw him, becauſe hee knew him, and beleeued in him before: but Paul being before a perſecutor of Chriſt, and a ſtranger from the faith, might very well aske this queſtion (who art thou Lord?) though he ſaw him not vpon the earth: and how could he ſee Chriſt before him now, whom he confeſſeth before to haue been blinded with the ſudden ſhining of the light?

Argum.2. The bodie of Chriſt may be where it pleaſeth him, and yet ſhall not neede any naturall place, or occupie any roome: hee is able to bring a Camell through the eye of a needle, Math. 19.26. He alſo came through the doores in to his Apoſtles; roſe out of the ſepulchre thorow the ſtone; was borne, his mothers wombe being ſhut: therefore he may as well, and is no doubt preſent vnder the ſhapes of bread and wine in the Sacrament, Rhem. Matth.26.ſect.11. Bellarm. lib.3. de ſacram. cap.6.

Anſw.1. Chriſt ſheweth in that place, that it is as impoſſible for a rich man, that is high minded, and truſteth in his riches, to enter into heauen, as for a Camell to paſſe through the eye of a needle: but it is poſſible with God to giue rich men humble and lowly mindes, and ſo make them fit for his kingdome, as to make the Camell leſſe, and ſo draw him thorow a needle. It is not proued out of this place, that God can or will draw the huge bodie of a Camell through a needle, remaining ſtill of that bignes: no more then that it is poſſible for God, to bring a proud, rich, arrogant man to heauen, his affections not altered: both theſe are impoſſible to God, not becauſe he cannot in his abſolute power doe them, but becauſe they are contrarie to his will and ordinance: The one is againſt the law of iuſtice, to bring a wicked man to heauen; the other againſt the law of nature.

Bellarmine replieth, that it is not impoſſible with men, for a Camell to goe thorough a needle, if he ceaſe to be a Camell, and be turned into a ſmall threed: ibid.

Contra. Firſt, yet it is impoſſible to men, for they haue no power to extenuate the bignes of a Camels bodie, and ſo to make it paſſe thorough a needle, as God hath: it is poſſible with man to draw a threed thorough a needle, but not to turne a Camell into a threed. Secondly, a rich man truſting in his riches cannot without chaunge of his affections goe to heauen, no more can a Camell goe thorough a needle, his bodie not altered. Therefore as it cannot be ſhewed, that euer a proud rich man entred into heauen; ſo neither, that a Camell at any time went thorough a needle: ſo that this place maketh not for the poſſibilitie of the reall preſence at all.

2. For the other three examples: it is not proued out of Scripture, that the bodie of Chriſt pearced the doores, the graue, ſtone, or his mothers wombe: although the doores were found ſhut after Chriſts entrance, the graue couered, and his mother remained a Virgine ſtill: for all theſe paſſages might giue place for a while to the bodie of Chriſt, and returne againe to their place: as the red Sea was deuided till the Iſraelites paſſed, and afterward the waters came together againe. And concerning the laſt inſtance of the birth of Chriſt, it is certaine out of the Scriptures, that Chriſt opened the wombe of his mother in his birth, Luk.2.23. Hitherto therefore they haue proued nothing.

Bellarmine replieth to the firſt example, that if Chriſts bodie pierced not the doores, but they gaue way vnto him, it had beene no miracle: and againe, Chriſt came vnto the Apoſtles without any noyſe, or mouing of the houſe, or creaking of the doores, and therefore it is like, that they opened not to him, but he went thorough them.

Contra. Firſt, he may ſay as well that it was no miracle, that the iron gate opened of it owne accord to Peter, Act.12.10. how then is he not aſhamed to denie a miracle here? or was it not a miracle, for the redde Sea to deuide it ſelfe, though it came togither againe? Secondly, though the doore gaue place, yet it might be, and was done, without any noyſe, as the priſon doores were opened to Peter, and yet the keeper not awaked, that kept the watch, Act.5.23. Thirdly, S.Hierome thinketh, that the doore gaue place to Chriſts bodie: Quid maius? &c. What is greater? to hang the huge earth vpon nothing, or for the Lord to paſſe by the doores being ſhut, Et creaturam cedere Creatori? And the creature to giue place to the Creator? aduerſ. error. Iohan. Hieroſ. So then it is not neceſſary that Chriſts body ſhould pierce the doore, but that it gaue place vnto his body, eyther by opening, or giuing way.

Secondly, to the ſecond example, if Chriſt in his birth opened the wombe of the Virgine, and made himſelfe a way by the dilatation of the ſame, then it would follow, that Marie brought forth with payne, neither could ſhe afterward be a Virgin; for this is Virginitie, not to haue the wombe opened. Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. Though Bellarmine here very vnſeemely take vpon him to play the midwife, and to diſcouer the ſecrets of birth, which may better be concealed: yet, ſo farre as modeſtie will ſuffer, we will ſend him away with his full anſwere. Firſt, hee that procured to be borne of a Virgine, could alſo open himſelfe a way out of the wombe, without payne to his mother: that as in his conception, there was no touch of carnall pleaſure; ſo neither in his birth, ſenſe of any payne: neither is the payne in the opening of the wombe, but in the place of birth: which he will not denie vnto Chriſt; as it is ſaid, 2.Reg.19.3. The children are come to the birth, and there is no ſtrength to bring forth. Secondly, Virginitie no more conſiſteth in the opening of the wombe, then in the place and pitch of the birth, through the which the holy Child paſſed, which (I thinke) hee will not denie: and virginitie may be loſt, where the wombe is not opened, as in the barren, that are polluted, and ſo bring not forth. And againe, the Scripture thus deſcribeth Virginitie, and Virgins; which haue not knowne man, Gen. 19. 8. and ſo ſaith Marie of her ſelfe, Luk. 1. 34. I know not man: ſo herein conſiſted her virginitie, that ſhe conceiued without the companie of man. Thirdly, yet he hath not anſwered the Scripture, which teſtifieth, that Chriſt opened the wombe, Luk. 2. 23. according to the law, Euery man child, that firſt openeth the wombe, ſhall be called holy to the Lord: Quod ad ſpecialem natiuitatem ſaluatoris, &c. Which Hierome thinketh is more properly applied to the ſpeciall natiuitie of Chriſt, then of any other: dialog. 2. aduerſ. Pelag. and he doubteth not to ſay, Deum per genitalia virginis natum: That Chriſt was borne by the ordinarie places of birth. I will adde alſo out of the Synod, Telenſ. Quid incredibile, &c. Why ſhould it be incredible, that againſt the naturall vſe Marie brought forth, and yet remained a virgine, when againſt the vſe of nature, the Sea ſaw that and fled? Like then as the Sea parted and cloſed againe, ſo was it in the birth of Chriſt. Laſtly, Durandus a Papiſt thinketh alſo, that the wombe of the virgine was dilated for the paſſage of Chriſt. in 4. diſtinct. 44. qu. 6.

Thirdly, concerning the third example, whereas we anſwere, that the graue-ſtone might giue place to the bodie of Chriſt riſing againe, and returne to his place againe: Bellarmine replieth, that this is our owne coniecture without any authoritie.

Contra. Firſt, it is rather their bare coniecture, that Chriſts body went through the ſtone, contrarie to the propertie of a naturall body: We thinke, that Chriſt had as great power to cauſe the ſtone to giue way, and come againe to his place, as the Angell had to make the priſon doores open to Peter, and to ſhut againe, Act. 5. 19. 23. Secondly, wee haue a warrant from your owne decrees; Iacuit in ſepulchro, et reuoluto lapide monumenti, &c. He lay in the graue, and the ſtone being remoued, his fleſh roſe againe the third day, decret Gay. This decree ſaith, that the ſtone remoued at the riſing of Chriſt.

Argum. 3. Bellarmine produceth a fourth example of the aſcenſion of Chriſt, who in his body pierced the heauens, Heb. 4. 14. But the heauens are a ſolide ſubſtance, euen as molten glaſſe: Iob. 37. 18. Therefore it followeth hereupon, that many bodies may be in one place at once: And whereas it is anſwered, (ſaith he) that the heauens might open and giue way to Chriſts bodie, as at the Baptiſme of Chriſt the heauens are ſaid to open, this is to be vnderſtood, becauſe the heauens appeared to open: for the holy Ghoſt could come downe without the opening of the heauens at the baptizing of Chriſt. And whereas Stephen ſaith, he ſaw the heauens open, Act. 7. 56. the heauens themſelues were not deuided, for they being a cleere and tranſparent ſubſtance, S. Stephen might haue ſeene Chriſt, without their opening, but Stephens eyes were opened to ſee that, which appeared not before: cap. 6. loc. 5.

Contra. Firſt, whereas your Latine text readeth, Heb. 4. 14. Penetrauit, he pierced the heauens, the originall is διεληλυθότα, he deuided or diſſolued the heauens; and the Rhemiſts tranſlate, hee entred the heauens: ſo that this place proueth, not a going thorough the heauens, without a way made, or giuing of place. Secondly, the heauens are indeed a ſolide ſubſtance; ſo is the water, and the bodie of the ayre, which are apt to giue place to groſſer bodies, and to come together againe: and ſo do the heauens: for how els could the Planets haue their diuers and contrary courſes, diuers among themſelues, and contrary to the fixed ſtarres, if the heauens were not a pliable, and yeelding bodie: And let him tell vs, how Eliah was taken vp into heauen in his bodie (as they thinke, affirming that hee liueth ſtill in his body in Paradiſe) whether hee alſo pierced the ſubſtance of the heauens? Thirdly, the heauens are likened to glaſſe, not in ſubſtance, but for their brightneſſe and cleereneſſe, as Reuelat. 4. 6. we read of a Sea of glaſſe. Fourthly, the holy Ghoſt being a ſpirit, can deſcend without any way made, but ſeeing at that time the ſpirit deſcended in the viſible and true ſhape of a doue, the heauens alſo viſibly and truely were opened: And we are rather to credite Stephens words, then his vaine conceits, who ſaith, That not his eyes, (though wee denie not, but his ſight alſo was quickened) but the heauens were opened: and if Chriſt might bee ſeene through the cleereneſſe of the heauens, how is it, that he hath been ſo ſeldome ſeene, and of ſo few, ſince his aſcenſion, the heauens being alike cleare vnto all? Laſtly, that the heauens opened at Chriſts aſcenſion, it is euident by that propheſie, Pſalm. 24. 7. Lift vp your heads, ye gates, and be ye lift vp yee euerlaſting doores, and the King of glorie ſhall come in, which the Fathers applie vnto Chriſts aſcenſion, and when as the Saints ſhal meete Chriſt in the cloudes, and be taken vp in the ayre, as S. Paul ſaith, 1. Theſſ. 4. 17. it cannot be otherwiſe deemed, but that the cloudes and the ayre ſhall make way for their bodies; and after the ſame manner the heauens alſo, like as they did at the aſcenſion of Chriſt: Thus Bellarmine hath ſaid much but proued nothing.

The Proteſtants.

OVr aduerſaries doe falſely charge vs to ſay, that God can doe more then hee hath done, or will doe, Rhemiſt. Matth. 26. ſect. 11. This we ſay, that Chriſt is almightie, and yet can doe nothing againſt his owne will, his word, or glorie: as to diſhonour his glorious bodie, and to bring it within the compaſſe of a piece of bread, that it may bee deuoured of cats, dogs, rats, myce, or which is worſe,to be eaten of wicked men,the members of the diuell: although the queſtion bee not ſo much betweene vs,what Chriſt is able to doe of his abſolute power, but what he will doe according to his word.

*Argum.*1. It ſtandeth neither with the power or will of God, to doe contrarie to his word: For it is impoſſible that God ſhould lie,Hebr.6.verſ.18.And this thing,not to lie,is not a want of power,but a ſigne of greater power in God. But it is plainly declared in Scripture, that Chriſt hath a true naturall bodie,and is in all things like vnto vs,Hebr.2.17. Therefore neither can his bodie,being a true humane bodie,as ours are,be in many places at once: neither can it chuſe but occupie that roome and place where it is. The Angell ſaid, *He is riſen,he is not here,*Matth.28.6. but it had been no good argument, to ſay, he is riſen and gone to another place, and therefore he is not here,if ſo be the bodie of Chriſt might be in many places at once. The Scripture then hath defined it,that Chriſts bodie is in one certaine place : wherefore to ſay,that Chriſt hath a true naturall bodie,and yet retaineth not the naturall properties of a body,is to ſpeake contradictories, that he hath,and hath not a true naturall bodie : and this were to make God a lier.

Bellarmine to the place of Scripture,Matth.28.thus anſwereth : The Angell reaſoneth according to the minde of the women, that ſought Chriſt in the graue, as dead : and ſo the argument followeth well, he is not dead in the graue, for hee is riſen. Secondly, morally the argument is good,becauſe he that riſeth from the dead,doth not remaine in the graue;for the graue is the place of the dead,not of the liuing : but ſimply and abſolutely it doth not follow; for Chriſt might bee there,though he were riſen,*Bellarm.cap.4.reſp.ad argum.*1.

Contra. Firſt,the Angels reaſon muſt indeede bee referred to the purpoſe and diſpoſition of the women who came to ſeeke Chriſt : they enquired not,in what ſtate Chriſt was,whether liuing,or dead ; but where Chriſt was,as the Angell ſaith,verſ.5.I know that ye ſeeke Ieſus : and therefore the Angell ſatisfieth them,according to their doubt, that he was not there, becauſe he was riſen: he ſaith not,*he is not dead, becauſe he is riſen,*though that be a good conſequent alſo,but,he is not here. And that this was Maries thought, to know what was become of Chriſts bodie, it appeareth by this, that after the Angell had ſaid thus vnto her,as Matthew reporteth, ſhe asked Chriſt againe (ſuppoſing he had been the gardener) where he had laid him,Ioh.20.15. Secondly, the Angell vſeth two arguments : the one, when he ſaith, Why ſeeke ye the liuing among the dead? as S. Luke remembreth,chap.24.5.This argument concludeth morally,as Bellarmine pretendeth, *he is liuing,*therefore not among the dead. The other argument in theſe words, he is not here, for he is riſen, concludeth ſimply and abſolutely : and the reaſon ſtandeth thus,He that is riſen,and ſo gone to another place, is no longer here, where hee was:but Chriſt is ſo riſen : Ergo. Bellarmine moſt impudently denieth the propoſition, ſaying, that Chriſt might bee elſewhere,and there to,and ſo maketh the Angell a lier.

*Argum.*2. It is proper onely to the diuine nature to be euery where, as Ierem.23.24. *I fill heauen and earth,*ſaith the Lord : but Chriſts bodie is not of the diuine nature:*Ergo,*it cannot be euery where.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that there is great difference betweene the Godhead and the bodie of Chriſt: firſt, the Godhead is euery where in fact, but Chriſts bodie is not euery where, neither euer ſhall;it is in many places at once,not in all. Secondly,the Deitie cannot be reſtrained to one place,but the bodie of Chriſt may bee, as after the end of the world he ſhall be but in one place, *lib.*3.*c.*4.*ad argum.*2.

Contra. Firſt,that Chriſts bodie is neither actually euery where,neither ſhall euer be,it is nothing to the queſtion in hand : it is ſufficient to our purpoſe, that Chriſts bodie may bee euery where : for it may as well be in all places,as in many places,and this I thinke they will not denie: Then it will follow, that Chriſts bodie may be God : for to be euery where is proper onely to the Deitie,and if Chriſts bodie may be euery where,it may be the Deitie: for no propertie of God the creator,either is in act,or can be communicated to a creature. Secondly, Chriſts bodie now in their iudgement,as long as the world ſtandeth,cannot be tied or reſtrained to one place,no more then the Godhead ; therefore now (whatſoeuer ſhall bee afterward) there is no difference betweene the bodie of Chriſt and the Godhead: and it is very abſurd,to limit Chriſts bodie after the reſurrection to one place,more then now,ſeeing his bodie ſhall not then be of leſſe power or glorie, then it is. Thirdly, that Bellarmine maketh no difference betweene the omnipreſence of the Godhead,and Chriſts bodie,his owne words elſewhere doe teſtifie : Sicut ſpiritus ſanctus verè deſcendit,& tamen in cœlo manſit,ita Chriſtus &c. As the holie ſpirit did truly deſcend, and yet remained in heauen ; ſo Chriſt did truly aſcend, and yet remaineth with vs, not onely as God, but as Clement.lib.3 tit.16.c.4. man,*lib.*1.*de Sacram.Euch.c.*14.*reſp.ad loc.*9. So Clemens 5. moſt groſly expoundeth thoſe words of our Sauiour,*I am with you alwaies to the end of the world,*of his corporall preſence : whereas it is as well peculiar to the Godhead to be alwaies preſent,and neere,not a farre off, Ierem.23.23. as in all places.

Auguſtine ſaith of Chriſt: Secundum corporalem præſentiam, ſimul in ſole, luna, cruce, eſſe non poteſt: Chriſt according to his corporall preſence, cannot bee in the Sunne, the Moone, and vpon the Croſſe, all at one time. Contra Fauſt. lib.20.cap.11.

And concerning the other point hee writeth thus: Spatia locorum tolle corporibus, & nuſquam erunt, & quia nuſquam erunt, nec erunt: Take away ſpace of place from bodies, and they ſhall be no where, and if they be in no place, then are they not at all. Epiſtol.57

*Argum.*3. The reall and carnall preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament, is a thing ſuperfluous, needles, and vnprofitable: Firſt, Chriſt ſaith to his Apoſtles, Ioh.16.7. It is expedient for you, that I goe away: therefore Chriſts corporall preſence is not profitable: and if his viſible preſence were not profitable to his Apoſtles, whom they both heard and ſaw, much leſſe his inuiſible preſence in the Sacrament. Secondly, the fauour of God in the remiſſion of ſinnes through Chriſt, is as well ſealed vnto vs in Baptiſme, as in the Lords Supper; what neede then the carnall preſence in the one more, then in the other? Thirdly, that Chriſt is in bodie preſent in the Sacrament, it is not perceiued by any ſenſe: for they neither taſte him, ſee him, nor feele him; it muſt be then a worke of faith: but by faith Chriſt is as well apprehended being abſent, as being ſuppoſed in this manner to be preſent: Ergo, this kinde of preſence is needles.

Bellarmine anſwereth to the firſt reaſon: that therefore it was expedient, that Chriſt ſhould go away, becauſe his viſible preſence did worke in his Apoſtles an humane loue: but the inuiſible preſence of his fleſh in the Euchariſt worketh not an humane, but a ſpirituall loue, and therefore is euery way profitable, *cap.*9.

Contra. Firſt, the viſible preſence of Chriſt after the reſurrection, did not worke an humane or carnall loue in the Apoſtles, but thereby their faith and beliefe was ſtrengthened: as Thomas by ſeeing and feeling him beleeued, and ſaid, my Lord and my God, Ioh.20.28. Secondly, though the Apoſtles were ſomewhat addicted vnto Chriſts bodily preſence, it was not for any carnall affection vnto him, but for that loue they had to his doctrine, and becauſe of the comfort they receiued by him: but his bodily preſence in the Euchariſt, is neither profitable for doctrine nor comfort; and therefore leſſe fruitfull, than his viſible preſence was. Thirdly, the reaſon then of Chriſts bodily departure, was to ſend another comforter, who needed not to come, as long as he was preſent perſonally to comfort them: and if the firſt comforter bee preſent ſtill in bodie, the ſecond is ſuperfluous: if the ſecond be not ſuperfluous, the firſt is, and therefore the bodily preſence is not neceſſarie. Fourthly, Chriſt promiſeth, that after his departure hee would come againe, and wee ſhould ſee him, Ioh.16.16. After a little while, and yee ſhall ſee me, and he would ſee vs, verſ.22. I will ſee you againe. Chriſt then as he ſeeth vs, ſo is he ſeene: if he be in the Euchariſt, he ſeeth vs with his bodily eyes, then ſhould he be ſo ſeene of vs: but wee ſee him not, therefore he is not there to bee ſeene: for if he were preſent, he would both ſee vs, and bee ſeene of vs, according to his promiſe. Wherefore he doth no otherwiſe ſee vs and viſite vs, then by his ſpirit, in the Euchariſt; and ſo doe we ſee him.

To the ſecond he anſwereth: that there is not the ſame reaſon of Baptiſme, and the Euchariſt: Firſt, the Euchariſt is not onely a Sacrament of our ſpirituall refection and nouriſhing, as Baptiſme is of our regeneration, but it is alſo a memorial and a compendium of Chriſts life, death, and reſurrection. Secondly, it is a teſtimonie and pledge of Chriſts loue toward vs. Thirdly, it is as it were the ſeede of the reſurrection of our bodies, by the coniunction of Chriſts glorious bodie with our mortall bodies. Fourthly, it is the ſacrifice of Chriſtians, which cannot be offered in bread alone, for then it ſhould not exceede the ſacrifices of the Law: for bread of it ſelfe is inferiour to the fleſh of calues and rammes, &c. Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. Firſt, Baptiſme alſo is a memoriall, and as the Apoſtle calleth it, a ſimilitude, and repreſentation of the death and reſurrection of Chriſt, Rom.6.5. Secondly, it is alſo as well as the Euchariſt a pledge of Chriſts loue, repreſenting vnto vs the ſhedding of his blood, and his dying for vs, wherein Chriſts loue appeared, Rom.5.8. Wherefore in neither of theſe reſpects is the reall preſence more neceſſarie in the Euchariſt, than in Baptiſme. Thirdly, it is more proper to Baptiſme to ſeale vnto vs the hope of our reſurrection, as S. Paul ſaith, that by Baptiſme wee are graft into the ſimilitude of Chriſts reſurrection, Rom.6.5. Neither is there any ſuch coniunction of Chriſts bodie to our bodies in the Euchariſt, ſeeing they themſelues affirme, that Chriſts bodie remaineth no longer, then the outward ſhape of bread is vncorrupted: but if it were the ſeede of our reſurrection, it ſhould remaine, as S. Iohn ſaith, 1. Epiſt. chap.3.9. their ſeede remaineth in them. And againe, the wicked alſo doe eate Chriſts bodie in the Sacrament, ſo that by this reaſon, they alſo are partakers of Chriſts reſurrection. Fourthly, the Euchariſt is no other ſacrifice, than of praiſe and thankſgiuing, Hebr.13.15. whereof it is named the Euchariſt: and yet the ſacramentall bread, in reſpect of the liuely repreſentation is more excellent, than the fleſhie ſacrifices of the Law: and this being graunted, ſheweth no difference betweene Baptiſme and the Euchariſt, but onely betweene the ſacrifices of the Law, and the Sacraments of the Goſpell.

To the third reaſon hee anſwereth, that although Chriſts bodie in the Euchariſt bee not immediatly perceiued by any ſenſe,but onely by faith;yet mediatly,& in aliena ſpecie,and in another ſhape,is touched by the hands,tongue,eyes,&c.as Phiſitions miniſter medicines in ſuch ſort qualified,as they are not perceiued,and yet are very profitable.

Contra. Firſt,if the carnall preſence in the Euchariſt bee an apprehenſion of faith, then it can not any way be diſcerned by the ſight,or any other ſenſe : for faith is the euidence of things which are not ſeene, as it is defined by the Apoſtle,Heb.11.1. And, we walke by faith,and not by ſight,2.Corinth.5.7.which were no good diſiunction, if the ſame thing at the ſame inſtant could be comprehended both by faith,and ſight. Secondly,he ſaith, that Chriſt is both touched and ſeene,in another ſhape,that is,vnder the formes of bread and wine: this is to ſpeake contraries: for if it be another ſhape,that is ſeene to the eyes,another taſte,that is in the mouth ; then is it not Chriſts bodie that is ſeene or taſted : but that thing muſt bee both ſeene and taſted,whoſe qualities are offered to the ſenſes. Thirdly,the example brought in is nothing like : firſt, medicines are ſomewhat allaied by other mixtures,yet ſome taſte remaineth;but of Chriſts bodie there is no ſenſe at al.Secondly,Potions,though by arte tempered and compounded,yet appeare to the ſenſe in their own colour and ſhape ; but ſo doth not (as they ſay) Chriſts bodie. Thirdly, the medicine remaineth in the ſtomacke,till by the heate thereof it be diſperſed,and ſo worketh in the bodie ; but if it be immediatly caſt vp againe it worketh not : but Chriſts bodie in the firſt alteration in the ſtomacke departeth (as they ſay) and therefore it corporally profiteth not, as a medicinall Potion doth.

Argum.4. It is an inglorious, vnworthie and vnſeemely thing, that the glorious and impaſſible bodie of Chriſt ſhould be incloſed in the formes of bread and wine, deuoured and chawed, eaten and gnawen of myce,ſubiect to mould and rottennes,to be ſpilt vpon the ground,burnt in the fire : for all theſe inconueniences muſt needes follow vpon the carnall preſence.

Bellarm. It is no more inglorious or impoſſible for theſe things now to happen to the bodie of Chriſt,then it was for him to be caried in his mothers wombe,to bee ſwathed in ſwadling bands, and to be ſubiect to iniuries which were done to his bodie vpon earth,lib.3.cap.10.

Anſ. Firſt,as though there bee the like reaſon of the paſſible bodie of Chriſt,while hee liued in the world,which was buffeted, whipped, pierced with nayles, crucified ; and of his glorious and impaſſible bodie now,that it may in like manner bee rent and diuided. Secondly,neither was it poſſible that Chriſts paſſible bodie ſhould bee ſubiect to the like infirmities,as to rottennes,corruption,conſumption in the fire, as his bodie is now in the Sacrament. If it were then verified in Chriſt,Thou ſhalt not ſuffer thy holy one to ſee corruption: for his bodie did not putrifie or corrupt in the graue : much more is it true in the glorious bodie of Chriſt,that it cannot ſuffer any ſuch things: How then are you not aſhamed to affirme, that the bread and wine are made in the Sacrament,the very bodie and blood of Chriſt ; ſeeing thoſe elements, if they bee kept long, will waxe ſower and mouldie,and fall to corruption ? which things once to thinke of the glorious bodie of Chriſt, were great impietie. Leaue off for ſhame then theſe your groſſe opinions, ſo much derogatorie to the glorie and honour of Chriſt.

Bellarmine anſwereth againe : firſt, that they are the accidents of bread and wine, that are corrupted,and doe putrifie, and are eaten and chawed, &c. and not the bodie of Chriſt. Secondly, as the diuinitie is preſent euery where, and yet is not burned in the flame, nor yet putrifieth in things that doe putrifie : ſo likewiſe the bodie of Chriſt,lib.3.c.10,reſponſ.1.

Contra. Firſt,it is moſt abſurd to ſay,that accidents of wine make men drunke, that accidents of bread doe feede myce, that the accidents waxe ſower, and mouldie : for one accident cannot be the ſubiect of another. Secondly, in comparing Chriſts Deitie and bodie together, what doth he elſe but with the Eutychians confound them,or with the Vbiquitaries deſtroy Chriſts humanitie ?

We haue the glorious teſtimonie of the Martyrs : Maſter Philpot holy Martyr ; The Scripture ſaith,that Chriſt is like to vs in all things, ſinne onely excepted : but our humane nature cannot receiue any thing that is contrarie to it ſelfe,as to bee bodily preſent,and abſent,to bee in heauen and earth at the ſame time : Ergo,neither can the bodie of Chriſt without deſtruction of his humane nature.

Fox.p.1416.

Maſter Denly Martyr alleageth theſe places of Scripture : Hebr.9.Chriſt is not entred into holie places made with hands,but is entred into heauen,&c. Ioh.17. Now I am not in the world, and they are in the world,&c. Ioh.16.I went out from the father and came into the world. Againe, I leaue the world, and goe to the father : Ergo, Chriſt is not according to his bodily preſence now in the worlde: Fox.pag.1685.

I will hereunto adioyne ſome teſtimonie from themſelues : Decr.par.3.diſt.2.cap.44.Donec ſeculum finiatur, ſurſum eſt Dominus,&c.Till the world be ended, the Lord is aboue,&c.for the body of our Lord, wherein he roſe againe, muſt bee in one place. Againe, their Maſter ſaith,Diuinam naturam ſolam illocalem: That the diuine nature onely is illocable. But now they make Chriſts humanitie illocable: for if it be in the Euchariſt, it is not there as in a ſpacious place: for what is the compaſſe of a thin wafer-cake to receiue the proportion of a mans bodie? Againe, he ſaith, Quod circumſcriptibile erat,&c. That which was in Chriſt circumſcriptible, ſo remaineth: but if Chriſts bodie be in the bread, it is incircumſcriptible, whereas it was circumſcriptible before. For that we call circumſcriptible, when the place and the thing placed, doe anſwere, and are correſpondent each to other in ſpace and proportion: which is not ſeene in the placing of Chriſts bodie in the compaſſe of a thin cake. Lib.1.diſtinct. 37.o. Lib.4.diſtinct. 10.a.

THE SECOND QVESTION, CONCERNING Tranſubſtantiation.

The Papiſts.

IF any man ſhall ſay, that there remaineth the ſubſtance of bread and wine in the Sacrament, after the words of conſecration; or ſhall denie that the whole ſubſtance of bread is chaunged and conuerted into the bodie of Chriſt, and the whole ſubſtance of wine into the blood of Chriſt, the formes and ſhewes onely of bread and wine remaining, which ſingular and miraculous conuerſion the Church calleth Tranſubſtantiation; let him be accurſed, *Concil. Trident. ſeſſ.*13.*can.*2. *Bellarm.lib.*3.*de Sacram.Euchar.cap.*19. *Rhemiſt. Matth.*17.*ſect.*1. 18. Error.

*Argum.*1. Chriſt transfigured his bodie marueilouſly in the Mount, as wee reade, *Matth.*17. *ſect.*1. Ergo, he is able to exhibite his bodie vnder the formes of bread and wine, Rhemiſt.

Anſ. Firſt, your argument followeth not, Chriſt could giue a glorious forme to his paſſible bodie: Ergo, he can take away the eſſentiall properties of his naturall bodie, and yet keepe a true bodie ſtill. Or thus, Chriſt could glorifie his bodie not yet glorified: Ergo, he can or will diſhonor his glorious impaſſible bodie, by encloſing it vnder the formes of baſe creatures to bee deuoured of dogs and myce: which is honoured and worſhipped of the Angels and Saints in heauen. Secondly, the queſtion is not ſo much of Chriſts power, as of his will: therefore you conclude not aright, Chriſt is able to doe it: Ergo, he will.

*Argum.*2. He that ſeeth water turned into wine by the power of Chriſt, neede not to doubt how he changeth bread into his bodie, *Rhem. Ioh.*2.*ſect.*2.

Anſw. Firſt, when you can bring any warrant out of Scripture for your imagined conuerſion, as we haue for this myracle, we will giue eare vnto you. Secondly, and when it ſhall appeare to the ſenſes, that the bread is changed into fleſh, as the water was knowne to bee turned into wine, by the colour and taſte: wee ſhall then no more doubt of this conuerſion of the bread, than they did of the other of water. Thirdly, if Chriſt could alter and chaunge the ſubſtances of creatures; what reaſon haue you to giue ſuch an omnipotent power to euery Prieſt, with a few words to doe as much as Chriſt himſelfe could when he was preſent? Fourthly, all this proooeth but an abilitie and power in Chriſt, not a will or purpoſe to worke any ſuch change or conuerſion.

*Argum.*3. Bellarmine vrgeth theſe words of our Sauiour, which ſerue them for all purpoſes, this is my bodie: which words (ſaith he) doe ſignifie a ſubſtantiall, not a figuratiue change onely of the bread into Chriſts bodie: for otherwiſe the bread, and the fleſh of Chriſt being things of diuers natures, cannot bee one pronounced, or affirmed of another: for bread is not fleſh, remaining in it owne nature, *Bellarm.lib.*3.*cap.*19.

Anſw. Firſt, as one thing being of a diuers nature, cannot be pronounced of another, vnleſſe there be ſome chaunge: ſo neither can the ſame thing bee affirmed or predicated of it ſelfe, as to ſay, this ſubſtance is my bodie, which is all one in their ſenſe to ſay, this bodie is my bodie.

Secondly, a figuratiue chaunge is ſufficient according to the phraſe of Scripture, though there be no materiall or ſubſtantiall mutation in this propoſition, this is my bodie, that is, this bread ſignifieth my bodie: like as, when Chriſt breathed vpon his Apoſtles, hee ſaid, Receiue yee the holie Ghoſt, calling the very breath the ſpirit, which it ſignified and exhibited onely; ſo the holy Ghoſt deſcending vpon Chriſt in his Baptiſme is called the Doue: ſo then, as the breath of Chriſt is the ſpirit, and the Doue the holie Ghoſt; ſo is the bread Chriſts bodie, that is in figure and ſignification.

Contra. Bellarmine replieth, that the breathing of Chriſt is not called the holie ſpirit, nor yet the Doue is ſaid to bee the holie Ghoſt; but they were onely ſignes and inſtrumentall meanes to conuey the ſpirit.

Anſw. Firſt, that the breathing of Chriſt, and the likenes of the Doue, were not the ſpirit it ſelfe, but onely ſignes thereof, we graunt; and ſo wee ſay the bread is a ſigne and figure of Chriſts bodie in the Euchariſt. Secondly, it is euident by the text, that the Doue, and the breath of Chriſt, are called the holie Ghoſt: as Ioh.1.33. Vpon whom thou ſhalt ſee the ſpirit come downe,&c. that is he, which baptizeth with the holy Ghoſt: but Iohn ſaw onely the Doue to light vpon Chriſt; therefore the doue is called the ſpirit: ſo Iohn 20.22. Chriſt breathed vpon them, and ſayd, receiue yee the holy Ghoſt: that which the Apoſtles receiued, is called the holy Ghoſt; but they receiued ſenſiblie nothing but his breathing; Ergo, his blaſt or breathing is ſaid to be the ſpirit, being a ſigne and repreſentation thereof, as the bread in the Euchariſt is of Chriſts fleſh.

*Argum.*4. Though the ſubſtance of bread and wine be changed; yet the formes remaine ſtill for theſe cauſes. Firſt, becauſe if the formes alſo ſhould be changed, there ſhould be no ſenſible ſigne left, and ſo no Sacrament. Secondly, the faith of the receiuer is the better tried this way: who beleeueth the fleſh of Chriſt to bee preſent, though hee ſee it not. Thirdly, Chriſt would not haue the formes altered, becauſe man abhorred to eate humane fleſh in the proper ſhape, Bellarm. cap.22.

Anſw. Firſt, your firſt reaſon is inſufficient: for neither doe the bare and naked ſignes or accidents of the elements make a Sacrament, but the ſubſtance of them: for betweene the Sacrament and the thing thereby repreſented, there ought to be ſome conueniencie and agreement: namely, as the bodie is nouriſhed by bread and wine, ſo doth the ſoule feede vpon the bodie and blood of Chriſt. But they are not the accidents of bread and wine that nouriſh vs, but the ſubſtance: Ergo, not the accidents, but the ſubſtance is the viſible ſigne. Likewiſe in Baptiſme, it is not the forme or outward accident of water, that is the ſigne, but the ſubſtance of water that waſheth.

2 It is a more liuelie operation of faith, to beleeue in Chriſt abſent in heauen, then preſent in the earth, although hee appeare not to the ſenſes. And Chriſt is indeede properly the obiect of faith, as he is now in heauen: Hope (ſaith the Apoſtle) entreth into that which is within the vaile, whither our forerunner Ieſus is entred for vs, Hebr.6.19. Fayth and hope therefore doe leade vs to things within the vaile, that is, things in heauen, and not vpon the earth.

3 What a ſtrange ſaying is this, that Chriſt giueth his fleſh to be eaten in the Sacrament, yet hideth it vnder the formes of bread and wine, leaſt men ſhould abhorre to eate it? for is it to be thought that Chriſt would commaund any vnſeemely thing, or contrarie to humanitie? How could the Apoſtles commaund the Gentiles to abſtaine from ſtrangled and blood, Act.15. when as, by your doctrine, they did eate dayly in their aſſemblies the raw fleſh and blood of Chriſt? And how is it that Chriſt now forgetteth his owne rule, He that doth the trueth (ſaith he) commeth to the light, that his deedes may be made manifeſt? Iohn 3.21. But Chriſt now flieth the light, and ſhroudeth himſelfe vnder the ſhape of bread and wine, and will not ſhew his fleſh. Theſe therefore are but ſillie cauſes which you haue rendred, why Chriſt would haue the ſubſtance of bread onely changed, and not the accidents.

The Proteſtants.

AS the name of tranſubſtantiation is ſtrange, and newly deuiſed; ſo is the meaning thereof moſt vnreaſonable: that in the Sacrament, the ſubſtance of bread ſhould be conuerted into the bodie of Chriſt, the formes onely remaining: An opinion contrarie to Scripture, reaſon and common ſenſe.

*Argum.*1. As Chriſt ſaid, Matth.26. (poynting to the bread) This is my bodie: ſo he ſaith, Iohn 6.35. I am the bread: but in this place he was not changed into bread: why then in the other place ſhould the bread be turned into his bodie? for the ſpeech is all one.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that there is great difference betweene theſe two ſpeeches, This bread is my bodie, and I am the true bread: for there Chriſt ſpeaketh of materiall bread, in the iudgement of our aduerſaries, but in the other ſentence he vnderſtandeth celeſtiall bread: and therefore Chriſt ſaith not ſimplie, I am bread, but I am the bread of life, or the bread of God, or ſuch like: and this ſpirituall bread Chriſt was in deede; there needed no conuerſion or chaunge for the matter. Bellarm.cap.24.reſp.ad arg.1.

Contra. Firſt, if Chriſt, in ſaying, I am the bread, doe vnderſtand bread ſpirituallie, which we denie not, what reaſon hath he, where Chriſt ſaith, verſ.51. The bread, that I will giue, is my fleſh, to inferre Sacramentall bread? if Chriſt, in ſaying, I, that is, my fleſh is the bread, doe meane ſpirituall bread, when he ſaith, The bread is my fleſh, why is he not alſo ſpirituallie to be taken? Secondly, as Chriſt ſaith ſpirituallie, he is the bread; ſo we alſo ſay, that the bread ſpirituallie is his bodie: therefore as in that ſpeech, there needeth no chaunge, as hee confeſſeth; ſo neither in the other are we forced to admit any alteration or chaunge of ſubſtance. Thirdly, Chriſt ſaith not, I am the bread, ſimplie, but with ſome addition, ſaith Bellarmine: but he ſaith, I am the doore of the ſheepe, Ioh.10.7. without any other adiection, yet was he not conuerted into the doore: no more is the bread chaunged into his bodie.

*Argum.*2. The ſenſe is not deceiued in his proper obiect: but the eye in the Euchariſt ſeeth nothing but bread, the taſt diſcerneth nothing but bread, Ergo there is bread: for if the ſight and feeling might be deceiued; then by the ſame reaſon, the Manichees and Marcionites, who affirmed Chriſt to haue a phantaſticall bodie, might anſwere vs, that though his bodie were both ſeene and felt, yet the ſenſes might be deceiued: And by the ſame reaſon Thomas might haue doubted ſtill, notwithſtanding his ſeeing and feeling of Chriſt: And further, if there be no bread or wine remaining, and yet the accidents of both, as the colour, taſt; then ſhould they be lying ſignes, and ſo they will charge the Sacrament of truth with falſhoode.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, that the ſenſe cannot be deceiued in the accidents which are the true obiect, but in the ſubſtance it may, which is the obiect per accidens; as he telleth vs a tale of a peece of wood conuerted into a ſtone, that had the colour and ſhape of wood ſtill: *reſp. ad argum.*5.

Contra. 1. Though the accidents, not the ſubſtance are obiect to the ſenſe, yet by the accidents the ſubſtance is certainely diſcerned by a neceſſarie conſequence of nature; for otherwiſe there ſhould be no certaintie at all in the ſenſe: but ſeeing euery ſubſtance hath his proper accidents, by the diſcerning of the accidents, the ſubſtance alſo is perceiued.. 2. It is poſſible for the eye ſometime to be deceiued, as in taking things artificiallie carued and painted for the very things themſelues, and as in the example of the wood turned into a ſtone: but for all the ſenſes to be deceiued together, the eye, the feeling, the taſte, it is not poſſible, as it muſt be in the Euchariſt, where all the ſenſes diſcerne bread, and yet (they ſay) there is no bread.

Secondly, ſaith he, the argument from the ſight and feeling to proue Chriſts true bodie, was good, becauſe the ſoliditie of a bodie is the proper obiect of the feeling; but the ſubſtance of the bread and wine is not the proper obiect. Secondly, the Scripture maketh mention, that Chriſt had a true naturall bodie, and therefore the ſight and feeling thereof grounded vpon the teſtimonie of Scripture, were good and ſufficient proofes: Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtles by their handling and ſeeing did not onely diſcerne Chriſt to haue a ſolide bodie, but a bodie of bones and fleſh: for that he ſaith, Handle me and ſee, for a ſpirit hath not fleſh and bones, as you ſee me to haue, Luk.24.39. So then not the ſoliditie onely, but the ſubſtance of Chriſts bodie, as his bones and fleſh, was by their ſenſe diſcerned: but in the Euchariſt we diſcerne neither fleſh nor bones. Secondly, Chriſt would not haue them to beleeue his word onely, that he had a true bodie, but to truſt their owne ſenſe alſo: ſo that the euidence of ſenſe, where there is no diuine teſtimonie, is a ſufficient proofe of things ſenſible. And againe, as the Scripture teſtifieth that Chriſt had a true naturall bodie; ſo alſo it witneſſeth, that after conſecration in the Euchariſt, there remaineth true bread, as S. Paul calleth it bread being now conſecrated thrice together: 1.Cor.11.verſ.26,27,28.

Thirdly, ſaith he, the accidents of bread and wine, though the ſubſtance be gone, are no lying ſignes: for naturallie they doe ſhew bread and wine; but that in the Euchariſt there is a worke aboue nature, that there ſhould be the accidents of bread and wine without their ſubſtance.

*Contra.*1. Yet for all this they are deceiueable ſignes, containing one thing, and ſhewing another; and the matter is not helped, but made the worſe, in laying the blame not vpon nature, but vpon a worke beyond nature, which they make a cloake for deceite. Secondly, thus we ſee they cannot vpholde their fooliſh fanſies, but by deſtroying nature. Thirdly, for this their ſupernaturall worke, ſeeing they haue no Scripture, their words are but winde, and perſwade not: nay the Scripture is againſt them, for Chriſt is ſo farre from deſtroying nature, that he vpholdeth the nature of things by his word: Heb.1.3.

*Argum.*3. The bread in the Euchariſt after the conſecration, is ſubiect to diuers changes and alterations, and ſo likewiſe the wine: for they may be boyled and made hote, they may be infected with poyſon: for it is certaine that Victor the 3. Pope, and Henrie the 7. Emperour, were poyſoned with the Sacrament: the wine may waxe ſowre and turne to vineger: the bread may putrifie and breede wormes: Ergo, the ſubſtance of bread and wine remaine ſtill: for the accidents cannot be ſubiect to ſuch alterations: and to ſay that Chriſts bodie may be thus handled, it were great impietie, Argum. Pet. Martyris.

Bellarmine anſwereth: Materia ſubſtituitur à Deo in ipſo inſtanti, in quo deſinunt eſſe illæ ſpecies: God ſupplieth ſome other matter in the very inſtant, when the formes begin to be changed, cap. 24. *argum.*6.

Anſ. Is not here good geare, thinke you, that if a man ſhould come to poyſon the Sacrament, that is, the bread and wine which are alreadie conſecrate, and made the bodie of Chriſt, God ſhould ſupplie by a myracle ſome other matter for him to worke vpon, and ſo God himſelfe ſhould be acceſſarie vnto that wicked acte? Or if a ſillie mouſe ſhould be ſo bolde as gnaw vpon a conſecrate Hoaſt, that then likewiſe ſome other matter and ſubſtance ſhould for that inſtant be appoynted: and ſo God ſhould make miracles for mice? And why, I pray you, may not the ſubſtance of bread ſtill remaine, as well as another ſubſtance to be put in the ſtead thereof?

Bellarmine anſwereth againe, that there is ſome matter for that inſtant ſupplied, and without a miracle, exigente ordine rerum: the order or courſe of things ſo requiring, like as the ſoule is ſent into the bodie of ordinarie courſe. And concerning the poyſoning of the Hoaſt, he ſaith there may be ſome poyſoned matter mingled with the bread or wine, but that is not conuerted into Chriſts bodie and blood: for nothing can be turned into Chriſts bodie or blood, but the bread and wine onely.

Contra. Firſt, that the bread ſhould be changed into Chriſts bodie, and againe another ſubſtance come inſtead of Chriſts bodie, and yet without a miracle, is very ſtrange: for he may as well ſay, that the turning of water into wine, Iohn 2. was no mircale: neither becauſe it is vſuall in the Euchariſt, it is therefore no miracle; as the rayning of Manna was no leſſe miraculous, falling euerie day, then if it had come but once: And the example of the comming of the ſoule is nothing like, for we haue Gods warrant for that, creſcite, & multiplicamini, increaſe and multiplie, which they haue not for the Euchariſt. Let it alſo be remembred how contrarie he is to himſelfe, for before, reſp. ad argum. 5. he ſaid that tranſubſtantiation was ſupra ordinem natura, aboue the order of nature: here he ſaith it commeth to paſſe, exigente ordine rerum, according to the order of nature.

Secondly, if nothing be tranſubſtantiate into the bodie and blood of Chriſt, but onely bread and wine; what then is become of the water which in the chalice you do vſe to mingle with wine? which Innocent 3. determineth together with the wine to be tranſubſtantiate into Chriſts blood, decr. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 41. c. 6. Againe you ſay, the poyſoned ſubſtance is not turned into Chriſtes bodie, but mixed together with it: Be it ſo, but what a diſhonour is this to Chriſts bodie, that poyſon may be receiued with it, and that it ſhould not haue ſo much vertue, as many medicinall confections and receits, which are taken againſt poyſon: if Paul could ſhake the Viper from his hand without hurt, is there leſſe vertue in Chriſts bodie? or if Vnicornes horne allayeth the malice of poyſon, is Chriſts fleſh leſſe precious or vigorous? Wherefore lay your hand vpon your mouth, and confeſſe your erronious ignorance, if you can finde no better anſwere.

Argum. 4. When Chriſt ſpake theſe words, Hoc eſt corpus meum, the bread was tranſubſtantiate, before, or after, or while the words were ſpoken. Before, they will not ſay, for the elements were not then conſecrate: nor after, for then Chriſts words, This is my bodie, had not been true in that inſtant when they were ſpoken. Neither was the tranſubſtantiation wrought in the while of ſpeaking: for then ſhould it not haue been done all at once, but ſucceſſiuely, and one part after another, as the words were ſpoken one after another. But this is alſo contrarie to the opinion of the Papiſts, that would haue it done altogether.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the conuerſion of the bread is not made till all the words be pronounced: and though there be no change, till the whole ſentence (this is my bodie) be finiſhed, yet it is done by vertue of all the words pronounced before.

Contra. If the tranſubſtantiation be wrought by all the words, then, non fit ſimul, it is not done all at once, as he confeſſeth: for the words are not ſpoken all at once, but one after another. Then I aske, if all the words of conſecration be not of like operation: if they be, why ſhould not the firſt words at the very ſpeaking, be working, as the laſt is? but ſo are they not, for he ſuſpendeth the force of the firſt words, till the laſt ſyllable be pronounced: if all the words then be of like working, then is not the conuerſion wrought at one inſtant, as they generally holde, but in the leyſure of ſpeaking.

Argum. 5. It is againſt the nature and propertie of accidents and externall formes to be without a ſubiect, or ſubſtance, wherein they ſhould reſt: ſuch are the whitenes and roundnes of the bread, the rednes and ſweetnes of wine: if bread be gone, what is become of the roundnes and whitenes, and ſo of the wine? If a man aske what round or white thing is this, or what red and ſweete thing is this, ſhewing the cup: what ſhall be anſwered? we cannot ſay, it is bread or wine: for there is none left. And I am ſure they will not ſay, that the bodie of Chriſt is either round or white, or ſuch like.: and yet ſomewhat there muſt needs be, that muſt take denomination of theſe accidents.

Bellarmine anſwereth, firſt, that although we cannot ſeparate accidents from their ſubiects, yet God can: and in the beginning of the creation, there was an accident without a ſubiect, namely the light, which was made the firſt day, that moued without a ſubiect, vntill the Sunne was made, wherein the light reſted.

Contra. Firſt, we do not diſpute of Gods power, neither how things are in Gods ſight, but how they appeare vnto vs, whether accidents may be offered vnto our ſight, without their ſubiect. Secondly, it is a fond opinion, which he would father vpon Baſile, that the light was without a ſubiect: Firſt, God is ſaid to haue made or created the light; but creation is of ſubſtances, not of accidents. Secondly, God ſaw, that it was good: the light pleaſed God, which he had made: but God delighteth in no imperfect worke, as an accident without a ſubiect is imperfect. Thirdly, S. Ambroſe thinketh, that this light was not afterward incorporated to the Sunne, but remained ſtill a diſtinct light: Aliud eſt lumen diei, aliud lumen Solis, &c. The light of the Sunne is one, the light of the day another: for there is a light, before the Sunne riſe, and likewiſe after he is ſet: Hexamer. lib. 4. c. 3. Fourthly, notwithſtanding, if in the beginning of the creation it had been ſo, yet now all things being diſpoſed and ſetled in a perfect order, it is not to be expected: if accidents then might be without a ſubiect, before things were brought to a perfect ſtate, it followeth not, that it is or can be ſo now.

Secondly, ſaith he, the accidents of the bread and wine, though they haue no ſubſiſtence of themſelues, after the ſubſtance of bread and wine are gone; yet they are in, and do depend of an other ſubſtance, Vt in conſeruante, non vt in ſubiecto: As in and of a preſeruer of them, not as in a ſubiect, argum.7.reſp.ad 4.

Contra. Firſt, if the accidents, as the redneſſe, whiteneſſe, roundneſſe do not conſiſt of themſelues, then they muſt haue their being in another ſubſtance, which is the body of Chriſt, that commeth in the ſtead of bread and wine: if they then haue their being in Chriſts bodie, what are they els but accidents to his bodie, which were a very inglorious thing to Chriſts bodie, which in brightneſſe exceedeth the Sunne, to be ouer-ſhadowed with the accidentes of bread and wine? Secondly, I demaund, whether Chriſtes bodie ſuppoſed to be preſent, haue not the proper accidents of his bodie: if it haue (for otherwiſe a bodie without the proper adiuncts ſhould be vnperfect) then the accidents of bread and wine cannot be there to; for this were to make accidents the ſubiect of accidents, which were improper and vnnaturall: And againe, they beſtow a goodly office vpon Chriſt, who vpholdeth all things, euen the heauens and earth, to be now a preſeruer onely of accidents.

Thirdly, though the ſubſtance of bread and wine remaine not, yet the quantitie remaineth, which taketh denomination of the accidents: as the hoaſt is ſaid to be white, round, little in reſpect of the quantitie, reſponſ.ad argum.6.

Contra. Firſt, the quantitie of a thing is the length, breadth, thickneſſe, which are adiuncts to the ſubſtance, as well as other qualities of whiteneſſe, redneſſe, &c. So then he defendeth one abſurditie by another, to maintaine the being of qualities without their ſubiect, he doth inculcate a quantitie without a ſubſtance, a thing as impoſſible as the other. Secondly, if the quantitie receiue the denomination, you muſt not ſay, the hoaſt is white, round, &c. but the quantitie, as the breadth, length, thickeneſſe, is white, round, &c. So that, when wee aske, what round, or what white? in his opinion the anſwere muſt be this: a round, or white thickneſſe or breadth, &c. which were very abſurd: the fooliſh toyes of this trifling Ieſuite are not worth the while, that is ſpent about them.

Argum.6. You ſay, The very fleſh of Chriſt that did hang vpon the croſſe, is in the Sacrament: but that cannot bee: for that fleſh Chriſt tooke of the Virgin Marie: this ſacramentall fleſh is made of bread: Ergo, it is not the ſame fleſh which was crucified vpon the Croſſe.

Bellarm. The body of Chriſt is made of bread, but not as any matter or materiall cauſe thereof, but as the wine was made of water by our Sauiour Chriſt.

Anſw. And I pray you, how was the wine made of the water? was not the water the very matter which was turned into wine? for one of theſe three changes and mutations it muſt needs haue: firſt, either the water was annihilate and turned to nothing, and ſo the wine was created of nothing, which I am ſure you will not grant. Secondly, or els there was a mixture of wine and water, the one being mingled with the other; which is likewiſe falſe, for it was very good and perfect wine: neither, I thinke, will you eaſily admit, that the body of Chriſt and the bread are mingled together in the Sacrament. Thirdly, there remaineth but the third kind of change, that is, the conuerſion of one ſubſtance into another, as the water was changed into wine: and ſo is the ſubſtance of bread conuerted into the ſubſtance of Chriſts body, if you will haue any change at all: and thus Chriſt hath gotten by your helpe a breaden bodie; another from that, which he tooke of the fleſh of the Virgin.

And thus may our argument be framed: The body, which Chriſt tooke of the Virgine, and which was nayled to the Croſſe, was not made of bread: but this bodie, which is ſuppoſed to be in the Euchariſt, is made of bread: Ergo, it is not that bodie.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that euen the bodie of Chriſt, which was crucified, was made of bread: and the bread was changed and conuerted into it at his laſt Supper, when he ſaid, This is my body: and though there be a conuerſion of the bread, yet there is no production of Chriſts bodie out of the bread, but as the wine was made of water, Iohn 2. ſo is Chriſts bodie of bread. Bellarmin. reſponſ.ad argum.9.

Contra. Firſt, the bodie of Chriſt which was crucified, was made of the fleſh of the Virgin: the bodie in the Euchariſt is made of bread; and therefore they cannot be all one bodie: for it is one thing to be made of fleſh; another thing, of bread. Secondly, where he maketh a difference betweene production, and conuerſion, he vnderſtandeth not himſelfe: for the wine was produced out of the water, and the water was conuerted into the wine; ſo it was both a production and a conuerſion: the difference is this, that conuerſion is of the thing, which is conuerted; production, of that, whereinto it is conuerted: wherefore if Chriſts bodie be made of bread, as Chriſt made wine of water; the bread ſhall be the matter of Chriſts fleſh, as the water was of the wine: for it is ſaid, verſ.9. that the Gouernour of the feaſt taſted the water which was made wine: Ergo, the ſubſtance of the water remained, though changed and conuerted. Thirdly, they muſt grant, that the bread is eyther annihilated, that is, turned to nothing; or elſe conuerted into the ſubſtance of Chriſts fleſh: but the firſt is inſtantly denied by *Bellarm.reſponſ.ad argum.*3. The bread, he ſaith, doth not vaniſh to nothing, and ſo vtterly periſh: therefore it cannot be auoided, but that it paſſeth and is incorporate to the fleſh of Chriſt; and ſo, for all his ſophiſticall pratling, Chriſt is become to haue a breaden bodie.

Let vs now further examine their owne decrees, *decret.par.*3.*diſt.*2.*c.*36. Veniſtis ad aquam, et panis dominicus facti eſtis: Ye came to the water, and were made the Lords bread: The Lords bread is then receiued ſpiritually in Baptiſme, and yet there is no tranſubſtantiation in Baptiſme: and *c.*62. Commendauit nobis, &c. He commended to vs in this Sacrament his bodie and blood, Quod fecit nos ipſos; which bodie he maketh vs, for we are his bodie: we are that bodie of Chriſt, which is commended in the Euchariſt, but we are not tranſubſtantiate into Chriſts bodie: Ergo, there is no tranſubſtantiation: Againe, *cap.*63. Hunc cibum & potum ſocietatem intelligi vult corporis, &c. This bread and drinke is the ſocietie of his bodie which is the Church: the bread then ſignifieth as the naturall bodie of Chriſt, ſo alſo his myſticall bodie; but it is not tranſubſtantiate into his myſticall bodie: Ergo.

Some alſo of the Papiſts themſelues haue denied tranſubſtantiation, as the Maſter of ſentences maketh mention of ſome in his dayes, that affirmed the ſubſtance of bread and wine to remaine, *lib.*4.*diſt.*11.d. and Innocentius 3. reporteth the opinion of ſome, That the water in the chalice tempered with the wine, was not tranſubſtantiate, *decret.Greg.lib.*3.*tit.*41.*c.*6. and Durandus thinketh the matter of the bread and wine to remaine ſtill, in 4.*diſt.*11.*qu.*3.

Let vs ſee the conſent of antiquitie: *Concil.Conſtantin.*7.*ex Nicen.*2.*action.*6.*tom.*3. Vt caro Domini per ſpiritum ſanctum diuinitati eſt vnita, ita panem Euchariſtia imaginem carnis per ſpiritus ſancti aggreſſionem ſanctificatam diuinum ſuum corpus eſſe voluit: As the fleſh of our Lord was vnited by the ſpirit to his diuine nature, ſo the bread of the Euchariſt, the image of his fleſh being ſanctified by the comming of the holy Ghoſt, is become his diuine body. Hence we reaſon thus, as Chriſt is God and man, ſo the Euchariſt is his body, and bread: but his manhood is not conuerted into his diuine nature: Ergo, the bread is not turned into his body.

This was the aſſertion of Iohn Huſſe, for the which he was martyred: *Concil.Conſtant.ſeſſ.*15. Sicut Chriſtus eſt ſimul Deus & homo, ſic hoſtia conſecrata eſt corpus Chriſti in figura & verus panis in natura: As Chriſt is both God and man, ſo the conſecrate hoaſt is the body of Chriſt in figure, and true bread in nature.

B. Ridley holy martyr thus reaſoned againſt tranſubſtantiation: As the bread of the Lords table is Chriſts naturall body, ſo is it his myſticall body: but it is not Chriſts myſtical body by tranſubſtantiation: Ergo.

Againe, the words of Chriſt ſpoken vpon the cup, and vpon the bread, haue like effect and working: but the words ſpoken vpon the cup haue no vertue to tranſubſtantiate, for then they ſhould tranſubſtantiate the cup, or that which is within the cup, into the new Teſtament: for Chriſt ſaid as well, This cup is the new Teſtament in my blood, as he did, This is my body: But this is not done: Ergo, not the other, *vid.plur.p.*1444.

Laſtly, the diuerſitie of opinions, which this groſſe conceit of the carnall preſence of Chriſt hath hatched, do eaſily ſhew and demonſtrate vnto vs, what we are to thinke of this popiſh doctrine.

Some doe hold, that the elements doe ſtill remaine in their owne nature in the Sacrament, and that together with them the body of Chriſt is carnally preſent. Others doe teach, that there remayneth no more bread and wine, but onely the very naturall bodie of Chriſt: of each opinion there are three ſortes: Firſt of them that holde the elements not to be changed.

1 Some are of opinion, that the body of Chriſt and the elements are locally ioyned together, either for that inſtant onely, or els becauſe of the vbiquitie and omnipreſence of Chriſts humanitie: of which opinion are the Lutheranes.

2 Some there were, that thought onely ſo much of the bread to be changed into the body of Chriſt, as was receiued of the faithfull: and that parte which the wicked receiued to be bread ſtill.

3 Others taught, that the bread was aſſumed in the Sacrament to the perſon of Chriſt, euen as his humanity: ſo that Chriſt was bread by conſecration, as he was man by his incarnation: an horrible and monſtrous opinion, which is fathered vpon Rupertus the Abbot.

Iohannes Pariſienſis alſo came neere this opinion, who likewiſe affirmed, that the bread was aſſumed to the perſon of Chriſt, and vnited vnto him, yet not immediately as the other taught, but by the mediation and meanes of the humanity of Chriſt.

Secondly, of thoſe that maintaine the conuerſion of the elements. Firſt,ſome would haue the forme onely of bread chaunged, not the matter,as Durandus. Secondly,ſome contrariwiſe would haue the matter altered,and the forme to remaine. Thirdly, the Ieſuites affirme the bread wholy in ſubſtance, both in matter and forme to be changed, the outward formes and accidents onely remayning, *ex Bellarm.lib.*3.*de ſacram.Euchariſt.cap.*11.

Thus men,when they begin once to leaue the truth,the Lord leaueth them to themſelues, and they run mad in their owne inuentions,not finding any end : and ſo it is iuſtly come vpon them, as S.Paul ſaith of the heathen : *Becauſe when they knew God,they did not glorifie him as God,neither were thankefull: they became vaine in their owne imaginations, and their fooliſh heart was full of darkeneſſe : when they profeſſed themſelues to be wiſe,they became fooles,*Rom.1.21.22.We therefore leauing theſe ſhallowe pittes of humane inuentions, which will hold no water, will betake vs to the fountaine of truth. This then,to conclude, is our definitiue ſentence, and full determination, according to the Scriptures,that Chriſt indeed is verily preſent in the Sacrament, neither by conuerſion of the bread into his body, either wholy, or in part; nor by aſſumption of the bread to the vnity of his perſon; nor yet by the coniunction of his body and bread together : but he doth verily exhibite himſelfe,with all his benefits, ſpiritually by faith, to be eaten and drunke of the worthy receiuer, as we haue ſufficiently proued before out of the Scriptures.

THE THIRD QVESTION, WHETHER THE EVCHARIST being once conſecrated, be a Sacrament, though it be neither eaten nor drunke.

The Papiſts.

19.Error. THe elements in the Sacrament, that is,the bread and wine,being once conſecrate,which they ſay, is done by the prolation of thoſe words, Hoc eſt corpus meum, This is my body, whether they be receiued or not at that inſtant, but be reſerued and kept in boxes, and pixes, and other veſſels of the Church, for dayes, weekes, moneths, to be caried ſolemnly to thoſe that are ſicke, and to be applyed to other vſes, are ſtill the very body and blood of Chriſt, *Trident.Concil.ſeſſ.*13. *can.*4.7.*Bellarm.lib.*4.*cap.*2.

*Argum.*1. Chriſts words which were ſpoken ouer the bread,*This is my bodie,*were true as ſoone as he brought them forth,before he ſaid, Take,eate, and ſo likewiſe of the cup : therefore it was a Sacrament before they did receiue and eate it,and had been a Sacrament ſtill, if it had not been receiued at all at that time, Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, theſe words of Chriſt,this is my bodie, were not ſpoken before he brake the bread and diſtributed it : but firſt,as Saint Matthew ſetteth it downe,he brake the bread and gaue it to his diſciples,ſaying, Take, eate, and then follow thoſe words, this is my bodie, Matth.26.26.which ſeeme to haue beene vttered euen in that inſtant, when they tooke the bread, and began to eate it.

Bellarmine replieth : firſt, ſaith hee, it ſeemeth, that the Euangeliſts did tranſpoſe the wordes of Chriſt,ſetting that firſt,which was ſpoken laſt : and contrariwiſe, as Mark.14.23.he tooke the cup, and when he had giuen thanks,he gaue it to them,and they all dranke of it,and he ſaid vnto them,This is my blood of the new teſtament: Here the words of conſecration (this is my blood) are rehearſed after they dranke,which notwithſtanding were ſpoken before : and ſo theſe words, *this is my bodie,*are placed after,take,eate,&c. and yet were vttered before : for theſe words, this is my bodie, doe containe a reaſon,why he would haue them eate that meate : but the reaſon of the eating muſt firſt bee expreſſed,before the bread be deliuered to be eaten.

Contra. Firſt,where the Euangeliſts doe diſſent in the order and placing of words,it is like that the words are tranſpoſed, as in that place of Marke, who onely of the Euangeliſts placeth theſe words,*this is my blood,*after their drinking : but where all the Euangeliſts keepe the ſame order,as in ſetting theſe words,*this is my bodie,*after,take ye,eate ye ; it is euident,that the words were ſpoken in ſuch order, as is ſet downe; ſeeing that the Apoſtle alſo rehearſing the inſtitution, 1.Cor.11. doth ſo place the words : wherefore it is great boldnes in him to controule the order agreed vpon by all the Euangeliſts,and the Apoſtle. Secondly,whereas S.Marke ſaith,they all dranke of it, and then Chriſt ſaid,*this is my blood,*it maketh altogether for vs,that euen at the ſame inſtant of drinking Chriſt pronounced thoſe words,ſignifying that it was his blood vnto thoſe, that did receiue, and drinke it in faith. Thirdly,the reaſon or the cauſe in order of nature goeth alwaies before the ſigne or the effect,but not in order of time : as the end of a thing precedeth in intention, but not in action : as Exod.12.11.Ye ſhall eate it in haſte,for it is the Lords Paſſe-ouer. Here the Paſſeouer is the reaſon or cauſe, or end of their eating; yet their eating went before : ſo in the Euchariſt, the participation of the Lords bodie is the cauſe,and end of their eating; yet by the ſame reaſon of the Paſſe-ouer,by eating in faith it is made the Lords bodie.

Secondly, the inſtitution of the Sacrament conſiſteth partly of a promiſe,partly of a precept: the promiſe is this,Hoc eſt corpus meum, This is my bodie: The precept, *Accipite, manducate,*Take, eate. Chriſt doth no otherwiſe make good his promiſe,then wee performe the condition: vnleſſe therefore accordingly we doe take and eate it,it is not the bodie of Chriſt.

To this Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, that if theſe wordes, *this is my bodie,*contained a promiſe, it ſhould be pronounced in the future tenſe;as when Chriſt ſaith,Mark.16.he that beleeueth,&c.ſhall be ſaued: ſo Chriſt would haue ſaid,it ſhall be my bodie. Secondly,it would follow hereof,that they ſhould not in their eating receiue Chriſts bodie; for the condition preſcribed goeth before, and then the thing promiſed afterward followeth,Bellar.ibid.

Contra. Firſt,in the Scriptures we finde,that the promiſe is often deliuered in the preſent tenſe, becauſe that which God promiſeth is as certaine, as if it were alreadie performed: as Iohn 5.24. He that beleeueth,hath euerlaſting life: and Exod.12.11.This is the Lords Paſſe-ouer, he ſaith not, *it ſhall be,*but is: wherefore Bellarmines collection is falſe. Secondly,Gods promiſe is oftentimes fulfilled in the very act of our obedience, as whereas God ſaith, Call vpon me, and I will heare thee, he doth heare vs not after we haue prayed,but while we are in prayer; as Iſay.65.24.Before they call, I will anſwere,and while they ſpeake,I will heare: ſo in the very action of eating and receiuing in faith, Chriſts bodie is communicated to vs.

*Argum.*2. S.Luke ſaith, chap.22. This cup is the new teſtament in my blood: the blood of Chriſt was in the cup, before it was in their mouth: Ergo, it is a Sacrament,though it bee not receiued. Saint Paul alſo ſaith, 1.Cor.10.*The bread which we breake,is it not the communion of the body of Chriſt? Ergo,*it is the bodie of Chriſt before it be broken or diſtributed,*Bellarm.cap.*2.

Anſw. Firſt,there is a figure in Chriſts words, for the cup is taken for that, which was contained in the cup: and the other Euangeliſts rehearſe them thus,this is my blood of the new teſtament: wherefore his collection drawne from a figuratiue ſpeech concludeth not. And againe, Chriſt ſaid before,drinke ye all of it, ſo that in the drinking his blood was exhibited. Secondly,the place of Saint Paul is for vs,for he ſpeaketh of a communion, which cannot bee where there is no diſtribution: ſo that the communion of Chriſts bodie is in breaking of the bread, and diſtribution thereof.

The Proteſtants.

THe Euchariſt is no Sacrament beſide or without the vſe thereof; ſo that, though ſome forme of words be pronounced ouer it, if it bee not receiued and eaten and drunke, it is no Sacrament: neither is that which remaineth after the diſtribution,the Euchariſt being ended,either of the bread or wine,any part of the Sacrament,but ſo much onely as is taken and vſed.

*Argum.*1. It is no Sacrament, vnleſſe it bee vſed according to the inſtitution as Chriſt hath commaunded it:but to the inſtitution it belongeth on the behalfe of the Miniſter,to bleſſe,break, 1.Cor.11.24. 26. and diſtribute it: on the behalfe of the Communicants, to take, eate, and drinke it: in them all, thereby to ſhew the Lords death, and to doe it in remembrance of Chriſt. But this cannot bee performed by vſing the words of benediction onely, but by the whole action: for how can they ſhew the Lords death, or doe it in remembrance of Chriſt, vnleſſe they take, and eate? *Ergo,*if it be not ſo vſed,it is no Sacrament.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, that to reſerue the Euchariſt is not contrarie to the inſtitution of Chriſt: for it is reſerued to be eaten,though not preſently: ſo that the deferring of the eating, as to keepe it to be carried vnto the ſicke,may very well agree with the firſt inſtitution,where Chriſt commaundeth it indeede to be eaten,but not preſently.

Contra. Firſt,at the inſtitution of the Lords Supper,they did preſently take and eate,and Saint Marke ſaith,*that they all dranke of it,*Mark.14.23.ſo that,if the preſent eating and drinking be agreeable to the inſtitution,the deferring of it is contrarie.Secondly,your reſerued hoaſt is not alwaies eaten;for ſometime it putrifieth and mouldeth,in which caſe,by their owne Canons it muſt bee committed to the fire: ſo that herein there muſt bee an apparant breach of the inſtitution. Thirdly,the Sacrament neede not to bee kept for the ſicke, for it may much better bee miniſtred vnto the ſicke at home,if there be a ſufficient number well prepared,and the ſicke perſon deſiring it onely to his comfort, not of any ſuperſtitious conceit, in being addicted to the outward element.

Laſtly, S.Origen thus writing, *Hom.*5.in 7.cap.Leuitic. Dominus panem, quem diſcipulis dabat,&c. The Lord did not commaund that bread, which hee gaue to his diſciples, to bee deferred till the morrow,ſheweth, that the preſent eating is moſt agreeable to the inſtitution; as the paſchall Lambe was commanded preſently to be eaten,Exod.12.8.

Bellarmine anſwereth againe,that the Sacrament may be a Sacrament, though it be not vſed to that end, for the which it was inſtituted: for to the inſtitution belongeth both the eſſence of the Sacrament, which is the conſecration, and the vſe, which is the manducation or eating: now if there be the eſſence,though not the vſe,it is a Sacrament:as a chaire made to ſit in,is a chaire ſtill, though no man ſit therein.

Contra. Firſt,it is a moſt impious aſſertion,that the Sacrament may bee a Sacrament, though not vſed to the end it was inſtituted for: doth he thinke then,that the Euchariſt if it bee caſt vnto dogs,or ſwine,remaineth a Sacrament? or ẏ if bels be baptized,it is baptiſme? Secondly,in ſome things,which conſiſt in action, the very vſe is of the eſſence, as in ſpeaking, and ſinging, the very vſe and action is the eſſence of the voyce and ſong: ſo in the Euchariſt, which partly conſiſteth in action,the very vſe is of the eſſence: That like as the paſchall Lambe was not the Paſſe-ouer,vnles it were eaten,Exod.12.11.ſo is not the bread a Sacrament being not receiued.Thirdly,conſecration he granteth to bee the eſſence of the Sacrament; but eating and receiuing belongeth to the conſecration: for the elements are not conſecrated onely by rehearſing of the words of inſtitution,but by the whole action of receiuing,thankſgiuing,&c.as S.Paul ſheweth,1.Cor.10.16.whē hee had ſaid, the cup,which we bleſſe,is the communion,&c. addeth further,the bread,which we breake: the breaking of the bread anſwereth to the bleſſing of the cup: whereupon it followeth, that the bread is in part bleſſed and ſanctified by the breaking and diſtribution thereof. Laſtly,a chaire is a chaire,though it be not ſit in; ſo is the bread,bread ſtill,though it be not eaten in the Sacrament: but it followeth not by this example,that the Sacrament is a Sacrament ſtill, though not vſed; for the Sacrament conſiſteth in action,and is not a permanent thing,as a chaire is.So then, notwithſtanding any thing yet obiected,it appeareth to be contrarie to the inſtitution of Chriſt, to celebrate the Euchariſt without eating and communicating,and indeede it is no Sacrament at all,if this be wanting: as out of S.Paul we reaſon thus;

In the Euchariſt there is alwaies a remembrance of Chriſt, and a ſhewing forth of his death, 1.Corinth.11.24.but in eating and drinking in the Sacrament the Lords death is ſhewed foorth, verſ.26.Ergo,in the ſacramentall eating and drinking conſiſteth the Euchariſt.

*Argum.*2. The Sacraments of the new Teſtament are alike,and of one and the ſelfeſame kind, there is one way of inſtituting and conſecrating both: but the water in Baptiſme is no part of the Sacrament, but during the ſolemne action of baptizing, afterward it returneth to the common vſe,ſo much as is not vſed: Ergo,it is ſo alſo in the Euchariſt: for as Chriſt ſaith to his Apoſtles,Ite baptizate: Goe and baptize: ſo that it was no Sacrament, vnleſſe ſome bodie were baptized: euen ſo hee ſaith, Accipite, manducate: Take, eate. No Sacrament then, vnleſſe it bee receiued and eaten.

And here,I pray you,let it be noted,how well the Ieſuites agree amongſt themſelues: our Rhemiſts doe commend the reſeruing alſo of the water in Baptiſme,and carrying of it home to giue it the diſeaſed to drinke,annot.Iam.5.ſect.5. Bellarmine ſaith,that *Res permanens in baptiſmo:*That the thing permanent in Baptiſme,that is,water which remaineth,is not the Sacrament, but ipſa actio, the action of baptizing it ſelfe, and alloweth onely the Euchariſt to bee reſerued, and remaine a Sacrament,etiam extra vſum,without the vſe thereof,*Bellarm.lib.4.de Euchariſt.cap.*3. But we haue ſhewed alreadie,that both the Sacraments are hallowed and ſanctified alike,and that both in the one and the other,the vſe onely and preſent action according to Chriſts inſtitution, maketh the Sacrament.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that there is great difference betweene Baptiſme and the Euchariſt: for Baptiſme conſiſteth in the action, as of baptizing; but ſo doth not the Euchariſt; for it ſtandeth not in the action of eating,for that is an act onely of the receiuer; but Sacraments are not the acts onely of the receiuers, but of the miniſters alſo: neither in the action of breaking is the Sacrament,for it is no ſigne of any inuiſible grace: nor yet in the act of conſecration, for that helpeth to make the Sacrament: Ergo,it is not the Sacrament,*Bellarm.cap.*3.

Contra. We doe not affirme, that the Euchariſt conſiſteth ſeuerally in any one of theſe actions of eating,breaking,conſecrating,but that all theſe ioyntly together are required to make the Sacramēt: firſt then,as Sacraments are not only the acts of the receiuers,ſo neither are they without them: but as in Baptiſme,there is the act of the Miniſter to baptize,and the act of the receiuer to be baptized; ſo in the Euchariſt,there is the act of the Miniſter to breake and diſtribute, and of the receiuer to take and eate. Secondly, the breaking alſo of the bread hath a ſpirituall ſignification: for thereby is ſignified the breaking and communication of Chriſts bodie ſpiritually vnto vs,1.Cor.10.16. as likewiſe the manner of Chriſts death, whoſe bodie was in a manner broken vpon the croſſe for vs,1.Cor.11.24. Thirdly,we ſay not that conſecration is the very Sacrament, but that it concurreth with other actions to make the Sacrament: and the ſame reaſon which he vrgeth againſt conſecration in the Euchariſt,might be enforced againſt Baptiſme,that the action of baptizing is not the Sacrament it ſelfe,becauſe it helpeth to make the Sacrament. So then as we ſay not,that the very action of waſhing in Baptiſme is the whole Sacrament; for there is beſide the inuiſible grace repreſented by that waſhing, and the words of inſtitution; but yet without that action it is no Baptiſme: ſo though the verie act of eating and drinking be not the Euchariſt; yet it is neceſſarily required, without the which, and other actions it is no Sacrament. There is then betweene Baptiſme and the Euchariſt herein no difference at all.

In Auguſtines time ſome vſed to receiue the Communion daily: but vpon the Sabboth or Lords day, it was commonly receiued of all: Quotidie Euchariſtiæ communionem percipere, nec laudo, nec reprehendo; omnibus tamen dominicis diebus communicandum ſuadeo & hortor: Euery day to receiue the Euchariſt, I neither commend, nor diſpraiſe it; but euery Lords day I doe perſwade men and exhort all to communicate. It ſhould ſeeme then, that in thoſe daies there was no ſuch ſuperſtitious reſeruation of the Sacrament, ſeeing euery day, or at the leaſt euery Sabboth it was adminiſtred.

Let vs heare antiquitie ſpeake: Epiſtol.2.Clement. and it is rehearſed, Decr.par.3.diſtinct.2.c.23. Si remanſerint, in craſtinum non reſeruentur, ſed cum timore & tremore clericorum diligentia conſumantur.i.comedantur: If any part remaine, let it not bee kept till the morrow, but let the Clerkes with feare and trembling eate them. By this we ſee that it was not lawfull to reſerue the Sacrament, no not a day.

Bellarmines euaſion here is this, that Clement is ſo to be vnderſtood, that no part of the Euchariſt ſhould be reſerued, vnleſſe ſome portion for the ſicke: ſo his meaning is, that not much of the Euchariſt ſhould remaine, Bellarm.cap.5.

Contra. It is euident by the words of the decree, that whatſoeuer remained, the Miniſters ſhuld eate, and nothing at all be left till the morrow: Tanta in altaria holocauſta, &c. Let ſo much bee offered vpon the Altar, as may ſuffice the people, &c. but if there remaine, let the Clerks eate them, &c. Firſt, the prouiſion muſt bee made for the people onely, that communicate: but if any part ſhould be reſerued for the ſicke, the prouiſion and offering ought to be made thereafter. Againe, he calleth it holocauſtum, a whole burnt offering, alluding to the rite of that ſacrifice, which was conſumed wholy vpon the Altar. Thirdly, the words are general, the Miniſters muſt eate that which remained; and ſo, if any thing were intended for the ſicke, they muſt eate it likewiſe, if it were a remainder. Laſtly, this decree hath relation to the like rite of the Paſchall Lambe: Non derelinquetur de eo, &c. There ſhall not remaine of it till the morning, Exod.12. that as not one iot of the Paſſe-ouer was to remaine till the next day; ſo neither ſhould any part of the Euchariſt bee reſerued.

The holy Martyrs alſo haue ſealed this truth: Iohn Philpot holy Martyr; I doe not ſay that the receiuing maketh it a Sacrament onely: but I ſay, that a common receiuing muſt needes be concurrent with the true Sacrament, as a neceſſarie member; without the which it cannot be a Sacrament: becauſe Chriſt hath made this a principall part of the Sacrament: Take yee, eate yee: Fox pag.1815.

Richard Woodman: As if the words of Baptiſme be ſayd ouer the water, and there bee no childe there to be baptized, it is no Baptiſme; ſo without eating and receiuing, it is no Sacrament, &c. pag.1992.

THE FOVRTH QVESTION, CONCERNING the elements or materiall part of the Sacrament, namely bread and wine.

The Papiſts.

20.Error. 1. THe bread which is vſed in the Sacrament, ought to bee vnleauened: becauſe it is moſt agreeable to Chriſts inſtitution, who made the Sacrament of vnleauened bread, for he inſtituted his laſt Supper, after he had eaten the Paſſe-ouer: which was to be eaten with ſweete and vnleauened bread, according to the Law; neither was there any leauen to be found in Iſraell for ſeuen daies together: and not onely Chriſt, but all the Iewes at that time did keepe the Paſſe-ouer: and the next day after, in the which Chriſt ſuffered, was the firſt ſolemne feſtiuall day of the ſeuen, being the fifteenth day of the moneth, as it was commaunded, Leuit.23.5. Rhem.1.Cor.11. ſect.10.Bellarm.lib.4.de Euchariſt.cap.7.

Argum.1. That the Iewes kept the Paſſe-ouer at the ſame time, that Chriſt and his Apoſtles did, Bellarmine pretendeth to proue by theſe places of Scripture, Mark.14.12. The firſt day of vnleauened bread, when they ſacrificed the Paſſeouer: Luk.22.7. Then came the day of vnleauened bread, when the Paſſe-ouer muſt be ſacrificed: Ergo, at the ſame time, when Chriſt eate the Paſſe-ouer, it was commonly obſerued of all, Bellarm.cap.8.

Contra. The Euangeliſts thus writing doe reſpect the right time of the Paſſe-ouer, as it was appointed by the Law, and obſerued by Chriſt, not regarding the contrarie corrupt vſe and cuſtome of the Iewes, who to auoide the keeping of two feſtiuals together, did deferre the eating of the Paſſe-ouer till the 15.day at night: but Chriſt, according to the law, did eate it with his diſciples the 14.day at eeuen.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, that this tradition of the Iewes, that the Paſch ſhould not bee kept vpon the 6. day of the weeke, which was now the 15. day of the moneth, becauſe of the concurrence of two feſtiuals, might very well agree with Moſes law: for the account of the daies muſt not be according to the Aſtronomicall computation, but according to the account of the Hebrue Calendar, wherein they might ſo calculate the time of the Paſch, as that it ſhould not fall vpon the 6. day: and ſo they might ſet their Calendar in the beginning of euery yeere, as that the feaſt ſhould miſſe that day; as the Chriſtians now haue a ſpeciall rule for the obſeruation of Eaſter: and this tradition our Sauiour Chriſt was bound alſo to keepe. Secondly, this tradition of the Hebrues was brought in long ſince Chriſts time, Bellarm.cap.7.8.reſp.ad Burgenſ.

Anſ. Firſt, it is blaſphemie to ſay, that Chriſt was bound to keep yͤ traditions, whereby they made the word of God of no authoritie, Mark. 7. 13. as this tradition in altering the Paſch from the 15. day of the moneth is contrarie to the law: which reckoneth the daies according to the Aſtronomicall account of the moneths, not after the deuiſe of any ſuch Calendar. So then Moſes ſaith, they ſhould eate the Paſſe-ouer the 14. day (of the moneth, not of the Calendar) at eeuen, Exod. 12. 6. and the next day, which is the 15. ſhould be the firſt ſolemne day of the feaſt: But the Iewes Calendar ſaith, this yeere you ſhall eate the Paſſe-ouer the 15. day at eeuen, and keepe the ſolemne feaſt the 16. day: this was therefore a manifeſt tranſgreſſion of the law. Secondly, it is vntrue alſo, that this tradition of the Iewes began after the time of our Sauiour, that is not to keepe the Paſſe-ouer vpon the Sabboth eeue, but to put it off to the Sabboth: for we force not vpon the authoritie of ſome of the Iewiſh Rabbins alleaged by Bellarmine, who in this cauſe are not to bee heard, being enemies to Chriſt: although we want not alſo the graue teſtimonie of ſome learned in the Hebrue rites, as of Rupertus in cap.23. Leuitic. and of Paulus Burgenſ. in addition. ad Lyran. commentar. cap. 26. Matth. who are of this iudgement, that this tradition was receiued long before Chriſts time. And this appeareth to be ſo by the Scripture, Iohn 19. 14. It was the preparation of the Paſſe-ouer, when Chriſt was condemned of Pilate and crucified: but that was the 15. day of the moneth, which by the law ſhould haue been the firſt ſolemne day of the Paſſe-ouer: ſo that this being but the day of preparation, the Paſſe-ouer was put off till the next day, which was the Sabboth.

Argum. 2. The day wherein Chriſt ſuffered was the feſtiuall day of the Paſſe-ouer; and therefore the eeuen before, the Paſſe-ouer generally was eaten of the Iewes. *Bellarm.c.*8. The firſt he would thus proue: Firſt, Ioh. 13. 1. Before the feaſt of the Paſſe-ouer, when Ieſus knew that the houre was come, &c. Chriſt therefore did eate the Paſſe-ouer before, and the feaſt followed the next day. Likewiſe, Ioh. 18. 39. Pilate ſaith, You haue a cuſtome, that I ſhould deliuer one at the Paſſe-ouer: Ergo, at that inſtant the Paſſe-ouer was begun: and therefore the Iewes ſay, it was not lawfull for them to put any to death, namely at that inſtant, becauſe it was at the feaſt: for otherwiſe they did, and might put to death.

Contra. To the two firſt places we anſwere: firſt, that Chriſt did and might eate the paſchall Lambe before the Paſſe-ouer, though it followed not immediatly the next day, but the day after. And the diſciples ſuppoſition may very well ſtand, that when Chriſt had ſaid to Iudas, That thou doeſt, doe quickly, they thought he had bid him buy ſomewhat needfull againſt the feaſt, Ioh. 13. 29. for this might bee againſt the feaſt following after one day: or both Chriſt and his diſciples may bee taken to ſpeake of the right time of the Paſſe-ouer, which by the law ſhould haue been kept the next day. Secondly, Pilate might deliuer one at or againſt the Paſſe-ouer, though not vpon the very feſtiuall day it ſelfe.

Thirdly, it is a fond conceit, that the Iewes ſhould anſwere, they could put none to death, only in reſpect of the feaſt then inſtant: firſt, it had been as vnlawfull for them to ſend him bound to Pilate vpon that day, which they did, Matth. 27. 2. and in their owne perſons to lay in accuſations againſt him, verſ. 12. and to crie out, Crucifie him, Luk. 23. 23. and to ſee Chriſt crucified, Luk. 19. verſ. 21. Secondly, it is euident, that they indeede were depriued of the Ciuill power in putting to death by the Romanes, and that ſome 40. yeeres before the deſtruction of the Temple, as ſome of their Rabbins confeſſe. And the words of the Iewes implie ſo much in plaine meaning: It is not lawfull for vs to put any man to death: not this man, or at this time, but not any man. And therefore Pilate doth arrogate this authoritie, as peculiar to his place: I haue power to crucifie thee, and power to looſe thee, Iohn 19. 11. as if he ſhould haue ſaid, I onely haue this power, not the high Prieſts or Elders. Thirdly, if the Iewes put any to death, it was either tumultuouſly without any forme of iudgement, as Stephen was caſt out and ſtoned, Act. 7. 58. or they onely came together to enquire and examine, Act. 23. 15. and their councell was ſtill at commaundement of the chiefe Captaine, who was preſent to moderate their doings, as Act. 22. 30. the chiefe Captaine commaunded the high Prieſts, and all their councell to come together. Act. 23. 10. The chiefe Captaine taketh Paul away from the Councell: So that it is euident, that they had no authoritie to put to death of themſelues: for they acknowledge no King, but Cæſar, Ioh. 19. 15. Now it is cleere that the power of life and death is onely in the King, and therefore it belonged onely to Cæſar. Bellarmine then bewrayeth great ignorance, to ſay that the Iewes had power in themſelues, being then vnder the gouernment of the Romanes, to put any to death. So then Bellarmine hath not yet proued, that he pretended, that either the Iewes generally did eate the Paſſe-ouer, when Chriſt did, or that hee was crucified vpon their feaſt day.

The Proteſtants.

1. WE denie not, but that Chriſt might vſe vnleauened bread, at the inſtitution of his laſt Supper, hauing immediatly before eaten the Paſchall Lambe, which we doubt not but he kept, according to the Law, with ſweete bread: yet in the time they are greatly deceiued, affirming, that all the Iewes eate the Paſſe-ouer likewiſe ouer eeuen, and crucified Chriſt on the morrow, which ſhould haue been, and was vnto them (as they ſay) a chiefe feſtiuall day.

The truth is, that Chriſt eate the Paſſe-ouer the 14. day at eeuen, as it is appointed in the Law: but the Iewes had a contrary tradition: they would in no wiſe keepe two feſtiuall daies together: and therefore becauſe the ſixteenth day was their Sabboth, they would not haue the feaſt of vnleauened bread vpon the fifteenth day (though it were ſo appointed by the law) to auoide the concurrence of two holy daies together, but deferred it till the next day, which was their Sabboth, and eate the Paſſe-ouer the eeue before, which was the fifteenth day at night; whereas Chriſt reforming that abuſe, kept the Paſſe-ouer the eeue before, according to the law, that is, the 14. at night. It appeareth then, that the next day following, which wee call Friday, wherein Chriſt was put to death, was not kept of the Iewes as a holy day.

Firſt, the text ſaith, they would not put Chriſt to death vpon the feaſt day, fearing the tumult of the people, Mark. 14. 2.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that this was but the ſentence of ſome in the Councell, which preuailed not; but their ſentence rather ſtood, that thought it good to take any occaſion at what time ſoeuer, to put Chriſt to death, cap. 9.

Contra. Firſt, there is no mention made of any diuiſion in the Councel, but that they al agreed vpon it, not to apprehend Chriſt vpon the feaſt day: the words are, but they ſaid, Matth. 26. 5. that is, the high Prieſts, Scribes and Elders of the people which were aſſembled, verſ. 4. they all accorded in one. Secondly, who would thinke, that Bellarmine had ſo ſoone forgotten himſelfe: for before, where the Iewes ſaid, it is not lawfull for vs to put any to death, hee expoundeth it, in reſpect of the feaſt, that it was not lawfull for them therein to kill any: and yet now they are reſolued vpon any day whatſoeuer to kill Chriſt: how can theſe things hang together?

Argum. 2. Secondly, if they had kept it holie, as the Law commaunded, they ſhould haue done no ſeruile labour therein, that is, no worke of the bodie, Leuitic. 23. 7. But what could bee a more ſeruile worke, then to crucifie Chriſt, to carry the Croſſe, and pitch it in the ground, and ſuch like; which the Iewes would not haue done vpon that day, which they were as ſtraightly to keepe as the Sabboth? It is alſo called the preparation of the Sabboth, Mark. 15. 43. Wherein they were wont to prepare againſt the Sabboth, what was needfull: but ſuch workes of preparation could not haue been done in that great feſtiuall day.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Iewes were not of ſuch a daintie conſcience, to thinke that theſe things were not lawfull vpon the feaſt day: they thought it ſufficient, if with their owne hands they did not ſtone Chriſt: reſp. ad argum. 2.

Contra. Firſt, yea the Iewes did many things againſt Chriſt with their own hands, they came againſt him to take him, with ſwords and ſtaues, Mat. 26. 55. they did buffet him, & ſmite him with rods, verſ. 67. they did carrie him bound to Pilate, chap. 27. 2. they tooke Ieſus and led him to be crucified, Ioh. 19. 16. therefore it is like alſo, that with their owne hands they crucified him: wherefore they ſhould apparantly in thus doing haue broken the feaſt. Secondly, ſeeing that the Iewes were ſo ſuperſtitious in keeping of the reſt of the Sabboth, that they reproued the Apoſtles for pulling the eares of corne, and would not ſuffer Chriſt to heale vpon the Sabboth, it is not like they tooke ſuch libertie vpon the chiefe feſtiuall of the Paſſe-ouer, wherein all worke was as ſtrictly forbidden, as vpon the Sabboth, ſauing about their meate, Exod. 12. 16.

Argum. 3. Ioh. 18. 28. The high Prieſts went not into the common hall, leſt they ſhould be defiled, but that they might eate the Paſſe-ouer: Ergo, they did not eate the Paſſe-ouer till that night, which was the eeuen after Chriſt was crucified.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that by the Paſſe-ouer here is not vnderſtood the paſchall Lambe, which was eaten at eeuen, but other ſacrifices beſide, whereof the Prieſts did eate, wherewith they celebrated the Paſſe-ouer, as Deut. 16. 2. Thou ſhalt ſacrifice the Paſſe-ouer of ſheepe, and of bullockes, &c. reſp. ad argum. 4.

Contra. Firſt, though the feaſt of the Paſſe-ouer were celebrated with other ſacrifices; yet to eate the Paſſe-ouer is not found in Scripture, but properly to betoken the eating of the Paſchall Lambe, as Mark. 14. 12. 14. I will eate the Paſſe-ouer with my diſciples, &c. Likewiſe, Matth. 26. 17. In all theſe places, the ſacrificing of the Paſſeouer, the keeping of it, the preparing and eating of it (for all theſe phraſes are vſed) are vnderſtood onely of the Paſchal Lambe: wherefore this is but a ſillie ſhift, to obſcure ſo euident a text. Secondly, that the Prieſtes could not eate the Paſſeouer the eeue before Chriſts ſuffring, it appeareth by this, that they were ſo full of buſineſſe, in ſending for Chriſt with ſwords and ſtaues, firſt bringing him to Annas houſe, then to Caiphas, Iohn 18.24. in gathering the aſſemblie of the Elders to Caiphas houſe, Matth.26.57. in producing witneſſes againſt Chriſt, verſ.59. in ſifting and examining him with many queſtions, verſ.63. in buffeting and beating him, verſ.67. all this was done the fourteenth day at night: it is very apparant, that they being thus buſied had no leiſure to eate the Paſſeouer.

Argum.4. Iohn 19.14. It was the day of the preparation of the Paſſeouer: Ergo, it was not the feaſt day of the Paſſeouer: and verſ.31. the Sabboth following is called a great day, becauſe of the feaſt of the Paſſeouer: for the firſt day of the Paſſeouer, and the laſt, were ſolemne dayes, Exo.12.16. Ioh.7.37. The laſt and great day of the feaſt: If the Sabboth following then were the firſt day of the paſſeouer, then did they not begin their feaſt the ſame day, wherein Chriſt was crucified.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that it is called the preparation of the Paſche, being indeed the preparation to the Sabboth: becauſe it fell within the Paſche: and ſo likewiſe is the Sabboth called a great, or high day, becauſe it was within the feaſt of the Paſſeouer.

Contra. Firſt, we graunt indeed, that it was the preparation day to the Sabboth, and to the Paſſeouer likewiſe, becauſe the Euangeliſt ſaith ſo: for it were an improper ſpeech to ſay, the preparation of the Paſſeouer, that is within the Paſſeouer: but as the preparation of the Sabboth, ſerueth to the Sabboth; ſo the preparation of the Paſſeouer ſerueth to the Paſſeouer. Secondly, ſeeing that they were not to do any worke vpon the feaſt day, Exod.12.16. but in the preparation of the Sabboth, many workes muſt be done, that all might be diſpatched before the Sabboth; it is not like, that the preparation could fall vpon the feaſt of the Paſſeouer. Thirdly, the Sabboth day was not the greater, falling vpon the ordinarie weeke dayes of the Paſſeouer: for they were not counted great dayes, but onely the firſt and the laſt: and therefore being not great dayes themſelues, they could not make the Sabboth a great day: So then the greatneſſe of this Sabboth was by reaſon of the firſt and great day of the Paſſeouer. Fourthly, Auguſtine alſo ſaith, that the day of Chriſts ſuffering was not Paſcha, ſed præparatio Paſchæ, it was not the Paſch, but the preparation to it. It is not therefore true, that it was kept holy of the Iewes, the day of Chriſts Paſſion; neither that they did eate the Paſchal Lambe the ſame eeue that Chriſt did, but the night following.

De conſenſu Euangel.lib.3. cap.13.

We conclude then, firſt, that Chriſt might eat vnleauened bread at the inſtitution of his laſt Supper: and yet neither did the Iewes generally eate their Paſſeouer then, neither was the next day of Chriſts Paſſion, kept by them as a ſolemne feaſt.

Secondly, it was not of the ſubſtance of the inſtitution to eate vnleauened bread, no more then to eate it at night, and to receiue it ſitting, we are not more bound to the one, then to the other. Againe, Chriſt vſed vnleauened bread, becauſe it was the vſuall bread at that time: ſo wee do vſe that, which is the vſuall bread in our time. And Saint Paul ſpeaketh of ſuch bread, as was vſuall among the Gentiles, when he ſaith, The bread which we breake, 1.Corin.10.17. Ergo, ordinarie bread and leauened to be vſed, not vnleauened.

The teſtimonie of antiquitie is this: Concil.Laodicen.can.38. Non oportet à Iudæis azyma accipere: It is not lawfull to receiue vnleauened bread from the Iewes. Trullan.can.11. Nemo Iudæorum azyma comedat: Let no man eat the vnleauened bread according to the cuſtome of the Iewes. We ſee then that the vſe of leauened bread pleaſed better, then of vnleauened. And the Greeke Church is herein more indifferent then the Latine: De pane, ſiue azymus, ſiue fermentatus fuerit, Græci non curent, dum ex tritico conſtet: The Greekes, whether it be leauened, or vnleauened bread, care not, ſo it be of wheate: Florentin.ſeſſ.25.

Laſtly, in this caſe we want not ſome teſtimonie of their owne: that whereas Bellarmine alleageth out of Abenezra in cap.Leuitic.23. that this tradition of the Iewes, not to keepe the Paſſeouer vpon the Sabboth eeue, to auoid the concurrence of two feſtiuals, began many yeeres after Chriſt, cap.8. yet Iohan.Heutenius præfat.in Euthymium, and Cornelius Ianſenius in cap.26.Matth. alleage out of Seder-olam, that this tradition began ſtraight after their returne from the captiuitie of Babylon.

The Papiſts.

2. Concerning the other element of wine, which is vſed in the Sacrament, they ſay it is to be mixed with water, and they impudently condemne all thoſe Churches, that do not mixe water with wine, in the Sacrament: ſaying, it cannot be omitted, ſine graui peccato, without great ſinne. Bellarm.lib.4.c.10. And therefore Honorius 3. cauſed a Prieſt to be depoſed both from his office and benefice, becauſe hee did ſacrifice Sine aqua & igni: Without water and fire, decret. Greg.lib.3.tit.41.c.14.

21. Error.

*Argum.*1. Water guſhed out together with blood, out of the ſide of Chriſt: Ergo, wine and water is to be vſed together in the Euchariſt, *Rhemiſt.*1.*Cor.*11.*ſect.*10.*Bellarmin.lib.*4. *de Eucha-riſt.cap.*10.

Anſw. Firſt, the blood and water, that iſſued out of Chriſts ſide, were not mingled together, but came forth apart: Ergo, if they wil ground their mixture in the Sacrament vpon this example, they muſt vſe them ſeuerally and apart in the Euchariſt: And Bellarmine anſwereth nothing, when he ſaith, that notwithſtanding they were not mixed comming forth of Chriſts ſide; yet if they had fallen into one veſſell or cup, they would haue runne together: for we ſay againe, if they had fallen into two ſeuerall veſſels, they would not haue runne together: therefore if they will follow this preſident, they ſhould put the wine and water into two ſeuerall cuppes, and ſo vſe them apart.

Secondly, they cannot proue, that the water which came from Chriſt, was like to the water, which we commonly vſe, but ſuch, as is in the bodie of man: and it hath been an old receiued opinion, that it came neere vnto that humour in mans bodie, which is called Phlegma, as it is mentioned in their decrees, *decret.Greg.lib.*3.*tit.*41.*c.*8. which opinion is there confuted, neither do we altogether approue it: yet it is probable, that it was not pure water, comming forth of Chriſts bodie; and therefore this can be no warrant vnto them, to vſe common water.

Thirdly, blood and water came forth, not wine and water: wherefore this example, if it proue any thing, maketh for the mixture of blood and water, not of wine and water.

Fourthly, by the blood and water the fathers do much better vnderſtand the two Sacraments of the Church, Baptiſme and the Euchariſt, as afterward it followeth to be ſhewed out of Auguſtine: if the water then ſignifie Baptiſme, it cannot be applied to the Euchariſt. Bellarmines anſwere here, that it is one thing to repreſent, another to be repreſented, is not worthie to be repeated, much leſſe to be refuted.

*Argum.*2. In the old Teſtament the cup in the Euchariſt was not onely prefigured in wine, which Melchiſedech brought forth to Abraham, but in the water, which came forth of the rocke: Ergo, water is to be vſed as well as wine: *ca.*10.*argum.*3.

Contra. Firſt, by this argument they may inferre, that water onely may be vſed; for water onely without wine flowed out of the rocke. Secondly, the figures of the law are no paternes of the Sacraments of the Goſpell: they had the ſame ſubſtance, that ours haue, but not the ſame ceremonie: for by the ſame reaſon, becauſe the cloud and the redde Sea were figures of our Baptiſme, they may conclude, that now alſo we muſt baptize with a miſt or cloud, and with ſalt-ſea water: theſe are very ſillie arguments.

*Argum.*3. Wine mixed with water doth fitly expreſſe the vnion of Chriſt and his people, who are ſignified by water.

Anſw. Firſt, it is too great boldneſſe for men to make myſteries of their owne deuiſing, as to bring in water to ſignifie the people. Secondly, this vnion and knitting together of Gods people is repreſented in the bread, made of many graines of corne, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, 1.Corinth.10.17. We that are many, are one bread,&c. and therefore the ſignification of water is ſuperfluous.

The Proteſtants.

1. WE deny not, but that of ancient time, in hot Countries, eſpecially where their wine was ſtrong, they vſed to mixe water with wine, in their common drinke, and thereupon they ſo vſed it in the Sacrament: but it was neuer generally the practiſe of the Eaſt countries ſo to doe: for the Armenians and Iberians vſed not of ancient time to put water in the cup in the miniſtration, *Fulk.annot.*1.*Cor.*11.*ſect.*10.

Secondly, Be it that this mixture of wine were conuenient to be vſed: you cannot make ſuch a matter of neceſſitie of it, as to charge them with hereſie, and denounce damnation againſt them that keepe not that cuſtome, eſpecially ſeeing your Canoniſts and ſchoolemen doe graunt that it is de honeſtate tantum, of decencie onely, not of neceſſitie. And yet we are fayne to drinke mingled wine many times againſt our willes: for the Miniſter need put in no water, it is mixed to his hands many times. The Vintners craft ſtandeth very well with popiſh profeſſion.

De conſecrat. diſtinct. 2. in gloſſ. 1.

*Argum.*1. We holde it rather to be a ſuperſtitious cuſtome and contrarie to Chriſts inſtitution: for he in his laſt Supper gaue wine, not water to be drunke; for he calleth it the fruite of the Vine, which is wine and not water, Matth.26.29.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that theſe words of our Sauiour, I will not drinke henceforth of the fruite of the vine, are vnderſtoode of the wine which Chriſt gaue vnto his Apoſtles before conſecration in the end of the legall ſupper: and he thus goeth about to proue it; firſt, becauſe S. Luke maketh mention of two cups, the one before the inſtitution of the laſt Supper, chap.22.verſ.17. the other after, verſ.20. the firſt was giuen in the end of the Paſſeouer, and therefore Chriſt doth not call it the new teſtament in his blood, as he doth the other. *Bellarm.lib.*1.*de Euchar. cap.*11.*argum.*10.

Contra. S. Luke maketh not mention of two cups, but twice of the ſame cup; and in the firſt place he ſpeaketh by way of anticipation, as S. Auguſtine thinketh, lib. 3. *de conſenſu Euangeliſtar.c.*1. whom Bellarmine vnmannerly reiecteth: ſaying, Non diligenter expendiſſe hunc locum: That he did not well waigh the place: Therefore S. Luke once for all rehearſeth the words of inſtitution, part of them in the firſt place, as, Take this and deuide it amongſt you, which is all one, as to ſay, Drinke ye all of it; part in the latter place, as, This cuppe is the new teſtament, &c. And that which S. Luke omitteth in the firſt place, the other two Euangeliſts, Matthew and Marke, ſupplie: for firſt they make mention of the words of inſtitution, this is my blood, &c. and then it followeth, I will drinke no more of the fruite of the vine: ſo that Chriſt calleth this cuppe, the new teſtament in his blood.

Secondly, ſaith Bellarmine, as theſe words of Chriſt, Luke 22.16. Henceforth I will no more eate of it, &c. are neceſſarilie vnderſtoode of eating the Paſſeouer; ſo the other words that follow, verſ.18. I will drinke no more of the fruite of the vine, &c. muſt bee referred to his drinking in the Paſſeouer, *Bellarm.lib.*1. *de Euchar. c.*11.*argum.*10.

Contra. Firſt, it is not neceſſarie to referre the firſt words to Chriſts eating of the Paſſeouer in his firſt ſupper, but to the whole action of his eating, at that time in the firſt and latter ſupper: ſo that the meaning is this: This is the laſt time, that I will eate with you: for he thus ſpake in the beginning of the Paſſeouer before he had yet taſted thereof, as may appeare by the 15. verſe, I haue earneſtlie deſired to eate this Paſſeouer: So it was but yet in his deſire, and not in acte. Secondly, though the firſt words be vnderſtoode of eating in the Paſſeouer, the ſecond are not therefore to be referred to the wine which they did drinke in the Paſſeouer. Firſt, becauſe both Matthew and Marke doe rehearſe theſe words as ſpoken after the words of conſecration. Secondly, becauſe Chriſt did no more eate of the Paſſeouer, but he did afterward drinke of the cuppe in his laſt ſupper; and therefore to make Chriſts words true, he ſpeaketh of the cuppe miniſtred in the Sacrament.

Now on the contrarie ſide, that Chriſt ſpake theſe words, I will drinke no more of the fruite of the vine, after the inſtitution of his laſt ſupper, it may appeare by theſe reaſons.

Firſt, becauſe two Euangeliſts, Matthew and Marke, doe both conſent in placing theſe words after the inſtitution: and there is greater reaſon to thinke that S. Luke ſhould tranſpoſe the words, then the other two according together.

Secondly, S. Luke ſpeaking twice of the cuppe, in both places rehearſeth ſome of the words of the inſtitution as in the firſt, Take this and diuide it among you, in the latter; This cuppe is the new teſtament in my blood: Wherefore ſeeing theſe words, Take this, and diuid it, or as Matthew ſayth, Drinke ye all of this, were ſpoken at the time of the inſtitution: it muſt needs follow, that our Sauiour meaneth the conſecrated cuppe and wine.

Thirdly, otherwiſe they will make the words of Chriſt vntrue, if he ſaid before his laſt ſupper, I will drinke no more of the fruite of the vine, and yet did afterward drinke it in his laſt ſupper. They will anſwere: that Chriſt did drinke no wine in his laſt ſupper, for it was conuerted into his blood.

Contra. Beſide that any man may ſee how groſſe and abſurd a thing it is, that Chriſt ſhould drinke his owne blood, and eate his owne fleſh; S. Matthew ſaith, that after Chriſt had ſaid, This is my blood, &c. hee calleth it the fruite of the vine, verſ.26.29. wherefore it was wine, which hee dranke in the chalice.

*Argum.*2. The water and blood which iſſued out of Chriſts ſide, ſignifie no ſuch thing, but rather as S. Iohn expoundeth them: by water, is betokened our waſhing from our ſinnes, whereof Baptiſme is a pledge: by blood, the full ſatisfaction that Chriſt hath made for our ſinnes, whereof the other Sacrament is a ſeale, 1.Iohn 5.6. This is that Ieſus Chriſt, that came by water and blood, not by water onely, but by water and blood. By the which words the Apoſtles meaning is not, that by the water and blood, which were ſhed vpon the Croſſe, we ſhould vnderſtand the Sacraments of the Church: but thoſe ſpirituall graces, whereof the Sacraments are liuely ſignes, namely, the ſatisfaction and ranſome of our ſinnes by Chriſts blood, and our ablution and waſhing from the ſame.

Auguſtine picketh out no ſuch fancie out of this myſterie as you doe, for the mixture of wine and water: but he doth more fitly apply it to the Sacraments of the Church: *E Chriſti latere dormientis in cruce promanarunt ſacramenta eccleſiæ: in Pſalm.*138. Out of Chriſts ſide dying vpon the Croſſe, iſſued the Sacraments of the Church: namely, Baptiſme, and the Euchariſt. He draweth not both water and wine to ſignifie one Sacrament, but applieth them to both.

*Argum.*3. The mixture of wine with water is in the Scripture taken in the euill part, as Iſay 1.22. Your wine is mixt with water, and 2.Cor.2.17. We are not as thoſe, which doe adulterate the word of God: The Apoſtle borroweth the word from the corruptors and minglers of wine: and therefore vſeth the word ειλικρινεια, which is the diſcerning of mixed and adulterate things by the light of the ſunne, the mixing then of wine and water in the Euchariſt can haue no good ſignification.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the ſame thing in Scripture in diuers ſenſes may haue both a good and an euill ſignification: and ſo the mixing of wine with water, to make marchandize of, is taken in the worſe part; but with intent to drinke it, it is vſed in Scripture in the better ſenſe, as Prou.9.5. Wiſdome ſaith, *Come and drinke the wine which I haue mixed for you, lib.4. de Euchar.c.*11. *reſp.ad argum.*1.

Contra. Firſt, that place in the Prouerbs is not neceſſarilie vnderſtoode of the mixture of wine with water, but of ſome pleaſant temperature beſide, whereby the wine is fined and reliſhed, and not allayed, as by water: as Cantic.5.1. I haue drunke my wine with my milke. Secondly, though in the ordinarie drinke, the mixture of wine with water may haue a good vſe and ſignification; yet in offrings and oblations to God, ſuch as the prophet Iſay ſpeaketh of, ſuch mixture neither in vſe or ſignification is commendable: For like as the Prophet Malachie reprouing the Iſraelites for offring vnto God the worſt things, as the halt and the blinde, ſaith, Offer it now vnto the Prince, will he be content, Malach.1.8? ſo if a man offer waterie or adulterate wine to the Prince, he will not be pleaſed; much leſſe is it to be preſented to God: And as it is not meete to vſe courſe or browne bread in the Communion for the one element; ſo neither is it fit to preſent baſe and courſe wine for the other. And if Chriſt turning water into wine, did exhibite pure and perfect wine at the mariage feaſt: is it like he would bring forth adulterate and counterfeite wine at his heauenly feaſt? Hereof S. Ambroſe thus writeth, Dominus inuitatus ad nuptias, &c. The Lord being inuited to the mariage feaſt, did not mingle the water pots full of water with wine, but changed them into wine: Maluit naturam vertere, quàm adulterare ſubſtantiam: He had rather change the nature, then adulterate the ſubſtance, *Serm.*78. Wherefore it is an adulterating of the ſubſtance, to mingle wine and water together.

*Argum.*4. As Bellarmine, to proue that Chriſt vſed vnleauened bread, alleageth that he immediatly before did eate the Paſſeouer, which was kept, with vnleauened bread; ſo by the ſame reaſon, ſeeing he confeſſeth that Chriſt did drinke the fruite of the vine, that is, naturall and perfect wine in the Paſſeouer, it is more then probable that he vſed the ſame at his laſt ſupper: that as he changed not the bread, ſo neither did he alter the wine.

And laſtly, they may be thus preſſed with their owne deuiſes: for whereas they hold that the elements after the words of conſecration are tranſubſtantiate; I aske whether the water, which is incorporate to the wine, be alſo conuerted into Chriſts blood? if they ſay it is not, then doe they deny tranſubſtantiation of all that is in the cup; if they ſay it is, then will they make Chriſt a watrie and elementall bodie: If the firſt, I obiect the decree of Innocent 3. who determineth, that the water together with the wine is chaunged into Chriſts blood, *decr. Greg.lib.*3.*tit.*41.*c.*6. If the ſecond, I doe oppoſe Bellarmine, who before affirmed, that nothing but the bread and wine are tranſubſtantiate: *queſt.*2. reſp. ad 3. argum. proteſtant.

Bernard writing of this matter, ſheweth his opinion according to thoſe corrupt times, that water in the Sacrament ought to be mixed with the wine: but he condemneth not all thoſe which retaine not this vſe: Aliud eſt (ſaith he) *culpare negligentiam, aliud negare efficaciam: epiſtol.*69. It is one thing to blame their negligence, another thing to deny efficacie to the Sacrament without any ſuch mixture adminiſtred.

*Concil. Aurelianenſ. can.*4. Vt nullus in oblationibus ſacri calicis, niſi quod ex fructu vineæ ſperatur, & hoc ſine aqua mixtum offerre præſumat, quia ſacrilegium iudicatur aliud offerri, quam quod in mandatis ſacratiſſimis Saluator inſtituit: That no man in the oblation of the ſacred cup, but that which commeth of the vine, and that without mixture of water, preſume to offer: becauſe it is iudged ſacrilege to offer any other thing, then what our Sauiour did inſtitute. This Canon maketh ſo euidently againſt the popiſh mixture of water and wine, that Caranza in his Epitome hath cunningly left it out.

Laſtly, in their owne decrees, there are certaine heretikes condemned, called Aquarij: becauſe they did offer water onely: *decr.par.*2.*cauſ.*24.*qu.*3.*c.*39. By the ſame rule the Papiſts are Semiaquarij, in part Aquarie-heretikes, becauſe they offer halfe water.

But we haue a more euident teſtimonie from their owne Canons, *decr.part.*3. *diſt.*2.*c.*7. Iulius confuteth thoſe which preſumed to offer milke, and dipped bread, by this argument, It is euident by the Goſpell, Quod præter panem & vinum aliud offerri non licet: That it is not lawfull to offer any thing beſide bread and wine: If nothing but bread and wine muſt be vſed, then water alſo is excluded as well as milke.

THE FIFT QVESTION, OF THE words of conſecration.

The Papiſts.

THeſe words (ſay they) This is my bodie, to bee ſpoken ouer the bread, and the like ouer the wine, This is the new Teſtament in my blood, are the very formes of the Sacrament and words of conſecretion: which being vttered, immediatly the elements are chaunged into the bodie and blood of Chriſt: Wherefore theſe words are not to be read hiſtorically for the inſtruction of the people, but they are onely conſecratorie words, to be pronounced ouer the elements: Rhemiſt. 1.Cor.11. ſect.11. Bellarm. lib.4. de Sacram. cap.13. 22. Error.

Argum.1. The Rhemiſts obiect that place of S. Paul, 1.Cor.10.16. The cuppe of bleſſing, which we bleſſe, &c. Here the benediction is referred to the cup, not vnto God: Ergo, not by prayer or thankeſgiuing to God, but by certaine conſecratory words ſpoken ouer the cup, it is conſecrated, Rhemiſt. in hunc locum.

Anſw. Firſt, the word which the Apoſtle here vſeth εὐλογεῖν, to bleſſe, is expounded by Saint Matthew, to be all one with εὐχαριστεῖν, to giue thanks: for hee ſaith, Chriſt after he had bleſſed (vſing the firſt word) tooke the bread, and after hee had (giuen thankes) which is the other word; hee tooke the cuppe: and S. Marke, chap.8.6,7. vſeth both theſe words; how Chriſt firſt gaue thankes and brake the bread, and he bleſſed the fiſhes, and cauſed them to be ſet before the multitude: wherefore the cuppe is bleſſed, that is, by giuing thankes vnto God and praier is ſanctified: So that here is both relation vnto God, to whom wee offer our thankeſgiuing, and to the cuppe, which is ſanctified by our praiers. Secondly, though we graunt, that the cuppe is bleſſed by words of conſecration, it followeth not out of this place, that it is done by theſe foure words, this is my bodie, or this is my blood: for Chriſt beſide theſe words, vſed a benediction, bleſſing, or thankeſgiuing beſide, as the Euangeliſts make mention. Thirdly, as Saint Paul ſaith, The cuppe which wee bleſſe; ſo hee ſaith, The bread which wee breake, which member of the ſentence aunſwereth to the other, breaking of the bread, to the bleſſing of the cuppe: the bread then is bleſſed, not onely by the pronouncing of words, but by the whole action of breaking, diſtributing, thankeſgiuing, &c.

Argum.2. If theſe were not the onely words of conſecration, This is my bodie, and if preſently vpon the vttering of theſe words the bodie of Chriſt were not preſent; then ſhould not the words of Chriſt be true, Bellarm. ibid. The anſwere to this argument followeth here in the aſſertion of the Proteſtants.

The Proteſtants.

1. WE acknowledge no ſuch conſecration at all, by vertue whereof the elements are conuerted and tranſubſtantiate into the bodie of Chriſt, as wee haue before ſhewed. A conſecration wee graunt, which is a ſetting apart of the elements, which before were common, to holy vſes, and by the vertue of Chriſts inſtitution, to bee made vnto vs ſignes of holy things.

Secondly, theſe are not the onely words of conſecration, This is my bodie, and, This is the cuppe of my blood, and yet Chriſts words ſhall be true: for we muſt not diſmember the ſentence: Chriſt ſaith, Take, eate yee, this is my bodie: it is then made his bodie to bee taken and eaten; by taking then and eating, the elements alſo are conſecrated, not onely by ſaying of the words: yee muſt not then diuide the words of the inſtitution, for then they ſhall no more conſecrate, then if you ſhould pronounce but two of your conſecratorie words, as, This is, or, My bodie, and leaue out the reſt.

Argum.1. That theſe are not the onely words of conſecration, it appeareth, becauſe both the bread was broken and diſtributed, and the cup alſo, before Chriſt ſpake thoſe words, as Math.26. verſ.26. For firſt Chriſt ſaith, Take, eate, and, Take and drinke, before he ſaid, either, This is my bodie, or, This is my blood: Neither can ye well tell your ſelues, which are your conſecratorie words for the cup, whether thoſe that Matthew ſetteth downe, This is my blood of the new Teſtament: or as Luke hath, This cup is the new Teſtament in my blood. Nay, Bellarmine vſeth another forme beſide theſe: Hic eſt calix ſanguinis, This is the cup of my blood, Bellarm. cap.13.

Againe, Saint Luke addeth, This is my bodie, which is giuen for you: Saint Paul, which is broken for you, 1.Cor.11.24. And S. Luke alſo and S. Paul haue theſe words, Doe this in remembrance of me, which are omitted both by S. Matthew, and S. Marke. Wherefore ſeeing all theſe are the words of Chriſt, it followeth, that they all are effectuall and forcible to conſtitute the Sacrament (vnleſſe they will ſay, that ſome of Chriſts words are ſuperfluous:) Ergo, theſe onely-words, this is my bodie, this is my blood, are not all the words of conſecration.

Bellarmine here anſwereth moſt abſurdly, that their Leiturgie, which onely vſeth thoſe words, being made by Saint Peter is more ancient, then either Lukes Goſpell, or Pauls Epiſtle, *Bellar.c.*14. *reſp.ad argum.*9.

Contra. Firſt, thus without all ſhame they doe make their vncertaine traditions equall with the Canonicall Scripture, and their ſuperſtitious and erronious Leiturgie, to counteruaile the authoritie of S. Pauls writings. Secondly, if their Leiturgie were grounded vpon Canonicall Scripture, yet one part of the Scripture is not of more credit then another: Matthew and Markes Goſpell are equall to S. Lukes; and S. Lukes Goſpell, and S. Pauls Epiſtle not inferiour to the other: ſo that all thoſe words which are reported by them all to haue been pronounced by Chriſt, muſt bee receiued as of like authoritie.

Innocentius 3. is herein more equall, than *Bellarmine: Decr.Greg.lib.*3.*tit.*41.*c.*6. Ipſi Euangeliſtæ mutuò inter ſe ſuppleuiſſe leguntur,&c. The Euangeliſts do make a mutual ſupplie, when as any thing is omitted by any of them: as where the other Euangeliſts ſay, this is my body, only Luke hath, which is giuen for you: and whereas Marke and Matthew ſay, for many, Luke, for you: and Matthew addeth, for the remiſſion of ſinnes. Thus hee preferreth not one Euangeliſt before another: but maketh vp the wordes of Chriſt out of them all. But whereas Bellarmine affirmeth with Lindanus, that the words of Chriſt, recited out of S. Pauls epiſtle to the Corinthians, are not ſufficient to conſecrate, *c.*15.*mendac.*3. what is this elſe but to charge the whole Church of the Corinthians, that they had no conſecration at all, who obſerued the ſame forme there preſcribed by the Apoſtle, 1. Corinth. 11.

*Argum.*2. Saint Paul ſaith, euery creature is ſanctified by the word of God and prayer, 1. Timot. 4. 5. but in the Euchariſt the bread and wine are creatures and elements ſanctified to holy vſes: Ergo, they are ſanctified by the word, and by prayer alſo. Origen hereof thus writeth in 15.Math. Quid i. quicquid, ingreditur,&c. If whatſoeuer enters in at the mouth, go into the bellie, &c. euen that meat which is ſanctified by the word and prayer, in reſpect of the materiall part, goeth into the bellie; but in reſpect of the prayer added to it, it profiteth according to the meaſure of faith. So our Sauiour vſed thankſgiuing, when he gaue the cup, beſide the words of inſtitution, Matth. 26. 27. By which example wee are taught, that by prayer and thankſgiuing the bread and wine are conſecrated.

We conclude then, that not onely theſe words, but all the reſt belonging to the inſtitution, are to be rehearſed in the Sacrament, both to inſtruct the people, that they may know the right vſe of the Sacrament; and they helpe alſo with the reſt of the whole action, of taking, eating, drinking, praying, thankſgiuing, to conſecrate and make the Sacrament, as wee haue ſhewed more at large before, *Controu.*11.*queſt.*1.*part.*2. to that place we referre the reader.

Bernards teſtimonie in this place is very full on our ſide: Non ſolus ſacerdos ſacrificat, non ſolus conſecrat; ſed totus fidelium cœtus, qui aſtat, cum illo conſecrat, cum illo ſacrificat: Nec ſolus lignifaber facit domum, ſed alius ligna, alius trabes comportat: debent itaque aſtantes habere de ſuo, ſicut ſacerdos, fidem firmam, orationem puram, deuotionem piam: The prieſt onely doth not ſacrifice, hee onely conſecrateth not, but the whole companie of the faithfull ſtanding by, doth conſecrate together with him: As the maſter carpenter doth not onely build the houſe, but other labourers, that carrie the timber, helpe to build: therefore the ſtanders by, as well as the prieſt, muſt haue a ſure faith, pure prayer, godly deuotion, &c. doctrin.Bernard. So then the Sacrament is conſecrate by the whole action of the Miniſter and Communicants together.

*Concil.Toletan.*7.*cap.*2. Si ægritudinis acciderit quilibet euentus, quo cœptum nequeat expleri conſecrationis myſterium, ſit liberum preſbytero alteri conſecrationem exequi officij cœpti: If the Miniſter chance to fall ſicke, that he cannot finiſh the conſecration, it ſhall bee lawfull for another to goe thorough with it. It ſhould ſeeme, that the conſecration was not finiſhed with fiue words ſpeaking: for then the Councell needed not to haue been ſo carefull to prouide for a ſupplie. This Canon is ratified, *decret.par.*2.*cauſ.*7.*qu.*1.*c.*16.

And further, *Decr.par.*3.*diſtinct.*2.*c.*55. Vis ſcire, quia verbis cæleſtibus conſecratur,&c. Will you know, that it is conſecrated with heauenly wordes? then it followeth, Accipe quæ ſunt verba,&c. Heare what the words are, the prieſt ſaith; Make this oblation, reaſonable, acceptable, which is the figure of the bodie and blood of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. But theſe are not the words of conſecration, but the prayer of the Miniſter: Ergo, prayer helpeth to conſecrate, and not the pronouncing onely of Chriſts words.

The Maſter of Sentences, *lib.*4.*diſt.*8.c. thus rehearſeth out of Saint Ambroſe: Conſecratio quibus verbis fit,&c. By what words is the conſecration made? attend, what the words are, Take and eate ye all of this, this is my bodie: and againe, Take and drinke ye all of this, this is my blood: therefore take ye, eate ye, and take ye, drinke ye, are part alſo of the words of conſecration. This ſentence of S. Ambroſe is rehearſed alſo in the decree before alleaged.

This truth laſtly is ſealed: Iohn Philpot holy Martyr; Saint Peter ſaith, If any man ſpeake, let him ſpeake as the words of God: wherefore whoſoeuer ſaith, that theſe wordes onely, this is my bodie, doe make a preſence of Chriſt,without bleſſe ye,take,eate, which be three as ſubſtantiall points of the Sacrament,as this is my bodie,he is highly deceiued : Fox pag.1809.

THE SIXT QVESTION, OF THE PROPER effect and vſe of the Lords Supper.

The Papiſts.

23. Error. They doe generally holde, that this Sacrament was not properly ordained for remiſſion of ſinnes,neither that the Sacrament hath any ſuch vſe : but it ſerueth onely as a preſeruatiue againſt ſinne,*Trident.Concil.ſeſſ.13.can.5.Bellarm.lib.4.de Sacram.cap.*17.

Secondly, they teach, that faith is not ſufficient to prepare vs for the Communion : and although a man be neuer ſo contrite,quantumcunq; ſe contritos exiſtiment,yet they muſt be throughly purged and abſolued from their mortall ſinnes, before they come to communicate, *Concil.Trident.ſeſſ.13.can.11.Bellarm.ibid.*

*Argum.*1. They that receiue the Communion, are one bodie as they are partakers of one bread, 1.Cor.10.17. but they which are in any grieuous and deadly ſinne, are not liuely members of Chriſt, and of his myſticall bodie : therefore the Sacrament doth not profit them at all, Bellarm.ibid.

Anſ. Firſt, neither doe wee affirme, that men ought raſhly and preſumptuouſly to come to the Lords table, but to repent them throughly of their ſinnes, and to haue a ſtedfaſt and liuely faith in Chriſt,who cannot be ſaid,thus preparing themſelues,to remaine in their ſinnes : neither yet are they ſo fully acquited of them,that they neede not to receiue the Sacrament to their comfort,and to ſtrengthen their faith in the hope and aſſurance of the remiſſion of ſinnes. Secondly, wherefore all this hindreth not,but that they ſhould be true members of Chriſts bodie, euen hauing a troubled conſcience, and labouring vnder the burthen of their ſinnes : for the weake and ſicke parts of the bodie, are they therefore no parts at all, becauſe of their infirmities? Auguſtine ſaith very well,Non filios diaboli faciunt quacunque peccata, peccant enim & filij Dei : in quibus non eſt fides, filij ſunt diaboli: Contra.2.Epiſt.Pelag.3.3. Euery ſinne maketh not a man the childe of the diuell, for the children of God alſo ſinne : but they which haue no faith,are the ſonnes of the diuell: Ergo,all ſinnes cut not men off from the bodie of Chriſt, but onely the want of faith : They then that haue ſinned, and doe repent them and come with faith, are ſtill the ſonnes of God, and members of Chriſts bodie.

*Argum.*2. None were ſuffered to eate the Paſſeouer, if they were vncleane, Numb.9.10. and our Sauiour waſhed his Apoſtles feete, before he inſtituted his Supper, Iohn 13. and Matth.22. he is puniſhed,that came to the marriage feaſt without a wedding garment: Ergo,they that come to the Euchariſt muſt be purged firſt and cleanſed from their ſinnes, ſo that they haue no pricke of conſcience at all: *Bellarm.c.18.argum.*3.

Anſw. Firſt, theſe places alleaged do proue, that a man being vncleane by the committing of any ſinne, ſhould firſt by repentance and contrition of heart purge himſelfe, which wee grant is neceſſarie, and ſo receiue the Communion, to his further comfort:but they proue not that a man ſhould bee ſo purged, as that hee needed not by the Sacrament to bee further aſſured of remiſſion of ſinnes. Secondly, the type of the Paſſeouer is thus expounded by S.Paul, 1.Cor.5.8. Let vs keepe the Paſſeouer, not with the old leauen of maliciouſneſſe and wickedneſſe, but with the vnleauened bread of ſynceritie and truth : ſo that if a man do forſake his former wickedneſſe, not maliciouſly continuing in it, and commeth with a ſyncere and vnfaigned purpoſe of heart, deſirous to be fully aſſured of the remiſſion of his ſinnes, it is a ſufficient preparation. Thirdly, the waſhing of the feete, was to teach the Apoſtles an example of humilitie, Iohn.13.15.I haue giuen you an example: and it ſignifieth our ſpirituall waſhing by Chriſt, verſ.8. If I waſh thee not,(ſaith Chriſt to Peter) thou haſt no part in me : which is by faith,whereby our hearts are purified,Act.15.verſ.9.not that waſhing or cleanſing,which is wrought by our ſelues : and faith alſo is the wedding garment, as it is expounded Apocal.3.18.Buy of me white raiment,that thou maiſt be clothed.

*Argum.*3. 1.Cor.11.39.*He that eateth and drinketh vnworthily,eateth and drinketh his owne damnation,&c.*but they that communicate,hauing any pricke of conſcience for any mortall ſinne, doe eate and drinke vnworthily : Ergo, it cannot bee anſwered, that this worthie or vnworthie receiuing is in reſpect of hauing or not hauing faith : for the Apoſtle reproueth them for a certaine abuſe and corruption of manners, in diſorderly comming to the Sacrament : *Bellarm.ibid.argum.*5.

Anſw. Firſt, the vnworthie receiuing, which the Apoſtle here ſpeaketh of chiefly, is in comming without the due examination of faith : for the Apoſtle had ſaid, Let a man examine himſelfe, and ſo let him eate : but this examination is,whether we are in the faith,2.Cor.13.5. And againe the Apoſtle ſaith,they eate and drinke their owne damnation, not diſcerning the Lords bodie : and this diſcerning of the Lordes bodie belongeth to faith and knowledge, in making a difference betweene thoſe holie myſteries, and all other common meates. Secondly, they alſo are vnworthie receiuers, that come without knowledge and amendment of their fault; as here the Corinthians retained an abuſe in the Lords Supper, and as yet corrected it not. This place then prooueth, that continuing in ſinne without correction of it, is an vnworthie receiuing: it concludeth not againſt thoſe that haue repented them, and yet there remaineth ſome griefe or touch of conſcience ſtill, whereof they deſire to be releaſed.

Argum.4. They that come to the Communion either haue faith or not: if they haue not faith, they are vnworthie receiuers, and can reape no benefit by it; if they haue, they are alreadie iuſtified from their ſinnes: therefore vnto them the Euchariſt is not profitable towards the remiſſion of their ſinnes, which they haue alreadie by faith, Bellarm.ration.4.

Anſ. Bellarmine very vnskilfully maketh no difference betweene the beginning and the encreaſe of faith: the Apoſtles had faith; for to them Chriſt ſaid, they were cleane, but not all, Ioh.13.10. yet they pray, Lord encreaſe our faith, Luk.17.5. So the careful father ſaith to Chriſt, Lord I beleeue, helpe my vnbeliefe, Mark.9.24. So then a man hath faith, and by the ſame remiſſion of ſinnes: yet for the further ſtrengthening of his faith, and full aſſurance of remiſſion of ſinnes, he deſireth to receiue the Sacrament. Our faith is not perfect, but many times interrupted, and aſſailed with doubts, and had neede continually to be ſtrengthened, and renewed by the often hearing of the word, and receiuing of the Sacraments.

Argum.5. There is not one and the ſame proper vſe and end of diuers Sacraments: but Baptiſme is receiued for remiſſion of ſinnes: Ergo, the Euchariſt is not for that end, Bellarm.ibid.

Anſ. 1. The death of Chriſt, and ſo remiſſion of ſinnes purchaſed by the ſame, is properly repreſented vnto vs in both Sacraments, yet in a diuers reſpect: for as to be borne is one thing, and to be fed and nouriſhed is another; yet both worke the ſame thing in the bodie, though diuerſly: for the birth giueth life, meate and drink preſerueth it: the ſame difference is betweene Baptiſme and the Lords Supper, they both are ſeales vnto vs of our iuſtification, in the remiſſion of ſins by Chriſt: but by Baptiſme we are initiated, regenerate and borne anew, and engrafted into the bodie of Chriſt. The other Sacrament doth confirme, increaſe, and nouriſh our faith, alreadie begun and planted in vs, for the remiſſion of ſinnes, and all other benefits of Chriſts paſſion.

The Proteſtants.

First, wee doe truly affirme and teach, that an eſpeciall and principall vſe of the Euchariſt or Communion, is to ſtrengthen and aſſure our faith of the remiſſion of our ſinnes: and yet wee denie not, but that it hath other vſes beſide: for as in Baptiſme not onely the waſhing away of our ſinnes is ſhewed forth, but it alſo betokeneth our dying to ſinne, and riſing to newnes of life, Rom.6.3,4. ſo in the Lords Supper whole Chriſt with all his benefits are exhibited vnto vs, as it is a pledge vnto vs, not onely of remiſſion of ſinnes, but that Chriſt is become our righteouſneſſe and ſanctification, 1.Cor.1.30. that he wil aſſiſt vs with his ſpirit, and repleniſh our harts with grace: The water that I ſhall giue him, ſhall be in him a well of water, ſpringing vp to euerlaſting life, Iohn 4.14. Yea, the ſpirituall eating and drinking of the fleſh and blood of Chriſt, is a pledge vnto vs of the reſurrection, and of life eternall, Ioh.6.54. But that amongſt the reſt, it alſo aſſureth vs of remiſſion of ſinnes, thus it is proued.

Argum.1. Chriſt after Saint Matthew ſaith, This is the blood of the new teſtament, that is ſhed for many for remiſſion of ſinnes, Matth.26.28. But the new teſtament includeth a promiſe of remiſſion of ſinnes, Iere.31.34. Yea our Sauiour ſetteth it downe in plaine termes: for why elſe ſhould our Sauiour make expreſſe mention of forgiuenes of ſinnes, if this Sacrament did not ſerue for that vſe?

Bellarmine anſwereth, that theſe words of our Sauiour doe not ſignifie, that his blood is drunke in the Sacrament for remiſſion of ſinnes, but that it was ſhed for remiſſion of ſinnes, and ſo is repreſented in the Euchariſt, cap.19.reſp.ad argum.3.

Contra. Firſt, in the Euchariſt the death of Chriſt with the fruite thereof, which is the remiſſion of ſinnes, is not onely repreſented, but exhibited alſo and applied: for otherwiſe they will make it but a bare and naked ſigne, if it ſhould onely repreſent and ſignifie: and who would thinke, that they which ſtand vpon the reall preſence, would content themſelues with repreſentation and ſignification onely. Wherefore I thus vrge them, as Chriſts blood is preſent, ſo is the fruites of his blood: but his blood is not preſent onely in ſignification, but verely and indeede to the worthie receiuer: Ergo, ſo is remiſſion of ſins, which is the fruite of his blood. Secondly, S. Paul ſaith, that the vnworthie receiuer is guiltie of the bodie and blood of Chriſt, 1.Cor.11.27. If vnworthie receiuing doth verely adde ſinne vnto them, then the worthie receiuing, which is a ſhewing forth of Chriſts death, doth verely obtaine remiſſion of ſinnes.

Argum.2. Chriſt ſaith, I came not to call the righteous, but ſinners to repentance: but Chriſt in the Euchariſt calleth vs vnto him: Ergo, he calleth ſinners to come to the Euchariſt.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Chriſt ſpeaketh of his firſt calling vnto faith, and repentance, not of inuiting to the Euchariſt, *reſp.ad argum.*1.

Contra. Firſt, where Chriſt ſaith, I came not to call the righteous, but ſinners to repentance, he calleth all, but onely ſuch, as are ſo righteous that they neede no repentance: but ſuch there are none in this life: Ergo, he calleth all. Secondly, he calleth all that thirſt, Ioh.7. If any man thirſt, let him come vnto me and drinke: but who thirſteth more, then he that deſireth to be releaſed of his ſinne? Neither doth Chriſt ſpeake here of the firſt call vnto faith, but euen of ſuch as did beleeue alreadie; as it followeth in the next verſe, he that beleeueth in me, out of his bellie ſhall flow riuers of waters of life. Thirdly, our Sauiour ſaith, Come vnto me all ye that are wearie and laden, and I will eaſe you, Mat.11.28. but theſe are they which labour vnder the burthen and griefe of their ſinnes: Ergo, ſuch are admitted to come to the Sacrament to finde eaſe thereby.

*Argum.*3. Beſide theſe places of Scripture, we reaſon thus: If a man muſt be purged from the very conſcience and griefe of ſinne before he come to the Communion, then no man liuing can be a fit receiuer, ſeeing no man in this life can be ſure he is without ſinne. This Bellarmine graunteth, but ſaith further, that though a man be not ſure, yet if hee doe endeuour, as much as in him lieth, to be purged from ſinne, he commeth worthilie, *reſp.ad argum.*2.

Contra. All this wee graunt, and this may a man doe, that findeth yet ſome griefe in his conſcience for his ſinne: but ſeeing he confeſſeth, that a man cannot bee ſure he is without ſinne, there muſt then remaine ſome conſcience, feare and griefe of ſin, euen in the worthie receiuer. Againe, ſeeing he granteth, that the Euchariſt is auailable to take away veniall ſinne, *ibid.argum.*4. he offereth great indignitie to the Sacrament of Chriſts bodie and blood, that it ſhould not be of ſufficient efficacie to remit alſo mortall and capitall ſinne. And further he graunteth out of *Thomas reſp.ad arg.*2. that a man being in deadly ſin, and hauing no feeling of it, yet ſorrowing for the reſt, which he feeleth and knoweth, may bee a worthie receiuer: whereby it followeth, that hee which hath committed a ſinne, and hath remorſe thereof in conſcience, may much more be a worthie receiuer. And thus their doctrine is contrarie to it ſelfe.

Secondly, we doe hold, that to haue a liuely faith in the promiſes of God, with repentance for our ſinnes, and a full purpoſe to amend our liues, is a ſufficient preparation for the Communion: and that this Sacrament is a ſoueraigne remedie for a troubled conſcience. Neither ought men to refraine from the Communion, till they haue fully ſatisfied for their ſins, as the Papiſts teach, and are cleered in their conſcience of all their ſins: for ſo, few or none at all, ſhould be admitted to the Lords table: but in whom faith hath alreadie wrought repentance, in ſome meaſure, he may ſafely receiue the Sacrament for his further comfort, and aſſurance of remiſſion of ſinnes.

*Argum.*4. Ioh.6.35. He that beleeueth in me (ſaith Chriſt) ſhall neuer thirſt: Saint Paul alſo exhorteth men to examine themſelues, 1.Cor.11.28. which is nothing elſe, as himſelfe expoundeth it, then to proue whether they be in the faith, 2.Cor.13.5. Ergo, the examination or triall of faith, is a ſufficient preparation for the Lords table.

Auguſtine ſaith, Ad Deum acceditur, fide ſectando, corde inhiando, charitate currendo: We come or haue acceſſe vnto God in following him by faith, ſeeking him in our heart, and running to him with loue, *In Pſalm.*33.*concion.*2. Ergo, by faith wee haue acceſſe vnto God, Rom.5.2. but a liuely faith, which worketh by loue, Galath.5.6.

Bernards teſtimonie is euident alſo in this caſe: who ſpeaking of the manner of preparation for the Sacrament, writeth thus: Ante omnia fides quærenda eſt, de qua legitur, fide mundans corda eorum, &c. Before all things we muſt ſeeke for faith, of the which we reade, by faith purifying their harts, *ſerm.*5.in Vigil.Natal.

Againe, Apparatus menſæ iſtius non hominis eſt, ſed fidei, non temporalis elementi, ſed æterni: The preparation or furniture of this table is not of man, but of faith; not of temporall nouriſhment, but eternall, ſerm.in cœna Domin.

*Concil. Florentin. ſeſſ.*25. The Greeke Church confeſſeth thus: Sanctiſſimum Chriſti corpus & ſanguinem peccatorum noſtrorum remiſſioni & animarum ſaluti fieri: That the moſt holie bodie and blood of Chriſt, is made for the remiſſion of our ſinnes, and the health of our owne ſoules.

Iohn Philpot holie Martyr: When Doctor Moreman had denied that the Sacrament had a promiſe of remiſſion of ſinnes annexed to it: the Martyr vrged theſe words of the inſtitution, Which is giuen for you, which is ſhed for you for the remiſſion of ſinnes: whereby that popiſh aſſertion was directly ouerthrowne.

Concerning our preparation alſo by faith, thus teſtifieth a Councell: *Colonienſ.part.*7.*cap.*2. Excitanda eſt fidelium fides & deuotio in Deum, vt credentes & myſterium intelligentes accedant ad ſaluatoris noſtri gratiam participandam: The faith and deuotion of the faithfull muſt bee ſtirred vp, that with beleefe and vnderſtanding they may approach to bee partakers of grace, &c.

Let vs ſee what their owne decrees teſtifie of this matter: firſt, that the Euchariſt is auaileable to the remiſſion of all manner of ſinnes: Nicholaus witneſſeth *decret.par.2.cauſ.*15.*qu.*8.*c.*5. Sacramenta omnium contagionum purgatoria exiſtunt: The Sacraments are the purgation of all contagions whatſoeuer.*part.*3.*diſtinct.*2.*c.*6. In remiſſionem peccatorum oblationem diſtribuat: Let the Prieſt diſtribute the oblation to the people, for the remiſſion of their ſinnes. *ibid.c.*40. Qui manducauerit hoc corpus, &c. He that eateth this body, it ſhall be to him the remiſſion of his ſinnes: Theſe words are generall of all ſinnes whatſoeuer.

Secondly, that the communion is not to be denied vnto them, that haue griefe of conſcience euen of the greater ſinnes, their own Canons are euident, *decr.par.2.cauſ.*33.*diſt.*1.*c.*50. Negant his oportere reddi communionem, &c. They ſay the Communion is not to be giuen to thoſe that haue willingly fallen: Deus autem nullum crimen excepit, &c. But God hath excepted no ſinne, hauing forgiuen all ſinnes. *Ibid.c.*52. Grauiſſimi criminis reis, &c. The Lord hath commaunded, that the Sacrament ſhould be miniſtred to thoſe which are guiltie of the greateſt ſinnes, if with all their heart they repent and confeſſe their ſinne. cap. 56. Sunt qui arbitrantur, &c. There be, that thinke this to be repentance, to abſtaine from the heauenly Sacraments: but theſe are too ſeuere iudges againſt themſelues, Qui ſibi præſcribunt pœnam, declinant remedium: Which preſcribe a puniſhment to themſelues, and decline the remedie. Here they are reproued that refraine the Sacrament, for ſome conſcience of ſinne, which is a remedie againſt ſinne. *decr.p.*3.*diſt.*2.*c.*13. Quamuis quis peccato mordeatur, &c. Though a man haue remorſe of conſcience for ſinne, let him not haue a will to ſinne, &c. and ſo let him come intrepidus, ſecurely to the Communion. Wherefore Bellarmines poſition, Qui cum conſcientia peccati accedit: He that commeth with conſcience of ſinne, doth eate and drinke his owne iudgement. c. 18.argum. 1. is flat oppoſite to their owne Canons. Theſe words that follow in the Canon: Hoc de illo dico quem capitalia peccata non grauant: I ſay this of him that is not troubled with mortall and capitall ſinnes, doe not make againſt vs: for he ſpeaketh of ſuch a perplexitie of conſcience, as hath no hope: but this Canon plainely affirmeth, that a man though hee haue remorſe of conſcience for ſinne, may ſafely come to the Communion, which is the thing by Bellarmine denied.

THE SEVENTH QVESTION, OF THE MANER to be obſerued in receiuing the Communion.

The Papiſts.

24.Error. 1. THey holde it in no wiſe lawfull for Chriſtians, otherwiſe then faſting, to receiue the Communion: and that they ought to eate nothing before they doe communicate, vnleſſe it be in a caſe of great neceſſitie, Concil. Conſtantienſ.ſeſſ. 13. *Bellarmin. lib.*3. *de Euchariſt. cap.*22. ratione 4.

The Proteſtants.

1. WHat they here vnderſtand by neceſſitie, it may be doubted, ſeeing they themſelues will not graunt the like neceſſitie to be in the Euchariſt, as they ſay there is of Baptiſme: All ſacraments, we graunt, are neceſſarie, that is, profitable, expedient, requiſite, ſo often as they may be had: But none ſo neceſſarie, that the want thereof vnto a faithfull man, that in hart doth wiſh and deſire them, can be any hinderance to his ſaluation.

Secondly, that it is lawfull for any man to eate before hee come to the Communion, if his ſtomacke be weake, and not able to faſt ſo long (for otherwiſe, if a man can abſtaine, we wiſh him ſo to doe rather) S. Paul ſheweth, writing to the Corinthians, 1. chap.11.34. If any man be hungrie, let him eate at home. Some of them, he ſaith, came hungrie, ſome drunken, verſ.21. the Apoſtle commendeth neither, but telleth them, if they be hungrie, they haue houſes to eate in. Againe, in that our Sauiour Chriſt after ſupper inſtituted the Sacrament, it doth euidently declare vnto vs, that it is no ſinne to eate or drinke before we receiue the Sacrament.

Bellarmine anſwereth, firſt Chriſt did inſtitute the Sacrament onely after the legall ſupper, to ſhew that it was the ſhadow and figure of the other: but this doth no more warrant vs to receiue after ſupper, then that we ſhould firſt be circumciſed, and then baptized, becauſe Chriſt was ſo. *lib.*2. *de miſſ.c.*14.

Contra. Firſt, we doe not vrge Chriſts example, to warrant the receiuing either after dinner, or after ſupper, but to ſhew that it is no ſinne to eate before, if neceſſitie require: for if it were ſimplie a ſinne, Chriſt, vpon what occaſion ſoeuer, would not haue giuen example therein. Secondly, the example of circumciſion is not like: for there is no neceſſitie of being circumciſed before Baptiſme, as there may bee of eating before the Sacrament: and Chriſts example ſheweth, that hee, which before was circumciſed, may, being conuerted to the faith, bee alſo Baptized.

Secondly, ſaith he, the Apoſtles meaning is, that they which are hungrie, ſhould eate; but then they muſt not for that time receiue the Communion, ſo he ſpeaketh it to ſhame them, not as allowing any ſuch vſe.

Contra. The words of the Apoſtle are euident, verſ.33. When ye come together to eate, tarrie one for another, and if any man be hungrie, let him eate at home, that ye come not together to condemnation. Here the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of comming together, and tarrying one for another, that they which thorough their weakenes are hungrie and doe eate ſhould be ſtayed for.

Auguſtine ſaith, Neminem cogimus dominica illa cœna prandere, ſed nulli etiam contradicere audemus: Wee compell none to take the Lords Supper in dinner while, or after dinner; neither dare we forbid any ſo to doe. So he maketh it a thing indifferent, to communicate faſting or otherwiſe. Epiſt.118.c.7.

See their owne Canons of this matter: decr.par.3.diſt.1.c.49. A ieiunis hominibus,&c. The Sacraments muſt be celebrate by them, that are faſting, excepto vno die,&c. except one day in the yeare, when the ſupper of the Lord is celebrated. Here we ſee that the ſupper of the Lord may be taken not faſting: but by faſting this Canon vnderſtandeth not an abſtinence ſimplie, but that they ſhould communicate before dinner, as it may appeare by the wordes following: Pomeridiano tempore,&c. They forbid the Sacrament to be miniſtred after dinner. Likewiſe diſtinct.2.c.54. Liquidò apparet,&c. It appeareth euidently, that the Apoſtles when they firſt receiued the Supper of the Lord, did not take it faſting. Though the ſame Canon alloweth the receiuing of the Euchariſt faſting, which we alſo confeſſe to be moſt meete and conuenient; yet it graunteth, that at the firſt inſtitution it was not ſo.

This truth alſo is ſealed: Alice Holting perſecuted, for ſaying to her neighbour, that ſhe might dine before ſhe receiued the Sacrament.

Alice Harding likewiſe: for ſaying ſhee might as well drinke on Sunday before Maſſe, as vpon any other day, p.826. that is, if ſhe could not in reſpect of her infirmitie continue ſo long faſting.

The Papiſts.

2. THey binde the people onely once in the yeare to receiue the Communion at Eaſter time, and take it to be fully ſufficient for them ſo to doe: Concil.Trident.ſeſſ.13.can.9. 25.Error.

The Proteſtants.

2. THis decree of theirs is contrarie to the practiſe of the Apoſtles, whom the Rhemiſts confeſſe to haue miniſtred the Sacrament to the Chriſtians daily, Annotat. Act.2.ſect.6. So expounding the words of the text, They continued daily in breaking of bread.

2 It ſeemeth alſo to be contrarie to S. Pauls rule, who ſpeaketh of often communicating: Doe this, ſaith he, as oft as you drinke it, 1.Corinth.11.25. For ſeeing the eating of that bread, and drinking of that cuppe, is nothing elſe, but a ſhewing forth of the Lords death till he come; who ſeeth not, that it ought oftener then once or twice in the yeare to be receiued, ſeeing the death of Chriſt ought continually to be remembred, and ſhewed forth?

3 Therefore Auguſtine doth boldly reprehend their cuſtome, that content themſelues with once receining in the yeare: Si panis quotidianus eſt, cur poſt annum illum ſumas? accipe quotidie, quod quotidie tibi proſit: If it bee thy dayly bread, why doeſt thou take it but yearely? take that dayly and continually, which may profit thee dayly, *In Luk. ſerm.*28.

Can. Apoſtolor.9. Quoties ingrediuntur Eccleſiam, & audiunt ſcripturas, communicare debent: People as often as they enter into the Church, and heare Scripture, ought to communicate.

Eliberin.can.1. Nec inter fideles connumerabitur, qui in iſtis temporibus Paſcha, Pentecoſte, Natali Domini, non communicauerit: He is not to be counted amongſt the faithfull, which doth not communicate, at Eaſter, Pentecoſt, and the Natiuitie. This is more, then once in the yeare.

Laſtly, we haue the witnes of their owne Canons: decr.p.3.diſt.2.c.3. Quotidie Euchariſtæ communionem percipere,&c. To receiue the Communion euery day, I neither praiſe nor diſpraiſe it: Singulis diebus dominicis,&c. But euery Lords day, to communicate I perſwade and exhort: This very ſentence is rehearſed and approued by the Maſter, lib.4.diſt.12.h. Ibid.c.14. Quia ſemper pecco, ſemper habere debeo medecinam: Becauſe I alwaies ſinne, I had neede alwaies of the remedie: he ſpeaketh of the Communion. And Canon 16. Fabianus thus decreeth, Si non frequentius,&c. If not oftener, yet at the leaſt thrice in the yeare let euery laye man communicate. Can. 18. Si quis intrat in Eccleſiam Dei,&c. If a man enter into the Church, and heare the Scriptures, and of wantonnes turneth himſelfe from the Sacrament, let him be caſt out of the Church. This Canon enioyneth receiuing of the Sacrament, ſo often as they come to the Church: Ibid. c.19. Seculares,&c. Secular men, that doe not receiue thrice in the yeare, let them not bee counted amongſt Catholikes.

THE EIGHT QVESTION, OF RECEIVING the Sacrament in one kinde.

The Papiſts.

26. Error. CHriſtians (ſay they) are not bound by any commaundement of God, to receiue the Sacrament in both kindes, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 21. can. 1. And whoſoeuer ſaith, that the Church hath erred or done amiſſe, in decreeing that lay men and the Clergie not ſaying Maſſe, ſhould receiue in the one kinde, that is bread onely; or that it is lawfull for them to communicate in both, contrarie to the determination of the Church: let him be accurſed, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 21. can. 2. Rhemiſt. Iohn 6. ſect. 11. Bellarmin. lib. 4. de Euchariſt. cap. 20.

Argum. 1. Chriſt is all and whole in euery part of the Sacrament, his blood by a certaine concomitance is in the bread, and his fleſh by the like concomitance is in the cup, and his ſoule and diuinitie by the ſame concomitance in them both, for otherwiſe Chriſt ſhould be deuided: but euery ſpirit, ſaith the Apoſtle, that diſſolueth Ieſus is not of God, 1. Iohn 4.3. Wherefore he that receiueth in one kinde, is as well partaker of whole Chriſt, and of the full grace and effect of the Sacrament, as if he receiued in both, Bellarm. cap. 21.

Againe, Chriſt ſaith, Iohn 6.57. He that eateth me, ſhall liue by me; but Chriſt is eaten onely vnder the forme of bread, Ergo, vnder the forme of bread, whole Chriſt, not his bodie onely is preſent, Bellarmin. ibid.

And further, he obiecteth that place, Rom. 6.9. Chriſt being raiſed from the dead dyeth no more: but if his fleſh were in the Sacrament without his blood, then ſhould it be a dead bodie without life, and ſo Chriſt ſhould die ſtill. ibid.

Anſw. 1. We deny any ſuch concomitance of the blood and fleſh of Chriſt in the Sacrament: for he is not in his carnall preſence with his very fleſh and blood there included, as we haue ſhewed before: the bread and wine are ſignes onely of his body and blood, and therefore Chriſt is not diuided, they being the ſignes onely, and not the thing ſignified.

2 The place alleaged out of S. Iohn is greatly abuſed and corrupted by them, while they chuſe rather to follow their olde blinde latine tranſlation, then the authenticall Greeke text: the words in the originall are, Euery ſpirite that confeſſeth not Ieſus Chriſt: not, euery ſpirite that diſſolueth: And this may appeare to be the true reading, by the oppoſition in the former verſe, Euery ſpirite that confeſſeth Ieſus, is of God: therefore this is the beſt reading, Euery ſpirite that confeſſeth not Ieſus: as being ſet oppoſite and contrarie to the other verſe. Againe, the Rhemiſts vnderſtand this place after their owne reading of the diſſoluing of the humanitie and diuinitie of Chriſt: not of any ſuch ſeparation of the fleſh and blood of Chriſt, as Bellarmine ſuppoſeth.

3 Our Sauiour in the ſixt of Iohn ſpeaketh not of the ſacramentall, but of the ſpirituall eating; and ſo indeede ſpirituallie it is all one to eate and drinke Chriſt: for euery one that eateth ſacramentallie doth not liue by him, ſeeing that the wicked may be partakers of the Sacrement. And againe, if they will haue this chapter vnderſtoode of the Sacrament, then where Chriſt ſaith, verſ. 53. Except ye eate the fleſh of the ſonne of man, and drinke his blood, ye haue no life in you, there is an abſolute neceſſitie impoſed, to receiue in both kinds, both ſacramentally to eate Chriſt, and to drinke Chriſt. We cannot deſire a more direct place againſt them.

4 To the place, Rom. 6. we anſwere: firſt, that Chriſt fleſh is not reallie and corporally preſent, and therefore the argument followeth not that Chriſt ſhould haue a dead bodie without blood: the blood and fleſh of Chriſt remaine vndeuided in his glorious bodie in heauen, yet may be repreſented apart in the Sacrament. Secondly, they themſelues offering vp Chriſt in the ſacrifice of the Maſſe for remiſſion of ſinnes, as they blaſphemouſlie ſay, doe conſequently affirme that Chriſt dyeth againe, ſeeing the Apoſtle ſaith: That without ſhedding of blood there is no remiſſion, Hebr. 9.22. contrarie to the place alleaged out of the Apoſtle, That henceforth Chriſt dyeth no more. Rom. 6.9.

5 This their deuice therefore of concomitance ouerthwarteth the inſtitution of Chriſt: Firſt, he ſaith, The bread is his bodie, the wine his blood: but by their rule, the bread is his blood, and the wine his bodie.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that they ſay not, The bread is is blood, and the wine his bodie, but that vnder the forme of bread, there is his bodie with the blood, and vnder the forme of wine, the blood in the bodie.

Contra. Firſt, bee it graunted, that the blood of Chriſt is in the bread, yet how can any man bee ſaid to drinke it in bread? We vſe to eate bread, not to drinke bread: his blood therefore cannot bee there, becauſe it cannot bee drunke there. Secondly, we vrge his owne words: that Sub ſpecie panis repræſentatur corpus à ſanguine ſeparatum, &c. That vnder the forme of bread, there is repreſented the bodie ſeparated from the blood, cap. 21. But there is no other preſence ſence of Chriſts bodie, but by way of repreſentation, Ergo, the bodie is preſent without the blood, and the blood without the bodie Sacramentally.

Arguments againſt the popiſh deuice of concomitance.

Secondly, whereas Chriſt ſeuerally conſecrated the Bread, ſaying, This is my body, and the Cup, ſaying, This is my blood; if then both Chriſts bodie and blood were receiued ſacramentally in one kind, Chriſt had ſuperfluouſly and in vaine diſtinguiſhed them.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Chriſt diſtinguiſhed the ſignes, to repreſent his death and paſſion thereby; but therefore it followeth not, that his body and blood ſhould be ſeparated or diſtinguiſhed: as one may picture a mans head in one table, his bodie in another; and yet both ſhall be together ſtill. *Bellarm.ibid.c.*21.

Contra. Firſt, if Chriſts death is repreſented both by eating the bread and drinking the cup; as the Apoſtle ſayth, 1.Cor.11.26. then where eyther of them is omitted, Chriſts death is not repreſented; and ſo conſequently, there is no Sacrament. Secondly, we make no reall diſtinction of Chriſts bodie and blood, as we graunt no ſuch reall preſence; and therefore it is a beggerly ſhift, ſo often to inculcate the thing moſt in queſtion betweene vs: the head and feete ſunderly pictured, are ſpiritually and figuratiuely diſcerned, though in act not deuided; and ſo are Chriſts bodie and blood ſacramentally diſtinguiſhed.

Thirdly, Chriſt ſaith, This is my bodie, he ſaith not, This is my ſelfe; neither is the body and blood of Chriſt called Chriſt, God, and man: but if the bodie of Chriſt were there preſent with his ſoule and diuinitie, it might be ſaid, This is Chriſts ſoule and deitie, as well as This is Chriſts body and blood.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Chriſt ſaith not, This is I, but, This is my bodie, becauſe he would onely expreſſe that, which is repreſented by that ſigne: and though we ſay not, that the bodie of the Lord is God and man; yet that, which lyeth hid vnder the forme of bread, is God and man, ibid.

Contra. Firſt, if the bread onely repreſent Chriſts body, then his body onely is there, for there is none other preſence but ſacramentally, and by way of repreſentation: and againe, who ſeeth not how he deſtroyeth the chiefe foundation of the reall preſence, by expounding theſe wordes, This is my body, that is, repreſenteth or ſignifieth my body. Secondly, hee confeſſeth, that Chriſts body is not God and man; but, this is his bodie: Ergo, (This) contained vnder the forme of bread, is not God and man: and thus he hath well concluded againſt himſelfe, and confeſſed the greateſt idolatrie in the world, in worſhipping that which is not God.

*Argum.*2. The whole eſſence and reaſon of the Sacrament, is found in one kind onely: Ergo, the Sacrament may be receiued in one kind. The propoſition he thus proueth; the eſſence of the Sacrament is to ſignifie, firſt, our ſpirituall nouriſhment: ſecondly, our vnion with Chriſt, and of the faithfull among themſelues: but both theſe are ſignified in eyther kind; as of the firſt Chriſt ſaith, Iohn 6. My fleſh is meate indeed: of the ſecond the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, We are one bodie, becauſe we are partakers of one bread, 1.Corinth.10.17. the partaking onely of the bread ſignifieth our myſticall vnion. *Bellarm.c.*22.

Contra. Firſt, our ſpirituall foode cannot fully be expreſſed, but in both kindes, becauſe our bodily refreſhing conſiſteth both of eating and drinking, and therefore our Sauiour ſayth, Iohn 6.55. My fleſh is meate indeed, and my blood is drinke indeed. Yea, Bellarmine might haue remembred himſelfe what he ſaith elſe where in theſe wordes, Quia Euchariſtia eſt cibus & potus ſpiritualis, &c. Becauſe the Euchariſt is ſpiritual meat and drinke, therefore it muſt be giuen vnder the forme of meate and drinke. *cap.*10.*ration.*5. And if in Scripture ſometime bread onely be named; yet thereby, as by the more principall part, is ſignified the whole ſuſtenance of man, both of meate and drinke: as in the Lords Prayer, Giue vs our daylie bread, wee pray not for bread onely, but for drinke alſo, and what els needfull for our bodily ſuſtenance. Secondly, the vnion alſo of Chriſt and his members is not fully and ſufficiently expreſſed but in both kindes: for the cup is the communion of the blood of Chriſt; the bread the communion of the bodie of Chriſt, 1.Corinth.10.16. Wherefore as our perfite vnion with Chriſt conſiſteth not in the communion of his bodie onely, but both of his bodie and blood; ſo this vnion is expreſſed and repreſented, in both the ſignes of the cup and the bread: And the Scripture alſo euidently deſcribeth this vnion, to be in partaking both of the ſame fleſh and blood, as Hebr.2.14. Foraſmuch as the children were partakers of fleſh and blood, he himſelfe likewiſe tooke part with them. Thirdly, the vnion of the faithfull themſelues, though it be not the eſſentiall and principall ſignification of the Euchariſt, which is to be done in the remembrance of Chriſt, and to ſhew forth his death, 1.Cor.11.25.25. but is inferred by way of conſequence and application; yet neither is this vnion amongſt our ſelues ſo ſignificantly expreſſed in one of the elements, as in both: firſt, becauſe as our communion with Chriſt is fully expreſſed, in the bread and cup together, as I haue ſhewed; ſo our communion amongſt our ſelues, which is an effect, and conſequent of the other, cannot otherwiſe be fully ſignified. Secondly, as the Scripture deſcribeth our naturall vnion, by the partaking of the ſame blood, Act.17.26. he hath made of one blood all mankind: ſo our ſpirituall coniunction is aſcribed both to the blood and fleſh of Chriſt, Epheſ.2.13. Now in Chriſt Ieſus, yee which were once a farre off, are made neere by the blood of Chriſt, verſ.14. which hath made of both one, &c. verſ.15. in abrogating through his fleſh the hatred, &c. Thirdly, though the Apoſtle giueth inſtance onely of the bread, in ſaying, We are one body and one bread, becauſe we are partakers of one bread; 1.Cor.10.17. yet hereof it followeth not, that the bread and wine together do not more fully expreſſe the vnion of the faithfull, then eyther of them apart, ſeeing that the Apoſtle in ſetting forth our communion with Chriſt, made mention of them both, verſ.16.

*Argum.*3. There is no ſpirituall fruit receiued by both kindes, that is not receiued by one: for it ſhould be eyther in reſpect of the ſignes, or of the thing ſignified and conteined in the ſignes: but in neither reſpect is there more fruite: Firſt, to receiue both the ſignes profiteth not more, then to receiue one; as in Baptiſme, to be thrice dipped, is no more, then to be waſhed but once. Secondly, the thing conteined being Chriſt, he being twice in the ſame inſtant receiued, profiteth no more, then once; for then three ſuppes of the chalice ſhould be better then one. *Bellarmin.cap.*23.

Contra. Firſt, the more ſpirituall fruite which ariſeth by communicating in both kinds, rather then in one, is both in reſpect of the ſignes and the thing ſignified taken together: And his inſtance of thrice dipping in Baptiſme is nothing like, becauſe that it is not warranted by the inſtitution, and commandement of Chriſt concerning Baptiſme, as the vſing of bread and wine is preſcribed in the Euchariſt: And againe the thrice dipping, is a repeating and iterating of the ſame thing: but to eate the bread, and drinke the cuppe, are two diuers things. Secondly, the things ſignified (for things contained, in the popiſh ſenſe vnder the formes of bread and wine, we acknowledge none other but the ſubſtances of them) are not one, but diuers, the bodie and blood of Chriſt: and therefore the inſtance of the three ſuppes of the chalice is ridiculous and not to the purpoſe, which is but a ſuperfluous and ſuperſtitious repetition of the ſame action; but he which receiueth bread and wine, as he doth two ſeuerall actions, ſo ſpiritually he is made partaker of two diuers things, namely, of Chriſts bodie and blood: wherefore let him keepe his three ſups of the chalice to himſelfe, and aske his ignorant Italian maſſe-prieſts the reaſon, why three ſups rather then one or two ſhould be good for the chin-cough.

Thirdly, that there ariſeth no more ſpirituall fruite by one element then by both, is contrary to the Scripture. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith, that by eating and drinking both, Wee do ſhew the Lordes death, 1.Cor.11.26. not by ſeeing onely and beholding, as Bellarmine is not aſhamed herein to contradict the Apoſtle: the Lords death then is ſhewed, and our faith thereby confirmed by vſing both. Secondly, Iohn 6.55. our Sauiour ſaith, My fleſh is meate indeed, and my blood is drinke indeede: So then, as meate is not ſo profitable to the bodie without drinke, as both together; ſo neither is the ſpirituall meate without the ſpirituall drinke. Thirdly, if the bread alone be as effectuall, as the bread and cup together, then Chriſt commanded a ſuperfluous thing, in giuing it in charge vnto vs to vſe them both.

*Argum.*4. Moſt of the figures and types of the Euchariſt do ſignifie the receiuing in one kind: as the Tree of life in Paradiſe, whereunto no water was ioyned; the Paſchall Lambe which was eaten; Manna, Exod.16. the Shewbread, Leuitic.24.5. the ſacrifices whereof the Prieſts did eate, but the drinke offeringes were not taſted of, but powred out before the Lord. *Bellarmin. cap.24.argum.*1.

Anſw. Firſt, arguments drawne from types and figures conclude not, vnleſſe they be, Typi deſtinati, Types ordayned of God to ſuch vſe: neyther are the Sacraments of the Goſpell to be ſquared out according to the patterne of the ceremonies of the law: We alſo denie that the ceremonies and rites of the Law, as the Paſchal Lambe, Manna, and the reſt, are figures and types of our Sacraments; but both their Sacraments and ours are figures and repreſentations of Chriſt, as S. Peter calleth Baptiſme, ἀντίτυπον, a figure correſpondent, or anſwering vnto Noah his Arke, 1.Pet.3.21.

Secondly, the figures propounded doe rather make for the Communion in both kindes: In Paradiſe, as there was a Tree of life, ſo there was a riuer to water the garden, Geneſ.2.10. And therefore Apocal.22.1,2. the celeſtiall Paradiſe is deſcribed according to the paterne of the terreſtriall, to haue both a Tree of life and a riuer of cleare water: In the Paſſeouer as the Lambe was eaten, ſo the blood was ſprinckled vpon the doore poſts: And at the ſame time, that the Iſraelites dranke water out of the rocke, Exod.17. they did alſo eate Manna, which was giuen them euery day from heauen: The Shewbread maketh not for them, for it was lawfull onely for the Prieſts to eate thereof; but they will not ſay, that the Prieſts onely are to eate the hoaſt, for they giue it to the people: the Sacrifices likewiſe with the drinke offerings ſerue not their turne, for neither did the Prieſts taſte of the drinke offerings; and by this reaſon the cuppe ſhould be denied as well to their Prieſts, as to their lay people.

Thirdly, we haue Types of both kinds to be receiued together, as Melchiſedech brought forth bread and wine together, Geneſ.14. And whereas hee aunſwereth, that this type for both kindes maketh not againſt them, as the other types for one kinde make againſt vs, becauſe they doe not vrge the neceſſitie of one kinde, as we doe of both: wee replie firſt, that the types alleaged make not at all againſt receiuing in both kinds, as I haue ſhewed. Secondly, the types are not contrarie one to another, if ſome of them ſhew both kindes, how can the other ſerue for one kinde? Thirdly, if it be not neceſſarie to receiue in one kind, it is not to be done at all: for either it is agreeable to the inſtitution of Chriſt to receiue in one kinde, or diſagreeable: if it be agreeable and preſcribed, it is of neceſſitie to be obſerued: if it be not preſcribed, it is of neceſſitie not to be vſed at all.

Fourthly, what though the types ſome of them ſhew the Sacramentall bread onely, ſome the Sacramentall cuppe; yet theſe may be ioyned in the ſubſtance and bodie, which are ſeparated in the figure and ſhadow: as the Propheſies of Chriſts paſſion and the manner thereof, are not found in one place: as, Ye ſhall not breake a bone of him, is found Exod.12. They pearced my hands and my feete, Pſalm.22. They ſhall looke vpon him, whom they pearced, Zachar.12.10. Doth it therefore follow, that theſe things ſhould not be fulfilled at one inſtant? ſo though ſome types onely ſhould ſignifie the eating of bread, as Manna; ſome the cuppe, as the water out of the rocke: yet theſe things ſeuered in the figure, may be ioyned together in the thing figured.

Argum.5. Luk.24.30. Chriſt brake bread to his diſciples: Act.2.42. The Apoſtles brake bread: Ergo, to communicate in one kinde is grounded vpon the example of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, *Bellarmin.lib.4.de Euchariſt.c.*24. Rhemiſt. Iohn.6.11. And Chriſt ſaith, Whoſoeuer ſhall eate this bread, ſhall liue for euer, Iohn.6.58. Ergo, it is ſufficient to receiue in one kinde.

Anſw. Firſt, to the two firſt places, we ſay, that it is not neceſſarie to vnderſtand the breaking of bread in the Sacrament: but the vſuall bread rather, which was accuſtomed in their daylie repaſts and feaſtes after thankeſgiuing to be broken. Or, if we take it for the Sacrament, the breaking of bread is by a Synecdoche taken for the whole myſterie, as it is an vſuall phraſe of ſpeech in Scripture: for otherwiſe we will conclude as well, that Chriſt and the Apoſtles did but conſecrate in one kinde, which they holde for a great abſurditie, as that the other receiued but in one kinde: But their opinion is, that although the people muſt communicate in one kinde onely, yet the Prieſt muſt conſecrate in both, *Rhemiſt.annot.Iohn.6.ſect.*11.

Bellarmine here anſwereth, that the Apoſtles did conſecrate in both kinds, but they miniſtred to the people onely in one; for it is like that many of them were Nazarites, and ſo would not drinke wine contrarie to their vow. *reſp.ad ration.*3.

Contra. Firſt, Bellarmine a little before ſpeaking of that place, Luk.24. how our Sauiour brake bread to the two Diſciples in Emaus, ſayth, Nullum locum benedicendo, &c. That no place is left in the ſtorie for the bleſſing or diſtribution of the cuppe: ſo that in his opinion Chriſt did not conſecrate in both kinds: as Chriſt did there, ſo doe the Apoſtles here. Secondly, as here the Apoſtles breake bread, ſo likewiſe S. Paul Act.20.7. but he miniſtred in both kinds, as he writeth to the Corinthians, 1.Cor.11.26. but the Apoſtles were not contrarie one to another: therefore they alſo at Ieruſalem miniſtred in both kinds. Thirdly, it might be, that ſome of the congregation were Nazarites, but not all, for the whole number was three thouſand, Act.2.4. and the vow of the Nazarites did hold but for a time; for S. Paul alſo had a vow, & yet receiued in both kinds. Act.18.18.

2 To the ſecond place we anſwere: Firſt, it is not vnderſtood of the ſacramentall eating of Chriſt, but of the ſpirituall manducation of him, which may be done without a Sacrament: For whoſoeuer eateth this bread, ſhall liue for euer: but whoſoeuer eateth the Sacrament, ſhall not liue for euer. Secondly, ſeeing the eating and drinking of Chriſt are ſo often ioyned in this chapter, as verſ.53.55.56. they might well know, that drinking is here to be vnderſtood, though it be not expreſſed.

Argum 3. In many countries there is no wine to be had, as in the colde Northerly countries: and therefore they cannot communicate according to the inſtitution: whereupon that there might be an vniformitie in all Churches, it is moſt meete that where wine may be had, they ſhould notwithſtanding be content to receiue it in one kinde, *Bellarm.cap.*28. Alſo there may ariſe much inconuenience in granting the cup to the people, as in ſpilling and ſheading the wine, which after conſecration is the blood of Chriſt, *Rhemiſt.annot.Iohn.6.ſect.*11.

*Anſw.*1. As in ſome countries there is no wine to be had, ſo we finde that in certaine places and regions of the world there is no bread, ſuch as Chriſt vſed, made of wheate or the like graine: as in ſome places amongſt the Weſt Indians they haue a certaine kinde of breade made of rootes, called Cazabi, as Benzo witneſſeth. Lib.1.cap.27. Wherefore by this reaſon of vniformitie, we ſhould not communicate at all, either in bread or wine, ſeeing that as ſome countries are deſtitute of wine, ſo other are of bread: but all this notwithſtanding, the Sacrament may be duely adminiſtred in all places in both kinds: And where they haue neither bread nor wine, neither can poſſiblie prouide them, they may ſafely vſe ſuch other elements, as doe ſtand them in the like ſtead; as in the place of bread, that which commeth neareſt to the vſe thereof: and for wine, ſome other precious liquor, that is to be had, as in Ruſſia, in ſtead of wine, they vſe a certaine drinke like vnto that which we call Metheglen.

2 As for the other reaſons of the inconueniences in ſpilling the wine, ſhaking the cup, the hanging of it on mens beards, and other ſuch friuolous allegations: as they were no let or hinderance, why Chriſt notwithſtanding did not inſtitute the Sacrament in both kindes, and the Church accordingly obſerued it, as we reade, the Corinthians did communicate in both kindes: ſo ought they to be no reaſon, why Chriſtians ſhould not receiue in both kindes now.

The Proteſtants.

WE holde it to be an Antichriſtian practiſe of the Church of Rome, to take away from the people the cup in the Sacrament: for although they ſometime miniſter the cup to the people, yet they vſe no conſecration ouer it, neither giue it as any part of the Sacrament, Fulk. annot. 1.*Cor.*4.10.*ſect.*4 They doe therefore offer great wrong to the people of God, in depriuing them of the one halfe of the communion.

Argum.1. Ioh.6.53. Chriſt ſaith, Except you eate the fleſh of the Sonne of man, and drinke his bloud, you haue no life in you. Here we ſee both eating and drinking are ioyned together: Ergo, Chriſtians ought to doe both. This place maketh ſtrongly againſt our aduerſaries, who do expound it of the ſacramentall eating and drinking of Chriſt.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, theſe words of our Sauiour Chriſt doe binde vs onely to the taking and receiuing of Chriſts body and bloud, they inioyne not the manner of receiuing them, whether vnder one kinde or both, Bellarm.lib. 4.de Euchar.cap.25.

Contra. If theſe words be vnderſtood of the ſacramentall eating and drinking of Chriſt, as the Ieſuite ſaith, they are: then muſt Chriſt be receiued ſacramentally vnder both kinds: ſpiritually to eate and drinke Chriſt, it is all one: but his body cannot be ſacramentally eaten, but in bread, nor his blood ſacramentally drunke but in wine: for we are ſaide to eate, not to drinke bread.

Bellarmine 2. The wordes are to bee read diſiunctiuely, Except ye eate the fleſh, &c. (and) that is, (or) drinke the blood of Chriſt, as it is read Act.3.5. ſiluer, and, that is, or, gold haue I none.

Contra. Firſt, it followeth not, (and) is taken for (or) in ſome places of Scripture, therefore in all it is ſo to be taken, as in this. Secondly, the example alleaged is nothing like, for whether we ſay, ſiluer and gold haue I not, or, ſiluer or golde, &c. it is no materiall or ſubſtantiall poynt of faith: but here is a condition of ſaluation annexed, except ye eate, and drinke, &c. ye haue no life in you: wherefore we muſt not dally thus in ſo waightie matters of our ſaluation, with (and) and (or). Thirdly, where Chriſt ſaith, Iohn 3. Except a man be borne of water and the ſpirit, he cannot enter into the kingdome of heauen, he may as well ſay, that and here is taken for or, and ſo either of them ſhall be ſufficient, as to be borne of water without the ſpirit. Laſtly, to admit your diſiunction, (though this be a new Grammarian tricke to put a coniunction for a diſiunction) then it followeth, that either may ſuffice, to eate Chriſts body, or drinke his blood in the Sacrament: and ſo conſequently, as you preſume to giue the bread without the cuppe, ſo the cuppe may be vſed without the bread.

Bellarm.3. This precept is giuen to the whole Church; yet it is ſufficient if it bee performed by ſome onely in the Church, that is the Miniſters: ſo that precept is generall giuen in the creation, Encreaſe, and multiplie: yet all are not therefore bound vnto procreation.

Contra. Firſt, the example is nothing like: for the precept or libertie rather of procreation is not laid vpon men with any ſuch neceſſitie, as this commaundement of eating and drinking Chriſts bodie, and blood is; which whoſoeuer doth not, periſheth, verſ.53. Secondly, the precept is generall, becauſe the daunger of periſhing, or not hauing life in tranſgreſſing the ſame is generall: Whoſoeuer doth not ſo eate and drinke Chriſt, periſheth: Ergo, it belongeth to all to eate and drinke Chriſt.

Argum.2. Chriſt inſtituted the Sacrament in both kindes, giuing charge and commaundement to all Chriſtians in the ſame manner to celebrate it: for he ſaith, Drinke ye all of this. If our aduerſaries anſwere, as they doe, that this was ſpoken to the Apoſtles: firſt, by the like reaſon they may ſay alſo, that when Chriſt ſaid, Take, eate, he ſpake vnto his Apoſtles, and ſo the people ſhould neither receiue bread and wine, but the Miniſters onely.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Chriſt indeede gaue the whole Sacrament in both kindes onely to his Apoſtles, yet he forbiddeth not, but that it may be giuen to the people alſo: yea he commandeth it, in ſaying, Hoc facite, Doe this.

Contra. Bellarmine here, hath made a good argument againſt himſelfe: for Chriſt ſaith, Do this, not onely after the breaking of the bread, but the giuing of the cup alſo, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, 1.Corint.11.24,25. Wherfore if it be a commandement from Chriſt to miniſter the Sacrament in both kinds, it is great impietie in them to withhold either: for they may as well withhold the bread as the cup; and as well both, as one: and ſo the people ſhould haue no Sacrament at all.

Secondly, Chriſt ſaith after the cup, Drinke ye all of this: but after giuing of the bread, he ſaith not, Eate ye all of this: ſo that our Sauiour as it were did foreſee, that the cup ſhould bee denied to ſome, and therefore directly commaundeth that to be vſed of all.

Bellarmine here telleth vs, that though the Euangeliſts haue not theſe words, eate ye all of this, yet by tradition it is certaine, that Chriſt ſpake them.

Contra. Thus he holdeth the Scriptures imperfect, and maketh blind traditions of equall authoritie with them: thus adding to the Scriptures, not regarding the great curſe laid vpon al ſuch, that God will adde vnto them plagues, &c. Apocal.22.18.

*Argum.*3. Our Sauiour ſaith after the giuing of the cup, This is my blood, which is ſhed for you, and for many: wherefore the blood of Chriſt muſt bee giuen to all thoſe, for whom it was ſhed; and ſo conſequently to lay-men alſo.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Chriſt died for all men, euen Turkes, Iewes, Infidels: and by this reaſon, if his blood ſhould be giuen to all, for whom it was ſhed, euen Turkes and Iewes alſo ſhould be admitted to the Communion: for the proofe of the firſt part, he alleageth 1.Corinth.15. Coloſſ.1. 1.Ioh.2.

Contra. Firſt, that Chriſts death is ſufficient for all the world, if all could beleeue in him, wee willingly acknowledge: but that Chriſt died effectually for all, theſe places proue not, but onely for the elect. Saint Paul ſaith, 1.Cor.15.22. As in Adam all die, ſo in Chriſt ſhall all be made aliue: If all men generally be here vnderſtood, and not the vniuerſall companie of the elect onely; then all men indeede ſhould be made aliue by Chriſt, and ſo be ſaued. Againe, Coloſſ.1.20. He hath reconciled all things in heauen and in earth: If he will vrge theſe words (all things) ſtrictly according to the letter, then Chriſt muſt haue died for all creatures: wherefore the Apoſtle by all things in earth, vnderſtandeth all nations both Iewes and Gentiles, as he expoundeth it, verſ.21. You, which were ſtrangers, hath he reconciled, &c. And where S. Iohn ſaith, 1.Epiſt.2.2. that Chriſt died for the ſins of the whole world: he is not contrarie to himſelfe, who teſtifieth thus of Chriſt, Ioh.17.9. I pray not for the world: if Chriſt prayeth not for the world, much leſſe did he die for the world: wherefore by the world is ſignified the vniuerſall companie of the elect. Secondly, that Chriſt died onely to ſaue the elect, it is euident by theſe places of Scripture: Ioh.17.19. For their ſakes ſanctifie I my ſelfe: which his ſanctifying was in offring himſelfe vp in ſacrifice to God his father: Epheſ.5.25. He gaue himſelfe for his Church: Coloſſ.1.24. I fulfill the reſt of the afflictions of Chriſt in my fleſh for his bodies ſake, which is the Church: Al Chriſts ſuffrings both in his own perſon, and in his members, are for the ſame companie and bodies ſake: but his ſuffrings in his members are for the Church, as here the Apoſtle ſaith, and for the elects ſake; 2.Timoth.2.10. I ſuffer all things for the elects ſake, that they might obtaine ſaluation in Chriſt: Ergo, Chriſts ſuffrings in his owne perſon are onely for the elect. But of this matter hereafter we ſhall haue better occaſion to entreat at large: to which place I referre the reader. Thirdly, this rather is a good argument to proue that Chriſts blood was not ſhed for all, becauſe the Sacrament of his blood muſt not be giuen to all: For to whom the thing ſignified belongeth, the ſigne doth much more; as our Sauiour reaſoneth, Mar.10.verſ.14. Suffer little children to come vnto me, &c. for of ſuch is the kingdome of God. Chriſt toucheth, and bleſſeth children, becauſe they had intereſt in Chriſts kingdome: ſo the bleſſing of the Sacrament belongeth to them, that haue intereſt in Chriſts blood.

*Argum.*4. Our Sauiour ſaith, Hoc facite, Doe this, &c. in the miniſtring of the Sacrament we muſt doe as Chriſt did: but he gaue the bread, and ſimiliter, likewiſe the cup, Luk.21.20. he gaue the one in like manner as the other: Ergo, ſo muſt the Miniſters of Chriſt doe now, diſtribute both to the people.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, that Saint Luke hath not, Hoc facite, Doe this, after the giuing of the cup, but onely after the bread.

Contra. But S. Paul ſetteth downe, Hoc facite, Doe this, after the cup alſo, 1.Cor.11.25. and both Saint Lukes Goſpell and Saint Pauls Epiſtle are of one and the ſame authoritie. Now where Bellarmine putteth a difference in S. Pauls words, that ſpeaking of the bread, he ſaith, Doe this in remembrance of me: but after the cup, Doe this, as oft as you drinke it, in remembrance of me: who ſeeth not his ridiculous fondnes herein, making a difference, where there is none at all?

Secondly, ſaith he, he did not giue the cup, ſimiliter, in like manner, as the bread, for he brake the bread, ſo did he not the cup: and of the bread, it is ſaid, he gaue it, but of the cup, likewiſe he tooke it; not, likewiſe he gaue it, 1.Corin.11. Ergo, the cup was not giuen in like manner, *Bellarm. reſponſ. ad argum.*3.

Contra. Firſt, Bellarmine profeſſing himſelfe a Maſter in his ſect, may be aſhamed thus to palter, as though in euery thing, we ſaid the cup was giuen like to the bread: for the bread is broken, and eaten; the wine is diuided, and not broken, as Saint Luke himſelfe ſaith, preuenting this cauil, verſ.17. but in the action of giuing, bleſſing, receiuing, they are alike. Secondly, neither S.Luke nor S.Paul ſay, likewiſe he tooke the cup, but thus onely, likewiſe the cup: ſo that the word, take, or giue, may be indifferently ſupplied out of the words going before: and yet S.Marke ſaith directly, that he gaue the cup alſo, chap.14.23. We ſee what goodly ſtuffe here is.

Argum.5. Saint Paul writing to all the faithfull at Corinthus, deliuereth this as a tradition and commaundement from Chriſt, that they ſhould receiue in both kindes: ſaying, Hoc facite, Doe this: and verſ.28. Let a man examine himſelfe, and ſo eate, &c. and drinke. But the tradition of Chriſt and his Apoſtles muſt not be tranſgreſſed. Ergo.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, that Saint Paul, verſ.28. doth not bid them eate, &c. and drinke, but onely preſcribeth a way, how they ſhould doe it profitably, when they did eate, &c. and drinke. Secondly, he denieth that this tradition of the Apoſtle is a precept. Thirdly, he denieth that this epiſtle was written to all the faithfull at Corinthus; ſo that the doctrine therein ſhould concerne them all.

Contra. Firſt, S.Paul, verſ.28. doth both bid them examine themſelues, and that done he doth bid them eate and drinke: and though wee could not finde a precept in the Apoſtles wordes, yet that is a precept of Chriſts rehearſed by the Apoſtle twice, Hoc facite, Doe this, verſ.24.25. Secondly, if this tradition of the Apoſtle binde not, neither is in the nature of a precept, where hee ſaith, 1.Cor.11.23. I haue receiued of the Lord that, which I haue deliuered to you: then neither is that a binding and commaunding tradition, where he ſaith, 1.Corinth.15.3. I deliuered vnto you, that which I receiued, how Chriſt died for our ſinnes; which hee vttereth in the ſame manner of ſpeech, and with the like authoritie from Chriſt: So that if this doctrine muſt be beleeued, that Chriſt died, &c. then the other tradition of receiuing in both kindes ought to be receiued. Againe, if the Apoſtles traditions binde, Keepe the traditions, which ye haue been taught, 2.Theſſ.2.15. how much more the traditions, which (he ſaith) he receiued from Chriſt? And is it not ſtrange, that we are driuen now to maintaine the authoritie of traditions againſt the Papiſts? Thirdly, it is falſe, that this epiſtle and the doctrine therein contained concerneth not all the faithfull at Corinthus, ſeeing the Apoſtle directeth his epiſtle to all the Saints at Corinthus, with all that call vpon the name of Ieſus, 1.chap.1.verſ.2.

Argum.6. The Prieſt that ſaith Maſſe, you allow to conſecrate and receiue in both kinds, becauſe he muſt expreſſe liuely the paſſion of Chriſt, and the ſeparation of his blood from his bodie in the ſame: Rhemiſt.annotat.Ioh.6.58. By the ſame reaſon all the communicants ought to receiue in both kindes, becauſe they doe all ſhew forth the death of Chriſt, and ſhedding of his blood in the Sacrament, 1.Cor.11.26.

Argum.7. This prohibition for lay men, not to receiue in both kinds, is but a late deuiſe of the Church of Rome, not paſt two hundred yeere old, decreed no longer agoe then in the Councell of Conſtance, Fox p.1150. Yet after that, the Councell of Baſile graunted the vſe and libertie of the cup to the Bohemians, Fox pag.694.

Thus they take vpon them to ouer-rule mens conſciences, now reſtraining, now againe granting libertie, binding and looſing at their pleaſure.

Tract.in Iohan.27. In Auguſtines time there was no ſuch ſeparation of the cup from the bread: but both were indifferently vſed in the Communion: Cum cibo & potu, ſaith he, id appetant homines vt neque eſuriant, neque ſitiant, hoc veraciter non præſtat, niſi iſte cibus & potus, &c. As men by their meate and drinke doe prouide, that they neither hunger nor thirſt: ſo this ſpirituall meate and drinke worketh the ſame effect in vs. Whereupon it followeth, that ſeeing in the Sacrament is contained and ſignified the full and ſufficient nouriſhment of our ſoules by the fleſh and blood of Chriſt, it muſt needes bee reſembled by the outward full ſufficient nouriſhment of our bodies, which is not by eating alone, but by eating and drinking.

See alſo the teſtimonie of Bernard of this matter, or who elſe is the author of thoſe ſermons: Audite fratres, non me, ſed Apoſtolum dicentem, calix benedictionis, nonne communicatio ſanguinis Chriſti? Calix.i.communicatio calicis, facit nos communionem quandam cum Chriſto, i.ſerm.Guerric. Heare yee my brethren, not me, but the Apoſtle ſaying, the cup of bleſſing is it not the communication of the blood of Chriſt? ſo then the cup, that is the communicating, or partaking of the cuppe, doth ioyne vs in one communion with Chriſt. If then the people of God, euen ſuch, as are of the lay ſort, haue one communion with Chriſt, the ſigne of that communion which is the cup, is not to be denied them.

Concil.Matiſconenſ.2.4. decernimus, vt omnibus diebus dominicis altaris oblatio ab omnibus offeratur tam panis, quam vini: We decree, that euery Lords day, the people doe make an oblation of bread and wine: that is, that they ſhould communicate in both, vt peccatorum ſuorum ſordibus careant, that they may be freed from their ſinnes.

Concil.Vormatienſ.can.31. Leproſis, ſi fideles Chriſtiani fuerint, dominici ſanguinis & corporis participatio tribuatur: Let leprous perſons, if they beleeue, communicate both the bodie and blood of Chriſt: Here is excepted no ſorte or calling of men, if they bee Chriſtians.

Let vs ſee their owne teſtimonie: Decret.par.3.diſtinct.2.c.7.Iulius:Seorſim panis, ſeorſim calicis commendatio memoratur: The bleſſing of the bread, and the bleſſing or commendation of the cup are ſunderly rehearſed. But moſt euidently, *ibid.c.*12.Gelaſius: Comperimus autem,&c. We finde, that ſome receiuing onely a portion of the ſacred bodie, doe abſtaine from the cuppe of blood, who either let them receiue, integra ſacramenta, the whole and entire Sacraments, or let them bee kept from the whole: becauſe the diuiſion of one and the ſame myſterie cannot be done without great ſacrilege. Gelaſius here maketh no mention at all of conſecrating, but of receiuing in one kinde, which he counteth great ſacrilege in whomſoeuer: his words are generall.

Likewiſe the Maſter, *lib.4.diſtinct.*11.f. rendreth a reaſon out of S. Ambroſe of receiuing in both kindes: Valet ad tuitionem anima & corporis,&c. That which we receiue is auailable for the tuition both of the bodie and ſoule: for the fleſh of Chriſt is offered for the health of the bodie, his blood for our ſoules. But lay men haue ſoules to ſaue, as well as Prieſts: Ergo, they ought to receiue both Chriſts bodie, and blood. Some alſo of the Papiſts themſelues doe hold, that there ariſeth more ſpirituall fruite by receiuing in both kindes, than in one: *Alexand. Alenſis in 4.par.ſumm.queſt.*53. *memb.*1.*Gaſpar.Caſſalius,libr.de cœna & calice,cap.*25.

The holie Martyrs haue ſealed this trueth: Iohn Philpot, pag.1820. Chriſt inſtituted nothing ſuperfluous; therfore you cannot ſay, that the whole effect of the Sacrament is as well in one kind as in both: if it were, Chriſt would haue giuen but one kinde onely.

Biſhop Cranmer holy Martyr: Chriſt ſaid, Drinke ye all of this: the Pope giueth a contrarie commaundement to Chriſt, that the lay ſort ſhall not drinke of the cup of their ſaluation. Theophilus Alexandrinus ſaith, That if Chriſt had been crucified for the diuels, his cup ſhould not haue been denied them: Yet the Pope denieth the cup of Chriſt to Chriſtian people, Fox pag.1890.

THE NINTH QVESTION, OF THE adoration of the Euchariſt.

The Papiſts.

IT was decreed in the Councell of Trent, that the Euchariſt ſhould bee adored euen with the highest degree of worſhip, (Cultu latreia) which is proper to God: that it ſhould alſo be carried about in ſolemne proceſſions, to be ſhewed to the people, to bee worſhipped and adored of them. And whoſoeuer holdeth the contrarie, they pronounce accurſed, *Trident.Concil.ſeſſ.*13.*can.*6. 27. Error.

*Argum.*1. Hebr.1.6.Worſhip him all ye Angels: Ergo, Chriſt in the Sacrament, and whereſoeuer elſe his perſon is, ought to bee adored of men and Angels, Rhemiſt.ibid. This Saint Paul meaneth, they ſay, by diſcerning the Lords bodie, 1.Cor.11.29. that is, adoring, worſhipping it, and making prayers vnto it, Rhemiſt.ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, we denie Chriſt to bee preſent in the Sacrament really, corporally, ſubſtantially: therefore it is not to be adored. Secondly, although the bodie of Chriſt were preſent in that manner vnder the accidents of bread and wine; yet vnleſſe Chriſt be ſo preſent, that the elements or the accidents of the elements be ioyned and vnited vnto him in one perſon, as the Godhead and humanitie make but one perſon, he is no more to be adored, then God the Father is to be worſhipped in the Sunne or Moone, in the which he is verely preſent. But to ſay that the viſible formes and elements are ioyned in an hypoſtaticall vnion to Chriſt, as his humanitie is to his Godhead, it is great blaſphemie. Thirdly, a reuerent eſtimation and diſcerning of the Lords bodie we grant in the Sacrament; in preferring the elements before all other meates and drinkes, becauſe of their myſticall ſignification, as wee preferre the myſticall waſhing in Baptiſme before all other: but to kneele, hold vp the hands, and to worſhip a piece of bread, we count it groſſe and abominable Idolatrie.

*Argum.*2. Bellarm. God is verely and truly to be worſhipped, Matth.4. Thou ſhalt worſhippe the Lord thy God,&c. but Chriſt in the Euchariſt is very God: Ergo, verely in the Euchariſt to bee worſhipped, *cap.*29.

Anſw. Firſt, all this wee eaſily graunt, that Chriſt is in the Euchariſt to bee adored, ſo is he alſo in Baptiſme, and in the word preached, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, 1.Corinth.14.24. If all prophecie, if there come in one, that beleeueth not,&c. the ſecrets of his heart are made manifeſt, and ſo he will fall downe on his face, and worſhip God, and ſay plainly that God is in you indeede: So we alſo, though wee denie that the Euchariſt is to be adored, yet wee adore Chriſt in the Euchariſt, ſaying, We praiſe thee, we bleſſe thee, we worſhip thee, we glorifie thee,&c. Secondly, he ſhould haue aſſumed thus, but the Euchariſt is very God, if he would haue prooued any thing: but it were blaſphemie ſo to ſay: for though wee ſhould graunt the bodie of Chriſt verely to be preſent, yet is not the bodie of Chriſt God. And beſide there are the formes of bread and wine remaining ſtill, which being creatures and not hypoſtatically ioyned to the perſon of Chriſt, cannot without great perill of Idolatrie bee adored.

Thirdly, to put all out of doubt, Chriſts fleſh is not bodily preſent, neither ſhal they be able, while they liue, to proue it: and therefore they haue no colour or ground at all of their adoration.

The Proteſtants.

THat the Sacrament is not to be adored with any godly worſhip, but onely to bee duly reuerenced as an holie myſterie; thus we proue it by the word of God.

Argum. 1. In the firſt inſtituting of the Sacrament, the Apoſtles receiued it ſitting, not kneeling, by taking of it, not lifting vp their hands to it: Ergo, they did not adore it, neither is it by vs to be adored.

Againe, Chriſt commaundeth vs, onely to Take, and eate and drinke, and to doe all in remembrance of him: the Sacrament therefore was appointed to bee eaten and drunken, not to be carried about, or to be gazed vpon, or to be kneeled vnto.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that it was no maruel, that they worſhipped not the bodie of Chriſt inuiſiblie preſent vnder the forme of bread, ſeeing they worſhipped not Chriſt himſelfe viſiblie preſent at the table: for it was now Supper time, neither could they at all times worſhip Chriſt, lib. 4. cap. 30.

Contra. 1. Though the Apoſtles did not alwaies externally worſhip Chriſt, eſpecially being occupied in ciuill and common acts, as taking now their repaſt at Supper: yet there was now great occaſion offered, both in reſpect of this high religious act begun, the inſtitution of the Sacrament: and becauſe of this great and wonderfull worke in the tranſubſtantiating of the bread into Chriſts bodie. Now it had become them to haue fallen downe, and wondred, as Peter did at the taking of ſo many fiſh, Luke. 5. 8. and Thomas did when he thruſt his hand into Chriſts ſide: And though they were ſitting at ſupper, yet they might ſoone haue chaunged their geſture; eſpecially ſeeing the legall ſupper was finiſhed, and Chriſts ſupper begun. Therfore it is moſt like, that there was no adoration at all then intended.

Argum. 2. Saint Paul ſaith, Whatſoeuer is not of faith is ſinne, Rom. 14. 23. but the adoration of the Euchariſt is not of faith: for faith commeth by hearing of the word, Rom. 10. 17. but no where in the word are we taught, to adore the elements in the Euchariſt: Ergo, it is ſinne.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the word doth euidently teach that Chriſt is to be adored; and that he is in the Euchariſt, and therefore in the Euchariſt to be adored, c. 30. reſp. ad argum. 2.

Contra. Firſt, that Chriſt is to bee adored as God and man, both in the Euchariſt, and euery where elſe, both of men and Angels, the Scripture teacheth, and we beleeue: but hereof it followeth not, that the Euchariſt it ſelfe is to be adored with diuine worſhip. Secondly, neither is it of faith, or by the word, that Chriſts bodie is preſent in the Sacrament corporally: for if it were of faith, it ſhould be plainly expreſſed in Scripture, as Saint Auguſtine ſaith: In ijs, quæ apertè in ſcripturis poſita ſunt, inueniuntur ea omnia, quæ continent fidem, moreſq; viuendi: In thoſe places, which are plainly ſet forth in Scripture, are all thoſe things found, that containe faith and manners, lib. 2. de doctrin. Chriſtian. c. 9. But that onely place, which they vrge, this is my bodie, though it be to vs maniſeſt and plaine, yet by their groſſe comment is made obſcure: and therefore according to their owne rule, In rebus obſcuris minimum eſt ſequendum: In obſcure things the leſſe and ſafeſt from danger is to be followed, Bonif. 8. regul. iuris. 30. But there is leſſe daunger in not adoring at all; but in adoring there is perill and feare of idolatrie.

Argum. 3. Chriſt, as we haue ſhewed, is no otherwiſe preſent in the Euchariſt, then in Baptiſme. But the water in Baptiſme is not to be adored: Ergo, neither the bread in the Sacrament.

Auguſtine did not ſo much as dreame of any adoration of the Sacrament: A Cerere & Libero Paganorum dijs longè abſumus, quamuis panis & calicis ſacramentum noſtro ritu amplectimur: We doe not worſhip the heatheniſh Gods of corne and wine, Ceres and Bacchus, although after our maner we embrace the Sacrament of the bread, and of the cuppe. His meaning is, that Chriſtians doe not worſhip bread and wine in the Sacrament, as the heathen did, contr. Fauſt.

In ſacramenti ſanctificatione & diſtributione exiſtimo Apoſtolum propriè iuſſiſſe fieri προσευχὰς, orationes, 1. Timoth. 2. 1. Quod verò quidam codices non habent, orationes, ſed adorationes, non arbitror ſcienter interpretatum: In the conſecrating and diſtributing of the Sacrament, I thinke the Apoſtle bade orations or prayers to be made, not as ſome doe vnlearnedly interpret, adorations or worſhippings, Epiſtol. 59. Ergo, he approueth not the adoration of the Sacrament.

Bellarmine obiecteth that place of S. Auguſtine Pſal. 98. Nemo carnem illam manducat, niſi prius adorauerit: No man eateth that fleſh, vnleſſe he firſt adore it. Bellarm. cap. 30.

Anſw. S. Auguſtine, as he holdeth onely a ſpirituall manducation: Quid paras dentes & ventrem? crede & manducaſti, &c. Why doeſt thou prepare thy teeth and bellie? beleeue onely and thou haſt eaten, for to beleeue in him is to eate him, decr. par. 3. diſt. 2. cap. 47. So he is to be vnderſtoode ſpeaking of adoration: as Chriſts fleſh is eaten, ſo is it adored; it is ſpiritually eaten by faith, Ergo, it is ſpiritually to be adored. So ſpeaketh alſo Euſebius Emiſſenus, as he is cited in the decrees, part. 3. diſt. 2. cap. 35. Sacrum Dei corpus fide reſpice, honora, mirare, &c. The ſacred bodie of God behold by faith, honor it,maruell at it, touch it with thy minde, receiue it with the hand of thy heart,&c.

Nicen.2.action.6. Theſe words are rehearſed out of the Synode of Conſtantinople, which was aſſembled againſt images: Ecce viuificantis illius corporis imaginem totam,&c. Beholde all the image of that liuelie and quickening bodie, the ſubſtance of bread, which he commaunded to be ſet before vs, leaſt, if it ſhould be ſhewed in humane ſhape, Idololatria induceretur, Idolatrie by this meanes ſhould bee brought in : They conclude directly againſt the adoration of the Sacrament.

Concil.Florentin.ſeſſ.25. The Grecians maner is, when as the bread and wine are caried by the Prieſt from one Altar to another, Capita ſua reuerenter inclinant cùm panis ipſe vinumque nondum ſint conſecrati: Doe reuerently bow their heads,when as the bread and wine are not yet conſecrated. So then the Greeke Church doth reuerently vſe them as holy ſignes, not adore them with a diuine worſhip : for it were to too groſſe Idolatrie to worſhip the bare elements, ſuch as they are before conſecration.

Trullan.Synod.can 90. *Nicen.1.can.*20. and in diuers other Councels it was decreed, that none ſhould bow their knees diebus dominicis, vpon the Lords day. It is not like then, that kneeling, they did adore the Sacrament ; which was vſually celebrated vpon the Lords day.

So that this adoration of the Euchariſt ſeemeth to bee but a new deuiſe, hauing no warrant from the auncient practiſe of the Church : and indeed Honorius the third was the firſt, that commaunded the people at eleuation time to incline and bow themſelues, and when the Hoaſt was carried about in proceſsion: as it may appeare,*decr.Greg.lib.3.t.41.c.*10.

See alſo the teſtimonie of the holy Martyrs: Iohn Fortune: if it be not God before the conſecration,it is not God after,for God is without beginning and ending.p.1919.

Thomas Spurdance holy Martyr : I receiue Chriſt by fayth by beleeuing in him : but the bread Fox.p.2025. being receiued is not God, nor the bread, that is yonder in the pixe is not God : God dwelleth not in temples made with hands. And therefore you doe very euill to cauſe the people to kneele downe and worſhip the bread.

AN APPENDIX OR TENTH PART, WHETHER the wicked doe receiue the bodie of Chriſt.

The Papiſts.

THe wicked,they ſay, doe in the Sacrament eate the true fleſh of Chriſt and drinke his blood, 28.Error.
though they be infidels,and ill liuers.

*Argum.*1. They are guiltie of the bodie and blood of Chriſt, 1.Corin.11.27. How can they be guiltie of that,which they haue not receiued ? And againe,by the vnworthie receiuing of no other Sacrament,is a man made guiltie of the bodie and blood of Chriſt, but onely heere : Ergo, the wicked are partakers of his bodie? *Rhemiſt.annotat.1.Corinth.11.ſect.*16.

Anſw. Firſt,the wicked may be guiltie of the bodie and blood of Chriſt in vnworthie receiuing the Sacrament,though Chriſt be not corporally preſent : Euen as he that contumeliouſly receiueth the ſeale of the Prince or abuſeth his image,is guiltie of the Maieſtie of the Prince,though he haue not hurt his perſon. Secondly,he alſo may be guiltie of the blood of Chriſt, that deſpiſeth Baptiſme,which he receiued as a ſigne of his waſhing in the blood of Chriſt. And ſo the Apoſtle ſaith of wicked men,that fall away from Chriſtian religion,that they crucifie againe to themſelues the Sonne of God,Hebr.6.6.

Auguſtine alſo bringeth in Chriſt thus ſpeaking to the wicked in the day of iudgement,Grauior apud me eſt peccatorum tuorum crux,in qua inuitus pendeo, quàm illa, in quam tui miſertus aſcendi : The croſſe of thy ſinnes,whereby thou didſt crucifie me,was more grieuous vnto me, then the croſſe, to the which for thy cauſe I was lifted vp : *Serm.181.cap.*7 de tempor. Thus we ſee,that wicked men by their ſinfull life may crucifie Chriſt,though they can offer no violence to his bodie.

*Argum.*2. One Collins a Papiſt thus reaſoned from the example of Iudas: Iudas receiued the bodie of Chriſt, Ergo,the wicked,&c. Fox.p.1686.

Anſw. Firſt,it is not ſo certaine out of the Goſpell,whether Iudas receiued the Euchariſt at all with the other Diſciples, but ſome thinke that he went out before : and there are ſome probable coniectures of this opinion : as firſt, it is like that the firſt ſupper was not yet finiſhed, becauſe of the dipping of the ſoppe, which was giuen vnto Iudas : for in his laſt ſupper,there was no ſuch dipping vſed,but onely bread and wine. Secondly, the waſhing of the Diſciples feete was done before the laſt ſupper, and immediatly vpon that waſhing, the ſoppe was giuen to Iudas, and forthwith vpon it he went out: Theſe and other coniectures might leade one to thinke,that Iudas was not preſent at the inſtitution of the laſt ſupper, but that S. Luke ſetting downe the ſtorie in order,as Auguſtine thinketh, rehearſeth thoſe words of Chriſt, as ſpoken after his laſt ſupper: Be- hold the hand of him which betrayeth me, is with me at the table. Luk.22.verſ.21.

Secondly, it is notwithſtanding certaine, that the wetted or dipped ſoppe was not the Euchariſt, which was giuen to Iudas; for Chriſt miniſtred the bread and wine apart, bread by it ſelfe, and wine by it ſelfe, not ſoppes in wine: as the decree condemning a certaine abuſe of ſome that gaue the Euchariſt to the people dipped, or ſopped, concludeth thus, Intincta buccella,&c. The dipped ſoppe ſerued to bewray the betrayer of his Maiſter, not to ſignifie the Sacrament. p.3.d.2.c.7.

Thirdly, though we graunt with Auguſtine, that Chriſt deliuered the Euchariſt to Iudas as well as to the reſt of the Apoſtles, in Pſalm.10. rehearſed alſo in the decrees, *p.2. cauſ.1.q.1.c.*88. yet it followeth not that he receiued Chriſts bodie, Satan being entred in before, but the Sacrament onely of his bodie.

The Proteſtants.

THat wicked men and Infidels, cannot in any ſenſe be partakers of the true body and blood of Chriſt, thus it is proued.

*Argum.*1. By faith onely are wee made partakers of the bodie and blood of Chriſt: but this faith the wicked cannot haue. The firſt part is proued out of the Goſpell: He onely that drinketh of the blood of Chriſt ſhall neuer thirſt againe, Iohn 4.14. He that ſhall neuer thirſt, muſt beleeue in Chriſt, Iohn 6.35. Ergo, he onely that beleeueth doth drinke the blood of Chriſt. So Auguſtine ſaith, Nolite parare fauces, ſed cor; non quod videtur, ſed quod creditur, paſcit: Doe not prepare your iawes, but your heart; it is not that which is ſeene, but what is beleeued, that nouriſheth: Ergo, Chriſt muſt be receiued by faith: therefore Infidels or vnbeleeuers cannot receiue him.

*Argum.*2. Whoſoeuer eateth the fleſh of Chriſt and drinketh his blood, ſhall haue eternall life, Iohn 6.54. But the wicked haue not eternall life: Ergo, they neither eate nor drinke of Chriſt. So Origene reaſoneth: Si fieri poſſet, vt qui malus adhuc perſeueret,&c. If it were poſſible, that he which yet remaineth wicked, could eate the word made fleſh, it had not been written, He that eateth this bread, ſhall liue for euer: Hom.in 15. Matth.

But here they will thruſt in an olde diſtinction: that we muſt conſider three things in the Euchariſt, Speciem panis, veritatem carnis, virtutem gratiæ ſpiritualis: The ſhape of bread, the veritie of Chriſts fleſh, the ſpirituall grace or vertue: the firſt a mouſe may gnaw; the ſecond a wicked man may receiue; the third none but the faithfull can haue.

*Contra.*1. The veritie of Chriſts fleſh cannot bee ſeparated from the ſpirituall grace: for hee ſaith, Iohn 6.55. My fleſh is meate indeede,&c. and whoſoeuer eateth my fleſh hath eternall life, verſ.54. If the wicked then verilie eate Chriſts fleſh, they verily haue eternall life. Secondly, ſo then there are not three, but two things in the Sacrament: the Sacramentall ſigne, which the wicked may be partakers of; and the ſpirituall grace, which is the communicating of Chriſts bodie and blood, which none but the faithfull can haue: As Bernard witneſſeth: Sacramentum ſicut accipit ad vitam dignus, ſic ad mortem indignus, rem ſacramenti nemo percipt, niſi dignus & idoneus: As the worthie may receiue the Sacrament to life, ſo the vnworthie vnto death: but the matter or ſubſtance of the Sacrament no man receiueth, but he that is worthie. Bernard de vit. ſolitar.

Tract. in Iohann.26.

Auguſtine ſaith, De menſa dominica ſumitur quibuſdam ad mortem, quibuſdam ad vitam,&c. From the Lords table ſome doe receiue vnto life, ſome vnto death: but the thing, whereof it is a Sacrament, worketh in all to life, in none to death, whoſoeuer are partakers of it. But the body and blood of Chriſt are the things ſignified in the Sacrament: Ergo, whoſoeuer receiueth them hath life thereby; the wicked then receiue them not.

*Colonienſ.part.*6.*cap.*2.Panis ſpiritus, tam per verbum prædicationis quàm ſacramentaliter in veritate corporis & ſanguinis dominici in viua fide comeſtus, viuificat,&c. The bread of the ſpirit, as well by the preaching of the word, as in the Sacrament, being eaten by faith in the veritie of the bodie and blood of Chriſt quickeneth. The veritie of Chriſts bodie then is receiued by faith, which the wicked haue not: and as they receiue not Chriſt in the worde preached, ſo neither in the Sacrament.

Arguments out of the decrees, that the wicked eate not Chriſts bodie.

We haue the teſtimonie of their owne decrees: *Part.*3.*diſt.*2.*c.*65. Qui diſcordat à Chriſto,&c. He that diſſenteth from Chriſt, doth neither eate his fleſh, nor drinke his blood. But the wicked diſſent from Chriſt: Ergo.

1 *Ibid.c.*69. Quicunque panem hunc manducauerit,&c. Whoſoeuer eateth this bread, ſhall liue for euer. But the wicked liue not for euer: Ergo, they eate not this bread.

2 *Cap.*70. Quando Chriſtus manducatur, vita manducatur: When Chriſt is eaten, life is eaten. But the 3 wicked eate not life: Ergo, they eate not Chriſt.

4 *Cap.*75. Norunt fideles,&c. The faithfull know how they eate the fleſh of Chriſt: Therefore wicked and vnbeleeuers know it not.

5 *Cap.*40. Qui manducauerit corpus,&c. He that eateth Chriſts bodie, hath remiſſion of ſinnes: The wicked haue not remiſſion of ſinnes. Ergo.

Laſtly, *ibid.c.*42. this was the faith of Pope Nicolas, to the which he cauſed Berengarius to ſubſcribe, Corpus Chriſti frangi & fidelium dentibus atteri: That Chriſts bodie is broken and chawed in the teeth of the faithfull. So that his bodie commeth not betweene the teeth of the wicked and vnfaithfull.

Maſter Bradford holy Martyr, when Harpſfield had ſaid, the wicked receiue the body of Chriſt, Fox.p.1815. but not the grace of his bodie: anſwered: They receiue not the bodie: for Chriſts body is no dead carcaſe, he that receiueth it, receiueth the ſpirite, which is not without grace.

Iohn Newman Martyr, after one Collins had ſaide, that Iudas receiued the body of Chriſt: replied, But the Diuell was entred into him before, and if the Diuell and Chriſt were there at once, how could they agree together? pag. 1686. Theſe holy Martyrs, with many others, for this their franke confeſſion of their faith, were cruelly put to death.

THE SECOND PART OF THIS CONTROVERSIE, CONCERNING THE POPISH MASSE.

THis part likewiſe comprehendeth diuers queſtions.

1 Of the diuers repreſentations of the death and ſacrifice of Chriſt.
2 Of the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, the name thereof, and of the ſacrificing prieſthood.
3 Of the vertue and efficacie which they falſly aſcribe to the Maſſe.
4 For whom the ſacrifice of the Maſſe is auailable: whether for the quicke and the dead.
5 Of priuate Maſſes.
6 Of the manner of ſaying and celebrating Maſſe.
7 Of the ceremonies which they vſe in the idolatrous ſacrifice of the Maſſe: ſome goe before: ſome are obſerued in the celebration thereof.
8 Of the forme of the Maſſe, which conſiſteth partly of the Canon, and of the preface to the Canon, where we are to ſhew the ſtrange and hereticall blaſphemies, which in great number are vttered by them in the Maſſe. Of theſe now in order.

THE FIRST QVESTION, OF THE DIVERS repreſentations of the death of Chriſt.

The Papiſts.

THey are not contented with that one liuely repreſentation of the death of Chriſt, which is 29. Error. exhibited in the Lords Supper, but they haue brought in two more beſide that, and ſo make three in all: the firſt, ſay they, is ſimplex repræſentatio, a ſimple and plaine repreſentation of the death of Chriſt, which is done ſo often as the Sacrament is receiued. The ſecond is, Repræſentatio ad viuum, A liuely and full repreſentation of Chriſts death: which they doe vſe yearely to ſet forth by ſolemne geſtures, apparell, and other ceremonies vpon Good Friday, as it is commonly called, before Eaſter, when they doe make nothing elſe but a Pageant play of the Sacrament. The third repreſentation is alſo a ſacrifice beſide, and that is the ſacrifice of the Maſſe. *Bellarm. de Miſſa. lib.*1.*cap.*1. The Rhemiſts make a fourth repreſentation beſide, which is in the ſolemne receiuing of the Communion at Eaſter: So then firſt, Chriſts death is ſhewed forth by the Sacrament of the Euchariſt all the yeare long as it hangeth in the pixe, or when it is carried to houſle the ſicke, *Catechiſm.Rom.pag.*408. Secondly, it is repreſented once in the yeare by their ſolemne Pageant vpon good Friday, when there is no Sacrament conſecrated, but an hiſtrionicall expreſſing by certaine geſtures and actions, the manner of Chriſts crucifying. Thirdly, in the continuall ſacrifice of the Maſſe, Chriſt his death is repreſented. And laſtly, in the ſolemne receiuing at Eaſter: for then eſpecially, the myſterie of Chriſt our Paſchall Lambe is commended to the people to be eaten with all ſinceritie in the Sacrament: and ſo doe the Rhemiſts expound that place of S. Paul, Let vs keepe feaſt or holy day, not with the leuen of malitiouſnes, 1.Cor.6.8. literally applying it to the feaſt of Eaſter, Rhemiſt. in hunc locum.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, we are taught by the word of God, that by eating the bread, and drinking of the cup in the Sacrament, not by gazing, looking, lifting vp, turning, hanging vp bread in pixes, or by any ſuch meanes, but only as wee haue ſaid, is the Lords death ſhewed forth and repreſented, 1.Corinth.11.26. We acknowledge therefore one onely ſacramentall repreſentation of Chriſt, and no more in the Lords Supper: the ſacrifice of the Maſſe we iudge to be an abominable idoll, as afterward ſhall be ſhewed.

Secondly, it is a foule abſurditie to make any repreſentation of Chriſts death by bare geſtures, ſhewes, and actions of the bodie without any Sacrament, as they doe in their popiſh Pageants vpon Chriſts Paſſion day: for at that time there is no Sacrament conſecrated; but the Prieſt, by certaine geſtures and motions of the bodie, in bowing, bending, caſting abroade his armes and ſuch like, doth reſemble Chriſt crucified, Bellarmin. cap. 1. But to call this a liuely repreſentation done without a Sacrament, and the other in the Sacrament, ſimplicem repræſentationem, but a ſimple and plaine repreſentation, is too great preſumption: wherein they preferre their owne ſuperſtitious deuiſes, before the ordinance of Chriſt.

Thirdly, that place of S. Paul is vnfitly applied to the celebration of Eaſter: Auguſtine expoundeth it far otherwiſe: Diem ſeſtum celebremus, non vtique vnam diem, ſed totam vitam in azymis ſynceritatis & veritatis: Let vs keepe holy day, not one onely day, but all our life long, in the vnleauened bread of purenes and trueth. So then in Auguſtines iudgement, the Apoſtle had no relation to any certaine time, which he would haue kept holy: but to the reformation of the whole life.

Laſtly, Nicen. 2 action. 6. tom. 3. The ſentence of the Synode of Conſtantinople is thus rehearſed, after they had ſet downe the words of our Sauiour, This doe in the remembrance of me, they infer thus, Ecce viuificantis illius corporis imaginem totam panis, id eſt ſubſtantiam: Behold the whole image of that quickening bodie, the ſubſtance of bread. The Synode vpon theſe words of Chriſt concludeth, that there is no other repreſentation of Chriſt, but in the Euchariſt: ſo that without the Sacrament there is no repreſentation at all. Likewiſe, Concil. Toletan. 12. c. 5. Quoties ſacerdos ſanguinem & corpus Chriſti in altario immolat, toties ſe participem præbeat: As often as the Prieſt doth offer vp the bodie and blood of Chriſt, let him be partaker of it. Wherefore by this Canon the ſacrifice of Chriſts bodie and blood cannot be repeated or repreſented, without the partaking and receiuing of the Sacrament.

THE SECOND QVESTION, OF THE SACRIFICE of the Maſſe, and the Prieſthoode thereto belonging.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE NAME and terme of Maſſe.

The Papiſts.

30. Error. THere are diuers opinions amongſt them, concerning the originall of this name. Some ſay it is called Miſſa, the Maſſe, Quia oblatio & preces ad Deum mittantur, Hugo de S. Victore. Others, quòd Angelus à Deo mittatur, qui ſacrificio aſſiſtat: Becauſe an Angell is ſent of God to be aſſiſtant at the Maſſe. Thom. Aquinas 3. part. quæſt. 83. artic. 4. Some of the Hebrew worde Miſſath, Deut. 16. which ſignifieth an oblation: Some, ex miſſis donariys, & ſymbolis, of the giftes and offerings ſent or put in before the Communion. But what beginning ſoeuer it had, they doe now generally take the Maſſe, for that ſolemne action, whereby the Sacrament is made a ſacrifice, and offered vp to God, Bellarm. lib. 1. de miſſa. cap. 1.

The Proteſtants.

WE doe not greatly force vpon this name: for both the name and the thing is aboliſhed from our hearts and mouthes; and wee truſt in God, wee ſhall neuer haue occaſion to know it againe. But howſoeuer it is, this name Miſſa, Maſſe, cannot ſignifie any ſuch thing as they pretend.

1 For it ſeemeth that Miſſa was deriued, à dimiſſione populi, of the dimiſſion or ſending away of the people: and ſo was taken generally for any congregation aſſembled either to pray, or ſing Pſalmes, or for any other religious duety: As yet to this day in the dutch language (Miſſe) ſignifieth any ſolemne frequencie or congregation of the people. In this ſenſe Caſſianus vnderſtandeth Maſſe, that is, for the dimiſſion of the people: ſpeaking of him that commeth not timely to the howres of prayer: hee would not haue him to enter in, but Stantem pro foribus congregationis miſſam præſtolari debere: He ought ſtanding without the doores to waite for the miſſe of the congregation. Or as Maſter Philpot giueth the ſence of this word, the Communion was called, Miſſa, à mittendo: of ſuch things as were ſent at the celebration of the Sacrament by ſuch as were of abilitie to the reliefe of the poore, pag. 1815.

De Canonicis orat. lib. 3. c. 7.

2 Auguſtine taketh this word Miſſa generally for the Leiturgie or ſeruice of the Church, as ſerm. de tempore 251. if that Sermon be Auguſtines. Sunt aliqui, & maximè potentes huius mundi, cùm veniunt ad eccleſiam, non ſunt deuoti ad laudes Dei celebrandas, ſed cogunt Preſbyterum vt abbreuiet Miſſam: There are ſome, and commonly the great men of the world, which come not to Church with any deuotion to ſing praiſes to God, but they conſtraine the Presbyter or Miniſter to make ſhort Maſſe. Here this word Maſſe ſignifieth the whole Leiturgie, as ſinging of Pſalmes, and praiſing God; not any ſacrifice or oblation: which could not be abridged or curtalled. Wherefore as the ſacrifice of the Maſſe is of no great antiquitie, ſo neither is the name in that ſenſe.

And it is euident out of their owne decrees, that the Sacrament of the bodie and blood of Chriſt was more vſually knowne of ancient time by other names, than this of the Maſſe. Decret. p.2.cauſ.1.qu.1.c.72. Gregorie calleth it the Communion. C.88. Auguſtine, Euchariſtiam, the Euchariſt. Decret.p.3.diſt.2.c.63. it is called Sacramentum pietatis, The Sacrament of pietie or deuotion. Ibid.c.17. Soter calleth it Cœnam Domini, The Supper of the Lord. Ibid.c.8. Alexander, the oblation. C.12. Gelaſius, Myſterium, a myſterie. C.5. Sacramentum corporis & ſanguinis Domini: The Sacrament of the bodie and blood of Chriſt. Theſe and other ſuch names they gaue this Sacrament, more ſignificant, and farre more ancient than the title of the Maſſe.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE SAcrifice of the Maſſe.

The Papiſt.

31.Error. CHriſt, they ſay, at his laſt Supper, did offer vp his owne bodie and blood in ſacrifice, vnder the formes of bread and wine, to God his father: and at the ſame inſtant made his Apoſtles, and their ſucceſſors Prieſts, to offer vp his bodie in the Sacrament, Concil.Tridentin.ſeſſ.22.cap.1. And the ſame bodie which Chriſt offered vp vpon the croſſe, is daily offered vp by the miniſterie of the Prieſts; the difference onely is in the manner of offering, Concil.Trident.ibid.cap.2. The eternitie and proper act of Chriſts Prieſthood, conſiſteth in the offering and ſacrificing of the bodie and blood of Chriſt in the formes of bread and wine in the Church, Rhem.Heb.7.ſect.8. And we meane alwaies of Prieſt and ſacrifice taken in their owne proper ſignification, ibid ſect.7. In the Euchariſt then there is a true ſacrifice of the very bodie and blood of Chriſt offered vp to God, by the hands of the Prieſt, in the formes of bread and wine, Bellarm cap.5.

Argum.1. Chriſt is a Prieſt after the order of Melchiſedech: but the proper act of Melchiſedechs Prieſthood did conſiſt in ſacrificing in the formes of bread and wine: Ergo, the eternitie of Chriſts Prieſthood ſtandeth in the ſacrificing of his bodie and blood in thoſe formes: there doth therefore ſtill remaine a proper externall ſacrifice in the Church, Rhemiſt.annot.Heb.7.ſect.8.Bellarm.cap.6.

And that Melchiſedechs Prieſthood conſiſted in the oblation of bread and wine, Bellarmine would ſtrengthen by theſe reaſons:

Firſt, from the word vſed, Geneſ.14.18. he brought forth, the Hebrue word is, יצה iatſa, which in Scripture is properly applied to the bringing forth of ſacrifice: as Geneſ.4. the like word is vſed to ſignifie Cain and Abels ſacrifice, Bellarm.c.6.

Contra. Firſt, the word, which here ſignifieth to bring forth, is not alwaies, or for the moſt part, applied to the bringing of ſacrifice; as Exod.3.10. That thou maiſt bring my people out of Egypt: Ierem.51.10. The Lord hath brought forth our righteouſnes: wherefore his obſeruation of this word is more bold, than true. Secondly, Geneſ.4.3. Cain brought an oblation to the Lord: Here theſe two words, an oblation, and to the Lord, doe ſhew that he brought a ſacrifice: but there is not any word ioyned in this place to Melchiſedechs bringing, that may conclude a ſacrifice.

Secondly, becauſe Abraham had no neede of bread and wine to refreſh himſelfe, being returned with great ſpoyle from his enemies, and ſo hauing ſufficient to refreſh himſelfe with: therfore it is like Melchiſedech brought them forth to offer to God.

Contra. Firſt, your owne vulgar text hath this note in the margent: Melchiſedech cibat ipſum Abraham: Melchiſedech doth feede Abraham himſelfe: their owne note is againſt them. Secondly, whereas Abraham had receiued all the King of Sodomes goods, and the victuals alſo, which were carried away, though hee ſuffered the young men to eate thereof; yet he would not take himſelfe of the Kings goods ſo much as a thread or a ſhooe latchet, verſ.23. and therefore it was Gods prouidence to ſend Melchiſedech, that hee ſhould bee refreſhed rather at his hands, than from the King of Sodome an Infidell.

Thirdly, as Melchiſedech is ſaid to haue been Gods prieſt, ſo it was requiſite that the Scripture alſo ſhould make mention of his ſacrifice, wherein his prieſthood conſiſted: but that is not any where elſe mentioned: Ergo, he offered the ſacrifice of bread and wine, Bellarm.ibid.

Contra. Firſt, the argument followeth not, there is no mention made of any other ſacrifice in Scripture which Melchiſedech offered: Ergo, he offered bread and wine: for as touching this high myſterie of Melchiſedechs prieſthood, many things in Scripture are concealed, as the Apoſtle ſaith to the Hebrues, 5.11. of whom we haue many things to ſay, which are hard to be vttered, becauſe ye are dull of hearing. Vpon which words S. Hierome thus writeth, Si vas electionis ſtupet ad myſterium, &c. If the Hieron.Euagrio, Tom.4.

the veſſell of election be aſtoniſhed at this myſterie,and confeſſeth that, whereof he diſputeth, to bee ineffable, how much more we, &c. Secondly, the Apoſtle ſheweth wherein Melchiſedech ſhewed himſelfe a prieſt,namely,in bleſſing of Abraham,and therefore receiued tithes of him,Hebr.7. verſ.6.

Fourthly,whereas the words are, Melchiſedech brought forth bread and wine, for he was a Prieſt of the moſt high God, Geneſ.14.18.the Scripture giuing this as a reaſon of his bringing forth bread and wine,becauſe he was a prieſt,implieth,that he brought them forth to ſacrifice,Bellar.ibid.

Contra. Firſt,the text according to the Hebrue is this: *And Melchiſedech King of Salem brought forth bread and wine,and he was a Prieſt of the moſt high God,and he bleſſed him,&c.*Geneſ.14.18. What though in ſome places of Scripture,and,ſignifieth(for) yet it followeth not, that it ſhould bee ſo euery where? and if it be ſo taken here in this clauſe of the Sentence,for he was a Prieſt,&c. why not in the other alſo, for he bleſſed him? ſo that this is giuen as a reaſon taken of the effect of his Prieſthood. And indeede the order of the words ſo requireth: that as firſt he is named a King, and then the effect followeth,which was his munificence in bringing forth bread and wine:ſo ſecondly he is called a Prieſt, and then the effect of his Prieſthood is expreſſed, namely, his bleſſing. Secondly, whereas Bellarmine ſaith,that the Apoſtle,Hebr.7.proueth Melchiſedech not to be a Prieſt, becauſe he bleſſed Abraham,but therefore greater onely then Abraham, it is a falſe collection: for the Apoſtle ſaith thus,Hebr.7.6.*He receiued tithes of Abraham,and bleſſed him that had the promiſes.*From which words we reaſon thus: Melchiſedech as he was a Prieſt receiued tithes: for tithes were not due but to the Prieſthood,verſ.5. but as he bleſſed he receiued tithes, as the Apoſtle ſaith, verſ.6. Ergo,as he bleſſed he was a Prieſt.

Fiftly,Bellarmine reaſoneth thus: Chriſt is ſaid to be a Prieſt for euer after the order of Melchiſedech: but his prieſthood cannot remaine,vnleſſe his ſacrifice continue ſtill: but his ſacrifice vpon the croſſe was once done for all: Ergo, hee muſt haue another ſacrifice daily to bee offered in the Church,which is the ſacrifice of Melchiſedech in bread and wine,Bellarm.c.6.

Contra. Firſt,as Chriſt is a Prieſt for euer, ſo alſo doth his ſacrifice continue for euer, which was but once offered; yet the vertue and efficacie thereof endureth ſtill: for his blood yet ſpeaketh vnto God for mercie for vs,not for vengeance,as the blood of Abel, Hebr.12.24. Secondly,it is not neceſſarie that Chriſt ſhould haue an externall prieſthood ſtill in earth: for neither in the time of the law,was there any externall prieſthood after Melchiſedechs order continued, and yet euen then, was Chriſt a Prieſt after Melchiſedechs order. Thirdly, the Apoſtle ſheweth, that Chriſt our high Prieſt is entred into heauen,as the Prieſt did goe once a yeere into the holy place, and there continueth a Prieſt for euer after Melchiſedechs order, in appearing in the ſight of God for vs,Hebr.9.23.

Sixtly,Chriſt being a Prieſt for euer after Melchiſedechs order,muſt agree with Melchiſedech in that,which was proper to Melchiſedechs prieſthood: but nothing is proper to his prieſthood,but to ſacrifice in bread and wine: Ergo,herein there muſt bee an agreement of Melchiſedechs prieſthood and Chriſts.

The aſſumption is proued thus: firſt, it was not proper to Melchiſedechs prieſthood to bleſſe, and to receiue tithes: for this the Leuiticall prieſthood did. Secondly, nor yet to haue none to ſucceede him: for ſo neither had Abel. Thirdly, neither to bee without genealogie,and ſo to bee a type of Chriſt: for there is no mention made likewiſe of the genealogie of Iob and Helias, who were alſo Prieſts: Ergo,this was onely proper to Melchiſedechs prieſthood to ſacrifice in bread and wine,cap.6.reſp.ad 3.arg.

Contra. Firſt,though Leui receiued tithes,and gaue bleſſings,yet not as Melchiſedech,to whom euen Leui paid tithes then in Abrahams loynes,Hebr.7.verſ.9.and they being of Abrahams ſeede could not be greater then Abraham;yet Melchiſedech was greater becauſe he bleſſed him: wherefore to receiue tithes of Abraham, and to bleſſe ſo great a Patriarch, was proper to Melchiſedechs prieſthood,and not common with Leui. Secondly, though Abel had none to ſucceede him in his carnall generation,and reſpect of his perſon; yet in his office in ſacrificing of ſheepe and ſuch like,he had many ſucceſſors: but Melchiſedech in his prieſthood and office had none to ſucceede him: wherefore this was alſo proper to his prieſthood, and agreeable herein to Chriſt. Thirdly, Iob and Helias are not in the Scripture called prieſts, as Melchiſedech is: but Iob is ſet forth by the name of a iuſt man, Iob.1.1. Helias by the name of a Prophet, Malach.4.5. and Melchiſedech was ſo without genealogie,as there is no mention made neither of the beginning nor of the end of his daies,Hebr.7.2.yet there is mention made both of the terme of Helias life,in the earth,when hee was taken vp into heauen,2.King.2.and of Iobs death,Iob.42.17.wherefore this alſo is proper to Melchiſedech to be a prieſt without genealogie,hauing neither beginning of daies,nor end of life, and herein he was a type of Chriſt. We neede not then ſeeke for any thing els, wherein Chriſt and Melchiſedech ſhould agree,the type anſwering in euery reſpect to the ſubſtance; much leſſe are we forced to deuiſe any ſuch ſacrifice of bread and wine.

Seuenthly,Chriſt was not a prieſt after Melchiſedechs order,in reſpect of the ſacrifice vpon the croſſe,becauſe he did not offer vp himſelfe vnder the forme of bread and wine: Ergo, hee is after Melchiſedechs order in reſpect of the daily ſacrifice offered vnder bread and wine: Bellarm.cap.6. reſp.ad argum.5.

Contra. Firſt,we denie that Melchiſedech ſacrificed vnder the formes of bread and wine at all, and therefore therein he is not a type of Chriſt at all. Thus he ſtill ſhamefully beggeth the thing in queſtion. Secondly, it followeth not that if Chriſt anſwere not to Melchiſedech in the ſacrifice of his croſſe,that the reſemblance ſhould be in ſacrificing bread and wine: for in many other things was Melchiſedech a type of Chriſt: 1. In his name, which ſignifieth King of righteouſnes. 2. In his offices,becauſe he was both King and Prieſt. 3. In the eternitie and continuance of his office. 4. In the excellencie of his perſon, in that hee was greater then Abraham the Patriarch. Thus the Apoſtle ſheweth Chriſt in Melchiſedech to haue been prefigured: ſo that wee neede not run to any ſuch ſtrange deuiſe of the ſacrifice of bread and wine. Thirdly,euen Chriſt vpon the altar of the croſſe was a Prieſt after the order of Melchiſedech, in reſpect of the permanencie of his prieſthood,and eternall efficacie of his croſſe, hauing with one offring conſecrated for euer them,that are ſanctified, Hebr.10.14.ſo that Melchiſedech was not ſo much to prefigure the matter of Chriſts ſacrifice,which was ſhadowed forth in the bloodie ſacrifices of calues and goates in the law,as to ſet forth the dignitie of his perſon,and eternitie of his office. Fourthly,this cannot be farre from blaſphemie to denie, that Chriſt was properly a Prieſt after Melchiſedechs order, and to affirme, that their popiſh prieſts doe ſacrifice in the formes of bread and wine according to the order of Melchiſedechs prieſthood: And ſuch are their reaſons drawne from the ſimilitude of Melchiſedechs prieſthood vnto Chriſt. Now on the contrarie ſide our arguments follow, to prooue,that their ſacrifice of the Maſſe hath no ſhew of ground at all in the type of Melchiſedech.

*Argum.*1. We confeſſe,that Melchiſedech was a type of our Sauiour Chriſt,and that hee was a Prieſt after Melchiſedechs order: but not in any ſuch reſpect,for offring in bread and wine: for the text ſaith,he brought forth bread and wine,he offered it not: he brought it foorth for the refreſhing of *Abraham,*and thoſe which were with him,Geneſ.14.18.

Bellarmine anſwereth,that the bread and wine were firſt offered and ſacrificed to God, and afterward giuen to *Abraham,*and his fellowes to eate,reſp.ad argum.7.

Contra. Firſt, if the ſame bread and wine were firſt offred to God, and then giuen to Abraham, then in effect nothing was offered to God: for in all offrings and ſacrifices, whether burnt-offerings,meate-offerings,or peace-offerings, ſome part at the leaſt was burnt vpon the altar vnto God: but here no ſuch thing was done. Secondly, there was no ſacrifice without an altar,fire, and wood: as Abraham laid the wood vpon *Iſaac,*and tooke the fire in his hand,and built an altar,Geneſ.22.6,10.but here are none of all theſe. Thirdly, if Melchiſedech had a purpoſe to ſacrifice to God, he would rather haue imitated Abel to haue offered of the fruites of his ſheepe, then of Cain who brought of the fruites of the earth,Geneſ.4.2.

2. He brought forth bread and wine, and not the formes onely of bread and wine: therefore your ſacrifice in the formes onely,is not after his order.

Bellarm. The ſacrifice of Melchiſedech and the ſacrifice of the Maſſe agree in the outward ſymbole,though not in the inward ſubſtance, which is ſufficient: for the repreſentation is in the accidents,not in the ſubſtance: and that was but the type or ſymbole, and therefore the ſubſtance may be diuers,reſp.ad argum.6.

Contra. Firſt,hereof it followeth,that they which conſecrate bread and wine only without any reall preſence,doe more properly imitate *Melchiſedech,*then your Maſſe-prieſts,that hold a fleſhly preſence vnder the formes of bread and wine: for Melchiſedech offered the ſubſtance of bread and wine,and not the formes only. Secondly, if Melchiſedechs oblation do repreſent the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, it muſt repreſent it as it is a ſacrifice:but the Maſſe is no ſacrifice but in reſpect of the inward ſubſtance: the ſacrifice is not of the outward formes of bread and wine: Ergo, the repreſentation is in reſpect of the ſubſtance. Thirdly,types and ſhadowes differ from the bodie in outward ſymboles onely,they agree in ſubſtance, as S.Paul ſheweth, how Chriſt was the ſame ſpirituall meate and drinke both to the Iſraelites and vnto vs, but vnder diuers Sacraments, 1.Corinth.10.4. Wherefore it is a falſe concluſion, Melchiſedechs ſacrifice was a type of the ſacrifice of the Maſſe: *Ergo,*diuers in ſubſtance.

3. If Melchiſedechs bringing forth of bread and wine, were a ſacrifice or oblation, and a type of the like ſacrifice to continue for euer in the Church, it muſt alſo haue bin a propitiatorie ſacrifice for the remiſſion of ſinnes,as they ſay the ſacrifice of the Maſſe is,which was thereby ſignified: but there is no propitiatorie ſacrifice for remiſſion of ſinnes,without ſhedding of blood, Hebr.9. verſ.22. Therefore Melchiſedechs act,being without blood,was no ſuch ſacrifice,and conſequently none at all.

4. The Apoſtle to the Hebrues ſheweth, wherein Chriſt was a Prieſt after Melchiſedechs order, der,Hebr.7. Firſt,in that Melchiſedech was both King and Prieſt,verſ.2.ſo is Chriſt. Secondly, in reſpect of the eternitie of his Prieſthood : we doe not reade either of the beginning of his daies, or end of his life, nor of any chaunge of his Prieſthood, verſ.3. All which is moſt truly verified in Chriſt. Thirdly, Melchiſedech was a type of Chriſt, and his Prieſthood of Chriſts,becauſe of the excellencie thereof aboue the Leuiticall Prieſthood : for Leui paid tithes in Abraham to Melchiſedech;and therefore was inferiour,and was bleſſed of Melchiſedech in Abraham, the leſſe of the greater : ſo is the Prieſthood of Chriſt aduanced farre aboue Aarons order. If in any other materiall point Melchiſedechs Prieſthood had reſembled Chriſts,as in this oblation of bread and wine, the Apoſtle would not haue omitted it.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Apoſtle omitteth of purpoſe to ſpeake of Melchiſedechs oblation of bread and wine,leaſt by this occaſion he ſhould haue been conſtrained to treate of the Euchariſt,which was too high a myſterie for them, and that very thing (which he ſaith) was hard to bee vttered concerning Melchiſedech,in reſpect of their dulnes,reſp.ad argum.2.

Contra. Firſt, the Hebrues were no more dull to vnderſtand, than the Corinthians : for as the Apoſtle ſaith to them,they haue neede of milke, not ſtrong meate,Hebr.5.12. ſo likewiſe he writeth to the Corinthians, that he gaue them milke to drinke, and not meate, becauſe they were babes,1.Cor.3.2. yet hee doubteth not to vnfolde to the Corinthians the myſterie of the Euchariſt both in the 10. and 11.chapters : wherefore this can bee no reaſon, why hee ſhould conceale it from the Hebrues. Secondly,the Euchariſt is no higher a myſterie,than the doctrine of Baptiſme,or then the myſterie of the reſurrection: but theſe things the Hebrues were well inſtructed in Heb.6.2.therefore they were capeable alſo of the doctrine of the Euchariſt. The antecedent is thus proued : for Baptiſme by the Apoſtle is called a myſterie : This is a great myſterie, I ſpeake concerning Chriſt and the Church,Epheſ.5.32.and wherein this myſterie lieth,is declared,verſ.26.Chriſt loued his Church, and gaue himſelfe for it,&c. that hee might cleanſe it by the waſhing of water thorough the worde. This waſhing in Baptiſme, is that myſterie, which hee ſpeaketh of : ſo alſo the reſurrection is called a myſterie,1.Cor.15.51.I ſhew you a myſterie,we ſhall not all ſleepe, but we ſhall all be changed : but theſe myſteries the Hebrues vnderſtood,Hebr.6.2.Ergo,they might ſafely be inſtructed in the myſterie of the Euchariſt.

5. Therein conſiſted the proper act of Melchiſedechs Prieſthood, for the which hee receiued tithes of Abraham : but,as the Apoſtle ſaith, hee receiued tithes, and bleſſed Abraham,Hebr.7.6. Ergo,the tithes were due not for any ſacrifice which he offered,but for his bleſſing.The ſame therfore was the proper act of his Prieſthood. See Bellarmine his anſwere,and the replie thereunto,argum.4.by him before produced.

6. Melchiſedech is a type of Chriſt in thoſe things,which are not common with Aarons Prieſthood: but to offer bread and wine was daily frequented in the Leuiticall Prieſthood: Ergo,therein conſiſteth not the type of Melchiſedech.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the ſacrifice of bread and wine in the Leuiticall Prieſthood was alwaies ioyned with other ſacrifices of beaſts, and was tempered or mingled with oyle : but here Melchiſedech offereth bread and wine alone, and ſimple bread, without any mixture,reſponſ.ad argum.4.

Contra. Firſt,it is vntrue,that the Prieſts of the law neuer vſed the oblations of bread and wine, but with other ſacrifices,as it may appeare,Leuit.2.where the law of meat-offerings is ſet downe, and no ſuch thing there preſcribed. Secondly,if the mixture of bread with oyle make a difference betweene the Leuiticall oblation of bread,and Melchiſedechs offering;then your mixture of wine with water maketh the like difference, betweene your Maſſe ſacrifice and Melchiſedechs, who offred as ſimple bread,ſo alſo ſimple wine. Thirdly,the Apoſtle ſaith, If the Prieſthood be chaunged, there muſt of neceſſitie be a chaunge of the law,Heb.7.12. Wherefore if the law of ſacrifices be changed,then could not the new Prieſthood offer the ſacrifices of the law,and therefore not bread and wine : for then the law of ſacrifices ſhould onely be chaunged in part,not in whole.

7 The eternitie of Chriſts prieſthood after Melchiſedechs order conſiſteth not in the daily ſacrifice of the Maſſe,which is offered by many Prieſts, one ſucceeding another : for this is a difference betweene Aarons order,and Melchiſedechs,as the Apoſtle noteth,that among them many were made Prieſts,becauſe they were not ſuffered to endure by reaſon of death;but this man, becauſe he endureth euer,hath an euerlaſting Prieſthood,Hebr.7.23. Ergo,in Melchiſedechs order there cannot be a multitude of Prieſts one following another.

It will be here anſwered,that although there be many Maſſe-prieſts, yet the prieſthood is one, and Chriſt the eternall prieſt offereth by them as his miniſters.

Contra. Firſt,ſo alſo the office of the prieſthood vnder the law was one,and Chriſt the vnſpotted Lambe in all the ſacrifices was typically ſlaine,Reuelat.13.8. Yea Bellarmine confeſſeth that Chriſt was a prieſt vnder the law,and offered by his types and figures, cap.6.initio : yet the difference remaineth ſtill betweene the many mortall prieſts of Aaron,and the one eternall prieſt after Melchiſedech. Secondly, the power, right, and execution of Melchiſedechs prieſthood reſteth in the perſon of Chriſt, and cannot be transferred to any other that die, but is proper to him, of whom it is witneſſed, that he liueth, Hebr.7.8.

Argum.8. To make Chriſts prieſthood eternall, it is not neceſſarie to bring in a continuall ſacrifice to bee frequented in the Church: but the Apoſtle ſheweth wherein the eternitie of his prieſthood conſiſteth, namely in thoſe foure points.

Firſt, becauſe he endureth euer, he hath an euerlaſting Prieſthood, Hebr.7.24. This reaſon Bellarmine ſaith is not ſufficient, Chriſt liueth for euer: Ergo, he is a prieſt for euer: for ſo the Leuites after the reſurrection, which were once Prieſts, and then ſhall liue for euer, might bee ſaid to be Prieſts for euer, reſp.ad argum.8.

Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtles reaſon is this; The prieſts of the law, were not prieſts for euer, becauſe they liued not euer: but Chriſt a prieſt after Melchiſedech, is a prieſt for euer, becauſe hee liueth euer: So then he peruerteth the Apoſtles reaſon, who ſpeaking of Chriſt as a prieſt, by the eternitie of his life concludeth the eternitie of his prieſthood. This then is the reaſon, Chriſt our prieſt liueth euer: Ergo, he is a prieſt euer. Secondly, the Leuites when they begin to liue euer after the reſurrection, ſhall then be no prieſts at all, and therfore cannot be ſaid to be prieſts for euer.

Secondly, Chriſt is ſaid to be a prieſt for euer, in reſpect of the euerlaſting efficacie and vertue of his ſacrifice vpon the croſſe. So ſaith the Apoſtle, With one offering hath he conſecrated for euer, them that are ſanctified, Hebr.10.14.

Bellarm. This reaſon is not ſufficient: for ſo might Noah his ſacrifice be ſaid to be eternall, becauſe the force therof remaineth, in that he obtained thereby, that the waters ſhould not returne to couer the earth: the effect alſo of Chriſts birth and death ſtill remaineth, and yet he cannot be ſaid euer to die, and to be borne, Bellarm.ibid.

Contra. Firſt, it was not the force of Noahs ſacrifice, which maketh Gods couenant ſtable, but the ground and foundation of all thoſe ſacrifices, which was Chriſt the vnſpotted Lambe ſlaine from the beginning of the world, Apoc.13.8. In whom all the promiſes of God are yea and amen, 2.Corinth.1.20. This inſtance therefore ſheweth the eternitie of Chriſts ſacrifice, the force whereof extended euen to the ages before. Secondly, as wee ſay not, that Chriſt is daily borne, but becauſe the effect of his birth remaineth euer, he is the man Chriſt for euer: ſo neither doe we ſay, that he dyeth daily, but becauſe the force of his death and ſacrifice euer remaineth, he is the Prieſt Chriſt for euer.

Thirdly, Chriſt is a Prieſt for euer, becauſe he euer liueth to make interceſſion for vs, Heb.7.25. and he is entred into heauen to appeare in the ſight of God for vs, Hebr.9.24.

The ſumme of Bellarmines anſwere here is this; that whereas Chriſt is our interceſſour by the mediation of his ſacrifice, it is neceſſarie that Chriſts ſacrifice ſhould be continually offered, ſeeing he continually maketh interceſſion for vs, reſp.ad 3.ration.8.argum.

Contra. Firſt, the argument followeth not: for the ſacrifice of Chriſt once done is the foundation of his interceſſion, and it were a great derogation to Chriſt, that his interceſſion in heauen ſhould depend of the act of prieſts in the earth. Secondly, as Chriſt is not to be imagined to continue his interceſſion by making daily prayers vnto God: ſo neither is his ſacrifice continued by daily offring; but the very appearing of him, as the Apoſtle ſaith, in heauen is ſufficient: And as Gregorie ſaith, Sine intermiſſione, &c. Our Redeemer, without any intermiſſion, doth immolate himſelfe in ſhewing his incarnation for vs to his father, &c. Moral.lib.1.c.10. Interpellari, &c. To make interceſſion for vs, is to demonſtrate himſelfe to be man, lib.12.c.13. So that as their Schoolemen confeſſe, he doth daily offer himſelfe, and make interceſſion for vs, repræſentatione ſui, by repreſenting himſelfe to his father, Gabriel Biel.

Fourthly, the Apoſtle ſheweth Chriſt to be an eternall Prieſt, becauſe he is for euer perfitly able to ſaue, Heb.7.25. Bellarm. This ſheweth him to bee a Sauiour, not a Prieſt.

Contra. As Chriſt is a Prieſt, ſo he alſo ſaueth by the ſacrifice of himſelfe. And thus much of this firſt argument drawne from Melchiſedech.

Argum.2. They alleage that place, Heb.8.3. Euery high Prieſt is appointed to offer gifts and hoaſtes: wherfore it is neceſſarie that he alſo haue ſomewhat to offer. Chriſt then hath a certaine hoaſt in externall and proper manner, as other Prieſts haue; but this viſible and externall act of ſacrificing he doth not exerciſe now in heauen: therefore it muſt needes be meant of the perpetuall oblation of his bodie and blood in the Church; for ſomewhat he muſt alwaies haue to offer, Rhemiſt.Heb.8.ſect.3.

Anſw. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith not, that it is neceſſarie that Chriſt ſhould ſtill haue ſomewhat to offer in ſacrifice: but that it was needfull for him to haue ſomewhat, which hee had alreadie offered: for the verbe προσενέγκῃ, ſignifieth not the preſent tence, but the time paſt: whereby is vnderſtood the oblation which hee had alreadie offered once, and which neede not to bee repeated, Hebr.7.verſ.27. For as herein hee is like to other Prieſts, that hee muſt haue ſomewhat to haue offered, ſo is he vnlike alſo in this, that they by reaſon of their infirmitie had neede to offer often: but Chriſt our high Prieſt did it but once, as in that place the Apoſtle ſheweth.

Heb.8.verſ.2.

2 The gift which the Apoſtle in this place attributeth to Chriſt, was his bodie, which he calleth the true Tabernacle, which the Lord pight and not man. But that bodie of Chriſt, which they ſay is offered vp in the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, is not of that nature: for it is made by the miniſterie of man: for euery one of their ſacrificing Prieſts is able to make the bodie of Chriſt: but this bodie, which Chriſt had to offer, was made onely by God, without the helpe of man, as the Apoſtle ſaith. Againe, ſay, if you dare, that the bodie which you offer, is the true Tabernacle and temple of God: for then it would follow, that God dwelleth in Temples made with hands, that is, by the miniſterie of man, contrarie to the Scriptures: ſeeing you affirme that the bodie of Chriſt is no otherwiſe preſent but by the miniſterie of the Prieſt. And what a goodly Tabernacle is this for God, thinke you, which you ſhut vp in a pixe, and hang vp in your Churches? A mouſe may eate it, the fire may conſume it, corruption may take it: would God ſuffer his Tabernacle thus to be defiled? Wherefore vpon theſe premiſſes we conclude, that what you offer in your popiſh ſacrifice, cannot be the proper gift belonging to Chriſts Prieſthoode.

*Argum.*3. The celebration of the Paſſeouer was a manifeſt type and figure of the celebration of the Euchariſt: but in the Paſſeouer there was a ſacrifice: Ergo, there muſt be a Sacrifice in the Euchariſt.*cap.*7.

Firſt, Bellarmine proueth the propoſition out of S.Paul: Chriſt our Paſſeouer is ſacrificed for vs, therefore let vs keepe the feaſt with the vnleauened bread of ſynceritie, &c. 1.*Cor.*5.8. Chriſt was not crucified or ſacrificed vpon the croſſe to be eaten; he is then ſacrificed to be our Paſſeouer, where he is to be eaten; and that is no where, but in the Euchariſt: the Euchariſt therefore is the true Paſſeouer. Bellarm.ibid.

Contra. Firſt, S.Paul ſpeaketh not in that place of any Sacramentall eating of Chriſt, but of the reformation of the whole life to be ledde in ſynceritie and trueth, as before verſ 7. Purge out the old leauen: He applieth this type to his preſent purpoſe, that the Corinthians ſhould expell from amongſt them the inceſtuous perſon: wherefore in this ſenſe Chriſt our Paſſeouer was ſacrificed vpon the croſſe, ſpiritually to be eaten by faith, and to be followed by vertuous imitation all our life. Secondly, though we grant, that the Paſchal Lambe and the Euchariſt may haue ſome reſemblances together, as Bellarmine noteth ſome, as in the ceremonie of eating commanded in them both, alſo in the end, that is to bee a remembrance of their corporall deliuerance, this of our ſpirituall; and likewiſe, as that was eaten with ſowre herbes, ſo the other muſt be receiued with true ſorrow and repentance: yet was not the Paſſeouer appointed directly to be a type of the Euchariſt, but of Chriſt crucified, as the Euangeliſt expoundeth, Iohn 19.37. theſe things were done, That the Scripture ſhould be fulfilled, Not a bone of him ſhould be broken: if then the type of the Paſſeouer were fulfilled in Chriſt crucified vpon the Croſſe, we are not to ſeeke for any other accompliſhment of it. Thirdly, if it ſhould be granted, that the Paſſeouer was a type of the Euchariſt, it followeth not, that it ſhould be in euery thing a type, which hee muſt proue, or els his argument concludeth not: for they differ in many things 1. The Paſſeouer was of fleſh with blood; the Euchariſt is of bread without blood. 2. The Paſſeouer was done in remembrance of their deliuerance; the Maſſe they ſay is a propitiatorie ſacrifice, and not a commemoration onely. 3. The Paſſeouer was eaten at Eeuen, Maſſe is ſaid in the morning. 4. Nothing was left of the Paſſeouer, vntill the morning; but their conſecrated hoaſt is reſerued. 5. The Paſſeouer was eaten in their houſes; Maſſe is ſaid in their Churches: if in theſe and other points the Paſch and Euchariſt differ, why not alſo in this? that the one was a Sacrifice, and ſo is not the other.

Secondly, whereas Bellarmine proueth the aſſumption, that the Paſſeouer was a Sacrifice, for ſo S. Marke ſaith, Marke 14.12. When they ſacrificed the Paſſeouer: We anſwere, firſt, it was not properly a Sacrifice, becauſe Sacrifices were made by fire, and were brought to the Prieſt, and ſome part laid vpon the Altar, as we may reade in the lawes of Sacrifices, Leuit.1.2.3.Chap. But the Paſſeouer was eaten in the houſe, where neyther Prieſt, nor Altar was neceſſarie, and the whole Lambe was eaten, nothing reſerued. Secondly, notwithſtanding it was called a Sacrifice, being a religious act, in reſpect of other ſacrifices of ſheepe and bullockes, which the Paſſeouer was vſed to be ſolemnized with, Deuter.16.2.

*Argum.*4. The Apoſtle ſaith, Hebr.13.10. We haue an Altar, whereof they haue no power to eate, which ſerue in the Tabernacle. Ergo, we haue not onely a common table to eate meere bread vpon, but a very Altar in the proper ſenſe to ſacrifice Chriſts body vpon. *Rhemiſt.annot. Hebr.*13.*ſect.*6.

Anſw. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the Sacrifice of Chriſts death, whereof we are made partakers by faith: which they can reape no benefite by, which remaine in the ceremoniall obſeruations of Leuiticall ſacrifices. Chriſt therefore is our Prieſt, Altar and Sacrifice: for verſ.12. the Apoſtle maketh mention of the ſufferings of Chriſt: he meaneth not then the Communion table, which is vnproperly called an Altar, or any materiall Altar beſide, but the Altar onely of Chriſts death. Secondly, if whereſoeuer in Scripture this word (Altar) is read, it muſt be taken for a proper materiall Altar, wee ſhall haue alſo a materiall Altar in heauen, Apocal.8.3. which I am ſure they will not grant. Thirdly, the Apoſtle ſaith, We haue an Altar; which is but one, whereas popiſh altars are many: it cannot therefore be vnderſtood of ſuch Altars. Fourthly, Bellarmine better aduiſed then the Rhemiſts, refuſeth to vrge this place, becauſe diuers of their owne writers vnderſtand it of Chriſts croſſe: cap.14.

Argum.5. Ierem.33.18. Neyther ſhall the Prieſtes and Leuites want a man before me, to offer burnt offrings and meate offrings, and to do ſacrifice continually: theſe are the Prieſts of the new Teſtament, which do truely offer ſacrifice in the Maſſe: for it cannot be vnderſtood of the Miniſters of the Goſpell, becauſe theſe are called Prieſtes, and are ſaid to offer burnt offringes: neyther of Chriſt, for the Prophet ſpeaketh of many Leuites and Prieſts: Bellarm.cap.9.

Anſw. Firſt, this text may very well be referred to Chriſt, for verſ.17. the Prophet had ſayd, Dauid ſhall not want a man to ſit vpon the throne, &c. This is vnderſtood of the ſpirituall kingdome of Chriſt, and ſo may the other of his ſpirituall Prieſthood: for the Prophet ſpeaketh of one ſingular man, Non interibit vir, there ſhall not be wanting a man to offer Sacrifice, &c. Secondly, but we rather vnderſtand this place of the Miniſters of the Goſpell, as it may be expounded by the like place, Iſay 59.21. I will make this my couenant with them, &c. My words ſhall not depart out of thy mouth, nor the mouth of thy ſeede, nor out of the mouth of the ſeede of thy ſeede, &c. And in the new Teſtament we reade both of ſpirituall Prieſts, Reuel.1.6. He hath made vs kings and prieſts to God his Father; and of ſpirituall burnt offrings and ſacrifices, Rom.12.1. I beſeech you giue vp your bodies a liuing ſacrifice. Thirdly, but this place cannot be vnderſtoode of any ſuch externall Prieſthoode for theſe reaſons: firſt, as is the kingdome of Dauid here promiſed, ſo is the Prieſthood: but the firſt is ſpirituall: Ergo the ſecond. Secondly, as they are called Prieſts, ſo alſo Leuites: but their Prieſts offering according to Melchiſedecks order, as they ſay, cannot be of the Leuiticall order. Thirdly, neither haue they any, holocauſtomata, burnt offerings in their Maſſe ſacrifice: therefore the literall ſenſe of this place ſerueth not their turne.

Argum.6. Daniel 8.11.& 12.11. The Prophet foretelleth how Antichriſt ſhall take away the daylie ſacrifice, which is the ſacrifice of the Maſſe: it cannot bee vnderſtoode of Antiochus, who worſhipped the God of his Fathers: but Antichriſt ſhall not regard the God of his Fathers, Daniel 11.37. Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, theſe propheſies were hiſtorically fulfilled in Antiochus Epiphanes: how that the Temple ſhould by him bee firſt prophaned, by the ſpace of two thouſand three hundred dayes, Dan.8.14. that is ſixe yeares, three moneths and an halfe: for this profanation began in the yeare 142. or thereabout, as may bee gathered 1.Macchab.1.12. for hee turned againe to ſpoyle the Temple in the 143. yeare. ibid.v.21. So that he began the yeare before: and the Temple was purged in the 148. yeare, the 25. day of the ninth moneth Caſleu. 1.Macc.4.52. Againe, the finall deſolation and defiling of the Temple with the ceaſing of the daylie ſacrifice was to endure 1290. dayes, Dan.12.11. that is, three yeares, ſeuen moneths and odde dayes: ſo it came to paſſe, for in the 125. yeare Antiochus ſent againe to defile the Sanctuarie, and to aboliſh the ſacrifice, 1.Macchab.1.30. and in the moneth of Caſleu he accompliſhed his purpoſe, and ſet vp the abomination of deſolation vpon the altar, verſ.57. and in the 128. yeare, in the eleuenth moneth Zanticus, the King by his letters patents reſtoreth religion againe, 2.Macchab.11.33. So that theſe propheſies being ſo euidently fulfilled in Antiochus, cannot be applied to any other. And concerning the obiection of Antiochus idolatrie, though he openlie profeſſed the worſhip of the idols of the heathen; yet in truth, as by his profanenes appeareth, he had no conſcience of any religion at all.

Secondly, the place cannot be vnderſtoode, as Bellarmine would enforce. Firſt, their Antichriſt ſhall raigne but three yeares and an halfe, as they ſay; but the Prophet ſpeaketh of ſixe yeares and three moneths, Dan.8.14. Secondly, if their Maſſe ſhall be aboliſhed by Antichriſt, wherein they ſay the eternitie of Chriſts Prieſthoode conſiſteth; then ſhould Chriſts Prieſthoode alſo be at an ende. Thirdly, the abomination of deſolation ſpoken of by Daniel, is interpreted to be the ceaſing of the Iewiſh ſacrifice, both in the ſtorie of the Macchabees, which is Scripture with them, 1.Macch.1.57. and by our Sauiour, Matth.24.15.

Argum.7. Malach.1.11. From the riſing of the ſunne, vnto the going downe of the ſame, my name is great amongſt the gentiles, and in euery place incenſe ſhall be offered to my name, and a pure offering: This place Bellarmine proueth by theſe reaſons to be vnderſtoode of the ſacrifice of the Maſſe; and not of any ſpirituall ſacrifice. c.10.

Firſt, by the ſignification of the Hebrue word מנחה, Mincha, that ſignifieth an offering or oblation, which properly betokeneth a kinde of externall ſacrifice, which was made of oyle and incenſe.

Contra. Firſt, if this be the proper ſignification of the word, it cannot meane the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, which conſiſteth in the formes of bread and wine, not of oyle and incenſe. Secondly, this word doth not onely ſignifie a Sacrifice, giuen vnto God, but a gift or preſent offered to man, Geneſ.33.11. So Iacob calleth his preſent ſent to his brother: wherefore the Ieſuites collection fayleth him. Thirdly, Pſalm.141.2. The Prophet ſaying, Let the lifting vp of mine hands bee an euening ſacrifice, vſeth the ſame word: Where we ſee that the ſpirituall ſacrifice of Prayer is called by this name, or reſembled to it: and ſo is the Prophet to be vnderſtoode in this place.

Secondly, the Prophet calleth it a pure offering, which cannot be polluted: but prayers may bee polluted; the ſacrifice of the Maſſe onely cannot by the euilnes of the Miniſter bee defiled. Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. Firſt, though our prayers as they proceede from vs haue many imperfections, yet they are accepted thorough Chriſt, 1. Pet. 2. Offer vp ſpirituall ſacrifices acceptable to God thorough Chriſt: in which ſenſe the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, I will that euerie where men lift vp pure hands, &c. 1. Timoth. 2. as here the Prophet ſaith, In euery place a pure offering ſhall be offered. Secondly, we haue ſpirituall ſacrifices and exerciſes of religion, which cannot be by the euilnes of the Miniſter defiled: as the preaching of the word, which though it be vnder a pretenſe preached, is profitable, Philip. 1. 18. The Euchariſt alſo which is a ſacrifice of thankeſgiuing is effectuall to a worthie receiuer, though by the hands of an vnworthie Miniſter. Thirdly, your Maſſe is ſo farre from being a pure offering, that it is the moſt impure and vncleane ſinke, that euer was brought into the Church: and your ſelues alſo require to the conſecration thereof, the intention of the Miniſter, which if it be not deuoute and religious, the ſacrifice fayleth: ſo that an impure intention alſo defileth your Maſſe.

Thirdly, the Prophet ſpeaketh of ſuch an offering as was not in vſe amongſt the Iewes: ſaying, I will not accept an offering at your hands, verſ. 10. but prayer was in vſe amongſt them: Ergo. Againe, the Prophet ſpeaking directly to the Prieſts, verſ. 6. Thus ſaith the Lord of hoſtes vnto you, O ye Prieſts, &c. and reprouing their ſacrifices, bringeth in a new kinde of offering, which a new kinde of Prieſts ſhould offer vnto God: but ſpirituall ſacrifices are common to all Chriſtians: Ergo. Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. Firſt, the Prophet ſpeaketh onely in this place of the abuſe and corruption of their externall ſacrifices, in that they offered the lame and the blinde, verſ. 8. and chap. 3. 8. Yee haue ſpoyled me in tythes and offerings: and he ſaith he will accept no ſuch offering at their hands: but he will be ſpirituallie worſhipped among the Gentiles. To the ſame effect he ſaith, Pſalm. 50. 9. 14. I will take no bullocke out of thy houſe, &c. but offer vnto God praiſe: theſe ſacrifices of praier and thankeſgiuing, though they were not altogether vnknowne to the Iewes, yet they were not ſo frequented and vſed, nor relied vpon, as the other externall ſacrifices.

Secondly, the Prophet doth not onely reproue the hypocriſie of the Prieſts, but the deceite alſo of all the people, verſ. 14. Curſed be the deceiuer, that hath in his flocke a male and ſacrificeth a corrupt thing: ſo that he propheſieth of the generall ſacrifices of all Chriſtians, not of any peculiar ſort, as S. Peter beſt of all expoundeth this place, 1. Pet. 2. 5. Yee are made a ſpirituall houſe, an holy Prieſthoode to offer vp ſpirituall ſacrifices, &c.

Argum. 8. Iohn 4. 23. The houre commeth and now is, when the true worſhippers, ſhall worſhip my father in ſpirite and trueth: By worſhip and adoration here is vnderſtoode the ſolemne worſhipping of God by ſacrifice. Firſt, the ſcope of the place giueth it: for the womans queſtion was of the worſhip of God by ſacrifice, which was tied to Ieruſalem, You ſay that Ieruſalem is the place, where men ought to worſhip, verſ. 20. but it was lawfull for the Iewes to offer ſpirituall ſacrifice in any place: therefore Chriſts anſwere muſt be of ſuch a ſacrifice which ſhould not be tied to a place, as the Iewes ſacrifice was.

Secondly, The howre commeth, &c. Chriſt ſpeaketh of a new adoration which was not before: but the time was alwaies to offer ſpirituall ſacrifices of praier, &c.

Thirdly, Chriſt ſpeaketh of publike and ſolemne adoration, which ſhould anſwere to the publike ſacrifices of the Iewes; but praier and thankeſgiuing may be done priuatlie: Ergo, he meaneth the ſolemne ſacrifice of the Maſſe, Bellarm. cap. 11.

Anſw. To the firſt reaſon. Firſt, though it were lawfull for the Iewes to pray otherwhere; yet prayer made in the Temple, had a more eſpeciall promiſe: and therefore it was called The houſe of prayer. Iſay. 56. 7. and Salomon prayeth to God at the dedication of the Temple, That whoſoeuer vpon any occaſion ſhould come and make his prayer in that houſe, God would heare in heauen euen if he were a ſtranger, 1. Reg. 8. 42. Wherefore Chriſts anſwere may include alſo the worſhip of God by prayer. Secondly, it followeth not, the worſhip of God by Sacrifice was tyed to a place, or they ſacrificed onely at Ieruſalem: Ergo, now they ſhall ſacrifice euery where: for by this reaſon the ſacrifices of beaſts might continue ſtill with an enlargement onely of the place: but Chriſt oppoſeth the ſpirituall worſhip of God, not limited to any place, againſt their carnall ſacrifices appendant to the Temple.

Secondly, though the time was alwayes for ſpirituall Sacrifice, yet neither was it ſo generall vnder the law, as vnder Chriſt, whoſe name is called vpon amongſt the Gentiles: And againe they were notwithſtanding bound to the externall Sacrifices, which now are aboliſhed by this ſpirituall worſhip: which ſeemeth in theſe two reſpects to be a new worſhip. Secondly, Chriſt ſaith, The houre now is; but as yet the Euchariſt was not inſtituted, nor the Sacrifice thereof, and therefore at this time God could not be ſo worſhipped by Sacrifice.

Thirdly, the argument followeth not, prayer may be vſed priuately: Ergo, it cannot be the publike ſeruice of God: For the houſe of God is called the houſe of prayer: therefore this publike ſpirituall worſhip doth anſwere to the ſolemne carnall ſacrifices. Secondly, neither is your Maſſe alway publike, neyther in reſpect of the place, ſeeing you allow it to be ſaid in houſes; nor in reſpect of the perſons, for the Prieſt and his boy may diſpatch a Maſſe.

Laſtly, that this place cannot be vnderſtood of the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, it is thus euident. Firſt, Chriſt ſaith, The houre is; but at that time the ſacrifice was not inſtituted. Secondly, this worſhip is in ſpirite, as God is a ſpirite: but in the Maſſe they vrge a carnall, not a ſpirituall preſence. Thirdly, God muſt be worſhipped in trueth: but the carnall preſence is a monſtrous lie. Fourthly, The Father requireth ſuch to worſhip him, verſ.23. But God no where in Scripture teacheth any ſuch carnall preſence, nor requireth vs ſo to worſhip him.

Argum.9. That which Chriſt did in his laſt Supper, hee commaunded his Apoſtles to do the ſame: but Chriſt offered himſelfe vp to his Father, vnder the forme of bread and wine: Ergo, Chriſt is offered vp in the ſacrifice of the Maſſe: Bellarm.cap.12. That Chriſt offered vp himſelfe in his laſt ſupper, he thus laboureth to proue.

Firſt, S.Luke ſaith, This is my bodie, which is giuen, and my blood, which is ſhedde, not, (which ſhall be:) ſo that in that very inſtant Chriſts body and blood was offered vnto God, and (for you) ſaith Chriſt, (not vnto you:) and (for many) as S. Matthew hath, Matth.26.28. ſo that it was a ſacrifice then offered to God, not for them there preſent, to whom it was miniſtred, but for many beſide.

Anſw. Firſt, the Scripture doth often ſpeake of that which is to come, as preſent, becauſe it is as certaine before God, as alreadie done: as Iohn 5.24. He that beleeueth, hath euerlaſting life, Ioh.10.15. I lay downe my life for my ſheep: yet Chriſt had not yet laid it down: likewiſe Exod.12.11. It is the Lords Paſſeouer, for I will paſſe, &c. the Lord had not yet paſſed ouer; yet hee ſaith, It is the Lords Paſſeouer, in the preſent tence: So, My bodie is giuen, and my blood is ſhedde: that is, it ſhall be as ſurely giuen, and ſhedde, as if it were now done.

Secondly, I do vrge Bellarmines owne words againſt himſelfe, who elſewhere ſaith, that theſe words, Which is ſhedde for you for the remiſſion of ſinnes; do not ſignifie, that his blood is drunke for remiſſion of ſinnes, but that it was ſhedde for remiſſion of ſinnes, & hoc per Euchariſtiam repræſentari: and that this is repreſented in the Euchariſt, lib.4 de Euchar.c.19.reſp. ad argum.3. If Chriſts blood be not then drunke for remiſſion of ſinnes in the Sacrament, as he confeſſeth; it is not ſhed, for the ſame thing is drunke, that is ſhedde: and if the ſhedding of Chriſtes blood be onely repreſented in the Euchariſt, then it is not ſhedde. Thirdly, it is falſe that Chriſts bodie was not giuen to the Apoſtles in the Euchariſt, for the text is plaine, He gaue the bread vnto them, and likewiſe the cup: and whereas Matthew ſaith, for many, it is euident that he ſpeaketh of Chriſts death, for the Sacrament is onely profitable to them that receiue it. Fourthly, if theſe words, which is giuen for you, are ſo materiall to proue the Maſſe a ſacrifice, why are they left out in the Canon of the Maſſe?

Secondly, S.Paul ſaith, Which is broken for you, ſignifying Chriſts bodie, for bread is not broken for them, but to them: and S. Luke ſaith, This cuppe (is the new teſtament in my blood) which is ſhed for you (which cuppe) for ſo is the conſtruction in the Greeke: ſo that the blood, as it was in the cuppe, was then ſhed. Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, S.Paul maketh euidently againſt them, for Chriſts bodie is not broken in the Sacrament, but bread: the bread, which we breake, 1.Cor.10.16. ſo that theſe words, which is broken for you, muſt be referred to the breaking and tormenting of Chriſts bodie vpon the Croſſe. Secondly, S.Luke muſt be expounded by S. Matthew, who ſaith, τὸ αἷμα ἐκχυνόμενον, The blood, which is ſhed, not τὸ ποτήριον ἐκχυνόμενον, The cuppe which is ſhed, as S.Luke hath it: which ſome thinke ſhould be read ἐκχυνομένῳ, in the datiue caſe, as S. Baſile readeth to anſwere vnto blood, in the ſame caſe: And againe, in proper ſpeaking, the cuppe cannot be ſaid to be ſhed, and blood in the cuppe we acknowledge none to be ſhed but wine onely. Vide Bez in hunc locum.

Thirdly, Bellarmine thus reaſoneth againſt the Lutheranes, who holde a carnall preſence, the blood and fleſh of Chriſt are verily in the Euchariſt, as the blood and fleſh, occiſi & mortui corporis, of a ſlaine and dead bodie, and therefore they are conſecrated apart; the body by it ſelfe, and the blood by it ſelfe: Chriſt is then preſent as a Sacrifice killed and ſlaine: Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. Let the Lutheranes here anſwere for themſelues; this argument doth not force vs at all, holding no ſuch carnall preſence: I will onely note the notable contradiction of Bellarmine, who elſe where affirmeth that the bodie of Chriſt is not in the Euchariſt, as exanimum, exangue, mortuum: as without life, without blood, or dead, becauſe Chriſt now dieth no more: lib.4. de Eucha c.21. argum.3. But here he ſaith, it is preſent as a ſlaine and dead bodie: therefore his owne anſwere ſhall ſuffice for his owne obiection.

Argum.8. S. Paul ſaith, 1.Cor.10.16. The cuppe of bleſſing, which we bleſſe, is it not the communion of the blood of Chriſt, &c. verſ.18. They which eate of the ſacrifices are partakers of the altar, &c. verſe.20. Thoſe things which the Gentiles ſacrifice, they ſacrifice to diuels. verſe.21. Ye cannot drinke the cuppe of the Lord, and the cuppe of diuels, you cannot be partakers of the Lords table, and the table of diuels. From this place Bellarmine reaſoneth thus, Such as was the table of diuels, ſuch is the Lords table: but that table was the altar of idols, Ergo, the Lords table is an altar. Againe, as the Iewes did eate the ſacrifices, and ſo were made partakers of the altar, and the Gentiles by eating of idolatrous ſacrifices were partakers of diuels: ſo we by eating the fleſh and drinking the blood of Chriſt are made partakers of him. c.14.

Anſw. Firſt, the table of diuels was not the altar of the Idols, but they had beſide their altars, tables in the Idol temples, whereat they did feaſt. 1.Corinth.8.10. If any man ſee thee ſit at table in the Idols temple: therefore as their tables were not their altars, no more is the Lords table an Altar. Secondly, the argument followeth not, they were made partakers of the externall altar by eating externall Sacrifices: Ergo, ſo are we made partakers of Chriſt by an externall Sacrifice: for as their altar was externall, ſo their ſacrifices were externall; but as our Altar is ſpirituall, as the Apoſtle ſaith, We haue an Altar, Heb.13.10. ſo our eating and drinking muſt be ſpirituall: and the Apoſtle himſelfe putteth this difference, verſe.18. Behold Iſrael which is after the fleſh: ſignifying, that they were delighted in fleſhie ſacrifices, becauſe they were after the fleſh, but we being after the ſpirit, muſt be exerciſed in ſpirituall ſacrifices. Thirdly, that we are effectuallie ioyned vnto Chriſt, by a ſpirituall coniunction, though we carnallie eate him not, the Apoſtle ſheweth, He that is ioyned to the Lord is one ſpirite, 1.Cor.6.17. And if while the materiall Altar ſtoode, they might be partakers of it in heart and deſire, though they did not eate of the ſacrifices, as Dauid being abſent from the temple ſaith, My ſoule fainteth for the courts of the Lord, &c. euen for thine Altars, Pſalm.84.1.3. much more may we now in ſpirit and by faith, communicate with the true Altar and ſacrifice: And ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, Hebr.13.10. Wee haue an altar, whereof they haue no authoritie to eate, which ſerue in the Tabernacle: Ergo they, which ſerue not in the Tabernacle, but haue left the ceremonies of the law may eate thereof, partly by faith and ſpirituallie, partly in the Euchariſt ſacramentallie, which Chriſt hath commaunded to be done in remembrance of him. And thus farre of their arguments for the ſacrifice of the Maſſe.

The Proteſtants.

THat there are ſpirituall ſacrifices remaining yet vnto Chriſtians in the exerciſe of religion, we doe verilie beleeue, being ſo taught by the Scriptures: ſuch are the ſacrifices of praiſe and thankeſgiuing, Hebr.13.15. The ſacrifice of almes and diſtribution, verſ.16. the mortifying alſo of the fleſh, is a kinde of crucifying, and ſo a ſpirituall ſacrifice, Galath.6.14. And in this ſenſe we denie not, but that the Sacrament may be called a ſacrifice, that is, a ſpirituall oblation of praiſe and thankeſgiuing: but that there is a proper and externall ſacrifice, as in the lawe of Goates and Bullocks, vpon the croſſe of the bodie of Chriſt; ſo in the Euchariſt, of the ſame bodie and fleſh of Chriſt: we doe holde it for a great blaſphemie, and hereſie.

Argum.1. The very fleſh, and true naturall bodie of Chriſt, is not, as we haue ſhewed before at large, in ſuch carnall and corporall manner preſent in the Sacrament: therefore it cannot in the Sacrament be ſacrificed, and offered vp.

Argum.2. This ſacrificing of the bodie and blood of Chriſt is contrarie to Chriſts inſtitution: for he ſaith onely, Take ye, eate ye, drinke ye: he ſaith not, Sacrifice ye, or lift vp, and make an oblation of my bodie. Neither doe thoſe words, hoc facite, doe this, giue them any power to ſacrifice, as Bellarmine would haue it: for to whom he ſaith, Eate ye, drinke ye, to the ſame alſo he ſaith, Doe ye. Wherefore if doe ye, be as much as, ſacrifice ye: all Chriſtians, for whom it is lawfull to eate and drinke the Sacrament, by this rule haue authoritie to ſacrifice. Againe, the words are, Doe this in remembrance. We remember things abſent, and which are alreadie done and paſt: if then there be a preſent ſacrifice in the Sacrament of the bodie of Chriſt, it cannot properly be ſaid to be a memorie of his ſacrifice.

Argum.3. The Apoſtle ſaith, that Chriſt neede not to offer himſelfe often, but that he hath done once in the end of the world, Heb.9.26. And with one offering, hath he made perfit for euer them that are ſanctified, 10.14. Ergo, Chriſt cannot bee ſacrificed againe: for that were to make his ſacrifice vpon the croſſe imperfect.

Bellarmine anſwereth: that the Apoſtle here ſpeaketh of the bloodie and painefull ſacrifice of Chriſt vpon the croſſe, which was ſufficient once to be done: but this taketh not away the vnbloodie ſacrifice, which is but an iteration of the former, whereby the fruite and efficacie of that firſt oblation is applied vnto vs, *Bellarm.lib.*1.*de miſſ.cap.*25.

Anſw. Firſt, the Apoſtle excludeth all manner iterations of the ſacrifice of Chriſt; for otherwiſe, if Chriſt ſhould now be often howſoeuer ſacrificed, the difference would not hold betweene the ſacrifices of the law which were often done, and the ſacrifice of Chriſt, which was once to bee performed: as the Apoſtle ſetteth it downe, Hebr.10.11. Euery prieſt appeareth daily miniſtring, and oftimes offreth one manner offring, &c. but this man after he had offred one ſacrifice for ſinne, &c. and their ſacrifices were alſo in a manner iterations and commemorations of the ſacrifice of Chriſt. The Apoſtle then thus reaſoneth; They had many iteratiue and commemoratiue ſacrifices of Chriſts death: Ergo, we haue not now. Secondly, that is but a fooliſh and falſe diſtinction of the bloodie and vnbloodie ſacrifice, as they vnderſtand it: for there can bee no proper vnbloodie ſacrifice of Chriſt, neither could he be offered vp, otherwiſe then by dying, Heb.9.27.28. Therefore he is not offered vp in the Sacrament, becauſe now he dyeth not. Thirdly, neither neede wee inuent a new kinde of ſacrifice, for the application of Chriſts death: for to that end Chriſt hath appointed the preaching of the worde, and inſtituted the Sacraments; whereby the death of Chriſt, with all the benefits thereof, are moſt fruitfully applied vnto vs, Galath.3.1. S.Paul ſaith, that Chriſt was deſcribed in their ſight, and as crucified: that is, by the preaching of the Goſpell. 1.Corinth.11.verſ.26. As oft as ye eate this bread, and drinke this cup, ye ſhew the Lords death till he come.

Bellarmine replieth: firſt, though the death of Chriſt be applied by the preaching of the word and adminiſtration of the Sacrament of the Lords Supper: yet it may be applied alſo by the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, which in this behalfe is not ſuperfluous, no more then Baptiſme is, by which alſo Chriſts death is applied. Secondly, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the bloodie and painfull ſacrifice of Chriſt vpon the croſſe, it appeareth by the words following, verſ.26. *for then he muſt haue often ſuffered, &c. Bellar.c.*25.*reſp.ad argum.*2.

Contra. Firſt, Baptiſme is not ſuperfluous in applying and ſhewing forth Chriſts death, though to the ſame end we haue the preaching of the word and the other Sacrament, becauſe they are all of Chriſts inſtitution, ſo is not the Maſſe. Againe, they applie Chriſts death diuerſly; Baptiſme as the ſeale of our regeneration; the Euchariſt as a ſigne of our ſpirituall feeding vpon Chriſts death; the word preached as a worker of our faith: ſo that none of them are ſuperfluous. But the Maſſe is ſuperfluous, becauſe the remembrance and ſhewing forth of Chriſts death is as fully ſet forth in the Sacrament without a ſacrifice.

Secondly, the words of the Apoſtle make againſt their vnbloodie ſacrifice: for thus the Apoſtle reaſoneth, Hebr.9.25. not that he ſhould offer himſelfe often, &c. for then muſt he haue often ſuffered. Chriſt cannot bee offered without ſuffering, but hee ſuffred but once: Ergo, he was offered but once.

*Argum.*4. Chriſt ſaith, This cup is the new teſtament in my blood: we reaſon then thus; The ſame thing cannot bee both the teſtament, and the matter teſtamentarie, or which is teſtified; the Euchariſt is the publike inſtrument or teſtament; the ſacrifice of Chriſts death is the thing teſtified: Ergo, the Euchariſt is not the ſacrifice: for a ſacrifice is a thing from vs offered to God, a teſtament is a ſeale of Gods promiſe exhibited to vs.

Bellarmine anſwereth, the Euchariſt in diuers reſpects is both a ſacrifice and a teſtament: a ſacrifice, as it is offered vnto God; a teſtament, as it is an authenticall inſtrument of Gods promiſe toward vs. So we reade, Exod.24. This is the blood of the teſtament, that God hath appointed. Like as then the ſacrifices of the law were ſignes of Gods couenant and teſtament, and yet true ſacrifices notwithſtanding: ſo the blood of Chriſt is both the ſacrifice, and the ſigne of Gods teſtament and couenant, *cap.*24.*reſponſ.ad argum.*1.

Contra. Firſt, wee graunt, that a teſtament cannot bee ratified without blood, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb.9.18. and therefore the blood of the ſacrifice is alſo a ratification of the teſtament: but there the ſacrifice was one thing, the teſtament another: the ſacrifices of the law were of beaſts, the teſtament had relation to Chriſt: So then the ſacrifices of the law were true ſacrifices, & ſignes alſo of the ſacrifice of Chriſt, which was diuers from the ſacrifices of the law: But here they make the ſame thing to be both the ſacrifice it ſelfe, and the ratification or teſtament of the ſame ſacrifice, which cannot be.

Secondly, there cannot bee ſuch diuers reſpects, as to make the ſame thing, at the ſame inſtant, to be both the ſigne, and the thing ſignified: and therefore in the Euchariſt there cannot be both the ſacrifice it ſelfe, and the teſtification thereof, what reſpects ſoeuer can bee pretended: for this were to make a thing abſent, preſent at the ſame time: for that which is ſacrificed muſt bee preſent, that which is repreſented and remembred is abſent: Chriſts bodie therefore being repreſented in the Euchariſt, cannot be then and there ſacrificed.

*Argum.*5. If there were remaining ſtill in the Church a reall externall ſacrifice, then there muſt be alſo a reall and externall prieſthood,and ſo a multitude of ſacrificing prieſts: but this is contrarie to the Scripture,that maketh this difference betweene the law and the Goſpel,that then there were many prieſts,becauſe they were not ſuffered to endure by reaſon of death: but now Chriſt hath an euerlaſting prieſthood,Heb.7.23.24.So that he is the only prieſt of the Goſpell: Ergo,there being no more ſacrificing prieſts, there is no ſuch ſacrifice: for it were a derogation to the euerlaſting prieſthood of Chriſt,to ordaine other prieſts beſide.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, it is no more derogation to Chriſts prieſthood to conſtitute inferiour prieſts vnder him,then it is to his paſtoral and propheticall office to ſubſtitute inferiour paſtors,miniſters and teachers vnder him: and as Aaron while he liued had other inferiour prieſts, and a King hath vnder him inferiour officers and gouernours; ſo Chriſt may haue other inferiour prieſts, as his vicars and miniſters. Secondly, the Apoſtle excludeth onely the multiplying of prieſts in the ſame degree and power,not of inferiour prieſts,that are but Chriſts miniſters,*Bellar. cap.25.reſp.ad argum.*1.

Contra. Firſt, the compariſon betweene inferiour ſacrificing prieſts, and inferiour preaching paſtors vnder Chriſt is not like: 1. Becauſe Chriſt hath giuen cōmandement for the one,Go teach and baptize,Matth.28.but no where are they commanded againe to ſacrifice Chriſt.And Epheſ.4. verſ.11.the Apoſtle ſheweth,that the callings of Apoſtles,Prophets,Euangeliſts,Paſtors,teachers are giuen of Chriſt: but prieſts are not there named. 2. Becauſe there is neceſſitie of preaching, Woe is me if I preach not,1.Cor.9.16.and ſuch offices are neceſſarie in the Church,for the gathering together of the Saints,for the work of the miniſterie,and the edification of the bodie of Chriſt,Epheſ.4.12. but of ſacrifices and ſacrificing prieſts there is no neceſſitie at all. 3. There is in paſtors and teachers but an outward ſeruice and miniſtrie onely,the efficacie is of God: Paul planteth, Apollo watereth,God giueth encreaſe,1.Cor.3. but Chriſts paſtorall and propheticall office giueth the inward encreaſe and vertue, to the which the outward miniſtrie is not derogatorie: but vnto the ſacrificing prieſthood they aſcribe an efficacious power to make Chriſts bodie,and to work atonement by it, and ſo ioyne them as fellow-workers with Chriſt in the ſpirituall worke,which is great impietie.

Secondly, Aaron had other inferiour prieſts for other ſacrifices and ſeruices: but he himſelfe onely entred into the holie place with the blood of reconciliation, Exod.30.10. This office did reſt in him perſonally: but the Papiſts in this office of ſacrificing the blood of reconciliation ioyne in commiſſion their prieſts with Chriſt himſelfe. A King hath other miniſters,becauſe he is a man, and cannot execute euery part himſelfe, yet his ſoueraigntie and princely prerogatiues he giueth not to any other: but Chriſt is an abſolute prieſt, and is able to execute euery part of his prieſthood himſelfe: and this being a prerogatiue of his perſon to be a prieſt after the order of Melchiſedech, cannot be deputed to another.

Thirdly,they bring in a multitude of prieſts in the ſame higheſt degree of prieſthood, to ſacrifice the bodie of Chriſt,and to make reconciliation by it: nay,they make their prieſts ſuperiour to Chriſt: for he offered but his bodie in earth, they ſacrifice it being in heauen: Chriſt offered his bodie but in one place,they in many places; he a bodie borne of the Virgin, they make him a bodie out of bread; Chriſt without a miracle offered his bodie to the death, they ſacrifice him miraculouſly without death: and they make their ſacrificing prieſts alſo after the order of Melchiſedech,as Chriſt himſelfe is.

Fourthly,the Apoſtle excludeth all ſucceſſion or multiplying of prieſts, but onely where they are taken away by death: Ergo, ſeeing Chriſt euer liueth and dieth not, there is no other prieſt but he.

Argum.6. Our Sauiour ſaid vpon the croſſe, Conſummatum eſt, It is finiſhed, Ioh.19.30. Ergo, the ſacrifice of Chriſt vpon the croſſe being perfect and ſufficient,all other ſacrifices beſide are ſuperfluous.

Bellarmine anſwereth,that theſe words,it is finiſhed,doe ſignifie that al the prophecies of Chriſts paſſion were accompliſhed,not that all things were done neceſſarie to ſaluation: for then the Sacraments,and all doctrine ſhould be ſuperfluous,*ibid cap.*25.

Contra. Firſt, all prophecies of Chriſts paſſion were not finiſhed, when he ſpake theſe words, for hee had not yet giuen vp the ghoſt: after which time the Euangeliſt ſheweth the fulfilling of two prophecies, as touching the piercing of his ſide out of Zacharie,verſ.37.and of the not breaking of his bones out of Moſes,verſ.36. Secondly, that Chriſt meaneth the perfection and conſummation of his ſacrifice vpon the croſſe, the Apoſtle ſheweth, Hebr.10.14. with one offering, τετελείωκεν, conſummauit, hee hath conſummated thoſe that are ſanctified: where the very ſame word is vſed both in the Greeke and vulgar Latine,whereby the Euangeliſt expreſſeth the conſummation and perfection of Chriſts croſſe. Thirdly, the perfection of Chriſts ſacrifice taketh not away the vſe of doctrine and Sacraments,which doe but ſet before vs the death and ſacrifice of death: but it is a barre to all other ſacrifices,which if they bee but memorials of Chriſts death,are ſuperſluous,doctrine and the Sacraments being ſufficient to that end : if they bee more then memorials,as auailable to forgiue ſinnes,they are blaſphemous,and make Chriſts ſacrifice imperfect.

*Argum.*7. Saint Paul ſaith,*Chriſt dieth now no more,*Rom.6.9.but he that is ſacrificed dieth:*Ergo,*Chriſt is not ſacrificed. The firſt part is thus prooued : firſt, from the vſe of the ſacrifices,which were firſt killed,before they were offered. Againe,where a ſacrifice is, the teſtament is confirmed, Heb.9.20.but where a teſtament is,there is death,*ibid.*17.Ergo. Further, there is no remiſſion of ſinnes without blood,verſ.22. but in the Maſſe there is remiſſion of ſinnes : Ergo, there is blood, and conſequently death.

Bellarmine anſwereth : firſt,the death of the ſacrifice is not neceſſarie, but where a thing liuing is offered in the forme of a liuing thing : but Chriſt is ſacrificed vnder the forme of bread and wine. Secondly, the Maſſe is not a teſtament, but a repetition of the teſtament confirmed in Chriſts death. Thirdly,the Apoſtle ſpeaketh onely of the legall ſacrifices, where there was no remiſſion of ſinnes without blood : or the Apoſtles meaning onely is, that there is no remiſſion of ſins, but in the vertue of the ſhedding of blood : and ſo in the Maſſe there is the vertue of Chriſts blood,though it be not ſhed,*reſp.ad argum.*3.

Contra. Firſt,that thing is killed,that is ſacrificed : if bread and wine be ſacrificed,they being dead things neede not bee killed : But if the ſacrifice be of Chriſt,he muſt be killed,what formeſoeuer you pretend of the ſacrifice. Secon[illegible],if the Maſſe be but a repetition of a teſtament alreadie confirmed,then it is no ſacrifice,but a memoriall onely: for where a ſacrifice is,a teſtament is ratified and confirmed,not repeated onely. Thirdly,S.Paul ſpeaketh not properly of the legall ſacrifices,for they *did not ſanctifie the conſcience,*verſ.9. Ergo, they gaue no remiſſion of ſinnes : And if the vertue of Chriſts blood be onely in the Maſſe,it is ſufficient alſo to haue the vertue of his ſacrifice : for to expreſſe the vertue of Chriſts blood,a new ſacrifice neede not,a Sacrament to that purpoſe is ſufficient.

*Argum.*8. In euery ſacrifice there is a conſecration of the thing ſacrificed from a prophane to an holie vſe,as the Paſchal Lambe was ſet apart foure daies,before it was eaten,Exod.12.4.there muſt alſo be an oblation vnto God : but in the Maſſe,there is nothing conſecrated but bread and wine,nothing offered but bread and wine : for in the inſtitution after the conſecration in theſe words,*this is my bodie,*immediatly follow,take ye, eate ye : there is no mention made at all of any oblation to God: *Ergo,*if there be any ſacrifice, it is of bread and wine onely.

Bellarmine anſwereth : firſt,that the bread is conſecrated by being turned into the moſt holie bodie of Chriſt. Secondly,the very placing of that holie thing vpon the altar, is an oblation and offering of it to God,*Bellarm.c.*27.

Contra. Firſt,if bread bee conſecrated,then bread is ſacrificed: for the ſame thing is ſacrificed, that is conſecrated : if the bodie of Chriſt bee conſecrated, then was it before prophane and vnholie : let him chuſe which part he will. Secondly,if the very placing vpon the Communion table (for Altar we acknowledge none)be an oblation,then bread and wine are offered : for they only are there exhibited and placed. Chriſts bodie is placed in heauen,his place is not on the earth.

*Argum.*9. Auguſtine in a certaine place allegorizing the parable of the prodigall childe,thus writeth,Vitulum occidit, quando in ſacramento altaris memoriam paſſionis in mente renouauit : He ſlew the fat calfe,when he renued in the Sacrament of the altar,the memorie of his paſſion in his mind. He calleth it the Sacrament, not the ſacrifice of the altar : and it onely bringeth to our minde the memorie of Chriſts paſſion and ſacrifice: there is then no oblation or ſacrifice in the Sacrament, but onely a commemoration of Chriſts ſacrifice,which we denie not.

Ad fratres in erem.

Bernard alſo witneſſeth here very plentifully for the truth : *Sicut Chriſtus adhuc quodammodo immolatur quotidie donec mortem eius annuntiamus, ſic videtur & naſci dum fideliter eius natiuitatem repræſentamus: In Vigil.natal.ſer.*6. As Chriſt is daily offered vp,while we doe ſhew forth his death, ſo he ſeemeth to be borne,when we faithfully repreſent his natiuitie. The reaſon is this, as Chriſt is borne daily,ſo is he ſacrificed;but he is borne onely by a godly remembrance of his birth: Ergo, he no otherwiſe dieth or is ſacrificed.

Againe,Voluit Chriſtus,vt iugiter recoleretur per myſterium, quod ſemel offerebatur in precium,&c. Chriſt his will is, that it ſhould bee daily remembred in myſterie which was once offered vp for our price,and that the euerlaſting ſacrifice ſhould liue in our godly memorie, and bee preſent alwaies in grace : for Chriſt ought not to be crucified againe,but it is a ſufficient remedie,if by faith and imitation,we keepe his death in remembrance. Chriſts ſacrifice then, is onely renued by a godly remembrance thereof,and a faithfull imitation of his death,and no otherwiſe.

Serm.in cœn. Dom.

*Argum.*10. Let vs ſee alſo their owne teſtimonies : *Damaſus epiſtol.*4. Menſæ Domini participes,&c. Let them be partakers onely of the Lords table. So alſo S.Hierom.libr.de 7.ordinib. Ipſis ſacerdotibus de menſa Domini,&c. It is not lawfull for the Prieſts,without preſumption, to take the cup from the Lords table,vnleſſe it be giuen them of the Deacon. Where a table is then,and not an altar,there can be no ſacrifice.

*Gregor.Moral.lib.1.c.*10. Sine intermiſſione pro nobis holocauſtum redemptor immolat,&c. The Redeemer without ceaſing doth immolate a burnt-offring for vs,in demonſtrating or ſhewing vnto his father his incarnation. *Innocent.3.in conuerſion.S.Pauli: Sanguis ipſius,&c.*His blood cryeth alwaies to God for vs. *Gabriel Biel in cœnam.lect.*61. *Ad quem pertinet & pro peccatis offerre,&c. repræſentatione ſui ad patrem:*It belongeth to him to offer for our ſinnes,&c.by preſenting himſelfe to his father,&c.If then the preſenting of Chriſt in heauen, bee our burnt-offring, the crying of his blood,an offring for ſinne; then it is ſuperfluous to ſacrifice him, or to offer and preſent him to God in the earth?

And if they will allow that definition of a ſacrifice in the decrees.*Par.2.cauſ.1.qu.1.c.*84.Sacrificium quaſi ſacrum factum,&c. A ſacrifice,that is made ſacred or holie, being conſecrate to the memorie of the Lordes paſſion. Thus is the Euchariſt a ſacrifice without the Maſſe, for it is an holie action inſtituted for the remembrance of Chriſts paſſion. If it bee then but a repreſentation of Chriſts ſacrifice,it is not the reall and externall ſacrifice it ſelfe. Likewiſe, *Decr.par.3.diſt.2.c.*51. *Quod factum,&c.*That which was once done,is done in our memorie euery yeere. *C.*53. Quod nos facimus,in commemorationem fit eius,&c. That which wee doe,is done for the remembrance of him. So then the Euchariſt is not a ſacrifice of a thing preſent, but a commemoration of Chriſt abſent. In diſtinctione membrorum ſemel tantum,&c. In the diſtinction of his members he hanged but once vpon the croſſe offring himſelfe,&c.*cap.52.ibid.* Chr[illegible]hen cannot be ſacrificed without diſtinction of his members; which diſtinction being not in the Maſſe, when he is imagined to bee in a leſſe roome then the compaſſe of a ſpanne,he cannot be there ſacrificed.

This truth hath the plentifull teſtimonie of the holie Martyrs,whoſe effectuall reaſons and ſubſtantiall arguments againſt the Idolatrous ſacrifice of the Maſſe, wee haue ſet downe together in the treatiſe annexed to this controuerſie: to the which place I referre the reader.

AN APPENDIX OR THIRD PART, OF the name and office of Prieſts.

The Papiſts.

32.Error. AS they doe falſely teach and perſwade,that there is yet remaining a proper externall ſacrifice for Chriſtians vnder the Goſpell, ſo alſo they maintaine a ſacrificing Prieſthood. And further they ſay,that the Leuiticall Prieſthood was not tranſlated into the ſacrifice of Chriſt vpon the croſſe,but is properly turned into the Prieſthood and ſacrifice in the Church, according to Melchiſedechs rite,in offring vp the bodie and blood of Chriſt in the formes of bread and wine, *Rhemiſt.annot.Hebr.7.ſect.*7. Wherefore they which miniſter vnder the Goſpell, are worthilie called Prieſts: which worde doth ſo certainly implie the authoritie of ſacrificing, that it is by vſe made the onely Engliſh of *Sacerdos,Rhemiſt.Act.14.ſect.*3.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt,we hold it to be a great blaſphemie to ſay, that the Prieſthood and ſacrifice of Chriſt vpon the croſſe, is not that ſacrifice or Prieſthood into the which the olde ſacrifice and Prieſthood was tranſlated and chaunged. The Apoſtleproueth the contrarie: for that ſacrifice, whereby the new teſtament is eſtabliſhed,is that, wheriunto the old ſacrifice and Prieſthood is tranſlated: but this is done by the ſingular ſacrifice of Chriſt,who is the ſuretie of a better teſtament, Hebr.7.23. *Ergo,*his ſingular ſacrifice vpon the croſſe,is that whereinto the old Leuiticall ſacrifices are chaunged, and no other. Againe, the Prieſthood after Melchiſedechs order is that, into the which the old Prieſthood is chaunged: but the Prieſthood of Chriſt vpon the croſſe was after that order. Ergo. But here they are not aſhamed to denie,that the ſacrifice of Chriſt vpon the croſſe was after Melchiſedechs order; but doe moſt impudently and blaſphemouſly affirme,that it was after the order of *Aaron: Heskin.lib.1.cap.*13. And thus euery vile Maſſe-monger ſhall bee more properly a prieſt after Melchiſedechs order,than Chriſt himſelfe.

Secondly,none but Chriſt is a Prieſt after the order of Melchiſedech: for vnto whom the Lord ſaid, Thou art a Prieſt for euer after the order of Melchiſedech, to him the Lorde ſaith alſo in the ſame Pſalme, *Sit thou at my right hand.*Pſal.110.But this cannot agree to any popiſh prieſt;therefore not the other. Againe the Apoſtle maketh this difference betweene the Prieſthood of the law and the Goſpell: becauſe then there were many Prieſts, they being prohibited by death to continue: but Chriſt is the onely prieſt of the new Teſtament,becauſe he dieth not,Heb.7.23.24. If they anſwere,as they doe,that although there be many prieſts, yet it is but one Prieſthood, becauſe Chriſt concurreth with them in the acts of the Prieſthood,Rhemiſt.

We anſwere: firſt,Chriſt concurreth with his faithfull miniſters in the acts of their Miniſterie: but no ſuch Prieſthood doe we acknowledge. Secondly,ſo Chriſt concurred in the acts of the Leuiticall Prieſthood,& the ſacrifices of the law that were rightly offred: wherfore this concurrence of Chriſt doth no more take away the multitude of prieſts in the Goſpell,than it did in the law.

Thirdly, concerning the name of Prieſts in their ſenſe, as it implieth an authoritie of ſacrificing, we vtterly abhorre it. Secondly, but as it is deriued of the Greeke word πρεσβύτερος, which ſignifieth an Elder, we refuſe it not, but wiſh rather, that it had not been abuſed in common ſpeech to ſignifie popiſh ſacrificers. Thirdly, as for the word (ſacerdos) which may be engliſhed a ſacrificer, wee finde it no where in the new Teſtament giuen to the Miniſters of the Goſpell, and ſo much Bellarmine confeſſeth, *cap.*17. And therefore vnfitly and vnproperly agreeth vnto them. If ſome of the fathers haue confounded the names of Sacerdos and Preſbyter, they are not to bee commended. The word Sacerdos, a ſacrificer, being a proper name of the Leuiticall Prieſts, cannot properly bee attributed to the Miniſters of the Goſpell. To conclude, this word (Prieſt) as it is the Engliſh of Sacerdos, we doe not approue: but as it giueth the ſenſe of (Preſbyter) from whence it is deriued, we condemne it not: for ſo it ſignifieth nothing elſe but an Elder. If common vſe of ſpeech haue drawne it to a contrarie ſenſe, it would be amended.

Bellarmine anſwereth, the Apoſtles in their writings vſe not the words of prieſt, ſacrifice, temple, altar, and ſuch like; becauſe the Iewiſh ſacrifices and prieſthood were yet in force, leſt they might bee thought, by vſing theſe words, to renew and confirme the rites of the Iewes: but afterward, when as the temple was deſtroyed, theſe names began to bee vſed of the ancient fathers, *Bellarm. cap.*17.*lib.*1.de Miſſa.

Contra. Firſt, it is vntrue that the Apoſtles in the Scripture forbeare at all to vſe theſe names: for in the new Teſtament euery one of theſe names is found, but in a ſpirituall ſenſe, as the Apoſtle taketh the Temple for the Church of God, 1.Cor.3.16. 2.Cor.6. Againe, the Apoſtles ſpeake of ſpirituall ſacrifices, Rom.12.1. Heb.13. and the Apoſtle in the ſame chapter ſaith, we haue an altar, &c. meaning the altar of the croſſe. And Reuel.1.6. He hath made vs Kings and Prieſts, that is ſpiritually: wherefore it is a great vntruth, that the Apoſtles did of purpoſe ſhunne theſe names, for any ſuch cauſe alleaged, ſeeing they euery where vſe them.

Secondly, it cannot be denied, but that this word (ſacerdos) a prieſt, is taken by ſome of the ancient fathers, for an office of the Goſpell: but they vnderſtand not then a ſacrificing prieſt, but either the ſame, which was called (Preſbyter) a teaching Elder, as *Damaſus epiſtol.*4. Chorepiſcopi miniſterio preſbyterorum contenti ſint, &c. Let the countrie Biſhops be contented onely with the miniſtrie of the Presbyters, and bee partakers onely of the Lordes table; A table is for miniſters, not for prieſts: Or elſe they expreſſed it by this word (miniſter) a miniſter; as *Cornelius epiſtol.*2. Epiſcopi & miniſtri, &c. Biſhops and Miniſters muſt not frequent riotous feaſts. *Arelatenſ.*1.2. Miniſtri fœnerantes, That Miniſters ſhould not bee vſurers: Or elſe they vnderſtood this word ſpiritually. *Ambroſ.lib.*5.in Luc. Omnes filij eccleſiæ ſacerdotes, &c. All the children of the Church are prieſts, offering themſelues ſpirituall ſacrifices to God. So alſo *Origen, Hom.*9.in Leuitic. Petrus ad omnem dicit eccleſiam, &c. Peter ſaith to the whole Church, ye are a royall prieſthood. But a ſacrificing prieſt by this word (ſacerdos) they vnderſtood not: for (ſacrificans, or ſacrificulus) a ſacrificer was taken for an Idolatrous prieſt of the Idols of the Gentiles, as S. Cyprian vſeth it, *Epiſt.*3.ad Cornelium: Hi quinque cum paucis vel ſacrificantibus, vel male ſibi conſcijs, &c. Theſe fiue with a few ſacrificers, or men of a guiltie conſcience, did adopt Fortunatus to be their falſe Biſhop.

Auguſtine ſaith, Sacerdotium Iudæorum nemo dubitat, &c. No faithfull man doubteth, but that the Prieſthood of the law was a figure of the royall Prieſthood in the Church, whereby all that pertaine to the bodie of Chriſt are conſecrated. He acknowledgeth no other Prieſthood abiding in the Church, then that whereby all Chriſtians are made Prieſts, to offer ſpirituall ſacrifices vnto God through Chriſt. Quæſt.Euangelicar.lib.2. quæſt.40.

Heare alſo what Bernard ſaith: Non ſolus ſacerdos ſacrificat, non ſolus conſecrat, ſed totus fidelium cœtus, qui adſtat, cum illo conſecrat, cum illo ſacrificat: The Prieſt onely doth not ſacrifice or conſecrate, but the whole companie of the faithfull, that ſtand by, doe conſecrate and ſacrifice with him: Ergo, in this ſenſe all the people are as well Prieſts, as the ſacrificer.

THE THIRD QVESTION, OF THE VERTVE and efficacie falſely aſcribed to the ſacrifice of the Maſſe.

The Papiſts.

1. THey blaſphemouſly affirme, that it is a ſacrifice propitiatorie, that is, auailable to obtaine, ex opere operato; by the very worke wrought, remiſſion and pardon of all their ſinnes, *Trident.Concil.ſeſſ.*22.*can.*3. 33.Error.

*Arg.*1. There were vnder the law ſacrifices truly propitiatorie, and auailable to take away ſin, as Iob.1. he ſacrificed for the ſins of his ſonnes: and Leuit.chap.4.5. there are deſcribed diuers ſacrifices for ſinne. If then the ſacrifice of the croſſe, which was ſhadowed forth in theſe ſacrifices, did not hinder them to be propitiatorie, much leſſe doth it hinder the ſacrifice of the Maſſe to bee ſuch, which is a commemoratiue alſo of the paſſion of Chriſt, *Bellar.lib.*2.*de Miſſ.c.*2.

Anſw. Firſt, the ſacrifices of the law did not truly purge ſinnes as concerning the conſcience, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb.9.10. but were figures onely and types of the ſacrifice of the croſſe, which *doth onely purge our conſcience from dead workes, ibid. verſ.*14. And it is vntrue, that Bellarmine to this replieth, that thoſe ſacrifices were figures alſo of the ſacrifice of the Maſſe and of the Euchariſt: for neither doe wee acknowledge any ſuch ſacrifice of the Maſſe; and the Euchariſt hath relation to Chriſts ſacrifice alreadie paſt, as the olde ſacrifices did ſhadow it forth then to come: ſo that the Euchariſt is not the ſubſtance of the ſhadow of ſacrifices; but the paſſion of Chriſt is the ſubſtance both of their ſacrifices and our Sacraments. Secondly, Bellarmine himſelfe granteth, that the legall ſacrifices did not iuſtifie men before God, as ex opere operato, by the work wrought, but only ſerued for the expiation of legall faults: therefore the argument followeth not from the ſacrifices of the law to the ſacrifices of the Maſſe, which he affirmeth to bee propitiatorie, ex opere operato. Thirdly, all this being graunted to be true of the ſacrifices of the law, yet he hath prooued nothing for the Maſſe, which we denie to be a ſacrifice.

*Argum.*2. Hebr.5.verſ.1. Euery Prieſt is ordained to offer gifts and ſacrifices for ſinnes: but in the Church now there are Prieſts properly ſo called: Ergo, they offer for ſinnes: *Bellarm. ibid. argum.*3.

Anſw. I haue ſhewed before, that there remaineth now no externall Prieſthood in the Church but onely a ſpirituall, to offer vp ſpirituall ſacrifices to God through Chriſt, 1.Pet.2.5. and that the true Prieſthood in the new Teſtament reſteth onely in the perſon of Chriſt: Hebr.7.26. Such an high Prieſt it became vs to haue, which is holy, harmeleſſe, vndefiled, ſeparate from ſinners, higher than the heauens, &c. But theſe properties are onely in Chriſt: Ergo, he is the onely Prieſt of the new Teſtament. This argument then beggeth the thing in queſtion, and therefore concludeth not.

*Argum.*3. Chriſt himſelfe ſaith in the inſtitution, This is my blood ſhed for you for the remiſſion of ſinnes: Ergo, the ſacrifice of the Maſſe is auailable for remiſſion of ſinnes: for it forgiueth ſinnes either as a ſacrifice, or a Sacrament: but as a Sacrament it is onely appointed for our ſpirituall nouriſhment: Ergo, as a ſacrifice, &c. *Bellar.lib.2.de miſſ.c.*2.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. First, Chriſt inſtituted no ſacrifice, as we declared before, but only a Sacrament in remembrance of his death and paſſion. Secondly, the Euchariſt as a ſacrifice neither forgiueth ſinne, nor giueth aſſurance thereof, becauſe it is no ſacrifice at all, but as a Sacrament rightly adminiſtred it ſerueth to aſſure our faith of remiſſion of ſinnes, by the death of Chriſt: which is an effect of our ſpirituall nouriſhment, to aſſure vs of our ſpirituall health, which is the remiſſion of our ſinnes: but it doth not by it owne vertue conferre remiſſion of ſinnes, neither profiteth by the worke wrought: for the Apoſtle ſaith, that without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, Hebr.11.6. Wherefore no action is accepted of God, not proceeding of faith.

*Argum.*1. The Apoſtle ſaith, Where there is remiſſion of ſinnes, there is no more ſacrifice for ſinne, Heb.10.18. Seeing then remiſſion of ſinnes is fully obtained by the death and ſacrifice of Chriſt, there can be no more ſacrifice for ſinne: Ergo, the Maſſe is no ſacrifice for ſinne.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, there are two things required to the remiſſion of ſinnes: firſt, the finding out, or paying the price of our redemption. Secondly, the application thereof: The firſt is done by the ſacrifice of the croſſe, ſo that there neede no more offring for the ſatisfying for ſinne: but for the application of that remedie a ſacrifice is yet neceſſarie, which is the Maſſe: *lib.*1.*de Miſſ. c.*25.*reſp.ad argum.*2.

Contra. Firſt, the ſacrifices of the law alſo did ſerue to applie the vertue of Chriſts croſſe, and yet the Apoſtle excludeth them by this reaſon, that where there is remiſſion of ſinnes, there is no more ſacrifice: wherefore if the Apoſtles reaſon be good, it concludeth againſt ſacrifices applicatorie alſo. Secondly, to applie the benefit of Chriſts paſſion, a ſacrifice is not neceſſarie; God hath appointed the preaching of the word, and the miniſtration of the Sacraments to that end. Thirdly, the power of Chriſts croſſe is not ſeene onely in finding out the price of our redemption, but in giuing and conferring the ſame actually vpon all beleeuers, to whom alſo he giueth that grace to beleeue by the vertue of his croſſe: Heb.10. With one offring hath he conſecrated for euer them that are ſanctified.

Secondly he anſwereth, that the Maſſe doth not immediatly giue remiſſion of ſinnes, but obtaineth the gift of repentance for ſinners, whereby they are ſtirred vp, to ſeeke for remiſſion of ſinnes: And if it worke not in them repentance, as it doth not in all, yet it worketh a diſpoſition to repentance, which yet helpeth them not, becauſe they reiect the calling of God, *Bellarm.lib.*2. *de Miſſ.c.*5.

Contra. Firſt, if the ſacrifice of the Maſſe conferre not remiſſion of ſinnes, and yet you ſay the Sacrament doth conferre grace: then is the Sacrament more auailable, where Chriſt is not offered, than the ſacrifice wherein he is offered. Secondly, if the Maſſe purchaſe remiſſion of ſinne no otherwiſe but by working repentance, then is it not at all auailable for the dead, as you ſay it is, to whom repentance is not giuen. Thirdly, if in the Maſſe Chriſt were offered vp verily and indeed as you ſay, why ſhould not the Maſſe giue then remiſſion of ſinnes? which is the immediate and proper effect of the Sacrifice and Croſſe of Chriſt. Fourthly, neither doth the Maſſe giue repentance to all thoſe, for whom it is ſaid, for many of them remaine impenitent ſtill: and as for that diſpoſition you ſpeake of, ſeeing it benefiteth them not, they might as good be without it. And thus by your owne graunt, the Maſſe is altogether vnprofitable, neither auaileable to remit ſinnes, nor to giue repentance to him, that is otherwiſe diſpoſed.

*Argum.*2. Heb.9.22. Without ſhedding of blood is no remiſſion; but in the Maſſe, there is no ſhedding of blood: Ergo, no remiſſion.

Bellarmine anſwereth, firſt to the propoſition, that the Apoſtles meaning is, not that blood ſhould be ſhedde ſo often as there is remiſſion of ſinnes, but that there is no remiſſion of ſinnes, but in the vertue of the ſhedding of blood, *lib.*1.*de Miſſ.c.*25.*reſp. ad argum.*3. Secondly, to the aſſumption he ſaith, that the blood of Chriſt is really ſhedde in the oblation of the Maſſe. ibid.

Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtle meaneth not the vertue of blood onely, but the actuall ſhedding of blood, verſ.22. Almoſt all things are by the Law purged with blood, and without ſhedding of blood is no remiſſion: as the legall purging then was by blood, ſo is the remiſſion of ſinnes by blood; but there was the very actuall ſhedding of the blood of Sacrifices: Ergo, conſequently there muſt be ſo in the remiſſion of ſinnes. Secondly, if Chriſts blood be really ſhedde in the Maſſe, then is Chriſt ſlaine in the Maſſe: for without death, there is no ſhedding of blood: becauſe that the ſhedding of blood is to confirme a Teſtament, and a Teſtament is not ratified but by death. Heb.7.17.

*Argum.*3. The Maſſe is no Sacrifice at all, as we haue ſhewed before: Ergo, it is not a Sacrifice propitiatorie: the firſt alſo may be thus further proued: The Sacrifice of Chriſt is of infinite vertue. Heb.10.14. With one offering hath he conſecrated for euer, them that are ſanctified: but, Valor Miſſæ finitus, the valour or vertue of the Maſſe is finite, *Bellarm.c.*4.*prop.*4.*lib.*2. Ergo, in the Maſſe Chriſt is not ſacrificed. And againe, no finite thing can conferre that which is infinite: but remiſſion of ſinnes is infinite, that is, for euer: Heb.10.17. Their ſinnes and iniquities will I remember no more: but the vertue of the Maſſe is finite, and therefore is often iterated: Ergo, it doth not conferre remiſſion of ſinnes. If it ſhall be here obiected, that this reaſon alſo may be vrged againſt the often receiuing of the Euchariſt; I anſwere, that the Euchariſt, doth not as a Sacrifice actually and really conferre remiſſion of ſinnes by the worke wrought, but onely inſtrumentally aſſure vs of remiſſion of ſinnes, by faith in the blood of Chriſt: and therefore the reaſon is not like againſt the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, and the Sacrament of the Euchariſt.

*Interrelig.cap.*22.Chriſtum incruento & impaſſibili modo ſiſtimus patri, non vt remiſſionem peccatorum promereamur,&c. We do after an vnbloodie and impaſſible manner preſent Chriſt to his Father, not to merite thereby remiſſion of ſinnes, but that calling to minde the memorie of the Lords Paſſion, we giue him thanks for our ſaluation purchaſed vpon the Croſſe, and by faith applie the ſame vnto vs: Ergo, the Maſſe in it ſelfe conferreth not remiſſion of ſinnes.

See further euidence out of their owne decrees: *part.*2.*cauſ.*1.*qu.*1.*c.*80. Scito, quoniam ſanctum eſt, quod offertur in altari,&c. Know, that it is holie, which is offered vpon the Altar: but thou art not ſo much ſanctified by the hoaſt, as polluted by thy dead workes. If the ſinne of the partie doth hinder the worke of the Sacrifice, then doth it not profite ex opere operato, by the very worke of the Sacrifice onely.

Doctor Taylor holy Martyr witneſſeth the ſame: Chriſts body offered vpon the Croſſe was the propitiatorie ſacrifice, full, perfect, and ſufficient vnto ſaluation, for all that beleeue in him: Our Sacrifice is onely memoratiue in the remembrance of Chriſts death and paſſion, a Sacrifice of thankeſgiuing, and other Sacrifice hath the Church of God none. p.1521.

The Papiſts.

2. THe ſacrifice of the Maſſe is not onely propitiatorie for ſinnes, but auaileable to obtaine all other benefites, as peace, tranquillitie, health, and ſuch like, *Bellarm.cap.*3. 34. Error.

*Argum.*1. The Sacrifices of the law were auaileable for obtaining of temporall benefites, as Dauid by his ſacrifice turned away the plague, 2.Sam.24. and the Iſraelites did offer ſacrifice for the life of Darius and his children, Ezra.6.10. Ergo, the Euchariſt is much more auaileable, *Bellarmin.c.*3.

Anſw. Firſt, the argument followeth not, for the Sacrifices of the Law being temporall and carnall, might ſerue for temporall bleſſings; as the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb.9.13. They did ſanctifie, as touching the purifying of the fleſh: but the euerlaſting Sacrifice of Chriſt is to procure eternall bleſſings. Secondly, the plague was ceaſed before Dauid ſacrificed, for the Angell was bidde to ſtay his hand, verſ.16. ſo that Dauids ſacrifice following, verſ.25. was rather a ſacrifice Euchariſticall, than impetratorie: and the Iſraelites are not commanded to ſacrifice, but to pray for the life of the King, verſ.10.

*Argum.*2. Saint Paul willeth, that prayers and interceſſions ſhould be made for all men, eſpecially for Kinges, that wee may leade a godly and a peaceable life, 1.Timoth.2.1. Theſe are the prayers which are made in the celebration of the Maſſe, Bellarm.

Anſw. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh generally of all prayers, made by whomſoeuer, as it appeareth, verſ.1. Therefore this place is vnfitly applied to the prayers of Prieſts in the Maſſe. Secondly, this place proueth, that temporall benefites are obtained by faithfull prayers, not by the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, which Saint Paul neuer knew. Thirdly, Auguſtine indeed expoundeth this place of the publike prayers of the Church, vſed in the adminiſtration of the Sacrament: for he Epiſt.59. calleth it, Domini menſam, the Lords table, not the Altar: hee meaneth nothing leſſe then your popiſh Maſſe.

The Proteſtants.

IT is contrary to the inſtitution of Chriſt, to apply the Sacrament for any ſuch temporall or externall vſe.

*Argum.*1. It was ordayned to be receiued in remembrance of Chriſts death, as our Sauiour ſaith, Doe this in remembrance of mee, to aſſure vs by faith, of remiſſion of ſinnes, and other ſpirituall bleſſings: not to giue vs aſſurance of health, peace, life, proſperitie; for the obtayning of ſuch bleſsings, according to the will of God, other meanes are appointed. The miniſterie of the Sacraments no more ſerueth for ſuch vſes, then the preaching of the word.

*Argum.*2. The Apoſtle maketh this difference betweene the legall Sacrifices, and the Sacrifice of Chriſt: They ſanctified as touching the purifying of the fleſh: but the blood of Chriſt, which through the eternall ſpirite offred vp himſelfe, &c. doth purge our conſcience from dead workes, to ſerue the liuing God: wherefore the end and vſe of Chriſts Sacrifice, is, to obtaine eternall redemption for vs: temporall bleſsings we obtaine alſo through him: but all his members haue them not, nor alwayes: but eternall redemption by him, all beleeuers obtaine: wherefore this onely is the ende and vſe of his Sacrifice.

And further the ancient name of this Sacrament, called the Euchariſt, of giuing of thankes, ſheweth the vſe thereof rather to be in giuing of thankes for benefites receiued, then in praying for the ſame: and ſo it may be gathered, that ſacrifices were vſed vnder the law, to teſtifie their thankefulneſſe after ſome temporall deliuerance, as from famine, or captiuitie, for the obtayning whereof they vſed publike faſting and prayer, as Ioel.2.16. Sanctifie a faſt, call an aſſemblie, &c. Let the Prieſts weepe betweene the porch and the altar, &c. Theſe were the meanes which they vſed in their diſtreſſe, Prayer and faſting: And againe, verſ.14. Who knoweth, if he will returne, and leaue a bleſſing, a meate offring, and a drinke offring, &c. Theſe Sacrifices were vſed after their deliuerance, as teſtifying their thankeſgiuing.

Let vs ſee what antiquitie ſaith, *Liberius decret.*1. Si euenerit fames, aut peſtilentia, &c. If there fall out a famine, or the peſtilence, &c. Let them intreat Gods mercie, with faſting, almes, prayers, &c. He ſaith not, Let a maſſe be ſaid.

*Trullan.can.*28. Ad viuificationem, & peccatorum remiſſionem, &c. For our quickening and the remiſsion of ſinnes, ſolam oblationem, &c. That they miniſter the oblation onely to the people: the oblation then in the Euchariſt ſerueth onely for remiſsion of ſinnes.

THE FOVRTH QVESTION, FOR WHOM the ſacrifice of the Maſſe is auaileable.

The Papiſts.

35.Error. FIrſt, they affirme that Maſſe may be ſaid and offered for all the liuing, yea for Pagans and Infidels, for men abſent as well as preſent: for S. Paul willeth prayers and ſupplications to bee made for all men, 1.*Timo.*2.1. *Bellarm.cap.*6.

Secondly, the ſacrifice of the Maſſe is auaileable for the dead which are in Purgatorie, *Bellarm. cap.*7. *Concil. Trident. ſeſſ.*22.*can.*3.

Thirdly, Maſſe may be rightly ſaid in the remembrance and for the honour of Saints, with inuocation of them alſo in the prayers of the Church, *Bellarm.cap.*8.

*Argum.*1. The Apoſtles taught the Church to keepe a memorie or inuocation of the Saints in this ſacrifice, and that there ſhould be ſpeciall prayers for the dead: for theſe and ſuch like were the things (no doubt) that Saint Paul ſaith he would ſet in order when he came, 1.Cor.11.34. Rhemiſt. ibid.

*Anſw.*1. To the place out of Timothie we haue anſwered before, that it is vnderſtood generally of all prayers made by the faithfull: neither doth it follow, it is lawfull to pray for all men, and therefore the Sacrament is auaileable for all men: For theſe are two diuers things; Prayer is an effect of our faith, which we are commanded one to make for another: the Sacrament is an inſtrumentall or miniſteriall cauſe of our faith; the benefite whereof is to them onely that worthily receiue it, becauſe to them onely it is a Sacrament, by preſenting the viſible ſignes to their eyes.

2 It is too great boldnes for you, without Scripture, to affirme, that theſe ſuperſtitious rites of yours were thoſe very orders which the Apoſtle promiſed at his comming to eſtabliſh: but either they were ſuch as pertained not to the adminiſtration of the Sacrament, or were but accidentall orders meete for the Church of Corinth, and not neceſſary for all times and places.

*Argum.*2. The ſacrifice of the Croſſe was offered for all; the ſacrifice of the Maſſe is a repreſentation of the ſacrifice of the Croſſe: Ergo, it may be offered for all. Bellarm.c.6.

Anſw. Firſt, the ſacrifice of Chriſt was not offered for all men in generall, but onely for the children of God: Iohn 11.52. Chriſt dyed to gather together in one the children of God, which were ſcattered: and if Chriſt prayed not for the world, Iohn 17.9. much leſſe would hee dye for the world.

Secondly, we deny any ſuch ſacrifice of the Maſſe to be offered at all in Chriſts Church: thirdly, it followeth not, that ſo many ſhould be partakers of the Sacrament and repreſentation of Chriſts death, as ſhall be partakers of his death: for he dyed for many yet vncalled and vnregenerate, but none but the faithfull are to be admitted to the Sacrament.

*Argum.*3. The ſacrifices of the olde teſtament were offered for the dead, as Iudas Macchabeus is commended for ſo doing, 2.Macchab.12.45. Ergo, the ſacrifices of the new may likewiſe be vſed. If it be here anſwered, that this booke is not Canonicall; yet for the matter of ſtorie, it is of as good credite as Ioſeph, or Saluſt, and ſheweth, that this hath been an ancient cuſtome in the Church to ſacrifice, and make prayer for the dead. Bellarm.c 7.

Anſw. Firſt, for a matter of fact, we refuſe not this ſtorie, and it may be, that ſuch a thing Iudas did: but this booke erreth in commending it to be well done; as likewiſe, chap. 14.41. Razis is commended for killing himſelfe. Secondly, the Iewes to this day haue no ſuch cuſtome to pray for the dead. Thirdly, here ſacrifice is made for manifeſt idolaters, verſe 40. whom this author notwithſtanding commendeth for godly men, verſe 45. and it is contrarie alſo to the practiſe of the popiſh Church to pray for the notorious wicked.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, the Sacrament (for ſacrifice we acknowledge none) is onely ordayned for their comfort that doe receiue it: neither can one receiue the Sacrament for another, no more then he may be baptized in the ſtead of another.

Secondly, neither doth the celebration of the Sacrament profite the dead, as we haue ſhewed before, that it is in vaine to pray for them.

Thirdly, neither are the Saints, either then or at any other time to be prayed vnto, or either by this, or any other religious worſhip to be honored.

*Argum.*1. All theſe ſuperſtitious obſeruances are cleane contrarie and repugnant to the inſtitution of Chriſt. Firſt, he ſaith, Take ye, eate ye, doe this: wherefore to their comfort onely the Sacrament worketh, that doe receiue it, and are doers in that action: the benefite thereof then is not extended to the abſent, but onely to the partakers. Secondly, the dead can feele no comfort by it, becauſe they can neither eate nor drinke it, nor be dooers therein. Thirdly, Chriſt ſaith, Doe this in remembrance of mee: hee ſaith not, in remembrance of Angels, Apoſtles, Saints: but onely of mee. Therefore it is contrarie to the inſtitution to vſe any commemoration of Saints in the Sacrament.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Saints are not remembred in the Maſſe, as Chriſt is: for his death is there repreſented and remembred, ſo is not the death and paſſion of the Saintes: but they are remembred as our mediators and interceſſors. Bellarm.c.8.

Contra. Firſt, there are but two kinds of commemorations; one is with worſhip and adoration; the other is Euchariſticall, when wee giue thankes in the memoriall of the Martyrs and Saints, for ſuch excellent inſtruments: this commemoration may be made of the Apoſtles and Saints: the other is peculiar to Chriſt in the Sacrament; and yet they do aſſociate vnto him, the Virgine Mary, in that kinde of commemoration, thus ſaying in the Maſſe; Worſhipping the memoriall of the Virgine. Secondly, they doe in their Maſſe vſe commemoration euen of the death and paſſion alſo of their Saints: as thus,

Tu per Thomæ ſanguinem, quem pro te impendit,
Fac nos Chriſte ſcandere, quò Thomas aſcendit.
By the blood of Thomas, which for thee he did ſpend, Graunt vs Chriſt with Thomas to aſcend. This was Thomas of Canturburie.

Thirdly, the remembrance, which is to be made in the Sacrament, is expounded by S. Paul, to be a ſhewing of the Lords death, 1.Cor.11.25,26. but the death of none but Chriſt is to be ſhewed forth, and this Bellarmine himſelfe confeſſeth: Ergo, he onely is to be remembred.

*Argum.*2. He onely is to be inuocated, or we are onely to draw neere vnto him by prayer, by whom we haue an entrance vnto God, Hebr.10.19,20. but by the blood of Ieſus we haue entrance onely, Ergo.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Chriſt and the Saints are not mediators alike, for Chriſt is a Mediator by himſelfe, the Saints by him: and as wee praying one for another, do no iniurie to Chriſts mediation; ſo neither the Saints praying for vs, through Chriſt; nor we praying to them to pray for vs. Againe, in the Maſſe, we pray not directly vnto Saints, as thus; O Peter pray for me: but indirectly, we pray that God would heare their prayer for vs. Bellarm.ibid

Contra. 1. If Chriſt be the Mediator both of the prayers of the Saints and ours, then is the mediation of Saints ſuperfluous; for ſeeing we may haue acceſſe to the Sonne himſelfe, it is in vaine to runne to the ſeruant. Secondly, we pray not as mediators one for another, but as humble ſuters, not with authoritie, but of charitie; therefore the compariſon betweene our prayers and the Saints prayers is not like. Thirdly, though the Saints pray in heauen for vs, as fellow members, in reſpect of their inward deſire; yet it followeth not, that we ſhould pray vnto them, no more then we pray to men liuing that pray for vs. Fourthly, your indirect inuocation of Saints in the Maſſe, when ye pray thus, by whoſe merites and prayers, graunt we may be defended, is both blaſphemous in leauing out the Mediation of Chriſt; and preſumptuous, in making your ſelues mediators of the prayers of the Saints: for they pray, that the prayer of the Saints may be heard. Fiftly, yet is not our argument anſwered, that we muſt draw neere onely to him, by whom we haue an entrance, which are the Apoſtles direct words: and I thinke they will not ſay, that we haue entrance by the blood of Saints.

Auguſtine ſaith, Quis offeret ſacrificium corporis Chriſti, niſi pro ijs, qui ſunt membra Chriſti? Who will offer the ſacrifice of the bodie of Chriſt, but for the members of Chriſt? Lib.1.de origin.anim. cap.9. Therefore the Sacrament cannot be celebrated for Pagans and Infidels, who are no members of Chriſt.

Againe, hee ſaith: Nos Martyribus non conſtituimus templa, ſacerdotia, ſacra aut ſacrificia: Wee doe not erect either temples, Prieſts, ſeruice or ſacrifices to Martyrs, De ciuitate Dei. lib.8. cap.27. Ergo, it is not lawfull to vſe the Sacrament for the honor of Saints.

Concil. Carthaginenſ.3.can.6. Placuit vt corporibus defunctorum Euchariſtia non detur, dictum eſt enim à Domino, Accipite, edite, cadauera autem nec accipere poſſunt, nec edere: Wee thinke good that the Euchariſt be not giuen to the bodies of the dead, for the Lord ſaid, Take, eate: Now dead bodies cannot take and eate, &c. The Sacrament then is appliable to none, but to thoſe that take and eate; but neither the dead nor any that are abſent, can take and eate: Ergo.

Fox.p.1471. In defenſe of this trueth, that the Maſſe is not a propitiatorie ſacrifice for the quicke, and dead, many holy and excellent Martyrs willingly rendered their liues: As Rowland Taylor, Iohn Philpot, Iohn Bradford, Biſhop Hooper, with others.

Their owne decrees thus teſtifie, decr.par.3.diſt.1.c.40. Clemens. Mortui non obuoluantur veſtimentis altaris: That the dead ſhould not be wrapped in the altar-cloathes. But the ſacrifice of the altar is more then the altarcloath, if this muſt not be communicated to the dead, much leſſe the other. Againe, decr.Gregor.lib.3.tit.41.c.6. Innocent.3. Iniuriam facit martyri, qui orat pro martyre: He doth wrong to a Martyr, that prayeth for a Martyr: But ſo doe the Papiſts in praying, that God would heare the prayers of Martyrs, Ergo they offer them wrong.

THE FIFT QVESTION, OF PRIuate Maſſes.

The Papiſts.

36. Error. IF any many ſhall ſay, that priuate Maſſes, wherein the Prieſt alone by himſelfe doth communicate, are vnlawfull, and therefore to bee aboliſhed; wee pronounce him accurſed, Concil. Trident.ſeſſ.22.can.8.

Argum.1. The reaſon of the Councell is this, becauſe that many doe communicate ſpiritually in the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, that are not preſent, and ſo the fruite thereof being publike, the Maſſe it ſelfe is in this behalfe not priuate, but publike: Concil.Trident.ſeſſ.22.cap.6.

Anſw. Firſt, a ſpirituall communion of the faithfull, we graunt euen without a Sacrament, which is not the effect of the Sacrament, but by fayth, Epheſ.4.4. There is one bodie, one ſpirite: And in the celebration of the Sacrament, there is alſo an exerciſe of this ſpirituall communion, the faithfull doe communicate with vs in our prayers, and in the profeſſion of the ſame faith: but they doe not communicate with vs in the Sacrament, or the fruite thereof. Secondly, to the ſacramentall communion is required a preſence of many: as the Apoſtle ſaith, 1.Cor.10.17. Wee that are many, are one bread and one bodie, becauſe we are partakers of one bread: ſo then the ſpirituall communion is one thing, the ſacramentall another: and wee cannot bee one bodie ſacramentally, vnleſſe wee communicate together in the Sacrament. Thirdly, as priuate prayer, though it may haue a publike fruite, yet it is priuate ſtill; ſo the Sacrament priuatly adminiſtred, though it might haue ſome publike effect, is yet priuat ſtill.

*Argum.*2. Prayer is profitable to him,that is prayed for, though he be not preſent; the ſacrifice of the Maſſe is a kinde of ſolemne prayer: Ergo, though it bee priuat, it may bee profitable. *Bellarmin.lib.2. de miſſ.c.*9.

Anſw. Firſt,we ſee that they are forſaken of the Scripture, for the proofe of their priuat Maſſes, and therefore are driuen to deuiſe reaſons of their owne. Secondly, there is not the ſame reaſon of a Sacrament (for ſacrifice therein,we acknowledge none) and of prayer : for a Sacrament is exhibited vnto men by the commaundement of Chriſt, a prayer is exhibited vnto God from men,and therefore prayer may be priuat,becauſe,God,to whom we pray, heareth priuatly : And againe,we haue warrant in Scripture for priuat prayer,Matth.6.6. ſo haue we none for a priuat Maſſe. Secondly,Bellarmine confeſſeth that a Maſſe cannot be ſo priuat,Vt vni ſoli applicaretur: To be applied to one man alone,c.9. yet priuat prayer may be made for one man alone : therefore the compariſon is not like betweene them. Thirdly, the prayers which are made in the Euchariſt for the whole congregation of Chriſts Church, may be profitable to thoſe that are abſent; but it followeth not therefore, that the ſacramentall action of eating and receiuing ſhould be auaileable for them which are abſent.

*Argum.*3. The ſacrifices of the law were ſacrifices, before the people did eate thereof: ſo the ſubſtance and making of a medicine is one thing,the ingredience,or taking of it,another : Ergo, neither is receiuing part of the ſubſtance or making of the ſacrifice of Chriſts bodie, but a conſequence onely : therefore there may be a ſacrifice and Sacrament without it, *Rhemiſt.1.Cor.11. ſect.* 14.

Firſt, the argument followeth not from the ſacrifices and ceremonies of the lawe, to the Sacraments of the Goſpell : for they are much vnlike : it was not lawfull but for the Prieſts onely, and the males amongſt them to eate of the ſacrifices, Leuiticus 2. 3. 6. 29. they may as well conclude hereupon, that none but Prieſts ſhould eate of the Sacraments of the new teſtament.

Secondly,the propoſition is alſo falſe,for the Paſchall Lambe, which of all the ſacrifices doth moſt properly reſemble the Euchariſt, was neither ſacrifice nor ſacrament, vnleſſe it were eaten.

Thirdly,we deny that there is any ſacrifice in the Euchariſt,but a ſacrament onely : and therefore the compariſon holdeth not betweene a ſacrifice, which conſiſted both of oblation to God, and the participation of the people that offered,and the Sacrament which Chriſt in his inſtitution offered not to God,but to his Diſciples.

Laſtly,neither doth the ſimilitude of a medicine conclude : for you cannot proue that the Sacrament not receiued hath vertue in it, as a medicine hath : for faith is requiſite to the worthie receiuing of the Sacrament,which is not neceſſarie in the applying of a medicine; and yet it is not properly called a medicine,vnleſſe being made,it be alſo applied,and receiued: And ſay it is a medicine vnreceiued,yet it profiteth not,vnleſſe it be vſed; ſo you haue gayned nothing hereby, but that the Euchariſt is alſo an vnprofitable medicine,where it is not receiued.

The Proteſtants.

WE vtterly condemne the ſuperſtitious practiſes of popiſh prieſts,who doe vſe to communicate alone in their Maſſes,the people ſtanding by,gazing and looking vpon him : yea you might haue ſeene many Maſſes ſaid in one Church at once, almoſt in euery corner one, no perſon being preſent for the moſt part,but the Prieſt and his boy.

*Argum.*1. This priuate receiuing of the Sacrament is contrarie to the inſtitution of Chriſt, who ſaith,ſpeaking to many, Take ye, eate ye, and diuide this amongſt you: there muſt be then a diuiſion and diſtribution. S. Paul alſo ſaith, We that are many are one bread and one bodie, in as much as we are partakers of one bread, 1.Corinth.10.17. Ergo, many muſt communicate together. For the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of the myſticall communion of the faithfull in this place, which doe all make but one bodie in Chriſt, (for ſo we doe communicate with the Church by faith, not onely in the Sacrament,but without it) but of the Sacramentall Communion of as many as receiue together : for how elſe can they be ſaid to be partakers of one bread, or loafe, vnleſſe they receiue together?

Bellarmine anſwereth,firſt, all that which Chriſt commaunded in the inſtitution to be done, is not of the eſſence of the Sacrament, nor alwaies to be obſerued; but in reſpect of perſon, time, and place : for if there be none worthie to miniſter the Sacrament to,yet it muſt be celebrate notwithſtanding. *c.10.reſponſ.ad argum.*1.

Contra. Firſt, and doe you ſpeake,as you thinke, that all, which Chriſt commaunded concerning the Sacrament,is not of neceſſitie to be obſerued : and yet all which your Church commandeth,muſt be kept: we may then iuſtlie ſay vnto you, as Chriſt ſaid to the Phariſees, You reiect the commaundement of God,to obſerue your owne tradition, Mark.7.9. Secondly,all Chriſts precepts in the inſtitution of the Sacrament are of the ſame authoritie : for of them all he ſaith (this doe ye) &c. then they may as well leaue all vndone, or any one of them, as another; and ſo they neede no more vſe conſecration of the Sacrament, than diſtribution, which in their owne learning is very abſurd. Thirdly, the Apoſtle ſaith, concerning the actions of breaking, taking, eating, &c. that, which I receiued of the Lord, haue I deliuered to you, 1. Cor. 10. 23. He maketh euery one of theſe of and belonging to the tradition and inſtitution of Chriſt.

Secondly, ſaith he, the Apoſtle concludeth affirmatiuely, that he which eateth the Euchariſt is ioyned to Chriſt : but not negatiuely, he, which receiueth not the Euchariſt, is not ioyned vnto Chriſt: for this may be done in heart and deſire, Bellarm. reſp. ad 3. obiect.

Contra. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of a ſpirituall onely, but of a ſacramentall communion with Chriſt in this place : and therefore he ſaith, The bread which we breake is the communion of the bodie of Chriſt, &c. If the ſacramentall communion of Chriſts bodie be in the breaking and diſtribution of bread, then where the bread is not broken and diſtributed, there is not that ſacramentall communion. So he ſaith, We that are many are one bread, becauſe we are partakers of one bread. They then which partake not, are not ſacramentally one bread, though ſpiritually wee denie not, but they are.

Argum. 2. Act. 2. 42. They continued in the Apoſtles doctrine and fellowſhip, and breaking of bread : It was then the vſe in the Primitiue Church to vſe diſtribution in the Sacrament.

Bellarm. It is true, yet it followeth not, that the Sacrament cannot bee celebrated without diſtribution.

Contra. It cannot bee ſhewed that in the Primitiue Church, there was any celebration of the Euchariſt without diſtribution : Ergo, the argument followeth. The Apoſtles neuer celebrated the Euchariſt priuately, therefore it is vnlawfull ſo to doe.

Argum. 3. The Apoſtle maketh a manifeſt difference betweene the Lords Supper, and other feaſts : for theſe might be priuate in their owne houſes, 1. Cor. 11. 22. Haue ye not houſes to eate and drinke in ? but the other ought to bee publike, ver. 33. they muſt one tarrie for another: Ergo, the Lords Supper muſt not be priuate.

Bellarmine anſwereth, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of the Sacrament, but of other feaſts, then vſed in the Church, which he calleth the Lords Supper : for hee ſaith, one is hungrie, another is drunken: but in the Euchariſt, they did all eate alike, &c. Theſe then are the feaſts which the Apoſtle would haue common.

Contra. Firſt, it is true, that ſuch feaſts were then kept, which were called feaſts of loue: but in the end of thoſe feaſts they vſed to receiue the Sacrament : and therefore the Apoſtle reprooueth them, becauſe, when they came together to eate the Euchariſt, they did eate their owne Supper afore, verſ. 22. Secondly, it is euident, that the Apoſtle by the Lords Supper meaneth the Euchariſt, becauſe immediatly he inferreth the inſtitution of Chriſt, which had been impertinent, if hee ſpake not of the Sacrament. And where he ſaith, that ye come not together vnto condemnation, it is euident, that he ſpeaketh of comming together to the Lords table, wherein only, and not at the common table, they eate and drinke their damnation, that doe it vnworthilie.

Argum. 4. The word of God is not to be preached but to a congregation, nor Baptiſme to bee adminiſtred, where there is none to bee baptized : Ergo, neither is the Euchariſt without communicants to be adminiſtred.

Bellarmine anſwereth, the reaſon is not alike : for the word and Sacraments are from God directed to men : but the ſacrifice of the Maſſe is directed vnto God, Bellarm. c. 9.

Contra. Firſt, we denie any ſacrifice in the Euchariſt, but a Sacrament onely : and therefore as the one Sacrament of Baptiſme requireth ſome to bee baptized, ſo the other of the Euchariſt requireth communicants. Secondly, the Euchariſt is not directed vnto God but vnto men, no not in the words of conſecration, whereby they ſay it is made a ſacrifice : for theſe words, this is my bodie, whereby they ſay it is conſecrated to bee a ſacrifice, are directed vnto men, if they vſe thoſe words, as Chriſt did : for theſe words follow in the Goſpell, This is my bodie, which is giuen for you: which words are by them left out in the Maſſe, that their craft ſhould not appeare, in peruerting the vſe of Chriſts words, which were ſpoken onely to his Apoſtles, and not directed vnto God.

Epiſtol. 59. Auguſtine ſaith, that, Sacramentum benedicitur, ſanctificatur, & ad diſtribuendum comminuitur: That the Sacrament is bleſſed, ſanctified, and broken to be diſtributed: Ergo, where there is diſtribution, there muſt be many to receiue.

Can. Apoſtolor. 10. Fideles qui ingrediuntur eccleſiam, & ſanctam Communionem non perceperint, communione priuentur : The faithfull, which come into the Church, and receiue not the Communion, ſhall be excommunicate.

Clement. epiſtol. 2. Tanta in altari holocauſta offerantur, quanta populo ſufficere debeant : Let ſo much be offered, as may ſuffice all the people. Prouiſion muſt be made for all the companie to communicate : Ergo, priuate Maſſes were not yet heard of in the Church.

See further teſtimonie out of their owne decrees : Par.3.diſtinct.2.c.10. Anacletus. Peracta conſecratione omnes communicent,&c. After conſecration, all muſt communicate,they which will not, let them bee thruſt out of the Church : for thus the Apoſtles haue ordained, and the Romane Church ſo holdeth. C.17.Soter. In cœna Domini à quibuſdam,&c. Some men neglect to receiue the Euchariſt in the Lords Supper,which ought to be receiued,*ab omnibus fidelibus,*of all the faithfull: *Ergo,*priuate Sacraments are againſt their owne Canons.

Fox.pag.1816. Maſter Philpot holy Martyr : Chriſt ſaid,and the Miniſter ſaith in Chriſts behalfe to all that are preſent,Take ye,eate ye : wherefore as many as be preſent,and doe not communicate,breake Gods commandement in not receiuing the ſame: and the Miniſter is no iuſt Miniſter, that doth not diſtribute the Sacrament as Chriſt did to all,that are preſent : and where Gods word is tranſgreſſed, there is not Chriſt preſent,and conſequently no Sacrament.

AN APPENDIX, CONCERNING the name of Sacrament.

The Papiſts.

37.Error. THey vtterly miſlike theſe names of the Sacrament,that it is called amongſt vs the Lords Supper or Communion : belike (ſay they) they will bring it againe to the Supper, or euening ſeruice, Rhemiſt. 1.*Cor.*11.*ſect.*6. And the name Communion,is as ignorantly vſed of them,thereby making the people beleeue, that many ſhould communicate together, 1.*Cor.*11.*ſect.*24. they ſhould rather vſe the names of the Euchariſt,Maſſe,or Leiturgie.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt,for the name of the Lords Supper,we doe learne of S.Paul ſo to call it : When ye come together,(ſaith he) this is not to eate the Lords Supper,1.Cor.11.20.

Rhemiſt. The Apoſtle calleth their feaſts of loue, which they were wont to make after the receiuing of the Sacrament,the Lords Supper,*cœnas dominicas,*becauſe they were made in the Lords houſes,which were called Dominica : he meaneth not the Sacrament.

Anſw. Firſt,there were then no ſuch diſtinct places, as Churches, and Oratories for the ſeruice of God, which began to bee built many yeeres after,but they aſſembled together in their owne houſes. Secondly,the Apoſtle cannot meane any other Supper,but that which was inſtituted by Chriſt,and which he deſcribeth afterward as it followeth, verſ.23. Further,the Apoſtle ſpeaketh but of two Suppers ; the one, which he calleth their owne Supper,verſ.21. the other, is the Lords Supper, which is ſo called, becauſe it was inſtituted by the Lord Ieſus, as the Apoſtle ſheweth afterward.

Thus teſtifieth alſo Maſter Latimer holy Martyr : There was cœna Iudaica, the Iewiſh Supper, when Chriſt with his Apoſtles did eate the Paſchall Lambe ; the other was called *cœna Dominica,*the Lords Supper,Fox pag.1456.

And though Doctor Weſton cauill in that place againſt this name,(the Lords Supper) yet hath the Communion been ſo called in former times.

In Luk.ſer.33. *Concil. Cabiloneuſ.can.*47. In cœna Domini perceptio Euchariſtiæ à quibuſdam negligitur : In the Supper of the Lord,ſome neglect to receiue the Euchariſt. Auguſtine calleth it the Lords Supper, Cœnam manibus ſuis conſecratam diſcipulis ſuis dedit : His Supper being conſecrated,he gaue it with his owne hands to his Diſciples. And although we ſate not downe at the feaſt: Ipſam cœnam tamen fide quotidie manducamus : Yet we eate that Supper daily by faith.

Yea their owne decrees allow this name : *Decret.par.*3.*diſtinct.*2.*c.*17.Soter : *In cœna Domini à quibuſdam perceptio Euchariſtiæ negligitur,&c.*In the Supper of the Lord the receiuing of the Euchariſt of ſome is neglected.

2. The name Communion,the Apoſtle alſo himſelfe vſeth : he calleth it κοινωνίαν, The Communion of the bodie of Chriſt,1.Cor.10.16. ſo doth Auguſtine name it, Communionem corporis Chriſti. de ciuit.Dei 20.*cap.*9. So alſo is it called in the Councels : *Nicen.*1.*cap.*14.*Eliberin. decret.*1.*Toletan.*12.5.and in diuers other.

3. As for the names of the Euchariſt, and Leiturgie, we miſlike them not, being vnderſtood in their owne ſenſe : but becauſe they are Greeke and not vnderſtood of the people,we vſe them not. The horrible ſacriledge of the Maſſe,is the cauſe alſo why we vſe not that terme.

THE SIXT QVESTION, OF THE MANner of ſaying and celebrating Maſſe.

The Papiſts.

38.Error. IT is not neceſſarie that the Maſſe(or as we call it,the Sacrament) ſhould bee ſaid or done in the vulgar and familiar ſpeech,but for the greater reuerence, to be kept in the Latine tongue,they ſay,it is more conuenient: and that the words of conſecration ſhould not bee vttered in a loud and audible,but in a ſoft and low voyce,*Bellarm.cap.*11.12.

*Argum.*1. If Maſſe ſhould be ſaid in the vulgar tongue, two great inconueniences would enſue: one,that the wordes of conſecration muſt bee often chaunged, becauſe the vulgar ſpeech doth often alter: the other is,that hereby the communion of Churches ſhould be taken away: for an Italian could not ſay Maſſe in France,nor a French man in Italie,*Bellar.cap.*11.*argum.*5.

Anſw. For the firſt,the vulgar tongue is not ſo ſoone, nor ſo eaſily altered: the vulgar Engliſh tongue doth not differ,ſauing in certaine new wordes, from the vulgar language vſed three hundred yeeres agoe: but if it ſhould in proceſſe of time be wholly altered,what would it hurt,if the forme of the Leiturgie were chaunged with all? as likewiſe the vulgar tranſlation of Scriptures may ſafely be amended,as the vulgar ſpeech is perfited. To the ſecond we anſwere: firſt,the ſame obiection may be made againſt Latine Maſſe, for neither can an Italian ſay Maſſe in Greece, nor a Grecian in Italie. Secondly,the Latine tongue rather taketh away the communion and fellowſhip of the Church,when the ſame congregation vnderſtandeth not a Latine Maſſe, where it is ordinarily and daily ſaid,which is rather to be reſpected,than any ſuch extraordinarie or vnwonted occaſion of ſtrangers and trauellers. Thirdly,by the ſame reaſon ſermons alſo ſhould be made in Latine,becauſe otherwiſe ſtrangers cannot vnderſtand them. Fourthly, where in populous cities there bee diuers congregations, there ſhould bee prouided for them Miniſters of their owne: As *Innocent.*3.decreed,Qui ſecundum diverſitates linguarum,&c. Which according to the diuerſitie of the tongues,ſhould celebrate the diuine offices,*Decr.Greg.lib.*1.*tit.*31.*c.*14.Their owne decree is euidently againſt them.

*Argum.*2. Chriſt for the ſpace of three houres,being ſo long vpon the croſſe, vttered nothing in the hearing of the ſtanders by,but ſeuen ſhort ſentences: Ergo, in the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, it is not neceſſarie to vtter all in the hearing of the people,Ibid.

Anſw. Firſt,they haue not proued by this example,that the Prieſt ſhould mutter and mumble to himſelfe,but the contrarie rather: that either he muſt altogether hold his peace, or elſe ſpeake aloude; vnleſſe they can ſhew that Chriſt ſpake ſome words ſecretly to himſelfe. Secondly,wee muſt not fetch the right vſe of the Sacrament of our owne heads, from the example of Chriſts ſacrifice vpon the croſſe: but wee are commaunded to reſort for direction to the inſtitution in his laſt Supper,1.Cor.11.23.wherein Chriſt is not read to haue ſpoken any thing, but in the hearing of his Apoſtles: neither did Chriſt pronounce any of the words of conſecration vpon the croſſe, but in the inſtitution of his laſt Supper.

*Argum.*3. The Prieſt in the law did enter alone into the holy place,all the people ſtanding without,as we reade of *Zacharie,*Luk.1.10.*Ergo,*the ſacrifice of the Maſſe muſt be offered vp in ſilence and ſecret,*Bellarm.cap.*12.*argum.*3.

Anſw. Firſt,the Prieſt herein was a type of Chriſts entring into the holie place of heauen, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, Hebr.9.24. therefore it concludeth not for the Maſſe. Secondly,a ſacrifice might be offred without the preſence of the people,but vnder the Goſpell wee denie any ſuch ſacrifice. Thirdly,the Prieſt while he burned incenſe,was neither heard,nor ſeene of the people:you may as well inferre,that your Prieſts neither muſt bee ſeene of the people ſaying of Maſſe,and ſo ſhould yee loſe the glorie of your ſuperſtitious eleuation. Fourthly, the reaſon why the people ſtaied without in the time of the ſacrifice,was in reſpect of the diuiſion of the Temple,which conſiſted of three parts;the moſt holy place,whereinto only the high Prieſt entred;the holy place,appointed for the inferiour ſacrificing Prieſts; and the court without,which was for the people:but the Temple now is diſſolued,and the vaile thereof,which made this diuiſion,was rent by the death of Chriſt: ſo that it muſt not be a patterne of Chriſtian oratories or houſes of prayer.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt,for the Sacrament,or any other part of the ſeruice of God to be miniſtred in an vnknowne tongue,is contrarie to S.Pauls rule,who would haue all things to bee done in the Church to edifying,and in ſuch ſort that the vnlearned might ſay, Amen, 1.Cor.14.16.But the people cannot be edified by a language which they vnderſtand not: nor yet can ſay Amen vnto ſtrange prayers. But of this matter we haue alreadie elſewhere entreated more at large.

Secondly, it is alſo contrarie to Saint Pauls rule,that the Prieſt ſhould mutter to himſelfe, and not ſpeake aloud in the hearing of the people: for he ſaith, Ye doe ſhew forth,καταγγέλλετε,annuntiatis, preach or declare the death of Chriſt, ſo often as ye receiue it, 1.Cor.11.26. But they doe not annuntiare, that is, preach, ſet forth,and declare the death of Chriſt, that ſpeake onely to themſelues.

Bellarmine anſwereth; This ſhewing forth of Chriſts death is not done ſo much by the words, as in act and in deed: for how elſe could all the people ſhew forth the death of Chriſt,but by eating and drinking in the Sacrament?

Contra. Firſt,we grant,that by the very action of eating and drinking in the Sacrament Chriſts death is ſhewed forth, but not thereby onely: for the inſtitution of Chriſt muſt be declared, as the Apoſtle doth, 1.Cor.11.23. I haue receiued of the Lord, that which I haue deliuered vnto you: otherwiſe, if there ſhould bee a dumbe action onely, without the word of inſtitution rehearſed in the audience of the people, they ſhould not know, what by their action is repreſented and ſhewed forth. Secondly, if by the action of eating and drinking onely the Lords death is ſhewed forth, then in your priuate Maſſes, where the people neither eate nor drinke, there is no ſhewing forth at all of the Lords death.

*Argum.*3. A Sacrament conſiſteth of two parts; of the outward element, as the matter; and of the word of inſtitution, as the forme: the element, as water in Baptiſme, bread and wine in the Euchariſt muſt not be concealed: Ergo, neither the word of inſtitution.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that it is ſufficient, if the words bee vſed, though not pronounced in their hearing, that receiue the Sacraments: for infants heare not the words ſpoken in Baptiſme.

Contra. Firſt, the reaſon is not alike betweene infants baptized, and other communicants; they heare not, neither vnderſtand, therefore they profit not by the words: but they which communicate in the other Sacrament can both heare and vnderſtand. Secondly, though infants heare not, yet they which are preſent at their Baptiſme doe heare and are edified: otherwiſe ye might as well reaſon thus, Infants ſee not the element, which is vſed: Ergo, the water alſo may bee concealed. Thirdly, yet the argument is not anſwered, drawne from the proportion, betweene the element of the Sacraments, and the word.

*Argum.*4. There is the ſame reaſon of vſing words not vnderſtood in the Church of God, and of words, that are not heard: for by neither is the people edified: but the firſt are not to bee vſed; as the Apoſtle ſaith, I had rather in the Church ſpeake fiue words with mine vnderſtanding, that I might inſtruct others, than tenne thouſand words in a ſtrange tongue, 1.Cor.14.19. Ergo, neither are the other: and therefore their fiue words of conſecration muſt be ſo ſpoken, as that others may be inſtructed thereby.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of preaching, not of prayer. Secondly, ſacrificing is not a ſpeaking, but a doing: and if it be a ſpeaking it is to God, not to the Church.

Contra. Firſt, it is euident that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of prayer, verſ.14. If I pray in a ſtraunge tongue my ſpirit prayeth, but my vnderſtanding is without fruite, that is to others. Secondly, if their ſacrifice be a doing onely, what neede they vſe any words at all? Thirdly, prayer is a ſpirituall ſacrifice offered onely to God, yet the Apoſtle would not haue it without vnderſtanding and inſtruction.

Auguſtine ſaith, Populus cum epiſcopo orat, & quaſi ad eius verba ſubſcribens reſpondet, Amen: The people prayeth with their paſtor, and ſubſcribing to his words, ſay, Amen. But how can the people ſay, Amen, where nothing is heard, or ſubſcribe in their hearts vnto it? Contra Parmenian. lib.2. cap.7.

Concil. Oxonienſ. ſub Stephano: Verba canonis præſertim in conſecratione corporis Chriſti plenè & integrè proferantur: The words of the canon, eſpecially at the conſecration of the body of Chriſt, muſt bee pronounced fully and wholly.

*Concil. Baſilienſ. ſeſſ.*21. Abuſum aliquarum eccleſiarum, in quibus Miſſa priuatè ſine miniſtro, aut per ſecretas orationes ita ſubmiſſa voce dicitur, quod à circumſtantibus audiri non poteſt, abolemus, &c. The abuſe of certaine Churches, where Maſſe is ſaid priuatly without a Miniſter, or with a low voyce the prayers are mumbled, that the ſtanders by cannot heare, wee doe aboliſh. This is contrarie to Bellarmines opinion, who would not haue the words of conſecration vttered in a loud voyce.

THE SEVENTH QVESTION, OF THE CEREMOnies which they vſe in the idolatrous ſacrifice of the Maſſe.

The Papiſts.

SOme ceremonies goe before the celebration of the Maſſe, and they are of ſuch things, as they haue alwaies in a readines for that impious ſeruice: ſuch are the veſtiments and apparell of the Prieſt, the Albe, Cheſill, Stole, Dalmatike, with ſuch other: Altars, Altarclothes, Corporaſſes, Pixes, Paxes, Diſhes, Candleſtickes, Platters, Cenſers, Water-pots: all theſe and the like trumperie ought of right to be vſed in the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, the better to diſcerne the bodie of Chriſt, *Rhemiſt. 1.Cor.11.ſect.*18. 39. Error.

Argum. Bellarmine warranteth their maſſing garments by the example of the prieſtly attire preſcribed in the law: and as Magiſtrates in their office vſe a ſpeciall kinde of attire for reuerence ſake, ſo alſo it is fit that prieſts ſhould be knowne by ſome ſpeciall habite in the publike ſeruice of the Church, *Bellarm. lib.2. de Miſſ. c.*14.

Anſw. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith, If the Prieſthood be chaunged, there muſt be alſo a chaunge of the law, Heb.7.12. wherefore the prieſtly garments belonging to the law of the Prieſthood, are chaunged together with it, and are no warrant for the habite of the Miniſters of the Goſpell. Secondly, be it graunted that Miniſters may bee diſcerned in their office, by ſome decent habite (though by their life and doctrine they chiefly are to manifeſt themſelues) yet ſuch partly ridiculous, partly ſuperſtitious apparell, as you hang vpon your Maſſe-prieſts backe is not fit: for as the Magiſtrate will not adorne himſelfe with ſtraunge and vnwonted apparell, but ſuch, as may adde comelines and grace to his perſon; ſo neither are ſuch popiſh ragges ſeemely for a Miniſter of the Goſpel, which onely attend vpon their Idolatrous ſacrifice. Thirdly, ſacrificing garments are not meete to bee vſed where there is no externall ſacrifice: but vnder the Goſpell there is no externall ſacrifice: Ergo, the ſacrificing garments of Aaron are not now to be put in vſe.

The Proteſtants.

First, for diuers cauſes wee doe condemne and reiect theſe ſuperſtitious vſages of the Papiſts: firſt, becauſe of the ſuperfluous and vnneceſſarie number of them, fewer by a great deale may ſerue for the Communion to be kept, after Chriſts inſtitution: neither doe wee reade, that Chriſt at his laſt Supper vſed any ſuch, who notwithſtanding would not haue left out any thing requiſite and needfull for the Sacrament.

Secondly, the ſuperfluous and exceſſiue coſt, in making ſo many Church veſſels of gold and ſiluer, ſo many Maſſe garments of ſilke, fine linnen, embroidered with gold, pearle, and pretious ſtones, was both an intolerable burthen to the Church, at whoſe charge ſuch things were prouided, and a great deale more coſtly, than became the ſimplicitie of the Goſpell.

Thirdly, conuenient veſſels and inſtruments, which are neceſſarie for the adminiſtration of the Sacrament, with other ſeemely ornaments: as a decent couering for the Communion table, a cleane and handſome veſſell to keepe the wine, a cup of ſiluer for the diſtribution, cleane linnen napkins for the bread; ſuch inſtruments and ornaments of the Lords table we condemne not, but vſe them our ſelues: yet none of them for ſuch ends or purpoſes, as they pretend, to diſcerne the bodie of the Lord by them; as though they were ordained to waite and attend vpon the bodily preſence of Chriſt, which they haue falſely imagined: but wee doe vſe them for decencie and order ſake, and due reuerence, which is to bee yeelded to ſo great myſteries. As in their owne decrees, decr. Gregor. lib. 3. tit. 44. c. 2. Innocent. 3. Sunt alij, &c. qui veſtimenta tam immunda relinquunt: There be, that leaue the veſtments ſo vncleane, &c. that they are loathſome vnto ſome, &c. wherefore we will, that they bee kept white and cleane. Such comelines and cleanlines in the celebration of the Sacrament wee commend, and allow: but their ſuperfluous veſſels and garments the Goſpell hath no neede of.

Argum. The Tabernacle, with all things thereto belonging, was a figure for the time preſent, vntill the time of reformation, Hebr. 9. 9. The prieſtly garments did belong to the ſeruice of the Law: Ergo, they are no more to be vſed now vnder the time of reformation.

Againe, as the Apoſtle ſaith, That the ſimilitude of heauenly things, and the heauenly things themſelues, are not purified with the ſame things, Heb. 9. 23. ſo neither are they to bee adorned, and ſet forth with the ſame things: the ſimilitude of heauenly things require ſuch ornaments; but the heauenly things themſelues muſt haue better ornaments.

In the Apoſtles time they had no conſecrated Altars, but Communion tables, 1. Cor. 10. 21. neither is it like that they vſed veſſels of gold or ſiluer in the Lords Supper, when they had neither ſiluer nor gold in their purſes, Matth. 10. 9. Wherefore ſuch things are not neceſſarie for the diſcerning of the Lords bodie.

Bernard ſaith well: Quam multa hodie gemmis & auro fulgent Altaria? &c. How many Altars now a daies ſhine with gold and pretious ſtones? how many walles are decked with coſtly garments? thinke you that the Angels will regard theſe things, and thinke ſcorne of baſe attyred men? if it were ſo, how chance they appeared to ſhepheards rather than vnto Kings? Altars therefore or Communion tables are better adorned with the frequencie of poore faithful people, than with cloth, and iewels of gold.

Euſebius, decr. par. 3. diſtinct. 1. cap. 45. Non in ſerico panno, aut tincto, ſed puro lineo, terreno ſcilicet lino procreato, ſacrificium altaris conſecretur: Let the ſacrifice be conſecrate, not in ſilke, or coloured cloth, but in pure linnen made of naturall flaxe. But now ſilke will not ſerue the turne: their Altars, and Altarclothes are decked with gold, ſiluer, and pretious ſtones.

Bonifacius Martyr and Biſhop, being asked, whether it were lawfull to celebrate the Sacrament in wooden veſſels, made anſwere: Quondam ſacerdotes aurei ligneis calicibus vtebantur, nunc è contrario lignei ſacerdotes aureis vtuntur calicibus: In time paſt golden prieſts vſed wooden cuppes, now wooden prieſts vſe golden cups, decr. par. 3. diſtinct. 1. c. 46. Wherefore it is euident, that in the ſimpler ages of the Church, ſuch ſumptuous ornaments were not requiſite. Firſt they did miniſter in wooden cups; then Zepherinus brought in glaſſe cups: and after that time cuppes were in vſe; and laſt of all ſiluer and golden cuppes, ibid. cap. 44. 45. And thus by ſteps and degrees, they grew to this ſuperfluitie.

The Papiſts.

2. THere are other ceremonies,which they obſerue and vſe in the very action it ſelfe and celebration of the Maſſe : as the diuers geſtures of the Prieſt,to lift vp his eyes, and caſt them dow neagaine,and to lift them vp the ſecond, the third time : ſometime to caſt abroad his hands, to cloſe them againe,to warble with his fingers,to bow,to bend,to duck, to turne on this ſide and on that,now on the right hand, againe on the left : to ſigh, to ſmite vpon his breaſt,to lift vp the Chalice, and ſhew it to the people, and ſet it down againe : as alſo the diuiding of the hoaſt into three parts,which ſignifie three parts of the Church, in Heauen,in Earth,and in Purgatorie : the rinſing of part thereof in wine, and eating part drie, the waſhing of his fingers before conſecration : kiſſing of the Altar, the paten, the booke, the paxe : ſprinkling of holie water, cenſing of odors,croſſing the Chalice,the bread,their mouth,breaſt and face, which ſigne of the croſſe they make aboue twentie times in one Maſſe while : Adde alſo vnto theſe, their tedious and yrkeſome ſongs,the rude noiſe and vnedifying ſound of ſtrange inſtruments,and the whole courſe of their Maſſe-muſicke ſet forth in a ſtrange language,and endited to the honour of Saints. All theſe ſuperſtitious rites, with diuers more, vaine, vnfruitfull, abominable, they notwithſtanding with force and maine defend and maintaine, *Bellarm.lib.2.de Miſſa.cap.*14.15.*Concil.Tridentin.ſeſſ.*22.*can.*7.

Argum. The lifting vp of the hands Bellarmine warranteth by Moſes example, Exod.17. the bowing of the knees,and the eleuating of the eyes by the example of Chriſt,who often lift vp his eyes,and prayed kneeling : the eleuation of the hoaſt,the burning of incenſe,and muſicall inſtruments he deriueth from the ſacrifices of the law : and ſo concludeth the lawfull and neceſſarie vſe of them,*lib.2.de Miſſ.c.*15.

Anſ. Firſt,to lift vp the eies,the hands,to bow the knees,to knocke the breaſt,are reuerent geſtures,and to be vſed in prayer,and we willingly reteine them in our ſeruices:but they abuſe theſe ſeemely geſtures three waies : firſt, in ſetting foorth thereby a falſe and idolatrous ſacrifice ; for though it bee a comely thing to kneele, yet it is impious to kneele to an Idoll. Secondly, they offend in their mutabilitie and inconſtancie,ſhifting and chaunging their geſtures, looking ſometime vp,ſometime downe,now this way,now that way : as the Wiſeman ſaith,The eyes of the foole are in the corners of the world, Prou.17.24. but Stephen looked ſtedfaſtly into heauen, Act.7.55. ſo they kneele,they ducke,they bend,they bow: So did not Moſes, that continued holding vp his hands till the euening,and Salomon was vpon his knees all the time he prayed, 1.King.8. Thirdly, they offend in vſing dumbe and mute geſtures, without any prayer at all, or the ſame in an vnknowne tongue: ſo did not the Publicane,who not onely ſmote vpon his breaſt, but ſaid,Lord be mercifull to me a ſinner.

Secondly, if the fleſh of beaſts were now ſacrificed, as vnder the law, then they might alſo ſhake them and heaue them before God, and perfume them with incenſe,as the Leuites did : wherefore thoſe ſacrifices being aboliſhed, the rites alſo and ceremonies accompanying them are alſo extinguiſhed.

Thirdly, a moderate and ſober vſe of Muſicke in the Church wee condemne not, though the practiſe of the Iewiſh Church doth not warrant it: for their melodious ſound of inſtruments was typicall,ſignifying the ſpirituall melodie and harmonie, which we ſhould make in our hearts, Epheſ.5.19.And though Muſicke may be well vſed,yet is it by them three waies abuſed : firſt,in adorning a falſe and idolatrous ſeruice. Secondly,in playing and ſinging vnedifying ſongs. Thirdly,in diſplacing thereby the preaching of Gods word, and fruitfull prayer.

The Proteſtants.

1. THis multitude of humane inuentions, agreeth not with the inſtitution of the Lords Supper : for wee reade not of any ſuch kiſſing, kneeling,becking,bowing,or the like ridiculous geſtures to haue been vſed,when our Sauiour inſtituted the Supper, nor afterwards by the Apoſtles to haue been practiſed : wherefore we contenting our ſelues with the plaine inſtitution of Chriſt,doe worthilie reiect all ſuch toyes.

2. Moſt of theſe geſtures are impious, and tend to Idolatrie in the adoration of bread and wine,which are but creatures : and they are all friuolous and hypocriticall, ſtealing away true deuotion from the heart, and making men to reſt in the outward geſtures of the bodie. Auguſtine ſaith very well : Corpus genibus flexis proſternis,collum curuas in oratione, video vbi iaceat corpus,ſed quæro vbi volitet animus? Thou boweſt the knee,bendeſt thy bodie in prayer, ſtretcheſt out thy necke,I ſee where thy bodie lieth : but what is become of thy ſoule?

3 Concerning Church ſongs and Muſicke, Auguſtine thus writeth : Sobriè pſallimus in Eccleſia diuina cantica Prophetarum : We ſing treatably and ſoberly in the Church the diuine ſongs of the Prophets. Two conditions he requireth : firſt, that we ſing holy Pſalmes taken out of the Scriptures. Secondly,that they be ſung treatably and diſtinctly. Etiam illic (ſaith he) ſi ſonum non ſenſum libido audiendi deſideret,improbatur : Euen in good ſongs,if we follow the ſound, not the ſenſe, cap.19.

Contra.Iulian
lib.4.14.

it is to be diſcommended: but in popiſh ſongs neither of theſe conditions is kept: for both the dittie, for the moſt part, is idolatrous, ſtuffed with inuocation and adoration of Saints, and the note is ſo diuided and drawne out in length, that it cannot be vnderſtoode.

Bernard thus writeth excellently of this matter: *Sæpe ad ſacrum myſterium vocem meam fregi, vt dulcius cantarem: magis delectabar in vocis modulatione, quàm in cordis compunctione: Meditat. cap.*11. Oftentimes in diuine ſeruice, I quauered with my voyce to ſing more pleaſantly, and ſo delighted more in tuning my voyce, then in turning my heart. This then is one great fault in ſinging, ſo to regarde the note, that we thinke not of that which is ſung: And therefore he ſaith, Sic mulceat aures, vt moueat corda: Let it ſo pleaſe the eares, that it may play vpon the heart: Frangis vocem, frange & voluntatem: ſeruas conſonantiam vocis: ſerua & concordiam morum: Thou reliſheſt with thy voyce, reliſh alſo with thy heart: thou keepeſt the conſort of the voyce; keepe alſo the harmonie of manners, *Meditat.cap.*51. But popiſh Maſſe ſongs ſet forth with tedious notes, and vnknowne ſyllables, doe want this conſort and harmonie of the heart, being not vnderſtood for the moſt part of the ſingers themſelues, much leſſe of thoſe that heare them.

Concerning Organe play: Order hath been taken by Councels in theſe two poynts eſpecially. 1. Nolumus quod organicis inſtrumentis reſonet in Eccleſia impudica aut laſciua melodia, ſed ſonus omnino dulcis qui nihil præter hymnos diuinos, & cantica ſpiritualia repræſentet: We will not haue any light, wanton voluntarie melodie to be played vpon the Organes, but onely ſpirituall and diuine hymnes: Concil.Senonenſ.decret.17.

2 For the moderating of Organe play, thus alſo it is decreed, *Colonienſ.part.*2.*cap.*12. Illud non recte fit in quibuſdam Eccleſys &c. That is not well done in ſome Churches, when becauſe of the ſingers, and Organes, better things, as prayer, giuing of thankes, are ſhortened, are omitted or cleane cut off. Theſe rules in Church muſick are to be kept: which the popiſh ſort little obſerue in their Maſſe ſeruice.

Let vs heare their owne decrees: *part.*1.*diſtinct.*92.*c.*2. Gregor. In ſancta Romana Eccleſia dudum eſt conſuetudo valde reprehenſibilis exorta &c. There is of late a very euill cuſtome riſen vp in the holy Church of Rome, &c. That certaine ſingers are choſen for the Miniſterie of the altar, &c. and they attend the tuning of the voyce, which ſhould applie themſelues to preaching, and ſo it commeth to paſſe, Dum blanda vox quæritur, quæri congrua vita negligatar: That while they ſtudie for a pleaſing voyce, they neglect a good life: and a ſinging Miniſter pleaſing the people with his voyce, offendeth God with his workes: Wherefore I ordaine, Vt altaris Miniſtri cantare non debeant: That the Miniſters of the altar ſhould not ſing. Likewiſe, *Iohann.*22.*extrau. commun. lib.*3. *tit.*1.*c.*1. reproueth certaine notorious abuſes in Church muſicke: In ſemibreues & minimas Eccleſiaſtica cantantur, diſcantibus lubricant, triplis &c. inculcant: They ſing Church ſongs with ſembriefes and minimes, and glide away with triple time and deſcant, &c. This curious kinde of ſinging here reprehended, is notwithſtanding ſtill vſed in the popiſh Maſſe-ſeruice.

THE EIGHT QVESTION, OF THE FORME OF THE Maſſe, which conſiſteth partly of the Canon, partly of ſuch things as are rehearſed before and after the Canon.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE PRAIERS WHICH goe before the Canon of the Maſſe.

WE doe not vtterly condemne whatſoeuer is ſaid or ſung in their Leiturgie or Maſſe: for as they haue their introite, ſo we doe bid the people, after due preparation, in our Communions to draw neere. We haue alſo our Confiteor, a confeſſion of ſinnes to bee ſaid before the Communion. Other formes alſo, which haue been vſed of auncient time, we doe not refuſe: as Dominus vobiſcum, The Lord be with you: Kyrie eleyſon, Lord haue mercie on vs: Surſum corda, Lift vp your hearts: with Alleluia, praiſed be God, and Sanctus, Sanctus, holy, holy; and Gloria in excelſis, Glorie be to God on high: the preface alſo to the Communion, Verè dignum, & iuſtum eſt: It is meete, right, and our bounden duetie: And we vſe alſo the Lords prayer after the diſtribution. Theſe formes we miſlike not, vſing the ſame our ſelues, which notwithſtanding wee borrow not from them, but from the ancient and purer ages of the Church. But the corruptions, additions, immutations, which are vſed by them in theſe prefaces to the Maſſe, wee doe vtterly condemne, as their introite and confiteor, is ſtuft full of idolatrie, and inuocation of Saints: their Kyrie eleyſon is nine times repeated in an vnknowne tongue. Eleuation and adoration was brought in by Pope Honorius, anno. 1222. the Agnus was deuiſed by Pope Sergius, anno. 700. the Pax by Innocentius, plura apud Foxum.pag. 1403.

THE

THE SECOND PART, OF THE Canon of the Maſſe.

The Papiſts

1. FIrſt, the forme of their Maſſe they haue (they ſay) by tradition from the Apoſtles: Rhemiſt. 1.Cor.11.ſect.22.Bellarm.lib.2.de miſſ.c.19. 40. Error.

Argum. That the Canon of the Maſſe is moſt auncient, and ſo like to take beginning from the Apoſtles time, Bellarmine ſheweth by theſe three coniectures: firſt, becauſe mention is made only of Martyrs in the Canon, not of the confeſſors of the Church, who began of later time to be honoured: Secondly, becauſe ſome few words of the Canon haue been added ſince by diuers, as by Leo 1. Gregorie 1. with others, whereby it appeareth, that the Canon it ſelfe was before their time. Thirdly, becauſe the author of the Canon is vnknowne, and therefore it is like it came by tradition from the Apoſtles.c.20.

Anſw. Firſt, the adoration and inuocation of Martyrs, as alſo of confeſſors, is but a late ſuperſtitious deuiſe, not knowne in the auncient and purer times of the Church: as Origene ſaith, Homil.6.Ioſue. Ioſua non adoraſſet, niſi agnouiſſet Deum: Ioſua would not haue worſhipped, if hee had not knowne the Angell to be God. Ambroſ. in 9. ad Roman. Non poteſt genu flecti niſi Deo: The knee cannot be bowed of euery creature but onely to God. And againe, *lib.4. de interpellat. c.*12. vpon theſe words in the 73. Pſalme, Whom haue I in heauen but thee? Nec ſupereſt in cæleſtibus quod amplius quæram,&c. There is nothing in heauen but Chriſt, which I deſire: Ergo, hee needed not, neither deſired the helpe and aſſiſtance of Saints. S. Hierome alſo ſaith, aduerſ.Vigilant. Quis enim ô inſanum caput Martyres vnquam adorauit? Who euer (thou fooliſh head) worſhipped or adored Martyrs? Ergo, by this reaſon it appeareth, that the Canon of the Maſſe, allowing inuocation of Martyrs is not ſo auncient as Origene or Ambroſe and Hieromes time. Neither is it true, that Martyrs onely are mentioned in the Canon, for the Virgine Marie and Iohn the Apoſtle were no Martyrs, who are eſpecially remembred: and whereas they conclude thus, after rehearſall made of ſome, Et omnium ſanctorum tuorum: And of all thy Saints, vnder this generall name, not onely Martyrs, but all true confeſſors of Chriſt are contained.

Secondly, the patching together of the Maſſe by diuers at ſundry times doth euidently ſhew, that the Canon of the Maſſe, as it now ſtandeth, is not auncient. And whereas he inferreth that ſome part of the Canon was before Leo and Gregorie, we graunt it, for the Lords Prayer vſed in the Maſſe, and theſe words, This is my bodie, and the rehearſing of the inſtitution are read in the Goſpell: but this proueth not, that the other parts alſo are Apoſtolicall.

Thirdly, the author of the Canon is aſſigned to be one Scholaſticus by Gregorie, as euen now followeth to be ſhewed, Ergo Bellarmines third coniecture is vaine.

The Proteſtants.

THeir owne authors doe teſtifie, that euery patch of their Maſſe was thruſt in by Popes, later then the Apoſtles: As Sixtus the ſecond brought into the Maſſe, the (Sanctus) Innocentius the firſt, the (Pax) Leo the firſt added this clauſe, Sanctum ſacrificium, immaculatam hoſtiam, the holy ſacrifice, the vnbloodie hoſt: Gelaſius the prefaces, collectes, gradualts: Symmachus the (Gloria in excelſis) Agapetus the firſt, the proceſſions. Pelagius the ſecond, appoynted nine prefaces before the Canon: Gregorie the firſt, brought in the (Antiphonies, and the Kyrie eleyſon) Sergius the firſt, Agnus Dei: The other parts alſo and members of the Maſſe are aſſigned to their ſeuerall authors, and inuentors: yea, Gregorie the firſt confeſſeth, that one Scholaſticus made the moſt part of the Canon. Ergo, it was not deuiſed by the Apoſtles. Bellarmine anſwereth, that Gregorie ſetteth not downe any one man, by this name Scholaſticus, but meaneth generally ſome notable learned man: and in this ſenſe S. Peter, ſaith he, which was the author of the Canon, may be called *Scholaſticus, Bellarm.cap.*19.

Anſw. This deuiſe of the Ieſuite is rather to bee laughed at, then to bee confuted. Who euer heard before, that S. Peter and the other Apoſtles were Scholaſtici, Schoolemen? What is this elſe, but to ſet the ſpirite of God to ſchoole, in ſaying that the Apoſtles being men endued with the holy Ghoſt, were brought vp in Schooles? Againe, Gregorie findeth fault with the ſaid Scholaſticus, that in compoſing the Canon, hee would put in his owne prayers, and leaue out the Lordes prayer: but if this Scholaſticus had been Peter, I thinke Gregorie would not haue been ſo bolde, as to haue rebuked him: Or elſe ſaith Bellarmine, this Scholaſticus was not the author of the Canon, but of certaine extraordinarie prayers.

Contra. I will here oppoſe the iudgement of Eſpenſæus a graue writer among the Papiſts, who calleth Scholaſticum, vſitati Canonis authorem: Scholaſticus the author of the vſuall Canon. Comment. in 1.*Timoth.p.*31.d.

*Argum.*2. There be many things contained in the Canon contrarie to the doctrine of the Apoſtles, as inuocation of Saints, adoration of bread, prayer for the dead, with many other groſſe errors, as afterward ſhall be ſhewed : Ergo, the Canon was not inſtituted by the Apoſtles.

Argum. 3. S. Hierome findeth fault with ſome in his time, that in their prayers and oblations vſed to ſay, Qui ſedes ſuper Cherubim & Seraphim : Thou that ſitteſt vpon the Cherubim and Seraphim : Illorum pius, ſed coarguendus error : Whoſe error, though it may haue a ſhew of pietie, is worthie of reproofe, becauſe that no where mention is made in Scripture, that God ſitteth vpon the Seraphim, but only vpon the Cherubim : tom.4.epiſt.ad Damaſ. From hence I reaſon thus; If they vſe the ſame forme in their Maſſe oblation, then is it an error, and ſo can not be fathered vpon the Apoſtles : if they doe not; then do they not vſe that forme, which was in Hieromes time, and ſo it cannot be of any great antiquitie, let them chooſe which part they will.

The Papiſts.

41.Error. 2. THe Canon of the Maſſe (ſay they) is perfect and abſolute, voyd of all error, and therefore not to be changed or abrogated. Concil.Trident. ſeſſ.22.can.6.Bellar.cap.21.

The Proteſtants.

BVt wee on the contrary ſide, more truely and agreeable to Scripture, doubt not to ſay, that there can bee nothing more corrupt, abominable, fuller of all impietie, hereſie, lying, then is their idolatrous ſacrifice of the Maſſe: as it ſhall now more particularly appeare, by the collection of the ſeuerall errors.

A FVLL HALFE HVNDRED OF ERRORS AND Blaſphemies that are to be found in the Canon of the Maſſe, as touching the matter.

1. THe Prieſt ſaith, Wee pray thee accept theſe gifts, theſe holy and vnſpotted ſacrifices. Thus hee maketh Bread and Wine the ſacrifices of the Goſpell: for theſe words are ſpoken before Conſecration. And whereas Bellarmine ſaith, it is called a ſacrifice, becauſe it is intended and ſet apart to be a ſacrifice: Contra, Yet is it not already a Sacrifice, much leſſe vnſpotted, ſeeing it is neither vnſpotted in reſpect of it ſelfe, being not yet made the body and blood of Chriſt, nor in reſpect of the offerer, who is a ſinfull man.

2 The Prieſt ſpeaking of the bread and wine, thus ſaith; Which wee offer vnto thee for thy holy Catholike Church. And againe afterward; Which wee offer for the redemption of our ſoules. What great Blaſphemie is this, to offer bread and wine for the redemption of the Church, for the which Chriſt in great loue offered vp himſelfe? and ſo to make his death of no force.

Bellarm. Bread and wine is not offered for the Church, but the ſacrifice to be made of bread and wine. Contra. Then the Prieſt ſhould ſay, Which we ſhall offer, not, Which we do offer: but that which he offereth, is nothing but bread and wine, whatſoeuer it is, which he offereth afterward.

3 The rubricke of the Maſſe willeth, that the Prieſt ſhould pray for his owne Biſhop onely and for himſelfe, and his ſpeciall friends: But charitie would, that he ſhould pray for all Biſhops, Paſtors and Miniſters : and Chriſt biddeth vs, not onely to pray for our friends, but alſo for our enemies.

4 The Prieſt firſt prayeth for the Pope, then for his owne Biſhop, laſtly for the King : But Saint Paul would haue prayers firſt of all made for all men, but eſpecially for Kings, 1.Timoth.2.2. they ſhould firſt of all be remembred : & S.Peter ſetteth down the King as the chiefe, 1.Pet.2.13. Agatho B. of Rome writing to Conſtantine the Emperour, confeſſeth himſelfe Imperij famulum, a ſeruant to the Emperour, action.4.Synod.6.Conſtantin.

5 He ſaith, and with thy ſeruant our Pope : he is their Pope and Biſhop onely, that are vnder his Dioceſſe and Seignorie : he hath no iuriſdiction ouer other Churches: Pelagius 2.1.epiſtol.decretal. calleth it prophanum vocabulum, a prophane name to be called vniuerſall Biſhop : and *Gregor.*1.ad Eulog. Patriarke of Conſtantinople findeth fault with him, for giuing him the ſtile of vniuerſall Pope, calling it ſuperba appellationis verbum; a proud name. And here alſo let it be noted, whether our Engliſh Papiſts can be true ſubiects, that in their Maſſe and other prayers preferre the Pope before their Prince, and acknowledge him to be their Pope and Biſhop.

6 Hoc ſacrificium laudis: This ſacrifice of prayſe: it is only then a ſpirituall ſacrifice of thankeſgiuing, not a materiall and externall ſacrifice, as they beare men in hand. Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Sacrifice of Chriſts body, is called a Sacrifice of prayſe, becauſe thereby God is prayſed, &c. Contra. Firſt, God thereby is greatly diſhonoured, when they adore a piece of bread, and Chriſts bodie alſo is diſgraced, being made ſubiect to wormes and corruption, and to be eaten of miſe and dogges : all which inconueniences enſue vpon the carnall preſence. Secondly, the Apoſtle ſheweth, what the Sacrifice of prayſe is, namely, the fruite of the lippes, Heb.13.15. but Chriſts bodie is not the fruite of the lippes : though their Prieſts can make Chriſts body with fiue words ſpeaking, yet I thinke they dare not ſay, that Chriſts body is the fruite of the Prieſtes lippes; lippes: if they ſhould, the Apoſtle confuteth them, who expoundeth himſelfe, that the fruit of the lippes is, the confeſſion of the Name of God: Ergo, Chriſts body is not the Sacrifice of prayſe.

7 The Prieſt ſaith, Worſhipping the memoriall of the Virgine: But Chriſt inſtituted the Sacrament to be kept in remembrance of himſelfe, and not for the worſhip of Saints.

8 By whoſe merites and prayers, namely of the Saints, graunt we may be defended. But S. Iohn ſaith, If any man ſinne, we haue an aduocate with the Father, Ieſus Chriſt the righteous, 1.Iohn 2.2.

9 In the ſecond prayer of the Canon, they pray, by vertue of the oblation of bread and wine to be deliuered from eternall damnation: for as yet the elements are not conſecrated. Bellar. They conclude this prayer, through Chriſt our Lord, by whom, and not by the oblation, they deſire it to bee graunted. Contra. They doe for faſhion ſake indeede conclude their prayers, through Chriſt,&c. but they do alſo aſcribe their Petition to the vertue of the oblation: that God being well pleaſed with that oblation, &c. would deliuer them from eternall damnation,&c.

10 We beſeech thee (ſaith the Prieſt) to receiue this oblation, which we beſeech thee in all thinges to make bleſſed: Here the Prieſt is made a Mediator betweene Chriſt and his Father; deſiring God to ſanctifie the body and blood of his Sonne. Thus beginneth the third prayer of the Canon. Bellarmine anſwereth, they pray not here for the Euchariſt now conſecrated, but to be conſecrated, that it may be made the bodie and blood of Chriſt, *c.*23. Contra. Firſt, they pray for that oblation, whereby they prayed a little before to be deliuered from damnation: Ergo, for an oblation conſecrated. Secondly, after the conſecration they pray alſo in the ſame manner, Which wee beſeech thee vouchſafe to accept.

11 Who the next day afore hee ſuffered: But the Scripture ſaith, The ſame night. For this is my body: Here they haue put in enim, of their owne, and left out, Quod pro vobis datur. Such is their boldneſſe, that they are not aſhamed to change the words of our Sauiour Chriſt.

12 Take yee, &c. Why then doth the Prieſt take it alone? ſeeing Chriſt appointed it to be taken of many.

13 Eate yee,&c. Why then do they hang it vp in a Pixe? ſeeing Chriſt would haue it eaten.

14 Drinke yee all of this: why then doth the Prieſt drinke it alone? ſeeing by the inſtitution all are to drinke of it.

15 He ſaith further in the fourth Prayer: The holy bread of eternall life, which vouchſafe thou with a pleaſant countenance to behold: The bread of eternall life is Chriſt himſelfe, if this be he, how dare yee preſume to offer him vp to his Father? Bellarmine anſwereth, that they pray not in reſpect of the Sacrifice offered, but in reſpect of the Miniſter, that offreth. Contra. They deſire God not to behold the Prieſt, but the oblation.

16 As thou didſt vouchſafe to accept the righteous gifts of Abel, and the ſacrifice of Abraham. Here the Sacrifice of Chriſt is compared to the ſacrifice of beaſtes: and the Prieſt ſeemeth to attribute as much efficacie to the one, as to the other: he compareth the gifts and ſacrifices together, not the ſacrificers in reſpect of their deuotion, as Bellarmine trifleth.

17 And the holy ſacrifice which thy high Prieſt Melchiſedech did offer vnto thee. This is a plaine vntrueth, and a flat lie, as we haue ſhewed already, that Melchiſedech ſacrificed bread and wine.

18 After the words of conſecration rehearſed, the Prieſt is willed in the Rubricke, to rubbe his fingers, becauſe of the crummes: but if it be Chriſts bodie, it cannot be crummie. And againe, let the fourth croſſe be made vpon the bread: here it is called bread after the conſecration: then is it not Chriſts bodie: So by their owne Canon, they are conuinced to be in an error.

19 Command thou theſe to be brought by the hands of thy holy Angell, vnto the high Altar in heauen. What an abſurd thing is this, that he ſhould deſire that to be carried into heauen, which hee eateth and deuoureth? And if this be the body of Chriſt, what need the helpe of an Angell to carrie it vp to heauen? Is not Chriſt able to lift vp his owne body? Or what need that to be conueyed to heauen, which was neuer from thence? Bellarm. The Angell doth not carrie vp Chriſts body into heauen, but, their ſeruice and obedience. Contra. Hee ſaith, Iube hac,&c. Command theſe things, &c. looking toward the hoaſt and the chalice: Ergo, he meaneth, that Chriſts bodie and blood ſhould be carried.

20 As many of vs as ſhall receiue thy Sonnes body and blood: And yet for the moſt part none receiue, but the Prieſt; and when the people doe communicate, the wine they haue not: how then can he ſay, As many?

21 Remember, O Lord, the ſoules of thy ſeruants, which reſt in the ſleepe of peace, and grant them a place of refreſhing and reſt: Here is another error contrary to the Scriptures in praying for the dead, and the prayer alſo is contrary to it ſelfe: for firſt he ſaith, they reſt in peace, and yet afterward prayeth for their refreſhing: thus beginneth the fift prayer of the Canon. Bellarmine anſwereth, that they which are in Purgatorie, are at reſt from the workes of ſinne, though not from torment. *c.*25. Contra, They which are dead in Chriſt, do reſt from their labours, Apocal. 14.13. Ergo, from all laborious and painfull torments.

22 In the ſixt prayer, Vouchſafe that they may haue a portion with the Saintes, ending through Ieſus Chriſt,&c. the Rubricke forbiddeth Amen to be ſayd; contrary to the Apoſtle, 1.Cor.14.16. that would haue Amen to be ſaid to the publike bleſſing and thankeſgiuing in the Church.

23 Deliuer vs by the bleſſed interceſſion of the Virgine: What then is become of Chiriſts Mediation and Interceſſion? who euer liueth to make Interceſſion for vs, Heb.7.25.

24 Let this mingling together of the body and blood of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, be vnto me ſaluation of minde and body: Then is not Chriſts blood ſhedde vpon the Croſſe the full ſufficient and perfect ſaluation of mankinde, if there be another ſaluation beſide.

25 Againe, if it be the very bodie and blood of Chriſt, how can they be mingled together, ſeeing the very body and blood of Chriſt cannot be deuided? Bellarmine anſwereth, that they are mingled onely by reaſon of the formes of bread and wine, which remaine. Contra. Formes and accidents cannot be mingled without ſubſtances, and therefore, if there be no ſubſtance remayning but of Chriſts body and blood, it followeth, that they are mingled. And further; ſeeing they hold, by way of their deuiſed concomitance, that the fleſh of Chriſt is with the blood, and the blood with the fleſh, what need then any ſuch mixture or mingling at all?

26 Grant me ſo worthily to take this body and blood, that I may merit to receiue forgiueneſſe of ſinnes: O ſinful man, how canſt thou merite that which is Chriſts onely gift? And in the ſixt prayer of the Canon, the Prieſt prayeth thus, Not weighing our merite,&c. and here hee prayeth for merite: So that their Maſſe is contrarie to it ſelfe.

27 Let the Prieſt bow himſelſe to the hoaſt, ſaying, I worſhip thee, I glorifie thee, I prayſe thee: What monſtrous Idolatrie is this, thus to worſhip a peece of bread?

28 The Sacrament of thy body and blood,&c. If it be a Sacrament of Chriſts bodie, then is it not the bodie it ſelfe: for the ſame thing cannot be both the Sacrament, and the thing whereof it is a Sacrament: the ſigne, and the thing ſignified; the ſhadow and the bodie: Sacraments are liuely ſhadowes, but Chriſts bodie is not a ſhadow. Coloſſ.2.17.

29 Haile for euer, thou moſt holy fleſh of Chriſt,&c. Haile for euer, thou moſt heauenly drinke: Where do they finde in Scripture, to ſalute God in this manner? the Angell indeed ſaid to Marie; Aue, Haile: and S. Iohn forbiddeth vs to ſay to an heretike, Aue, which the Rhemiſts tranſlate, *God ſaue you. epiſt.*2.10. Is it not then a ſeemely thing to ſay to Chriſt, all health, haile, or God ſaue you ſyr? that we ſhould bleſſe him, of whom we looke to be bleſſed.

30 Let not this Sacrament be vnto my iudgement or condemnation: thus they thinke that Chriſts fleſh may be eaten to condemnation, contrary to the Scripture: Whoſoeuer eateth my fleſh, hath eternall life, Iohn 6.54.

31 Deliuer me by thy precious bodie from all mine iniquities,&c. and graunt, that for euer I be not ſeparated from thee: This is contrary to their owne doctrine, that a man cannot be ſure to be preſerued from finall falling: for if the Maſſe be an auaileable Sacrifice, as they hold, then is it auaileable to this ende, that they ſhall not be finally ſeparated from God.

32 Out of a temporall gift, let it be to vs a remedie euerlaſting: Here he calleth the body and fleſh of Chriſt a temporall gift, which is blaſphemie, vnleſſe they will graunt that there is bread ſtill.

33 Let this Communion purge vs from ſinne: If they meane the principall purging of our ſinne, ſo doth Chriſt onely purge vs, Heb.1.3. If they vnderſtand the inſtrumentall meanes of our purgation, ſo are we purged and iuſtified onely by faith, Rom.3.28. I conclude, that a man is iuſtified by faith, without the workes of the Law.

34 Reſpect not my ſinnes, but the faith of thy Church: By this reaſon one may be profited by anothers faith; which is contrary to the Scriptures: The Iuſt ſhall liue by faith: his owne, and not anothers: Rom.1.17. and belike the Prieſt thus ſaying, hath no fayth himſelfe.

35 Let vs worſhip the ſigne of the Croſſe: What I pray you will not theſe Idolaters worſhip?

36 Let this ſacrifice which I haue offered, auaile to obtaine remiſſion of ſinnes: If the Maſſe be auaileable for this ende, wherefore then dyed Chriſt?

37 The Prieſt prayeth, that God would reſtore the land conſecrated by Chriſts blood to the Chriſtian faith. But where do they finde, that the land was conſecrated by Chriſts blood, whereas the Scripture ſaith, that the land is defiled with blood, that is, ſtandeth accurſed, Numb.35.33. And the Apoſtle ſaith, He hath conſecrated, (not the earth, but) them that are ſanctified. Heb.10.14. and, the blood of Chriſt purgeth our conſcience, Heb.9.14. not the terrene part.

38 And whereas they pray, that the holy land may be recouered out of the hand of the enemies of the Croſſe: which God hath not done: how is now their Maſſe auaileable for the obtayning of temporall benefites, as Bellarmine would beare vs in hand?

39 The Prieſt prayeth alſo, That the vowes of the faithful may be directed toward the deliuering of that land: Theſe were ſuperſtitious and vnlawfull vowes: as S. Hierome writeth vpon theſe words of the Pſalme, I hope to ſee God in the land of the liuing: Ergo, Terra Iudæa, quæ illius ditionis erat,&c. Therefore the land of the Iewes, which was vnder his regiment, is not that land of the liuing, but he draweth vs to a ſpirituall vnderſtanding: Hierom.de terra promiſſ. And againe, vpon theſe words, The Lord loueth the gates of Sion more, then all the tabernacles of Iacob: Nunquid iſtas portas diligit Deus, quas videmus in cineres,&c. Doth God loue thoſe gates, which are turned to aſhes? Ne ſtultis quidem hoc perſuaderi poteſt, Very fooles will not be ſo perſwaded. So then all ſuch vowes are fooliſh, that are made in reſpect of the terreſtriall Ieruſalem, and by Hieromes ſentence they are fooles, that are ſo perſwaded.

40 In the end of the Maſſe, according to the vſe of Sarum, there is annexed the forme of bleſſing, or conſecrating the Paſchal Lambe, with this prayer, Vouchſafe to ſanctifie this Paſchall Lambe, that as many of thy people as doe eate thereof, may be repleniſhed with all heauenly benediction,&c. What groſſe ſuperſtition is this, that they ſhould ſtill retaine the vſe of the Paſchall Lambe, which cannot be, but to the great derogation of the true Paſchall Lambe Chriſt Ieſus, that the body being come, the ſhadow ſhould bee ſtill retained? And I haue heard it crediblie reported, by one ſometime brought vp in Barnwell Abbey by Cambridge, that the Monkes did vſe once a yeere to roſt a Lambe whole, and ſo to eate it with herbes: what greater ſuperſtition can bee found among the Iewes?

OTHER ERRORS IN THE MANNER of celebrating Maſſe.

41. Now to make vp the halfe hundred of errors in the Maſſe, as thoſe before going are found in the matter, ſo theſe following are in the manner: as firſt, all is done and ſaid in the Latine tongue, not vnderſtood of the people, and often not of the Prieſt himſelfe, contrarie to Saint Pauls rule, that all things ſhould be done to edifying, 1.Cor.14.12. and they that ſpeake words not vnderſtood, ſpeake in the ayre, verſ.9.

42 Againe, they vſe many irkeſome, tedious, and friuolous repetitions of the ſame words, as Benedicamus Domino, Let vs bleſſe the Lord, is ſung tenne ſeuerall times together, and Ite, miſſa eſt, is ſung thirteene ſeuerall times, with long and tedious notes. This is contrarie to the precept of Chriſt, that we ſhould not, when we pray, vſe vaine repetitions, Matth.6.7. for ſo the word βαττολογεῖν, there vſed, ſignifieth, being taken from the Poet Battus, that vſed often to inculcate or repeate the ſame things.

43 The Prieſt is charged in the Rubricke to ſay diuers prayers, priuatim, ſecretly to himſelfe: as that prayer, Deliuer vs Lord from all euill, paſt, preſent, to come,&c. And, Thou Lambe of God, that takeſt away the ſinnes of the world. Likewiſe, where he ſaith, Forſake not vs thy ſeruants, but forgiue vs our ſinnes,&c. theſe and many other words muſt bee pronounced to himſelfe: contrarie to S. Paul, who would haue prayers ſo ſaid, that they may be vnderſtood, and thereunto Amen anſwered by the people, 1.Cor.14.16.

44 The Prieſt is taught by the Rubricke to make thirtie ſeuerall croſſes at the leaſt vpon the bread, the cup, the Altar, his forehead: as may appeare in the Canon of the Maſſe, according to the vſe of Sarum, and as it is tranſlated by Maſter Fox in the beginning of the tenth booke of the Acts and Monuments: wherein firſt they doe contrarie to that, which they profeſſe in the Canon, ſaying thus, Diuina inſtitutione formati, Being informed by the diuine inſtitution. But no ſuch croſſing is to bee found in Chriſts inſtitution, which they profeſſe to follow. Secondly, whereas they vſe to croſſe themſelues either againſt the diuell and euill ſpirits, they neede not feare any ſuch thing, where Chriſts bodie is: or elſe they vſe it, to bleſſe withall: but they haue no reaſon to bleſſe Chriſts bodie, whereby they receiue bleſſing. Thirdly, if the ſigne of the croſſe be ſo effectuall a ſigne, as they make it, once or twice were enough, or too much: but the making of it ſo often, ſheweth it to be a vaine, idle, ſuperſtitious and vnprofitable ceremonie, as they vſe it.

45 Their geſture in ſaying of Maſſe, is ſo changeable, ſo ridiculous, ſo affectated, that a man would thinke a Player were comming forth vpon the ſtage, when the Prieſt addreſſeth him to the Maſſe: nay, Roſcius was not ſo full of action, as the Maſſing Prieſt is of geſture, varying and chaunging it at the leaſt fortie or fiftie times in a Maſſe while: firſt, he boweth his bodie: then he rouſeth himſelfe and kiſſeth the Altar on the right ſide: he boweth againe, and looketh toward the hoaſt, he ioyneth his hands, wipeth his fingers, lifteth vp the hoaſt: then he lifteth vp his eyes, and boweth himſelfe, and lifteth vp his eyes againe: he boweth againe, and lifteth vp the hoaſt aboue his forehead, vncouereth the cup, and holdeth it betweene his hands, keeping his thumbe and forefinger together: then hee boweth, and lifteth vp the cup a little, then to his breaſt, or aboue his head, he ſetteth it downe againe, and wipeth his fingers for feare of crummes: then he ſpreadeth his armes acroſſe: he boweth his bodie; then riſing kiſſeth the Altar on the right ſide, after this, he ſmiteth his breaſt: then he vncouereth the cup, maketh 5. croſſes with the hoaſt, beyond the cup twice, on each ſide, vnder the cup and before it: then he laieth his hands vpon the Altar: the Deacon then reacheth the Prieſt the Paten, which he putteth to his right eye, then to his left, and maketh a croſſe beyond his head with it, kiſſeth it, and laieth it downe, then he breaketh the hoaſt in three, holding two pieces in his left hand, one in his right ouer the cup, which with a croſſe hee letteth fall into it: the Prieſt then kiſſeth the Corporas, the Deacon taketh the Pax from the Prieſt, giueth it to the Subdeacon, and he to the Queere: then humbling himſelfe, he firſt taketh the bodie, then the blood; ſo hee goeth to the right horne of the Altar: then the Subdeacon powreth in wine, and the Prieſt rinſeth the cup and waſheth his hands, &c. he turneth himſelfe to the people, commeth againe to the Altar, and turneth to the people the ſecond time, then bowing his bodie, and cloſing his hands he prayeth to himſelfe: he riſeth againe, making the ſigne of the croſſe, and bowing againe ſo goeth from the Altar. This leuitie and inconſtancie, in turning this way, and that way, to the right hand, to the left, now vp, now downe, backward and forward, caſting the armes acroſſe, warbling the fingers, &c. Moſes vſed it not in his prayer, that continued holding vp his hands in prayer againſt Amelek, till hee was wearie: and Salomon endured kneeling on his knees, and ſtretching out his hands to heauen, till he had made an end of his prayer, 1. King. 8. verſ. 54.

ERRORS COLLECTED OVT OF THE CAVTELES of the Maſſe, that follow after the Canon.

46. The eight cautele is, that if the Prieſt chaunce to conſecrate water for wine, he muſt conſecrate againe. Why maſters, if theſe wordes, this is my bodie, bee effectuall to make the bodie of Chriſt, why not ſpoken ouer water, as well as ouer wine? If ye vrge Chriſts power, he was able to turne water into wine, and ſo likewiſe water into his bodie: if ye vrge Chriſts inſtitution, that conſecrated onely in wine, he vſed no water at all, and therefore ye breake his inſtitution.

47 In the tenth cautele, a Prieſt excommunicate is willed to proceede. Can he then make Chriſts bodie, that is not of his bodie? this were monſtrous: for then not only Prieſts, but euery one may make Chriſts bodie, euen an Heathen or Infidell: for he that is excommunicate is ſuſpended from his office, and is for the time as an heathen man, Matth. 18. 17.

48 Cautele 12. If a Flie or Spider fall into the cup after conſecration, they muſt bee firſt waſhed, then burned, and the waſhing and aſhes be kept in the ſacring veſſell: if the blood be poyſoned, it muſt not be drunk, but kept in a cleane veſſell. But this Cautele telleth vs not, what ſhall become of that which is kept, but there it remaineth ſtill, till it ſowre or ſtinke, or putrifie with wormes, which is as bad, as the falling in of a flie: and how an abſurd a thing is it, that Chriſts blood may bee poyſoned, ſeeing there be many preſeruatiues againſt poyſon, much inferiour to Chriſts bodie?

49 Cautele 18. If a drop of blood fall vpon the Altar, or Altar-cloth, table, &c. the Prieſt muſt licke it vp with his tongue, and the place muſt be waſhed, and the waſhing laid vp, &c.

Contra. Here the Prieſt hath a good office, to licke ſtones and tables, and clothes with his tongue: but I would aske them, whether euery drop of the Chalice bee Chriſts whole bodie, or part: if a part, then is he diuided: if the whole, then, how many drops in the Chalice, ſo many bodies of Chriſt are there at once: they cannot winde themſelues from theſe abſurdities.

50 Cautele 22. If any man vomit vp the Euchariſt, it muſt be burned, and the aſhes laid vp by the Altar, &c. What maſters, will ye make Chriſt an heretike, that ye burne his bodie? And I pray you whence are theſe aſhes? they cannot be of accidents: ye muſt either graunt that it is bread, that is burned; or Chriſts bodie: if the firſt, then there is no tranſubſtantiation: if the ſecond, it is blaſphemie. And cannot Chriſts bodie ſtay a vomite, which many a medicine is able to doe?

51 Cautele 23. If the Sacrament bee eaten of a mouſe, or if it bee loſt, let the Prieſt doe penance, &c. Thus by the popiſh doctrine, myce may deuoure Chriſts bodie, and he that found the loſt ſheepe may be loſt himſelfe.

52 Cautele 24. If by the negligence of the Prieſt the hoaſt doe putrifie, let him doe penance, &c. If the accidents onely putrifie, there is no harme done, and this penance may bee ſpared: if the hoaſt it ſelfe putrifie, as this Cautele ſaith, then doe they make Chriſts glorious bodie corruptible.

Thus we ſee with how many and what great and horrible blaſphemies this popiſh, and ſuperſtitious Canon of the Maſſe is ſtuffed: indeede it is an epitome and abridgement of Papiſtrie, the marrow, ſinewes, and bones of their idolatrous profeſſion: yea the very darling of the popiſh Church: it is the very proper badge and marke of a Papiſt. He that hateth the Maſſe, hateth the whore of Babylon: he that loueth the Maſſe, cannot loue the truth.

If then I ſhould be demaunded at once, which of all popiſh blaſphemies and hereſies I thinke moſt abominable, contrarie to the faith, and to bee abhorred of all good Chriſtians: (though I know that there are many of this kinde) yet I would readily anſwere the Maſſe: the inuention whereof, I am well aſſured, cannot bee aſcribed but to him that is the author of all lyes, and blaſphemies.

Laſtly, let vs ſee how well the popiſh Maſſe agreeth with their owne Canons: concerning the mingling of the bread and wine together, it is contrarie to the decree of Iulius : Decret.par.3.diſt.2.c.7. Illud, quod pro complemento cõmunionis intinctam tradunt Euchariſtiam,&c. That for the complement of the Communion, they doe giue to the people the Euchariſt ſopped, or dipped, &c. it hath no warrant from the Goſpell.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that this decree forbiddeth onely that commixtion, which is giuen to the people in the Sacrament, not that, which is done in the Maſſe, lib.2.de Miſſ.c.27.reſp.ad obiect.4.

Contra. The reaſon in the decree vſed, is generall againſt all mingling of the Sacrament : Seorſim panis, ſeorſim calicis,&c. The bread was commended or ſanctified apart, and the cup apart: neither did Chriſt giue dipped bread to any of his Diſciples, but to Iudas, to ſignifie his prodition, not any inſtitution of a Sacrament. Wherefore this decree is moſt euident againſt this ſuperſtitious mixtion in the Maſſe.

Concil.Colonienſ.par.2.c.11.Videbimur operæpretium facturi,&c. Wee ſhall doe very well, if wee cauſe the Miſſals and Breuiaries to be peruſed, that cutting off ſuperfluous things, & quæ ſuperſtitioſius,&c. and things ſuperſtitiouſly brought in, &c. How can the Miſſall or Maſſe-ſeruice be void of error, which is ſtuffed with many ſuperfluous and ſuperſtitious things?

Synod. Auguſtenſ.c.33.Quod ad apocrypha,&c. As touching apocryphall, fooliſh, and vnſyncere matters, by the corruption of time crept into the Breuiaries, the often repetition of Pſalmes, innumerable Suffrages, new Collects, Sequencies, Prefaces, to be amended, & taken out of the ſeruices, &c. This Canon reprehendeth vaine repetitions, the multitude of Collects in the Maſſe-ſeruice, which yet remaine vnpurged.

I will laſtly inſert the teſtimonie of Lindanus an arch-papiſt, who reporting the words of Agobertus Biſhop of Lyons : Antiphonarium correximus,&c. We haue corrected the Antiphonarie, cutting off what ſeemed to vs ſuperfluous, light, falſe, blaſphemous, ridiculous, phantaſticall. He addeth further : Who if he were now aliue to ſee our Miſſals, &c. how would he call them ? in the which not onely Apocryphall ſtories out of the Goſpell of Nicodemus, and other toyes, are inſerted, but ſecret prayers, mendis turpiſſimis conſpurcatæ, defiled with moſt filthie faults: yea the Canon it ſelfe, variat & redundat, doth varie and exceede, &c. Lindan.lib.3.de interpret.ſcriptur.c.3. Here is a graue teſtimonie of a learned writer of their ſide againſt the errors, faults, and corruptions of the Maſſe : how then are they not aſhamed to iuſtifie the ſame as perfect, and without any reprehenſion.

I conclude therefore with that ſaying of Gregorie, as he ſaid concerning the word Antichriſtus: ſo may I in as good ſenſe of this word, Miſſa, as it is now vnderſtood of Papiſts : Si ſpectes quantitatem vocis, duæ ſunt ſyllabæ ; ſi pondus iniquitatis, eſt vniuerſa pernicies : If you marke the quantitie of the word, it ſtandeth but of two ſyllables : but if we reſpect the waight of iniquitie, it containeth all impietie and vngodlines. As one ſometime pleaſantly deſcanting vpon the name, ſaid, that the Maſſe was called beyond the Sea (Miſſe :) for that all is amiſſe in it.

Soli Deo immortali Patri, Filio, cum Spiritu ſancto, ſit honor & imperium ſempiternum.

Before I leaue this place, being a controuerſie of ſuch great waight, I thought good to inſert the arguments of the Martyrs againſt the reall preſence, and the contrarie reaſons vſed againſt them by the Papiſts in thoſe dayes.

THE PAPISTS THEN IN TIME PAST HAVE thus reaſoned for their reall preſence.

Arg.1. THe ſame bodie which was giuen for vs, is truly in the Sacrament : for our Sauiour Chriſt ſaid, This is my bodie, which ſhall be giuen for you.

But his true bodie was giuen for vs.

Ergo, his true bodie is in the Sacrament : ſic Chedſeus cont.Cranmer.

Anſw. Biſhop Cranmer anſwereth : His true bodie is truly preſent to them that truly receiue him, but ſpiritually : ibid. Which anſwere may be further explained thus : Firſt, wee graunt, that the ſame is preſent, but not after the ſame manner : Chriſts bodie may be truly preſent, although it be not there carnally : he is preſent ſpiritually by faith, which is his true preſence. Secondly, we turne this argument againſt them : for if the ſame bodie of Chriſt bee preſent in the Sacrament, which he gaue for vs ; then is it not preſent, but onely to thoſe for whom it was giuen : but it was giuen onely for the elect and beleeuers, therefore to the wicked and Infidels Chriſt is not preſent in the Sacrament, becauſe for ſuch he gaue not his bodie : and ſo it followeth, that wicked men doe not eate Chriſt in the Sacrament, and conſequently Chriſts bodie is not there really preſent: for then the wicked, that communicate, ſhould eate thereof.

Contra. Chriſt, when he ſpake theſe words, this is my bodie, ſpake of the ſubſtance of his bodie, not of the efficacie or effect; Chriſts bodie then is more then ſpiritually, that is effectually preſent: Chedſey.

Anſw. Wee graunt, that in the Sacrament there is both the efficacie of the bodie of Chriſt, and the ſubſtance thereof, but the ſubſtance ſpiritually applied by faith: for the fleſh profiteth nothing of it ſelfe, My words (ſaith Chriſt) are ſpirit and life, Ioh. 6. ſic Cranmer. It is therefore no good argument, the efficacie of Chriſts bodie is ſpirituall in the Sacrament: Ergo, the ſubſtance of his bodie is not there ſpiritually: for the ſubſtance of Chriſts bodie is there ſpiritually, as the worker; the effect alſo is ſpirituall, as that which is wrought.

Argum. 2. That onely is giuen to vs in the Sacrament, which was giuen for vs vpon the croſſe: but bread was not giuen on the croſſe for vs: Ergo, bread is not giuen in the Sacrament: Chedſey.

Anſw. To the propoſition wee anſwere: firſt, the ſame bodie indeede is giuen both in the Sacrament, and vpon the Croſſe, but not after the ſame manner: we haue the ſame bodie, but ſpiritually giuen vs by faith. Secondly, it is not true that that onely is giuen vs in the Sacrament, &c. For there are both the bodie of Chriſt preſent ſpiritually in myſterie, and the bread preſent viſiblie.

Argum. 3. The ſame fleſh, whereby Chriſt is made our brother and kinſman, is giuen of Chriſt to vs to be eaten.

Chriſt is made our brother and kinſman by his true, naturall, and organicall fleſh.

Ergo, his true, naturall, and organicall fleſh is giuen vs to be eaten: argum. Weſton.

Anſw. Chriſt giueth vs indeede his true naturall fleſh to be eaten, yet not after a carnall manner, but ſpiritually by faith: ſic Cranmer.

Contra. Chriſt gaue vs the ſame fleſh, which he tooke of the Virgin: but he tooke not his true fleſh of the Virgin ſpiritually, or in a figure.

Ergo, he giueth it not vs ſpiritually: ſic Weſton. diſput. Oxonienſ.

Anſw. Firſt, the propoſition wee graunt, that Chriſt tooke the ſame fleſh of his mother, which he giueth vs to be eaten, but not after the ſame manner: therefore the aſſumption, which includeth the manner, not the thing, is ſophiſtically inferred, and containeth more than is in the propoſition: which ſpeaketh of the ſame fleſh, but not of the ſame manner.

Secondly, this argument may be turned vpon themſelues: as thus,

Chriſt giueth vs the ſame fleſh, which he tooke.

But hee tooke not his fleſh of his mother ſpirituallie at all, but after an humane manner onely:

Ergo, he giueth not his fleſh to vs to be eaten ſpiritually at all.

If this bee a good conclusion, (which let them graunt, if they will) then is the other brought forth by them.

Argum. 4 ex Chryſoſtomo. That thing is ſhewed in the Sacrament, which is worthie moſt higheſt honour in the earth:

But the bodie of Chriſt is worthie higheſt honour, not the elements of bread and wine:

Ergo, the bodie of Chriſt is ſhewed in the Sacrament, argum. Weſton.

Anſw. Firſt, the concluſion wee graunt, if it be rightly vnderſtood: for the bodie of Chriſt is ſhewed ſpiritually to the eye of faith in the Sacrament, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Chriſts death is ſhewed forth: for other ſhewing of Chriſts bodie in the Sacrament there can bee none: The Papiſts themſelues cannot demonſtrate vnto vs Chriſts bodie, but onely the externall ſhapes of bread and wine.

Secondly, we graunt that the bodie of Chriſt, thus ſpiritually ſhewed in the Sacrament, is worthie higheſt honour: and that the outward ſignes, not as bare elements, but as they are myſticall ſeales of hidde and heauenly graces, and the Sacraments inſtituted of Chriſt, are of vs to be highly reuerenced, as the ordinances of God. So then Chriſts bodie ſhewed in the Sacrament, is worthie higheſt honour in earth, and the Sacraments, as ſignes of holie things, are highly to be eſteemed.

Argum. 5. The ſoule is fed by that, which the bodie eateth:

But the ſoule is fed by the fleſh of Chriſt:

Ergo, The bodie eateth the fleſh of Chriſt in the Sacrament, argum. Chedſei.

Anſw. Firſt, the Sacrament is one thing, the matter of the Sacrament another, outwardly the bodie eateth the Sacrament, inwardly wee eate the bodie of Chriſt: as in Baptiſme the fleſh is waſhed with water, that the ſoule may be purged ſpiritually, ſo our bodie eateth the outward Sacrament, that the ſoule may be fed of God: ſic Cranmer.

Secondly, to the argument in particular we anſwere thus: firſt to the propoſition: It is not generally true,that whatſoeuer the bodie eateth,the ſoule is fed by the ſame : and if it be but particularly propounded,this inſtance onely of eating in the Sacrament,then the argument prooueth not,ſtanding wholy of particulars. Againe,the bodie and the ſoule are fed by the ſame meate in the Sacrament,but not after the ſame manner;the bodie is nouriſhed by the naturall propertie of the elements, which they haue to nouriſh : but the ſoule,by the ſacramentall and ſupernaturall power,as they are ſignes and ſeales of holie things. Secondly,wee graunt that the ſoule is fed by the bodie of Chriſt,yet not carnally,but ſpiritually by faith: ſo that this argument may be turned vpon them thus : As the ſoule feedeth vpon Chriſt,ſo doth the bodie:the ſoule is fed by faith: Ergo,ſo and no otherwiſe is the bodie. And true it is that the bodie is nouriſhed both with the Sacrament,and with the bodie of Chriſt: with the Sacrament(though not as a Sacrament) naturally to temporall life ; with the bodie of Chriſt (ſupernaturally by the gift of faith in the ſoule) to eternall life : ſic Cranmer ad Weſtonum.

*Argum.*6. As Chriſt liueth by the Father,ſo liue we by his fleſh :
But Chriſt liueth by his Father naturally :
Ergo,we liue naturally by the eating of Chriſts fleſh,argum.Treſhami.

Anſw. 1. The firſt part of this argument is not generally true : for Chriſt liueth otherwiſe by the Father in many reſpects: for he is the Sonne of God by nature from all eternitie,but ſo are not we. Secondly,the Papiſts themſelues denie any ſuch naturall eating of Chriſts fleſh : for the naturall foode goeth downe into the bellie,part whereof is turned into the ſubſtance of the bodie, part is throwne out into the draught : But neither is true of Chriſts fleſh ; for if it were conuerted into our fleſh,then ſhould our fleſh alſo bee immortall,and without ſinne,as our foode is : and to ſay, that part thereof goeth the common way of meates, were a monſtrous blaſphemie againſt Chriſts glorious bodie : therefore we cannot ſo naturally eate Chriſts fleſh. Thirdly,we notwithſtanding in a good ſenſe are ſaid naturally to liue by Chriſt : firſt, not only becauſe wee are of his nature according to the fleſh,but rather in that we make all one myſticall bodie, whereof Chriſt is the head : that as the bodie naturally liueth by the head,ſo we doe naturally,that is verely,and in deede,liue by Chriſt. Secondly,in that Chriſt doth communicate vnto vs his nature of eternitie and glorie,and will bring vs to be,where he is,wee are ſaid alſo naturally to liue by Chriſt : Sic Doctor Cranmer diſputat.Oxonienſ.

*Argum.*7. The ſpeech of Chriſt,in ſaying(this is my bodie) they would thus proue,not to be a figuratiue,but a proper ſpeech.

Argum. Subſtantia, is not predicated denominatiuely :
This word (bodie) which is the prædicatum, is a ſubſtance :
*Ergo,*it is an eſſentiall predication,not a denominatiue : ſo it is his true bodie,not a figure of his bodie : argum.Oglithorpi.

Anſw. Subſtantia may be predicated denominatiuely, in an allegorie or metaphor,or a figuratiue locution : ſic D.Cranmer diſputat.Oxonienſ. And ſo is it in this place, where Chriſt ſpeaketh figuratiuely. Againe,they thus argue.

Argum. A figuratiue ſpeech worketh not:
But Chriſts ſpeech,*this is my bodie,*worketh: the word of Chriſt is of ſtrength,and by the Lords words the heauens were made :
*Ergo,*it is no figuratiue ſpeech : argum.Yongi.

Anſw. 1. The words of Chriſt doe not worke of themſelues, but Chriſt himſelfe, and he worketh by a figuratiue ſpeech. 2. Chriſts ſpeech,or rather Chriſt by his ſpeech worketh, in inſtituting a Sacrament, not in conuerting the ſubſtance of bread. 3. God doth worke by his power in the Sacraments,as in Baptiſme,ſo in the Euchariſt:But there is no ſuch conuerſion in Baptiſme, therefore not in the other. 4. The Sacrament of Chriſts blood is made ; the words make the blood to them,that receiue it ; not that the blood is in the cup,but in the receiuer : reſp.D.Cranmer diſputat.Oxonienſ. Againe,thus they reaſon.

Argum. My ſheepe (ſaith Chriſt) heare my voyce,and follow me : but all the ſheepe of Chriſt heare this voyce,*This is my bodie,*without a figure :

Anſw. Firſt,the ſheepe of Chriſt follow the voyce of Chriſt,vnleſſe they be ſeduced and deceiued through ignorance: But the ſheepe of Chriſt, neuer vnderſtood this voyce of Chriſt without a figure : for the fathers doe number this place among figuratiue and tropicall ſpeeches:reſponſ.D. Ridlei diſputat.Oxonienſ.

*Argum.*8. Whereas we alleage ſuch places of Scripture againſt the reall preſence,as doe make mention of Chriſts aſcenſion into heauen,and his abode there : they on the contrarie labour thus to proue,that Chriſts aſcenſion into heauen, and his continuance there, is no let to the reall preſence of his fleſh in the Sacrament.

Chriſt appeared corporally and really on the earth ſince his aſcenſion into heauen : as he was ſeene of Paul, 1. Corinth. 15. and eccleſiaſticall ſtories make mention, that Chriſt appeared corporally vnto Saint Peter, as he fled from Rome, as Egeſippus writeth, lib. 3. cap. 3.

Ergo, for all Chriſts being in heauen, he may alſo be in earth, and ſo conſequently in the Sacrament, argum. Smithi.

Anſw. Firſt, Chriſt may, when it pleaſeth him, bee in heauen, and in earth, and appeare to whom he will: yet it followeth not, that he will doe ſo. Secondly, that Chriſt appeared to Paul and Stephen, Act. 7. we graunt, but he was ſeene of them in heauen, not in earth: the ſtory that is reported of Chriſts appearing to S. Peter, is not certaine, and therefore it proueth not. Thirdly, though we ſhould graunt the corporall appearance of Chriſt ſometime vpon earth, yet it muſt needes be with ſome intermiſſion of his bodily preſence in heauen: for corporally to be preſent in earth, and corporally to bee in heauen at the ſame time, is contrarie to the Scriptures, and againſt the nature of an humane bodie: wherefore if Chriſt abide in heauen after the manner of his corporall preſence, as the Scripture ſaith, The heauens muſt containe him; this muſt needes hinder his bodily preſence in the Sacrament, reſponſ. D. Ridlei. diſput. Oxonienſ.

Argum. 9. Euery Sacrament of the newe Teſtament hath a promiſe of grace, and ſo conſequently the Euchariſt hath:

But there is no promiſe of grace made to the bread and wine, but to the bodie, and blood of Chriſt:

Ergo, the bread and wine are not the Sacraments, but the body, and blood of Chriſt: argum. Watſon. diſputat. Oxonienſ.

Anſw. Firſt, there is no promiſe made to bread and wine, as they are common bread, and wine; but in as much as they are ſanctified, and made the Sacraments of the body and blood of the Lord, they haue a promiſe of grace annexed vnto them. Secondly, and yet to ſpeake properly, this promiſe of the ſpirituall partaking of Chriſts body, is made not to the bread, and wine; but to them which worthily doe receiue the Sacrament: Reſponſ. D. Ridlei.

Argum. 10. ex Chryſoſtemo: That which the woman did hold in her wombe, that ſame thing holdeth the Prieſt: but the Virgine did beare the very fleſh of Chriſt in deede: Ergo: argum. Weſtoni.

Anſw. 1. We grant, the Prieſt holdeth the ſame thing, but after an other manner: ſhe did hold the naturall body, the Prieſt holdeth the myſtery of the body: reſp. Ridlei. diſputat. Oxonienſ. And thus far of our aduerſaries arguments.

THE ARGVMENTS OF THE MARTYRS AND holy confeſſors of Gods truth againſt the Reall preſence.

Argum.* 1. IF Chriſts body be really in the Sacrament, as it is now celebrated in the Church, then ſo was it preſent, at the firſt inſtitution thereof: If Chriſts body were then eaten in the Sacrament; and Chriſt as he did eate the Paſchall Lambe with his Diſciples, ſo likewiſe did he the Euchriſt: then it will follow, that Chriſt did eate his owne body, which were very abſurd.

Anſw. Moreman a popiſh Doctor granteth this conſequent, that Chriſt did eate his owne body: againſt whom Maſter Philpot framed this argument.

Receiuing of Chriſts body, hath a promiſe of remiſſion of ſinnes:

Chriſts eating the Sacrament had no ſuch promiſe: for he had no ſinnes, and therefore needed no remiſſion: Ergo Chriſt in the Sacrament did not eate his owne body.

Anſw. 1. Firſt, Moreman anſwereth to the propoſition, denying that the receiuing of the Sacrament hath a promiſe of remiſſion of ſinnes: whom Maſter Philpot confuteth by the very words of inſtitution; Which is giuen for you, which is ſhed for you for remiſſion of ſinnes.

Anſw. 2. Doctor Weſton anſwered, that Chriſt did no more eate the Sacrament for remiſſion of ſinnes, then he was baptized: and by this reaſon may we proue as well, that he was not baptized at all; becauſe Baptiſme is giuen for remiſſion of ſinnes.

Contra. Though Chriſt were baptized, not for any neede thereof, but to giue an example to his Church, yet it is otherwiſe in eating his owne body in the Euchariſt: for the water in Baptiſme of it ſelfe is but a terrene element, but Chriſts body is liuely, and cannot be eaten without ſome effect or operation. Againe, let it be obſerued, how they doe here match the Euchariſt and Baptiſme together, which elſwhere they deny; affirming that theſe two Sacraments haue no liklihood each to other: If then they will compare theſe Sacraments, they muſt be alike herein: that as the bread in the Euchariſt is become, as they ſay, the body of Chriſt; ſo muſt the water likewiſe in Baptiſme: and ſo conſequently it is as abſurd a thing, for Chriſt to eate his owne body in the Euchariſt, as for his body to be waſhed with his body in Baptiſme: ex diſputat. conuocat. act. 3. diei.

Argum. 2. The Angell ſaid to the woman, He is riſen, he is not heere: Matth. 28. Ioh. 16. I came from my father into the world: againe, I leaue the world, and goe to my father: Chriſt ſpeaketh of his naturall body: Ergo, we may conclude, that his body is not now in the world, argum. Philpotti.

Anſw. Chriſt is viſibly departed in his humanitie, but inuiſibly notwithſtanding he remaineth in the Sacrament.

Contra. This diſtinction may be taken away by the anſwere of the diſciples to our Sauiour Chriſt in the ſame place, where he ſpeaketh of his departure, Iohn 16. Now thou ſpeakeſt plainly, and vttereſt forth no prouerbe: But if Chriſt had vnderſtoode any ſuch inuiſible preſence according to the diſtinction, hee had ſpoken obſcurely, and darkely, not plainely, reſp. Phil. diſp. conuoc. act. 4. diei.

Argum. 3. Philpotti: S. Peter ſaith, Act. 3. Whom heauen muſt receiue, till the conſummation of all things: this is ſpoken of Chriſts humanity: Ergo, it cannot be preſent vpon earth in the Sacrament.

Anſw. Harpsfield anſwereth, 1. Chriſt is not ex neceſſitate, of neceſſitie forced to any place. Contra: Chriſt is no otherwiſe forced of neceſſitie to any place, then as he hath by his owne decree appoynted his body to remaine in heauen, and ſo declared it in his word. The decree therefore of God is immutable, not that God is forced by any to keepe it, but becauſe his will and purpoſe cannot be changed.

Anſw. 2. Chriſt is omnipotent, and may be in heauen, or in earth at his pleaſure. Contra: of Chriſts omnipotencie, what he can doe, is not our queſtion, but rather what he doth: it is no good argument, he may doe this or that: Ergo, he doth it. So much onely is to be beleeued of Chriſts omnipotencie, as is in the word expreſſed: but that Chriſts bodie is in heauen, and really in the Sacrament vpon earth, is not expreſſed in the word: Ergo, it is not to be beleeued, ſic Philpot Martyr.

Anſw. 3. This word oportet, vſed by S. Peter, he muſt, doth not include an abſolute neceſſitie, as may appeare by other places of Scripture: S. Paul ſaith, Oportet Epiſcopum vnius vxoris virum eſſe: A Biſhop muſt be the husband of one wife, yet he may be a Biſhop, that was neuer married.

Contra. This word oportet, is diuerſly taken in Scripture: S. Paul deſcribing a Biſhop, ſheweth his qualitie, what manner of perſon he ought to be; but S. Peter ſpeaking of Chriſts being in heauen, declareth the place where Chriſt muſt neceſſarily be, vntill his ſecond comming: As when I ſay (oportet te hic eſſe) you muſt needes be in this place; here is included an abſolute neceſſitie, that you cannot poſſibly, at the ſame inſtant, be in another place: but when I ſay, oportet te virum bonum eſſe, you muſt be a good man: it doth not include any ſuch neceſſitie, but that you may be an euill man: ſic Philpot diſputat. conuocat. action. 6. As then this word is taken in common ſpeech, ſo alſo in Scripture: ſometime it ſignifieth (it is meete) conuenient, ſometime it implyeth an abſolute neceſſitie.

Argum. 4. As Chriſt worketh in Baptiſme, ſo he worketh in the other Sacrament.
But in Baptiſme he worketh not by any conuerſion of ſubſtance:
Ergo, there is no ſuch conuerſion in the Euchariſt: argum. Cran. diſp. Oxon.

Anſw. 1. Firſt, D. Young anſwereth, that by this meanes they will make no change at all in the Sacrament.

Contra. Not ſo, but wee make a great change: as in them that are baptized there is a great change, when the child of the bond-ſlaue of the diuell is made the ſonne of God: ſo is it alſo in the Sacrament of the Supper, when he receiueth vs into his protection and fauour: ſic Cranmer.

Anſw. 2. There is great difference betweene Baptiſme, and the Lords Supper: in the Supper the words are directed to the bread: in Baptiſme, to the ſpirit: he ſaid not the water is the ſpirit, but of the bread he ſaid, This is my body: ſic Weſt.

Contra. The Scripture in like manner, as here the bread is called Chriſts body, becauſe it repreſented his bodie, ſo it calleth the ſpirit a doue, when the ſpirit deſcended in likeneſſe of a doue: as Iohn 1. Vpon whomeſoeuer thou ſhalt ſee the ſpirit deſcending: he calleth that which deſcended, the holy Spirit: the bread then is no more the body of Chriſt in the Euchariſt, then the doue in the Baptiſme of Chriſt lighting vpon him, was the ſpirite.

Argum. 5. ex Theodoreto: who thus reaſoneth againſt the heretike Eutyches, who denied two natures of ſubſtance to remaine in Chriſt.

As in the Sacrament of the body of Chriſt after the conſecration, there is the ſubſtance of Chriſts humanitie together with the ſubſtance of bread, ſo in the perſon of Chriſt there doe remaine two ſeuerall ſubſtances, that is, his diuinitie and humanitie vnited together, &c. But if ſo, that there ſhould not remaine in the Sacrament, which is a repreſentation of Chriſt, the ſubſtance of bread, but ſhould be abſorpt by the preſence of Chriſts fleſh, this would make ſtrongly, not againſt, but for Eutyches, that euen ſo in the perſon of Chriſt, his humanitie ſhould be ſwallowed vp of his diuine nature annexed thereunto: argum. Philpotti diſputat. conuocation.

Argum. 6. To theſe reaſons we may adioyne thoſe ſubſtantiall prooues and arguments exhibited by that famous Clerke, and moſt conſtant Martyr Biſhop Ridley, in his learned diſputation at Oxford.

1 The reall preſence varieth from the articles of the faith, He aſcended into heauen,&c. and from thence, and from no other place ſhall he come to iudge the quicke and the dead.

2 It deſtroyeth and taketh away the inſtitution of the Lords Supper: firſt, the Lords Supper was commanded onely to be vſed, vntill the Lord himſelfe ſhould come: but if he be come already in his fleſh, then muſt the Supper ceaſe. Secondly, wee are commaunded, to vſe it in remembrance of Chriſt: but a remembrance is not of a thing preſent, but of a thing that is paſt, and abſent.

3 This opinion of the reall preſence,admitteth many abſurdities:as that whoremongers,murtherers, wicked and faithleſſe men, yea myce, rats, and dogs alſo may receiue the very reall, and corporall body of the Lord.

4 It confirmeth and maintaineth that beaſtly kind of crueltie of the Anthropophagi, that is, the deuourers of mans fleſh: for it is a more cruell thing to deuoure a quicke man, then to ſlay him.

5 Againe, the bread which Chriſt gaue to his Diſciples, hee brake: but his body could not be broken, for the Scripture ſayth, Exod.12. *Ye ſhall not breake a bone of him.*Further the bread which Chriſt giueth vs to eate, came downe from heauen, Iohn 6. But Chriſts body came not downe from heauen: Ergo, his body is not carnally eaten, and after a fleſhly maner.

*Argum.*7. Here we may remember alſo the pithy arguments of that renowned learned man Peter Martyr, propoſed by him in his diſputation at Oxford.

1 The analogie or reſemblance betweene the Sacrament, and the thing ſignified in the Sacrament,muſt alwayes be kept: But ſo is it not,if the real preſence be affirmed, without the ſubſtance of bread and wine:as it is thus further proued. Firſt, one point of reſemblance is in nouriſhing, that as the bread and wine nouriſh the body, ſo the body of Chriſt doth ſpiritually nouriſh the ſoule: but the elements of bread and wine without a ſubſtance cannot nouriſh, they cannot therefore reſemble the ſpirituall nouriſhment. Secondly, another reſemblance in the Sacrament is this,that as one loafe of bread, and one cup of wine containeth many cornes, and grapes; ſo the myſticall congregation containeth many members,yet maketh but one body: but if there be no ſubſtance of bread and wine (which ſhould conſiſt of many cornes, and grapes vnited) remaining,this ſimilitude of the coniunction of the parts and members of the Church, cannot be repreſented: Ergo, there remaineth the ſubſtance of bread and wine, or elſe the analogie of the Sacrament is aboliſhed.

2 The death of Chriſt is not preſent really in the Sacrament, but by ſimilitude: for it is done in remembrance of his death: Chriſt in the Sacrament dyeth not verily, or is crucified againe.

The precious blood of Chriſt is preſent in the Sacrament, as his death is preſent, for Chriſts blood was ſhed in his death,and without his dying his blood cannot be ſhed: if his death be verily and indeed,ſo is the ſhedding of his blood: if one be in myſterie,ſo is the other:

*Ergo,*the precious blood is not preſent in the Sacrament, but by ſimilitude,and as the death of Chriſt is ſhewed forth.

3 Chriſts body cannot be really in the Sacrament,vnleſſe it be in many places at once: for out of heauen his body muſt not be vntill Chriſts ſecond comming:

But his body being a true naturall body cannot bee at one inſtant preſent in many places: Ergo.

The aſſumption or ſecond part is thus proued: Firſt, Spirits being of a more rare and ſubtill ſubſtance then a bodie is,cannot be in many places at once: as the ſoule of man hath his certaine place,ſo alſo are the Angels limited at one time to one place: much more is a naturall bodie tyed vnto a definite and certaine place. Secondly, euery quantitie, that is, euery body hauing magnitude,length,and other dimenſions,is circumſcribed in one peculiar place: but the bodie of Chriſt hath his dimenſions,and is a quantitie: Ergo:

4 The wicked receiue not Chriſts body:

But if Chriſt be really preſent in the Sacrament, and ſo all receiue his body that communicate in the Sacrament, then ſhould the wicked bee partakers of Chriſts bodie, which is not to be graunted:

*Ergo,*Chriſts bodie is not really preſent.

That the wicked eate not Chriſts bodie,it is further thus proued:

To eate Chriſt, is for a man to haue Chriſt dwelling, and abiding in him, the wicked haue not Chriſt dwelling in them.

*Ergo,*the wicked eate not the bodie of Chriſt. Againe,

Chriſts body is eaten by faith.

But the wicked haue no faith.

*Ergo,*they cannot eate the bodie of Chriſt: that Chriſts body is eaten onely by faith, it thus appeareth:

That bread, the eating whereof giueth eternall life, is eaten by faith : as Iohn 6.47. He that beleeueth in me hath euerlaſting life, and verſe 50. He which eateth of this bread, ſhall not die. Here to beleeue, and to eate of the heauenly bread, are all one, becauſe they bring forth the ſame effect, namely euerlaſting life : But Chriſts bodie is this heauenly bread, that giueth euerlaſting life, verſe 53.

Ergo, his body is onely eaten by faith. And further thus :

Chriſts body is either eaten by ſenſe, reaſon, or faith :

But the wicked eate him not by any of theſe meanes : Ergo, not at all.

Not by ſenſe : for they ſay, that Chriſts body in the Sacrament is not ſenſible : they are the ſhapes onely and accidents of bread and wine that are ſeene, felt, and taſted, (as they ſay) in the Sacrament : Not by reaſon, for the Sacrament exceedeth all reaſon. Nec fides habet meritum, vbi ratio præbet experimentum : Faith is nothing worth where reaſon maketh experience : And faith wicked men and vnbeleeuers cannot haue: Ergo, they cannot eate Chriſts bodie at all.

5 The holy Ghoſt could not come, if the body of Chriſt were really preſent, as it is proued, Iohn 16. Vnleſſe I goe from you, the holy Ghoſt cannot come.

That the holy Ghoſt is come it is moſt certaine : Ergo, Chriſt cannot be really preſent, for this were to depriue vs of the preſence of Gods ſpirit.

6 If Chriſt had giuen his body ſubſtantially and carnally in the ſupper, then was that body either paſſible, or impaſſible :

But you cannot ſay that it was either paſſible, or impaſſible : Ergo, Chriſts paſſible bodie is not now giuen to bee eaten, for Chriſt dieth no more, his bodie is now glorified, and can bee no more paſſible.

Neither did he giue an impaſſible bodie to be eaten: for he ſaith, This is my body, which ſhall be giuen for you: that is, which ſhould ſuffer and be crucified for them: If it be then neither paſſible, nor impaſſible, it is no bodie at all. And thus farre alſo of theſe arguments, who liſt at large further to know the ſure and ſubſtantiall grounds of the faith of the holy Martyrs in this matter, may ſupply what is here wanting, which for want of ſufficient leyſure, and the neceſſitie of finiſhing and haſtening this worke, I could not at large collect together, may make a ſupplie thereof by his owne obſeruation out of the ſtorie of their actes and doings. Againſt the reall preſence we haue the full conſent of antiquitie.

S. Cyprian ſerm. de cœna Domini. Panem Angelorum ſub Sacramento manducamus, &c. We eate the bread of Angels vnder a Sacrament in earth, we ſhall eate the ſame without a Sacrament more manifeſtly in heauen: The ſame bodie ſhall be eaten in heauen, which is eaten in earth, though not after the ſame manner : but Chriſts fleſh ſhall not be eaten in heauen, therefore it is not eaten in earth.

Againe in the ſame Sermon, Eſus carnis huius, &c. The eating of this fleſh, is a certaine deſire of abiding in him : That which food is to the fleſh, that is faith to the ſoule : that, which meate is to the bodie, that is the word to the ſpirit.

Origen. homil. 16. in Numer. Bibere dicimur ſanguinem Chriſti, &c. We are ſaid to drinke the blood of Chriſt, not onely in the ſacramentall rites, but when wee receiue his word. If Chriſt be eaten in his word, as in the Sacrament, then is he onely eaten ſpiritually.

Chryſoſtome alſo, hom. 51. in Matth. Tangamus nos fimbriam veſtimenti, &c. Let vs touch the hemme of Chriſts garment, whoſe not veſture onely, but his body is ſet before vs. As Chriſts garment is ſet before vs, ſo is his body; but the one is ſpiritually done, therefore the other. Againe, Ne agnum comedentes, in lupos conuertamur, &c. Let vs not after we haue eaten the Lambe, be turned into Wolues: As men are turned into wolues, ſo they eate the Lambe; but they are ſo ſpiritually onely turned : Ergo, they do ſpiritually eate the Lambe : Non eſt opus, &c. We haue no neede of golden veſſels, but of golden ſoules, ibid. Chriſts body then is food for the ſoule.

Auguſtine in Pſalm. 14. Donec ſeculum finiatur, ſurſum eſt Dominus; ſed etiam hic nobiſcum eſt veritas Domini: corpus enim in quo reſurrexit, in vno loco eſſe oportet, veritas eius vbique diffuſa eſt : While the world ſhall laſt, the Lorde is aboue, and the veritie of the Lorde is with vs: for his body, wherewith hee roſe muſt bee in one place, but the veritie thereof is euery where diſperſed.

Hierom. ad Marcellum : Stultum eſt in paruo loco vel abſcondito quærere, qui totius mundi eſt lumen: It is great fooliſhneſſe to ſeeke him in a corner (as the popiſh Prieſt doth, that putteth him into the pixe) who lighteneth the whole world.

Ambroſius: Qui diſcordat à Chriſto non manducat carnem eius, nec bibit ſanguinem, etſi tantæ rei ſacramentum accipiat : Hee that diſſenteth from Chriſt, doth neither eate his fleſh, nor drinke his blood, though hee receiue the Sacrament thereof. If wicked men eate not Chriſts body, and yet eate the Sacrament, then is not the bodie of Chriſt the Sacrament.

Againe, S. Ambroſe lib. 1. offic. c. 48. Nunc Chriſtus offertur, ſed hic in imagine, &c. Now Chriſt is offered, but here in an image or ſimilitude, but there in trueth, where he as our aduocate maketh interceſsion for vs with his Father: if Chriſts body then be onely in veritie in heauen, then is not his true body carnally preſent in the earth.

Likewiſe, Tertullian contra Marcion. lib. 4. Auguſt. in Pſal. 3. cont. Adimant. cap. 12. In this ſpeech of Chriſt, This is my bodie, doe vnderſtand the figure of his bodie. Likewiſe Origen. hom. 7. Leuitic. Eſt in Euangelijs litera, quæ occidit: There is a killing letter in the Goſpell, as well as in the old Teſtament, for if according to the letter we follow that, which is ſaid, Vnleſſe yee eate my fleſh, &c. this letter killeth. And many teſtimonies wee haue beſide, but theſe here ſhall ſuffice, and ſo I conclude this place.

HEERE FOLLOWETH A SHORT TREATISE CONSISTING OF THREE PARTS: THE FIRST CONTAINETH THE REASONS OF THE HOLY MARTYRS, AGAINST THE MASSE: THE SECOND, A confutation of Maſſe-goſpellers arguments, in defence of their going to Maſſe: the third dealeth againſt Popiſh Recuſants.

THE FIRST PART.

ARGVMENTS IN GENERALL AGAINST the Idolatrous ſacrifice of the Maſſe.

B. Ridley Martyr. Epiſt ad Bradford. pag. 1725.

THere are two moſt perilous engines, whereby Antichriſt doth chiefly impugne the veritie and faith of the Goſpell, which ſeeme to bee the moſt maſſie poſtes, and mightie pillers, whereby he vpholdeth, and maintaineth his Kingdome: the one is the idolatrous vſe of the Lords Supper, which they haue turned into the idoll of the Maſſe: the other is the proud and arrogant vſurpation of the primacie of the See of Rome. Of this latter we haue entreated before at large: this other pillar, as we haue hitherto in this place laid particular aſſault vnto it, ſo now, we will by Gods grace ſhake the foundation of it all at once: by ſetting forth ſuch valiant arguments, wherewith the faithfull and ſtout Souldiers of Chriſt, the holy Martyrs and confeſſors of the truth, haue armed themſelues, againſt this raging beaſt, that hath deuoured the precious liues of ſo many of Gods Saints.

Argum.* 1. The popiſh Maſſe, is not onely diuers from the inſtitution of the Lords Supper, but contrarie to it, not diſſenting onely from it, but quite and cleane ouerthwarting, and ouerthrowing it: Ergo, it is abominable.

The antecedent or firſt part of the argument thus appeareth to be true, by theſe particulars. Firſt, Chriſt commanded it to be done in his remembrance: the Prieſt ſaith Maſſe in remembrance of dead men. Secondly, Chriſt tooke bread, and left bread: the Prieſt taketh bread and coniureth it away. Thirdly, Chriſt tooke bread and brake it: the Prieſt taketh bread and hangeth it vp. Fourthly, Chriſt tooke bread and gaue it to his Apoſtles: the Prieſt eateth euery whit alone. Fiftly, Chriſt gaue a Sacrament to ſtrengthen mens faith: the Prieſt giueth a ſacrifice to redeeme mens ſoules. Sixtly, Chriſt gaue it to be eaten; the Prieſt giueth it to be worſhipped: Chriſt gaue bread; the Prieſt ſaith he giueth a God, Ergo, the Maſſe is contrarie and oppoſite to Chriſts inſtitution. ex dialog. conſuetud. verit. p. 1392.

Argum.* 2. Whatſoeuer commandeth and practiſeth things contrarie to the word, will, and commaundements of God, is to be abhorred and deteſted: But ſo doth the Maſſe: it maintaineth inuocation of Angels and Saints, prayer for the dead, adoration of creatures, yea euen of bakers bread, opinion of merits, with ſuch like, as we haue proued before ſeuerally in euery one of theſe queſtions: Ergo.

*Argum.*3. The ſacrifice of the Maſſe, which they ſay is a propitiatorie ſacrifice for the quicke and the dead, is iniurious and derogatorie to the death and paſſion of Chriſt: Ergo, it is abomniable.

The firſt is thus proued: to reiterate a thing once done for the ſame end wherefore it was begunne, declareth the imperfection of the ſame thing before: but in the Maſſe is reiterated the ſacrifice of Chriſt for the ſame end, for the which it was firſt offered, namely for propitiation and remiſſion of ſinnes: Ergo, it maketh Chriſts ſacrifice vnperfect. Argumentum M. Bradford. Fox. pag. 1397. col. 2.

*Argum.*4. The Maſſe alſo is blaſphemous to the Prieſthood of Chriſt, which is eternall and perpetuall; but by that popiſh ſacrifice it is made not eternall: That thing is not eternall or perpetuall, which admitteth ſucceſſion of other to doe the ſame thing, that was done before, Heb. 7. 23. But the Maſſe Prieſts ſucceede after Chriſt, doing the ſame ſacrifice, as they ſay, which he did before: Ergo, they make Chriſts Prieſthood not to be perpetuall. Argum. Bradford.

*Argum.*5. The popiſh Prieſthood is idolatrous and abominable: Ergo, ſo is their ſacrifice. Probatur antecedens.

No ſacrifice ought to be done, but by a Prieſt meete for the ſame, and appoynted thereunto.

But all Prieſts are vnmeete to offer ſacrifice for ſinne, ſauing Chriſt, becauſe they are ſinners, Hebr. 7. 27. And onely Chriſt is called to that honour, to ſacrifice for ſinnes, he being the onely Prieſt after the order of Melchiſedech, Hebr. 5. 6. Ergo, popiſh Prieſts haue no authoritie to ſacrifice for ſinnes, but in ſo doing commit ſacriledge and idolatrie. Argument. B. Ridlei. Fox pag. 1445.

*Argum.*6. The Maſſe is a vaine, needleſſe, and fruitleſſe action: Ergo, to be aboliſhed. It is thus proued.

After eternall redemption found and obtained, there needeth no more dayly offering for the ſame.

But Chriſt hath for vs obtained eternall redemption, Heb. 9. 12. and is able perfectly to ſaue vs, Heb. 7. 25. Ergo, all ſacrifice and oblation for the ſame is needles and in vaine. Argum. D. Ridlei.

*Argum.*7. As the matter, end, and the Miniſter of the Maſſe are, as we haue ſeene, all idolatrous and vnlawfull; ſo alſo is the manner thereof. All things, according to S. Paules rule, ought to be done in the Church in a knowne and edifying tongue, 1. Cor. 14. But the Maſſe is celebrate in a ſtrange and vnknown tongue: Ergo, it ought not to be done or vſed in the Church.

*Argum.*8. The Maſſe hindreth the right ſeruice of God: Ergo. Whatſoeuer cauſeth a man to reſt in the outward ſeruing of God, whoſe ſeruice ſhould be inward, in ſpirit and truth; that hindreth the true ſeruice of God. But this doth the Maſſe, requiring nothing but externall ſeruice; in hearing, ſeeing, gazing, peeping, ſtouping, kneeling, knocking: yea and they make theſe things meritorious, Ex opere operato, etiam ſine bono motu intentionis: By the very worke wrought, without any good motion or intention: Ergo, the Maſſe deſtroyeth the true ſeruice of God.

*Argum.*9. The Maſſe is an enemie to preaching, praying, and all other godly Chriſtian exerciſes: Ergo.

Where one thing is made and thought to be alone ſufficient, there all other helpes are needleſſe. But the Maſſe, as they ſay, ſerueth for all, to pardon ſinnes, to deliuer from Hell and Purgatorie: to giue health both of bodie and ſoule: Ergo, it maketh all other helpes needleſſe, hearing of Gods word, praying, repenting, &c. and other helpes to good life. Argumentum Magiſtri Foxi.

*Argum.*10. As the Maſſe ouerthroweth the true ſeruice of God, and doth oppoſe it ſelfe to all Chriſtian exerciſes, ſo doth it alſo hinder a good life.

Whatſoeuer maketh men preſumptuous, and miniſtreth falſe hope of forgiueneſſe to the wicked, maketh them more prone and readie to ſinne, and hindreth good life.

But this doth the Maſſe, promiſing ſufficient redemption to the wicked, that haue ſpent their life in drunkenneſſe, adulteries, wantonneſſe, ſwearing, riot, exceſſe, and in all vncleannes, if they will but come to the Church and heare a Maſſe, and take holy bread, and holy water, or finde a ſoule Prieſt, or giue ſomewhat to the Prieſt to doe penance for him; though they neither pray, nor repent, nor heare the word preached.

This is proued by the confeſſion of Roger Holland, who was at the firſt an obſtinate Papiſt, yet afterward (God hauing mercy vpon him) he was conuerted to the faith of the Goſpell, and dyed a conſtant Martyr. It is not vnknown (ſaith he) that I was of this your blind religion, and therein continued obſtinately all King Edwards dayes: and hauing libertie vnder your auricular confeſſion, I made no conſcience of ſinne at all; truſting to the Prieſts abſolution, he for money alſo doing ſome penance for me: which after I had giuen, I cared no further what offences I did, ſo that lechery, ſwearing, and all other vices I accounted no offence or daunger, ſo long as I might haue them abſolued for money. Hæc Roger Holland. Martyr. coram Bonero. vid. plur. Fox. pag. 2040. col. 1.

Ergo, the Maſſe bringeth wicked men into a fooles paradiſe, and maketh them preſumptuous, and more bold to ſin, and ſo hindreth good life. Wherefore, ſeeing the popiſh Maſſe is ſo contrary to the inſtitution of Chriſt, ſo full of errors and blaſphemies, ſo derogatorie to the eternall Prieſthood, and onely ſufficient ſacrifice of Chriſt, a peruerting of ſound doctrine, and a deſtruction of good life and manners: we conclude, that it is an abominable inuention, and ſay with Doctor Taylor, that it is one of Antichriſts daughters, *Epiſtol. ad vxorem. p.*1588. with Biſhop Ridley, that it is one of the maſſie poſtes, and mighty pillars of Sathans Synagogue, pag. 1725. with William Tims Martyr, that in the ſacrament of the Altar, Chriſt is not preſent neither ſpiritually, nor corporally, but as they vſe it, it is an abominable Idol, pag. 1897. with Thomas Hudſon Martyr, that it is a patched monſter, a diſguiſed puppet, more longer a peecing then euer was Salomons temple, pag. 2035. And therefore to be abhorred and deteſted of euery good Chriſtian.

HERE FOLLOW OTHER REASONS, WHY IT IS not lawfull to reſort to the popiſh Maſſe, or any part of their Idolatrous ſeruice.

Arg. 1. FOr as much, as there haue beene ſome of opinion, (whether caried away with a ſelfe-loue, and ſingularitie in themſelues, or thereunto driuen by reaſon of their weakenes, in time of perſecution) that a man keeping his heart and conſcience to himſelfe, might preſent himſelfe, for ſafegard of his life, at the popiſh idolatrous and maſſing ſeruice. How dangerous this opinion is, and how vnlawfull a thing it is ſo to do, we will by theſe reaſons make it plaine. Firſt, the Maſſe, and the whole popiſh ſeruice, (though the firſt we graunt, is fuller of abominations, and therefore more dangerous; yet both of them wicked and abominable;) doth repugne maniſeſtly againſt Gods word. In the Maſſe, theſe things are offenſiue, and intolerable; the want of ſhewing the Lords death, in making it priuate, whereas it ſhould be a Communion: the Sacrament is not communicated vnder both kindes: the ſigne is ſeruilely worſhipped, for the thing ſignified: Chriſts paſſion is iniuried, ſeeing they make the Maſſe a propitiatorie ſacrifice: Ergo, for theſe abominations, we ought neither to heare, nor ſee a Maſſe. Argum. Ridlei. p. 1718.

In the popiſh ſeruice or leiturgie, theſe notorious abuſes and ſuperſtitions are common: In their Mattens and Euenſong, there is idolatrie maintained, inuocation of Saintes, kneeling to the Rood, creeping to the Croſſe, reading fables in ſtead of Scripture, prayer for the dead, and all is done in an vnknowne tongue, which is forbidden in Gods word. Wherefore ſeeing they are manifeſtly oppoſite to the word of God, we ought not to vouchſafe our preſence, leſt thereby we ſhould ſeeme to giue conſent vnto them. Arg. Bradford in epiſtol. quad. p. 1647.

Argum. 2. Wee cannot be partakers of Gods Religion, and Antichriſts ſeruice, whereof the Maſſe is moſt principall: and the Latine ſeruice is a plaine marke of Antichriſts Synagogue: a man can not be a member of Chriſts Church, and of the Popes Church: But he that frequenteth their idolatrous aſſemblies, maketh himſelfe a member thereof: Ergo, he cutteth himſelfe off from the Church of Chriſt. Argum. Bradford.

Argum. 3. To diſſemble, and to halte in matters belonging to Gods glorie, is a thing impious and vngodly: but they which are preſent at Maſſe, both hearing the name of God blaſphemed, and ſeeing many abominations, and yet holding their peace, doe notably diſſemble: for as the Iewes were wont to rend their clothes, when they heard or ſaw any thing done or ſpoken blaſphemouſlie againſt God: and Paul and Barnabas did ſo likewiſe, when they ſaw the people of Lycaonia readie to offer ſacrifice vnto them; ſo ought we to open our mouthes againſt the blaſphemie and abominations of the Maſſe: but this the Maſſe-goſpellers doe not: Ergo, they are diſſemblers, and to be condemned in ſo doing, Argum. Bradford epiſtol. quad. p. 1652.

Argum. 4. Frequenting of Maſſe impugneth diuers petitions in the Lordes prayer, and ſo the practiſe of ſuch is contrarie to the daily prayer they vſe: How can we ſay, let thy kingdome come, and goe to Maſſe, when as nothing in the earth more deſtroyeth the preaching & kingdome of Chriſt, than the Maſſe? How can we pray, thy will be done, when we will doe our owne will, and the will of our parents and friends, and not Gods will? How pray we, deliuer vs from euill, which knowing the Maſſe to be euill, doe come to it? Ergo, if we meane, as we pray, going to Maſſe is to bee auoyded: argum. Bradford. ibid.

Argum. 5. The Maſſe and Latine ſeruice, and the ſetters forth of it, condemne the Engliſh reformed ſeruice, as hereſie, and ſo do they which communicate with their aſſemblies, thus condemning that in practiſe, which they allow in iudgement: contrarie to S. Pauls rule, Bleſſed is hee that condemneth not himſelfe, in that thing which he alloweth, Rom. 14. 22. Ergo, in going to Maſſe, they ſin againſt their owne conſcience: argum. Bradford. p. 1647. col. 1.

Argum. 6. All things, which giue occaſion to the wicked to be more obfirmed, to the weake to ſtumble and fall, are to be abhorred: But Goſpellers going to Maſſe, and by their preſence giuing allowance of it; doe occaſion the obſtinate to bee more intractable: the weake Papiſts to bee more obſtinate: the ſtrong Goſpellers to be ſore weakned: the weake Goſpellers to be vtterly ouerthrowne: Ergo.argum.Bradford.ibid.

*Argum.*7. Daniel refuſed to be defiled with the Kings meates, Dan.1.8.which were polluted by idolatrie,and ſo Iudith likewiſe,Iud.12. The Macchabees manfully gaue their liues in defence of the ceremonies of the Law: Ergo,we ought much more to endure and ſuffer all things for the maintenance of the word of God,and Sacraments:*argum.D.Ridlei.pag.*1722.

*Argum.*8. God commaunded his people by the mouth of his Prophet Amos, chap.5.verſ.5. not to ſeeke Bethel,neither to enter into Gilgall,where idolatrie was vſed: My ſoule hath no pleaſure in theſe, ſaith the Lord, that withdraw themſelues, Hebr.10.38. If any man prophane the temple of God,him will God deſtroy,1.Cor.3.17. All ſtraunge religion is counted whoredome with the Prophets, and they that follow the ſame goe a whoring: none of thoſe whoſe names are written in the booke of life,doe receiue the marke of the beaſt,Apocal.13.

But they that goe to Maſſe,enter into Bethel,and Gilgall,that is,places of idolatrie,they withdraw themſelues from the faith, in their outward behauiour: they prophane their bodies,which are Gods temples, being preſent at idolatrous ſeruice: they goe a whoring after a ſtraunge worſhip: yea and they carrie the marke of Antichriſt in their externall obedience: Ergo, the Maſſe is abominable,and they in ſo doing,are in daunger of Gods curſe: *argum. M.Philpotti Martyr, epiſtol.quad.p.*1832.

*Argum.*9. Abraham,becauſe he would not bee partaker of their Idolatrie,fled from the people of Chaldea,his natiue countrie: Lot departed from the Sodomites,leaſt hee ſhould bee conſumed with them: Sara would not ſuffer Iſmael,who was giuen to mocking,to keepe companie with her ſonne Iſaac,leaſt he alſo ſhould become a mocker. Moſes at Gods appointment, commanded the people to depart from the tents of Chore,Dathan,and Abiram,leaſt they ſhould bee all wrapped in their ſinnes,and ſo periſh among them: And the Scripture ſaith,Goe out of her my people,that you be not partakers in her ſinnes, and ſo receiue of her plagues, Apocal.18.verſ.4. Ergo,we muſt not keepe companie with Idolaters and Maſſe-mongers, in their idolatrous and maſſing temples; for ſo communicating with them in their ſinnes,wee doe entangle our ſelues in their puniſhment: *arg. Gulielm.Tyms.epiſt.Fox p.*1900.*col.*2.

*Argum.*10. Laſtly,what better proofe can wee haue,then the wofull experience of thoſe,who profeſſing the Goſpell,were entiſed through their infirmitie to come to Maſſe, and afterward either iudged themſelues,feeling inwardly an horror of conſcience,and ſo repented them,or continuing in that ſinne, were iudged of God.

Examples of the firſt,we haue one Cicelie Ormes,who for the ſpace of a tweluemoneth after ſhe had recanted,could not be quiet in conſcience,vntill ſhe had vtterly forſaken all poperie,and at the laſt gaue her life for the faith of Chriſt,pag.2023. Alſo one William Sparrow,who hauing yeelded to be confeſſed and heare Maſſe,had ſuch trouble in conſcience,that he could not bee at reſt, till he had renued the confeſſion of his former faith,and dyed for the ſame, Fox pag.2026. Many ſuch examples are occurrent euery where to ſuch,as are conuerſant in the ſtories of the Martyrs: and all theſe iudged themſelues,and found mercie.

I will ſet ſet downe one notable example of a backſlider, who not iudging himſelfe, was iudged of God: One Robert Edgore ſeruing in the place of the Clarke, in the Church of Mendleſham in Suffolke,but ſore againſt his conſcience, was at the length ſo depriued of his wittes,that many yeeres after his poore wife was conſtrained to keepe him bound in chaines.Notwithſtanding this ſo good a warning, one George Reuet,that had been a talkatiue Goſpeller, for lucres ſake, ſet his ſonne into the ſame roome; and being therefore reprooued of ſome good Chriſtians, his neighbours,he wiſhed of God that if it were not Gods will his ſonne ſhould ſerue in that place, God would ſhew ſome ſtraunge token, which came euen ſo to paſſe: for the Lord ſent vpon him a ſtrange ſwelling in his legges,which riſing vp to his bodie did ſo torment him, that he dyed moſt miſerably and impatiently,Fox pag.1918.col.1.

Thus I truſt,it appeareth how daungerous and vnlawfull a thing it is for Chriſtians to aſſociate themſelues to idolatrous aſſemblies,and to be preſent at Maſſe,or other popiſh ſeruice. Now becauſe it is the propertie of fleſh and blood,to ſeeke ſtarting holes,and to ſearch euery corner, to finde ſome excuſe to ſalue the weaknes, and infirmitie thereof, and with Adam as with fig leaues to hide our nakednes: I will therefore ſet downe certaine obiections with their anſweres: which ſome haue inuented in defence,or at the leaſt to excuſe their going to Maſſe.

CERTAINE OBIECTIONS WITH THEIR ANſweres made by Maſſe-goſpellers, in defence of their going to Maſſe.

*Obiect.*1. IT is not materiall, though my bodie be preſent, if my heart doe not conſent to their wicked doings.

Anſ. 1. Saint Paul ſaith, Glorifie God in your bodie, and in your ſpirit, 1.Cor.6.20. It is not enough then, to reſerue our ſoule onely for God; but as he hath made both bodie and ſoule, ſo we muſt honour him in both, *Reſponſ.M.Philpotti.pag.*1832.*col.*1.

2. In Helies time God counted none to be his ſeruants and people, but ſuch as had not bowed their knees to Baal, 1.King.19. euen ſo now he is Gods faithfull ſeruant, that hath not bowed his knee to the filthie Idoll of the Maſſe, or any other abomination. We muſt not thinke that God requireth leſſe of vs, than the husband of his wife: will the husband admit his wiues excuſe, finding her in bed with another, that her heart notwithſtanding is her husbands? No more will Chriſt allow the preſence of your bodie at Maſſe, though your heart be not conſenting to it, *Reſponſ.Bradford.p.*1652.*col.*1.

*Obiect.*2. It is a great crime to diuide and ſeparate our ſelues from the communion and fellowſhip of the Church, which is the common practiſe of the Anabaptiſts in our daies; and of the Nouatians, and the heretikes called (Cathari) in times paſt: therefore we thinke it beſt to retaine the fellowſhip of the Church, and to come to the ordinarie and vſuall aſſemblies.

Anſw. The ſect of the Anabaptiſts, Nouatians, and other heretikes is to bee condemned, who vpon no iuſt or neceſſarie occaſion doe ſeparate and diuide themſelues from the Church: alſo we graunt that the vnitie of the Church is to be retained by all meanes, as a thing neceſſarie to ſaluation: but the Popiſh Maſſe, as it is now vſed, is not the communion of the Church, but a monſtrous Idoll, and grieuous prophanation of the Lords Supper: So that they which abſtaine from it, doe not breake themſelues off from the fellowſhip of the Church, but indeed they depart from Babylon, and the abominations thereof, *Reſponſ.D.Ridlei.pag.*1718. Vnitie therefore and concord, is to be ſought for by all meanes, and embraced, but vnitie, as Saint Paul ſaith, Secundum Ieſum Chriſtum, According to Ieſus Chriſt: Sic beat.Latimer.ibid.

*Obiect.*3. Admit there bee ſome fault in the Maſſe, and ſomewhat that may bee mended, and made better: if you doe not conſent thereunto, what neede you further trouble your ſelfe. Auguſtine ſaith, that communion of the Sacraments defile not a man, but conſent of deedes.

Anſ. If there were but ſome ſmall faults, and indifferent matters, or tolerable abuſes in the Maſſe, rather ſhewing ſome imperfection, than tending to open impietie; they might for common quietnes ſake bee ſomewhat borne withall. But now ſeeing it is ſtuffed full of blaſphemies, and ſpotted with foule idolatrie, manifeſtly impugning the holie inſtitution of the Lords Supper: no man can with good conſcience either in word or deede, giue conſent thereunto. Auguſtines meaning is, that the badnes of the Miniſter, or of the receiuers, pollute not the Sacraments nor the commers thereunto, where the Sacraments are rightly adminiſtred: he ſaith not, that men abhorring ſuperſtition, and the traditions of men, thruſt vpon the Church in ſtead of Gods word, ought not to refraine from them for feare of pollution, *Reſp.beat.Ridlei.Martyr.p.*1719.

*Obiect.*4. Vnto this your fact in abſtaining from the Church by reaſon of the Maſſe, the examples of the Prophets, of Chriſt, of the Apoſtles is contrarie: for wee doe not reade, that any of them, no not in moſt ſuperſtitious times, refuſed to communicate in the Temple with the people, in their ſacrifices, and other Sacraments of the Law. Our Sauiour Chriſt and his Apoſtles, making no doubt or ſcruple, haunted the Temple: Ergo, you alſo may ſafely come to the popiſh Churches.

Anſw. That the Prophets, Apoſtles, yea our Sauiour Chriſt himſelfe, reſorted to the Iewiſh Temple, we graunt: but we reade not that they did communicate with them in their idolatrie, or ſuperſtitious worſhips, but reproued them: onely in the lawfull ceremonies and rites of the law, they aſſociated themſelues to their aſſemblies: So neither are we angrie with the Churches, or the men there congregated, but would willingly reſort to them, to heare Gods word, and if we might haue the Sacraments rightly adminiſtred: but not to communicate with them in their idolatrous ſeruices, we are taught by the examples aforeſaid, *Reſp.beat.Ridl.ad Antonij obiect.p.*1722.

*Obiect.*5. You condemne the Maſſe, becauſe it is ſaid in an vnknowne tongue, and therefore refuſe to come vnto it. So is Baptiſme alſo miniſtred in the Latine tongue: and yet, you will not ſay, that a child hauing receiued it, is to be baptized againe.

Anſ. There is great difference betweene the popiſh Maſſe, and Baptiſme vſed in poperie: firſt, I deny not Baptiſme to be a Sacrament in their church, nor ſay it ought to be reiterated, becauſe the ſubſtance

ſtance of the inſtitution is kept, to baptize in the name of the Father, the Sonne, and the holie Ghoſt. But the Maſſe is neither ſacrifice, nor Sacrament at all, becauſe many ſubſtantials of the inſtitution are wanting, as we haue ſhewed before. 2. Though Baptiſme, and all other publike exerciſes ought to be celebrate in the vulgar tongue, yet there is not the like neceſſitie in Baptiſme, becauſe the children are not able to vnderſtand what is ſpoken, in what language ſoeuer: but to the other Sacrament, none but ſuch as are of diſcretion, are admitted. 3. Though children baptized in poperie, are not to bee baptized againe, yet when they come to yeeres of diſcretion, they muſt be taught and inſtructed in the Chriſtian faith: and for ſuch children, as are not yet baptized, the parents might doe better to defer their Baptiſme, than to receiue it in the popiſh Church, till ſome conuenient time, when they may get one to miniſter Baptiſme, not in ſubſtance only, but in rites and ceremonies agreeable to Chriſts inſtitution, wherein the Baptiſme of the popiſh Church faileth, *Reſponſ.beat.Ridlei.Fox p.*1722.

*Obiect.*6. Some will ſay, excuſing themſelues for their going to Maſſe, God is mercifull, and his mercie ouer all, and I truſt he will forgiue vs.

Anſw. True it is, God is mercifull, but wee muſt not ſinne vpon hope of forgiueneſſe: Gods mercie is aboue all his workes, and yet but vpon ſuch as feare him: as wee reade in the Pſalmes, The mercie of God is on them that feare him, Pſalm.103.17. And to feare God is to turne from euill, and doe that which is good. So that they which looke to bee partakers of Gods mercie, muſt not abide in any knowne and manifeſt euill, *Reſponſ.beat.Philpot.Fox pag.*1832.

*Obiect.*7. We are commaunded to obey our Magiſtrates, though they bee wicked: and therefore ſeeing they commaund and inioyne vs to come to Maſſe, we ſee not how wee can doe otherwiſe, for feare of contempt, and diſobedience.

Anſw. We are bound indeede to obey wicked Gouernours, but ſo long onely, as they commaund nothing contrarie to Gods word: if they doe, wee muſt herein follow the Apoſtles example, who not obeying the Magiſtrates wicked precepts, anſwered: that it was better to obey God, than men, Act.4. And our Sauiour Chriſt teacheth vs, to giue vnto Cæſar, the things that are Cæſars, and to God, the things that are Gods, Reſponſ.Philpot.

*Obiect.*8. Some other there be, that for an extreame refuge in their euill doing, doe runne vnto Gods predeſtination, and election, ſaying, If I bee elected of God to ſaluation, I ſhall bee ſaued, whatſoeuer I doe.

Anſw. Theſe men bee great tempters of God: they will at the diuels bidding caſt themſelues downe from the pinnacle of the Temple, by preſumption, that God may preſerue them by his Angels, through predeſtination. We muſt not doe euill, that good may come thereof, whoſe damnation is iuſt, ſaith S. Paul, Rom.3.8. Wee muſt alſo conſider, that God hath choſen vs to this end, that we ſhould be holie, Epheſ.1.4. And Saint Peter willeth vs to make our election ſure through good workes, 2.Pet.1.10. The conſideration of our election then, is ſo farre off from making vs careleſſe of good workes, that it will rather ſtirre vs vp to all godlines of life. So that hee which conformeth not himſelfe to all obedience of life, hath good cauſe to doubt, that he is none of Gods elect, Reſponſ.Philpot.ibid.

*Obiect.*9. Some doe obiect the example of Naaman the Syrian: who being newly conuerted to the worſhip of the God of Iſrael, deſired to be diſpenſed with, when hee ſhould goe in with the King into the houſe of his Idoll Rimmon, and there bow himſelfe, together with the King, that herein God would be mercifull vnto him: vnto whom the Prophet anſwered; Goe in peace, as liking of his motion, and yeelding to it.

Anſw. This example is ſo farre from being any warrant for Chriſtians to preſent themſelues in Idolatrous Temples, that it rather maketh againſt it: for the Prophets anſwere, Goe in peace, doth inſinuate no graunt made of his petition, but rather a prohibition, not to trouble himſelfe about thoſe matters: as if he ſhould haue ſaid, content thy ſelfe, requeſt no ſuch thing, it would trouble thy conſcience, but goe in peace, keepe a good conſcience, and labour for the peace thereof. That the Prophet is thus to be vnderſtood, it ſhall appeare by theſe two arguments.

Firſt, the circumſtance of this place ſheweth it: Naaman made two requeſts: one for a toleration to goe into Rimmons Temple: the other, for two Mules loade of earth to carrie home with him, to ſacrifice vpon vnto the Lord. Now the Prophet made the ſame anſwere to both: he then either graunted both, or denieth both: but graunt them both he did not: for the one was cleane contrarie to the law, to giue Naaman leaue to ſacrifice in Syria, whereas Ieruſalem was onely appointed to bee the place of ſacrifice: neither did Naaman aske to haue any Prieſt or Leuite with him, to whom it onely pertained to offer ſacrifice: ſo this had beene another tranſgreſſion of the law. This requeſt therefore, the Prophet in no wiſe is to bee thought to haue graunted: Ergo, not the other.

Secondly, the vſe of this phraſe in Scripture, Goe in peace, may teach vs how it is to bee taken here: it is twice vſed in one chapter, 2.King.4.verſ.23.and 26. In the 23.verſe the Shunamite, ſo ſoone as her child was departed, which God had giuen vnto her, according to the word of Eliſha, made haſte to goe to the Prophet: her husband not knowing the cauſe, ſeemed to bee vnwilling: Wherefore wilt thou goe to him to day, ſaith he, ſeeing it is neither new moone, nor Sabboth day? She anſwered, Peace be vnto thee, and ſo went on her iourney: In ſo ſaying, ſhe condeſcendeth not to her huſbands minde, but willeth him onely to content himſelfe, and not to be too inquiſitiue. Likewiſe in the 26. verſe, as ſhe was comming toward the Prophet, Gehezi met her and ſaid, Art thou in health? is thy huſband and the child in health? She anſwered, Peace be vnto thee: which was not an affirmation of his queſtion, but a watch-word, that he ſhould deſiſt, from further enquiring of her. As this forme of ſalutation is taken in theſe places, in the ſame ſenſe did the Prophet vſe it, when he ſaid to Naaman, Peace be vnto thee: wiſhing him to content, and quiet his minde, and not to trouble himſelfe with ſuch curious matters, which might diſturbe the peace of his conſcience. And thus I thinke this place is anſwered.

Obiect. 10. Laſt of all, it may bee thus obiected out of the 8. of the firſt to the Corinthians, verſ. 10. where the Apoſtle writeth thus: If any man ſee thee which haſt knewledge ſit downe in the Idols Temple, ſhall not the conſcience of him that is weake, be bold to eate things ſacrificed to Idols? Here the Apoſtle reprooueth not the ſitting downe in, or reſorting to the Temples of Idols, but onely the eating of things offred to Idols, whereby the weake might be offended: wherefore it ſeemeth not by the Apoſtle to be condemned.

Anſ. 1. This queſtion whether it be lawfull to eate things ſacrificed to Idols, the Apoſtle handleth at large, in the tenth chapter from the 19. verſe to the end: where the whole queſtion is diuided into three members or parts. Firſt, whether it be lawfull to eate them before the Idols in the Idolatrons Temples. Secondly, whether they may buy ſuch meate in the ſhambles: for that which was left of the ſacrifices, the idolatrous Prieſts put to ſale for their aduantage. Thirdly, whether they might eate ſuch things, if they were inuited by the Infidels home to their owne houſes: theſe two laſt caſes the Apoſtle alloweth in themſelues, as matters lawfull and indifferent, vnleſſe the weake brother be thereby offended: but the firſt he maketh abſolutely vnlawfull, without any reſpect had to the offence: Ye cannot, ſaith he, bee partakers of the Lordes table, and the table of diuels: that is, they which communicate in Chriſtian aſſemblies, thereby making themſelues members of Chriſt, ought not to aſſociate themſelues to the companie of the idolatrous Infidels, who in their filthie Idols worſhipped diuels, verſ. 20. 21.

Secondly, this being then the Apoſtles iudgement in that place, no doubt hee is of the ſame minde and meaning here, that it is vtterly vnlawfull to ſit downe at the ſacrificers feaſts in the Idoll Temples: yet he ſpeaketh onely of the offence, that may ariſe to the weake, about the eating of things ſacrificed, becauſe this is the matter onely here in queſtion, ſimplie for the lawfulnes of eating or not eating, without any relation had vnto the place, as it may appeare verſ. 4. And therfore the Apoſtle, who doth alwaies keepe himſelfe to the very point of the queſtion, leaueth the part leſſe pertinent to his purpoſe, and ſtandeth wholly vpon the other, deciding the reſt in the tenth chapter. This place then, is ſo farre off from giuing allowance, either of Chriſtians reſorting then to Idolatrous Temples, or now to popiſh ſeruices: that by comparing this place, in the eight chapter, and the other in the tenth, verſ. 20. we doe gather a ſtrong argument, againſt ſuch practiſes: for as the Apoſtle there reaſoneth againſt Idoll ſacrifices, that they ſacrificed them to diuels, becauſe Idolatrie is the inuention of the diuell: So we may ſay that Maſſe-ſeruice is the ſeruice of the diuell, that monſtrous Idoll being of his inuention and deuiſing; and they therefore that are partakers of it, doe worſhip the inuention of the diuell, and ſo in like manner are partakers of the table of diuels.

I will end now this treatiſe with a notable ſaying of Saint Auguſtine: Conteſtor vos omnes coram Deo & Angelis eius, ac denuntio, vt nec ad diabolica illa conuiuia, qua aut ad fanum, ad fontes, aut arbores fiant, veniatis: etſi vobis forte inde aliquid tranſmiſſum fuerit, tanquam ſi ipſum diabolum videatis perhorreſcite, vt nec in domum veſtram permittatis, de illo ſacrilego conuiuio quicquam exhiberi, propter illud Apoſtoli, Non poteſtis calicem domini bibere, & calicem dæmoniorum: I doe charge you all before God and his Angels, and denounce vnto you, that ye neither goe your ſelues vnto thoſe diuelliſh feaſts, which are made in their temples, by fountaines, or vnder trees: and if any thing chaunce to be ſent vnto you from thoſe feaſts, to be afraid to touch it, as if ye ſaw the diuell himſelfe, neither ſuffer any part of ſuch ſacrilegious feaſts to come within your houſe, becauſe the Apoſtle hath ſaid, Ye cannot be partakers of the Lords cup, and the cup of diuels, Serm. de tempor. 241.

Thus (I truſt) it hath been ſufficiently declared, how horrible and daungerous a thing it is, for good Chriſtians and welwillers of the Goſpell, though not conſenting in heart, yet in bodie to be preſent at Idolatrous ſeruices, ſuch as we are perſwaded the Maſſe-worſhip is. We haue alſo ſeene their weake grounds and ſimple excuſes, which goe about to maintaine and vphold their weakenes and imbecillitie herein. And here an end of this matter.

As we haue hitherto declared, how vnlawfull a thing it is, for profeſſors of the Goſpell to reſort to Maſſe,or Maſſe-ſeruice; and anſwered,what on the contrarie part may be obiected: ſo now in the next place,we will deale againſt our Recuſants, that refuſe to come to the Engliſh Leiturgie, as it is now vſed in the Church of England: who being of two ſorts, either popiſh, or ſchiſmaticall Recuſants,wee will buckle with them both in order, with the popiſh firſt, and then with the other. And ſeeing theſe alſo are not all of one ſort,for ſome will frequent our prayers, but not abide to heare ſermons; others will reſort to both theſe,but to the Communion in no wiſe.A third ſort,more ſlauiſhly addicted to poperie than the reſt, refuſe to bee preſent at any of them, either prayers, preaching, or Sacraments: we will put them all together, and ioyntly deale with them: firſt confuting their arguments, which they bring in defence of their recuſancie, and then conuincing them by contrarie arguments.

POPISH ARGVMENTS CONFVTED, COMmonly alleaged in defence of Recuſants.

*Arg.*1. THeir firſt argument is drawne from the matter of our Communion and ſeruice: they moſt blaſphemouſly call our Communion, the cup and table of diuels, wherein the diuell(ſay they moſt wickedly) is properly ſerued, *Rhemiſt.*1.*Cor.*10.*annot.in verſ.*9. and that our Communion will come at length to the ſacrifice of Ceres and *Bacchus,Rhemiſt.Ioh.*4.4. And as for our ſeruice, they ſay, it is the ſeruice of Baal, and plaine Idolatrie, *Rhemiſt.*2.*Cor.*6.*verſ.*14. And therefore they will none of our Communion or ſeruice.

Anſw. Firſt, this new vpſtart generation of Papiſts,in theſe their lyes and blaſphemies, filleth vp the meaſure of their forefathers: for as they blaſphemed, ſo doe theſe. One ſometime a B. in their Church,vnreuerently calleth the Communion table,an oyſter table: Biſhop White,Fox pag. 1765. Another ſaith,an houell is good enough for our Communion: they get them a tankard (ſaith he) and one ſaith,I drinke and am thankfull: the more ioy of thee,ſaith another, Weſton Fox pag.1459. Theſe lyes and blaſphemies they caſt not at vs, but euen againſt Chriſts inſtitution: for they ſhall neuer be able to ſhew,as long as the world ſtandeth, that any thing is vſed in our Communion beſide or contrarie to Chriſts inſtitution: Chriſt tooke bread and wine and bleſſed it,ſo doe we: he ſaid,Take,eate,drinke ye all of this;ſo both the bread and cup is diſtributed in the Communion: he bad vs doe it in remembrance of him; ſo wee doe celebrate the Communion,as a commemoration of Chriſts death and paſſion: and in all things,as neere as we can,we obſerue and keepe the firſt inſtitution. Wherefore,if our Communion bee the table of diuels; if it be the feaſt of Ceres and *Bacchus,*then was Chriſts euen ſo,which to think, what horrible and inexpiable blaſphemie is it?

Secondly,they do but preuent vs: for the Idoll of the Maſſe is, as they ſay falſely of our Communion; and as a notable Martyr ſaid, It is Antichriſts daughter,in which the diuell is rather preſent and receiued,than Chriſt: Doctor *Taylor,*pag.1528. For in how many points doe they ſwarue from the inſtitution? Chriſt ſaid,*Take ye,eate ye,*miniſtring to many; they make it priuate onely to the Prieſt: Chriſt appointed it to be eate and drunk; they hang it vp in pixes and make an Idoll of it: Chriſt celebrated in both kindes; they take away the cup from the people: Chriſt calleth it the fruite of the vine,and Paul bread after conſecration: they ſay,there is neither bread nor wine,but onely the bodie and blood of Chriſt. See more of this matter,*argum.*1.general.cont. Miſſam.

Beſide theſe contradictions to Chriſts inſtitution:One denieth that the Sacrament hath a promiſe of remiſſion of ſinnes: and yet Chriſt ſpeaking of his blood,as it is repreſented in the Sacrament,ſaith, which is ſhed for you, and for many, for remiſſion of ſinnes. The ſame partie alſo graunted another great abſurditie,that Chriſt eate his owne bodie, *Moreman.in diſput.conuocat.pag.*1412. Another denieth the Euchariſt to be a Sacrament of the bodie of Chriſt, ſauing onely of his myſticall bodie,which is the Church, *D.Coole diſput.Oxonienſ.pag.*1434.*col.*1. Another ſtoute champion of theirs,denyed that Chriſt commaunded the Sacrament,or the vſe of it: and that *Take ye, eate ye,*was no commaundement.B.*Winchest.p.*1611.*col.*1.

Let any indifferent man now iudge,whether of vs are departed from the inſtitution of Chriſt: and whether wee may not more iuſtly call their Maſſe-ſeruice,the ſeruice of the diuell,than they can ſo terme ours,being in euery reſpect anſwerable to Chriſts inſtitution.

Thirdly,but are they not aſhamed to charge vs with Idolatrie? What dare they not now ſay, ſeeing they herein,againſt all ſhew of truth,will not ſticke to belye vs? I pray you where be our Idols of ſiluer or gold? can you ſee your ſelues, or ſhew others any in our Churches? There are but two things requiſite to Idolatrie; To haue and ſet vp Images, and then to bow downe vnto them and adore them. The Lutheranes haue Images,but adore them not; we neither haue them, nor adore them: Papiſts doe both: the Lutheranes come neerer Idolatrie than Proteſtants: if they be not Idolaters,much leſſe are we.

I pray you this: if a Iew or Turke, which both of them hate Images, ſhould come firſt into a popiſh Church, and ſee in euery corner an Image, beautified and garniſhed, and the people kneeling before them, knocking vpon their breaſts: afterward let him bee brought into a Church of the Proteſtants, where there is neither Image to bee ſeene, nor any crouching or bowing vnto them; whether of theſe two now would he count Idolatrous Churches? or whether people would he call Idolaters? But thus blinde are the Papiſts, that they take bitter for ſweete, and ſweete for bitter, they call good euill, and euill good, as the Prophet ſaith. They would haue vs to bee counted Idolaters, which neither haue Images, nor yet doe worſhip them: and themſelues to bee none, which doe both. Wee worſhip not Ceres and Bacchus, that is, Bread and Wine, as the Manichees ſometime obiected againſt the Chriſtians, and the Papiſts doe now againſt Proteſtants. Wee vſe bread and wine in the Sacrament, and reuerence them as holie ſignes, but we bow not down vnto them, nor worſhip them. Our aduerſaries indeed do make an Idoll of a piece of bread, when the Prieſt boweth himſelfe to the hoaſt in the Maſſe, ſaying, I worſhip thee, I glorifie thee: what monſtrous Idolatrie is this, ſo to adore a cake made of flower? Who are now the worſhippers of Ceres & Bacchus but Papiſts? For that which they doe ſuch homage vnto, in ſhew is Bread, in taſte and feeling, Bread; in the eye, the mouth, and hand, Bread: what is it els then but Bread, whatſoeuer they ſay? Like vnto the old idolatrous Iſraelites, who, as the Septuagint tranſlate, and as Auguſtine readeth: Elegerunt nouos Deos, ὡς ἄρτον κρίθινον, vt panē hordeaceū: They choſe new Gods, as barlie bread: that is, they changed their Gods, as men do change their bread, as Auguſtine expoundeth it, *qu.*30. in lib. Iudicum. So the Papiſts haue choſen a new God, euen panē triticeum, wheaten bread. We may put out ὡς ἄρτον, as bread; for they do worſhip, not barlie, (for that is the only difference) but wheaten bread indeed. Wherefore, ſeeing our Communion is the ſeruice of Chriſt, not the ſeruice of the diuel, as they blaſpheme, & it is as far off from idolatrie, as that which hath the leaſt agreement with it; in this reſpect they haue no cauſe to refraine our churches: & thus is their firſt reaſon anſwered.

*Argum.*2. Another fault they finde with our congregations and aſſemblies; calling our Temples and people, ſchiſmaticall: and therefore they will not come at them, Rhemiſt. annot. 2. *Corinth.*6.14. Thus then they reaſon: It is not lawfull to aſſemble, or pray with ſchiſmatikes; you are ſchiſmatikes: Ergo.

Anſw. Firſt, the propoſition is not true, that it is not lawfull to pray with ſchiſmatikes: for if Schiſma, be nothing elſe, as it is defined in *Auguſtine contra Fauſt. lib.*20. *cap.*2. Quam eadem opinantem atque eodem ritu colentem, quo cæteri, ſolo congregationis delectari diſcidio: For a man holding the ſame iudgement in religion, and the ſame manner of worſhip, onely to ſeparate himſelfe from the reſt of the congregation: I ſee no reaſon, why it is not lawfull to pray with ſuch, who faile not in any point of faith, though they breake the bond of charitie; but both haue the word of God, and Sacraments truly taught and adminiſtred: ſo that by our comming to them, we ſeeme not to approoue their ſchiſme. Did not Saint Paul ioyne himſelfe to the Iewiſh Synagogues, which were more then ſchiſmatically diuided from the true Church, both enduring to heare the lectures of the law read, as alſo himſelfe to preach amongſt them, yea and to pray (for their preaching was not without prayer?) reade Acts chap.13. and 15.

Secondly, the aſſumption or ſecond part of their reaſon, is more falſe and vntrue than the firſt: for, be it knowne vnto them, we are no ſchiſmatikes, theirs is the ſchiſmaticall Church. Firſt, Saint Paul ſheweth who are ſchiſmatikes: namely, They which depart, and play the apoſtataes from the faith, giuing eare to the doctrine of diuels, as forbidding of mariage, and teaching to abſtaine from meates, 1. Timoth.4. verſ.1.3. But they, not we, teach theſe doctrines: Ergo, they, not we, are the ſchiſmatikes and apoſtataes. Secondly, euery departure maketh not a ſchiſme. Wee are commaunded to depart from Babylon, Apocal.18.4. that is, not to communicate with their ſinnes and errors: ſo wee in leauing the Church of Rome, haue not forſaken the fellowſhip of the true Church, but onely ſhaken hands with their filthie and abominable doctrine.

Thirdly, euery abſolute kingdome and Church, may meaſure themſelues by themſelues: and may eaſily know who they are that diuide themſelues from the ſociety of that Church, where they liue, without compariſon and reſpect had to other Churches: As to know who are ſchiſmatikes in England, we neede not runne to Rome, but they are ſuch, as ſeparate themſelues from the lawfull congregations in England, which haue the right vſe the Word, and Sacraments: to trie out this matter by their owne rules; who are the ſchiſmatikes in our Church? they that ſteale their Maſſes in corners, or they that heare diuine ſeruice, according to Gods word, publikely in Churches? Is the whole congregation ſchiſmaticall, or a few ſingular fellowes rather, that doe diuide themſelues from the reſt?

S. Auguſtine ſpeaking of the Gentiles in his time, ſaith, Si non conſentiant veritati veſtræ, erubeſcant paucitati ſuæ: If they will not agree to your veritie, let them be aſhamed of their paucitie: *in Matth. ſerm.*6. So may I ſay of popiſh Recuſants in England, that although their number is not ſo ſmall, as might be wiſhed, and I truſt in time may be, yet God be thanked it is not ſo great, as that it is able to counteruaile by many parts the Lordes royall hoſt of Proteſtants : whoſe number daily let vs beſeech God to encreaſe : Ergo, wee are no ſchiſmatikes, and ſo haue they loſt alſo this argument.

*Argum.*3. Catholikes muſt haue nothing to doe with heretikes, ſpeciallie in prayers: Ergo, they refuſe to aſſemble with vs in our Churches, holding vs to be heretikes, Rhemiſt.annot. 2.Cor.6.14.

Anſw. 1. It is not indeede lawfull to pray with heretikes, becauſe their prayers alſo are hereticall: but ſo are not our prayers, which moſt of them, I thinke, they themſelues will not refuſe to ſay Amen vnto : for many of them, the very ſame, they alſo vſe in their ſeruice, as the Gloria in excelſis, the Epiſtle and Goſpell, the Creede, the Lords prayer, and many Collects and ſhort prayers beſide: (for what is good in their ſeruice and Leiturgie, and may be vſed without ſuperſtition, we thinke not much to retaine:) An heretike (ſaith Saint Paul) after two or three admonitions, auoide, Tit.3. But what if prayers vſed by thoſe, whom you count heretikes, haue not any thing worthie of admonition or reproofe? why then ſhould ſuch prayers bee ſhunned, and auoyded? but ſuch are ours : Ergo.

2. The accuſation of hereſie, we do with much better right, and iuſter title returne vpon your head, which you ſhall neuer be able to faſten vpon vs. Firſt, if they will bee tried by Saint Pauls rule, he ſaith, He that loueth not the Lord Ieſus, let him be accurſed, 1. Corinth. 16.21. Who is he now, that loueth not the Lord Ieſus? Is it he, that aſcribeth his ſaluation only to Chriſt Ieſus, in whole and in part, the beginning, continuing, and end : or he rather who hopeth to be ſaued partly by the death of Chriſt, partly by his owne merits? who ſaith, the beginning of his iuſtification, which they call the firſt iuſtification, is of grace : the ſecond (which indeede is nothing elſe but ſanctification, the fruits of iuſtification) ſay they, is merited. I thinke the firſt loueth Chriſt : ſuch I truſt, are we : the ſecond, I am afraid, loueth him not : for Chriſt will not part ſtakes, nor giue his honour to another : of this ſort, I would our aduerſaries were not. They therefore, if any, are the heretikes, and to be holden accurſed.

3. Or will they ſtand to Auguſtines definition of an heretike : Hæreticus eſt, qui alicuius temporalis commodi, & maximè gloriæ & principatus cauſa, falſas & nouas opiniones, aut gignit, aut ſequitur : He is an heretike, who for ſome temporall commoditie, or glorie and chiefedome ſake, doth either inuent and begin falſe and new opinions, or doth follow them : *De vtilitat.credend.c.*1. Now we neither inuent nor follow falſe or new opinions: not falſe; for our deſire is to be tried with our opinions by the touchſtone of Gods word in Scripture reuealed, the only rule of faith : and therfore we loue not the errors of darknes, ſeeing we hate not yͤ light: not new; for our faith is the ancient Catholik Apoſtolike faith, reuealed by Chriſt, preached by yͤ Apoſtles, profeſſed in yͤ church many hundreds after, ſealed with the blood of Martyrs : and this ancient freehold of our faith, they ſhall be neuer able to driue vs from. Againe, as wee are free from the falſe and ſtraunge opinions of heretikes, ſo alſo wee defie their couetous and ambitious minde. What temporall commoditie (I pray you) did the Proteſtants looke for, in the late daies of perſecution in England, when as for their conſcience and faith ſake, ſome loſt their liuings and dignities in the Church, Biſhoprickes, Archbiſhoprickes, Deanries, Archdeaconries, yea and their countrie withall? And as for vainglorie, it was farre from them, as it appeareth by their deepe proteſtations being charged therewith, as you may reade in Maſter Bradfords ſtorie, Fox pag. 1606. And Maſter Philpot doth in great vehemencie of ſpirit in this manner diſcharge himſelfe : I proteſt here before God, and his eternall ſonne Ieſus Chriſt my Sauiour, and the holy Ghoſt and his Angels, that I doe not ſtand in any opinion of wilfulnes or ſingularitie, &c. pag. 1800. And who would not beleeue them, both for their earneſt proteſtation ſake, but much more for that they declared it in deede? for what liſt, thinke we, or leiſure had thoſe holy men, to ſeeke for the fame of this world, when they looked euery day when their liues ſhould be taken from them? Fame and eſtimation is much deſired in the world, but hardly will a man purchaſe it by the loſſe of his life.

But what ſhall we thinke of our aduerſaries? Is not the hope or rather hauing of gaine a great piller of their profeſſion, and the fayreſt white, that they ayme at? Let their Pilgrimages, Maſſes, Dirges, Trentals, Suffrages for the dead, purgatorie doctrine, pardons, Indulgences, and the like trumpery ſpeake in this caſe, if lucre were not the mother, that bare them, and the nurſe that fed and nouriſhed them. There was neuer any ſuch gainfull religion to the profeſſors thereof ſince the world began, as popery hath been to Popes, Cardinals, Abbots, Monkes, Friers, and the like. And what for principality? do they contemne and deſpiſe it? I thinke no. What els made Popes in times paſt ſo proud, as to make Emperors and Kings their ſlaues and vaſſals, to tread on their neckes, to make them dance attendance in froſt and cold, barefoote, and barelegged at their gates, to cauſe them to kiſſe their feet, to hold their ſtirrop, and leade their horſe by the bridle, and ſuch like ſeruices they put them to? Is not this the prince of pride? Why doth the Pope chalenge to be head of Chriſts Church, to be the Lord of the whole world, aboue kings and princes, and propoſeth it to bee beleeued as an article of faith to all his ſubiects: if hee were not poſſeſſed with pride? Eraſmus that famous learned Clerke well perceiued the pride and couetouſnes of this generation, when hee being asked by the Duke of Saxony, what hee thought of Luthers proceedings, wittily anſwered, that hee dealt with two things, which were in no wiſe to bee touched, the Popes crowne, and the Monkes belly: meaning the pride of the one, and the couetous deſire of the other. Wherefore, if the holding of falſe and ſtrange opinions on the one ſide, with hope and deſire of gaine or glorie on the other, doe make an heretike, who ſeeth not that this definition better agreeth to the members of the Church of Rome, then vnto Proteſtants? We are then no heretikes, much leſſe are our prayers and ſeruice hereticall: and therefore our Recuſants in this reſpect haue no cauſe to abſent themſelues from our congregations.

*Argum.*4. An other reaſon of their recuſancie is drawne from the Miniſters of the word and Sacrament amongſt vs: Heretikes, ſay they, are not to be heard, though they pray and preach the truth, *Rhemiſt. annot. Mark.*3.*ver.*1. Ergo, they will not heare our Miniſters either preach or pray.

*Anſw.*1. That the truth is not to be heard or receiued at heretikes hands, it hath neither warrant of Scripture, nor good ground of reaſon: Firſt, Auguſtine ſaith, reaſoning thus out of Scripture, Euangelium Iudas ſine detrimento fidelium prædicauit: Iudas preached the Goſpel, without any hinderance or loſſe to the faithfull: Nunquid Paulus gauderet de talium prædicatione, qui contentioſi erant, niſi ſciret, quod illis pernitioſum eſſet, rem caſtam non caſtè annuntiare, illis ſalubre qui per illos proficerent ad ſalutem: Or would Paul haue reioyced of their preaching, which were contentious, as he doth, Philip.1.18. but that he knew, that it was hurtfull to them that preached the chaſt truth not chaſtly, but holeſome to them, that profited thereby to ſaluation? *Lib.*2.*cont.epiſt. Parmeni. ca.*11. Here be two examples out of Scripture, which ſhew, that the truth by whomſoeuer may ſafely be preached: our Sauiour Chriſt neither condemned Iudas preaching of the Goſpel, that child of perdition, nor yet Paul the contentious preaching of falſe diſciples.

Auguſtine addeth alſo a third example out of the Goſpel: Botrum carpe, ſpinam caue: Cathedra Moſis, vitis eſt: Phariſæorũ mores & doctrina, ſpinæ: Take the grape, but beware the throne: the vine, is the chaire of Moſes; the thorne is, the corrupt doctrine and manners of the Phariſies, *Tract. in Iohan.*46. The Phariſies had many erronious doctrines, and therefore our Sauiour Chriſt giueth his Apoſtles warning to take heede of their leauen: yet ſo long as they taught the truth ſitting in Moſes chayre, our Sauiour biddeth to heare them, Mat.23.2. Secondly, beſides thoſe examples out of Scripture, it is thus confirmed by reaſon: Auguſtine denieth that heretikes are worſe then ethnikes and Infidels: his reaſon is, becauſe Chriſt ſaith, If a man heare not the Church, let him be vnto thee as an Infidel: making that the extreameſt, and moſt dangerous caſe of all: But, ſaith he, In ipſis ethnicis, quod rectum erat, approbarunt apoſtoli: the Apoſtles in the very heathen allowed that was right, as Act.17. S. Paul citeth a place out of an Athenian Poet: Ergo, that which is right we may heare and allow, euen in heretikes.

2 Yet, though this were granted, that heretikes are not to be heard, no, not ſpeaking the truth; that our Miniſters are heretikes, or fauourers or followers of heretikes, or that they draw neere vnto hereſie, they ſhall neuer be able to proue: So that they are ſatiſfied for this, and need not therefore be ſo ſcrupulous in this behalfe, in not comming to our prayers.

*Argum.*5. A Catholike man, ſay the Rhemiſts, is bound to confeſſe his faith, *Rhemiſt. Luk.*10. *ver.*8. And, *Annot. Iohan.*12.*ver.*42. they doe ſharpely rebuke and reprehend ſuch Catholikes, as dare not freely confeſſe their faith: hereupon it followeth, that a Pope Catholike profeſſor ought in no wiſe to reſorte to the Churches of Proteſtants: which cannot be done without diſſimulation of their faith, which they ſhould openly and boldly profeſſe.

*Anſw.*1. The Rhemiſts iudgement in this place concerning the open profeſſion of faith, we doe willingly approue and allow: and we could wiſh, that all the Pope Catholikes in England at this day were of this minde, and herein would followe the counſell and aduiſe of their ghoſtly Fathers of Rhemes: that is, that all Engliſh Papiſts were become Recuſants, and would openly ſhew what lyeth hidde in their breaſts, that we might better take heede of them. But it is to be feared, that we haue many hollowe hearted Countrey men, that do openly reſort to our congregations in body, but in heart communicate not with vs; who haue Engliſh faces, but Romiſh hearts: Theſe are our moſt daungerous enemies, and chiefly to be feared: vnto whom we may vſe that good olde ſaying, Aut appare quod es, aut eſto quod appares: Either appeare as thou art, or be that which thou appeareſt. So it were to be wiſhed, that theſe cunning fellowes would either appeare outwardly to be Papiſts if they be ſo in heart, or els be Goſpellers indeede, as they ſhew by their outward behauiour.

2 Faith in deed is publikely to be confeſſed: diſſimulation in all matters is to be miſliked, but it is worſt in religion: yet he, that will make publike confeſſion of his faith, had neede be ſure, he is in a right faith,leaſt afterward he be aſhamed of his faith: And ſo I would that Popiſh Recuſants did confeſſe their faith, that is,to abide and endure the examining,ſifting and tryall of their faith by the Scriptures,and not to refuſe our Sermons, bookes, conferences,admonitions,whereby we declare vnto them the errors of their faith : For this is to confeſſe our faith, as S.Peter defineth it: To giue an anſwere to euery one that asketh vs a reaſon,&c. 1.Pet.3.15. Theſe Recuſants then, are no open confeſſors of their faith, for as much as they are not ready to giue an account thereof: which courſe if they would take, I doubt not,but in the ende they ſhould ſee the errors, whereunto they had been nuſled,and ſo confeſſe,and ſet before their face their faith,as Auguſtine ſaith of ſin:Tu peccatum tuum ante faciem tuam conuerte,ſi vis vt inde faciem Deus auertat: ſi peccatum tuum in dorſo tuo ponis, Deus ibi faciem ponit: Set then thy ſin before thy face, if thou wilt haue God therefrom to turne his face, but if thou place thy ſinne behinde, as on thy backe, that is, hide it, thither alſo God turneth his face : that is, God will hide his face from thee, as thou hideſt thy ſinne from him. Thus let theſe ſelfe-willed Recuſants confeſſe and acknowledge their faith, that is, ſette before their eyes their errors and falſe opinions, ſo would God forgiue them their ignorances and errors, and thus they ſhould be right confeſſors of the popiſh faith,confeſſors not to maintaine, but to forſake it and to be aſhamed of it.

In Pſal.50.

3 A man we graunt, is in no caſe to diſſemble his faith : that is no right faith, or profeſſion, which alloweth diſſimulation, nor yet he a good profeſſor, or faithfull man, that will diſſemble : for we are not ignorant,what our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith,that whoſo denieth him before men,him will he denie before his father in heauen. To this purpoſe may be remembred, what Auguſtine reporteth of the conuerſion of one Victorinus a Rhetorician of Rome : who after he was become a Chriſtian, yet frequented not the Chriſtian aſſemblies : vnto whom Simplicianus a godly Prieſt was wont to ſay,Ego te non deputabo inter Chriſtianos,niſi in Eccleſia te videro: I will not for my part count you a Chriſtian,vnleſſe I ſee you in the Church of Chriſtians.But he at the firſt ſcoffed,ſaying: Ergone parietes faciunt Chriſtianos? then belike the walles of the Church make Chriſtians? Afterward being better aduiſed, he reſorted to the Church, was baptized, and openly (ſtanding in an high place) confeſſed his faith before the congregation, whereas he might haue done it more ſecretly : giuing this reaſon of his ſo doing: Non erat ſalus (inquit) quam docebam in Rhetorica,& eam tamen publice profeſſus ſum: That tended not to ſaluation,which I taught in Rhetorike,and yet I publikely profeſſed it : meaning that much more faith, whereby we are led vnto life, ought boldly and publikely to be profeſſed, *Auguſt.lib.confeſſ.*8 *cap.*2.

This then being fully determined and concluded,that faith is not to be cloked, or diſſembled: let vs ſee how much our aduerſaries come ſhort and fayle in this poynt, and ſo offend againſt their owne rules ; amongſt whom, it is an vſuall and common trade in the moſt, to cloake their popiſh profeſſion with an outward countenance and ſemblance of the Goſpel. And with Papiſts it is no rare thing to diſſemble both in religion and other affaires of life. Was it not ſaid openly in the Councel of Conſtance,when they brake the Emperors ſafe conduct granted to Iohn Huſſe,that fides non eſt ſeruanda hæreticis,that faith is not to be kept with heretikes? The like anſwere was made *ann.*1526.by Hawnart the Emperors Ambaſſadour,that whereas the Lady Katherine the Emperors yonger ſiſter was promiſed to Iohn Fredericke Duke of Saxony in mariage,and writings were made thereupon, yet after the reformation of Religion in Saxony,the couenant was broken : for with heretikes,ſaid Hawnart,promiſe is not to be kept.Fox.p.884.col.1.

It is not long ſince here in England ſolemne promiſe was made,that the religion eſtabliſhed in King Edwards dayes ſhould not be altered, and it was made by one that then ruled the helme,yet was it not performed,vid.Fox.p.1407.If they can thus diſſemble,and breake their troth and faith in humane matters, who doubteth thereof, but that they will be changelings in Religion : for as S.Iames ſaith, A wauering minded man is vnſtable in all his wayes,Iam.1.8. that is, both toward God and men. He that knoweth the vertue of the Popes diſpenſations, which can diſſolue othes and vowes, may eaſily thinke that Pope Catholikes may bee diſpenſed withall to diſſemble in Religion : How elſe came it about, that ſo many Proteſtants in ſhew, in King Edwards dayes, were ſo ſoone transformed into Papiſts in Queene Maries: and ſo many Papiſts then,had ſo ſoone put on the face of Proteſtantes in Queene Elizabeths gracious raygne? I could wiſh with all my heart, that all the Papiſts at this preſent day in England,were Recuſants,that we might the better take heede of them.But it is to feared,that there be many cloſe Papiſts in England,that are content for a while to temporize, watching for an houre, which I truſt they ſhall neuer ſee : like vnto the heretikes called Priſcillianiſts, of whom Auguſtine reporteth, that they thought it lawfull, mendacio occultare hæreſin,& ſe catholicos fingere: to cloake their hereſie by a lie,and to faine themſelues good Catholikes,*Lib.cont.mendacium cap.*1.I would we had no ſuch Romaniſts now in England,which faine themſelues to be true Catholike Proteſtants.

Thus then are our aduerſaries anſwered for this matter, whom firſt we deſire to follow their owne rules, that is, to deale plainely with vs, and to ſhew themſelues outwardly, as they are in heart: And then we doe wiſh, that they would glorifie God, and confeſſe their errors, and ſo be reformed both in heart, and changed alſo in their outward profeſſion: ſo may they ſafely reſort to our Chriſtian aſſemblies, without diſſembling their conſcience.

Argum.6. Another reaſon of their Recuſancie is drawne from the ſequell or euent of their comming to our Churches, if they ſhould yeelde thereunto: that is, they thinke that their preſence would grace and countenance, and bring credite to our aſſemblies, which by all meanes they labour to diſcredit, and bring into contempt: for thus the Rhemiſts open their blaſphemous mouth, *It muſt needes be an honour to Caluines communion, when Catholikes are ſeene in the Idols temple, ſitting at the abominable table. Annot.*1.*Cor.*8.*ver.*10.

Anſw. Firſt, we know no ſuch Caluins communion amongſt vs: that which we haue is Chriſts communion: and of his name both it and we are called: we depend not vpon men, though we praiſe God for ſuch excellent inſtruments, as Caluine and Luther were, ſtirred vp of God to ſet forth his truth. It is your guiſe, and not ours, to call your profeſſions, and Maſſes after the names of men: you haue Saint Gregories Maſſe, Saint Baſiles Maſſe, Saint Iames his Maſſe, which you doe falſely father vpon him. And in England, you had the vſe of Sarum, and the vſes of other Churches: diuers formes of your Maſſe: Contrarie to the decree of the fift Councell Toletan. can. 2. Vnus modus in Miſſarum ſolennitatibus, vnus in veſpertinis officÿs, nec diuerſa ſit vltrà in nobis eccleſiaſtica conſuetudo, quia in vna fide continemur & regno: Let one and the ſame way be obſerued at Maſſe and Euening prayer, neither let there be any longer a diuers vſe in the Church, ſeeing we belong to one faith and Kingdome.

Secondly, ye are ſhameles men to call our Churches, Idols temples. We haue no Images or Idols at all to be ſeene in our Churches, much leſſe doe we worſhip them: And as for the bread and wine in the Sacrament, though wee reuerence them as holy ſignes, yet wee adore them not, neither make idols of them as you doe. If our communion table be an abominable table, then ſo is Chriſts: for we ſay all that Chriſt ſaid, and doe all that he did in the inſtitution of his laſt ſupper: ye are not able to ſhew that in any one iot we haue ſwarued from the firſt inſtitution, as you haue done diuers waies; as in taking away the cup, whereas Chriſt ſaid, drinke ye, as well as eate ye; and making the communion priuate, whereas Chriſt ſaith, drinke ye all of this; in reſeruing the Sacrament, whereas Chriſt would haue it eaten and drunke, and in many ſuch things: your Maſſe altar therefore is that abominable table, not our communion table. And you are thoſe worſhippers of the Idols of ſiluer and gold, Apoc.9.20. for you haue ſuch Images in your churches, you fall downe and pray before them, and offer incenſe to them, and ſo are moſt groſſe Idolaters: but we follow the rule of your owne Councels, *Synod. Moguntin.cap.*42. Nos praua ſuperſtitioni viam praecludere volentes, omnibus locorum Ordinarÿs iniungimus, vt ſi forte in territorÿs ſuis concurſus ad imaginem fieri, & homines ad ipſius imaginis figuram reſpectum habere, & quaſi quandam diuinitatis opinionem illi tribuere animaduerterint, ipſam imaginem pro cauſa qualitate tollant, aut mutent: Wee willing to ſtop all way againſt ſuperſtition, doe inioyne the Ordinaries, that if they ſee in their territories the people to runne to images, and to attribute vnto them a diuine power, hauing reſpect to the figure of the Image, that they either take away, or chaunge the Image. If they bee idolators that haue taken away Idols and aboliſhed them, then will we alſo be Idolators.

Thirdly, now to anſwere to their argument: Firſt, they ſhew of what making they are, and whoſe children they bee, in that they are afraid, that the trueth by them ſhould bee graced, and Chriſts inſtitution honored. They will not come to Church, becauſe they thinke it would be an honor, not to Caluins, but to Chriſts communion: to whome wee may ſay, as Saint Steuen to the peruerſe Iewes, Act.7.51. You ſtifnecked and of vncircumciſed hearts, and eares, you haue alwaies reſiſted the holy Ghoſt, as your fathers did, ſo doe you: And as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, O ye ſonnes of men, how long will ye turne my glorie into ſhame? Pſalm.4.2. Doth it grieue you that Chriſt ſhould be honoured and his inſtitution reuerenced? O enemies to God and all godlines! Secondly, though they doe come to our Churches, if their hearts bee not reformed, but doe cloake the ſuperſtition of their darke minds, with the ſhew of outward conformitie and obedience, they are ſo farre from gracing our aſſemblies, that they are a diſgrace and a diſhonour to them. And as Iude ſaith of ſuch, They are ſpots in your feaſts of charitie, verſe 12. ſo theſe are foule blemiſhes in our holy meetings, when as hypocrites doe ioyne themſelues to the aſſemblies of the Saints. They neede not feare, leaſt thus comming, they ſhould honour our communion, nay rather as much as in them lieth, they prophane and pollute it: when holy things are thus caſt vnto dogges, and pearles before ſwine. Thirdly, but if they would reſort to our aſſemblies dutifully, as it becommeth good Chriſtians, to receiue inſtruction and comfort by the word of God and the Sacraments, they ſhould not for all this bring grace or win credit to theſe publike exerciſes, but ſhould themſelues be graced, and receiue honour thereby. The Pſalmiſt ſaith, Pſalm.149.9. Such honor God vouchſafeth his Saints, that is, in giuing vnto them his word: ſo ſaith Moſes, Deut.4.8. What nation is ſo great that hath ordinances and lawes ſo righteous?&c. The law of God maketh a people great, that is, honorable: and thus alſo haue we anſwered this argument. Wherefore ſeeing they can now pretend no honeſt excuſe for their Recuſancie, for neither is our ſeruice in it ſelfe hereticall, neither yet our people that profeſſe it, or Miniſters that preach it, heretikes or ſchiſmatikes: ſeeing alſo they may be freed from diſſimulation, when their hearts ſhall truely be conuerted vnto God, and ſo yeeld obedience to our publike aſſemblies, and that by their comming God may be honored, I pray God giue them grace to acknowledge their wilfulnes, and forſake their errors, into the which their blinde guides haue led them, that they may now at length ioyne themſelues vnto the true Church of Chriſt, in the profeſſion of the right faith, to the ſaluation of their ſoules.

Here now I thought to haue inſerted a treatiſe againſt the Browniſts, wherein I haue at large confuted the arguments, which they vſe againſt our Church, and likewiſe propounded our reaſons in defenſe thereof, with a diſcouerie of diuers erroneous opinions by them held and maintained: but I altered my purpoſe vpon theſe reaſons. Firſt, the treatiſe was not fullie finiſhed, and the Printer called vpon me earneſtly to make haſte. Secondly, becauſe I intended to deale onely againſt the Papiſts in this worke. Thirdly, though they be peeuiſhlie ſet, yet I iudged them the leſſe daungerous enemies, ſeeing they diſſent not from vs in the fundamentall poynts of our faith. Fourthly, many of their aſſertions are ſo abſurd, that they are rather to be laughed at, then worthie of any confutation. Fiftly, I reſerue thoſe labours, to a ſpeciall treatiſe hereafter as occaſion ſhall ſerue. Therefore not ſtaying the reader further in theſe digreſſions, I proceede to the reſt of the Controuerſies that follow.

THE SECOND PART OF THIS CENTVRIE, OF THE FIVE POPISH SACRAMENTS.

HERE ENSVE THE CONTROVERSIES OF THE fiue other popiſh Sacraments: Penance, Matrimonie, Confirmation, Orders, Extreme Vnction.

THE FOVRTEENTH GENERALL CONTROuerſie, of popiſh Penance.

VNto this Controuerſie belong theſe queſtions following:

1 Of the name Penance, whether it be rightly giuen.

2 Whether that which they call Penance, but we much better, Repentance, be a Sacrament.

3 Whether there be any other Sacrament of repentance beſide Baptiſme.

4 Of the eſſentiall parts of Penance, as the matter and forme, and of the three materiall parts, Contrition, Confeſſion, Satisfaction: with an appendix, whether Repentance goe before Faith.

5 Of Contrition, 1. The cauſe thereof, 2. The quantitie thereof, 3. Whether it be ioyned with faith, 4. Whether it be ſatisfactorie, 5. Whether Contrition be neceſſarie for veniall ſinnes, 6. Of Contrition which onely proceedeth of feare.

6 Of Auricular confeſſion, 1. Whether it be neceſſarie, 2. Whether it be a diuine ordinance, 3. To whom it is to be made, 4. Of the time.

7 Of Satisfaction, with the ſeuerall branches of this queſtion.

8 Firſt, of penall iniunctions, 1. Whether neceſſarie, 2. By whom to bee impoſed. Secondly, of indulgences, 1. Whether there be any ſuch, 2. The ground of them, 3. In whoſe power they be.

9 The circumſtances of penance, 1. Their habite, 2. Their workes, 3. Of the time of their Penance.

THE FIRST QVESTION, OF THE name of Penance.

The Papiſts.

42.Error. THe Latine word Pœnitentia, which they tranſlate, Penance, being deriued of pœna, doth ſignifie (ſay they) not onely confeſſion and amendment of life, but contrition and ſorrow for the offence, and painfull ſatisfaction, Bellarm.lib.1.cap.7.

Argum. Matth.11.21. The word muſt needes ſignifie, ſorrowfull, painefull, and ſatisfactorie Penance, Rhemiſt.Matth.3.2. for no man doth ſit downe in ſackcloth and aſhes, which hath not repented before: this therefore is a penall action that followeth the inward ſorrow. So the Niniuites are ſaid to haue repented, Luk.11.32. which was in ſackcloth and aſhes, and praiers: Ergo, Penance conſiſteth in an outward penall action. Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. The plac[illegible] quoted out of S. Matthew and S. Luke, proue no ſuch thing: where our Sauiour ſaith, that Tyre and Sidon would haue repented in ſackcloth and aſhes, and Niniue had repented: which is no ſatisfaction for ſinne, but an outwarde ſigne of true ſorrowe for ſinne, inwardly conceiued: for repentance is begun inwardly, and continued and finiſhed outwardly: ſo then aſhes, ſackcloth, was no part of repentance, but an outward teſtification of their inward griefe.

*Argum.*2. S.Paul ſaith, I ſhall bewaile many of them, which haue ſinned and not done penance for their vncleannes, 2.Cor.12.21. It cannot be ſaid, which haue not repented, for, or becauſe of their vncleanneſſe: for then ſinne ſhould be the cauſe of repentance, which it is not: for inward repentance commeth of ſome good inſpiration: but ſinne is properly ſaid to be the cauſe of outward penance. Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, ſinne is, not the cauſe of inward repentance, but the occaſion, no more is it of outward puniſhment: for as the inward repentance proceedeth from a good inſpiration, ſo the outward puniſhment is procured by the inward ſorrow, as the aſhes and ſackcloth of the Niniuites were outwardly vſed, becauſe they firſt inwardly ſorrowed. Secondly, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh here of inward repentance, it is euident: becauſe 1. he ſaith, he ſhall bewaile: that is, becauſe they haue not mourned for themſelues, he will: as Ambroſe in the like caſe; Si Saul defleſſet peccata: If Saul had mourned for his ſinne, Samuel had not wept: *lib.*5.in Luc. 2. And it was in the Apoſtles power to haue inflicted an outward puniſhment, as he did vpon the inceſtuous young man: but to cauſe them to repent, was not in his power: the Apoſtle then would not haue complained of that, which was in his power to haue enioyned them. 3. And he ſaith, I ſhall bewaile many: There was a great multitude of them, in which caſe no ſuch penance could be inflicted, the diſeaſe being ſo generall; and thus Auguſtine expoundeth this place: Cum idem morbus plurimos occuparit, nihil reſtat præter gemitum: When as the ſame diſeaſe hath occupied many, there remayneth nothing but mourning: the Apoſtle doth not now bid them not to eat meat with ſuch, as he gaue a charge concerning the yong man, &c. *lib.*3.*cont.Parmen.cap.*3. So that in Auguſtines iudgement no ſuch externall penance is here ſignified; a great part of the flocke being with this diſeaſe inuaded.

The Proteſtants.

THat this word (μετανόια) vſed in the new Teſtament, is more fitly tranſlated repentance, to ſignifie a change of the minde, then by them, penance, to betoken ſome outward penall ſatisfactorie act, thus it is proued.

*Argum.*1. The Greeke word euery where vſed, is μετανόια, which ſignifieth as Laurentius Valla noteth, emendationem mentis, the change or amendment of the minde; and no ſuch outward ſatisfactorie Penance as they pretend. Wherefore it is more fitly engliſhed, Repentance. And although the Latine word Pœnitentia, doe not properly expreſſe the Greeke word, to the which reſipiſcere, and reſipiſcentia, repentance and to repent doe better anſwere: yet agere pœnitentiam, in Latine, is not to doe penance, as the Rhemiſts tranſlate it, but is all one, as to ſay, repent: yea, and ſo the Rhemiſts themſelues reade, be penitent, Mark.1.15. and not, doe penance. And Act.11.18. they tranſlate, pœnitentiam, repentance.

*Argum.*2. Matth.3,2. Iohn Baptiſt preached and ſaid, repent, &c. not, as the Rhemiſts tranſlate, do penance: that inward repentance is here ſignified, it appeareth by theſe reaſons 1. Iohn is ſaid To preach the Baptiſme of repentance for remiſſion of ſinnes: Luk. 3.3. That which hee preached, the people practiſed: but we reade not of any outward penall workes they did, but onely of contrition and confeſſion for their ſinnes, Matth.3.6. 2. Againe, Baptiſme is in the name of Chriſt: Penance, is a worke of man, whereby ſatisfaction is made vnto God, as they teach: how then can it be the baptiſme of penance? for Chriſt to ſatisfie, and man to ſatisfie, are two contrary thinges. 3. Iohn alſo ſaith, Bring forth fruites of repentance, worthie or meet for repentance: outward penall acts then are the fruits of repentance, they are not repentance it ſelfe.

*Argum.*3. Act.2.38. Repent and be baptized, not do penance and be baptized: for 1. they were immediatly the ſame day baptized, verſ.41. What time was there here for any doing of penance? 2. And ſeeing you make penance a Sacrament, how could they do penance, before they had receiued Baptiſme, the firſt Sacrament? 3. Thus their owne gloſſe expoundeth, *cauſ.*33.*diſtinct.*1. *de pœnit.c.*87.gloſſ. Petrus legitur dixiſſe, &c. Peter ſaith in the Actes, do penance, &c. Quod de interiori, &c. Which is vnderſtood of the inward, not outward penance: ſo the ſame gloſſe *c.*34. Conuerſio eſt cordis verſio: Conuerſion is the verſion or turning of the heart.

Auguſtine thus taketh this worde pœnitentia, Rectè pœnitens quicquid ſordium contraxit, oportet vt abluat ſaltem mentis lachrymis: The true penitent man muſt at the leaſt waſh away his ſinnes with the teares of the minde. If then repentance be in the ſoule, what is become of this outward ſatiſfactorie penance?

De pœnitentia cap. 9.

*Colonienſ.part.*7.*cap.*31. Pœnitentia tum rectè prædicatur, cum arguuntur ſcelera ac flagitia per verbum Dei, & incutitur populo timor iræ, indignationiſque, ac iuſti iudicij Dei: Then Penance or Repentance is rightly preached, when mens ſinnes are reproued by the word of God, and a feare of Gods wrath and iuſt iudgement is ſtriken into the people. This Councell calleth that Penance, when the people begin inwardly to feele Gods wrath, and ſo lament for their ſinnes: they ſpeake of no ſuch outward ſatisfactorie Penance.

THE SECOND QVESTION, WHETHER there be any Sacrament of Penance.

The Papiſts.

43.Error. CHriſt (they ſay) inſtituted the Sacrament of Penance, when he breathed vpon his Apoſtles after his reſurrection, and ſayd vnto them: Receiue ye the holy Ghoſt: whoſe ſinnes ye remit, they are remitted: whoſe ſinnes ye retaine, they are retained, Iohn 20.22. The facultie of the Prieſthood conſiſting in remitting of ſinnes, is here beſtowed vpon the Apoſtles, Rhemiſt. annot. Ioh. 20 ſect. 5. Hereupon they are bolde to conclude, that Penance is truely and properly a Sacrament, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 14. can. 1.

Bellarmine addeth further, that here is externum ſymbolum, an externall ſenſible ſigne, the words of abſolution, and a promiſe of grace, namely, remiſſion of ſinnes: Ergo, a Sacrament of Penance: Lib. 1. de pœnitentia. cap. 10.

Anſw. Firſt, if the power of remiſſion of ſinnes were here firſt inſtituted, how could the Apoſtles baptize or miniſter the Lords ſupper before, without power to remit ſinnes to the penitent? Chriſt therefore in this place doth but renew and confirme the authoritie of their Apoſtleſhip, which was graunted to them before, Matth. 18.18.

Neither is there here any externall viſible ſigne to make a Sacrament, as euen now ſhall bee ſeene: and as for the promiſe of remiſſion of ſinnes, it is not here annexed to any externall ſigne: but generally made to the Apoſtles to be executed as well without, as with a Sacrament: as the Councell of Cabilon ſaith: Deus ſalutis & ſanitatis author plerunque hanc præbet ſuæ potentiæ inuiſibili adminiſtratione, plerunque medicorum operatione: God the author of ſaluation ſometime giueth forgiuenes of ſinnes by his inuiſible power, ſometime by the working of his Miniſters, our Phiſitions. Can. 33.

Secondly, this power here giuen, is principally exerciſed by preaching of the word of God, and denouncing publikely or priuately the promiſes of God, for remiſſion of ſinnes to the penitent, or the threates and iudgement of God, in binding the ſinnes of the obſtinate and impenitent: So Luke 20.24. Chriſt commaundeth his Apoſtles to preach repentance and remiſſion of ſinnes in his name.

Thirdly, we confeſſe alſo a iudiciarie power of the keyes, in binding and looſing, which is exerciſed in eccleſiaſticall diſcipline, in puniſhing and abſoluing according to the word of God: as the inceſtuous perſon was bound, when he was deliuered vp to Sathan, 1. Cor. 5.5. he was looſed againe, when he was reſtored to the Church, 2. Cor. 2.7. But neither this nor the other was commended to the Church as a Sacrament.

Argum. 2. Bellarmine affirmeth, the Montaniſts and Nouatians were the firſt, that denied penance to be a Sacrament; for they did not, as ſome thinke, denie forgiueneſſe before God to thoſe that fell, but onely penance and reconciliation in the Church, Bellarmine cap. 9.

Anſw. As Bellarmine is to be truſted in this, ſo let him be credited in the reſt: but in this place he hath deuiſed a notable forgerie: firſt, thoſe forenamed heretikes did not onely exclude thoſe that fell in time of perſecution from reconciliation to the Church by penance, but euen depriued them of all hope of remiſſion of ſinnes before God. Cyprian deſerueth rather to be credited herein, than this Sophiſter: lib. 3. epiſt. 23. Puto his indulgentiam Domini non defuturam &c. I do thinke that mercie with God will not be wanting to thoſe, who once ſtood in the battell, though they afterward fell: thus he pleadeth againſt the Nouatians, in the behalfe of thoſe, that were fallen. And Ambroſe likewiſe, lib. de pœnitent. lib. 1. c. 9. thus witneſſeth, alledging theſe words of our Sauiour: Euery one that beleeueth in him, ſhall not periſh, but haue life euerlaſting: if thou deſireſt to call againe any that is fallen, doeſt thou exhort him to beleeue, or not to beleeue? ſurely to beleeue: hee then that hath faith, hath eternall life, he that hath life; is not excluded from forgiueneſſe. Theſe fathers are euident witneſſes, that the Nouatians did ſhut out grieuous ſinners from forgiueneſſe before God: and thus this Cauiller is taken in a notorious lie.

Secondly, it is one thing to take away penance altogether, another to denie it to be a Sacrament: the firſt theſe heretikes were guiltie of, the ſecond we affirme, but not the firſt.

Thirdly, if to denie penance be all one, as to denie it to be a Sacrament, then the fathers are further off (then we) from making it a Sacrament; for they did not graunt publike penance twice: Auguſtine epiſtol. 54. Pœnitentia in eccleſia non iteratur: Penance or publike repentance is not iterated in the Church: but we are not ſo ſtrict, but that to the truely penitent, though they haue fallen againe, we admit a ſecond reconciliation to the Church.

Argum. 3. Bellarmine, to proue penance a Sacrament, alledgeth the teſtimonie of the fathers: he produceth the witneſſe of tenne of them: Tertullian, Cyprian, Ambroſe, Hierome, Auguſtine, with others: and yet not one of them affirmeth penance a Sacrament: but ſome do call it Aliud

Lauacrum, another Lauer, and that it doth imitate Baptiſme, Medicinam pœnitentiæ, the Medicine of penitencie, and ſuch like, but none of them calleth it a Sacrament: but onely one Victor Cartennenſ. who is brought forth in the eleuenth place, but he is not ancient enough to be credited for this matter, nor of weight to ſway againſt the reſt.

The Proteſtants.

TRue repentance we do acknowledge, which is a dying to ſinne, and a walking in newneſſe of life, Rom.6.4. But a Sacrament of repentance we finde none in Scripture, and therefore we deny it.

*Argum.*1. In euery Sacrament there is an externall ſenſible element, as Water in Baptiſme, Bread and Wine in the Lords Supper: but there is none in their penance: Ergo, no Sacrament.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the words of abſolution and confeſſion, are the outward ſignes in penance: it is not neceſſarie it ſhould be a viſible ſigne: it is a ſenſible ſigne being audible, *cap.*11.

*Anſw.*1. There muſt be the word beſide the element: as Auguſtine ſaith, Accedat verbum ad elementum: Let the word be ioyned to the element; and it maketh a Sacrament: the word it ſelfe cannot be the element: for the ſame thing cannot both ſanctifie and be ſanctified. And if the Audible word be the element, by this reaſon the preaching of the word alſo ſhall be a Sacrament.

Bellarmine replieth. 1. That whether the outward ſigne be viſible, or audible, it skilleth not, ſo it be apt to expreſſe the ſpiritual effect: as the ſigne in penance is, which conſiſteth in the words of the Prieſt abſoluing, and the confeſſion of the penitent partie: and S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh onely of the Sacrament of Baptiſme, when he ſaith, *Let the word be ioyned to the element, &c. Bellarm. c.*11.reſp.ad 7.argum.Kemnitij.

Anſw. If 1. an audible ſigne ſufficed, what needeth water in Baptiſme? for there the Miniſter ſaith, I baptize thee, as in the other, I abſolue thee. 2. The Apoſtle ſaith, Euery thing is ſanctified by the word and prayer, 1.Tim.4.5. If the word do ſanctifie, then is it not the thing ſanctified. 3. It cannot be ſhewed, that any of the Sacraments of the law, which did reſemble ours, had any ſuch audible ſigne. 4. Auguſtine, though in that place, ſpeaketh chiefely of Baptiſme, yet elſewhere ſheweth this to be the generall condition of all Sacraments, to haue a viſible ſigne: as ſpeaking of the anointing of Aaron: Quod in genere viſibilium ſignaculorum ſacroſanctum eſt, ſicut ipſe Baptiſmus, &c. Which in the kind of viſible ſignes is holy, as Baptiſme is: So then he accounteth all holy ſignes, viſible, *cont.Petilian.lib.*2.*c.*104.

Likewiſe, *lib.*3.*de doctrin.Chriſtian.c.*7. Deus nobis ſigna pauca pro multis dedit, factu facilia, &c. God hath giuen vs few ſignes for many, eaſie to be done, excellent in ſignification, moſt chaſt in obſeruation, ſuch as is Baptiſme & the celebration of the bodie and blood of the Lord: the ſignes of the Sacraments are eaſie to be done, not eaſie to be ſaid: and as they are in Baptiſme and the Euchariſt, but there they are viſible.

*Argum.*2. There was repentance and abſolution of ſinnes both, in the old Teſtament: for both Dauid confeſſed and was ſorie for his ſinne, and the Prophet Nathan pronounced forgiueneſſe from God, 2.Sam.12.13. So likewiſe Iohn preached repentance for remiſſion of ſinnes, and the people came and confeſſed their ſinnes: here were all things neceſſarie for true repentance, yet was it no Sacrament all this while, as they themſelues confeſſe, which they hold to be inſtituted after Chriſts reſurrection, *Trident.Concil.ſeſſ.*14.*cap.*1. Why then ſhould it be rather a Sacrament now, then before?

Bellarmine anſwereth. 1. That the power of remitting ſinnes was not giuen to any in the olde law: And that Nathan did not remit vnto Dauid his ſinnes, but onely ſhew, that God had remitted them: And if Nathan did abſolue Dauid, it was but one ſingular example, which maketh no law.

Contra. 1. If Nathan did declare vnto Dauid, that God had forgiuen him, it was ſufficient: for the Apoſtles themſelues had no further power, then to declare on Gods behalfe remiſſion of ſins to the penitent, and to ſhew the way how they ſhall be forgiuen. Synod.Cabilonenſ.ſub Carolo 33. Confeſſio, quæ Deo fit, purgat peccata, quæ ſacerdoti fit, docet, qualiter ipſa purgentur peccata: The confeſſion which is made to God, purgeth ſinne, that which is made to the Prieſt, ſheweth how ſinne ſhould be purged. So the people being pricked in heart at the Sermon of S. Peter, cryied, ſaying, Men and brethren, what ſhall wee do? Act.2.37. then Peter himſelfe abſolueth them not, but onely ſheweth what courſe they ſhould take to haue their ſinnes forgiuen. 2. The pronouncing remiſſion of ſinnes, is no extraordinarie thing in the old Teſtament, Iſay 1.18. Though your ſinnes were as crimſon, Chap.6.7. thy ſinne ſhall be purged: and more plainly, Ezech.18.22. Hoſh.14.3. Take vnto you words. And be it that Nathan did it but once, yet haue we once in the old Teſtament abſolution of ſinnes, which the Ieſuite denyeth.

Bellarmin. 2. That Penance, which Iohn Baptiſt and our Sauiour Chriſt preached, was no Sacrament, becauſe the words of abſolution were wanting, in Iohns penance; and confeſſion, in that which Chriſt preached: *lib.*1.*de pœnitent.cap.*11.

*Cont.*1. The people confeſſed their ſinnes before Iohn, this they willingly grant: it is manifeſt alſo that he declared to them remiſſion of ſinnes, for he preached the Baptiſme of repentance to the remiſſion of ſinnes, Luke 3.3. And to what ende ſhould, or would the people haue confeſſed their ſinnes, if they had not expected forgiueneſſe of the ſame at Iohns hands? 2. Concerning the repentance which our Sauiour preached, there was both the words of abſolution, Luke 7.48. Thy ſinnes are forgiuen thee; and the womans abundant teares, therewith waſhing Chriſts feet, ſtood for confeſſion: and yet more planely, Luke 19. Zacheus confeſſeth, verſ.8. Chriſt abſolueth, verſ.9. This day is ſaluation come to thy houſe. Here therefore was as much a Sacrament of penance, as was after miniſtred by the Apoſtles.

*Argum.*3. Act.26.20. S.Paul hauing ſet downe the ſumme of repentance: To repent, to turne to God, and to do workes worthie of repentance: afterward teſtifieth thus, verſ.22. Saying none other things, then Moſes & the Prophets did ſay ſhould come: Paul preacheth no other repentance, then the Prophets; but they preached no Sacrament of repentance, which they themſelues confeſſe: Ergo.

Bellarmine. 1. Paul doth not recite the ſumme of the doctrine of penance, but it is an exhortation onely to penance. 2. And hee ſpeaketh of Penance before Baptiſme, which is no Sacrament. 3. And the things which the Apoſtle ſaith agreeable to the Prophets, are not concerning penance, but as touching the paſſion, and reſurrection of Chriſt, as it followeth, verſ.23. reſp.ad 4.argum.Kemnitij.

Anſ. Firſt, 1. the ſumme of the doctrine of repentance, is to turne in heart to God, and to bring forth good fruits: as Auguſtine; Fructus eſt dignus pœnitentiæ tranſacta flere peccata, et eadem iterum non agere: it is a worthie fruit of repentance, to lament ſinnes paſt, and not to do the ſame againe: *Serm.de tempor.*66. This ſumme of the doctrine of repentance, the Apoſtle here ſetteth downe, not 2. by way of exhortation onely, but he ſaith he ſhewed, Annunciauit, he preached or declared it vnto them, by way of inſtruction. Secondly, there is one and the ſame kind of repentance, both before and after Baptiſme, as followeth in the next argument. Thirdly, not the preaching only of Chriſts ſuffring is the doctrine agreeable to the Prophets, but of remiſſion of ſinnes, in his name, and ſo conſequently of repentance, as S. Peter ſheweth, Act.10.43. To him all the Prophets witneſſe, that through his name all that beleeue ſhall haue remiſſion of ſinnes.

*Argum.*4. There is one and the ſame kind of repentance before Baptiſme and after: but the firſt is not a Sacrament, as they confeſſe: Ergo, no more is the latter.

Bellarmine, Penance after Baptiſme requireth particular confeſſion of ſinnes and laborious workes, ſo doth not penance before Baptiſme. *Bellarm.c.*11.

Anſw. Firſt, particular confeſſion is not requiſite at all, as afterward ſhall be ſhewed: but both confeſſion, and bringing forth of good fruite are neceſſarie in repentance before Baptiſme, as may appeare, Matth.3.6. they confeſſed their ſinnes. verſ.8. Bring forth fruites, &c. Secondly, Auguſtine ſetteth forth Zachæus as an example of true repentance, *ſerm.*116.de tempore: who both confeſſed his ſinnes and made reſtitution, Luke 19.8. being not yet baptized.

Serm.de Baptiſme ad Infantes.

Auguſtine thus writeth, Sacramentum ideò dicitur, quia aliud videtur, aliud intelligitur: It is called a Sacrament, becauſe one thing is ſeene, another vnderſtood. And then he ſaith, Quid tale aut ipſi vident, aut alijs queunt oſtendere in eo quod ſacramentum pœnitentiæ vocant: But neither do they ſee, or can ſhew to others, any ſuch viſible ſigne in that which they call the Sacrament of repentance. Here Auguſtine denieth repentance to be a Sacrament, becauſe it hath no viſible ſigne.

Bellarmine anſwereth here moſt abſurdly, that Auguſtine by a viſible ſigne vnderſtandeth, that which is ſenſible to any of the ſenſes, though it be to the hearing, *cap.*11.reſp.ad 3.argum. Caluini. Thus that which is onely heard, ſhall be ſaid to be viſible, which is moſt abſurd, and needeth no other confutation.

The Maſter of the Sentences propoundeth 2. reaſons againſt the Sacrament of penance, which require a further anſwere: firſt, if outward penance be a Sacrament, then it would follow, that, Non omne Sacramentũ euangelicum id efficit, quod figurat: That euery Sacrament of the Goſpel doth not effect that, which it figureth: but inward repentance doth effect the outward, not contrariwiſe: The anſwere there is this, that the propoſition is true onely of thoſe Sacraments, that were inſtituted in the Goſpell, but Penance and Matrimonie had their beginning before: but ſeeing theſe new Sophiſters make Penance a Sacrament of the Goſpell, they muſt find out another anſwere. *Lambard lib.*4.*diſt.*22.c.

The other reaſon obiected is this; if externall Penance be a Sacrament, it will follow, that res ſacramenti, the ſacramentall thing or worke ſhould goe before the Sacrament, as inward repentance is the ſacramentall thing, and goeth before outward penance: the Maſter ſaith this may well be ſo, but we ſee not how; it would haue a better anſwere, I would haue them demur further vpon it.

This trueth alſo is ſealed: Agnes Snoth burned for denying the Sacrament of penance: Foxe pag.1859.

THE

THE THIRD QVESTION, WHETHER THERE BE any other Sacrament of repentance, beſide Baptiſme.

The Papiſts.

44.Error.

Baptiſme ſerueth onely, they ſay, for remiſſion of ſinnes done before : for ſinnes committed after Baptiſme, the Sacrament of Penance, which is a diſtinct Sacrament from Baptiſme, is appointed for a remedie : and therefore is fitly called, The ſecond table of refuge after ſhipwracke : Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 14. *can.*2.

Secunda tabula poſt naufragium.

Argum. 1. Saint Iohn ſaith, If we confeſſe our ſinnes, hee is faithfull to forgiue vs, 1.Epiſt.1.9. he ſaith not, that by the memorie of Baptiſme, but by confeſſion, which is a part of penance, our ſinnes are forgiuen, *Bellarm.cap.*13.

Anſw. Firſt, wee ſay not, that by the bare memorie or remembrance of Baptiſme, ſinnes after committed are done away : but that the ſacramentall force of Baptiſme doth extend itſelfe to our whole life, that is, to bee a ſeale vnto vs of remiſſion of all our ſinnes in the blood of Chriſt. Secondly, the confeſſion of our ſinnes is not a taking away of the force of Baptiſme, but a more effectuall applying thereof, as the people which were baptized by Iohn confeſſed alſo their ſins. Thirdly, it is no good argument, wee muſt confeſſe our ſinnes after Baptiſme : Ergo, Penance is another Sacrament beſide Baptiſme : for confeſſion of ſinnes is a fruite of the Sacrament of Baptiſme.

*Argum.*2. In the old law Circumciſion was not appointed as a remedie for ſinnes committed afterward, but they had ſacrifices and other expiations, &c. ſo in the new Teſtament Baptiſme is not appointed to purge ſinne after Baptiſme, but we haue the ſacrifice of the new Teſtament, and abſolution, &c. *Bellarm.cap.*13.

Anſw. Firſt, the force and efficacie of Circumciſion was ſeene in the reformation of the whole life : why elſe doth Stephen thus charge the Iewes, Act.7.51. that they were of vncircumciſed hearts and eares? ſignifying thereby, that they did not expreſſe the force and vertue of their firſt circumciſion in the renuing of their hearts, reforming of their eares : if then to circumciſe the eares, be an effect of circumciſion, but infants cannot be circumciſed, becauſe they neither heare, nor vnderſtand; then it followeth, that the effect of circumciſion was not limited onely to that time, but was to bee exerciſed and applied thorough the whole life. Againe, Circumciſion being the ſeale of the righteouſnes of faith, Rom.4.11. and faith being the life of the ſoule, Rom.1.17. it followeth that the whole righteouſnes and ſpirituall life of man, not the beginning onely was then ſealed in Circumciſion, and now in Baptiſme.

Secondly, as then they had ſacrifices and Sacraments, not to beget a new faith, or to obtaine new remiſſion of ſinnes, but to confirme them in their firſt faith, and to applie the remiſſion of ſins ſealed in Circumciſion : ſo now beſide Baptiſme we haue the Euchariſt, no ſacrifice, but a Sacrament, to cheriſh and reuiue in vs our firſt life in Baptiſme: like as food doth not giue a new life to the bodie, but onely ſuſtaineth the firſt life receiued in the birth, &c.

*Argum.*3. The Apoſtle ſaith, Hebr.6.6. that they which haue been once lightened, (that is 1. baptized) if they fall away ſhould be renewed by penance : they cannot bee renewed againe by that penance, which is by Baptiſme : Ergo, by another 2. penance they may; vnleſſe 3. ye will ſay that the Apoſtle excludeth ſuch as fall after Baptiſme altogether from Penance, which was the hereſie of the Nouatians, Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, to be lightened is not to bee baptized : the Apoſtle addeth further, verſ.5. They that haue taſted of the good word of God : but infants haue no taſte of the word; therefore they are not illuminate in Baptiſme. Secondly, if by penance you vnderſtand Baptiſme, then you haue made a good reaſon for vs, that hold no other Sacrament of Penance but Baptiſme. Thirdly, S.Paul ſpeaketh not of euery falling after Baptiſme, but of manifeſt apoſtaſie, and vtter renouncing of the grace receiued, for whō there was no more hope at al: which was not the error of the Nouatians, that denied reconciliation to thoſe that fell of infirmitie: but the Apoſtles owne poſition, Heb.10. verſ.26. That there remaineth no more ſacrifice for ſinne at all for thoſe, which after the knowledge of the truth ſinne willingly, that is, obſtinately and with a malicious and peruerſe minde, as the Apoſtle expoundeth himſelfe, verſ.29. They tread vnder foote the Sonne of God, &c. and deſpite the ſpirit of grace : of ſuch the Apoſtle ſpeaketh in this place, that they doe crucifie to themſelues the Sonne of God. Fourthly, if your expoſition be admitted, you haue gained nothing but this, that there is repentance after Baptiſme, which you call penance, and this we denie not : but any other Sacrament of repentance, we acknowledge not, which you ſhould haue proued.

The Proteſtants.

We acknowledge no other Sacrament of repentance, but Baptiſme.

*Arg.*1. The Scripture ſo calleth it, The baptiſme of repentance for remiſſion of ſins, Mar.1.4.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the baptiſme of Iohn was called the baptiſme of repentance, not the baptiſme of Chriſt, *cap.*14.

Anſ. 1. We haue proued before Contro.12.queſt.7. that the baptiſme of Iohn, and of our Sauiour Chriſt was all one, and therefore this diſtinction faileth. 2. That Chriſts baptiſme was a baptiſme of repentance, S. Paul ſheweth Rom.6.4. We are buried by baptiſme into his death, &c. that we ſhould walke in newnes of life. Chriſts baptiſme then teacheth vs to dye vnto ſinne, and to riſe vp to newnes of life: but this is repentance, Hebr.6.1. Repentance from dead workes: Ergo, Chriſts baptiſme preacheth repentance.

De fide ad Petrum cap.29.

So Auguſtine calleth Baptiſme, Sacramentum fidei, & pœnitentiæ, the Sacrament of faith, and repentance: what need we then ſeeke for a new Sacrament of repentance, which cannot any where be found in Scripture?

Bellarm. Firſt, Auguſtine calleth Baptiſme the Sacrament of faith, and Penance which goeth before Baptiſme, not of that, which followeth after. Secondly, Iohns Baptiſme is called the Baptiſme of repentance to remiſſion of ſinnes, not that it gaue remiſſion of ſinnes, but it wrought repentance, and repentance remiſſion of ſinnes: but Chriſts baptiſme worketh not repentance, but repentance goeth before, *cap.*14.*reſp.ad argum.*3.

Anſw. Firſt, How 1. can baptiſme be the Sacrament of faith and Penance before going, ſeeing children, that haue baptiſme, haue as yet neither faith nor repentance? 2. And you contradict your ſelues: for you hold Penance before Baptiſme to be no Sacrament, and yet you ſay that Auguſtine calleth Baptiſme the Sacrament of Penance before going. Secondly, 1. Repentance went before Iohns baptiſme: for they confeſſed their ſinnes before they were baptized, Matth.3.6. but without repentance, there can be no confeſſion. 2. And that Iohns baptiſme ſealed remiſſion of ſins vnto them, it is euident, becauſe they did thereby eſcape the wrath to come, Luk.3.7. But Gods iudgements cannot be auoided, where ſinne is not firſt remitted.

*Argum.*2. If baptiſme and the vertue thereof cannot bee aboliſhed by ſinne, then there is no neede of another Sacrament of repentance: but the firſt is true, Ergo the ſecond.

Bellarmine. The grace of regeneration had in Baptiſme, may afterward be loſt and caſt out by ſinne.

Anſw. Firſt, as touching the grace of election, whereby infants are ſaued in Baptiſme, being taken away in their infancie, it is diuelliſh doctrine to ſay it may be loſt: for whom Chriſt loueth, he loueth to the end, Ioh.13.1. Secondly, the grace of regeneration, which is not conferred in Baptiſme, but onely ſealed, and afterward by the worke of the ſpirit effected in the hearts of the faithfull, cannot be loſt where once it is wrought: for the gifts and calling of God are without repentance, Rom.11.2. And your owne Canons confirme the ſame: Diuina clementia dimiſſa peccata vlterius redire in vltionem non patitur: The diuine clemencie doth not ſuffer ſinnes once remitted to returne againe vnto puniſhment, *Gelaſius cauſ.*33.*qu.*3.*diſtinct.*4.*c.*24.

*Argum.*3. Baptiſme is of no leſſe force and efficacie, than circumciſion: but that was a durable and permanent Sacrament, effectuall through the whole life, being the ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of faith, Rom.4.11. But 1. faith ſanctifieth both the firſt and latter repentance: For without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, Hebr.11.6. Ergo, euen repentance following depended as then vpon circumciſion, ſo now vpon Baptiſme. 2. And if Baptiſme be the ſeale of righteouſnes; but without finall and continuall repentance there is no righteouſnes, it is therefore the ſeale and Sacrament of all and euery repentance.

*Decret.par.*2.*cauſ.*23.*qu.*1.*c.*40. in the title thus: In extremo poſitus etiam ab hæretico pœnitentiam accipere valet: At the point of death a man may receiue penance of an heretike. And in the Canon it ſelfe: Sine ſancti baptiſmi ſacramento: Without the holie Sacrament of Baptiſme he would not goe out of his life. Heere Baptiſme is interpreted to bee the ſame thing, that is called before Penance.

Synod Colonienſ. Docendus eſt populus, quod in baptiſmo aboleatur vetus homo, remiſſo omni peccato, atque nouus exoriatur, &c. The people muſt bee taught, that in Baptiſme the old man is aboliſhed, all ſinne being taken away, and the new man beginneth. But to put off the old man with his works, Coloſſ.3.9. is nothing elſe but repentance, which is from dead workes: Ergo, Baptiſme is the Sacrament of repentance.

THE FOVRTH QVESTION, OF THE ESSENtiall parts of penance.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE MATTER and forme of popiſh penance.

The Papiſts.

45.Error. THe forme of this Sacrament, ſay they, conſiſteth in the words of abſolution, pronounced by the Miniſter, the matter thereof is the contrition, confeſſion, and ſatisfaction of the partie penitent, Concil. Tridentin. ſeſſ. 14. cap. 3. Bellar. lib. 1. cap. 15.

Arg. Bellarmine here hath no argument out of Scripture: and as for the popiſh Councels of Florence and Trent alleaged by him, we hold them not worth the anſwering. He only obtrudeth this reaſon: A ſenſible ſigne of iuſtifying grace inſtituted of God is a part of the Sacrament: but the action of the penitent partie, weeping, and confeſſing his ſinnes, is a ſenſible ſigne that hee is iuſtified: Ergo. Bellarm. cap. 14.

Anſw. Firſt, a ſenſible ſigne ſufficeth not, it muſt be a viſible element, that is the matter of the Sacrament, as water in Baptiſme, bread and wine in the Euchariſt: but the action of the penitent is no viſible element. 2. Againe, no humane action, ſuch as this of the penitent is, can bee a part of a diuine Sacrament. Thirdly, it is no ſigne of grace, for an hypocrite may doe all this, as Ahab did, and not be iuſtified.

The Proteſtants.

NEither is their penance a Sacrament, neither can theſe be parts of a Sacrament.

Argum. 1. In euery Sacrament there are two things required: res terrena, and actio externa, the earthly thing or element, as is water in Baptiſme; and the externall action: neither doth the element alone, nor the action alone make a Sacrament: as in Baptiſme there is both water, which is the matter; and the waſhing, that is the action. Wherefore ſeeing in their penance there is nothing but the action of the Miniſter, and the action of the receiuer, it can bee no Sacrament.

Argum. 2. The parts of euery Sacrament, as the forme, the matter, muſt be inſtituted of Chriſt: but this are they not able to ſhew for the forme and matter of penance, namely, the inſtitution of Chriſt: Ergo, it is no Sacrament. For in theſe words of our Sauiour Chriſt, Whoſe ſinnes ye remit, &c. which is the onely place of inſtitution, which they are able to alleage for this their deuiſed Sacrament, though wee ſhould graunt, that the wordes of abſolution may bee picked out of this place, which they ſay containe the forme; yet there is no mention of contrition, confeſſion, ſatisfaction in the partie abſolued, wherein conſiſteth the matter. If Bellarmine anſwere, as elſewhere he ſaith, that theſe alſo may be gathered out of this place, becauſe ſinnes muſt not be forgiuen, but to thoſe that confeſſe them; Bellarm. cap. 10. We replie againe: 1. That in the inſtitution of a Sacrament there muſt be expreſſe mention of the materiall parts thereof, as it was in the inſtitution of Baptiſme, and the Lords Supper. 2. By the ſame reaſon we will conclude againſt the Ieſuite, that our Sauiour Chriſt abſolued not, but vpon confeſſion going before: for it is not like that he would forgiue ſinnes, where ſinnes were not acknowledged: and thus there being confeſſion and abſolution in the penance that Chriſt preached, it muſt needes bee a Sacrament after their definition, which Bellarmine inſtantly denieth.

Argum. 3. Some of the principall Schoolemen are of a contrarie iudgement to Bellarmine: one thinketh, namely Gropperus, that the action of the Prieſt is the materiall part of this Sacrament, and not the action of the penitent partie, Enchirid. Colon. Other, as Scotus, in 4. ſentent. diſtinct. 14. qu. 4. and Ockam, Ioannes Maior doe thinke, that the abſolution of the Prieſt is the onely eſſentiall part of penance. They reaſon thus:

Firſt, that is a Sacrament which is conferred by the Miniſter: but onely abſolution is conferred by the Miniſter, not the confeſſion of the penitent: Ergo.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the penitent partie is cooperator miniſtri, is the helper of the Miniſter.

Contra. 1. Yet dare he not ſay he is the Miniſter: 2. He may as well ſay, that the people, which eateth and drinketh and communicateth in the Euchariſt, is the Miniſters fellow-worker in the Sacrament.

Secondly, that onely is of the eſſence of the Sacrament, which is cauſe of the Sacramentall effect: but abſolution onely is the cauſe of remiſſion: Ergo, it is onely of the eſſence.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that as a man conſiſteth of two parts, the ſoule, and bodie, yet he vnderſtandeth onely by the ſoule: ſo the Sacrament conſiſting of two parts, may worke onely by one of them.

Contra. Firſt, if the Sacrament haue two parts, and work only by one of them, then is the other ſuperfluous. Secondly, the ſpirit or ſoule of man onely vnderſtandeth formally; but the matter and obiect of the vnderſtanding is deliuered by the outward ſenſes: ſo likewiſe to the ſacramentall work muſt concurre as well the matter, as the forme thereof. Thus the Papiſts diſagree among themſelues, and each doe confute another: which ſheweth that their Sacrament of Penance is but a new deuice, ſeeing they know not themſelues what certainlie to hold.

THE SECOND PART OF THIS QVESTION, OF the three materiall parts of popiſh penance, contrition, confeſſion, ſatisfaction.

The Papiſts.

46. Error. These three (they ſay) are the true and proper parts of penance, contrition, and painfull ſorrow of the heart, confeſſion to the Prieſt, and ſatisfaction to God for our ſinnes, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 14. can. 4. Rhemiſt: Matth. 3. ſect. 2.

. Argum. 1. Contrition is proued, Pſal. 51. 17. A contrite heart is a ſacrifice to God. Confeſſion, Matth. 3. They were baptized in Iordane confeſſing their ſinnes. Satisfaction, Matth. 11. 21. They would haue repented long agoe in ſackcloth and aſhes, Bellarm. cap. 19.

Anſw. Firſt, that godly ſorrow and contrition of the heart, is neceſſarie to true repentance, wee neuer will denie: but that this ſorrow is any ſatisfaction to Gods iuſtice, we abhorre it as a monſtrous blaſphemie. Secondly, Confeſſion and acknowledgement of our ſinnes vnto God; and in ſome caſes, where the conſcience is not ſatisfied, to the Miniſter or ſome other faithfull man, wee doe willingly graunt: but that it is neceſſarie to make generall confeſſion of ſinnes to the prieſt, that place prooueth it not: for Iohn had had ſhriuing worke enough for many yeeres, to heare euery mans particular confeſſion. Thirdly, that ſitting in ſackcloth and aſhes, was no ſatisfaction for ſinne, but an outward ſigne of true ſorrow for ſinne.

Argum. 2. In Dauids repentance, there was contrition: his heart ſmote him, when he had numbred the people, 2. Sam. 24. 10. Confeſſion, I haue ſinned exceedingly. Satisfaction, by his prayer and offring of ſacrifice, &c. In the Publicane, Luk. 18. there was contrition in that he durſt not lift his eyes to heauen: Confeſſion, Lord be mercifull to me a ſinner: Satisfaction, in ſmiting vpon his breaſt, Bellarm. cap. 19.

Anſw. Firſt, contrition we graunt in both theſe, as a preparation to a further repentance, not as any part of ſatisfaction to Gods iuſtice. Secondly, here is alſo confeſsion, but not auricular, by particular enumeration of ſins. Dauid maketh confeſsion but of that one ſin at that time committed, the Publicane confeſſeth in generall, and both confeſſe vnto God; what is this to auricular confeſsion to the Prieſt? Thirdly, Dauid offreth ſacrifice onely 1. as a teſtimonie of his thankfulnes vnto God, not by way of ſatisfaction: 2. and it was a ſmall ſatisfaction in the Publicane for all his notorious ſinnes to ſmite vpon his breaſt: 3. Doe you thinke, that oppreſsion, forgerie, extortion, ſuch as the ſinnes of the Publicanes were, Luk. 19. 8. are of ſo ſmall waight, that they may bee done away with a knocke vpon the breaſt? 4. This ſmiting vpon the breaſt was a ſigne of contrition, no part of any ſatisfaction: And ſo Auguſtine ſaith; Tundere pectus quid aliud eſt, quam arguere, quod latet in pectore, &c. To knocke vpon the breaſt, what is it elſe but to reprooue that, which lieth hid in the breaſt? in Matth. ſerm. 8.

The Proteſtants.

We doe make two parts onely of true repentance, according to the Scriptures, that is, the mortifying of the old man with his workes, by dying vnto ſinne: vnto the which belongeth true ſorrow, and contrition of heart for our ſinnes, 2. Corinth. 7. 11. acknowledgement and confeſsion thereof before God, 2. Sam. 12. 13. and a perfect hatred and deteſtation of ſinne, and indignation with our ſelues for the ſame, 2. Corinth. 7. 11. The other part is the renewing and quickening of the new man in vs, which conſiſteth partly in ſetting our conſciences at peace with God, our ſinnes being forgiuen vs, Rom. 5. 1. and working in vs a zeale, ſtudie, care, and deſire of newnes of life, 2. Cor. 7. 11. Theſe two parts onely we finde in Scripture.

Argum. 1. Iſai. 1. 17. Ceaſe to doe euill: Learne to doe good: wee muſt dye vnto ſinne, and walke in newnes of life, Rom. 6. 4. Put off the old man, put on the new, Coloſſ. 3. 9.

Bellarmine anſwereth, 1. Partes ſunt iuſtitiæ, non pœnitentiæ: Theſe are parts of righteouſnes, not of repentance: namely, to ceaſe to doe euill, and learne to doe good, cap. 20. 2. And againe, cap. 19. propoſ. 4. Penance is onely from dead workes, and all men need not repentance, Luk. 15. 7. but the mortifying of the fleſh, and to bee renewed in the ſpirit, appertaineth to all. 3. Neither can it bee ſhewed any where in Scripture that it is called repentance to decline from euill, and to doe good.

Contra. Firſt,it followeth not, they are parts of iuſtice or righteouſnes, therefore not of repentance: To make ſatisfaction is a part of repentance,by their own confeſſion, yet is it alſo a worke of righteouſnes; as Zachaus,Luk.19.8.reſtoreth what he had wrongfully gotten: And the Apoſtle ſaith,Being made free from ſinne, ye are made the ſeruants of righteouſnes,Rom.6.8. Freedome from ſinne,which is nothing elſe but repentance from dead workes,Hebr.6.1.is the ſeruice of righteouſnes, which is our ſanctification: for here we ſpeake not of our iuſtice before God in Chriſt, but of iuſtice which is wrought in vs.

Secondly,it is an hereticall poſition,that any are ſo iuſt,which neede no repentance: 1. For if they neede no repentance,they ſhould haue no ſinne:and whoſoeuer ſaith he hath no ſinne is a liar, 1.Iohn. 1.8. then it followeth,if we acknowledge our ſins,he is faithfull to forgiue vs our ſinnes.The Apoſtle excludeth not any(no not himſelfe)that haue ſinnes, from confeſſion of ſinnes, which is a part of repentance. 2.Our Sauiour ſpeaketh of ſuch iuſt perſons,as in their owne preſumptuous opinion were ſuch: ſo he ſaith, I came not to call the righteous,but ſinners to repentance, Matth.9.12. Thinke you that any were ſo iuſt, that Chriſt needed not to haue come into the world for their ſakes, as here he ſaith,I came not; then needed he not alſo to haue dyed for them. 3. Againe,heare what was decreed,Concil. Mileuitan.can.8.where Auguſtine was preſent: *Placuit, vt quicunque verba ipſa,&c.*They which hold, that they which ſay thoſe words of the Lordes prayer, forgiue vs,&c. doe rather ſay them in humilitie,than in truth,let them bee accurſed. If euery man truly craueth in the Lords prayer forgiuenes of his ſinnes,then euery man is truly a ſinner,and ſo hath neede of repentance.

Thirdly,it is more boldly than truly, or wiſely ſaid, the Scripture no where doth call it repentance to ceaſe to doe euill,&c. Iſay.58.Is not this faſting,to looſe the bands of wickednes,&c. verſ.7.to deale thy bread to the hungrie? By faſting here is vnderſtood repentance, as verſ.3.Wherefore haue wee faſted,&c. and puniſhed our ſelues? but puniſhment belongeth,euen in their owne ſenſe,to repentance.

*Argum.*2. Remiſſion of ſinnes doth alwaies followe true repentance, Act.3.19. Repent and turne,that your ſinnes may be put away,when the time of refreſhing ſhall come from the preſence of the Lord: but remiſsion of ſins doe not alwaies follow contrition,confeſsion, ſatisfaction: as all theſe three were in Iudas,and yet he hanged himſelfe: therefore theſe three, contrition, confeſsion, ſatisfaction, are not the parts of true repentance.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, Iudas was baptized, and receiued the Euchariſt, and hanged himſelfe,yet were they the right Sacraments. Secondly, Iudas had not true contrition, which alwaies is ioyned with hope, neither did he make particular confeſsion of all his ſinnes, nor yet was ſatiſfaction enioyned him by the Prieſt.

Anſw. Firſt,there is difference betweene the Sacraments and repentance: for the Sacrament is one thing, res ſacramenti, the vertue of the Sacrament another: the firſt may bee receiued to death, or to life: for they that receiue vnworthily, are guiltie of the bodie and blood of Chriſt,1.Corinth.11.27. but the other,is omni homini ad vitam, nulli ad exitium, is to life vnto all, not to deſtruction, *Auguſtin.tract.26.in Ioann.*So is true repentance not vnto death vnto any, but vnto life. Secondly,you make contrition a part of repentance,Non vt in corde ſedem habet: Not as it is in the heart,but as it is manifeſted by ſignes,Bellarm.cap.17.therefore hope is no part of popiſh contrition being in the heart. 2. Iudas alſo confeſſed his ſinne in particular,I haue ſinned in betraying the innocent blood: he made not a particular confeſsion of all,no more did Dauid or the Publicane, alleadged before as examples of repentance. 3. His ſatisfaction was not enioyned by the Prieſt: if he ſhould haue expected their ſentence, they would haue enioyned none at all: and who I pray you enioyned Dauid his ſatisfaction,when he offred ſacrifice to God? or the Publicane,when hee ſmote vpon his breaſt,for theſe (you ſay) were their ſatisfactions?

*Argum.*3. Durand(one of their owne writers) denieth contrition and ſatisfaction to bee parts of penance: the firſt,becauſe contrition is not ſenſible, but euery part of a Sacrament ſhould bee ſenſible. The ſecond,becauſe ſatisfaction in act is not neceſſarie, but it ſufficeth if it bee in vow and deſire, *Durand.in 4.diſtinct.16.qu.*1. Thus we ſee how well they agree together.

Bellarmine thus anſwereth: firſt, contrition is a part of penance, not as it is in the heart, but as it is manifeſted by ſignes. Secondly,penance may be without ſatisfaction: but then it is as it were maimed,and imperfect.

Contra. Firſt,contrition by ſignes may bee in hypocrites, and ſo diſſembled: ſuch as the Prophet ſpeaketh of,to bow themſelues like bulruſhes,Iſay.58.which the Lord denieth to be repentance: Is this a faſt that I haue choſen? &c. They ſhewed their contrition by faſting and humbling themſelues,yet the Lord refuſeth it: wherefore ſuch contrition is no part of true repentance, which is acceptable to God.

Secondly,if penance may bee without ſatisfaction, then is it no part of a Sacrament: for a Sacrament can want none of the materiall parts: take water from Baptiſme,or bread and wine from the Euchariſt,and they are no Sacraments at al. Again, repentance may be perfect without actual ſatisfaction, as was the repentance of the theefe vpon the croſſe. But I need not labour to ſtrengthen or fortifie Durands arguments, it is ſufficient that the truth hath euidence from the aduerſaries thereof.

Likewiſe for the parts of true repentance,their owne Canons doe witneſſe: *Decret.p.2.cauſ.*33. *diſtinct.*1.*de pœnitent.c.*39.Pœnitentia eſt mala præterita plangere, & plangenda iterum non committere: It is repentance to bewaile the ſinnes paſt, and not to commit the ſame againe.

Auguſtine ſaith,Fructus eſt dignus pœnitentia,tranſacta deflere peccata,& ea iterum non agere: This is true repentance, to lament for ſinnes paſt, and not to commit the ſame againe: Though this bee no perfect definition of repentance, yet wee ſee that both confeſſion and ſatisfaction are excluded. Serm.66.

*Colonienſ.part.*7.*cap.*39.Sacerdos mouebit conſitentem,vt quod admiſſum eſt deteſtetur, & ſic deinceps vitam inſtituat,ne in vllum lethale crimen poſtea incidat: The prieſt muſt moue him that confeſſeth, to deteſt that which is committed,and ſo afterward to frame his life, that hee fall into no deadly ſin. Here alſo are theſe two things required to repentance, to hate ſinne, and embrace righteouſneſſe.

This truth alſo is ſealed: Iohn Lambert Martyr, I know none other penance, except it bee renouation of liuing,by caſting away old vice,and taking them to new vertue: *ad artic.*10.*pag.*1106.

AN APPENDIX, WHETHER REpentance goe before faith.

The Papiſts.

47.Error. THeir opinion is,that repentance goeth before iuſtification by faith,and that it is a way rather vnto faith and iuſtification in the remiſſion of ſinnes: *Pœnitentia eſt via ad remiſſionem peccatorum,& prior iuſtificatione,Bellarm.cap.*19.

Argum. Act.2.38. Repent and be baptized in the name of Chriſt for the remiſſion of ſinnes: Remiſſion of ſinnes followeth repentance: Ergo, iuſtification alſo and faith follow repentance. Act.8.22.Repent of this thy wickedneſſe, and pray God, if it be poſſible, the thoughts of thy heart may bee forgiuen thee. Here forgiuenes followeth repentance.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt this place prooueth not, that remiſſion of ſinnes followeth repentance,becauſe Baptiſme was giuen after repentance: for Baptiſme doth not giue remiſſion of ſinnes, but it is a ſeale onely and confirmation of our faith,in the remiſsion of ſinnes. Secondly, neither is remiſsion of ſinnes obtained before God,by the act of our repentance: but wee are alreadie,being once called,iuſtified before God,by the remiſsion of our ſinnes,and imputation of the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt,Rom.8.30.Whom he called,he iuſtified: Iuſtification immediatly followeth our calling: by repentance,and other workes that follow, our calling is made ſure, 2.Pet.1.10. our ſaluation finiſhed,that is,aſſured to our ſelues: Philipp.2.12.Make an end of your ſaluation by feare and trembling. So then feare and trembling which worketh repentance, beginneth not our ſaluation,but onely doth aſſure vs of the ſame. So wee muſt diſtinguiſh, as the Apoſtle ſaith,betweene the beginning of faith and iuſtification before God, and the perfection and aſſurance thereof to our ſelues: faith is firſt whereby wee are iuſtified, and our ſinnes remitted before God, then followeth repentance whereby our hearts are aſſured to our ſelues of this remiſsion.

Thirdly, 1. Saint Peter ſo ſaith to Simon that hypocrite, not that he doubted of remiſsion of ſinnes vpon true repentance, but that hee doubted of Simons true repentance, as it followeth verſ.23.I ſee thou art in the gall of bitternes. 2. Or he ſo ſaith, to ſhew vnto Simon how difficult, or hard a thing remiſsion of ſins was. 3. And though remiſsion of ſinnes be alreadie decreed before God,yet is it not felt in the hart,nor the conſcience aſſured thereof,til after effectual repentance, as Nathan,preſently when Dauid had ſaid, I haue ſinned, ſaith, the Lord alſo hath put away thy ſinnes, 2.Sam.12.13. This notwithſtanding Dauid yet felt not the comfort thereof in his ſoule, for the which he praieth,Pſalm.51.12. therefore when remiſsion of ſinnes is placed after repentance, it ſheweth the aſſurance thereof made vnto our hearts after repentance, not the firſt decree or graunt thereof with God,which goeth before repentance.

*Argum.*1. Iuſtification goeth before ſanctification: for this is the fruit of the other: but repentance is part of our ſanctification,renouation,or regeneration, being called by S.Paul, A walking in newnes of life, Rom.6.4.Ergo, it followeth and commeth after our iuſtification. And ſeeing without faith it is impoſsible to pleaſe God,Hebr.11.6: how ſhould our repentance be acceptable to God,vnleſſe it proceeded of faith? Faith then is initiate and begun in vs before repentance,which we denie not,by true repentance and other fruites of ſanctification,to be daily ſtrengthened and encreaſed.

Argum.2. Bellarmine himſelfe, forgetting belike his owne poſitions, proueth that Faith goeth before repentance, by the example of the Niniuites, Ion.3.5: They beleeued God and proclaymed a faſt: Whereupon he concludeth, that Faith is the cauſe of Repentance. Bellarm. cap. 19. propoſ.2. And he vnderſtandeth iuſtifying faith, propoſ.4. Mortification, fructus fidei iuſtificantis, is the fruite of iuſtifying faith, Ergo, iuſtifying faith goeth before repentance. The Maſter of the Sentences affirmeth the ſame out of S. Auguſtine, Non ſatis ſit, quod doleat, ſed ex fide doleat: Let it not ſuffice, that he is grieued, but let his griefe be of faith, Lib.4. diſtinct.14. a. And Diſtinct.15.c. Immundi ſunt omnes, &c. They are all vncleane, whom faith cleanſeth not, by faith purifying their hearts: Act.15.9. And in the ſame Diſtinction, d. Sine charitate non poteſt eſſe vera pœnitentia: Without charitie there can be no true repentance, and without faith there can be no charitie: Galath.5.6. Faith working by loue.

Epiſtol. 105.

Auguſtine ſayth, No man is iuſtified but by the grace of Ieſus Chriſt: Non ſolum remiſſione peccatorum, ſed priùs ipſius inſpiratione fidei & timoris dei, donec ſanet omnes languores noſtros: Not onely by remiſſion of ſinnes; but firſt, by inſpiring into vs faith and the feare of God, till he haue cured all our maladies. He ſayth (as wee heare) that faith is inſpired before we haue remiſſion of ſinnes and the feare of God, without the which there is no true repentance.

Iulus.1.decret.11. Fides omnes actus hominis præcedere debet: Faith muſt goe before all the workes or doings of man: Ergo, before repentance.

THE FIFT QVESTION, OF CONTRITION: the firſt part of their Penance.

THere are certaine poynts which we doe agree vpon.

1. We grant, that true contrition and ſorrow of the heart is neceſſarie vnto repentance, and that it ſtandeth very well with the libertie of the Goſpell, and is profitable for Chriſtians. 2.Corinth.7.10. Godly ſorrow cauſeth repentance to ſaluation.

2. That true contrition is ioyned both with a full hatred and deteſtation of ſinne committed, 1.Corinth. 11.31. We muſt iudge and condemne our ſelues, as alſo with a full purpoſe to amend our liues, Act. 11.23. This point is handled by Bellarmine againſt other Papiſts, which denied a formall purpoſe of amendment of life to be requiſite in contrition, lib. 2. cap. 6. 7.

3. That true contrition before God is ſufficient, before the abſolution of the miniſter, ſo that the partie haue a purpoſe afterward to be reconciled to the congregation: which point Bellarm. handleth alſo againſt ſome other of his ſect.

Let vs then now ſee what difference of opinion there is betweene vs concerning contrition.

The Papiſts.

48. Error.

1. THey hold that contrition is neyther wholy of mans free will, nor yet wholy of God: but that man by his free will, holpen of God, is able to repent: ſo that he doth only, Deo adiuuante, pœnitere, He is brought to repentance, God only helping and aſſiſting him, Bellarm. de pœnitent lib.2 cap.3.

Argum. Ioel.2. Rent your hearts: Matth.3. Agite pœnitentiam: Repent ye: To what end ſhould God command thoſe things that are not in our owne power: Ergo, contrition is in mans power and free will: Bellarm.cap.2.propoſ.2.

Super Cantic. Serm. 50.

Anſw. Firſt, it is no rare thing in Scripture to finde, that God commandeth vs impoſſible things: as S. Paul ſaith, Rom.8.3. that the precepts of the law are impoſſible: the reaſon thereof is rendred, Galath.3.24. The law was a ſchoolemaſter to bring vs to Chriſt: So God commandeth hard things, that we finding no ſtrength in our ſelues to doe them, we ſhould ſeeke for helpe at his hand: as Bernard ſaith well, Non latuit præceptorem præcepti pondus hominum vires excedere, ſed iudicauit vtile ex hoc ipſo ſuæ illos inſufficientiæ admoneri, &c. Our maſter was not ignorant, that his commandements did exceede our ſtrength, but he thought it good hereby to admoniſh vs of our inſufficiencie. Secondly, another reaſon of theſe precepts, is this: to let vs know, that although the will of man hath of it ſelfe by nature no inclination to that which is good, yet it is otherwiſe then a peece of clay, and God ſpeaketh to men otherwiſe then vnto beaſts, Conſenſus voluntarius nos diſcernit à beſtijs, as Bernard ſaith, Our voluntarie or free conſent doth diſcerne vs from beaſts. So it is in the power of man, velle, to will, that is ſomewhat; but velle bonum, to will that which is good, is of God. Thirdly, though God giue repentance, and all other good gifts, yet he worketh them by meanes, as by the preaching of his word, by precepts, exhortations, and ſuch like: whereby wee are ſtirred vp to ſeeke that at Gods hand, which wee finde not to bee in our ſelues. Fourthly, thoſe places doe as well conclude, that it is wholy in mans power to repent, as in part: for to what end ſhould God command, that which is not wholie and fullie in mans power to performe; as the Ieſuite obiecteth.

Argum.2. Contrition is an acceptable ſacrifice to God, Pſalm.51.17. but that which is coact, not voluntarie,is not acceptable: Ergo,contrition is voluntarie.Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. We deny not but that contrition is a voluntarie and free offering vnto God, as the Prophet ſaith, Pſalm.119.108. Accept the free offerings of my mouth. But as Auguſtine ſaith,Deus ex nolentibus volentes facit: God of nilling maketh vs willing: ſo then it is made a voluntarie ſacrifice,not by the power of mans will, but by the worke of Gods grace.

The Proteſtants.

TRue contrition of heart, as all other good thoughts in vs, as they are good, come onely of God: our cogitations indeed are our owne, but all the goodnes of them is the meere gift of God, Iam.1.17.

*Argum.*1. 1.Tim.2.25.If at any time God will giue thē repentance:Repentance then is the gift of God.And Auguſtine writing vpon theſe very words,ſayth,Quantumlibet præbeat pœnitentiam,niſi ipſe dederit,quis agit pœnitentiam? Although he neuer ſo much giue occaſion of repentance, yet vnleſſe,he beſtow vpon vs the full gift of repentance,no man is able to repent.Thus he plainly diſtinguiſheth betweene præbere pœnitentiam, to offer occaſion to repent: as he proueth out of S.Paul, Rom.2.4.the bountifulnes of God calleth thee to repentance; and dare pœnitentiā,to giue or grant repentance.But if God ſhould only helpe our free will,and work together with vs to repentance, and not do al alone himſelfe,he ſhould rather præbere,then dare pœnitentiam: offer occaſion by ſtirring of vs vp to repentance,then grant vs repentance it ſelfe,which were contrarie to the Apoſtle.

*Argum.*2. The Prophet Dauid ſaith,Create in me a cleane heart,Pſal.51.10. Like as then God in the creation of the world, had no helper, or aſſiſtant, but all was his worke: ſo in the renewing of the heart,to create is onely Gods worke,to inſpire good thoughts,and to make a new heart,is to create, or make a new creature,as S. Paul calleth it, 2.Cor.5.17. Ergo, it is onely and wholy the worke of God: as S. Ambroſe ſaith, Gratia tota repellitur, ſi non tota ſuſcipitur: Grace is wholy refuſed,if it be not wholy receiued: *Epiſtol.*84. Hieroni. Quodcunque in ſuo riuulo fluit ad fontem refert: Whatſoeuer floweth in the riuer muſt be referred to the fountaine. ad Cteſiphont.

Lib. de libera arbitrio. Bernard ſayth: Non partim gratia,partim liberum arbitrium, ſed totum ſingula peragunt, totum hoc, totum illa, ſed vt totum in illo, ſic totum ex illa: Not partly grace, partly free will, but each of them wholy worketh,this wholy,and that wholy; wholy indeede in free will,but wholy of grace: ſo he maketh the will of man onely to be as the paſſiue matter,wherein grace worketh: they worke not both together actiuely.

The Maſter of the ſentences agreeth, *Lib.*4. *diſtinct.*20.a. Opus eſt non hominis, ſed Dei fructifera pœnitentia,inſpirare eam poteſt, quandocunque vult ſua miſericordia: Fruitfull repentance is not the worke of man,but of God,which he can inſpire,when he will,of his mercy.Repentance then proceedeth altogether from the mercie of God.

*Concil.Arauſican.*2.*can.*7. Si quis per naturæ vigorem, bonum aliquod,quod ad ſalutem pertinet vitæ æternæ, cogitare, eligere,&c. If any man ſay that by the ſtrength of nature man can thinke or chuſe any good thing belonging to eternall life, or giue conſent to holeſome preaching, he is deceiued by the ſpirite of hereſie, ſeeing the Lord ſaith, you can doe nothing without me. This Councell leaueth not any ſtrength at all in mans free will.

In defence of this truth dyed Thomas Spicer, Iohn Denie, Edmund Poole, that man hath no free will of himſelfe to doe any good thing,pag.1912. articul.7.

The Papiſts.

49.Error. 2. THey affirme,that contrition,which is ioyned with an inward terror of the minde,and proceedeth from the ſight and conſideration of our ſinnes, doth not appertaine to the lawe, but to the Goſpell. *Bellarm.lib.*2.*c.*2. *propoſ.*3.

*Argum.*1. Chriſt preached repentance, to the which contrition belongeth, Matth.4.17.Repent, for the kingdome of God is at hand: but Chriſt was a Miniſter of the Goſpell, not of the law. Bellarmin.ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, repentance hath part from the law, part from the Goſpell: from the law it hath the ſight of ſinne and terror of minde for the ſame; from the Goſpell it hath hope and comfort, ſpringing of faith in Chriſt: wherefore this reaſon ſheweth not, that repentance in euery parte thereof is of the Goſpell. Secondly, though the law and Goſpell are in nature and propertie diſtinguiſhed, yet they may be ioyned in vſe: ſo Moſes the Miniſter of the law may preach Chriſt, and Chriſt the Miniſter of the Goſpell doth alſo eſtabliſh the law, and by the terrors of the law call men to the knowledge of their ſinne, where repentance beginneth.

*Argum.*2. The law hath no promiſe of grace,contrition hath a promiſe of grace,as Iſay 66.2. To whom will I looke,but to him that is poore and of a contrite ſpirite: Ergo,contrition is not of the law. Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, it is true, that the law hath not in it ſelfe, the promiſe of grace annexed,For grace and trueth commeth by Ieſus Chriſt,Iohn 1.17. Yet by grace the law is made as a readie way and inſtrument to bring vs to Chriſt, in whom we finde grace,and ſo contrition wrought by the terrors of the lawe, doth prepare a way vnto grace. Secondly, contrition, as it is a worke of the lawe, being but yet begun in terror and feare, obtaineth not the promiſe, but being perfited by faith in Chriſt, and in the comforts of the Goſpell, it findeth grace and mercie: as here in the Prophet, to contrition of heart is ioyned poorenes of ſpirit, which is a deniall of our ſelues, and an apprehenſion of Chriſt by faith.

The Proteſtants.

THat the terrors of a contrite heart, and the ſight of ſinne, where contrition beginneth, commeth by the knowledge of the lawe, the Scripture is plaine.

*Argum.*1. Rom.7.7. I knew not ſinne, but by the Lawe, I had not knowne luſt, Vnleſſe the lawe had ſaid thou ſhalt not luſt: therefore by the lawe commeth reuelation of ſinne, which is the beginning of true contrition.

*Argum.*2. S. Paul calleth the lawe, the killing letter, and the miniſterie of condemnation, 2.Cor.3.6,9. But the Goſpell is the miniſtrie of righteouſnes and life: Wherefore contrition, as therein is ſet before vs our damnable ſtate by ſinne, and miniſtreth to vs a ſight of condemnation, is of the law. So likewiſe, Galath.4.3. We are in bondage and feare vnder the law, but by the Goſpell we are made ſons, and ſo receiue the ſpirit of the Sonne: *Ibid.ver.*6. Ergo, the feare, terrors, and as it were bondage of the ſoule, is of the lawe. Ambroſe ſaith, Lex iram operatur, fides gaudium: The lawe worketh wrath, faith bringeth ioy: In 3. ad Roman. Adhoc data lex vt terrori eſſet,&c. Therefore was the lawe giuen to be a terror to men, to prouoke them to good life.

The Papiſts.

3. SOme of the Papiſts affirme, that in Contrition it is not neceſſary to haue a formall, that is, a reſolute and expreſſe purpoſe of newneſſe of life, but that this is alwayes included in the deteſting of ſinne; which implicite or incluſiue purpoſe is ſufficient: So Iohan.Maior.in 4. *ſententiar. diſtinct.*14.*qu.*1. *Veg.lib.*13.*in concil.Trident.c.*13. 50.Error.

Argum. Dauid onely confeſſed his ſinne, ſaying; Lord I haue ſinned: ſo the Publican; Lord be mercifull to me a ſinner: there is no expreſſe purpoſe of amendment of life mentioned. Likewiſe, the thiefe vpon the Croſſe had no ſuch expreſſe purpoſe: Ergo, it is not neceſſarie.

Anſw. Firſt, that Dauid had a full purpoſe of the heart, euen in that inſtant to turne vnto God, it is euident, Pſal.51.13. Then ſhall I teach thy wayes to the wicked: this Pſalme was made by the Prophet, as a teſtimonie of his repentance, for that ſinne, for the which Nathan reproued him: and here he profeſſeth, that he will become a new man.

Secondly, the Publicane finding mercie and departing iuſtified, no doubt had alſo an expreſſe purpoſe in himſelfe for euer to forſake his ſinne, for otherwiſe hee could not haue beene iuſtified, nor found remiſſion of ſinnes: for this is the law and perpetuall rule of forgiueneſſe, Ezech.18.21. If the wicked turne from his ſinnes,&c. and keepe all my ſtatutes: his tranſgreſſions ſhall not be mentioned: to find remiſſion then, theſe two things are required, forſaking of ſinne, and doing that which is right: and this is ſignified in the Publicanes ſmiting vpon his breaſt: as Auguſtine ſaith, Pectora tundamus, non vt ſuper peccata noſtra pauimentum ſolidemus,&c. Let vs knocke vpon our breaſts, not to make a pauement, as it were, and beaten floore vpon our ſinnes: for hee that beateth vpon his breaſt and is not corrected, doth harden his ſinnes, he taketh them not away: ſo then the Publicane in this ſmiting vpon his breaſt, was amended and corrected, and thought with himſelfe, neuer to doe the like againe.

De Diſciplin. Chriſtian. cap.1.Tom.9.

Thirdly, 1. The thiefe vpon the croſſe, being in the very agonie of death, and not expecting life, could not in that ſhort time expreſſe euery part of his vnfaigned repentance. 2. Yet there appeareth in him, as that ſhort moment could afford, both a deteſtation of ſinne in condemning himſelfe and his fellow, and a loue of righteouſneſſe, and deſire thereunto, if hee had liued, in commending the innocencie of our Sauiour.

The Proteſtants.

WE hold, that as in true Contrition, there muſt be perfect hatred of ſinne; ſo alſo there is ioyned with it a determinate purpoſe of amendment of life.

*Argum.*1. The place before cited out of Ezechiel, proueth it: Ezech.18.21. Likewiſe Iſay.1.16. Waſh you, make you cleane, ceaſe to do euill, learne to do well: Act.11.23. They exhorted all, that with purpoſe of heart, they would turne to the Lord, Epheſ.4.22. Caſt off the old man, put on the new,&c. All theſe places do euidently proue, that in true contrition and repentance, there is required a forſaking or dying vnto ſinne and liuing vnto righteouſneſſe.

*Argum.*2. Bellarmine is a notable witneſſe for vs, againſt this error, which hee laboureth to confute, *lib.*2.*de pœnit.ca.*6.7 in two whole Chapters: and herein hee is alſo a witneſſe againſt himſelfe, for *lib.*1.*c.*20. he confuteth the contrary opinion, that to ceaſe to doe euill, and learne to do well, are not two parts requiſite to repentance, and anſwereth that place by vs alleaged, Iſay 1.16. Ceaſe to do euill,&c. But now much forgetting himſelfe, but the trueth preuayling more with him, he produceth this very place, to proue, that in true contrition or repentance, there muſt be a purpoſe of amendment, which is the ſame thing, that we defend, both before qu.4. part.2. and in this place. Auguſtine vpon theſe wordes of the Prophet Iſay, Lauamini, be yee waſhed, &c. Lauatur itaq; & mundus eſt, qui & præterita plangit, & iterum non admittit: He is waſhed and is cleane, which doth bewaile his ſinnes paſt, and doth not commit them againe: de tempor. ſerm.66.

The Papiſts.

51.Error. 4. THey teach, that Contrition ought to be perfect, becauſe it muſt proceed from the loue of God, which is the moſt perfect kinde of loue, Catechiſ. Roman. pag.439. and that the greatneſſe of the griefe ought to be anſwerable to the quantity of the ſinne; ſo they conclude, that a man ſhall neuer know when hee is ſufficiently contrite, Thomas Aquinas: for hee muſt bee contrite for euery great ſinne hee hath committed, Tileman. Heſhuſ. loc.9. de pœnitent. error.25. 27.28.32.

*Argum.*1. That perfect Contrition is required, Bellarmine pretendeth to proue by theſe Scriptures, 1.King.8.48. If they turne againe vnto thee with all their heart, &c. Ioel.2. Turne vnto mee with all your heart, &c. Bellarm.c.10.

*Anſw.*1. Thoſe places do well proue, that our ſorrow ought to be vnfeigned, and that wee ſhould neither diſſemble, nor be indifferent in our ſorrow: but we muſt giue our whole heart vnto God, that is, not to haue a double heart, and as the wordes are; a heart and a heart, Pſal.12.2. 2. So then in our Contrition a godly endeuour, and a diligent care is required, a ſufficiencie in our ſorrow cannot be perfourmed: No, though our eyes were as fountaines of teares; as the Prophet wiſheth, Ierem.9.1.

The Proteſtants.

WHat is this elſe but a plaine doctrine of deſperation? for when is a man able ſo perfectly to be contrite, as his loue toward God ought to be perfect? or how can his ſorrow be equiualent to the waight of his ſinnes? or can a man remember all his ſinnes, that hee ſhould be ſory for?

*Argum.*1. The ſorrow of Chriſtians is not infinite or vncertaine, but it is determined and limited. Saint Paul ſaith, That he ſhould not be ſwallowed vp of too much heauineſſe, 2.Corinthians 2.7. And againe, My Epiſtle made you ſorie, though for a ſeaſon, 2.Corinth.7.8.

Argum 2. Iob.9.2. We cannot anſwere God one thing of a thouſand: our greateſt ſorrow is not ſufficient for our leaſt ſinne: therefore there can be no proportion betweene the greatneſſe of our ſinne & the quantitie of our ſorrow: Peter committed a great ſinne in denying of his Maſter, and yet vpon his bitter weeping he was receiued to mercie, as Hierome ſaith, Petrum ter negantem amaræ in ſuum locum reſtituere lachrymæ: Peters bitter teares after thrice deniall reſtored him to his place: Was Peters ſorrow any way anſwerable in meaſure or quantitie to his ſinne? We muſt indeed weepe bitterly as Peter did, and after we are throughly humbled, we are certaine, that God will looke vpon vs, as he did vpon Peter: and the inward feeling of Gods fauour will ſet the boundes and limits of our ſorrow.

Their owne Canons are more equall, which do not enioyne ſo ſtrict penance, and ſuch immeaſurable contrition, as theſe new maſters require: as decret. Gregor. lib.5. tit.38. c.5. Alexander 3. concerning certaine that in their confeſſion ſay, that they cannot abſtaine from thoſe ſinnes: hee decreeth, Eorum confeſſionem recipere debes, &c. You muſt receiue their confeſſion, for though it be no true repentance, yet it is a true confeſſion.

De tempor. natal. Serm.3. Auguſtine ſaith, Iſta eſt vera pœnitentia, quando quis ſic conuertitur, vt non reuertatur: This is true repentance, when a man doth ſo turne vnto God, that he returne not vnto ſinne. When a man therefore hath in this manner repented, he may be ſure that hee hath mourned ſufficiently. It is therefore vntrue, that a man is vncertaine when he hath ſorrowed enough.

Synod. Colonienſ. part.7 cap.19. Quamuis quis peccato mordeatur, ſi tamen pœniteat, vt de cætero peccandi voluntatem nullam habeat, confidens de Domini miſericordia accedat ad Euchariſtiam intrepidus, &c. Although a man be grieued in conſcience for his ſinne, yet if he repent him, ſo that he haue a purpoſe not to ſinne againe, truſting to Gods mercie, let him come without feare to the Communion: If he thus ſorrowing be without feare, it followeth, that God in Chriſt accepteth his ſorrow as ſufficient.

The Papiſts.

52.Error. BEllarmine hath here a certaine fond conceite of his owne, bringing in this deſtinction of ſorrow in contrition: that there is Dolor ſummus intenſiuè, appreciatiuè: The greateſt and higheſt ſorrow, intenſiuely, and by way of eſtimation: of this ſort he giueth an example, as a good man may weepe more for the loſſe of his children, then for his ſinnes, yet in his choyce he had rather looſe his children, then offend God: this is that kinde of griefe by way of eſtimation, though intenſiuely he grieue more for his children, yet, when he maketh an eſtimate of the one and the other, he preferreth that in his iudgement, which is the leaſt in his affection: this kinde of griefe when as the affection goeth before the iudgement, hee thinketh is ſufficient for contrition. *Bellarm.cap.*11.

Argum. Ioel.2. Turne vnto God, with all your heart: this muſt be vnderſtood of this greateſt kind of griefe, by way of eſtimation, &c.

Anſ. Whereas it is ſaid, 1.King.8.49. If they turne vnto thee with all their heart and ſoule, &c. how can they turne with the whole heart and affection, when as they in their affection can ſorrowe more for other things? wherefore as God will haue the whole and entire ſoule, that is the iudgement, ſo the whole heart alſo and affection. As Auguſtine ſaith, Inueni triſtem, &c. I finde one very heauie, I aske him, Friend, why art thou heauie? ſaith he, I haue loſt my money: Locus immundus fructus nullus: This is an vncleane place, there can be no fruite: *De tempor. ſerm.*151.

The Proteſtants.

Though I denie not but a right good man, may ſometime breake out more into affection for ſome temporall loſſe, than for the committing of ſinne, as Matth.2.18. The women mourne for their children, and would not be comforted: yet this is not a vertue to be commended, but an infirmitie to be amended, as it was commendable in Eli, who hearing patiently the heauie newes of the death of his ſonnes, when mention was made of the taking of the Arke, could hold no longer, but through feeblenes cauſed by ſudden griefe, fell backward and brake his neck, 1.Sam.4.17.

Argum. This hath been the continuall practiſe of the Saints to lament more for ſinne, than for any other temporall loſſe whatſoeuer: as Dauid ſaith, Pſalm.6.6. I cauſe my bed euery night to ſwimme, and water my couch with teares: Pſalm.119.136. Mine eyes guſh out with riuers of water, becauſe they keepe not thy law. Matth.26.75. Peter went out, and wept bitterly: No earthly matter could haue drawne from them ſuch plentifull ſtore of teares: wherefore the Saints did euen weepe moſt intenſiuely, that is, earneſtly and effectually for ſinne.

Your owne canons are cleere in this point: *Decr.par.2.cauſ.*33.*diſtinct.*3.*c.*42. Satis durus eſt cuius mentis dolorem, &c. Hee is very hard whoſe griefe of minde the teares of his bodie cannot declare: but let him know, ſe culpabiliter durum, that he is very culpable in his hardnes, which doth lament the loſſes of time, the death of his friend, &c. and doth not ſhew the griefe for ſinne with teares: Let none therefore excuſe themſelues, that they haue not a fountaine of teares, who with teares doe ſhew the griefe of temporall things. This ſentence is rehearſed out of Auguſtine, and approued by the Maſter of Sentences, *lib.*4.*diſt.*15.f. whereby they are defined to bee culpable, which doe more expreſſe the loſſe of things temporall, by their teares, than of ſpirituall: which is that which Bellarmine alloweth as good and commendable.

The Papiſts.

5. Contrition (they ſay) as it is not altogether without hope to obtaine mercie: ſo can it not haue certitudinem remiſſionis peccatorum, a certaine or vndoubted aſſurance of remiſſion of ſinnes, *Concil.Trident.ſeſſ.*6.*cap.*9.*Bellarm.lib.*2.*cap.*2. 53. Error.

The Proteſtants.

Godly ſorrow and contrition bringeth ioy and comfort to the ſoule in the end, with vndoubted aſſurance of the forgiuenes and remiſſion of ſinnes.

*Argum.*1. Godly ſorrow worketh in the true penitent perſon, a cleering of the minde, 2.Corinth.7.verſ.11. but the ſoule and conſcience cannot be cleered and ſet at reſt, vnleſſe we bee perſwaded that our ſinnes are forgiuen vs: Ergo.

*Argum.*2. All hope is certaine, and bringeth vndoubted aſſurance, and therfore it is called the anchor of the ſoule, Hebr.6.19. Wherefore either contrition is voyde of hope altogether, (which they will not graunt) or if it haue any hope, it is ſure and ſtable, and worketh a full perſwaſion and aſſurance of the mercie of God.

Auguſtine ſaith, Petrus mox à Domino indulgentiam accepit, qui amariſſimè fleuit trina negationis culpam: Peter ſtraightway receiued pardon and indulgence, when hee had moſt bitterly bewayled the ſinne of his three-fold deniall of Chriſt. How could Peter immediatly haue felt and receiued the remiſſion of that great ſinne, if the Lord had not aſſured his conſcience thereof? De tempor. ſerm.66.

The former Canon of the Cullin Councel ſaith, That when a man hath ſorrowed for his ſinne, purpoſing not to doe the like, Securus & intrepidus accedat: Let him draw neere without feare, and be ſecure. He that is ſecure and without feare, doubteth not: Ergo, he is aſſured of the forgiuenes of his ſinne.

Bernard alſo ſaith: Animam pœnitentiæ lachrimis afflictam ſpiritus paracletus libenter conſolatur, frequenter viſitat, & ad veniæ fiduciam plenè reformat: A ſoule afflicted with penitent ſorrowe, the ſpirit of comfort doth comfort, often viſite, and fully bring it to the truſt of pardon: *de interior.domo.cap.*37. The ſoule then may haue a full and aſſured truſt of forgiuenes.

Their owne Canons are cleere for vs: *Decr.par.2.cauſ.*33.*diſtinct.*1.*cap.*50. Nemo poteſt bene agere pœnitentiam, niſi qui ſperauerit indulgentiam: No man can truly do repentance, if he do not hope for indulgence.

Ibid.diſtinct.3.c.39.Leo.Iudam non pœnitentia reuocauit ad Dominum, ſed deſperatio traxit ad laqueum: Repentance did not recall Iudas to the Lord, but deſperation brought him to the ſnare. That repentance then is not good nor acceptable, which is not full of aſſurance, and in hope comfortable.

Iohn Huſſe holy Martyr: Vnto a true abſolution, firſt there is required contrition. Secondly, a purpoſe and intent to ſinne no more. Thirdly, true confeſsion. Fourthly, ſtedfaſt hope of forgiuenes: as Chriſt ſaith, My ſonne, beleeue, and thy ſinnes are forgiuen thee. pag.616.artic.5.

The Papiſts.

54.Error. 6. THey affirme, that contrition is a neceſſarie meane vnto iuſtification, and that a man cannot be iuſtified, till he haue been truly contrite for his ſinnes, *Bellarm.lib.2.de pœnitent.c.*8.

Argum. Luk.13.3. Except ye repent, ye ſhall likewiſe periſh. Act.3.19. Repent, and turne, that your ſinnes may be put away, when the time of refreſhing ſhall come: Ergo, contrition is neceſſarie to iuſtification, Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, it followeth not, without repentance and true contrition there is no iuſtification: Ergo, repentance is a meane vnto iuſtification: for faith cannot bee without workes, yet workes are no meane vnto faith: ſo repentance and contrition are the fruits of iuſtification, not a meane thereunto. Secondly, there is difference betweene iuſtification, and ſaluation, or glorification; contrition is a meane and way to ſaluation: by repentance thorough the mercie of God in Chriſt wee are preſerued from periſhing and euerlaſting deſtruction: and repentance goeth before our conſummation, and perfect abolition of our ſinnes in the day of refreſhing at the comming of Chriſt: But it followeth not, that contrition therefore is a meane vnto iuſtification; for firſt wee are iuſtified, then afterward glorified: our ſaluation is accompliſhed, Rom.8.30. Thirdly, contrition is a meane to aſſure vs of our iuſtification, but not to iuſtifie vs: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Philip.2.12. With feare and trembling finiſh your ſaluation.

The Proteſtants.

THat true contrition is neceſſarie, we willingly graunt, and that without it remiſsion of ſinnes cannot bee had: but wee denie that it is a neceſſarie meane vnto iuſtification: a neceſſarie ſigne, fruite, or worke of iuſtification it is, but not a meane or cauſe.

*Argum.*1. We are iuſtified by faith, Rom.4.5. To him that beleeueth in him, that iuſtifieth the vngodly, faith is counted for righteouſnes: But faith goeth before repentance, as Bellarmine himſelfe before confeſſed by the example of the Niniuites, who firſt beleeued, and afterward repented, *Bellarm.lib.*1.*cap.*19.*propoſ.*2. Ergo, iuſtification is before repentance, and ſo conſequently repentance is no meane vnto it.

*Argum.*2. Good workes are no meane to iuſtification, for then they ſhould goe before iuſtification: but as Auguſtine ſaith, Bona opera non pracedunt iuſtificandum, ſed ſequuntur iuſtificatum: Good workes doe not goe before him that is to bee iuſtified, but they follow him that is alreadie iuſtified.

But contrition is a good worke: confeſſed and proued by Bellar.lib.2.cap.2.Ergo, it is no meane vnto iuſtification.

Auguſtine ſaith, Non vult Apoſtolus nos praſumere de operibus ante fidem, ac ſi merito operum fidei gratiam accepiſſemus, peccatorem enim te fides inuenit: The Apoſtle would not haue vs preſume of works before faith, as if by the merite of workes wee had receiued faith: for faith found thee a ſinner: *in Pſal.*31. If then good workes goe not before faith, and faith and iuſtification come together, as I haue ſhewed, then contrition, being a good action, precedeth not iuſtification.

The Papiſts.

55.Error. 7. THey make contrition a part of ſatisfaction for our ſinnes, and to be a cauſe of iuſtification and remiſsion of ſinnes, not onely in diſpoſing and preparing of vs thereunto, but in that thereby wee verily obtaine and deſerue remiſsion of our ſins, *Bellarm.lib.2.de pœnitent.cap.*12.

*Argum.*1. Luk.7.47. Many ſinnes are forgiuen her becauſe ſhe loued: Not onely faith, but loue or charitie obtaineth remiſsion of ſinnes, Bellarm.ibid.Rhemiſt.in hunc locum.

Anſw. The argument is 1. not from the cauſe to the effect, but from the effect to the cauſe: for Chriſt doth not reaſon thus, ſhe loued much, therefore many ſinnes are forgiuen her: but contrariwiſe, Many ſinnes are forgiuen her, therefore ſhe loueth much: As the next wordes declare: to whom little is remitted, he loueth little. 2. And our Sauiour ſaith in plaine wordes in the laſt verſe, that her faith had ſaued her, whereof her loue was an effect. 3. And further, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Wee know that we are tranſlated from death to life, becauſe we loue the brethren, 1.Ioh.3.14. he ſaith not, wee are tranſlated, but wee know wee are: ſo this woman by her loue might know or bee aſſured that her ſins were remitted her. And Bellarmine hath a ſaying not much vnlike, that theſe words of Chriſt, Many ſinnes are forgiuen her, confirmant abſolutionem inuiſibiliter datam, do confirme the abſolution inuiſibly giuen before, *lib.2.c.*14 *reſp.ad obiect.*1. Her loue was a meanes then to confirme her abſolution, which was inuiſiblie giuen before.

Argum.2. *Ezech.*18.27.*When the wicked turneth away from his wickedneſſe he ſhall ſaue his ſoule,&c.*verſ.31.Make you a new heart and new ſpirit,and caſt away from you all your tranſgreſſions. The turning then away from ſinne is the cauſe of life and of newnes of ſoule: Ergo,of iuſtification, Dan.4. verſ.24.Redeeme thy ſinnes by thine almes,&c. Ergo, good charitable workes are the cauſe of the forgiuenes of ſinnes, *Bellar.c.*12.

Anſw. Firſt,the places 1. in Ezechiel,if they bee taken in his ſenſe, would prooue, that it is in a mans power to conuert his ſoule, or to renew his owne heart, whereas the Prophet acknowledgeth it wholy to be the Lords worke,Pſal.51.12.Create in me a new heart: and Iere.31.Conuert vs O Lord,and we ſhall be conuerted. 2.But why the Lord thus ſpeaketh to man,in bidding him conuert,Saint Auguſtine rendreth the reaſon: Quia non ſicut in lapidibus inſenſatis Deus ſalutem noſtram operatur: Becauſe God worketh our ſaluation in vs,not as in ſenſeleſſe ſtones: *cont.Pelag.lib.*1.*c.*5. Man therefore faueth his ſoule,or maketh his heart new,but as Gods inſtrument;as the axe in the workmans hand:it is Gods ſpirit that maketh man to make his heart new. 3. Bellarmine himſelfe helpeth vs with a ſufficient anſwere, that remiſsion of ſinnes is firſt inuiſiblie giuen; and then by our earneſt repentance,it is confirmed and aſſured vnto vs: ſo then repentance is a meane to the aſſurance of forgiuenes, as theſe places prooue; but not to the inuiſible grace or gift of remiſſion.

Secondly, 1. The word in Daniel ſignifieth not to redeeme, but to breake off:for ſo is this word פרק pharak vſed, Gen.27.40.Thou ſhalt breake his yoke from thy necke. 2. By (redeeming) admitting that reading,may be vnderſtood not redemption to be made before God, but recompence to bee made vnto men,whom he had iniuried. 3. Neither doth the Prophet ſpeake of the forgiuenes of his ſinnes, but of the prolonging of his peace and proſperitie: for theſe words, Forſitan ignoſcet Deus: God perhaps may forgiue your ſins, are not read in the Hebrue. 4. And how could the almes of an vnbeleeuer,ſuch an one as Nabuchadnezzar was,be a cauſe of forgiuenes,ſeeing without faith nothing is acceptable to God? 5. Laſtly,the Kings righteous and mercifull dealing ſhould be onely a teſtimonie to his conſcience,that his ſinnes were forgiuen. 6. *Concil.Cabilonenſ.c.*36. It is denied that ſinnes,de induſtria, committed willingly, or wittingly,are redeemed by almes: Sic enim viderentur Deum mercede conducere: So they ſhould ſeeme to hire God with a reward.

The Proteſtants.

THat contrition of the heart meriteth not,neither is any cauſe of the forgiuenes of ſins, which doth iſſue only out of the fountaine of Gods mercie by faith in Chriſt, the Scriptures doe teſtifie.

*Argum.*1. Rom.3.24.We are iuſtified freely by grace. If freely, then is not our iuſtification merited,or cauſed by any worke of ours.

Bellarm. anſwereth: firſt,that we are iuſtified freely,though it be by the merit of contrition,becauſe contrition is the gift of God. Secondly,contrition meriteth not, ex condigno, of condignitie or worthines,but ex congruo,of congruitie: which kinde of merite is founded not in Gods iuſtice, but in his benignitie and bountie,*Bellarm.cap.*12.

Contra. Firſt,this is the very anſwere 1. of the old Pelagians, who did in like manner affirme, that the good will of man was of God,becauſe it could not be in a man, vnleſſe man were, vt homo autem ſit,à Deo habet, but for a man to be,is of God: for if therefore remiſſion of ſinnes bee of grace,and the gift of God,becauſe contrition,whereby it is merited,is the gift of God;then ſay alſo,that wee may bee ſaued by nature, and yet by the gift of God,becauſe the nature of man is the gift and worke of God. 2. But the Apoſtle confuteth this gloſſe, in ſaying further, We are iuſtified freely,&c.thorough redemption in Chriſt Ieſus: if thorough redemption, then not thorough contrition. 3. And againe,men firſt muſt be reconciled vnto God,and of enemies bee made friends, before he giue them gifts: as the Apoſtle ſaith,Chriſt firſt led captiuitie captiue,that is,ſubdueth and remoueth ſinne that led vs captiue,and then gaue gifts vnto men,Epheſ.4.8.Then muſt we firſt bee reconciled vnto God, which conſiſteth in the forgiuenes of our ſinnes,Rom.3.25.before wee can haue the gift of contrition. Wherefore if reconciliation and forgiuenes of ſinnes goe before contrition,it can be no meritorious cauſe of the remiſſion of ſinnes.

Secondly, 1.No merite or worke is of mercie, but of iuſtice,as the Apoſtle ſaith,Rom.4.4. To him that worketh the wages is not counted by fauour,but by debt: wherefore the merite of congruitie is no merite, being founded in Gods mercie. 2. Neither is there any congruitie or conſequence at all,that God ſhould reſpect vs being his enemies: but enemies wee are before wee are reconciled by the remiſſion of our ſinnes: wherefore contrition,going before remiſſion of ſinnes,and ſo reconciliation,cannot deſerue ſo much as of congruitie,if there were any ſuch merite.

*Argum.*2. That the contrition of the heart is no cauſe of our iuſtification, neither doth merite or deſerue remiſſion of ſins: Saint Paul ſheweth,Rom.4.5,6.To him that beleeueth faith is counted for righteouſnes: And Dauid declareth the bleſſednes of that man,to whom God imputeth righteouſnes without works. It is faith then only that obtaineth remiſſion of ſins: and a man is iuſtified without any reſpect had to his workes. Therefore neither contrition, nor any other worke inward or outward, procureth remiſsion of ſinnes, but faith onely is the meane.

So Auguſtine ſaith, Opera ſequuntur iuſtificatum, non præcedunt iuſtificandum: Workes followe a man alreadie iuſtified, they goe not before to iuſtification, De fide & operibus, cap. 14. Therefore the worke of contrition is not auailable to iuſtification.

Interrelig. Cæſarea. cap. 17. Illa ſatisfactio, quæ culpam & æternam pœnam expiat, ſoli Chriſto tribuenda eſt: That ſatisfaction, which taketh away the fault and eternall puniſhment, is onely to bee attributed to Chriſt: Ergo, contrition doth not ſatisfie for the ſinne.

Laſtly, Iulius 1. Decret. 11. thus teſtifieth, Fides omnes actus hominis præcedere debet: Faith muſt goe before all the acts of men. Cyrill. Alexand. expoſit. Nycen. ſymbol. Sicut fides abſque operibus mortua, &c. As faith is dead without workes, ſo we may turne it and ſay, works are dead without faith. Contrition then is either before faith or after; if before, being without faith, it is a dead worke, as is here ſpecified, and ſo cannot merite: if after faith, then it commeth after iuſtification and remiſsion of ſinnes: for by faith are we iuſtified: Rom. 3. 26. That he might be a iuſtifier of him, that is of the faith of Ieſus.

We want not the euidence of ſome of their owne ſide: Capreolus in ſecund. ſenten. diſt. 40. Dominicus à Soto lib. 2. de natur. & grat. cap. 4. doe denie that contrition any way either of congruitie, or condignitie meriteth remiſsion.

56. Error. 7. CONtrition (they ſay) is not neceſſarie for veniall or ſmall offences, neither is a man bound thereunto, Scot. lib. 4. diſtinct. 17. articul. 3. The Maſter of Sentences thinketh that a generall confeſsion ſufficeth for mortal ſinnes, which a man vnderſtandeth not, lib. 4. diſt. 21. e.

The Proteſtants.

THis aſſertion is cleane contrarie to Scripture: for the Prophet Dauid prayeth not only to be kept from preſumptuous ſinnes, Pſalm. 19. 13. but euen to be cleanſed from his ſecret faults, verſ. 12. The Prophet Dauid ſaith, Pſalm. 32. 5. I acknowledged my ſinne, neither hid I mine iniquitie, and thou forgaueſt, &c. Wherefore mortall ſinne not vnderſtood, but lying hid, cannot be acknowledged, and ſo conſequently not forgiuen.

Auguſtine ſaith, Non ſolum propter vitæ huius ignorantiam, ſed etiam propter ipſum puluerem mundi huius, qui pedibus adhæreſcit, quotidianam habere debemus pœnitentiam: Not onely for the ignorances of this life, but euen for that droſſe and duſt of the world, which hangeth vpon our feete, wee ought daily to repent vs. He meaneth the leſſer and ſmaller ſcapes of our life. And againe, Homo dum iſto viuit in ſeculo, humanis affectibus veluti pedibus terram calcans ipſa conuerſatione vitæ huius contrahit, vnde dicat: dimitte nobis debita: Man, as long as he liueth in this world, with his affections, as with feete treading vpon the ground, he gathereth droſſe, for the which he had neede to ſay, forgiue vs our ſins, &c. in Iohan. tract. 57.

Decr. par. 2. cauſ. 33. diſtinct. 3. c. 42. Chriſtus legionem eijciens non reliquit vnum ex omnibus: Chriſt caſting out a legion, left not one of all: ſhewing, that if wee haue a thouſand ſinnes, we muſt repent them all.

The Papiſts.

57. Error. 8. THere is a kinde of contrition that proceedeth onely from the feare of puniſhment, when a man doth leaue ſinning, not for any loue or delight he hath in God, but onely for feare of damnation: Euen this contrition alſo is good and profitable: yet this ſeruile feare is at length cleane driuen out by charitie. But there remaineth ſtill in the godly an awe and feare of God and his iudgements, with miſtruſt, and feare of hell and damnation: as Matth. 10. Feare him that can caſt bodie and ſoule into hell: Rhemiſt. Ioh. 4. ſect. 6. And Bellarmine ſaith, that if a ſinner, ſolius pœnæ fugiendæ cauſa, &c. onely to auoide puniſhment, doe take heede of ſinne, this is a good and profitable feare, lib. 2. 17.

Argum. Ierem. 5. 22. Feare ye not me (ſaith the Lord) which haue placed the ſand for the bound of the ſea? Malach. 1. 6. If I be a father, where is my honour? if I be a maſter, where is my feare? Mat. 10. verſ. 28. Feare him which is able to deſtroy both ſoule and bodie in hell. Here wee ſee that God exacteth euen the feare of ſeruants, and the feare of hell puniſhment, which is a ſeruile feare, Bellarmine cap. 17.

Anſw. Firſt, the Lord in theſe places by his Prophets ſpeaketh vnto the prophane wicked of thoſe times: as Ierem, verſ. 21. Heare O fooliſh people, and without vnderſtanding: and Malach. 1. 8. it followeth in the ſame verſe, O ye Prieſts that deſpiſe my name: Theſe prophane perſons had neede to be terrified with the feare of Gods iudgements: but it followeth not, that this feare is neceſſarie for the ſeruants of God. Secondly, the Prophet Malachie ioyning the honour of ſonnes, and feare of ſeruants together; vnderſtandeth not a ſeruile, miſerable, and ſlauiſh feare, but ſuch as dutifull and obedient ſeruants yeeld vnto their maſters as fathers, which is a commendable feare, and fit alwaies to bee retained. Thirdly, our Sauiour ſpeaketh by way of compariſon: that they ſhould not feare them which kill the bodie, &c. he preferreth a ſeruile feare of God, before this worldly feare of men: yet ſo that hee would not haue them ſtay here, or reſt in this feare, for the which he diuers times reproueth them: as Luk.12.32. Feare not little flocke, it is your fathers will to giue you a kingdome. Fourthly, we confeſſe that this ſeruile feare is profitable to make a beginning and further entrance: as Prou.1.7. The feare of God is the beginning of wiſedome: but afterward loue muſt ſucceede in the place thereof.

The Proteſtants.

First, we acknowledge that the feare of puniſhment is neceſſary in the beginning, to make a way for true loue to enter, as the briſtle or needle (as Auguſtine ſaith) maketh roume for the threed to enter. Wee alſo confeſſe, that there is a continuall feare and reuerence of God in the godlie, ſuch as children haue of their parents: but as for any miſtruſt or feare of hell and damnation, after loue be once entred, and we made the children of God, which breedeth terror and anxietie of conſcience, it is cleane expelled, and thruſt out of the doores by loue.

*Argum.*1. So ſaith the Apoſtle, There is no feare in loue: but perfect loue caſteth out feare, and maketh vs to haue confidence in the day of iudgement, 1.John 4 17,18. But hee that fears[illegible] damnation and is afraid of the day of iudgement, cannot haue confidence in that day. So Auguſtine: Quid dicimus de illo, qui cæpit timere diem iudicij? ſi perfecta in illo eſſet charitas, non timeret? What ſay we to him, that feareth the day of iudgement? if loue were perfect in him, he would not feare it?

*Argum.*2. Matth.25.25. The ſlothfull ſeruant ſaith to his maſter, I knew thou waſt a hard man, &c. and therefore I was afraid. This ſeruant was not commended for this feare, but blamed and reproued, and caſt into vtter darknes: for his maſter ſaid, Thou euill and ſlothfull ſeruant. And Origen hereof writeth well: Nec eſt bonus huiuſmodi timor, nec liberat nos talis timor à tenebris exterioribus: Neither is this feare good, neither doth it deliuer from vtter darknes: *Tract.*33.in Matth.

Bellarmine replieth: that to feare God cannot be euill; but they that haue this ſeruile feare, doe notwithſtanding feare God: *Ergo.c.*18.

Contra. Firſt, the diuels feare God and tremble, Iam.2.19. doth hee thinke there is any good feare in diuels? Secondly, neither doe thoſe feare God, but hell: for if there were no hell, they would not feare God at all.

*Argum.*3. God is not to be loued for hope of reward: Ergo, neither to bee ſerued for feare of puniſhment.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the reaſon is not alike: for the obiect of loue is good, the obiect of feare is euill: God is good, and therefore to bee loued for himſelfe: but he is not euill, and therefore to be feared for another, *cap.*18.*reſp.ad argum.*6.

Contra. Firſt, the obiect indeede of ſeruile feare is euill, but the obiect of a godly feare is good; as Eccleſ.12.13. Feare God and keepe his commaundements: will he ſay that the obiect of this feare is euill? Secondly, if God be onely to be feared for another thing, then all feare ſhall be ſeruile, and the filiall feare is aboliſhed, when God is feared and reuerenced as a father for himſelfe. Thirdly, Hierome ſheweth the reaſon to be alike: Qui diligit, &c. He that loueth, keepeth the commaundement, not becauſe he is compelled with feare of puniſhment, or greedines of reward, but becauſe, that which is commaunded is good: *Tom.*4.de filio prodigo.

*Synod.Moguntin.cap.*10.Libertatem Chriſtianam intelligimus, &c. non vt alij homines pœnarum metu & imperio legis compellantur, &c. We vnderſtand Chriſtian libertie, not that wee ſhould not doe thoſe things which are commaunded, but that we ſhould not as others are, be drawne or enforced to keepe through feare of puniſhment, &c. Ergo, there remaineth no feare of puniſhment in the righteous.

We haue moſt cleere teſtimonies beſide: *Ambroſ.epiſt.*84. Timoris, quo Deus metuitur nulla diſtinctio, &c. There is no difference in name of that feare, wherewith God is feared, &c. there is feare of puniſhment, here is carefulnes for the reward: Of the ſeruile feare it is ſaid, perfect loue expelleth feare, but of the liberall feare; The feare of the Lord is holie and remaineth for euer. And againe, *epiſtol.*7. Velle ſapientis, ſeruire inſipientis: To be willing, is the part of a wiſe man; to ſerue, of a foole: in the Law there is ſeruitude, in the Goſpell libertie, &c. Seruit peccator formidini: A ſinner is a ſlaue to his feare.

Hieron.de 42.Manſionib. Duplicia ſunt in ſcripturis vincula, &c. There are two ſorts of bands in Scripture, &c. but Chriſts bands are voluntarie, Et vertuntur in amplexus, and are turned into embracings.

*Decret.Gregor.lib.*5 *tit.*41.*c.*8. Qui ex timore facit præceptum, aliter quam debeat facit, & ideo iam non facit: He that of feare doth the commaundement, doth it otherwiſe then he ſhould, and therefore doth it not at all. By all theſe teſtimonies it is euident, that this ſeruile feare of puniſhment hath no place where the loue of God is.

THE SIXT QVESTION, OF AVRICVLAR Confeſſion, the ſecond part of penance.

The Papiſts.

58. Error. NOne can rightly ſeeke for abſolution at the Prieſts hands, vnleſſe they confeſſe particularly at the leaſt all their mortall ſinnes, whether they be committed in minde, heart, will, and cogitation onely, or in word, and worke, with all the neceſſarie circumſtances and differences of the ſame, Rhemiſt. Ioh. 20. ſect. 5. And this ſacramentall confeſſion, as they call it, muſt be made ſecretly to the Prieſt, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 14. can. 6.

Argum. 1. This wonderfull power of remitting and retaining of ſins, which was giuen to the Apoſtles and their ſucceſſors, Ioh. 20. 22. were giuen them in vaine, if no man were bound to ſeeke for abſolution at their hands: which cannot be had of them without diſtinct vtterance to them of our ſinnes: for they cannot rule the caſes of conſcience, vnleſſe they haue exact knowledge and cogitation of their ſinnes, Rhemiſt. ibid.

Anſw. 1. God hath not made his Miniſters in Chriſts ſtead iudges of caſes of conſcience, as though there were in them an actuall power to remit and abſolue ſinnes: but their office is only to declare and ſet forth vnto all penitent perſons, the promiſes of God for remiſſion of ſinnes, and the ſeueritie of Gods iudgement againſt impenitent perſons: which is eſpecially performed in the preaching and applying of the word either publikely or priuately: as Saint Paul calleth the Goſpell committed vnto him, the word of reconciliation, 2. Cor. 5. 16.

2. A man therefore may by their miniſterie, which are the preachers of reconciliation, finde remiſſion of ſinnes, without a particular declaration thereof: neither is it neceſſarie for them to haue ſo exact a knowledge of our ſinnes, ſeeing they are not abſolute iudges of the conſcience, but the miniſters and ambaſſadours of reconciliation, 2. Cor. 5. 20.

3. And Miniſters are not to ſtay while ſuite is made vnto them for their helpe, but they ought to exhort and deſire men to be reconciled to God by their miniſterie.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Prieſts are truly and properly iudges of mens ſinnes, and haue a iudiciarie power not to declare or teſtifie the forgiuenes of ſins, but truly to binde, or looſe them. Firſt, they are called the keyes: which doe verily open and ſhut the doore, not ſignifie the opening and ſhutting: as Chriſt is ſaid to haue the key of Dauid to open and ſhut, which power Chriſt communicateth to the Apoſtles and their ſucceſſors. Secondly, to binde and to looſe doe not ſignifie, to denounce and declare, but in deede to put on, or take off the bondes; ſo are they ſaid to retaine ſinnes: and what is it elſe to retaine, but nolle remittere, not to be minded to remit? Thirdly, the words are, whoſe ſinnes, not all mens ſinnes are remitted, but whom the Prieſt ſhall iudge meet: but the word is preached to all, remiſſion of ſins is not giuen to all: therfore this is not vnderſtood of the preaching of the word, but of the iudiciarie power of the keyes. Fourthly, in that Chriſt breathed vpon them, it ſheweth, that as a blaſt doth extinguiſh the fire, and chaſe the clowdes, ſo they had power verily to extinguiſh ſinnes, and not to declare onely: Bellar. lib. 3. c. 2.

Contra. Firſt, the keyes 1. of the Church doe truly open and ſhut, being executed according to the will and minde of the maſter of the houſe: the ſeruant to whom the keyes are committed, doth open and ſhut, yet but as a ſeruant, and according to his maſters direction: ſo the keyes of the Church are committed to men, but as miniſters of the keyes, not to open and ſhut at their pleaſure, but as Chriſt preſcribeth. 2. But it is not farre from blaſphemie, to ſay that the ſame power of the keyes, which Chriſt hath, is communicated to the miniſters of the Church: for he openeth, and no man ſhutteth, &c. Reuel. 3. 8. but man may open to ſome, to whom Chriſt may ſhut, and he ſhut the doore againſt others, to whom Chriſt may open: yea and when the Phariſies had ſaid, Who can forgiue ſinnes, but God onely? Mark. 2. 7. Chriſt reproueth them not, but ſheweth, that hee (being both God and man) had authoritie alſo to forgiue ſinnes. Chriſt therefore onely properly forgiueth, the Apoſtles forgiue as his miniſters. 3. And that theſe keyes are diſpenſed in preaching the word, and not onely in the diſcipline of the Church; it is euident, Act. 14. 27. a doore of faith is opened by the preaching of the Apoſtles, Matth. 23. 13. The Phariſees by not preaching true doctrine are ſaid to ſhut vp the kingdome of heauen. Thus their owne canons teſtifie, epiſt. 1. Clemen. Per ipſum, per verbum Dei, & ſalubre conſilium curetur: He that is troubled with his ſinne, and confeſſeth to the Miniſter, &c. that by him thorough the word of God, and holeſome counſell he may be cured. Sinnes then are cured and healed by the word of God.

Secondly, the Apoſtles and they which ſucceede them, doe truly binde and looſe, remit and retaine ſinnes, but as miniſters, and ſo long as they execute this authoritie according to Chriſts will: as Peter hath the keyes, but he is firſt built vpon the rocke, Matt. 16. 18. the Apoſtles haue power to bind and looſe, Matth. 18. 18. but they muſt doe it in Chriſts name, verſ. 20. otherwiſe, a curſe cauſeleſſe ſhall not come, Pro. 26. 2. And, though men curſe, God will bleſſe, Pſal. 109. 28. The blind man was caſt out by the Phariſees, but he was receiued in by Chriſt, Iohn 9.35. S. Ambroſe ſaith, Dei munus, miniſterium ſacerdotis eſt,&c. Quis tantus eſt,&c. In giuing the ſpirite, the gift is Gods, the miniſterie the Prieſts, &c. who is ſo great, as to arrogate to himſelfe the beſtowing of this gift? Lib.1. de ſpirit. ſanct.c.7.

Thirdly, 1. As the word of God is not to be denied to any, that will receiue it; ſo neither is remiſſion of ſinnes to be withheld from any by the will of man, that doe deſire it: the word is not to be caſt before ſwine and dogges, Matth.7.6. no more is remiſſion of ſinnes to be graunted to the impenitent. 2. If the Miniſter ſhall at his pleaſure denie remiſſion to the penitent, his ſentence bindeth not before God: as Origene well ſaith: Si aliquis non recto iudicio,&c. If any man by the erroneous iudgement of thoſe, which gouerne the Church be caſt out, if he haue not deſerued to be caſt out, is not any thing by this error of iudgement, &c. Hom.14.in Leuitic.

Fourthly, the breathing which Chriſt vſed, betokened the giuing of the holy Ghoſt, which truly and properly doth remit and retaine ſinnes, as the winde chaſeth away the cloudes. This then ſheweth not a iudiciall authoritie in men, that are but the miniſters of the ſpirite, but an abſolute power in the ſpirite: as Ambroſe excellently ſaith; Per ſpiritum ſanctum peccata donantur,&c. Sinnes are forgiuen by the holy ſpirite: but men to the remiſſion of ſinnes doe exhibite their miniſterie: Non ius alicuius poteſtatis exercent: They do not exerciſe any right of power, &c. they pray, God forgiueth; the ſeruice is mans, the munificence is frō a ſuperne power; lib.3.de ſpirit.c.19.

Argum.2. As the Prieſts in the law had only authoritie to diſcerne the leproſie of the people, and therefore Chriſt ſendeth the lepers to the Prieſt, Luk.17.14. ſo men muſt reueale the ſpirituall leproſie of ſinne to the Prieſt, Rhemiſt. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, the leproſie was not healed by the Prieſt, but onely declared to bee healed: ſo ſinnes are declared to be forgiuen by the Prieſt, not properly forgiuen. Secondly, the Prieſt receiued not knowledge of all diſeaſes, but of this, that was contagious: therefore it would not follow hereupon, that all ſinnes are to be confeſſed to the Prieſt; but ſuch as are notorious, where publique confeſſion is by Church diſcipline inioyned: and ſuch confeſſion we denie not. Thirdly, the argument followeth not from the Prieſts of the law, to the Miniſters of the Goſpell: for the Prieſthood of the law is tranſlated wholy vnto Chriſt, who hath all knowledge to diſcerne, and power to heale our ſpirituall diſeaſes.

Argum.3. Act.19.18. Many that beleeued, came and confeſſed, and ſhewed their workes: Hence the Ieſuite would inferre the neceſſitie of auricular confeſſion, Lib.3.de pœnitent.cap.4.Bellarm.

Anſw. This place ſerueth nothing at all for his purpoſe: Firſt, all that beleeued came not to confeſſe, but ſuch as were pricked in conſcience, with remembrance of ſome eſpeciall ſinnes, as it followeth, ver. 19. they that vſed curious Arts brought their bookes: but the papiſtes inioyne auricular confeſſion of neceſſitie to all. 2. It is not ſaid they made particular rehearſall of al their ſinnes, but generally confeſſed themſelues to be ſinners: as Daniell confeſſeth, cap.9.5. We haue ſinned and done wickedly, &c. 3. It was no confeſſion made in the eare, but publikely before all the multitude: but auricular confeſſion is made only in the eare of the Prieſt. Fourthly, theſe beleeuers came but once, that we reade of, in the beginning of their conuerſion to confeſſe, and they came willingly without conſtraint: But they exact a yearely confeſſion of the people, and enforce them to it. They muſt ſeeke better grounds for their eare confeſſion then this, or elſe they are like to miſſe of it.

Bellarmine replieth, 1. That they confeſſed all their ſinnes: for when the Scripture ſpeaketh abſolutely of ſinnes, all muſt be vnderſtood: as Matth.9.2. Thy ſinnes are forgiuen thee: that is, all thy ſinnes. 2. The Epheſians might confeſſe oftner, then this once, though it be not mentioned; for we may ſay as well, they were not baptized, becauſe it is not expreſſed. 3. Neither are all with vs bound to confeſſe, but they which are touched in conſcience. 4. Neither is it expreſſed, whether they confeſſed priuately or publikely. 5. They came willingly to confeſſion, becauſe there was yet no law to enioyne them. Bellarm.cap.4.

Cont. Firſt, where 1. mention is made of forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, all muſt be vnderſtood, becauſe there is a neceſſitie, that all be forgiuen: but of confeſſing all ſinnes there is no neceſſitie, 2. And they confeſſed their workes, πράξεις, but the Papiſts exact confeſſion of thoughtes and words. 3. Neither confeſſed they all their workes, but ſuch as were notorious and offenſiue, as it followeth verſ.19. ſuch were the workes of them that exerciſed curious artes.

Secondly, 1. There is no queſtion but they were baptized, becauſe it is Chriſts generall ordinance; ſo is not auricular confeſſion. 2. Neyther could they confeſſe, as they did, to S. Paul yeerely, becauſe he was not alwayes with them. 3. Neither afterward could the beleeuers confeſſe ſuch workes, as they did in their infidelitie.

Thirdly, it is vntrue, that you ſay; for you require confeſſion of all whatſoeuer, neither do you giue abſolution, but vpon ſuch confeſſion: but all that ſinne haue neede of abſolution: therefore all muſt confeſſe.

Fourthly, it is euident, that this confeſsion of their workes was publike, as it is expreſſed verſ.19. They which vſed curious artes, burned their bookes: In conſpectu omnium, in the ſight of all.

Fiftly, if the Scriptures authorize not any law to enioyne confeſsion, it is great preſumption for you, to lay ſuch a yoke vpon the Lordes people.

Argum 4. 2.Cor.5.19. He hath committed to vs the word of reconciliation, now wee are embaſſadours for Chriſt,&c. But how can men be reconciled, vnleſſe they make their caſe knowne, and confeſſe their ſinnes. Bellarm.cap.4.loc.2.

Anſw. 1. If thoſe Embaſſadors reconciled to themſelues, it were fit confeſsion ſhould be made to them, but ſeeing they pray to be reconciled to God, it ſufficeth to confeſſe to God. 2. The word of reconciliation is committed vnto them: Ergo, by the preaching of the word men are reconciled: but confeſſion of ſinnes is not requiſite at euery preaching of the word.

*Argum.*5. Iam.5.16. Confeſſe your ſinnes one to another, and pray one for another: that is, the Elders and Prieſtes ſpoken of verſ.14. muſt pray for them, and to them they muſt confeſſe: Bellarmin. ibid.

Anſw. This place is very direct againſt them. 1. If to confeſſe one to another, be vnderſtood of the people and the prieſt, then muſt the prieſt confeſſe to the people, as the people doth to him: for ſo the word ἀλλήλων ſignifieth, as 1.Theſſ.4.18. Comfort your ſelues one another,&c. 2. The Apoſtle addeth, The prayer of a righteous man auaileth much; hee ſaith not, the prayer of a righteous Prieſt, but of any righteous: ſo verſ.19. If any of you hath erred, and ſome man hath conuerted him,&c. He ſpeaketh not onely of the Miniſter, but of any other faithfull man.

*Argum.*6. 1.Iohn 1.9. If we acknowledge our ſinnes, he is faithfull and iuſt to forgiue vs our ſinnes, and to cleanſe vs from all vnrighteouſneſſe: this is not vnderſtood of confeſſion made to God. 1. For Gods faithfulneſſe is in keeping his promiſe; but there is no promiſe extant in Scripture, of forgiueneſſe to thoſe, that confeſſe to God, but to thoſe, that confeſſe to the Miniſters,&c. 2. And if it ſufficed to confeſſe to God; men would not care to ſeeke for forgiueneſſe at mans hands, and ſo Chriſt had ſaid in vaine, Whoſe ſinnes ye remit,&c. Bellarm.c.4.

Anſw. Firſt, it is boldly and vntruely affirmed, that there is no promiſe, &c. to them that confeſſe to God: there is 1. nothing more euident in Scripture, as 1.King.8.47. If they ſinne againſt thee, &c. and returne and pray, ſaying, Wee haue ſinned and done wickedly, then heare thou in heauen, and be mercifull: here is a direct promiſe of mercie to thoſe that confeſſe to God. 2. Neither is the Miniſtrie to be deſpiſed, but there is great vſe thereof: 1. both by the preaching of the word, in calling vpon the people to repent, and confeſſe their ſinnes to God: 2. And where the griefe of ſin is ſuch, as the ſoule of the penitent cannot wraſtle againſt it, in this caſe he is to reſort to the Miniſter. 3. And it is the Miniſters part, where hee ſeeth euident ſignes of repentance, to declare the mercie of God, and looſing of ſinnes vnto ſuch, though not confeſſed vnto him: Peter confeſſed not to Chriſt, but only wept, and was forgiuen: the inceſtuous partie confeſſed not to Paul, but by his great ſorrow ſhewed his repentance, yet the Apoſtle forgaue him, 2. Corinth.2.10. 4. Like as then the Leper being firſt cured of Chriſt, was bidde to ſhew himſelfe to the Prieſt, Matth.8.4. according to the law: ſo they, which confeſſing vnto God, do finde remiſſion, muſt notwithſtanding by the miniſtrie of the word labour to be confirmed therein.

Secondly, this place is chiefly to be vnderſtood of confeſſing vnto God. 1. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh generally of all, excluding not himſelfe: but to whom ſhould the Apoſtles confeſſe but vnto God. 2. The Apoſtle ſaith, to cleanſe vs: but man can not cleanſe vs, this is onely Gods worke. 3. And God onely cleanſeth from all vnrighteouſneſſe: for all our ſinnes cannot be made manifeſt to men, no, not to our owne conſcience: but, though our owne heart condemne vs not: God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things. 1.Iohn 3.20.

*Argum.*7. In the laſt place Bellarmine produceth many teſtimonies out of the councels and fathers, to proue auricular and particular confeſſion, making them to ſpeake that, which they neuer knew: the places alleaged, I purpoſe not particularly to anſwere, for theſe reaſons. 1. Becauſe my purpoſe is to deale chiefely with places of Scripture. 2. For that I entending chiefly the good and profite of the vnlearned, I would not diſtract them, or hinder them from more profitable knowledge by the curious diſcuſsing of the fathers. 3. This worke would by this meanes haue growen to a greater volume, then was fit for euery mans vſe. 4. I thought it not needfull to handle at large theſe teſtimonies, writing in our owne language, which the aduerſarie, that firſt gaue occaſion vnderſtandeth not. 5. Becauſe ſome other learned men of our Church, with a godly zeale and good ſucceſſe, haue alreadie vndertaken the thorough confutation of all popiſh allegations: to whom I wiſh both all diuine aſsiſtance, and humane encouragement, to proceed in ſo excellent an enterpriſe. 6. The Printer haſtening the worke, which was more then halfe printed, before all was finiſhed, neither time nor leiſure ſerued to deale in the teſtimonies of the fathers.

D.Reynolds.
D.Sutcliffe.

Yet thus much ſhall ſuffice for a generall anſwere at this time: that none of the teſtimonies alleaged, till we come to the yeere 600. and after, when ſuperſtition began to encreaſe (and the teſtimonies of the times following we much regard not) do witneſſe for auricular confeſſion: but all of them, if a ſuruey be taken of them, do ſpeake of one of theſe fiue confeſſions: eyther 1. of confeſſion to be made to God: as Tertullian; Exomologeſis eſt, qua delictum Domino confitemur: That is confeſſion, whereby wee do confeſſe our ſinne vnto God, Apologet. cap. 4. Or els 2. of publike confeſsion made before the whole Church, for ſome publike ſinne; as the ſame Tertullian: Ergo, cùm te ad fratrum genua protendis, Chriſtum exoras: When thou boweſt thy ſelfe to thy brethrens feete, thou entreateſt Chriſt. Thirdly, they ſpeake of a confeſsion, which they made each to other, Beda in 5. Iacob. Quotidiana leuiaq; peccata alterutrum coæqualibus confiteamur, &c. Our daily ſinnes let vs confeſſe to our equals, one to another. Fourthly, they commend confeſsion made to the Prieſt, when the conſcience otherwiſe cannot be ſetled: ſo Origen. hom. 2. in Pſal. 37. Sicut ij qui habent intus incluſam eſcam indigeſtam, &c. As they, which haue meate vndigeſted in the ſtomacke, if they do vomite, are eaſed; ſo they that ſinne, while they conceale it, are in a manner choaked, but vomiting of it vp by confeſsion, &c. Fiftly, a generall confeſsion to bee made, with reconciliation before the receiuing of the Communion, Cyprian maketh mention of: Nec ad communicationem venire quis poſſit: But none might come to the Communion, before hee had confeſſed, &c. lib. 3. epiſt. 16. All theſe kinds of confeſsions we acknowledge to haue been wel knowne to the fathers, neyther do wee miſlike them: but none of the ancient writers for 600. yeeres after Chriſt do witneſſe for auricular confeſsion, and particular enumeration of ſinnes.

The Proteſtants.

Confeſſion of ſinnes, ſuch as the Scripture alloweth, we doe acknowledge: as namely theſe foure kindes: There are priuate confeſſions, either to God alone, as Daniel confeſſeth, 9.4. or for the eaſing of our conſcience, to man alſo, as to him whom we haue offended, Matth. 5.24. or to any other faithfull man, the Miniſter or ſome other, that we may be holpen and comforted by our mutuall prayers, Iam. 5.16.

And herein we thinke and ſay with Biſhop Ridley holy Martyr: Confeſſion to the Miniſter, which is able to inſtruct, correct, comfort, and enforme the weake, wounded, and ignorant conſcience, indeed I euer thought might doe much good in Chriſts congregation, and ſo I aſſure you I thinke euen at this day, pag. 1728. Epiſtol. ad Weſt.

There are alſo two kinds of publique confeſſion, either of the whole congregation together, Nehe. 9.3. or of ſome one or more, that make publique confeſſion of their ſinne, for the ſatisfying of the congregation, whom they haue offended: which belongeth to Eccleſiaſticall diſcipline, 2. Corinth. 2.6. Beſide theſe kindes of confeſſion, it is commendable alſo, which is practized in ſome reformed Churches, that before the receiuing of the Sacrament, particular examination ſhould be had of ſuch as are to communicate, not ſo much to confeſſe ſuch ſinnes to the Miniſter, as doe grieue their conſcience, and ſo to finde eaſe for their griefe; as it is vſed to be done to this day in the reformed Churches of Bohemia. Harm. ſect. 8. c. 5. confeſſ. Bohem. And of Auſpurge, ſect. 8. artic. 3. and of Saxonie, ſect. 14. confeſſ. Saxon. Neither are any admitted to the Communion, except they be firſt heard and abſolued of the paſtor: but chieflie that euery one may be particularly examined, tried and made fit concerning their faith, and ſo prepared to come worthilie to the Lordes table: this vſe Kemnitius thus writeth of, in 2. part. exam. c. 5. de confeſſ. Confeſſionis vſus apud nos ſeruatur, &c. The vſe of confeſſion is reteyned with vs, &c. In this priuate colloquie, the paſtors doe make triall of their auditors, whether they vnderſtand the doctrine of ſinne, of the degrees of ſinne, of the wages thereof, and of faith in Chriſt, they are brought to a conſideration of their ſinnes, and asked if they doe earneſtly repent for the ſame, if they haue a purpoſe to amend their life, and whether they doe not continue in certaine ſinnes, &c. Maſter Caluine alſo approueth this vſe: Lib. 3. inſtitut. cap. 4. ſect. 13. Interim quia ſiſtant ſe oues paſtori, &c. That the ſheepe ſhould preſent themſelues to the Paſtor, as often as they receiue the Communion, I am ſo farre from reclayming againſt it, that I would haue it euery where obſerued. And Epiſtol. 302. he ſheweth, that the like vſe is retained in Geneua. That no man may come to the holy table, before it be known to the Miniſter, that he hath profited in religion in ſome meaſure; and once a yeare the Miniſter in euery quarter goeth to euery houſe, to make triall both of their life and faith. Such confeſsion, triall and examination, as theſe Churches haue receiued, I hold very conuenient and profitable, and the like to be deſired and much wiſhed for in our Church. But this particular confeſsion, yea 1. of all ſinnes, euen of them which are 2. ſecret, 3. and vpon paine of damnation, 4. and to none but the Prieſt, how vnfit ſoeuer; is an Antichriſtian yoake.

Argum. 1. It is not neceſſarie to make confeſſion at all vnto men: the Prophet Dauid confeſſeth onely vnto God. Againſt thee O Lord onely haue I ſinned, Pſal. 51.4. Auguſtine alſo ſayth, Quid mihi cum hominibus vt audiant confeſſiones meas, quaſi ipſi ſanaturi ſint languores meos? What haue men to doe to heare my confeſſions, as though they were able to heale my ſores? Confeſſion. lib. 10.3.

*Argum.*2. If a man otherwiſe cannot finde eaſe of conſcience, but will open his ſinnes to men: it is not alwayes neceſſarie he ſhould ſeeke to the Miniſter, though it be moſt conuenient, if hee be a fit man; any other faithfull godly man may ſerue: for ſo the Apoſtle biddeth vs, Acknowledge our faults, not to the prieſt, but one to another, Iam.5.16. Whereupon Auguſtine writeth, Peccata noſtra debemus non ſolum Deo, ſed etiam ſanctis & Deum timentibus confiteri: We muſt confeſſe our ſinnes not onely to God, but to men alſo that feare God: He ſayth not Sacerdotibus, only to the Prieſts, *Homil.*12.

*Argum.*3. Such a particular enumeration of ſinnes is not neceſſarie, neither is it poſſible: It ſufficeth, where our ſinnes are kept from our ſight, to ſay with the Prophet, Cleanſe mee from my ſecret ſinnes, Pſalm.19.12. Auguſtine ſayth, Quot habes in corde compunctiones facinorum, tot babe illic punctiones confeſſionum: Looke how many ſinnes doe pricke thy conſcience, ſo muſt thy confeſſion be. It is an vncomfortable doctrine to teach men to labour to remember all their ſinnes, and to make a particular catalogue of them: they haue worke enough to be eaſed of thoſe ſinnes that lye heauie on the heart.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that if the enumeration of ſinnes to men be impoſſible, and vncomfortable, ſo is it in our confeſſion to God, to whom alſo wee are to confeſſe, whatſoeuer ſinnes wee know, and remember, and otherwiſe men are not enioyned to confeſſe to the Prieſt. *Bellarmin. lib.*3.*c.*16.

Contra. Firſt, the Lord himſelfe doth not exact ſuch a particular enumeration, as the Popiſh law doth: for Chriſt teaching his Diſciples to pray, taught them to ſay thus, Forgiue vs our treſpaſſes,&c. not willing them to make a particular rehearſall of their ſinnes; but the Popiſh Prieſts will accept no confeſſion, if it be not particular. Secondly, in making confeſsion to God, the Lord may bring our ſinnes to remembrance, Pſalm.50.21. I will ſet them in order before thee, which the Prieſt cannot doe. Thirdly, there is more comfort in confeſsing to God, becauſe he hath power onely to forgiue, the other is but as Gods miniſter, and it is more comfortable to goe to the Maſter, then to the ſeruant: and we may more boldly open our infirmities to God, which we often are aſhamed to ſhew to men.

*Argum.*4. Chriſt ſaith, As my father ſent me, ſo ſend I you; and then he ſayd, receiue ye the holy Ghoſt; whoſe ſinnes ye remit, &c. Here our Sauiour Chriſt giueth authoritie and power to remit ſinnes, to his Apoſtles, as he himſelfe executed the ſame in earth: But Chriſt forgaue ſinnes without any ſuch particular confeſſion, as to the woman, Luk.7. that waſhed his feete with her teares: Ergo, remiſſion of ſinnes may be pronounced without auricular confeſsion, whereas by other ſignes the ſorrow of the heart may be made knowen.

Bellarm. The Apoſtles had not the like power to remit ſinnes, as Chriſt himſelfe had: for Chriſt was able to iuſtifie and forgiue ſinnes without a ſacrament: But the Apoſtles did it by meanes: *Bellarm.cap.*18. Neither as yet was the ſacrament of confeſſion inſtituted cap. 17.

*Anſw.*1. The difference between Chriſts and his Apoſtles working is this, that Chriſt by his owne power did forgiue ſinnes, the Apoſtles in Chriſts name onely, as his Miniſters and inſtruments: But concerning the outward meanes of ſaluation, Chriſt vſed the ſame which his Apoſtles did: he preached the Goſpell, called for faith, and repentance, as his Apoſtles afterward did: and as Chriſt then forgaue ſinnes without a ſacrament, ſo did hee by the miniſterie of his Apoſtles: Paul hath the word of reconciliation committed to him, 2.Cor.5.19. he reconcileth to God by the preaching of the Goſpell, which was no ſacrament. *Concil. Cabilanenſ. can.*33. Deus ſalutis & ſanitatis author plerunque hanc præbet ſuæ potentiæ inuiſibili adminiſtratione, plerunque medicorum operatione: God the autor of health and ſaluation, often giueth remiſſion of ſinnes by his inuiſible power, often by the miniſterie of the ſpirituall Phiſitian. Sinnes are euen now forgiuen without the miniſterie of man, and without auricular confeſſion, and conſequently without your popiſh ſacrament of Penance: this therefore maketh no difference betweene Chriſts working, and his Apoſtles working.

2 But be it granted that Chriſts power herein was greater then his Apoſtles to forgiue ſinnes without confeſſion: was alſo the power of the Prophets greater then theirs? I thinke they will not ſay ſo: yet Nathan pronounced abſolution of Dauids ſinnes, without particular confeſſion, he only ſayd in generall, I haue ſinned: therefore the Apoſtles did, and ſo the miniſters of the Goſpell may remit ſinnes without auricular confeſſion.

3 If your Sacrament of confeſsion were not inſtituted by Chriſt (which is the reaſon that you giue, why he vſed it not) then is there no ſuch Sacrament at all: for Chriſt onely inſtituted Sacraments, the Apoſtles inſtituted none, but deliuered to the Church, as they had receiued from Chriſt. 1.Cor.11.23.

*Argum.*5. A notable euidence againſt auricular and priuate confeſsion we haue out of Sozomen his ſtorie, *lib.*7.*c.*16. Who thus reporteth, that Nectarius Patriarch of Conſtantinople, by reaſon of an adulterous acte committed betweene a Deacon of the Church, and a noble Matron, that came to confeſſe to the penitentiarie Prieſt, depoſed the ſaid Prieſt, and aboliſhed that kinde of confeſsion, And permitted, that euery man ſhould doe according to his owne conſcience in comming to the ſacred myſteries.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Nectarius diſcontinued publike, not priuate confeſsion, becauſe the woman publikely confeſſing her fault, there followed a tumult among the people: 2. and after Nectarius time, priuate confeſsion was vſed in the Greeke Church: *Bellarm.lib.3.cap.*14. 3. Yea, they themſelues allow priuate confeſsion. Ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, Nectarius aboliſhed priuate not publike confeſsion: 1. For the office of the Penitentiarie, was to receiue their confeſsion ſecretly, Quia graue viſum eſt Epiſcopis in media plebe, velut in theatro, &c. It ſeemed hard to the Biſhops, that in the middeſt of the people, as in a theater, they ſhould confeſſe their ſinnes: *Nicephor.lib.*12.*c.*28. Further, 2. Socrates ſaith, that the woman comming to the Penitentiarie, did particulatim, particularly confeſſe her ſinnes: *lib.*5. *cap.*19. 3. The tumult might ariſe not vpon hir publike confeſsion, but the publike notice afterward.

Secondly, priuate confeſsion was not after this vſed in the Greeke Church: 1. Origene ſaith, *Hom.*1. *in Pſalm.*36. Si malorum tibi conſcius, &c. If thou art guiltie to thy ſelfe of any ſinnes, reueale them by confeſsion to the Lord; truſt in him, and he will heale thee. 2. *Chryſoſtome hom.*2. *in Pſalm.*50. Si confunderis alicui dicere, &c. If thou be aſhamed to confeſſe to another, confeſſe thy ſinnes in thine owne ſoule, I ſay not, thou ſhouldeſt confeſſe to thy fellow ſeruant, to caſt thee in the teeth, but to God, &c. 3. *Decr.p.*2.*cauſ.*33. *diſt.*1.*c.*90. Some doe ſay that we muſt confeſſe only to God, vt Græci, as the Grecians. Bellarmine ſaith, that theſe words, vt Græci, are like to haue been thruſt into the text. Anſw. So he ſaith, that Sozomen the reporter of this ſtorie, telleth many lies: Theſe are but groſſe ſhifts. 4. Thom.Waldenſ. a Popiſh writer graunteth, that Nectarius did ſimplie abrogate confeſsion.

Thirdly, priuate confeſsion with examination and triall of euery mans faith, we acknowledge in ſuch manner as I haue before expreſſed, but a particular enumeration of ſinnes, with a neceſſitie of conſcience, which breedeth ſuperſtition, rather then inſtruction, without any godly conſolation or exhortation at all miniſtred, we refuſe and condemne as Antichriſtian.

We want not here the teſtimony of antiquitie: *Alexander epiſt.*1. Confeſſio non extorqueri debet, ſed ſponte potius profiteri: Confeſſion muſt not bee violently extorted, but voluntarily confeſſed: but now in the Popiſh Church euery man is bound of neceſſitie to profeſſe.

*Concil. Cabilonenſ.can.*33. Et peccata confiteamur Deo, &c. Let vs both confeſſe our ſinnes vnto God, and ſay with Dauid, againſt thee haue I ſinned, or confeſſed my ſinne, and according to the inſtitution of the Apoſtle, let vs confeſſe one to another, that we may pray one for another to be ſaued. As wee muſt pray one for another, ſo we muſt confeſſe our ſinnes one to another: Now the Prieſt only prayeth not for the people, but the people alſo for the Prieſt: Ergo, neither muſt they confeſſe their ſinnes onely to the Prieſt.

*Interrelig. Cæſar cap.*17. Quæ in mentem non veniunt generali confeſſioni recte includuntur, & nihilominus ea remittuntur, quam ſi ea confitendo enumeraſſes: Thoſe ſinnes which come not to thy minde, muſt be included in a generall confeſſion, and they ſhall notwithſtanding as fully be remitted as if they were particularly numbred. A particular enumeration therefore of ſinnes is it not neceſſarie; as now in the popiſh Church is required.

We haue ſufficient euidence out of their owne decrees. *Decret. part.*2. *cauſ.*33. *diſt.*1. *cap.*1.2. Non inuenio, quid dixerit Petrus; inuenio quod fleuerit, &c. I finde not what Peter ſaid, I finde he did weepe, &c. Lachrymæ lauent delictum, &c. Let teares waſh away the ſinne, which it is a ſhame to confeſſe.

*Ibid.c.*34. gloſſ. Antequam ſacerdotibus ora noſtra oſtendamus: Before wee ſhew our face to the Prieſt, that is, confeſſe our ſinnes, we are cleanſed from the leproſie of ſinne. *Cap.*37. gloſſ. Sicut circumciſio data eſt Abrahamo: As circumciſion was giuen to Abraham as a ſigne of iuſtice, not as a cauſe of iuſtification, ſo confeſſion is offered to the Prieſt, in token of pardon receiued, not as a cauſe of remiſſion to be obtained.

*Magiſt.lib.*4 *diſtinct.*17.a. Ore tacente interdum veniam conſequimur: Sometime wee obtaine pardon, the mouth being ſilent: if therefore remiſſion of ſinnes may be had, where there is no confeſsion at all; and, where confeſsion is vſed, it is a ſigne of remiſsion alreadie had, not a cauſe of remiſsion afterward to be obtained, then is not ſuch confeſsion neceſſarie to obtaine remiſsion of ſinnes, as is by the Papiſts affirmed.

This truth alſo hath the ſeale of the holy martyrs: Leonard Keyſer of Bauaria burned for denying auricular confeſſion: yet three kinds of confeſſions be granted: the firſt of faith; which is alwaies neceſſarie: the ſecond of charitie; when a man hath offended his neighbour: the third not to be deſpiſed, which is to aske counſell of the auncient Miniſters of the Church, pag.885.

Iohn Bradford holy Martyr, ſetteth downe theſe reaſons againſt auricular confeſſion: firſt, they make it meritorious. Secondly, they make it of neceſſitie, taking him for no good Chriſtian, that vſeth it not: Thirdly, it requireth an impoſſibility, that is, the numbring and telling of al our ſins. Fourthly, it alloweth praying to Saints: Precor ſanctam Mariam, you muſt ſay, or the Prieſt for you. Fiftly, it is iniurious to the libertie of the Goſpel, &c. pag. 1653.

AN APPENDIX OF OTHER CIRCVMSTANCES of Auricular confeſſion.

The Papiſts.

59. Error. 1. THis order and cuſtome of Confeſſion, they hold to be a diuine ordinance, no humane tradition, Concil. Trid. ſeſſ. 14. can. 6. 8.

Argum. 1. The antiquitie of confeſſion ſheweth it to be a diuine ordinance, ſeeing it hath bin alway vſed in the Church, euen from the beginning, Bellarm. lib. 3. 12.

Anſw. Firſt, It is vntrue, that auricular confeſſion hath been of ancient time vſed in the Church: In Chryſoſtomes time it was not: who ſayth, I require thee not, that thou ſhouldeſt confeſſe thy ſinnes to thy fellow ſeruant: in Pſal. 30. homil. 1. Your owne gloſſe ſayth: This inſtitution of penance began rather of ſome tradition of the vniuerſall Church, then of any authoritie of the old or new Teſtament: De pœnitent. diſtinct. 5. in principio. Eraſm. in ſchol. in epitaphium Fabiolæ. Eraſmus ſaith, apparet tempore Hieronymi inſtitutam non fuiſſe: It appeareth, that in the time of Hierome, this ſecret confeſſion of ſinnes was not ordained, &c. But herein our Diuines not aduiſedly conſidering, what the olde Doctors doe ſay, are deceiued: that which they ſay of generall and open confeſſion, they wreſt by and by to this ſecret and priuie kinde of confeſſion. Secondly, it is apparant, that there was no publike conſtitution for auricular confeſſion before the Laterane Councell, anno 1215. held by Innocentius 3. ſo that from thence it ſeemeth to take beginning.

Argum. 2. Auricular confeſſion ſeemeth ſo hard and difficult a thing, that it is like the people would neuer haue endured it, if it had not been by ſome diuine authoritie eſtabliſhed: And againe, ſuch is the vtilitie and profit that ariſeth thereby, that God muſt needs be the author thereof. Bellarm. lib. 3, cap. 12.

The commodities that confeſsion bringeth, he rehearſeth to be theſe. Firſt, Gods mercie appeareth, not in condemning vpon confeſsion (as the iudges of this world doe) but in forgiuing: his iuſtice, in that firſt, men are humbled by confeſsion. Secondly, the Paſtors themſelues are benefited, in knowing by this meanes the diſeaſes of their ſheepe, that they may miniſter the remedies the better, and applie the word againſt ſuch ſinnes. Thirdly, the commonwealth is profited, when as by this meanes men are reconciled, things are reſtored, &c. which things by the earthlie Courts cannot be amended. Fourthly, the parties themſelues doe finde mercie for ſinnes paſt, and ſtrength to reſiſt the like afterward. Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. 1. Auricular confeſſion in deed is a grieuous and hard yoke, which becauſe the people haue borne, it followeth not, it ſhould be of Gods inſtitution: It was 1. an hard thing, that the idolatrous Iſraelites ſhould ſacrifice their children to their idols, that Baals Prieſts ſhould launce their fleſh with kniues. The Phariſees 2. alſo did lay heauie burdens and grieuous to be borne vpon the people, Matth. 23. 3. yet none of all theſe were of God. Many things beſide were hard in poperie: as that the Pope ſhould 3. tread vpon Emperors neckes, and make them his vaſſals and ſlaues, that he ſhould with his taxes, annates, Peterpence, rob and pill the people, all theſe were hard yokes: to the which the people were made ſubiect, not wittingly, nor by the working of any diuine power; but as S. Paul prophecied: God ſent them ſtrong deluſions to beleeue lyes, 2. Theſ. 2. 11. they were beſotted with a ſuperſtitious feare, and ſo became ſlaues to this yoke of confeſſion, and other obſeruances. And 4. againe, in that the Ieſuite ſaith, it is an hard yoke, he hath made an argument againſt himſelfe, for Chriſt ſaith, my yoke is eaſie: therefore this yoke being hard, is none of Chriſts.

2 Concerning the fruite and vtilitie, that commeth by auricular confeſſion, you ſhall ſee what it is. Concil. Lateranenſ. part. 50. ca. 21. Significaſti nobis quendam Preſbyterum cum alterius coniuge diabolico inſtinctu in eccleſia frequenter dormiuiſſe: You ſignified to vs that a certaine Prieſt of a diueliſh motion, did often lie with an other mans wife in the Church. Here we ſee adulterie is one fruite of ſuch confeſſion. Further ſaith Robert Smith holy Martyr, it hath been a bewrayer of Kings ſecrets, and the ſecrets of other mens conſciences: and it hath been vſed as a meane to picke mens purſes: as he reporteth a ſtorie of his owne knowledge, how a Gentleman his Maſter, confeſſed to a Prieſt, was bound by the Prieſt to forgiue a great ſumme of money to one Maſter Greſham, whereof the Prieſt had a good ſhare, and ſo robbed his wife and children: and how afterward a great part of that debt by the gentlemans brother, ſome two or three hundreth poundes was recouered. Fox. pag. 1692. Here be other fruites of auricular confeſſion, treaſon, couſonage, robberie: And therefore it was well ſaid of one Richard Boſtocke, (who was perſecuted for it) that auricular confeſſion had killed more ſoules, then all the billes, clubbes, and halters haue done, ſithence King Henry was King of England, pag. 1205. col. 1.

3 As for thoſe particular commodities rehearſed, they ariſe not of auricular confeſſion. Firſt, Gods mercie is more ſeene in forgiuenes without confeſſion made to men, when as we confeſſe onely to God, Pſal. 32. 5. I confeſſed my wickednes to the Lord, and thou forgaueſt me, &c. His iuſtice alſo, in that he forgiueth not, but where men are firſt humbled by true ſorrow and contrition: as Peter wept bitterly before he found mercie, and yet confeſſed not.

Secondly, it is not any way profitable to the Paſtor to know mens particular faults, a generall confeſſion, with ſome rehearſall of the manifeſt and greater ſinnes ſufficeth for the knowledge of the Paſtor: neither ſhould the Miniſter be ſo vndiſcreete, as to bring mens ſecret infirmities into the pulpit: this maketh nothing for auricular confeſſion.

Thirdly, I ſhewed before, that this auricular confeſſion was the occaſion of adulteries, treaſons, reuealing of ſecrets, of couſenage, and ſuch like: therefore the Common-wealth was hindred thereby, not benefited any thing at all.

Fourthly, the parties confeſſing, did neither find true remiſſion for their ſinnes paſt, (being taught rather by their owne ſatisfactorie workes to merite their forgiuenes, than to depend vpon Gods mercie:) neither were they armed againſt ſinne afterwards, but rather emboldened to commit the like; ſeeing by confeſſion in the eares of the prieſt, and by procuring his fauour, they might yeerely be cleered from their offences.

Fiftly, all theſe aforeſaid benefits the Church enioyed in the Apoſtles time: Gods mercie and iuſtice appeared in forgiuenes of ſins: the paſtors and teachers tooke knowledge of the diſeaſes of their flocke; many notorious ſinners were corrected and amended; the penitent perſons found comfort and ſtrength againſt ſinne: yet was there then no auricular confeſſion heard of, nor many yeares after.

Sixtly, for the profite and vtilitie that commeth by auricular confeſſion, their owne Canons witneſſe: Cauſ. 30. qu. 1. c. 10. Non debet Epiſcopus aut Presbyter commiſceri, &c. The Biſhop or Presbyter muſt not companie with the women that come to confeſſe: Such trickes as theſe, were very common, when popiſh confeſſion was vſed. Cauſ. 33. diſt. 6. c. 2. Deponatur, &c. Let him be depoſed, that reuealeth the ſinnes of the penitent perſon: This was an other of the fruits, to reueale the ſecrets of them which confeſſed.

The Proteſtants.

THey are neuer able to ſhewe that it had any diuine inſtitution: but it was a meere deuiſe and inuention of men. Firſt, we reade that Nectarius a good Biſhop of Conſtantinople, did abrogate this cuſtome of confeſſion vpon this occaſion, which had before time been vſed in that Church: for it was found out, that a certaine woman of the citie, vnder this pretence of confeſſion, had vnlawfull companie with the Prieſt to whom ſhe confeſſed: whereupon the good man aboliſhed that cuſtome, ſeeing more harme than good to come by it. And this act of his was approued by that famous preacher Chryſoſtome, who ſucceeded him in that See: but if it had been the ordinance of God, it ought not for ſome abuſe to haue been aboliſhed.

Beza Antith. pap. cap. 7.

Bellarmine anſwereth: Firſt, that Sozomene the reporter of this ſtorie, Multa eſſe mentitum, hath forged many things therein. Secondly, he denyeth, that Nectarius the author of this act, was, Vir ſanctitate, & eruditione clarus: A man famous for his holines and learning, as Caluine ſpeaketh of him. But theſe are but ſillie ſhiftes: to blame the author and the reporter: he anſwereth therefore in the third place, that Nectarius onely aboliſhed publike confeſſion, becauſe the woman publikely acknowledging her adulterie, cauſed a tumult and vprore among the people. Bellarmine cap. 14.

Anſw. It appeareth rather that Nectarius aboliſhed priuate confeſſion, than publike. 1. He did remoue the Prieſt from his office, that was appointed to take the confeſſions: which Prieſt was elected from the reſt, Probata vita, taciturnus & prudens: Such an one as was of an honeſt life, and could keepe counſell. But what neede he deepe counſell in publike confeſſions, made in the hearing of all? Bellarmine anſwereth: that ſome ſinnes he heard publikely, ſome priuately, which required ſecrecie. Anſwere: But Nectarius abrogauit Preſbyterium pœnitentiarium, did abrogate the whole office of the penitentiarie Prieſt, as the Ieſuite confeſſeth, ſo that he had no power, no not to heare priuate confeſſions. 2. Publike confeſſion could not be any cauſe of the womans adulterie, but was a meanes rather to reſtraine it, and therefore Nectarius ſhould not haue done well, to haue remoued that, which was a bridle to ſinne; neither would Chryſoſtome his ſucceſſor haue conſented thereto: but priuate confeſſion hath giuen very fit oportunitie to the committing of vncleannes, as we heard before out of the Laterane Councell: this therefore was abrogate, not the other. 3. Publike confeſſion remained a long time after Nectarius dayes in the Church: as Auguſtine reporteth of one Victorinus a Rhetorician, who being conuerted to the faith, fidem ex edito loco profeſſus eſt, did profeſſe the Chriſtian faith ſolemnely out of an high place in the make it meritorious. Secondly, they make it of neceſſitie, taking him for no good Chriſtian, that vſeth it not: Thirdly, it requireth an impoſſibility, that is, the numbring and telling of al our ſins. Fourthly, it alloweth praying to Saints: Precor ſanctam Mariam, you muſt ſay, or the Prieſt for you. Fiftly, it is iniurious to the libertie of the Goſpel, &c. pag. 1653.

AN APPENDIX OF OTHER CIRCVMSTANces of Auricular confeſſion.

The Papiſts.

59. Error.

1. THis order and cuſtome of Confeſſion, they hold to be a diuine ordinance, no humane tradition, Concil. Trid. ſeſſ. 14. can. 6. 8.

Argum. 1. The antiquitie of confeſſion ſheweth it to be a diuine ordinance, ſeeing it hath bin alway vſed in the Church, euen from the beginning, Bellarm. lib. 3. 12.

Anſw. Firſt, It is vntrue, that auricular confeſſion hath been of ancient time vſed in the Church: In Chryſoſtomes time it was not: who ſayth, I require thee not, that thou ſhouldeſt confeſſe thy ſinnes to thy fellow ſeruant: in Pſal. 30. homil. 1. Your owne gloſſe ſayth: This inſtitution of penance began rather of ſome tradition of the vniuerſall Church, then of any authoritie of the old or new Teſtament: De pœnitent. diſtinct. 5. in principio. Eraſmus ſaith, apparet tempore Hieronymi inſtitutam non fuiſſe: (Eraſm. in ſchol. in epitaphium Fabiolæ.) It appeareth, that in the time of Hierome, this ſecret confeſſion of ſinnes was not ordained, &c. But herein our Diuines not aduiſedly conſidering, what the olde Doctors doe ſay, are deceiued: that which they ſay of generall and open confeſſion, they wreſt by and by to this ſecret and priuie kinde of confeſſion. Secondly, it is apparant, that there was no publike conſtitution for auricular confeſſion before the Laterane Councell, anno 1215. held by Innocentius 3. ſo that from thence it ſeemeth to take beginning.

Argum. 2. Auricular confeſſion ſeemeth ſo hard and difficult a thing, that it is like the people would neuer haue endured it, if it had not been by ſome diuine authoritie eſtabliſhed: And againe, ſuch is the vtilitie and profit that ariſeth thereby, that God muſt needs be the author thereof. Bellarm. lib. 3. cap. 12.

The commodities that confeſsion bringeth, he rehearſeth to be theſe. Firſt, Gods mercie appeareth, not in condemning vpon confeſsion (as the iudges of this world doe) but in forgiuing: his iuſtice, in that firſt, men are humbled by confeſsion. Secondly, the Paſtors themſelues are benefited, in knowing by this meanes the diſeaſes of their ſheepe, that they may miniſter the remedies the better, and applie the word againſt ſuch ſinnes. Thirdly, the commonwealth is profited, when as by this meanes men are reconciled, things are reſtored, &c. which things by the earthlie Courts cannot be amended. Fourthly, the parties themſelues doe finde mercie for ſinnes paſt, and ſtrength to reſiſt the like afterward. Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. 1. Auricular confeſſion in deed is a grieuous and hard yoke, which becauſe the people haue borne, it followeth not, it ſhould be of Gods inſtitution: It was 1. an hard thing, that the idolatrous Iſraelites ſhould ſacrifice their children to their idols, that Baals Prieſts ſhould launce their fleſh with kniues. The Phariſees 2. alſo did lay heauie burdens and grieuous to be borne vpon the people, Matth. 23. 3. yet none of all theſe were of God. Many things beſide were hard in poperie: as that the Pope ſhould 3. tread vpon Emperors neckes, and make them his vaſſals and ſlaues, that he ſhould with his taxes, annates, Peterpence, rob and pill the people, all theſe were hard yokes: to the which the people were made ſubiect, not wittingly, nor by the working of any diuine power; but as S. Paul prophecied: God ſent them ſtrong deluſions to beleeue lyes, 2. Theſ. 2. 11. they were beſotted with a ſuperſtitious feare, and ſo became ſlaues to this yoke of confeſſion, and other obſeruances. And 4. againe, in that the Ieſuite ſaith, it is an hard yoke, he hath made an argument againſt himſelfe, for Chriſt ſaith, my yoke is eaſie: therefore this yoke being hard, is none of Chriſts.

2 Concerning the fruite and vtilitie, that commeth by auricular confeſſion, you ſhall ſee what it is. Concil. Lateranenſ. part. 50. ca. 21. Significaſti nobis quendam Preſbyterum cum alterius coniuge diabolico inſtinctu in eccleſia frequenter dormiuiſſe: You ſignified to vs that a certaine Prieſt of a diueliſh motion, did often lie with an other mans wiſe in the Church. Here we ſee adulterie is one fruite of ſuch confeſſion. Further ſaith Robert Smith holy Martyr, it hath been a bewrayer of Kings ſecrets, and the ſecrets of other mens conſciences: and it hath been vſed as a meane to picke mens purſes: as he reporteth a ſtorie of his owne knowledge, how a Gentleman his Maſter, confeſſed to a Prieſt, was bound by the Prieſt to forgiue a great ſumme of money to one Maſter Greſham, whereof the Prieſt had a good ſhare, and ſo robbed his wife and children: and how afterward a great part of that debt by the gentlemans brother, ſome two or three hundreth poundes was recouered. Fox. pag. 1692. Here be other fruites of auricular confeſſion, treaſon, couſonage, robberie: And therefore it was well ſaid of one Richard Boſtocke, (who was perſecuted for it) that auricular confeſſion had killed more ſoules, then all the billes, clubbes, and halters haue done, ſithence King Henry was King of England, pag. 1205. col. 1.

3 As for thoſe particular commodities rehearſed, they ariſe not of auricular confeſſion. Firſt, Gods mercie is more ſeene in forgiuenes without confeſſion made to men, when as we confeſſe onely to God, Pſal. 32. 5. I confeſſed my wickednes to the Lord, and thou forgaueſt me, &c. His iuſtice alſo, in that he forgiueth not, but where men are firſt humbled by true ſorrow and contrition: as Peter wept bitterly before he found mercie, and yet confeſſed not.

Secondly, it is not any way profitable to the Paſtor to know mens particular faults, a generall confeſſion, with ſome rehearſall of the manifeſt and greater ſinnes ſufficeth for the knowledge of the Paſtor: neither ſhould the Miniſter be ſo vndiſcreete, as to bring mens ſecret infirmities into the pulpit: this maketh nothing for auricular confeſſion.

Thirdly, I ſhewed before, that this auricular confeſſion was the occaſion of adulteries, treaſons, reuealing of ſecrets, of couſenage, and ſuch like: therefore the Common-wealth was hindred thereby, not benefited any thing at all.

Fourthly, the parties confeſſing, did neither find true remiſſion for their ſinnes paſt, (being taught rather by their owne ſatisfactorie workes to merite their forgiuenes, than to depend vpon Gods mercie:) neither were they armed againſt ſinne afterwards, but rather emboldened to commit the like; ſeeing by confeſſion in the eares of the prieſt, and by procuring his fauour, they might yeerely be cleered from their offences.

Fiftly, all theſe aforeſaid benefits the Church enioyed in the Apoſtles time: Gods mercie and iuſtice appeared in forgiuenes of ſins: the paſtors and teachers tooke knowledge of the diſeaſes of their flocke; many notorious ſinners were corrected and amended; the penitent perſons found comfort and ſtrength againſt ſinne: yet was there then no auricular confeſſion heard of, nor many yeares after.

Sixtly, for the profite and vtilitie that commeth by auricular confeſſion, their owne Canons witneſſe: Cauſ. 30. qu. 1. c. 10. Non debet Epiſcopus aut Presbyter commiſceri, &c. The Biſhop or Presbyter muſt not companie with the women that come to confeſſe: Such trickes as theſe, were very common, when popiſh confeſſion was vſed. Cauſ. 33. diſt. 6. c. 2. Deponatur, &c. Let him be depoſed, that reuealeth the ſinnes of the penitent perſon: This was an other of the fruits, to reueale the ſecrets of them which confeſſed.

The Proteſtants.

THey are neuer able to ſhewe that it had any diuine inſtitution: but it was a meere deuiſe and inuention of men. Firſt, we reade that Nectarius a good Biſhop of Conſtantinople, did abrogate this cuſtome of confeſſion vpon this occaſion, which had before time been vſed in that Church: for it was found out, that a certaine woman of the citie, vnder this pretence of confeſſion, had vnlawfull companie with the Prieſt to whom ſhe confeſſed: whereupon the good man aboliſhed that cuſtome, ſeeing more harme than good to come by it. Beza Antith. pap. cap. 7.

Bellarmine anſwereth: Firſt, that Sozomene the reporter of this ſtorie, Multa eſſe mentitum, hath forged many things therein. Secondly, he denyeth, that Nectarius the author of this act, was, Vir ſanctitate, & eruditione clarus: A man famous for his holines and learning, as Caluine ſpeaketh of him. But theſe are but ſillie ſhiftes: to blame the author and the reporter: he anſwereth therefore in the third place, that Nectarius onely aboliſhed publike confeſſion, becauſe the woman publikely acknowledging her adulterie, cauſed a tumult and vprore among the people. Bellarmine cap. 14.

Anſw. It appeareth rather that Nectarius aboliſhed priuate confeſſion, than publike. 1. He did remoue the Prieſt from his office, that was appointed to take the confeſſions: which Prieſt was elected from the reſt, Probata vita, taciturnus & prudens: Such an one as was of an honeſt life, and could keepe counſell. But what neede he deepe counſell in publike confeſſions, made in the hearing of all? Bellarmine anſwereth: that ſome ſinnes he heard publikely, ſome priuately, which required ſecrecie. Publike confeſſion could not be any cauſe of the womans adulterie, but was a meanes rather to reſtraine it, and therefore Nectarius ſhould not haue done well, to haue remoued that, which was a bridle to ſinne; neither would Chryſoſtome his ſucceſſor haue conſented thereto: but priuate confeſſion hath giuen very fit oportunitie to the committing of vncleannes, as we heard before out of the Laterane Councell: this therefore was abrogate, not the other. 3. Church: *lib.8.confeſſion.cap.*2. Againe, afterward in the time of *Leo.*1. Biſhop of Rome, *anno.*462. this cuſtome of publike confeſſion was in vſe: which although he ſomewhat reſtraine, leſt ſome for feare, à pœnitentiæ remedijs arcerentur, ſhould be driuen from vſing the remedie of penance: yet he concludeth thus: Plenitudo tamen fidei videtur laudabilis, quæ propter Dei timorem apud homines erubeſcere non veretur. Yet the fulneſſe of faith is commendable, which for the feare of God, refuſeth not to be aſhamed among men: he commendeth publike confeſſion. It was not then by Nectarius abrogated, but continued long after in vſe in the Church: It was therefore priuate confeſſion which he remoued, whereunto Chryſoſtome afterward agreed: Ergo, it was no diuine conſtitution. The more full anſwere to this, ſee before. *queſt.6.argum.proteſtant.*5.

*Argum.*2. Our Sauiour Chriſt neither by precept nor example, ordained auricular confeſſion, nor yet the Apoſtles afterward required of the people any ſuch particular enumeration of their ſinnes: Ergo, it is no diuine ordinance.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Chriſt as yet (that is, while he liued) had not inſtituted the Sacrament of confeſsion: inſinuating thereby, that afterward hee did: their Maſter ſaith, Multa facta ſunt, quæ ſcripta non ſunt: Many things were done, that are not written: Lib.4. diſt.17.f. Bellarmin. lib.3.c.17.

Contra. Firſt, if Chriſt inſtituted not the Sacrament of confeſſion, then is it no Sacrament at all: for 1. he onely had power to inſtitute Sacraments. And 2. it is euident that Chriſt, while he liued vpon the earth, ordained no ſuch thing: as it may appeare by Peters repentance, who wept for his ſinnes, but confeſſed not: and 3. their Maſter graunteth, that Nondum facta erat inſtitutio confeſſionis: That confeſsion was not yet inſtituted. Lib.4. diſt.17.f. 4. If they ſay that Chriſt inſtituted it afterward, *Ioh.*20. when he breathed vpon his Apoſtles, &c. Firſt, that is but a renewing of the power of binding and looſing, and opening and ſhutting, giuen before, *Mat.*16.19. 18.18. For to remit and retaine ſinnes, is the ſame that binding and looſing is. Againe, Chriſt ſaid, Conſummatum eſt, That all was finiſhed vpon the croſſe, that was neceſſarie for the ſaluation of man: Therefore confeſſion, if it be neceſſarie, as they affirme, was inſtituted before: how elſe was all finiſhed.

Secondly, though many particular acts of the Apoſtles were done, that are not written; yet nothing concerning the doctrine of the Church, is vnwritten: and I thinke they are not ſo abſurd, as to build Sacraments vpon vnwritten traditions: they muſt find expreſſe Scripture for Sacraments, which they are neuer able to doe for confeſſion.

Laſtly, what the Apoſtolike inſtitution is for confeſſion, their owne Canons teſtifie: *Diſt.*1. *de pœnitent.c.*90. Apoſtoli inſtitutio nobis ſequenda eſt, vt confiteamur alterutrum peccata noſtra: The Apoſtles inſtitution muſt be followed, to confeſſe our ſinnes one to another.

Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Si deeſt Sacerdos, confiteatur proximo: If a Prieſt cannot be had, let a man
De pœnit.cap. 10. confeſſe to his neighbour: Ergo, to confeſſe to a Prieſt, is no certaine ordinance of God: for then might it not be changed.

Anſw. YEa, but Auguſtine ſaith, Sacerdos, vt perfectus medicus, primùm ſciat curare peccata ſua, & tum detergere aliena: The Prieſt as a cunning phiſition, muſt firſt know how to cure his owne ſinnes, before he can helpe another, *De ſalutaribus docum. cap.*50. And in another place, Quærat ſacerdotem ſcientem ligare & ſoluere, ne ambo cadant in foueam: Let him ſeeke a Prieſt that knoweth how to binde and looſe, leaſt both fall into the ditch, *De pœnitent.diſt.1.c.*88. But ſuch an one cannot be had in euery pariſh: for many times the pariſh Prieſt is worſe then he that commeth to be confeſſed: ſuch an one, Auguſtine ſaith, is not to be taken, and therefore men ſhould not in that caſe binde themſelues to their popiſh Prieſt.

Argum. Saint Iames ſaith: Confeſſe you faultes one to another, and pray one for another that you may be healed, for the prayer of the righteous auaileth much, &c. As we muſt pray one for another, ſo we muſt confeſſe our faultes, but it is not onely the Prieſts part to pray, but euery righteous mans part, (vnleſſe you will ſay, that there are none righteous but Prieſts:) Ergo, we may confeſſe to any righteous man, ſooner then to an vnrighteous Prieſt.

*Synod. Colonienſ.part.7.cap.*33. Magnopere neceſſarium iudicamus, vt Sacerdos, qui à confeſſionibus eſt, ſit integer, eruditus, ſilentij tenax, alioqui diſſipandis, magis quàm paſcendis ouibus videbitur idoneus: We thinke it requiſite, that the Prieſt which receiueth confeſsions, be vpright, learned, ſilent, otherwiſe he is more like to ſpill the ſheepe, then to fill, or feede them. But euery popiſh pariſh Prieſt is not ſuch: Ergo, the people are not bound to confeſſe vnto them.

*Diſt.6. de pœnit.c.*1. Sacerdoti meliori confiteatur: Let a man confeſſe to the beſt Prieſt. *C.*3. Vrbanus alloweth to confeſſe to another prieſt, pro ignorantia, for the ignorance of their owne prieſt. *Sext. decretal. lib.*5. tit. 10.*c.*2. Bonifac. 8. The Biſhop may giue leaue to his ſubiect, Idoneum eligere confeſſorem: To chooſe a fit confeſſor: Therefore it is not neceſſarie to confeſſe to the pariſh prieſt. *Clement.lib.*3.*tit.*3.*c.*2. Licence is graunted to the Friers to heare confeſsions. *Extrauag. commun. lib.*5. tit. 3.*c.*2. Ioan. de Poliaco did hold, that Iterum confitendum eſt: That notwithſtanding confeſsion made to any other, they muſt confeſſe to their owne prieſt, which is by Pope Iohn 22. condemned for an error: ſo that they themſelues are euident witneſſes, that it is not neceſſarie to confeſſe to the pariſh prieſt.

That the actes of penance, as contrition, confeſsion, are meritorious; is both contrary to the Scripture: for after Dauid had confeſſed his ſinne in the preſence of the Prophet *Nathan,*2.Sam. 12.13. yet he prayeth vnto God in this manner, Haue mercie vpon me according to the multitude of thy mercies: he aſcribeth all to Gods mercie, nothing to the merite of his confeſsion.

Saint Ambroſe witneſſeth the ſame, in 1. ad Epheſ. Homines ſic benedicit Deus,&c. God ſo bleſſeth men, that he beſtoweth the gift of grace vpon them, not according to their merits, but according to his mercie.

The Gloſſe vpon their owne Canons, *diſtinct.*1. de pœnitent. c. 37. thus teſtifieth, Fit confeſſio ad oſtenſionem pœnitentiæ, non ad impetrationem veniæ: Confeſsion is made to ſhew repentance, not to obtaine pardon.

This truth alſo is ſealed: Richard Colins troubled for ſaying, That in all thinges wherein he offended God, he ſhould onely ſhriue himſelfe to God; and in which thinges he offended man, he ſhould ſhriue himſelfe to man, *Fox.*pag.832. Ergo, not neceſſarie alwayes to be confeſſed to a Prieſt.

The Papiſts.

THE SEVENTH QVESTION, of ſatisfaction.

THis queſtion containeth theſe parts: Firſt, whether the ſinne being forgiuen, there remaine any puniſhment.

2 Whether the temporall puniſhment of this life may bee redeemed by good workes.

3 Whether the wrath of God may be ſatisfied for ſinne, and the puniſhment due vnto the ſame.

4 Whether one man may ſatisfie for another: of theſe now in their order.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER THE PVNISHment remaine, the ſinne being once pardoned.

The Papiſts.

THey doe affirme, that it may ſtand with the iuſtice of God to forgiue the ſinne committed, and yet reſerue the puniſhment, *Concil.Triden.ſeſſ.*14.*can.*14. 62. Error.

Argum. The Lord forgaue vnto Dauid the ſinne of adulterie and murder, which he had committed, yet hee puniſhed him in the death of his child, 2.Sam.12.13.14. *Bellarmin. lib.*4. *cap.*2.

Anſw. That Croſſe was laid vpon Dauid, not as a puniſhment of his ſinne, but as a fatherly correction or chaſtiſement, to exerciſe him and make him more carefull for the time following: as

De peccat. merit. & remiſſ. lib. 2. 34.

Auguſtine ſaith,writing vpon the ſame example: Subſecutus eſt illius comminationis effectus, vt pietas hominis in illa humilitate exerceretur,atque probaretur: The effect of the threatning immediatly followed,that Dauids godlines might thereby be tried and proued: Hee ſaith not, that Dauid might thereby be puniſhed.

Bellarmine anſwereth: Firſt,but the Scripture ſaith,that Dauids ſinne was the cauſe of the death of his child,becauſe by this deede thou haſt cauſed the enemies of God to blaſpheme, the childe that is borne,ſhall dye,2.Sam.12.14.

Anſ. This place rather maketh againſt the Ieſuite: for Dauid is not here puniſhed in his childe for the deede which he had done, but becauſe in the deede doing he had giuen offence to the enemies of God,both to ſtop their mouthes,that they ſhould not accuſe Gods iuſtice in ſparing Dauid; and to make him more carefull afterward,the Lord ſent this croſſe: as Chryſoſtome ſaith, Hom. de pœnitent. Propter hoc imponit nobis pœnam non de peccatis ſumens ſupplicium, ſed ad futura nos corrigens: For this cauſe God laieth puniſhment vpon vs, not to reuenge our ſinnes,but to correct vs for afterward.

*Bellarm.*2. Death is the puniſhment of originall ſin,and yet although that ſinne be forgiuen vs, death notwithſtanding followeth: Ergo,the puniſhment remaineth after the ſinne remitted.

Anſ. 1. Though death came in firſt by ſin,yet is it not now vnto the children of God a puniſhment of ſin,but an end of their miſerie,and an entrance to a better life: ſinne indeede is a ſting of death,but our ſinnes being forgiuen vs in Chriſt,death hath loſt his ſting,1.Cor.15.55. So death remaineth,but without a ſting, it is no more a puniſhment of ſin to the children of God:ſo then, as the guilt of ſin is taken away,but not the blot or ſtaine therof,ſo the ſting of death,which is the guilt of ſin,is gone,though corruption and mortalitie remaine. Secondly,the cogitation alſo and remẽbrance of death,is a notable meane to withdraw our minds from earthly things,and to prepare vs for the Lord: for this cauſe alſo death remaineth,ſo it is not vnto vs a puniſhment of ſin.

Thus Auguſtine excellently ſaith: Mortem corporis Deus homini,&c. God inflicted vpon man the death of the bodie for ſinne: but after the remiſſion of ſinne,propter exercendam iuſtitiam, he hath not taken it away for the exerciſe of iuſtice: de peccator.remiſſion.lib.2.c.34.

*Arg.*2. 1. The Iſraelites were puniſhed for the golden Calfe,and yet God at Moſes requeſt had pardoned their ſinne,Exod.32. 2. Likewiſe when the people murmured,Numb.14.God,at the prayer of Moſes,forgaue their ſinne,verſ.20. I haue forgiuen it according to thy requeſt: yet they all for this ſinne dyed in the wilderneſſe. 3. So Moſes and Aaron becauſe they did not glorifie God at the waters of ſtrife, receiue this puniſhment,that they ſhould not enter into the land of promiſe, Numb.20.12. and yet no man will ſay, but that Moſes and Aaron after this were reconciled to God. 4. Amongſt the Corinthians diuers were puniſhed with death, for vnworthie receiuing the Sacrament, yet were they reconciled to God: therefore the puniſhment of ſinne oftentimes remaineth,euen after the ſinne is forgiuen,*Bellarm.lib.*4.*de pœnitent.c.*2.

Anſw. Firſt, the two firſt examples haue the ſame anſwere: 1. That in ſome of them who periſhed through vnbeleefe,neither their ſinne was remitted,nor yet the puniſhment: but the temporall plagues were beginnings and forerunners of eternall: as Auguſtine ſaith,Vindicta dei hic incipiet,& ardebit vſque ad extremam damnationem: The Lords reuenge beginneth here,and burneth to extreame condemnation. Your owne Canons affirme the ſame: Moſes pro peccatis populi,&c. Moſes entreated for the ſinnes of the people,but yet obtained no pardon,*decr.par.*1.*diſt.*50.*c.*27. 2. Againe,God at Moſes requeſt did onely pardon that great puniſhment,which he had determined in the vtter ouerthrow, and deſtruction of that nation: Numb.14. 12. I will ſmite them, and make thee a greater nation than they. And thus the Pſalmiſt expoundeth this place,Pſalm.106.23. Therefore he minded to deſtroy them,had not Moſes his choſen ſtood in the breach,to turne away his wrath, leaſt he ſhould deſtroy them. 3. And thoſe iudgements were not ſo much puniſhments to that nation,as examples vnto others,both to acknowledge Gods iuſtice and to glorifie him: Numb.14. verſ.20. I haue forgiuen it according to thy requeſt, notwithſtanding all the earth ſhall be filled with the glorie of the Lord: as alſo to take heede to offend in the like.1.Cor.10,6. Theſe are enſamples to vs,to the entent that we ſhould not luſt after euill things,as they luſted.

Secondly,concerning the examples of Moſes and Aaron,and of the Corinthians, I doe anſwer, that theſe were not puniſhments of their ſins,(for there is no proportion betweene temporall puniſhment,and the greatnes of ſin) but as Auguſtine well ſaith, as he is alſo cited in the Decrees, *diſtinct.*3.*de pœnitent.c.*7. Vel ad demonſtrationem debitæ miſeriæ, vel ad emendationem labilis vitæ, vel ad exercitationem neceſſariæ patientiæ,&c. Either to demonſtrate the deſerued miſerie, or for the amendement of our vncertaine life, or the exerciſing of neceſſarie patience, the puniſhment abideth a man temporally, whom the ſinne condemneth not eternally. So God doth chaſtice his children temporally,either to make them more heedfull,& to draw them more effectually to repentance,or to exerciſe their patience,or for the good example of others: but that their correctiõs are properly puniſhments for ſinnes,it is not to be thought; neither doe theſe examples proue it.

Thus Moſes was corrected, not puniſhed, both that others might take warning by his example, and that he himſelfe ſhould be more carefull not to offend in the like, and that he might thereby be the better prepared, being depriued of the earthly Canaan, to ſeeke for the heauenly.

The Proteſtants.

THat our ſinnes being once freely forgiuen vs in Chriſt, there remaineth no puniſhment either temporall or eternall, to be by vs for our ſinnes endured: we proue it thus.

*Argum.*1. Chriſt ſaid to the ſick of the palſie, Mark.2.5. Sonne, thy ſins are forgiuen thee. Whereby our Sauiour would haue them to vnderſtand, that the ſinne being once forgiuen, the ſickneſſe of the bodie, which was the puniſhment of ſinne, could not continue: for the cauſe being remoued, the effect ceaſeth.

*Arg.*2. Ierem.31.34. The Lord ſaith, I will forgiue their ſins, and remember their iniquities no more. Ezech.18.22. His tranſgreſſions ſhall be mentioned no more vnto him. Iſay.44.22. I haue put away thy tranſgreſſions as a clowd. Mich.7.19. He will caſt all their ſins into the bottome of the ſea. Pſal.32.1. Their ſinne is couered: but the ſinnes of the righteous being once forgiuen, are not couered, no more remembred, caſt into the bottome of the ſea, if they be againe reuiued by puniſhments: Ergo, where ſinne is once freely forgiuen before God, there remaineth no more puniſhment. arg. Caluin.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that God is ſaid, not to remember ſinne, to couer it, to blot it out, though hee doth temporally puniſh for it, becauſe hee doth not remember it vnto euerlaſting puniſhment.

Contra. Firſt, the Lord ſaith, I will remember their iniquities, not for euer, but no more: If then our ſins ſhould be remembred againe, how can it be true, they are remembred no more? to remember no more, and not to remember for euer, are two diuers things. Secondly, Ezech.18.22. it followeth, but in his righteouſneſſe, that he hath done, ſhall be liue: The righteous after his ſinnes are forgiuen, and no more mentioned, liueth in his righteouſneſſe: but to bee puniſhed for ſinne, is not to liue in his righteouſneſſe: for ſinne yet liueth, and is reuiued by the puniſhment: Ergo, the righteous after forgiuenes obtained, is not puniſhed for ſinne. Thirdly, Iſay.44.22. As a miſt or clowde is chaſed of the Sunne, ſo are our ſinnes: but the miſt is wholy diſperſed and diſſolued that nothing of it remaineth: Ergo, ſo are our ſinnes. Fourthly, like as that which caſt into the ſea, and deſcendeth to the bottome, riſeth not againe; as the Egyptians are ſayd to haue ſunke downe to the bottome like a ſtone, Exod.15.5. And Ierem.51.63. the Prophet vſeth this ſigne to ſignifie the finall deſtruction of Babel; he bindeth a ſtone to the booke of the curſes againſt Babel, and throweth it into the midſt of Euphrates, ſaying, Thus ſhall Babell be drowned, and ſhall not riſe, &c. Wherefore our ſinnes in this ſenſe being caſt into the bottome of the ſea, when they are freely forgiuen vs in Chriſt, ſhall riſe no more to iudge vs either in this world or the next.

*Argum.*3. The Prophet Iſay ſaith, The chaſtiſement of our peace was vpon him, 53.5. And hee hath reconciled vs in the bodie of his fleſh, to make vs vnblameable, &c. Coloſſ.1.21.22. Therfore Chriſt hath borne all puniſhment due to our ſinne, not onely eternall, but temporall. He hath borne our infirmities, Iſay.53.5. euen all of them, and hath deliuered vs from the whole curſe of the law, Gal.3.13. Ergo, from temporall puniſhments, which are part of our infirmities, and belonging to the curſe.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Chriſt hath immediatly ſatisfied for our ſinne and eternall death: but for temporall puniſhment mediatly onely, giuing vs power by his death to ſatisfie for them: *Lib.4. de pœnitent. cap.15. reſponſ. ad argum.*4.

Anſw. Chriſt hath immediatly in his owne bodie ſatisfied for the whole puniſhment of ſinne. 1. Chriſt hath immediatly taken away the curſe of the law, becauſe he was made a curſe for vs: but temporall puniſhments for ſinne are part of the curſe, which if they remaine ſtill, then are we yet vnder the curſe. 2. Chriſt alſo hath borne our infirmities; but if he giue power onely to vs to beare, then we beare them, and not he. 3. Againe, if any puniſhment for ſin yet remaine, then are we not yet at perfect peace with God, becauſe his wrath is not yet fully ſatisfied: But Chriſt hath vpon the Croſſe ſet vs at peace with God, 1. Coloſſ.1.20. Ergo.

The afflictions of this life are the louing corrections of God to admoniſh vs, not plagues to puniſh vs: as Auguſtine ſaith well, Tota miſeria generis humani dolor medicinalis, non ſententia pœnalis: The miſerie of man is but a medicinall griefe, not a ſentence of puniſhment: *in Pſal.*138. And againe, Homines cum iſta patiuntur, &c. Men when they ſuffer theſe things, either as in Iob their merits are examined; or as in Herod, their ſinnes puniſhed, epiſt. ad Hieron. Not the righteous then as Iob, but the wicked as Herod are puniſhed for their ſinnes.

Let vs ſee what further euidence we haue euen from the lawes of men. Firſt, the Ciuill law thus teſtifieth: Cod. lib.4. tit.14. leg.6. Seruus liber factus non tenetur, &c. A ſeruant being made free, can not bee chalenged for any thing committed againſt his maſter before his freedome. *Cod. lib.9. tit.*51. *leg.*1. Antonin. Reſtitutio à principe conceſſa, &c. Reſtitution graunted by the Prince, in integrum reſtituit, doth reſtore a man fully and wholly. Leg.4. Ex indulgentia reuerſus ab exilio, &c. He that by the Princes pardon is returned from exile, is not bound to his former creditors. If then the making free of a ſeruant, doth exempt him from all former daungers and penalties; if the indulgence of the Prince doth reſtore a man fully, and freeth him from all debts and creditors, if this equitie bee in the law of man; how much more ſhall not the true libertie, which wee haue in Chriſt, and the moſt bountifull indulgence of God, together with our reſtitution in Chriſt, diſcharge vs from all debts and puniſhments whatſoeuer belonging to our ſinnes?

The Canon law is a witneſſe alſo for vs: Diſtinct.3. de pœnitent.c.83. Subſecutum illius comminationis effectum,&c. That which God threatned to Dauid, came to paſſe after his ſinne was forgiuen him, vt pietas hominis in illa humilitate exerceretur,&c. that the mans godlines might by humilitie bee exerciſed and tried. It remained not then as a puniſhment, but as a triall and aduertiſement.

The Maſter of the Sentences to the ſame purpoſe: Lib.4.diſt.4.f. Soluto reatu peccati pœna temporalis manet,&c. The guilt of ſinne being diſſolued, the temporall puniſhment remaineth, that that life ſhould more ſtudiouſly bee ſought for, which is free from all paine. And yet more euidently: Diſtinct.15.a. Quinque modis flagella contingunt,&c. The Lord laieth his ſcourges fiue manner of waies, that by patience their (merite) or vertue may bee encreaſed, as in Iob: ad cuſtodiam virtutum, to bee a ſafegard to their vertue, that pride tempt them not, as in Paul; to correct their ſinnes, as Mary became leprous, Moſes ſiſter; or to the glorie of God, as in the man borne blind, Ioh.9. or for the iudgement of puniſhment, as in Herod. None of all theſe reaſons wee refuſe: ſo then corrections or chaſticements the righteous taſte of; iudgements and puniſhments for ſinne are proper to the wicked.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER THE TEMPORALL puniſhment of this life may be redeemed by good workes.

The Papiſts.

63. Error. THat we may redeeme and buy out as it were the puniſhments due to ſinne in this life by our good workes, ſauing whereas God hath certainly determined to puniſh, as in Dauids caſe, it is their generall ſentence. They hold alſo that the temporall paines of Purgatorie may bee in like manner redeemed.

Argum.1. God purpoſed to deſtroy the citie of Niniueh: but that, being pleaſed with their faſting, ſackcloth and prayers, he ſaued the citie. Ierem.18.7. I will ſpeake ſuddenly againſt a nation to deſtroy it,&c. but if the nation repent of their wickedneſſe, I alſo will repent of the plague. Wherefore temporall puniſhments may be by good workes redeemed, Bellar.lib.4.c.3.

Anſw. Firſt, the argument followeth not: God ſheweth mercie vpon our repentance: Ergo, repentance redeemeth the puniſhment due,&c. for if it bee of mercie that God ſpareth vs, as the Apoſtle ſaith, the bountifulnes of God calleth thee to repentance, Rom.2.4. then is it not of our works. Secondly, prayer and faſting are but effectuall ſignes of repentance, they are not meritorious cauſes of forgiuenes. Dauid faſted and prayed, yet he ſueth vnto Gods mercie, Pſal.51.1. According to the multitude of thy mercies doe away mine offences.

Argum.2. Daniel ſaid to Nabuchadnezzar the King, Redeeme thy ſinnes by righteouſnes, and thine iniquities by ſhewing mercie to the poore, chap.4.24. Bellarm.cap.3.

Anſw. The text is rather thus to be read: 1. Breake off thy ſinnes by righteouſneſſe: that is, leaue off to doe euill: as it is by Tremellius tranſlated more agreeable to the Hebrue: ſo is the word פרק parach, interpreted, Geneſ.27.40. Thou ſhalt breake his yoke from thy necke: 2. For if redemption bee here properly vnderſtood, it would follow that men may redeeme not onely the puniſhment of their ſinnes, but the ſinnes themſelues: for Daniel ſaith, redeeme thy ſins, not the puniſhment of thy ſinnes: and ſo take Chriſts office out of his hand. 3. By true and faithfull repentance, and other good workes proceeding of faith, wee may auoide Gods heauie iudgement due to our ſinnes, yet not for the merite or ſatisfaction of any worke, but through the merits onely of Chriſt. See this argument anſwered more fully before, queſt.5.part.6.

The Proteſtants.

COncerning the paines in Purgatorie to be redeemed in this life, we haue prooued before ſufficiently, that this purgatorie place is but a popiſh dreame, and therfore no ſuch paines there to be feared: And for the chaſticements of this life, where God ſeeth they are neceſſarie, he inflicteth them vpon his children; when as he ſeeth other cauſe, he ſpareth vs for his mercie, his iuſtice is not bought out with the price of our workes.

Argum.1. As our ſinnes are forgiuen, ſo is the puniſhment due vnto them: but our ſins are forgiuen vs freely in Chriſt, Ierem.31.34. Ergo, ſo is the puniſhment.

S.Paul alſo ſaith, We are freely iuſtified by grace, Rom.3.24. by the forgiuenes of our ſins, through *the redemption that is in Chriſt: Ergo,*not by the redemption of our owne workes: argum.Melancth. Caluin.lib.3.inſtitut.c.4.ſect.25.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that it is of grace, that our workes doe redeeme the temporall puniſhment, becauſe they haue this grace and power in Chriſts death: ſo then Chriſt doth freely forgiue our ſinne, and the euerlaſting puniſhment due vnto it, he doth freely forgiue alſo the temporall puniſhment, in giuing vs grace freely to ſatisfie for it, cap.13.reſponſ.ad 5.argum. c.14 reſp.ad lib.4. de pœnitent.

Contra. This is an impious diſtinction, and contrarie to the Scriptures. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith freely, thorough the *redemption of Chriſt,*verſ.24.*Ergo,*not by the redemption of our works. 2. Againe, the puniſhment of ſinne is taken away in our reconciliation vnto God: for God puniſheth the wicked and his enemies, not thoſe which are reconciled: But *our reconciliation is by faith in Chriſts blood,*Rom.3:25. Ergo, not by workes. 3. Further, the forgiuenes of our ſinnes (ſaith the Apoſtle) thorough the patience of God: but Gods patience is ſeene in the forbearing the puniſhment of ſinne: So then Gods righteouſnes in forgiuing our ſinnes, and his patience in forbearing or doing away the puniſhment, are here by Saint Paul aſcribed to faith in Chriſts blood: Ergo, ſatiſfaction is no more made for the puniſhment, than for the ſin it ſelfe. 4. Laſtly, grace and workes cannot ſatisfie or worke together, Rom.11.6. If it be of worke, it is no more of grace; if of grace, it is no more of worke: How then is it poſſible that wee ſhould ſatisfie both by grace and worke together?

*Argum.*2. That purgatorie paines are not redeemed by any works of this life, that place ſheweth, Matth.3.8.Bring forth worthie fruits of repentance: By theſe workes, teſtifying repentance, men doe flye from *the wrath to come,*verſ.7.and the tree that bringeth not forth *theſe fruits, is caſt into the fire,*verſ.10.This is the euerlaſting wrath of God and fire, which wee doe not ſatisfie for, but preuent by theſe fruits: ſo theſe are workes to bee performed by the liuing, they pertaine not to the dead: they preuent euerlaſting deſtruction through faith in Chriſt, for the which, they themſelues confeſſe, our works doe not ſatisfie.

Againe, there muſt bee ſome proportion betweene the price of redemption, and the thing redeemed: but ſo is there not betweene our good workes, and the puniſhments due to our ſinnes: for as Iob ſaith, We cannot anſwere him one thing of a thouſand, Iob.9.3. Bernard alſo ſaith, Quis amplius grunniet dicens, nimium laboramus, nimium ieiunamus, cum nec milleſimæ, immo nec minimæ parti debitorum ſuorum valet reſpondere: ſerm.de quadrup.debit. Who will now murmure and ſay, wee labour too much, faſt too much, when as wee are not able to anſwere the thouſand part, no not the leaſt part of our debt? But how can wee redeeme our puniſhments by our workes, vnleſſe our workes were in waight and number anſwerable vnto them? Ergo, wee cannot redeeme them by any ſuch meanes.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER A MAN may truly ſatisfie the wrath of God, for the puniſhment due vnto ſinne.

The Papiſts.

IT is not a ſufficient ſatisfaction, to beleeue that Chriſt hath aboundantly ſatisfied for vs; neither yet is it enough to amend and correct our liues: but God alſo muſt bee ſatisfied for our ſinnes, by the puniſhment and chaſtiſement of our ſelues, as by affliction layd vpon vs by God, or penance inioyned by the Prieſt, or by prayer, faſting, almes-deedes, which we do take vp our ſelues: Concil.Trid.ſeſſ.14.can.13. Rhemiſt.Matth.11.21. 64.Error

Bellarmine alſo affirmeth, that Gods grace aſſiſting vs, wee may ſatisfie God for the temporall puniſhment of ſinne, ex proprijs, of our own, ad æqualitatem, to an equalitie, ex condigno, condignly, or worthilie, cap.8.

*Argum.*1. Matth.3.8. Bring forth fruits worthie repentance: he preacheth ſatisfaction by doing worthie fruits of penance, as faſting, prayer, almes, and the like, *Rhemiſt. Bellar.c.*8.

Anſw. 1. Fruits worthie of repentance, are no ſatisfaction for ſinne, or the puniſhment thereof, but arguments of true repentance, effects, not any part thereof. 2. Againe, in this place mention is made of euerlaſting deſtruction, verſ.10.Euery tree that bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewen downe and caſt into the fire: wherefore if by worthie workes, they vnderſtand ſatisfactorie works, then will it follow that ſatisfaction may bee made not onely for temporall, but eternall puniſhment. 3. Further, worthie workes, are expounded to be good workes, verſ.10. And Bellarmine expoundeth thus, To doe workes worthie repentance, is ſo to worke, as it beſeemeth him that is penitent: Bellarm.ibid. This therefore is nothing elſe, but newnes and holines of life, whereby we doe ſhew our effectuall repentance. 4. This place proueth neither equalitie, nor condignitie, nor a propertie of our owne in ſatisfaction; which all three are againſt the Scripture: there is no equalitie, we cannot anſwere God *one of a thouſand,*Iob.9.3. No *propertie,*1.Cor.4.7. If thou haſt receiued it, why reioyceſt thou, as though thou haddeſt not receiued it? No condignitie, Luk.17.10. When we haue done all that is commanded, wee are but vnprofitable ſeruants. 5. Neither will this euaſion ſerue, that by grace our workes ſatisfie: for grace and workes are ſo diuers, that they cannot concurre together: Rom.11.6. If it bee of workes, it is no more of grace,&c. grace taketh away workes, and workes take away grace, if they bee ioyned as working cauſes together.

*Argum.*2. Iudge your ſelues, that you be not iudged, 1.Cor.11.31. We muſt puniſh our ſelues according to the waight of the ſinnes paſt, Rhemiſt. And againe, ſaith the Apoſtle, What great puniſhment hath it wrought in you? 2.Cor.7.11. This is nothing elſe but the ſatisfactorie puniſhment for our ſinnes, *Bellarm.lib.*4.*cap.*8.

In Pſal.58.

Anſw. The Apoſtle meaneth nothing elſe, but an heartie and earneſt ſorrowe for our ſinnes, whereby we doe iudge and condemne, and as it were puniſh our ſelues, yet we are farre from making any ſatisfaction hereby for our ſinnes: as Auguſtine ſaith, Omnis iniquitas puniatur neceſſe eſt, aut à pœnitente homine, aut vindicante Deo: vis non puniat? puni tu: antequam ipſe intendat vt puniat, tu confitendo praueni & puni. All ſinne muſt needes bee puniſhed either of man himſelfe repenting, or God reuenging: if thou wilt not haue him puniſh, puniſh thou: before he intend to puniſh, preuent him by thy confeſſion, and puniſh thy ſelfe. So then this puniſhment of our ſelues is nothing elſe, but true repentance and confeſſion of our ſinnes.

2. Again, this puniſhment, of which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, was wrought in thẽ, it was not inioyned them by the Prieſt. 3. Beſide, this repentance, whereof this puniſhment was an effect, was to ſaluation, verſ.10. which was the eſcaping of euerlaſting death: but for euerlaſting puniſhment they themſelues dare preſcribe no ſatisfaction but in Chriſt. 4. The Apoſtle ſheweth the end and vſe of this puniſhment, which was to cleare themſelues, and to worke in them a zeale and deſire: not to ſatisfie.

*Argum.*3. If good workes may merite or deſerue eternall life, much more may they auert and turne away temporall puniſhment: but the firſt is true, Matth.20.verſ.8. the kingdome of God is called wages or rewarde: 2.Timoth.4.verſ.8. it is called the crowne of iuſtice, which God the iuſt iudge ſhall giue. So it is a rewarde iuſtly giuen to mens deſerts: Ergo, good workes may much more redeeme temporall puniſhment, *Bellarm.cap.*8.*lib.*4.de pœnitent.

Anſw. We vtterly denie, that heauen can bee merited with good workes. Firſt, Saint Paul hauing firſt ſaid, the wages of ſinne is death, addeth further, the gift of God is eternall life, Rom.6.23. he calleth it a gift, and not wages.

Secondly, it is called in the parable, a rewarde or wages; but not in reſpect of the workmans labour, but of Gods couenant and promiſe. For 1. if it were by deſert, then he that laboured twelue houres, had deſerued more, than he that wrought but one. As Saint Ambroſe ſaith, *de vocat.Gentium lib.*1.3. Hora vndecima intromiſſos in vineam, &c. They which were ſent into the vineyard at the eleuenth houre, the diuine indulgence made equall to the labourers of the whole day, not paying the wages of their labour, but powring out the riches of his goodneſſe,&c. that they which endured much labour, and receiued no more then the laſt, ſhould vnderſtand, Se demum gratiæ non operis accepiſſe mercedem: that they receiued a gift of grace, not a reward of the worke. 2. And the Lord ſaith, verſ.15. Is it not lawfull for me to doe as I will with mine owne? but if they had deſerued it, it had been their owne. 3. Saint Paul alſo directly affirmeth, Rom.4.verſ.4. that wages is not counted of fauour, but by debt: let them ſay then if they dare, that to obtaine heauen is not of Gods fauour.

Thirdly, 1. it is a crowne of iuſtice, but not of ours, but of the iuſtice of faith in Chriſt: as the Apoſtle ſaith, verſ.7. I haue kept the faith. 2. And it is Gods iuſtice to giue it in reſpect of his promiſe, not of our deſert, as Auguſtine ſaith, Ex miſericordia promiſſam, ſed iam ex iuſtitia ſoluendam: Promiſed of mercie, but now in iuſtice to be paied: *ſerm.*2.de verb. Apoſtoli.

*Argum.*4. Bellarmine bringeth in a great troupe of ancient writers to ſpeake for ſatisfaction, but they are not ſo pregnant to ſerue his turne: our generall anſwere to them all is this:

Firſt, that the moſt of his witneſſes are partiall, and not old enough to bee credited, ſuch as liued in the latter ages of the Church, as Iſidore, Rabanus, Damianus, with other.

Secondly, many writings paſſe vnder the names of Cyprian, Ambroſe, Hierome, Auguſtine, which were not theirs: as there goeth vnder Cyprians name, a booke De inuentione capitis Baptiſtæ,&c. Of the inuention of Iohn Baptiſts head: In which treatiſe mention is made of Athanaſius, and Theophilus of Alexandria, and Pipinus, that were long after Cyprians time. The like exception may bee made againſt ſome of the reſt.

Thirdly, the authentike fathers ſpeake of three ſatisfactions: firſt, of ſatisfaction made vnto men, as vnto the whole Church, or to any other ỹ are offended: and in this ſenſe ſpeaketh *Cyprian, epiſtol.*3.ad Cornelium, ſpeaking of ſchiſmatikes, Si cum precibus & ſatisfactionibus veniant, audiantur,&c. If they come with entreating and ſatisfactions, let them bee heard: Si minas & maledicta ingerunt: If they threaten or curſe, let them be refuſed: the ſatisfaction is to be made to them, whom they threaten, but they threaten not God, but men: in this ſenſe alſo, the olde tranſlation readeth, Act.24.10. That Paul ſatisfied, that is anſwered for himſelfe: and 1.Pet.3.18. Be readie to ſatisfie euery man, that asketh a reaſon, &c. this ſatisfaction then is made vnto men.

Secondly, there is a ſatisfaction made vnto a mans owne conſcience, as 2.Cor.7.11. What clearing of your ſelues, defence, or ſatisfaction, (as Eraſmus readeth, and the old interpreter in other places tranſlateth the word ἀπολογίαν,) hath it wrought: ſo *Ambroſe ad virgin.lapſam.c.*8. cited by Bellarm. Grande, grandem ſatisfactionem: a great ſinne, requireth great ſatisfaction, that is, great ſorrow, to ſatisfie and ſettle the conſcience.

Thirdly, they ſpeake of ſatisfying God, but eyther in hyperbolicall ſpeech, commending thereby the neceſſitie of repentance, whereby God is, as it were, ſatisfied, the better to ſtirre vp men thereunto: or els, they vnderſtand a ſatisfaction, not of Gods iuſtice, but of Gods commandement and will, in obeying his voyce, by comming to repentance, which God in mercie accepteth of: ſo Tertullian ſaith, Habes cui ſatisfacias, & quidem volentem: You haue one, who is willing to be ſatisfied: lib.de pœnitent.

The Proteſtants.

That Satisfaction ought to be made vnto men, either by reſtitution, as Zacheus reſtored that which he had wrongfully gotten; or by reconciling our ſelues to thoſe, whom we haue offended, as Matth.5.24. we do willingly grant: but that the wrath of God may be appeaſed and ſatisfied for our ſinnes, or the puniſhment due vnto the ſame by any worke of ours, it is a great blaſphemie, and cleane contrary to the courſe of Scripture.

*Argum.*1. That it is ſufficient to returne vnto God by true repentance and amendment of life, without any ſatisfaction, either for our ſinne, or the puniſhment of ſinne: the Prophet Ezechiel ſheweth, where ſpeaking of the conuerſion of a wicked man, he ſaith, His iniquities ſhal no more be mentioned, or laid to his charge, chap.18,22. But if after the ſinne remitted, there ſhould remaine ſome puniſhment behind, his ſinnes ſhould ſtill be remembred and mentioned: there is therefore no ſatisfaction for the puniſhment of ſinne, becauſe none remaineth.

Bellarmine anſwereth, God remembreth no more their ſinnes, in that he doth not puniſh them by eternall death, *cap.*15.*reſponſ.ad argum.*1.

Anſw. When the righteous ſuffer temporall chaſtiſements, hath God their ſinnes then in remembrance, or hath he not? If he haue, then the Prophet ſhould ſpeake vntruely, who ſaith, their iniquities are not mentioned: if hee haue not, it commeth to our ſaying, that God doth chaſtiſe his children without reſpect had to their ſinnes, or remembrance thereof. I ſuppoſe this Dilemma will put the Ieſuite to ſome buſineſſe before it be well anſwered.

2. Againe, verſ.20. the Prophet ſaith, The righteouſneſſe of the righteous ſhall be vpon him, and the wickedneſſe of the wicked ſhall be vpon him: but now if the righteous be puniſhed for his ſinne paſt, the wickedneſſe ſhall be vpon the righteous man, which is contrary to the ſaying of the Prophet.

3. Further, Ezech.33.12. Impietas impij non nocebit ei: The wickedneſſe of the wicked ſhall not hurt him, in that day he turneth from his wickedneſſe: but if he be puniſhed for his wickedneſſe, after he be returned, then doth his wickednes hurt him. Bellarmine anſwereth as before, that his wickedneſſe doth not hurt him, or hinder him from euerlaſting life, *lib.*4.*c.*11. Cont. 1. Chaſtiſements and corrections, which God layeth vpon his children, to make them more careful and circumſpect, are profitable, and not hurtfull at all, as the Prophet Dauid ſaith, Pſal.119.verſ.71. It is good for me, that I haue beene afflicted: But puniſhments and iudgements for ſinne, how are they not hurtfull, and a wound vnto the ſoule? 2. So then, as the righteouſneſſe of the righteous ſhall not deliuer him in the day of his tranſgreſſion; ſo the wickedneſſe of the wicked ſhall not hurt him. verſ.12. but the former righteouſneſſe ſhall not deliuer a man, no not from temporall iudgements: Ergo, the former wickedneſſe of a man ſhall not hurt him, but deliuer him from temporall puniſhments. 3. Further, verſ.17. The way of the Lord is equall, the way of man vnequall: man many time puniſheth, where he forgiueth; but Gods way is not like vnto mans: wherefore God puniſheth not after forgiueneſſe. See a further anſwere to Bellarmines exception before, in the ſecond argument of the firſt part of this Queſtion.

*Argum.*2. Our Sauiour Chriſt required no ſatisfaction to be made vnto God, for her ſinnes that was accuſed of adulterie; but ſaith onely to her, Goe, ſinne no more, Iohn 8.11. Ergo, no ſatiſfaction for ſinne is required by the Scripture, argum.Lutheri.

Bellarmine anſwereth, 1. That Chriſt doth not abſolue her from her ſinne, but onely from the puniſhment, which was to be ſtoned to death. 2. Or he might ſee ſo great contrition in her, that it was a ſufficient ſatisfaction; as we reade of Marie Magdalene. 3. And Chriſt might by his authoritie at once pardon the fault and the puniſhment, but Miniſters muſt keepe themſelues to the Law, &c. *Bellarmin.c.*11.reſp.ad 2.argum.

Cont. Firſt, that Chriſt did pardon her ſinne, it 1. appeareth, in that hee ſaith, Goe, ſinne no more: for though ſhe ſinned no more, if this were not pardoned, it was ſufficient to condemne her before God. 2. As for the outward puniſhment of death, Chriſt doth not deale in it, it belonging to worldly gouernours: he refuſed to be Iudge of an inheritance, Luke 12.14. which is leſſe than to be Iudge of life and death.

Secondly, 1. It is like there was not ſuch an extraordinarie contrition in this woman, being immediately before deprehended in adulterie. 2. And if there had beene ſuch a perfect change, which cannot be without a full purpoſe of amendment; why doth our Sauiour ſay vnto her, Goe, ſinne no more? 3. Maries teares did not ſatisfie for her ſinne, ſhee was ſaued by her faith: her teares declared her loue, Luke 7.47.50.

Thirdly, though Chriſt had all power in himſelfe, and was aboue his law, yet he came to fulfill all righteouſneſſe: Matth.3.15. and as he ſent the Leper being cleanſed to the Prieſt, to offer according to the Law, Matth.8. ſo healing the ſpirituall leproſie of this woman, hee would not haue omitted the law of ſatisfaction, being as neceſſarie in this ſpirituall caſe (if any ſuch thing were required) as the reſorting of the Leper to the Prieſt.

*Argum.*3. Iſai.43.25. I am he that putteth away thine iniquities for mine owne ſake. Likewiſe 53. verſ.4. He hath borne our infirmities, and caried our ſorrowes: the chaſtiſement of our peace was vpon him, and with his ſtripes are we healed. God of his free mercie doth forgiue our ſin: Chriſt alſo hath fully ſatisfied for vs: Ergo, there is no ſatisfaction in vs: we are made whole by his ſtripes, and not our owne.

Likewiſe the Apoſtle ſaith, that Chriſt is the propitiation for our ſinnes, 1.Iohn 2.2. Behold the Lambe of God, that taketh away the ſinnes of the world, Iohn 1.29. Chriſt his owne ſelfe bare our ſinnes in his bodie on the tree, 1.Pet.2,24. Ergo, Chriſts death fully and wholy redeemeth vs, there neede no other ſatisfaction.

Bellarm. Firſt, we grant, that Chriſts death is ſufficient to redeeme all the ſinnes of the world, but Chriſts death profiteth not, vnleſſe it be applyed by faith, the ſacraments, and other applicatorie meanes and inſtruments, among the which, ſatisfaction is one, for the expiation of temporall puniſhment. Secondly, it is true, that by Chriſts merite we are only iuſtified and reconciled, yet this letteth not, but that we may ſatisfie alſo by the vertue of Chriſts death for temporall puniſhment. *Bellarmin.c.*14.

Contra. Firſt, there 1. is no other meanes appointed for the application of the fruits of Chriſts death, but faith: Rom.3.26. He is a iuſtifier of him, that is of the faith of Ieſus: verſ.22. The righteouſneſſe of God by the faith of Ieſus: verſ.25. To be a reconciliation through faith in his blood: If through faith wee are reconciled, iuſtified wee haue righteouſneſſe; all other meanes of application are vnneceſſarie and ſuperfluous. 2. Againe, no workes of ours can applie Chriſts death, no, not good workes, Epheſ.2.8.9. Yee are ſaued by grace through faith, not of workes, yea of good workes: verſ.10. Which God hath ordayned: 3 That which applieth Chriſts death, applieth his righteouſneſſe for remiſſion of ſinnes: Rom.3.25. but ſatisfaction applieth not Chriſts death for remiſſion of ſins, but onely to remoue the puniſhment: Ergo it applieth it not at all.

Secondly, 1. If we be reconciled and iuſtified by Chriſts death, then are wee at peace with God, Rom.5.1. but God doth not puniſh thoſe for their ſinnes, with whom he is at peace. 2. Againe, Rom.8.33. God with Chriſt hath giuen vs all things beſide: Ergo, not remiſsion of ſinne only, but the puniſhment alſo. 3. Verſ.33. Who ſhall accuſe the choſen of God, it is God that iuſtifieth: Ergo, ſinne is not laid to the charge of them that are iuſtified, and ſo conſequently, they are not for the ſame iudged or puniſhed, ſeeing they are not for the ſame accuſed.

*Argum.*4. If men ſhould ſatisfie by their owne workes, both Chriſts honor is 1. empayred, ſeeing the whole worke is not left to him; our conſcience 2. cannot be quieted, depending vpon our owne ſatisfaction. 3. And beſide it is impoſſible, ſeeing that man ſinneth euery day, and euery houre, and how can he ſatisfie for ſinnes paſt, continually multiplying new? *argum. Caluin. lib.*3.*inſtit.c.*4. *ſect.*27.

Bellarmine anſwereth, 1. Chriſts honor is more encreaſed, in that he himſelfe doth not onely ſatisfie for our ſinnes, but giueth power to his members in ſome ſort to ſatisfie likewiſe. 2. The conſcience may be ſecure and at peace being aſſured of the remiſſion of ſins, though ſome temporall puniſhment remaine. 3. One act of contrition euen in a moment of time may ſatisfie for many mortall ſinnes, how much more one houre, one day of contrition, &c. *Bellarmin.c.*14.

Contra. Firſt, he may as well ſay, it had been for Chriſts honor, to haue taken vp to him vpon the croſſe ſome one of his members, and to haue giuen him power by his death to ſatisfie: but the Scripture ſaith contrary, Iſay.48.11. I will not giue my glory to another: Pſal.115.1. Not vnto vs, but vnto thy Name giue the prayſe. Secondly, the Prophet ſaith, There is no reſt in my bones becauſe of thine anger, and of my ſinne, and I roare for the griefe of my heart. Pſal.38.3,8. As long as he was chaſtiſed for his ſinne, he could find no reſt, neither in bodie, nor ſoule: how then can the conſcience be at quiet, being vnder the puniſhment of ſinne. Thirdly, it 1. ſeemeth, you thinke it an eaſie matter to ſatisfie for ſinne, being not aſhamed to ſay, that it may be done in a moment: ye know not what true repentance or true contrition is: it worketh in vs, 1. care, 2. clearing of our ſelues, 3. indignation, 4. feare, 5. deſire, 6. zeale, 7. puniſhment, 2. Cor. 7. 11. Can all theſe be wrought in a moment? 2. And ſeeing that continually a righteous man falleth, euen ſeuen times a day, and riſeth againe, by repentance, Prou. 24. 16. he hath enough to doe ſtill to wreſtle againſt preſent ſinnes: and being alwaies in tranſgreſſion, how can he ſatisfie God for his tranſgreſſion? for if thou ſtreightly markeſt iniquities, ſaith the Pſalme, quis ſuſtinebit? who is able to ſuſtaine it? Pſal. 130. 3. Therefore man being compaſſed alwaies with ſinne, cannot ſuſtaine Gods wrath, much leſſe ſatisfie or appeaſe it.

Argum. 5. The Prophet Iſay ſaith, chap. 1. 17, 18. Ceaſe to doe euill, learne to doe well, &c. Though your ſinnes be as crimſin, I will make them white as ſnow. Here is no ſatisfaction required. Likewiſe, Ierem. 50. verſ. 20. In thoſe daies the iniquitie of Iacob ſhall be ſought for, and there ſhall none be found. Ezech. 36. 22. I doe not this for your ſakes, O houſe of Iſrael, but for mine owne holie name ſake, &c. The people did not ſatisfie God for their temporall deliuerance out of captiuitie, but it proceeded of Gods mercie: arg. Caluin.

Bellarm. Firſt, the Prophet Iſay promiſeth the perfect remiſſion of ſinne to thoſe that did cleanſe and waſh themſelues by contrition, repentance, and other good deedes, which are their ſatisfaction: this place rather maketh for ſatisfaction, than againſt it. Secondly, the Prophet Ezechiel ſpeaketh there of the grace of the new Teſtament, which is not aſcribed to the merits of the Iſraelites: and if it bee vnderſtood of their temporall deliuerance, wee graunt that the temporall puniſhments of the next world is alwaies redeemed by ſatisfaction, but not the temporall puniſhment of this life: this maketh not therefore againſt ſatisfaction, Bellar. cap. 15. reſp. ad arg. 3. & 6.

Contra. Firſt, by making of their ſinnes as white as ſnow or wooll, is vnderſtood the perfect remiſſion of ſinne: and the condition required before, is to ceaſe to doe euill, to learne to doe well, to waſh them, &c. If theſe be ſatisfactorie workes, and goe before remiſſion, then will it follow, that not the puniſhment onely, but the ſinne it ſelfe is by theſe workes redeemed: if they come after, what puniſhment can remaine to bee ſatisfied for, ſeeing there is no rednes, or bloodines remaining, (whereby the puniſhment of ſinne is ſignified) but all is as white as ſnow?

Secondly, 1. It is euident, that the Prophet ſpeaketh directly of their temporall deliuerance, verſ. 24. I will take you from among the heathen, though vnder this temporall benefite is included alſo the promiſe of ſpirituall grace. 2. Neither is the queſtion, whether the temporall puniſhment of this life be alwaies redeemed, but whether, when it is remoued, it be by ſatisfactorie workes redeemed. This place euidently ſheweth, that this deliuerance of the Iſraelites (though they endured ſeuentie yeeres captiuitie, with much affliction, which were as like to ſatisfie, as any painfull workes that can bee ſuffered) is not attributed to their merits, but to the bountifull mercie of God. 3. And if ſatisfaction may be made for Purgatorie penance, much more ſhould it be auaileable againſt the iudgements of this life: But ſeeing your ſatisfaction faileth in the leſſe, which wee daily haue experience of, and you ſend vs to finde the force thereof, in a greater puniſhment, which no man euer did ſee, you giue iuſt occaſion to them, which are not wilfully blind, both to ſuſpect your deuiſe of Purgatorie, and to reiect your ſandie foundation of ſatisfaction.

Argum. 6. In the Law there were no ſatisfactorie 1. workes appointed for the expiation of ſinne, but onely the ſacrifice, 2. which were not counted as the 3. workes of men, but did depend of the onely ſacrifice of Chriſt, whereof they were ſhadowes: 4. yet in the Law all rites of expiation were diligently preſcribed: argum. Caluin.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, the ſacrifices of the law were appointed as ſatisfactions for the temporall puniſhments of ſinne: for they did neither take away the ſinne it ſelfe, nor the eternall puniſhment: Pſal. 51. 16. Thou deſireſt no ſacrifice, the ſacrifice of God is a contrite heart. Secondly, neither did the ſacrifice ſerue for all ſinnes: for blaſphemie, homicide, adulterie, idolatrie, no ſacrifices were appointed, but aſhes and ſackcloth, &c. Thirdly, God hath not in the law exactly ſet down all the rites of expiation. Fourthly, the ſacrifices, as they were diuine workes being inſtituted of God, ſo were they alſo the laborious workes of men, and conſequently ſatisfactorie, in that they were an hindrance to their ſubſtance, and depended vpon the faith of the offerers, cap. 15. reſponſ. ad argum. 5.

Contra. Firſt, the ſacrifices of the law were appointed for the forgiuenes of the ſinne it ſelfe, Leuitic. 6. 7. The Prieſt ſhall make attonement for him, and it ſhall be forgiuen him. 1. How could attonement or reconciliation be made, without remiſſion of ſinne? 2. If ſacrifices were not to that end, then had they no meanes at all to aſſure them of remiſſion of ſin. 3. Yet in themſelues thoſe ſacrifices could not purge the conſcience, Heb. 9. 9. but did onely purifie as touching the fleſh, verſ. 13. that is, take away the legall and outward vncleannes: but they did alſo ſanctifie inwardly, being offered by faith, as they were types and ſhadowes of Chriſts ſacrifice, which is that Dauid affirmeth Pſal. 51. 16.

Secondly, 1. The ſinnes of homicide, adulterie, idolatrie, blaſphemie, were ſinnes puniſhable by death, and therefore no ſuch expiation by ſacrifice was appointed for them, as for other ſinnes: Blood could not be expiated, or purged, but by blood. 2. Dauid notwithſtanding after he had committed two of thoſe ſinnes, hauing firſt ſacrificed a contrite heart vnto God, did afterward finde comfort and further aſſurance of remiſſion, in offring the ſacrifices of righteouſneſſe, Pſal. 51. 19. that is, right and lawfull ſacrifices applied to the right end, which is to teſtifie their faith and repentance. 3. But aſhes and ſackcloth were no ſatisfactions for ſuch ſinnes. 1. For Bellarmine himſelfe ſaith, that ſinne cannot be ſatisfied for, but the puniſhment onely. 2. And Dauid hauing repented thoroughly for his ſinne, yet pretendeth no ſatisfaction, but ſueth for mercie, Pſal. 51. 1. 4. Wherefore either the ſacrifices of righteouſnes and faith, were the propitiation for ſuch ſins, as they were Sacraments of Chriſts death, or elſe they had no meanes of expiation at all, which is not to be admitted.

Thirdly, it is a great vntruth, that the Lord by Moſes did not exactly ſet downe all manner of expiations fit for that time, ſeeing the Scripture ſaith, that Moſes was faithfull in all the Lords houſe. Heb. 3. 2.

Fourthly, ſeeing he graunteth that the ſacrifices depended of the faith in the offerer, and faith is the gift of God, and is founded in Chriſts death; he hath made a good argument againſt himſelfe, that the ſacrifices were not ſatisfactions, but workes of faith, applying the vertue of Chriſts death: the ſacrifices then of the law were applicatorie, not ſatisfactorie.

Argum. 7. Hoſh. 14. 2. Take away all iniquitie, and receiue vs graciouſly, ſo will we render the calues of our lips. If all iniquitie be taken away, then none remaineth to bee ſatisfied for: if after forgiuenes, nothing but thankſgiuing be required, then no ſatisfaction is to bee performed: argum. Caluin. ibid.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, iniquitie may bee remoued, though the puniſhment doe remaine. Secondly, after forgiuenes, though wee bee not acquited of the temporall puniſhment, wee are to giue thanks. Thirdly, if God ſometime do ſo forgiue, that he require no ſatisfaction but of praiſe, it followeth not that he ſhould doe ſo alwaies, Bellarm. c. 15. reſp. ad argum. 6.

Contra. Firſt, how 1. can all iniquitie bee remoued, when as the puniſhment yet remaineth? there muſt be ſome ſinne to be puniſhed, or elſe God puniſhing without ſinne ſhould bee vniuſt. 2. Againe, the Prophet ſpeaketh directly of remouing the puniſhment alſo, verſ. 1. They ſhall fall by the ſword, verſ. 2. Thou haſt fallen by thine iniquitie: But now verſ. 3. vpon their repentance the Prophet ſheweth, that they ſhall fall ſo no more: all iniquitie, both the ſinne and the paine ſhall be remoued. 3. Againe, verſ. 5. Mine anger is turned away: but when God puniſheth for ſinne, he is angrie.

Secondly, thankſgiuing followeth after 1. full remiſſion had, and all iniquitie remoued: but where ſatisfaction is to be done, there is not yet full remiſsion: for Bellarmine confeſſeth, that Plena remiſſio, quoad omnem pœnæ reatum: Full remiſſion is in reſpect the guilt of all puniſhment remoued, cap. 15. reſp. ad loc. 3. Therfore the calues of the lips could not yet be offred, when as ſomewhat remaineth to be ſatisfied. 2. Reioycing and giuing of thankes cannot bee without comfort and perfect aſſurance of remiſſion: but where God yet iudgeth for ſinne, and the puniſhment remaineth to be ſatisfied for, there can be no ſuch aſſurance.

Thirdly, this courſe here preſcribed by the Prophet, is perpetuall, and generall for all the faithfull of God: he ſpeaketh to all Iſrael, verſ. 2. yea vnto all the faithfull ſeruants of God, verſ. 10. who is wiſe, and he ſhall vnderſtand theſe things. And the Prophet Dauid ſaying, What ſhall I render to the Lorde for all his benefits to me? I will take the cuppe of ſaluation, and call vpon the name of the Lorde: Pſalm. 116. 13. 14. ſheweth, that God requireth no other ſatisfaction at our hands, but giuing of thankes.

Argum. 8. The Publicane vpon his repentance was iuſtified, and no ſatisfaction required: ſo likewiſe Peter was forgiuen, without any ſatisfaction: So to the man ſicke of the palſie, Chriſt ſaid, Ariſe, thy ſinnes are forgiuen thee, Mark. 2. 9. Neither is the contrarie to bee ſeene in the reſt of the examples in Scripture of remiſſion of ſinnes, but they were forgiuen freely without any ſatisfaction required: argum. Caluin. ibid.

Bellarm. Firſt, the Publicane was not iuſtified without ſatisfaction, as ſmiting vpon his breaſt, confeſſing his ſinne. Secondly, Peter alſo ſatisfied by his teares. Thirdly, 1. Chriſt forgiueth to the ſicke man his ſinne, but not the temporall puniſhment. 2. His long ſickneſſe might ſatisfie God for his ſinnes. 3. Chriſt might at his pleaſure together pardon both the ſin and the puniſhment; but his miniſters cannot doe ſo, cap. 16. reſp. ad argum. 2.

Contra. Firſt, the 1. ſmiting of the breaſt in the Publicane was a ſigne of his contrition, no part of ſatisfaction. 2. He ſaith, God be mercifull to me a ſinner: here he could not ſatisfie, becauſe he crieth onely for mercie. 3. And was the Publicanes ſinne ſo ſmall, thinke you, that he could ſatisfie for it, with knocking vpon the breaſt? 4. But this his contrition went before, he was iuſtified afterward: but ſatisfaction goeth not before iuſtification, no not in the popiſh doctrine: for they ſay ſinnes are firſt remitted, and then afterward the puniſhment is ſatisfied for.

Secondly, 1. Doe you thinke, that Peters deniall of Chriſt, was ſo ſmall an offence, that he could ſatisfie with his teares? 2. Peter wept before he found forgiuenes, as Ambroſe ſaith: Verecundæ lachrymæ ſine horrore culpam loquuntur: Shamefaſt teares without horror doe confeſſe the fault. But ſatisfaction followeth forgiuenes, wherefore Peter did not ſatisfie by his teares. Ambroſe ſaith, Lachrymæ veniam non poſtulant, ſed merentur: Teares doe not aske pardon, but they are worthie or fit to be pardoned. Peter then was not as yet pardoned, weeping for his ſinnes, Ambroſ. in Luc.22.

Thirdly, 1. The ſicke man had not onely his ſinne forgiuen, but his temporall puniſhment releaſed: for Chriſt ſaid to him, Ariſe, take vp thy bed and walke. 2. Neither did his ſicknes ſatisfie for his ſinne, it was then faith that healed him, verſ. 5. neither was there any place for ſatisfaction, his ſinne being not yet forgiuen. 3. And that Chriſt did not this by his extraordinarie authoritie, but by the ſame power which he hath committed to his Apoſtles and their ſucceſſors, the Rhemiſts directly affirme, in their annotations vpon this place: neither was this extraordinarie: for in all the examples alleaged, Chriſt tooke the ſame courſe in forgiuing ſinne without any ſatisfaction.

Laſtly, we haue plentifull euidence from the Fathers, Councels, and their owne decrees, againſt this ſuperſtitious doctrine of ſatisfaction.

Cyprian. lib. 3. ad Quirinum, cap. 42. Fidem tantum prodeſſe, & tantum nos poſſe, quantum credimus, Marc. 9. Omnia poſſibilia credenti: That faith onely profiteth, and we are able to doe as much as we beleeue: as Mark. 9. All things are poſſible to him that beleeueth. If faith onely profiteth, what neede is there of ſatisfaction?

Ambroſ. lib. 2. de pœnitent. cap. 8. Veniam tanquam ex fide ſperemus, non tanquam ex debito: Let vs hope for forgiuenes, as of faith, not of debt. But ſatisfaction is of debt.

Hieronym. ad Marcellam. Tantam in nobis fidei ſtabilitatem eſſe dominus deſiderat, &c. God requireth ſuch ſtabilitie of faith in vs, vt certius eſſe, quod credimus, quam quod patimur iudicemus: That we ſhould iudge that more certaine, which wee beleeue, then that which wee ſuffer. But the Papiſts contrarie, doe hold no certaintie of remiſſion of ſinnes by faith, without ſuffering by ſatisfactorie workes.

Concil. Arauſican. 1. decret. ex Gratian. Authoritate Dei, &c. By the authoritie of God, and the iudgement of his ſpirit, we doe thruſt them out of the boſome of the Church: quouſque reſipiſcunt & eccleſiæ Dei ſatisfaciunt: till they repent and ſatisfie the Church of God. Here are two things required, repentance toward God, and ſatisfaction to his Church, not to God.

Diſtinct. de pœnitent. 1. c. 1. Non inuenio quid dixerit, &c. I finde not what Peter ſaid, I finde that he wept: Lachrymas lego, ſatisfactionem non lego: I reade his teares, I reade no ſatisfaction.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that by ſatisfaction, here is vnderſtood excuſe or defence of his ſinne, as it followeth, Quod defendi non poteſt, &c. That which cannot be defended, may be waſhed.

Cont. Firſt, the Maſter of the Sentences vnderſtandeth it otherwiſe for true ſatisfaction, and maketh this anſwere, That Peter might ſatisfie, though it be not expreſſed, or that confeſſion was not yet inſtituted, lib. 4. diſt. 17. f. Secondly, Gratian alſo doth ſo vnderſtand it, alleaging to the like purpoſe a ſaying of Chryſoſtome, ibid. c. 2. Lachrymæ lauent delictum, &c. Let teares waſh away the ſinnes, which it is a ſhame to confeſſe: And proueth hereby, that contrition may ſuffice without confeſſion: to ſpeake of excuſe or defence had bin impertinent. Thirdly, S. Ambroſe expoundeth himſelfe: Inuenio cur tacuit, &c. I ſee the reaſon why Peter held his peace, leaſt that the crauing of pardon ſo ſoone might offend. Peter was farre from excuſing his ſinne, or Ambroſe from ſo imagining.

Auguſtine ſaith, Peccaſti in fratrem? fac ſatis, & ſanatus es: Haſt thou offended thy brother? ſatiſfie him, and thou art healed. Qui multos offendit peccando, placare multos debet ſatisfaciendo: Hee that hath offended many in ſinning, muſt appeaſe many by ſatisfying them. Theſe kinds of ſatiſfaction both publikely and priuately wee acknowledge: but ſatisfaction to God, neither hee, nor we acknowledge.

In Mat. ſer. 16.
de pœnit. c. 10.

Interrelig. cap. 3. Qui precioſo Chriſti ſanguine redimitur, & cui meritum paſſionis Chriſti applicatur, is continuò iuſtificatur, &c. He that is redeemed by the precious blood of Chriſt, and to whom the merit of Chriſts paſſion is applied, he is ſtraightway iuſtified. And S. Paul ſaith, Whom he iuſtifieth, he glorifieth, Rom. 8. 30. Satisfaction therefore to be performed by man is ſuperfluous, ſeeing Chriſts death bringeth iuſtification, and glorification.

This truth is ſealed: Maſter Tindall holy Martyr thus witneſſeth: Satisfaction is a full recompence or amends making to him, whom wee haue offended, which recompence wee are able to make one to another, and are bound ſo to doe: but to God none can make any mends or recompence, but onely Gods owne ſonne Chriſt Ieſus our Sauiour: Fox pag. 1249. col. 2. artic. 1.

THE FOVRTH PART, WHETHER ONE man may ſatisfie for another.

The Papiſts.

65.Error SAtisfactorie workes are not only profitable to the ſufferers themſelues, but alſo for other their fellow members in Chriſt, and one may beare the burthen, and diſcharge the debt of another: Rhemiſt. Coloſſ. 1. ſect. 4.

Argum. The paſſions of the Saints are ſuffered for the common good of the whole bodie, as Saint Paul ſaith, Now I reioyce in my ſufferings for you, and fulfill that which is behinde of the afflictions of Chriſt for his bodies ſake, which is the Church, Coloſſ. 1. 24. Here S. Pauls afflictions are meritorious and ſatisfactorie for the Coloſſians, Rhemiſt.

Anſ. 1. The Apoſtles ſufferings were for the glorie of God, and the confirmation of their faith: and in this ſenſe he ſaith, his afflictions were for Chriſts bodie, that is, his Church ſake: but therefore it followeth not, that they were meritorious, either for himſelfe, or others. 2. His ſufferings are ſaid to be Chriſts, who ſuffereth in his members, not that they receiue any force from Chriſt to be ſatisfactorie, but becauſe he was made like and conformable by his ſufferings vnto Chriſt, Rom. 8. 17. Auguſtine alſo thus expoundeth the place: Non dixit, preſſurarum mearum, ſed Chriſti, quia membrum erat Chriſti: He ſaith not, of my ſufferings, but of Chriſts, becauſe he was a member of Chriſt. They are not then the ſufferings of Chriſt, as though they receiued a ſatisfactorie power from Chriſt: but becauſe he was a member of Chriſt, who ſuffered together in and with his members. Thus alſo anſwereth Sir Iohn Borthwick holy confeſſor: That where Saint Paul ſaith, (for the Church) he doth not vnderſtand thereby, the redemption, ſatisfaction, or expiation of the Church, but for the edifying and profiting of the ſame: And by the afflictions of Chriſt, he vnderſtandeth thoſe which he now ſuffereth in his members: And ſo he concludeth, and ſealeth this doctrine, that if the Scripture teach vs, that no man can worke his owne ſaluation, but when wee haue done all that is commaunded, wee ſhall be found but vnprofitable ſeruants: much leſſe can any man worke anothers ſaluation: Fox pag. 1261.

The Proteſtants.

NOne can merite or ſatisfie for themſelues, much leſſe for others: neither can one man beare the burthen, or pay the debt of another mans ſinne.

Arg. 1. The Scripture ſaith, The ſoule that ſinneth, the ſame ſhall die, Ezech. 18. 20. Euery man ſhall beare his owne burthen, Galat. 6. 5. None can redeeme his brother, or giue a price to God for him, Pſal 49. 8.

Auguſtine vpon thoſe words, Ioh. 16. 23. What ſoeuer ye ſhall aske in my name, he will giue it you: Exaudiuntur quippe omnes ſancti pro ſeipſis: non autem exaudiuntur pro omnibus, vel amicis, vel inimicis, &c. The Saints are heard praying for themſelues: but they are not heard praying for all their friends or enemies, becauſe it is not ſaid ſimply, he will giue, but, he will giue to you: Ergo, much leſſe can they ſatisfie for others, if their prayers be not heard alwaies for others.

Leo epiſtol. 81. De fortitudine fidelium exempla nata ſunt patientiæ, &c. From the fortitude of the faithfull wee haue examples of patience, not gifts of righteouſneſſe: their deaths were onely for themſelues, neither did they thereby pay any others debt, Chriſt our Lord only is he, in whom all men are dead and crucified.

Argum. 2. We cannot doe for our ſelues all that which is required at our hands: But when wee haue done all, wee muſt ſay, wee are vnprofitable ſeruants, wee haue done that which was our dutie to doe, Luk. 17. 10. Ergo, it is not in any mans power to ſatisfie for another. So Ambroſe writeth vpon this place: Quis tanta ſalutis beneficia, digno poſſit æquare ſeruitio? Who can with his ſeruice anſwere in equalitie ſo great benefits of ſaluation? Quis poteſt ſoluere, quod accepit? Who can pay that he hath receiued? ſerm. 16. in Pſal. 119.

Bernard alſo ſaith, writing vpon theſe words of the fiue fooliſh virgins; Giue vs of your oyle: Stulta petitio, vix iuſtus ſaluabitur, &c. A fooliſh requeſt, the iuſt man ſhall hardly be ſaued: the oyle of Ezech. 14. 16. the Saints doth ſcant ſuffice themſelues, how much leſſe ſufficeth it themſelues and others: Noe, Daniel, Iob, ſhall not deliuer, no not their children, but as the ſoule that hath ſinned ſhall dye; ſo the ſoule that hath done righteouſly ſhall onely liue. Here are three notable arguments included: firſt, mens righteouſneſſe ſufficeth not themſelues, much leſſe others. Secondly, by the teſtimonie of the Prophet, that thoſe holie men there named, ſhould but ſaue themſelues. Thirdly, from the like: as wicked men do only by their owne ſinne condemne themſelues, ſo the righteous only liue by their owne righteouſnes.

But here they will come in with a ſtale diſtinction, that, Si iuſtitiæ rigorem ſpectamus: If wee reſpect the rigor of Gods iuſtice, no mans iuſtice is ſufficient for himſelfe, ſed ex Dei miſericordia & liberalitate, &c. But of Gods mercie and liberalitie, they may profit themſelues and others: Inter. relig. Cæſar. cap. 23.

Anſ. Gods mercie in Chriſt, and the workes of ſupererogation cannot ſtand together, Rom.11. verſ.6. If of grace, then not of workes. And Paul counteth all things doung, in reſpect of Chriſt, Philip.3.8. The Pſalme alſo ſaith, that no man can redeeme his brother, Pſal.49.7. And Chriſt onely hath workes to ſupererogate to others, Of his fulnes we haue all receiued, &c. Ioh.1.16.

Diſtinct. 1.de pœnitent. Non alium ſtatuatis nuntium, &c. Appoint not another meſſenger, who ſhould offer your gift for you: Per vos peccaſtis, per vos erubeſcatis: Ye haue ſinned by your ſelues, by your ſelues be aſhamed. Euery man muſt repent for himſelfe.

*Magiſt.ſentent.lib.*1.*diſtinct.*48.e. Nullius paſſione redempti ſumus, niſi Chriſti: We are not redeemed by any mans paſſion, but Chriſts: The paſſions of the Saints did profite thoſe, which endured them, and they are profitable alſo to others, (that is for example) but they are not our redemption. Lib 3.*diſtinct.*18.e. Vix vnicuique ſua virtus ſufficiebat, &c. Euery mans vertue doth ſcarſe ſuffice himſelfe: much leſſe then is he able to ſatisfie for another.

THE EIGHT QVESTION, OF INDVLGENCES and penall iniunctions.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER PENAL and painfull workes are neceſſarie vnto repentance.

The Papiſts.

67. Error.

NOt onely amendement, and ceaſing to ſinne, or repentance in heart before God is alwaies enough to obtaine full reconcilement, but there muſt be outward penaltie, correction, and chaſtiſement beſide, *Rhemiſt.*2.*Corinth.*2.*ſect.*2.

Argum. The inceſtuous perſon was rebuked of many, 2.Cor.2.6. which word implieth, beſide his inward repentance, outward correction and chaſtiſement.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. WE acknowledge, that in notorious ſinnes, and offenſiue to the Church, as this of the young mans was, inward repentance is not ſufficient, but that after ſharpe diſcipline, by the outward teſtification of ſorrow, and publike confeſſion, ſatisfaction muſt be made to the Church: but it followeth not that this courſe ſhould bee taken for all ſinnes, which a man repenteth him of. And yet wee graunt that outward ſignes of our ſorrow are alwaies neceſſarie in true repentance, not as ſatisfactorie meanes to redeeme our ſinnes, but onely as infallible tokens and effects of our repentance. As Auguſtine ſaith, Satis durus eſt, cuius mentis dolorem oculi carnis nequeunt declarare: He is hard hearted, the griefe of whoſe minde, the eyes of his fleſh doe not ſhew forth: *de pœnitent.cap.*9.

Argum. 1. There are but two eſſentiall parts of repentance and true conuerſion vnto God: To turne from our ſinnes, and leade an holy life. So ſaith the Lord by the Prophet, If the wicked will returne from his ſinnes and keepe all my ſtatutes, Ezech.18.21. This is all God requireth, without any other penall workes: wherefore ceaſing from ſinne and amendment of life, which neceſſarily include the true ſorrow and conuerſion of the heart, are ſufficient for repentance.

*Argum.*2. Peter was receiued to mercie without any ſatisfaction; ſo was the Publican, Luc. 18. Likewiſe Chriſt ſaid to the ſicke of the palſie, Ariſe, thy ſinnes are forgiuen thee, without any penall iniunction: Ergo, ſuch penall workes are not neceſſarie. See more of this argument before, *qu.*7.*part.*3.*argum. proteſtant.*8. and all the other arguments concluding againſt ſatisfaction, may be applyed againſt the neceſſitie of penall and ſatisfactorie workes.

Auguſtine. Conſcientiam bonam faciunt, præteritorum malorum condigna ſatisfactio, & inſtantium malorum cauta prouidaque declinatio: condigna ſatisfactio eſt malefacta corrigere, & correcta non reiterare: De interior.dom.procem. The worthie ſatisfaction for euils paſt, and a warie declining of euils preſent, doe make a good conſcience: Worthie ſatisfaction is this, to correct that is euill, and being amended, not to fall into the ſame againe. Here ſatisfaction is nothing elſe but true repentance, and no other workes of ſatisfaction but to ceaſe from euill, and doe good, which are the parts of true repentance.

THE SECOND PART, WHICH BE THE Penall Satisfactorie workes.

The Papiſts.

68. Error.

PRayer, faſting, almes, are thoſe ſatisfactorie workes, whereby we doe ſatisfie God for the temporall puniſhment due vnto ſinne: and beſide theſe, there are other, opera indebita: workes which we are not bound vnto, as whipping and beating of the body, and ſuch like : Bellarmin. lib. 4. de pœnitent.c.6.

68.Error. Argum. Firſt, that prayer,faſting, and ſuch other workes commaunded are ſatisfactions,the Scripture teſtifieth, Pſalm. 50.15. Call vpon me in the day of trouble, I will deliuer thee,&c. Ioel.2.17. Turne vnto me with all your heart, with faſting, weeping, and mourning : who knoweth if he will returne and repent,&c. Ergo, with prayer and faſting God is ſatisfied : Bellarm.c.6.

Contra. Firſt, prayer is a fruit of faith,Rom.10.14. How ſhall they call on him, vpon whom they haue not beleeued: and faſting is a meanes to make our repentance more effectuall, being ioyned with weeping and mourning : all theſe are fruits and effects of faith, by the which God is reconciled to vs, and his wrath appeaſed, and we at peace with God, Rom.3.24.& 5.1. Secondly, it is not then the prayer which ſatisfieth or is auaileable before God, but faith, Iam.5.15. The prayer of faith ſhall ſaue the ſicke. Thirdly, and this is euident by the circumſtance of theſe places, Pſalm. 50.15. And thou ſhalt glorifie me : if God haue the glorie of our deliuerance, it is to be aſcribed to his mercie, not to our ſatisfaction : and Ioel.2.13. The Lord is mercifull,gracious, &c. but if faſting doe ſatisfie Gods iuſtice, what need they flee to his mercie?

69.Error. Argum. 2. Saint Paul whipped and beate himſelfe, 1.Cor.9.27. I beat downe my bodie : for ſo the word ſignifieth, to beat till the bodie be blew. The Publicane beat vpon his breaſt : Iohn Baptiſt was apparelled in Camels haire,&c. Ergo, painefull and laborious workes not preſcribed or commaunded, are acceptable to God, and ſatisfactorie : Bellar. ibid.

Contra. Firſt, it is a vaine ſurmiſe, that Saint Paul ſcourged or beate his owne bodie, as your Friers Flagellants vſe to do : 1. the Apoſtle taketh his ſimilitude from champions that vſe to fight, and one beat another, which the word ὑπωπιάζω ſignifieth ; and ſo continuing the metaphore,ſaith, I doe beat downe,&c. 2. The ſame word is vſed, Luc. 18.5. *I will doe her right,leaſt ſhe come and make me wearie:Obtundat me,*it were abſurd to ſay,leaſt ſhe beat me. 3. The Apoſtle ſheweth,how de doth beat his bodie,by bringing it into ſubiection, which may be done otherwiſe than by beating : 4. the the Apoſtles doctrine is contrarie, Epheſ. 5.29. No man hateth his owne fleſh , but nouriſheth and cheriſheth it.

Secondly, the beating vpon the Publicanes breaſt,was a ſigne of his great ſorrow, and of the diſpleaſure taken againſt his ſinne ; hee did not in ſo doing wound or offer violence to his bodie. Auguſtine ſaith, Tundere pectus, quid aliud eſt, quam arguere quod latet in pectore,&c. To knocke vpon the breaſt, what is it elſe, but to checke or to reprooue ſinne lying hid in the breaſt, In Matth. Serm. 8.

Thirdly, all theſe workes are commended in Scripture : as to mortifie and ſubdue the fleſh, which Saint Paul did, Coloſſ. 4.5. Mortifie your earthly members : to teſtifie ſorrow by the ſmiting of the ioynts and parts together, as the Publicane is warranted, Nahum. 2.10. The heart melteth, the knees ſmite togither. Iohns auſtere life and conuerſation was agreeable to his calling, which was to be a cryer in the wilderneſſe, Matth.3.2. and our Sauiour commendeth him for his ſtrict life, Matth.11.7,18. Wherefore theſe examples ſerue not at all to warrant laborious workes, not preſcribed nor commaunded.

Fourthly, admit theſe workes to be laborious and painefull, yet were they not ſatisfactorie. Saint Paul ſaith, he was crucified with Chriſt, he had mortified and ſubdued his fleſh ; yet he challengeth no ſatisfaction thereby, but ſaith, I liue by the faith in the ſonne of God, Galat.2.20. The Publicane maketh ſuite for mercie, Lord be mercifull to me a ſinner, therefore intended no ſatisfaction : and Iohn was ſo farre from ſeeking any merit or ſatisfaction by his life, that he confeſſeth, he was not worthie to beare Chriſts ſhooes, Matth. 3.11. Wherefore by theſe places, no ſatisfactorie penall workes can be warranted or perſwaded.

The Proteſtants.

First, prayer, faſting, almes, are the liuely fruits and effects of faith, neceſſarie to be done, and through Chriſt acceptable vnto God, but there is no merit or ſatisfaction in them.

Argum. No workes which are commaunded,and wherein we are indebted vnto God, are able to ſatisfie, becauſe wee haue done no more, then was our dutie to doe, Luk.17.10. Saint Ambroſe ſaith, Nemo in operibus glorietur,&c. Let no man glorie in his works, becauſe of right we owe obedience to the Lord,&c. Nec in te patitur dominus vnius vſum eſſe operis, aut laboris,&c. God doth not ſuffer thee to haue the vſe of any one worke or labour, becauſe while we liue, we muſt be alwayes working, Ambroſ in 17. Luc. But prayer, faſting, almes are commaunded, and ſo our due debt vnto God : Ergo, they are not ſatisfactorie.

Hierome ſaith, Caue,ne ſi ieiunare cœperis, te putes eſſe iam ſanctam,&c. Take heed leaſt thou thinke thy ſelfe holy, when thou beginneſt to faſt ; for this vertue is but an helpe, it is not the perfection of holineſſe, ad Cœlant. but ſatisfaction is the very perfection of workes.

This is alſo the opinion of ſome of the Popiſh writers, Non ſatisfieri per opera aliàs debita : That we cannot ſatisfie by workes that are due, or debted : Thomas, Durandus, Paludanus in 4. diſt.15.

Wherefore prayer, almes, and other workes being commaunded, and ſo our due debt vnto God, cannot ſatisfie.

Secondly, neither is God ſo much as pleaſed with voluntarie puniſhments inflicted vpon the bodie, much leſſe doe they worke any ſatisfaction.

Argum. Coloſſ. 2. The Apoſtle calleth it, a ſhew of wiſdome in voluntarie religion, in not ſparing the body, &c. is no true wiſdome, but a ſhew of wiſdome; not religion preſcribed, but voluntarie: like as Baals prieſts did lance and cut themſelues with kniues, being therefore derided of the Prophet, 1. Reg. 18. Such are the painefull workes which monkes and heremites doe afflict their bodies with: God requireth no ſuch things at their hands.

Bellar. S. Paul reprooueth thoſe, that of ſuperſtition afflict their body, not for the health of their ſoule: lib. 14. de pœnitent. c. 4.

Contra. Firſt, thoſe alſo pretended by afflicting of the body to humble the ſoule, in humblenes of mind, and not ſparing the body: Secondly, all voluntarie or will-worſhip, ἐθελοθρησκεία (which Hierome tranſlateth, falſa religio, falſe religion, or falſe worſhip, Algaſiæ. qu. 10. tom. 4.) is ſuperſtitious: wherefore the Papiſts that offer vnto God workes not commaunded, euen of their owne deuiſing, to be ſatisfactions for them, are alſo guiltie of ſuperſtition.

Bellarmine alſo is a witneſſe for vs againſt himſelfe: Satisfactoria opera non in obſeruationibus ab hominibus excogitatis, &c. We doe not place ſatisfactorie workes in obſeruations inuented of men, but in faſting, almes, prayer, which in the Scriptures haue precepts, examples, and large promiſes, lib. 4. c. 13. reſp. ad arg. 7. a more euident teſtimonie againſt voluntarie ſatisfactions cannot be produced.

Laſtly, Auguſtine ſaith, Qui tundit pectus, & non corrigitur, ſolidat peccata non tollit: He that beateth his breaſt, and is not corrected, doth harden or conſolidate his ſinnes; he taketh them not away: Tom. 9. de diſciplin. Chriſtian. c. 10. Ergo, beating of the fleſh, being not a mollifying of the heart, doth worke no ſatisfaction.

THE SECOND PART, BY WHOM PENALL workes are to be inflicted.

Three waies, they ſay, God is ſatisfied: 1. by bearing patiently the puniſhment that God layeth vpon vs: 2. by aſſuming voluntarily the laborious and painefull workes of penance: 3. and in willing vndergoing the ſentence of the prieſt in his penall iniunctions. Of the firſt, there is no queſtion betweene vs, that we are patiently to endure the Lords croſſe, though thereby wee neither merit, nor ſatisfie: the other two they would prooue thus.

First, that penall workes may voluntarily be vndertaken, theſe examples ſhew it: Iob ſaith, I doe reprehend my ſelfe, and repent in duſt and aſhes: Iob. 42. 6. Dauid, of himſelfe faſted and praied, 2. Sam. 12. he was not enioyned to doe it. So likewiſe Ahab humbled himſelfe with faſting and ſackcloth, 1. King. 21. he was not bid ſo to doe; yet God was well pleaſed with it: Bellar. l. 4. c. 4. 70. Error.

Contra. Firſt, theſe were not voluntarie workes, to humble themſelues with faſting and ſackecloth, but ſuch as God called for, and were by the Prophets preſcribed to the people, when they by repentance did turne vnto God: Ioel. 2. 12. Turne vnto the Lord with faſting and weeping, &c. Wherefore by theſe examples they haue not prooued, that voluntarie and vnbidden puniſhments, as whipping and ſcourging of the bodie, and ſuch like, are of our ſelues to be inflicted. Secondly, none of theſe were penall or ſatisfactorie workes of penance, but liuely and euident ſignes of true repentance. Thirdly, it is very abſurd, that Ahab a wicked hypocrite, is matched here with Iob and Dauid, the faithfull ſeruants of God, in the exerciſe of true repentance: that God ſpared Ahab, it was not of his ſatisfaction, but of Gods mercie, remitting temporall puniſhment for temporall repentance: for how could Ahab ſatisfie God, that did ſell himſelfe to worke wickedneſſe. And they themſelues graunt, that a man being in deadly ſinne, cannot ſatisfie: Bellarm. c. 13. reſp. ad argum. 7.

Secondly, the Prieſts haue power to enioyne workes of penance, as affliction of bodie, mulct, penaltie, correction, by almes-deeds, faſting, abſtinence, and ſuch like, Conc. Trid. ſeſſ. 14. can. 15. Rhemiſt. 2. Corinth. 2. ſect. 2. 71. Error.

Argum. To them is giuen authoritie to bind and looſe: Ergo, to enioyne penance: As they looſe their ſinnes, ſo they bind them vnto the penall workes of penance: and as they haue power to remit ſinnes, in reſpect of the fault and euerlaſting puniſhment; ſo to retaine ſinnes, for the temporall puniſhment: Bellar. lib. 4. c. 5.

Anſ. 1. Some kind of mulcts, Church diſcipline is not to deale withall: as bodily puniſhment, and pecuniarie fines, which are to be impoſed at the diſcretion of the Magiſtrate: Synod. Mogunt. cap. 77. Archidiaconus mulcta pecuniaria punire non præſumat: The Archdeacon ſhall not preſume to puniſh with pecuniarie mulct. Secondly, wee graunt an holſome vſe of the keyes in Church diſcipline,

diſcipline, in puniſhing and cleanſing of notorious offenders in the open face of the congregation: but priuatly to enioyne men penance for their ſecret ſinnes, is an Antichriſtian yoke. Thirdly, yet publike penance enioyned notorious offenders, is no part of their ſatisfaction to Godward, but a ſigne of their reconciliation to the Church, which they haue offended; and it is profitable for the example of others, that they by ſuch publike ſhame may be terrified from the like offending. Fourthly, binding and looſing are contrarie actes, when the miniſters by the word of God bind, they looſe not; when they looſe, they bind not: but the popiſh prieſt doth both looſe and binde together; looſe the ſinne, binde the puniſhment: and the authoritie which Chriſt giueth, is to remit and retaine ſinne: As for remitting or retaining of the puniſhment, it belongeth to the iudge of the world, Chriſt himſelfe.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, for a man to lay any voluntary or deuiſed puniſhment vpon himſelfe to be a ſatisfaction for his ſinne; it is contrarie to the Scripture.

*Argum.*1. Mark.7.7. In vaine do they worſhip me, teaching for doctrines the commandements of men: but the inflicting vpon the bodie ſuch puniſhments, as in whipping, ſcourging, beating of the fleſh, is the doctrine and commandement of men: Ergo, it is a vaine worſhip. Bellarm. *Anſw.*1. Obedience to men diſpleaſeth not God, but when they commaund things contrarie to God. 2. It is the commandement of God, that we ſhould repent with faſting, ſackcloth, &c. lib.4.c.4.

Contra. Firſt, nothing can be more contrary to Gods word, then to teach men by their owne puniſhment, to ſatisfie the wrath of God: for the Scripture teacheth, that Chriſt is our peace; that he hath reconciled vs to God by his croſſe, and ſlaine hatred thereby, that was before betweene God and vs, Epheſ.2.14.16. there remaineth therefore nothing to be ſatisfied for, by vs. Secondly, to repent with faſting; to make our ſorrow more effectuall, which they alſo ſhewed in thoſe times by aſhes and ſackcloth, was the commandement of God, and the practiſe of the Saintes: but to make bald the head, to cut and afflict the fleſh, was the vſe of idolatrous prieſts, 1.King.18. neither liked nor allowed of God.

*Argum.*2. The Apoſtle ſaith, Heb.12.9. We haue had the fathers of our bodies, which corrected vs, &c. ſhould we not much rather be in ſubiection to the Father of ſpirits, that we might liue? And verſ.10. They chaſtened vs after their owne pleaſure, but he for our profite, &c. Here the Apoſtle maketh two ſorts of Correctors, man for the body, God for the ſoule: and two kinds of corrections, inflicted either by earthly parents, or by the Father of ſpirites: From whence I conclude, that all corrections tending to the life of the ſoule, are applied by the Father of ſpirites: therefore as children are chaſtened of their fathers for offences toward them, they do not chaſtiſe themſelues; ſo our heauenly Father correcteth his children, they do not puniſh themſelues.

Origen ſaith in 14. Matth. Si quando, &c. If at any time wee fall into the neceſſitie of temptation, let vs remember, Quòd Ieſus nos compulit ingredi nauem illam: That Ieſus conſtrayned vs to go into the ſhippe: as the Apoſtles went not into the ſhippe of themſelues to ſaile on the troubleſome ſea, but Ieſus compelled them, Matth.14.22. ſo no man is willingly to runne into any affliction, but when he is thereto appointed of God.

Secondly, penall iniunctions impoſed for ſatisfaction by Prieſts, are not warranted by the word of God.

*Argum.*1. Such workes as God requireth neceſſarie to repentance, cannot be refuſed without ſinne, as ſuch, whereof the Prophet ſpeaketh, Iſay.1.17. Learne to do well, ſeeke iudgement, &c. But the iniunctions of the Prieſts may be refuſed without ſinne, as ſome of their popiſh diuines hold: as Scotus, Gabriel, and this Bellarmine denieth not, though the reſt he ſaith be of another minde, lib.4.c.13. therefore the Prieſts penall iniunctions are not thoſe, which the Lord requireth in his word. argum. Philipp. apolog. confeſſ. Auguſten.

*Argum.*2. The Indulgences of men may diſpenſe with the ſatisfactions enioyned by the Prieſt, but they cannot free them from thoſe precepts, Bring forth fruits worthie of repentance: Ergo, ſuch ſatisfactions are not preſcribed or commanded of God.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Indulgences of men, do not free any from Gods precepts, but onely from the paines, and puniſhments: as it is the Apoſtles precept, to pay tribute to whom tribute belongeth: Rom.13. Yet the Prince may pardon the tribute, but for all this hee freeth not any from the Apoſtles precept. Bellarm. lib.4.c.13.

Contra. Firſt, the reaſon is not alike, man may remit a debt or dutie vnto man: Ergo, man may diſpenſe with a debt due vnto God: nay, ſeeing one man cannot remit the debt of another, how vnreaſonable is it, that any ſhould preſume to remit any thing due vnto God. Secondly, the argument is not anſwered, neither do I thinke that father Robert doth well vnderſtand himſelfe in his anſwere: for if penal ſatisfactions be comprehended in this commandement, Bring forth worthie fruites, &c. as they pretend they are; this being a precept of Scripture, if they can diſpenſe with this, then do they diſpenſe with Gods precepts: wherfore they muſt either confeſſe, that their ſatisfactions are not theſe worthie fruites;and ſo they haue no ground in Scripture : or if they be, they haue no power to diſpenſe with them.

Argum.3. True repentance is a free worke, not of compulſion, or coaction: Saint Paul exhorteth men to iudge themſelues, that they be not iudged, 1.Cor.11.31. But now when penance is layd vpon a man, and not voluntarily taken of himſelfe, he is iudged rather of another, he doth not iudge himſelfe. Auguſtine ſaith, Quem pœnitet, punit ſeipſum, prorſus aut punis, aut punit Deus,vt ille non puniat, puni tu: He that repenteth, puniſheth himſelfe: either thou puniſheſt, or God : if thou wilt not haue God to do it, puniſh thy ſelfe. A man therefore muſt puniſh himſelfe, he muſt not be puniſhed of another in his repentance to Godward : for of outward chaſtiſement to the world, now is not the queſtion.

Auguſtine ſaith, de temp.ſerm.181.c.16. Nunquam ſpernit pœnitentiam, &c. God neuer deſpiſeth repentance, if it be ſimply & ſyncerely offered vnto him : Etiamſi quis explere non poterit omnem ſatisfaciendi ordinem: Though a man cannot fulfill all the order of ſatisfaction ? Here wee ſee repentance, without ſatisfaction preſcibed and enioyned,is ſufficient. Likewiſe ad fratres in eremo. ſermon.11. O Monache, fac vt mens tua ſit liber, quem vidit,&c. O thou ſolitarie fellow (Monke) let thy minde be that booke, which Ezechiel ſaw, wherein were written Lamentations : Ad has Lamentationes te conuertas: Turne thee to theſe Lamentations:Here are no outward Satisfactions enioyned, but inward Lamentations.

Decret.Gregor.lib.5.tit.38.c.1. Manifeſta peccata non ſunt occulta correctione purganda: Manifeſt ſinnes muſt not be purged with ſecret correction. But popiſh prieſts many times enioyne ſecret penance for great ſinnes, wherein they do contrarie to their owne Canons.

THE THIRD PART, OF PARdons and Indulgences.

The Papiſts.

1. THe principal Magiſtrates of the Church are no leſſe authorized to pardon, then to puniſh, and to remit the temporall puniſhment due to ſinners , the offence being firſt forgiuen, which we call an Indulgence or pardon, Rhemiſt.2.Cor.2.4.Concil.Trid.ſeſſ.25. 72.Error.

Argum. To whom you forgiue any thing,I forgiue alſo, 2.Cor.2.10. Here the Apoſtle forgiueth the young man a piece of his puniſhment,when he might haue kept him longer in penance for his offence, Rhemiſt.ibid.

Anſ. 1. We denie not, but that the Church may releaſe ſuch publike exerciſe of humiliation, which is inioyned offenders for triall of their repentance,and ſome ſatisfaction of the Church, when it ſeeth that they are ſufficiently humbled. But it followeth not, that the Church therefore may diſpence with any neceſſary part of repentance towards God. 2. Whereas you ſay , the Apoſtle, notwithſtanding his rebuke was ſufficient, might haue kept the young man ſtill in temporall puniſhment : it is cleane contrary to the Apoſtles owne rule, who perſwadeth the Corinthians to forgiue him, leaſt he ſhould be ouercome of too much heauineſſe , verſ.7. The Apoſtle therefore would neither forgiue nor releaſe him, before they had forgiuen him , and he had ſatiſfied the whole Church, verſ.10. Neither would he keepe him longer in puniſhment, hauing once ſorrowed ſufficiently, verſ.6. The Apoſtle therefore did neither binde nor releaſe him at his owne pleaſure, but as he ſaw repentance to be wrought in the offender.

The Proteſtants.

THe power which the Pope and popiſh Biſhops do challenge vnto themſelues , in giuing Pardons and Indulgences, is moſt blaſphemous.

1 They doe take vpon them to releaſe both the puniſhment of this life,and the paines of Purgatorie alſo : and ſay,that their pardons profite both the dead and the liuing,Bull.Leon.10.

1. Contrarie to their owne Canons, par.2.cauſ.24.qu.2.c.2.Gelaſius : Eccleſia viuentes poteſt ligare,vel ſoluere,non mortuos : The Church may looſe or binde thoſe which are liuing, but not the dead. And it is grounded vpon that ſaying of our Sauiour,Whatſoeuer you binde in earth,&c.Super terram (inquit) He ſaith vpon the earth : for hee that dieth being bound,nuſquam dicit abſolui, hee ſaith no where,is abſolued. And Clemens 5.reproueth certaine pardoners, and decreeth againſt them,which made them beleeue,that gaue them almes, Quòd animas eorum(vt mendaciter aſſerunt) de purgatorio extrahant : That they drew out of Purgatorie their friends ſoules,as they lyingly ſaid: Clement.lib.5.tit.9.c.2.

2 They pardon not onely the puniſhment, but the ſinne both paſt, and to come, for dayes, yeeres,hundreds,thouſands of yeeres : howſoeuer the Rhemiſts would beare vs in hand, that an indulgence is a releaſe but of the puniſhment. Such was the firſt Iubile pardon graunted by Boniface 8.anno 1300. And another by Leo the 10.anno 1513.

Clemens 6.in his bull of the Iubile yeere, ſaith thus, Mandamus Angelis quatenus animam omnium nium accedentium,&c. We command the Angels,to carrie all the ſoules of thoſe that come to Rome this yeere, out of Purgatorie into Paradiſe: Et concedimus cruce ſignatis, vt ad eorum vota, duas vel tres animas,quas vellent,è Purgatorio liberarent: And we graunt to all thoſe, that haue taken vpon them the holy Croſſe,to deliuer two or three ſoules at their pleaſure out of Purgatorie. See what monſtrous blaſphemies here are. See alſo the Boſton pardons graunted by Pope Innocent, Pope Iulie,Pope Clement,which gaue them releaſe of all their ſins for fiue hundred yeeres,*Fox.p.*1178.

2. Contrarie to their owne Canons: *Clem.lib.5.tit.9.c.*2. Certain Pardoners,and Queſtors are condemned,quia à pœna & culpa abſoluant: which tooke vpon them to abſolue both from the fault and puniſhment.

3. They giue indulgences for temporal ſeruices; as for giuing towards Subſidies for the maintenance of warre,for building of bridges,and ſuch like: for the which the Councell of Baſil is reprehended,*epiſtol.ſynod.*7. But the Apoſtle graunteth indulgence to the inceſtuous perſon onely becauſe of his true ſorrow,which teſtified his repentance,2.Cor.2.7.

4. They tooke vpon them to grant plenarie and general indulgences,as to all that do ſuch and ſuch things: as in the yeere of Iubile,to all,that viſite Rome. So the Councel of Baſil gaue plenarie indulgence to all reſiant in the Councell, *ſeſſ.*45. Thus did not Iohn Baptiſt, who miniſtred Baptiſme of repentance and remiſſion of ſinnes,(which is the true indulgence) not to all indifferently, but to thoſe which confeſſed their ſinnes, Matth.3.6. the reſt hee rebuked,and threatned with Gods iudgements. Yea their owne Decrees teſtifie: *Diſtinct.*50.27. Satis temerarius eſt,qui cunctis remiſſionem peccatorum ſe dare poſſe putet: He is very raſh,that thinketh he is able to giue remiſſion of ſinnes to all.

5. They graunt indulgences to many that are abſent, and vnknowne, not examining their contrition and repentance: ſo did not our Sauiour, who vſed to heale thoſe onely in whom hee ſaw faith, Mark.5.34. Thy faith hath made thee whole, Mark.9.23.Luk.7.50. Yea and their owne Canons ſay, Peccati venia non datur niſi correcto: Pardon of ſinne is not granted,but to thoſe which are amended: *ſext.decretal.regul.iur.*5.

6. Their indulgences were reſtrained to ſeuerall limits and circuites: *Decret.Greg.lib.5.tit.*38. *c.*4. Indulgentiæ non proſunt non ſubditis: Indulgences doe not profite thoſe which are not ſubiects to the Biſhop,that is of his dioceſſe. But Chriſts indulgence is generall to all,Ioh.3.15. Whoſoeuer beleeueth in him,ſhall not periſh.

7. They giue indulgence not for the time paſt only,but for the time to come,giuing as it were thereby a libertie to ſin. Chriſt doth otherwiſe: after he had freed the adulterous woman, Ioh.8. he ſaith, Goe and ſinne no more: he doth not abſolue her for the time to come,but onely giueth her an admonition: See the Canon of Gelaſius following.

8. Their indulgences did flye in euery corner like flyes in the ayre,or moates in the Sunne: whereof there hath been an ancient complaint: Fiunt hodie tot indulgentiæ,&c. There are ſo many indulgences now adaies,that they grow into contempt, *opuſc.tripart.lib.3.c.*9. But the Scriptures make not ſaluation ſo eaſie or common a thing, but that euen the righteous doe finde it through much difficultie obtained,1.Pet.4.18.

9. By their indulgences they could giue power to other to deliuer ſoules,as before in the bull of Clemens 6.but Chriſt gaue power only vnto the Apoſtles and Miniſters to remit or retaine ſins, to binde,or looſe: they can haue no committies on this behalfe.

Fox.p.844. 10. And that which filled vp the meaſure of iniquitie,they ſet their pardons to ſale: as in Pope Leo his time,his pardoners for ten ſhillings would giue to any man power,to deliuer one ſoule at his pleaſure out of Purgatorie.

Argum. The Scripture ſaith,that God onely forgiueth ſinnes,Mark.2.7. And that Chriſt no otherwiſe,then as God,forgaue ſinnes, verſ.10. His Apoſtles only as his Miniſters and Ambaſſadors,in his name, declare and pronounce remiſſion of ſinnes,2.Corinth.5.19. Wherefore there is no ſuch power giuen vnto men,at their pleaſure to binde or looſe.

De Baptiſm. lib.3.cap.18. Auguſtine ſaith, Non ſecundum arbitrium hominum tenentur, aut ſoluuntur peccata, ſed ad arbitrium Dei,& orationes ſanctorum: Sinnes are not looſed, or retained at the pleaſure of men, but according to the will of God, and prayers of his Church.

Gelaſius epiſtol.ad Sanct. Auditum ſub iſto cœlo non legitur, quod eorum voce depromitur: date nobis veniam, dum tamen nos in errore duremus: Neſcio inter quæ mundi prodigia hoc poſſit admitti: Remitti culpa de præterito poteſt, correctione ſine dubio ſubſequente,&c. It was neuer heard of in the world (as they ſay,) giue vs pardon, but let vs continue in error ſtill: this may bee well counted a monſtrous thing: the fault that is paſt,may be forgiuen,if amendement of life follow after. This learned Biſhop counteth it a monſtrous thing, to forgiue ſinnes to come, men ſtill continuing in ſin: but this is an vſuall practiſe in the Popes Conſiſtorie at Rome, to forgiue ſinnes for many yeeres to come.

This doctrine alſo hath beene ſealed: Thomas Clarke perſecuted for ſaying the Pope hath no authoritie to giue pardon, and to releaſe any mans ſoule from ſinne, and ſo from paine, Fox. pag.830.

Iohn Fortune Martyr, being asked if he did not beleeue, that the Pope had power to forgiue ſins, anſwered; The Pope is but a man, and the Prophet Dauid ſaith, No man can deliuer his brother, nor make agreement for him vnto God, Pſal.49. Fox pag.1918.

Here alſo may be remembred, how one William Button appoſed a pardoner with this queſtion: Whether the holy father the Pope could deliuer ſoules out of Purgatorie? There is no doubt of that ſaid the other: Why doth hee not then (quoth Button) of charitie deliuer all ſoules from thence? For this ſpeech the good man was troubled, Fox pag.1230.

This alſo was Maſter Latimers queſtion: Why the Pope, who could with a word of his mouth (as they ſay) haue ſpoyled all Purgatorie; doth ſuffer notwithſtanding ſo much money to be beſtowed that way, and to depriue vs of ſo many Patrones in heauen, as he might deliuer out of Purgatorie. pag.1748.col.1.

The Papiſts.

2. THe ſatisfactorie and meritorious workes of the Saints which doe abound, being communicable, and applicable to the faithfull that want, are the very ground of the indulgences and pardons of the Church, and the very treaſure thereof, and to be diſpenſed according to euerie mans neede by the paſtors of Church, 2.*Corinth.*2.*ſect.*5.*Coloſſ.*1.*ſect.*4.Rhemiſt. 73.Error

The Proteſtants.

HEre are many blaſphemies and vntruths couched together.

1 That a mans penalties may exceede and be greater than his ſinnes, and ſo his abounding may ſupplie another mans want. For thus the Rhemiſts ſay: Which cannot ſtand with the iuſtice of God, to puniſh a man more then he hath deſerued. And it is contrarie to the Scriptures: Enter not into iudgement with thy ſeruant: for in thy ſight ſhall none that liueth be iuſtified, Pſal.143.2. And Iob ſaith, If the Lord ſhould call him to account, he ſhould not anſwere one to a thouſand, 9.3.

2 How can the Church-gouernours diſpenſe the merites of one to another? Who made them ſtewards of another mans good? Ye ſay alſo the contrarie your ſelues, That the abounding paſſions of the Saints are applicable to others by the ſufferers intention, *Rhem.*1.*Coloſſ.*2.2. Then not by the Churches diſpenſation.

3 It is a great blaſphemie, that one may be holpen by another mans merits, and it doth derogate from the death of Chriſt, whoſe only merits are the treaſure and ſtore-houſe of the Church: The moſt righteous man that euer was, can but ſaue his owne ſoule, Ezech.14.14. And that onely by Chriſt.

Auguſtine ſaith: Vnuſquiſque pro ſe rationem reddet, nec alieno teſtimonio quiſquam adiuuatur apud In Matth.
Deum, & vix ſibi quiſque ſufficit, &c. Euery man ſhall giue account for himſelfe, before God no man ſerm.22. is holpen by the teſtimonie of another: the teſtimonie of his owne conſcience doth hardly ſuffice for himſelfe.

The Papiſts.

3. THe diſpenſing of pardons and indulgences, is onely committed, they ſay, to the chiefe Magiſtrates the Popes and Biſhops: and as the Biſhops in their Dioceſſe haue eſpeciall caſes reſerued to themſelues, wherein inferiour Prieſts are not to deale; ſo the Pope hath alſo his proper reſeruations, wherein other Prelates are not to meddle, *Concil.Trident.ſeſſ.*14.*cap.*7. The caſes reſerued to the Pope are 51.in number, Fox pag.785. The Biſhop of Paris, *ann.*1515. reſerued theſe caſes to himſelfe, to diſpenſe in murder, witchcraft, ſacriledge, hereſie, ſimonie, adulterie, *ex Tileman.Heſhuſ.loc.*9.*de pœnitent.err.*63. Likewiſe the yeeres of their pardons are limited: Biſhops may not exceede 40.daies pardon: the Pope may be lauiſh in his hundreds and thouſands: yea, and this reſeruation of caſes, ſtandeth not onely with the externall policie of the Church, but is of force euen before God, *Concil.Trident.ſeſſ.*14.*cap.*7. 74.Error.

The Proteſtants.

WE will not much contend with them about reſeruation of caſes, for we acknowledge no ſuch power to giue pardons, or indulgences, either in ſuperiour or inferiour Prieſts: yet we will ſhew how this deuice of theirs ſtandeth not with their owne doctrine.

*Argum.*1. It is a greater power to remit the ſinne, than to releaſe the puniſhment: but euery Prieſt hath the greater power, as they ſay, to remit ſinnes, yea as fully as hath the Pope himſelfe: Allen in his booke of pardons, *cap.*2. Ergo, why haue they not the leſſe power, which is by indulgence to diſpenſe with the puniſhment? And that of theſe two, the remiſſion of ſinnes is the greater, it is confeſſed by the *Rhemiſt.*2.*Cor.*2.*ſect.*6.

*Argum.*2. In the point of death, the reſeruation of caſes hath no place: but at that time euery Prieſt may abſolue from all manner ſinnes and puniſhment, *Concil.Trident.ſeſſ.*14.*cap.*7. But euerie houre is with ſome, and ought to be with all, the point of death: becauſe wee are vncertaine when it commeth, and therefore ought alwaies to be in a readines. Therefore euen by their owne rule euery Prieſt hath at all times authoritie to abſolue in all caſes.

Againe, if theſe wordes of Chriſt bee ſpoken to all Miniſters and Preachers of the Goſpell, Ioh.20.22.Whoſe ſinnes ye retaine,&c. (which cannot be denied) to them all then is committed equally that power of binding and looſing, which is exerciſed by the preaching of the word.

Their owne Canons doe giue authoritie to euery Prieſt to enioyne penance: Decr. Greg.lib.*5. *tit.*38.*c.*12. and they do bind euery man, iniunctam ſibi pœnitentiam adimplere, to fulfill the penance inioyned; or els, viuens ab eccleſiæ ingreſſu arceatur: He that refuſeth muſt be kept out of the church as long as he liueth, and want Chriſtian buriall, when he is dead. If euery Prieſt then by their law hath power to inioyne penance; why not alſo to releaſe penance? Wherefore herein they doe their Prieſts wrong.

And ſeeing we are entred to ſpeake of the abuſe and vſurpation of the keyes in the popiſh Church, as in reſeruation of caſes, and ſuch like, I will briefly touch other notable abuſes and corruptions among them in the diſpenſation of the keyes, and eſpecially concerning excommunication: wherein they apparantly tranſgreſſe their owne canons.

ABVSES IN THE POPISH CHVRCH, IN THE administration of the Keyes, and namely about Excommunication.

1. THe ancient Canons forbid, that the dead ſhould be anathematized, or excommunicate: *Anaſtaſ.decr.*2. Monente nos Apoſtolo, &c. The Apoſtle admoniſhing vs, &c. leaſt any offence might riſe in the Church, while we goe about to iudge of them, which are paſſed out of this life, &c. Whether we liue or die, we are the Lords: Why doeſt thou iudge another mans ſeruant? And to the ſame effect Paulianus thus anſwereth Iuſtinian the Emperour: Quibus recitabitur ſententia damnationis noſtræ, &c. To whome ſhall the ſentence of our condemnation be recited? To what end ſhould we warre with the dead? &c. But nothing is more common with Papiſts, than to excommunicate the dead.

2. Excommunication in time paſt in the purer ages of the Church, was not vſed to be denounced againſt Kings: Epiſtol. Leodienſ. cont. Paſchal. 2. Si quis vetus & nouum teſtamentum, &c. If any man turne ouer the old and new teſtament, he ſhall euidently find, quod aut minimè, aut difficilè poſſunt, that kings and princes may hardly or not at all be excommunicate; they may be admoniſhed, reprooued, &c. Behold Pope Hildebrand was the firſt, qui leuauit ſacerdotalem lanceam contra diadema regum, that lift vp the prieſtly weapon againſt the crown of Princes. But now they take vpon them at their pleaſure to excommunicate princes, and it hath been the practiſe of the Popes a long time.

3. They did not vſe of auncient time to excommunicate vpon diſpleaſure, but for ſome notable ſinne: *Origen.tract.*24.in Matth. Eſt videre multos doctores, &c. Wee may ſee many doctors and teachers, that ſuffer not to enter into the Church, &c. Non propter peccata, &c. They doe not excommunicate for ſinne, but of diſpleaſure and contention; and they are better many times than themſelues, &c. But this was vſuall in Poperie, to excommunicate men vpon diſpleaſure, as Arundell Archbiſhop of Canterburie ſuſpended all the Churches in London, that did not ring their belles at his comming: Fox.p.554.

4. The vſe hath been, that none for light or ſmall offences ſhould be excommunicate. Concil. Aurel.*5.*can.*2. *Nullus ſacerdotum quenquam rectæ fidei hominem, &c. That no prieſt for light cauſes or matters, ſuſpend any man from the communion: But the contrarie is practiſed among them; as Courtney Archbiſhop of Canterburie ſuſpended certaine poore men, becauſe they brought litter for his horſe in ſackes. Fox.p.555.

5. It hath been decreed, Diem peremptorium ad primam citationem non ſtatuendum, maximè cum de rebus Eccleſiaſticis agitur: That a peremptorie day ſhould not be ſet vpon the firſt citation, eſpecially in Eccleſiaſticall matters, but that the partie ſhould be further expected: Lateranenſ. ſub Alexand.*3.*part.*2.*c.*9. The contrarie is with them practiſed, vpon the firſt citation to excommunicate.

6. Likewiſe it was decreed, Penitùs interdicimus, vt cauſa cupiditatis nullus, &c. We do inhibite, that none vpon couetouſnes doe excommunicate, or abſolue, eſpecially where the cuſtome is, that the excommunicate partie when he is abſolued, ſhould pay money. Lateranen.ſub Innocent.*3.*c.*49. But they vſe to excommunicate for want of their fees.

7. Another fault before this time complained of, quod tot hodie fiunt excommunicationes per officiales: That there are now ſo many excommunications by officials, that they are contemned and turned to laughter: Opuſc. tripart.lib.*3.*c.*9. *Senonenſ. concil. decret. mor.*31. We ſtraightly charge, vt caueant ab earum multiplicatione, &c. That they take heed of multiplying excommunications, ne in vilipendium deducantur, that they be not made nought worth. But nothing is more common with them, than for popiſh curſes and excommunications to flye abroad.

8. Lateranenſ. ſub Alexand.3.part.1.c.3.Niſi admonitione canonica præmiſſa,&c. That the prelates ſhould not pronounce the ſentence of excommunication, but vpon canonicall admonition going before; ſo alſo was it decreed, Concil. Oxonienſ. ſub Stephano: But it is their vſe, to excommunicate at the firſt, without any other admonition.

9. It hath been the vſe, that for publicke and notorious ſinnes, men ſhould be excommunicate: Concil, Cabilon. ſub Carol. c.25. Si quis publicè peccat, &c. If any man ſinne publikely, ſecundum ordinem canonum pro merito ſuo excommunicetur,&c. let him according to the canons be excommunicated for his demerite, and ſo be reconciled: But it is a rare thing with them to excommunicate for adulterie, blaſphemie, vſurie, and ſuch like, but to enioyne a little popiſh penance, and ſo to reconcile them.

10. Carthag.4.c.84. Epiſcopus nullum prohibeat ingredi Eccleſiam,&c. Let the biſhop forbid none to enter into the Church, and to heare the word, whether a Gentile, Iewe, or hereticke, vntill the Maſſe, &c. which was then nothing elſe, but the communion: But with them excommunicate perſons are excluded from hearing the word at all, wherby they might be brought to repentance for their ſinne.

11. None in the purer times of the Church were excommunicate, before their cauſe was heard: Epiſtol. Leodienſ. Nec à Papa Romano nos excommunicatos credimus,&c. Neither doe we beleeue, that we are excommunicate of the Pope, for we know he is not ignorant, what Nicodemus ſaith; our lawe condemneth no man, vnleſſe it heare him firſt: But they vſe to excommunicate without preſence of the partie, or hearing of the cauſe.

12. It is their law, that excommunicatus non poteſt excommunicare, that they which are excommunicate, cannot excommunicate others. Cauſ.24.qu.1.c.4. But the Papiſts ſtand ipſo facto excommunicate, as all heretickes and idolators doe: and Maſter Beza ſaith, he told them to their face at Piſſiacum, that there was none of all the popiſh hierarchie, which by the pure and auncient canons of the Church is not ipſo facto to be pronounced excommunicate. Epiſtol.1 p.18.

13. Their owne canons make two kinds of excommunications: the greater, which is à communione fidelium, from the communion of the faithfull; and the leſſe, à perceptione ſacramentorum, from the receiuing of the Sacraments: Decr.Greg.lib.5.tit.39.c.59. And the greater excommunication is not to be vſed, but vpon great offences: Synod.Colonienſ part.13.cap.5. Cum excommunicatio pœna ſit, quæ nulla maior in Eccleſia: Seeing excommunication is a puniſhment, then the which there is no greater in the Church, let no man be excommunicate, niſi pro peccato lethali, but for deadly ſinne. Now the contrarie is practiſed with them, which draw out euen the greater excommunication vpon euery ſmall occaſion, neuer vſing the leſſe at all: And that it is the greater excommunication, both their practiſe ſheweth, in ſeparating not from the communion only, but from the entrance into the Church; and the Canon likewiſe witneſſeth, excommunicatio ſimpliciter lata: an excommunication ſimply pronounced, without any condition, is vnderſtood of the greater: Decr.Greg.lib.5.tit.39.c.59.

14. By the auncient Canons, it is not lawfull to haue any fellowſhip with excommunicate perſons: they all ſtand excommunicate, qui cibo, potu, oſculo, &c. which doe communicate with them in meate or drinke, &c. Cauſ.11.q.3.c.3. Nicolaus. Sine ſpe ſit reconciliationis, He is without hope to be reconciled, that doth companie with the excommunicate. C.7. Martin. Non palam vel ſecretè cum eis loquendum: They muſt not openly or ſecretly talke with them. C.18. Iſidor. It is not lawfull to go to the houſe of one excommunicate. C.26. Communicare non licet ijs: It is not lawfull to communicate with thoſe, that keepe companie with the excommunicate. C.25.Greg. Now then the Canons beeing thus ſtrict, that not onely they that keepe companie with the excommunicate, but they which communicate with the companions of the excommunicate, that doe eate, drinke, and talke with them, doe ſtand alſo excommunicate: by this meanes, thouſands of people (excommunications being ſo common as they are) ſhall ſtand ſubiect at once to the ſentence of excommunication.

15. Becauſe excommunication was counted ſo heauie a ſentence: anathema, æterna mortis damnatio: It is the damnation of eternall death, to be anathematized or excommunicate. Cauſ.11.qu.3.c.41. In the ſame place it is decreed, that the ſentence of excommunication, non ferenda ſine conſcientia Epiſcopi, ſhould not be giuen without the knowledge of the biſhop or Archbiſhop himſelfe. But the contrarie is practiſed amongſt them; euery officiall, deputie, or ſurrogate, hath as great power to excommunicate as the biſhop himſelfe.

16. Beſide, excommunicate perſons (by the Canons and Imperiall conſtitutions) are depriued of ciuill priuiledges and immunities: Excommunicandus non audiendus in iudicio: An excommunicate perſon is not to be heard in iudgement, decret.Greg.lib.1.tit.29.c.21. Non ſunt homicidæ.&c. They are not guiltie of murder, that take armes againſt the excommunicate: Cauſ.23.qu.5.c.47. Vrban. In nullum teſtimonium recipiendi: They muſt not be receiued as witneſſes in any cauſe: Calixt.epiſt.2. They are ſubiect Banno imperiali to the imperiall outlawrie, if they ſtand one yeere excommunicate: *Cod.lib.*1.*tit.*6.*leg.*13.Frederic. Who ſeeth not, what inconueniences wil enſue, that thouſands being wrapped in the ſentence of excommunication at once, as I ſhewed *artic.*14. ſhall alſo incurre the penaltie and danger of the Princes lawes.

17 It is prohibited by the Canons, that any man ſhould excommunicate in his owne cauſe, Pro vindicta propriæ iniuriæ, quod ſacris regulis prohibetur: to be reuenged for any iniurie done to himſelfe, which is forbidden by the ſacred rules: *cauſ.*23.*qu.*4.*c.*27.Gregor. The contrary is practiſed by popiſh Prelates: as ſee an example before *artic.*4.

18. *Nicen.*2.*can.*4. It is decreed, that no man, Propter auri exactionem vel alicuius alius ſpeciei, venerandum templum claudere: Should for the exacting of gold or ſiluer, or ſuch like ſhut vp the Church doores, that is, interdict it, that the diuine myſteries be not ſolemnized in it: The popiſh practiſe is contrary, who for the omiſſion of the leaſt dutie, or fee, belonging to them, and vpon other ſmall occaſions, do interdict Churches; an example hereof ſee in *Arundell artic.*3.

19. By the old Canons, he that was excommunicate, was ſolemnely reconciled to the Church, Terræ proſtratus veniam poſtulat: Falling downe to the ground, he muſt aske forgiuenes: and publike prayer was to be made for him in this manner: Præſta quæſumus Domine huic famulo tuo &c. Graunt Lord, we pray thee to this thy ſeruant worthie fruite of repentance, that he may be reſtored to the holie Church, from whoſe integritie hee hath erred by ſinning, *cauſ.*11.*qu.*3.*c.*108. But now among them abſolution is done in ſecret, without any notice giuen, or ſubmiſſion made before the congregation.

20. Laſtly, to end where I began, in time paſt the Presbyters were ioyned with the Biſhop, in the adminiſtration of the keyes of the Church, as in binding, and looſing: but the Pope & popiſh prelates were the firſt that brought in reſeruation of caſes, and appropriated al to themſelues, excluding the reſt, as it may appeare by this reſeruation of caſes: and for the truth of antiquitie in this behalfe, theſe authorities I had at hand.

1. *Cauſ.*11.*qu.*3.*c.*106.Debent 12.ſacerdotes epiſcopum circumſtare, &c. Twelue other Prieſts muſt ſtand by the Biſhop, when hee pronounceth excommunication, &c. *C.*108. Likewiſe, when the penitent partie was to be reconciled, the Biſhop muſt be aſſiſted with as many.

2. *Cauſ.*12.*qu.*2.*c.*51.Nec epiſcopi ſine preſbyteris, nec preſbyteri ſine epiſcopo res eccleſiæ vendant, &c. Neither the Biſhop without the Presbyters, nor the Presbyters without the Biſhop muſt ſell the goods of the Church. If they were ioyned together in diſpenſing of the temporall goods of the Church, much more in the ſpirituall.

3. They were ioyned together in deciding and ending of controuerſies of the Church. *Cauſ.*15.*qu.*7.*c.*2.Præſentibus ſenioribus epiſcopus, &c. The Biſhop ſhall heare the cauſes of the Clergie, the Seniors or Elders being preſent. *C.*6.Nullius cauſam audiat epiſcopus, &c. Let the Biſhop heare no mans cauſe without the preſence of the Clergie. *Decret.Gregor.lib.*5.*tit.*7.*c.*9. Lucius 3. Epiſcopi cum conſilio Clericorum, &c. The Biſhops with the counſell of the Clergie muſt iudge of heretikes.

4. Innocentius 3. decreed, that omnis vtriuſq; ſexus, &c. that euery one of both ſexes vpon paine of excommunication, ſhould confeſſe proprio ſacerdoti, to their owne Prieſt, and ſhould fulfill iniunctam pœnitentiam, penance inioyned by him, *decret.Greg.lib.tit.*38.*c.*12.

5. *Synod. Auguſt.c.*19.Poteſt quilibet confeſſor pro peccatorum magnitudine, ex cauſa, quæ ſibi iuſta videbitur, ad tempus communione interdicere: Euery confeſſor may according to the greatnes of the ſinnes, as he ſhall ſee iuſt cauſe, for a time to interdict from the Communion. If then the Prieſt haue power to binde, why hath he not power to looſe? and if to looſe, then alſo to binde? Their owne Canons allow them to inioyne penance, to interdict the Communion; why not alſo to giue indulgence.

6 Origen ſaith: Epiſcopi & preſbyteri, quibus ſunt creditæ cathedræ, qui tradunt eccleſias, quibus non oportet, &c. Biſhops and Presbyters, to whom the chaires or ſeates of the Church are committed, which doe deliuer Churches to thoſe, whom they ſhould not, are they that ſell Doues, &c. Hee ſaith, that to both of them the chaire of the Church is committed: *Origen.tract.*15.in Matth.

7. Ambroſe thus witneſſeth: *Lib.*2.*de Cain & Abel.c.*4. Remittuntur peccata per Dei verbum, cuius Leuites interpres & executor eſt, Leuites igitur miniſter remiſſionis eſt: Sinnes are remitted by the word of God, whereof the Leuite is the interpreter, and executor, the Leuite then is the miniſter of remiſſion.

8. To this agreeth our Engliſh confeſſion, *Harm.ſect.*11. Seeing one manner of word is giuen to all, and one onely key belongeth to all, we ſay, there is but one onely power of all Miniſters, as concerning opening and ſhutting.

9. To this accordeth a reuerent learned man of our Church, writing thus: After Biſhops were appointed, &c. at length by cuſtome Presbyters were vtterly excluded from all aduice and counſell, whereof Ambroſe complaineth, and Biſhops onely entermedled with the regiment of the Church. This manner of ſubiection in Presbyters, and prelation in Biſhops, grew onely in continuance of time, and not by any ordinance of Chriſt or his Apoſtles: B.Bilſon. Of the regiment of the Church.p.237. Whereby this reuerend author inſinuateth, as the truth is, that at the beginning, Presbyters were ioyned with Biſhops in the regiment of the Church and diſpenſation of the keyes, howſoeuer it is come to paſſe, that they are now vtterly excluded.

We haue the teſtimonie of the holy Martyrs: Richard Feurus holy Martyr, In preaching of the word is all the power contained of binding and looſing, Fox p.913.col.2.

Iames Bainham Martyr: He that preacheth the word of God, and liueth thereafter, hath the key that bindeth and looſeth both in heauen and earth: the which key is the ſame Scripture that is preached, and the Pope hath no other key to binde or looſe, but the key of Scripture, Fox p.1029. col.2.

THE NINTH QVESTION, OF THE CEREmonies and circumſtances of penance.

The Papiſts.

1. THey inioyne their penitent Clients to poll their heads, and their women to weare a vaile, to goe in blacke, to put on ſackcloth, to looke ſowrely: and ſuch like preſumptions they haue concerning the habite of thoſe that doe penance, Bellarm.lib.1.de pœnitent.cap.22. 75.Error.

The Proteſtants.

OVr Sauiour cleane contrarie biddeth his Diſciples, not to looke ſowrely, nor to disfigure themſelues, when they faſt and repent, or to ſhew any other outward token of their ſorrow, but to doe it ſecretly betweene themſelues and God, to waſh their face, to annoynt themſelues with oyle, that it appeare not to men that they faſt, Matth.6.16.17.

Auguſtine alſo anſwering a certaine obiection, that yong men newly maried might make: How can I ſhaue my head or chaunge my habite? ſaith thus, Vera conuerſio ſufficit tibi, ſine veſtimentorum commutatione: The true conuerſion of the heart may ſuffice thee without changing of thy veſture. De tempor. ſerm.67.

The Papiſts.

2. THey inioyned them to faſt bread and water certaine daies in the weeke, to lie hard, to abſtaine from mariage, or to doe ſome great almes-deedes to ſatisfie for their ſinne, Bellarm. ibid. to goe a pilgrimage, and ſuch like workes of penance were preſcribed them. 76.Error.

The Proteſtants.

TRue repentance conſiſteth not in ſuch outward exerciſe of the bodie, but is a conuerſion rather of the heart. It was the manner of hypocrites, idolators and ſuperſtitious men, to ſeeke to appeaſe their gods with afflicting of their fleſh, as the Gentiles did cut their haire, Deut.14.1. Baals prieſts did launce their fleſh.1.King.18.28.

Argum. What is to bee thought of ſuch puniſhing of the carkaſſe, Saint Paul ſheweth, Coloſſ.2.23. He calleth it voluntarie religion or ſuperſtition in not ſparing the bodie: when men do not vſe ſuch outward exerciſes of faſting and abſtinence for the chaſtiſement of the fleſh, to ſubdue it to the ſpirit, but with an opinion of meriting thereby, preferring them before the faith and conuerſion of the heart, as the Papiſts doe.

Auguſtine ſaith, Non ſit ſatis, quòd doleat, ſed ex fide doleat, & non ſemper doluiſſe, doleat: Let it not ſuffice to be ſorrowfull, but let his ſorrow proceede of faith, and let it grieue him, that hee is not alwaies grieued for his ſin. So then true repentance is eſpecially an inward work of faith, rather then an exerciſe of the bodie, and it ought alwaies to continue. Wherefore it conſiſteth not in ſuch laborious workes, which if a man ſhould long endure, he ſhould end his life ſooner than repentance. De pœnit. cap. 13.

Their owne Canons thus teſtifie: Cauſ.33 qu.2.c.13.14.Leo, Coniugia poſt pœnitentiam legitimam non negentur: Let not mariage bee denied after due penance. Concerning the interdicting of meate, the Councell of Cabilon.c.35.Quidam, quibus in pœnitentia vini & carniũ vſus, &c. Some, to whom in penance the vſe of wine and fleſh is interdicted, they not changing their mind but their meate, doe liue more delicately of other things. Spiritualis autem pœnitentia maxime in pœnitentibus vigere debet: But ſpirituall repentance ought moſt of all to flouriſh in penitent perſons.

And againſt this heauie yoke of penance in preſcribing ſo many ſuperſtitious obſeruations, thus it ſtandeth in the Canon: Cauſ.26.qu.7.c.12. Homini, cui graue pondus pœnitentiæ imponis, &c. neceſſe eſt, &c. The man, vpon whom you impoſe ſo heauie a yoke of penance, muſt either of neceſſitie reiect your penance, or receiuing it, and being not able to beare it, hee muſt be more ſcandalized or offended.

The Papiſts.

3. THey meaſure their penance by number of yeeres and daies: They haue their quadragenas, fortie daies penance: ſeptenas, ſeuen yeeres penance: Ex Tileman.Heſhuſ.loc.9.de pœnitent. 78.Error.

Err.83. And they lengthen or cut ſhort the time of penance at their pleaſure, to continue three, ſeuen, or ten yeeres, yea ſometime more, *Bellarm.lib.*1.*de pœnitent.c.*22.

The Proteſtants.

THat true repentance is not to be meaſured by the time, but by the right ſorrow and contrition of the offender, Saint Paul teacheth vs, who writeth for the young man to be releaſed, becauſe of his great and ſufficient heauines for his fault, 2.Cor.2.7.

De tempor. ſerm.66. Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Pœnitentia vera, non annorum numero, ſed amaritudine animi cenſetur: pœnitentia quamuis ſit exigui temporis, &c. True repentance is not meaſured by number of yeeres, but by the bitternes of the ſoule: though it be but for a ſhort time, yet it is not deſpiſed before that iudge which regardeth the heart.

*Synod. Cabilonenſ. ſub Carolo.cap.*34.Non penſanda eſt pœnitentia quantitate temporis, ſed ardore mentis: Repentance muſt not be weighed by the quantitie of time, but feruencie of minde.

*Can.*35.Multi, quod ſine dolore dicendum non eſt, in pœnitentia non tam peccati remiſſionem, quam temporis conſtituti expectant expletionem: Many, which wee ſay not without griefe, in repentance reſpect not ſo much the remitting of their ſinne, as the fulfilling of the ſet or appointed time of penance.

*Decret. par.*2.*cauſ.*26.*qu.*6.*c.*12. Iulius: Deus inſpector cordis, non temporis: God is a beholder of the heart, not of the time. *C.*13.Celeſtin. Vera conuerſio mente æſtimanda, non tempore: True conuerſion is to be meaſured by the minde, not the time. *Diſtinct.*1.*de pœnitent.c.*84. Non tam conſideranda menſura temporis, quam doloris: The meaſure of the time is not ſo much to be conſidered, as of the griefe of the heart.

THE FIFTEENTH GENERALL CONTROVERSIE,

OF MATRIMONIE.

THe ſeuerall queſtions belonging to this Controuerſie are theſe:

1 Whether Matrimonie be a Sacrament properly ſo called.

2 Of Polygamie, that is, the marying of many wiues either ſucceſſiuelie, or at once.

3 Of the cauſes of diuorce, and whether it be lawfull to marrie after diuorce.

4 Of the degrees in mariage: Firſt, the manner of ſupputation or accounting of degrees. Secondly, whether the degrees forbidden, Leuit.18. may be diſpenſed with. Thirdly, whether any other degrees may be by humane law prohibited.

5 Of the impediments of mariage, of two ſorts: firſt, of thoſe that may hinder the contract of mariage onely. Secondly, of ſuch impediments as may both diſſolue the contract and the mariage alſo conſummate.

6 The compariſon of mariage and virginitie, whether either be preferred before the other before God.

7 Of the times of mariage prohibited.

8 Of the ceremonies and rites of Mariage.

Of theſe in their order.

THE FIRST QVESTION, WHETHER Matrimonie be a Sacrament.

The Papiſts.

76. Error. THat it is properly and rightly a Sacrament inſtituted of God, and not deuiſed of men, *Concil.Trid.ſeſſ.*24.*can.*1.

*Argum.*1. Epheſ.5.32. This is a great Sacrament: Matrimonie is here a ſigne of an holy thing, repreſenting the coniunction of Chriſt, and his Church: Ergo, a ſacrament.

Anſw. Firſt, the words are thus to be read rather, This is a great myſterie. Or if wee reade ſacrament, ment,they haue no great aduantage, ſeeing they are not ignorant, that the originall word myſterie, which they tranſlate ſacrament,is attributed to other things then ſacraments: as 1.Timoth.3. verſ.16.Myſterie of godlines: Apocal.17.5. A myſterie great Babylon. Neither doe they themſelues much vrge this argument. Secondly, the Apoſtle ſaith not, that Matrimonie is a myſterie, but I ſpeake of Chriſt and his Church, verſ.32. Thirdly, Matrimonie wee confeſſe to be inſtituted of God, and to be a ſigne of a holie thing: yet no ſacrament: for ſo was the Sabboth ordained of God,and ſignified the reſt in Chriſt,Heb.4.8.yet was it no ſacrament. Wherefore all ſignificatiue and myſticall ſignes are not ſacraments.

Bellarmine replyeth, that this myſterie whereof the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, is to be applyed vnto marriage,as it is a ſigne of the coniunction of Chriſt and his Church. Firſt, Hierome and Chryſoſtome ſo expound it; and Nazianzene likewiſe. Secondly, this Pronoune demonſtratiue, hoc, muſt be referred to that which went before, where he ſpake of marriage. Thirdly, the argument of the whole chapter ſheweth it, for by the example of Chriſt and his Church,the Apoſtle exhorteth men to loue their wiues;but if this myſterie appertained nothing at all to marriage,the Apoſtles argument faileth. Fourthly, the Apoſtle ſaith εἰς Χριστὸν, not ἐν Χριστῷ: not in Chriſt, but to Chriſt: ſhewing hereby,that the myſterie in marriage is referred to Chriſt. *Bellar.de Matrim.c.*2.

Contra. Firſt, Hierom ſpeaketh onely of the marriage of Adam and Eue. Adam Chriſtum, &c. Adam prefigured Chriſt; Eue the Church: this maketh nothing for marriage now: for that marriage was before ſinne in the ſtate of innocencie, and before the time of grace: it followeth not it was a figure then, and therefore a ſigne now. Chryſoſtome onely ſaith, Magnum myſterium, relicto eo,qui genuit,&c. This is a great myſterie, that woman forſaking him that begat her, ſhould cleaue to her husband,&c. he ſpeaketh not of any myſterie in marriage referred to Chriſt. Nazianzene rather maketh againſt them: Scio, quia locus iſte,&c. I know,that this place is full of Sacraments; but thinke it to be vnderſtood of Chriſt and his Church: he ſaith no more than the Apoſtle doth,making no mention of marriage.

Secondly, this demonſtratiue τοῦτο,is in Scripture referred to that which followeth, as well as to that which goeth before: as Mark.16.17.Theſe ſignes, ταῦτα, ſhall follow them that beleeue: and then the ſignes are rehearſed.

Thirdly, it followeth not, becauſe the Apoſtle draweth his exhortation from the loue of Chriſt to his Church, that whatſoeuer hee ſpeaketh of Chriſt and his Church, ſhould be repreſented in marriage: as verſ.26. He gaue himſelfe for it, that he might ſanctifie it,and cleanſe it,&c. Can he ſhew any ſuch myſterie in marriage?

Fourthly, he ſheweth his ignorance in the Greeke tongue: for εἰς is often times taken for ἐν, in: as εἰς τὴν Ἐκκλησίαν καθεζόμενοι, To ſit in the Church: Aeſchin. εἰς στήλην γράφειν, To write in a pillar, Demoſt. So that in this place εἰς, to, may very well be taken for, ἐν, in.

Laſtly, Ambroſe vpon this place, Myſterium ſacramentum grande, &c. This myſterie is a great Sacrament,in the vnity of the man and woman: nec hoc prodit,&c. yet he bringeth not forth this, but rendreth another cauſe of the Church and the Sauiour.

Argum. 2. Matrimonie giueth grace of ſanctification to the parties married. Shee ſhall be ſaued in bearing of children, if they continue in faith and loue, 1.Timoth. 2.15. Theſe are the graces giuen by matrimonie: Ergo,a Sacrament.

Anſ. Firſt, we denie that any ſacraments giue or conferre grace, they are inſtruments onely of grace. Secondly, wee alſo graunt, that by matrimonie God giueth to the faithfull this ſpeciall grace, To liue in holines and pureneſſe, from the filthie pollution of the fleſh: but the ſacraments are ſeales of ſpirituall graces,and ſerue for the encreaſe of faith: it is not ſufficient to be a meanes of any common gift,but of the ſpirituall and iuſtifying grace to make a ſacrament. Thirdly, wherefore if by faith and loue here they vnderſtand onely the fidelitie and dutie of wedlocke, they are not thoſe ſpirituall graces, whereof ſacraments are ſeales: if wee take them for the true faith and loue, which are the common graces of the faithfull, as the very meaning is, they are as well to be had out of wedlocke, as in it. Laſtly, if they will receiue Hieromes expoſition of this place(which I doe not greatly vrge) they can haue no colour at all out of this place: for this ſentence Si permanſerint, If they continue, he referreth to the children: Si illos erudierint in fide,&c. If they bring them vp in faith and loue,&c. And this ſeemeth to be more agreeable to the letter, becauſe here the Apoſtle chaungeth the number,ſpeaking in the plurall, If they continue: but before in the ſingular, Shee ſhall be ſaued, &c. And where it is obiected, That then the ſaluation of the mothers ſhould depend vpon the faith of their children: the anſwer is,That the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of the cauſes of ſaluation,but of remoouing the impediments, that women notwithſtanding bearing of children in ſorrow, which was laid vpon them for a puniſhment ſhall be ſaued: their bearing of children ſhall be no impediment vnto their ſaluation,if they haue a care to bring them vp well. If therefore Hieromes interpretation beare any credite with them, aduerſ. Iouinian. the graces here named, doe appertaine to the children, not to the women.

The Proteſtants.

THat matrimonie is no ſacrament of the Goſpell, ſpeaking now properly, and vnderſtanding a ſacrament, for the ſeale of the grace of God in the remiſſion of our ſinnes by Chriſt, it is thus prooued:

Argum. 1. Matrimonie was inſtituted by God, before ſinne in Paradiſe, therefore it can be no ſacrament of the Goſpell.

Matrimonie alſo may be betweene Infidels, who are not capable of the ſacraments of the Church: Ergo, Argum. Luther. Caluin.

Bellarm. anſwereth: 1. the ioyning together of Adam and Eue, had no promiſe of grace, or ſpirituall benediction, but onely a corporall: Increaſe and multiply: and therefore there is great difference betweene that marriage, and ours now: Bellarm.

Contra. 1. Looke what promiſe of grace the marriage of Chriſtians now hath, the ſame had matrimonie in Paradiſe: as marriage hath now a promiſe of fœcunditie and mutuall comfort, and to be a remedie againſt vncleanneſſe: the two firſt were promiſed in Paradiſe: Fœcunditie, Gen. 1. 28. mutuall helpe and comfort, 2. 20. the third was not then needfull, ſinne as yet not being knowne in the world. Secondly, S. Paul ſpeaking of the marriage of the faithfull, Epheſ. 5. 31. vſeth the ſame forme of wordes which Adam did at the very firſt inſtitution, Therefore ſhall a man leaue father and mother, &c. hereby ſhewing the inſtitution and ſubſtance of that matrimonie, and ours, to be all one. Thirdly, the maſter of the Sentences ſaith. Lib. 4. diſt. 2. b. Coniugium ante peccatum inſtitutum eſt ad ſacramentum: Marriage was inſtituted before ſinne, to be a ſacrament. Diſtinct. 22. c. Sacramentum pœnitentiæ, ſicut & coniugij ante tempus gratiæ à primordio humani generis fuit: The ſacrament of penance, as likewiſe the ſacrament of marriage, were from the beginning of mankind before the time of grace: then it followeth, that matrimonie is no ſacrament of the Goſpell, being inſtituted before.

Bellarm. 2. The matrimonie betweene Infidels is but a ciuill contract to performe the duty of nature: but the marriage of Chriſtians is more, Bellar. lib. 1. de Matrimon. cap. 5.

Contra. Though Chriſtians know, how better to vſe marriage, than Infidels; yet the end and ſcope of them both is all one, as for mutuall comfort, for propagation, and to auoid fornication: theſe be the chiefe ends of marriage, which in ſome ſort are to be found among Infidels: and therfore it is no ſacrament.

Argum. 2. Our aduerſaries are contrarie to themſelues: for they call matrimonie a prophanation of Orders, Martin. ſect. 15. cap. 11. And they ſay it is more tollerable for a Prieſt to keepe many concubines, than to marrie; Pighius ex Tileman. Heſhuſ. loc. 21. Err. 2. Doe theſe fellowes meane in good ſooth, that matrimonie is a ſacrament, which they make ſo vile, polluted, and vncleane a thing?

Pope Siricius alſo applyeth this ſaying of S. Paul, againſt marriage of Miniſters, They that are in the fleſh, cannot pleaſe God, Epiſt. ad Himerium Tarraconenſ. But if matrimonie were a ſacrament, why ſhould it not agree with Orders, one ſacrament with another?

Bellarm. anſwereth, that Siricius condemneth not marriage, but ſacriledge, that is, the vnlawfull marriage of miniſters. Secondly, it cannot be denyed, but that in the act of matrimonie there is vncleanneſſe, & turpitudo, filthineſſe: for why elſe ſhould the prieſt ſay to Dauid, Are ye cleane from women? 1. Sam. 21. And what elſe is the cauſe, why men are aſhamed to exerciſe this act before others: and the Apoſtle ſaith, That the virgine careth for the things of the Lord, &c. that ſhe may be holy both in bodie and ſpirit, 1. Cor. 7. 34. Ergo, they haue an holineſſe in bodie, which the married haue not: and therefore in ſome ſenſe it may be ſaid of marriage: They that are in the fleſh, cannot pleaſe God: reſp. ad arg. 4.

Contra. Firſt, 1. the mariage of miniſters is commendable, and allowable by the word of God, as I haue ſhewed before in that controuerſie: and the Scripture ſaith, Hebr. 13. 4. Marriage is honourable among all men: 2. againe, that place Rom. 8. 8. They that are in the fleſh, is egregiouſly abuſed: for the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not there of marriage, but of the ſinfull workes of the fleſh: 3. they that are in the fleſh, are not ſubiect to the law of God, neither can be, v. 7. they are not Chriſts, v. 9. ſay thus if ye dare of married perſons: 4. the Apoſtle alſo ſpeaking to ſuch as were married men, as to Aquila and Priſcilla, whome he greeteth by name, Rom. 16. 3. ſaith, v. 9. Yee are not in the fleſh but in the ſpirit.

Secondly, 1. how far is this fellow from the hereſie of the Marcionites & Tatianites; they counted mariage vnlawfull, & he calleth it vnclean: 2. the prieſt ſpeaketh of a legal kind of cleanlines, as in that reſpect the virgine Mary was to be purified, Luc. 2. 22. will ye therefore iudge her vnclean? 3. neither is euery thing done in ſecret, vnclean: Chriſt biddeth vs to pray in ſecret, Mat. 6. and a man is oft aſhamed, that his humble behauiour ſhould be ſeene in praier; is it therefore vncleane? modeſtie alſo teacheth man to couer the vncomely parts, 1. Cor. 12. 23. will ye ſay therefore, that any of the parts of the body are vncleane? Auguſtine ſaith, Nuptia ſinuntur exercere quod decet, vt non negligant occultare, quod dedecet: Marriage is ſuffered to exerciſe that which is lawfull, ſo that it hide that which is vncomely ; he ſaith not, vncleane : Lib.2. de grat.c.7. 4. The virgine is ſaid to take care to pleaſe God, and to be holy, &c. not becauſe the maried are vnholy : for the Apoſtle ſaith the contrarie, If their children be holy, 1.Cor.7.14. how are they vnholy : but it is ſpoken comparatiuely, becauſe the vnmarried haue better helpes, and are void of thoſe impediments which accompanie marriage. 5. Laſtly, the Apoſtle ſaith, the marriage bed is vndefiled: Heb.13.2. how dare he ſay it is defiled; wee ſpeake not of the abuſe, but of the right vſe of marriage. Ambroſe ſaith, Copula nuptialis, non quaſi culpa vitanda, &c. The marriage copulation, is not to be ſhunned as a fault. Auguſtine ſaith, Libidinis voluptas non propter nuptias cadit in culpam, ſed propter nuptias accipit veniam : The pleaſure of luſt is not culpable becauſe of marriage, but pardonable : *De nupt.& concup. lib.*1. *c.*14

Secondly Bellar. anſwereth, That matrimonie is forbidden thoſe that take orders, not as it is a ſacrament, but becauſe it bringeth worldly cares and other impediments.

Contra. Nay they prohibite marriage to ſuch, as it is a ſacrament : for a principall part of this their ſacrament conſiſteth in the matrimoniall act and copulation : which although Bellarmine inſtantly denie, is prooued thus euen by his owne confeſſion : he graunteth that matrimonie is a myſticall ſigne of the ſpirituall coniunction of Chriſt and his Church, *cap.*2. but this is repreſented in the matrimoniall coniunction : They two ſhall be one fleſh, this is a great ſecret : Ergo, herein conſiſteth the ſacrament ; and this act of matrimonie (they ſay) is a pollution of orders : and thus one ſacrament is polluted by another.

Bellarmine replyeth, that the act of copulation, or carnall act in Matrimonie, is no eſſentiall part of the Sacrament. Secondly, it is not abſurd, that they which haue one Sacrament, ſhould be without another ; as the Apoſtles refuſed the miniſterie of Deacons : Act.6. Bellarm.reſponſ. ad argum.6.

Firſt, the Canon of Leo is directly contrary : Cum ſocietas nuptiarum à principio ita ſit inſtituta, &c. Seeing the ſocietie of mariage was ſo inſtituted at the firſt, Vt præter coniunctionem ſexuum, non habeant in ſe nuptiæ: That beſide the coniunction of ſexe, Mariage hath not the Sacrament of coniunction of Chriſt and his Church, it is not to be doubted, but that the woman doth not appertaine to marriage, with the which there hath beene no matrimoniall act or miniſterie. This Canon ſaith directly, that the ſacrament of mariage is in the matrimoniall copulation.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Canon muſt be read without the negatiue, Vt præter, &c. habeant, &c. that beſide the coniunction, mariage hath the Sacrament, &c.

Contra. Firſt, if the negatiue be taken away, there is no ſenſe in the Canon : for a woman not carnally knowne, is proued to be no wife, becauſe the Sacrament of mariage onely conſiſteth in the carnall act. Secondly, the Maſter of ſentences rehearſeth this Canon with a negatiue, *lib.*4. *diſtinct.*26.g. Bellarmine thinketh moſt abſurdly, that the Maſter muſt be read without a negatiue, whereas he alleageth the Canon to proue Illam mulierem, &c. That a woman pertaineth not to mariage, that is not carnally knowne, which this Canon proueth not, if the negatiue be omitted. Thirdly, other Canons do agree, *ibid.c.*18.Benedict. Non poſſe fieri vnam carnem, &c. They cannot be one fleſh, but by carnall copulation: but the myſterie is in being made one fleſh, as S. Ambroſe calleth it Myſterium vnitatis, the myſterie of vnitie. Fourthly, Bellarmine himſelfe granteth, that when the contract is made onely per verba de futuro, by words of the future time, then the carnall copulation is an eſſentiall part, and that then ex opere operato, by the worke wrought, the coniugall act doth conferre grace : Bellarm.ibid. Where by the way let it be remembred, that the carnall acte, which before he proued to be vncleane, is now affirmed to be ſo holy, that it doth conferre grace.

Secondly, 1. He is neuer able to proue, that he which hath one Sacrament of Chriſtian religion, is ſimply to be denied the other, as they denie Miniſters that haue orders, to be maried, which both are ſacraments in their religion : but the true Sacraments of the Church, as Baptiſme, and the Euchariſt, are general and free for all, that are fitte for them. 2. The Apoſtles refuſed not the office of Deacons as vnlawfull, but as inconuenient : neyther is this any Sacrament, and the Apoſtles did execute the office of Deacons at the firſt themſelues. 3. Though it ſhould be granted, that the Sacraments may be diuided, in reſpect of perſons, that ſome may haue one and not another ; yet it is not to be endured, that one Sacrament polluteth another, as they ſay, Matrimonie is a defiling of Orders : wherefore they themſelues denie it to be a Sacrament : for Sacraments to all are holy, but mariage in Miniſters they make vnholy and vncleane.

*Argum.*3. In euery Sacrament there ought to be an externall ſenſible element, as the matter, and a ſanctifying worde, as the forme : But in Matrimonie there is neither : Ergo, it is no Sacrament. argum. Kemnitij, Caluin.

Bellarm. The forme, are the words pronounced by the parties themſelues, when they contract Matrimony : I do take thee, &c. They alſo themſelues are the matter: yea, and the Miniſters of the Sacrament too: For the Ieſuite holdeth, that it is a Sacrament in the very contract and giuing of mutuall conſent, before it be ſolemnized in the Church, De matrim.cap.6.

Anſw. Firſt, the Sacrament is one thing, and the receiuers another: therefore the married parties cannot be the ſacramentall matter, being the receiuers. Secondly, it is not euery worde that ſanctifyeth, but the word of God, 1.Tim.4.5.but theſe words, I take thee, are no part of the word: Ergo, they want alſo the forme of a Sacrament. Thirdly, the Miniſters of Chriſt, and preachers of the word are only the diſpenſers of the myſteries and Sacraments of the Church, 1.Corinth.4.1. Wherefore the parties themſelues could not be Miniſters of Matrimonie, if it were a Sacrament.

Fourthly, I will adioyne the reaſons of ſome of the Papiſts: *Eſpenſaus de clandeſtin.matrim.c.*14. Ad huius Sacramenti rationem, patres verbum fidei requiſiuerunt in lege,&c. The fathers in the law required the word of faith to this Sacrament, how much more in the Goſpell: but this, I take thee, is not the word of faith: *cap.*15.ex Groppero: Vt venerabilem Euchariſtiam idem et porrigat & capiat, cætera non item Sacramenta: The Euchariſt, one and the ſame man may giue and receiue, but it is not ſo in other Sacraments: no man doth baptize or confirme himſelfe: and ſo conſequently, if priuate Matrimonie were a Sacrament, no man could marrie himſelfe.

*Arg.*4. We haue plentifull teſtimonie of the Papiſts themſelues, ſome affirme Matrimonie a ſacrament of the old Teſtament, not of the new: as *Alphonſus à caſtro, lib.*11.*cont.hæreſes.hæreſ.*3.*Petrus a Soto, lect.*2.de Matrim. Some hold it no Sacrament at all, as Durandus, whoſe reaſons do here follow: other denie priuate Matrimonie to be a Sacrament, being contracted onely, not ſolemnized, as Canus, whom Bellarmine confuteth, *cap.*8. Of the ſame opinion is Gropperus before alleaged: Catharinus alſo affirmeth, priuate contract of mariage, without the conſent of the parents to be no Sacrament, becauſe it is no mariage: *ex Eſpenſ.de clandeſtin.matrim.c.*15.

Now Durand his reaſons, to proue mariage properly no Sacrament, are theſe.

Firſt, in euery Sacrament, there is ſome ſpirituall thing ſignified, that exceedeth naturall reaſon; as in baptiſme by the waſhing of water, the remiſſion of ſinnes is ſhewed forth: but in marriage, when two are preſented to be ioyned together, a naturall man may comprehend why they are coupled together. It may be anſwered, that the ſpirituall thing in mariage, is the coniunction of Chriſt and his Church. Contra. Sacraments doe effect that, which they ſignifie; but matrimonie doth not effect the vnion of Chriſt and his Church, but onely the vnion of the male and female: Ergo, that is not the principall ſignification of marriage.

Bellar. anſwereth, that not the vnion onely, but ſuch an vnion as is inſoluble; and as well the vnion of their ſoules and bodies is ſignified in marriage, which exceedeth naturall reaſon.

Contra. Firſt, the vnion of the married parties to be inſoluble, is naturall; for both among the Gentiles, as the Romanes a long time, there was no diuorce in marriage knowne or heard of: the Turtle Doues by nature are taught to keepe themſelues inſeparably one to the other: therefore this exceedeth not humane reaſon. Secondly, the vnion of the mind is no eſſentiall part of marriage, for the marriage holdeth in the vnion of the bodie, though there be no vniting of the affections: they two ſhall be one fleſh, it is not ſaid, one ſoule.

Secondly, Durand. in a ſacrament, there muſt be ſome holy thing applyed to the receiuer by the miniſter: as in baptiſme, water; in matrimonie it is not ſo: there is neither any outward holy ſigne, nor no miniſter neceſſarie beſide the parties, nor yet any receiuer need be preſent, for matrimonie may be ſolemnized by a Proctor betweene parties that are abſent: Ergo, it is no Sacrament.

Bellar. anſwereth: The reaſon why matrimonie is vnlike other Sacraments in theſe points, is, for that it is of the nature of a contract: now in a contract, the parties themſelues ſuffice; and it may be done in their abſence, *Bellar.c.*5.*reſp.ad argum.*11.

Contra. In humane contracts it is ſo, as he affirmeth, no ſuch things are required; but in diuine contracts it is otherwiſe; of which nature all ſacraments are: for as it is ſaid of circumciſion, it was a ſigne of the couenant, or contract betweene God and his people, Geneſ. 17.11. ſo all ſacraments are badges of our profeſſion, and the cogniſance of our obedience promiſed vnto God: ſo that in this behalfe there is no difference betweene one ſacrament and another; they being all ſolemne contracts and couenants made betweene God and vs.

Thirdly, Sacraments giue grace, as the Papiſts affirme; they are ſeales and pledges of grace, as the Proteſtants hold: but matrimonie neither conferreth nor ſealeth grace; not the firſt grace, which is remiſſion of ſinnes; nor the ſecond, which is encreaſe of grace. The maſter of the Sentences ſaith, that ſome ſacraments doe conferre grace as baptiſme, ſome in remedium tantum ſunt, are onely appointed for a remedie, as matrimonie: *Lib.*4.*diſt.*2.a.Durand.

Bellar. anſwereth, that the meaning of the Maſter is, that matrimonie was not principally ordained to this end, for remiſſion of ſinnes; and yet it doth after a ſort remit ſinnes, as the Euchariſt and the Sacrament of order: *reſp.ad argum.*12.

Contra. Firſt, the Maſter ſaith, that matrimonie is tantum in remedium, is onely for a remedie: if onely, then it ſerueth not chiefly, but altogether to that end. Secondly, we deny any ſacrament of order: the Euchariſt properly ſerueth to aſſure our faith of the remiſſion of ſinnes, becauſe it is a ſhewing forth of the Lords death: and our Sauiour ſaith, which was ſhed for you, for remiſſion of ſinnes: but there is no ſuch promiſe of remiſſion of ſinnes annexed to matrimonie. Thirdly, Bellarmine affirmed before, reſp. ad arg. 7. that ſome ſacraments (as matrimonie) are not inſtituted for remiſſion of ſinnes; and now (forgetting himſelfe) he ſaith, it ſerueth for remiſſion of ſinnes: ſo well he agreeth with himſelfe. Fourthly, the Church cannot alter or appoint the eſſentials of any ſacrament, the Church doth appoint the eſſentials of matrimonie, as in determining what perſons are to be married, and in what degrees: Ergo, it is no ſacrament, Durand.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, that the ordinance of the Church is of the neceſſitie of the ſacrament, as in penance it is no abſolution that is giuen to one of another dioceſſe. Secondly, the materiall part of Matrimonie, is not ſimply the ioyning together of man and woman, but of ſuch perſons as are lawfull: for otherwiſe the ſacrament of Matrimonie might be betweene the father and the daughter, and ſuch like neare degrees.

Contra. Firſt, as for Penance, this ſheweth ſufficiently that it is no ſacrament, becauſe it dependeth of the ordination of the Church: ſo doe not true ſacraments which onely depend of Chriſts inſtitution: as the Apoſtle deliuered no other thing as touching the Sacraments, but, that which he had receiued of the Lord, 1. Corinth. 11. 23. Secondly, ſuch degrees in Mariage, as the Scripture prohibiteth, are neceſſarie to bee obſerued, as betweene the father and daughter, &c. But the Church of Rome preſuming to forbid other degrees, and to make more perſons illegitimate for mariage, then the Scripture doth, taketh vpon her to alter and chaunge the materiall part of Matrimonie: which no Church hath power to doe in true Sacraments.

Fiftly, without Baptiſme none are capable of any Sacrament: but a man before Baptiſme is capable of Matrimonie: Ergo, it is no ſacrament. Durand.

Bellarm. Though it be Matrimonie afore Baptiſme, it is no ſacrament: but after they are conuerted to the faith, it beginneth to be ſacrament.

Contra. The Matrimonie before Baptiſme, muſt either be contracted anew, or elſe it remaineth the ſame ſtill: but a new contract is not to be made: for if God haue ioyned them together before, no man muſt put them aſunder, Matth. 19. 6. to be contracted and conioyned againe: if they were not ioyned of God, then was it no Matrimonie. Againe, what if but one of the parties be conuerted, the other remaineth an Infidell, and ſo refuſeth to be contracted againe: yet is this Matrimonie holie, and the iſſue thereof holie, 1. Cor. 7. 14. though there be no new contract. If the ſame Matrimonie remaine ſtill without alteration, how is it more a ſacrament after Baptiſme then before, ſeeing the ſame eſſentials, both the matter and forme were in the Matrimonie before? Of the firſt opinion are Capreolus, Eckius, that a new contract is needfull: of the other, Thomas de Argentine, Paludanus: ſo well they agree together. And thus are Durands arguments fortified againſt this ſacrament.

Auguſtine thus writeth: Ne quis iſtam magnitudinem ſacramenti in ſingulis quibuſque hominibus vxores habentibus intelligeret, ego autem dico, inquit, &c. Leaſt any man ſhould thinke when the Apoſtle had ſaid, this is a great ſacrament, that this great ſacrament is to be vnderſtood of all married perſons, the Apoſtle addeth, but I ſpeake of Chriſt and his Church. But if ſo be Matrimonie were a ſacrament, why is it not to be found in all maried folke?

Tract. in Ioh. 8

Concil. Florent in. in fine: Sacramenta tribus perficiuntur, rebus tanquam materia, verbis vt forma, & perſona miniſtri conferentis ſacramentum: quarum ſi aliquid deſit, non perficitur ſacramentum: The ſacraments are perfited of three things, the things or elements as the matter, the words as the forme, and the perſon of the miniſter conferring the ſacrament; if any of theſe be wanting, the ſacraments are not perfect. According to this rule Matrimonie is no ſacrament: for in the contract, when it ſhould begin to be a ſacrament, there want both the matter and the element, which can not be the parties themſelues, and the Miniſter which ſhould conferre the ſacrament: neither haue they words of inſtitution to be found in Scripture.

The holie Martyrs haue ſealed this truth: Richard Woodman: There neede not be a ſigne of an holie thing, where the holie thing is it ſelfe: Matrimonie is an holie thing it ſelfe, and is ended outwardly: Ergo, it is no ſacrament, Fox pag. 1990. col. 2.

Maſter Benbridge Martyr, he denieth Matrimonie to be a ſacrament, but confeſſeth it to be a ſacrate order, &c. and gaue his life in defence hereof. pag. 2046. artic. 10.

THE SECOND QVESTION, OF POLYGAMIE, of the mariage of diuers ſucceſſiuely. Part.1.

The Papiſts.

80.Error. THeir decrees ſeeme vtterly to condemne and exclude ſecond mariage. *Cauſ.*31.*c.*8.Penance is inioyned ſecond mariage, and a Miniſter is forbidden to be preſent at the celebration of them. *C.*9.Second marriage is called,honeſta fornicatio, honeſt fornication. Theſe Canons Bellarmine is aſhamed of, and refuſeth them : why then doe they ſuffer them to ſtand among the reſt of the decrees collected by Gratian? But yet Bellarmine cannot ſo ſhift off the matter: for it appeareth that they haue a very baſe conceite of ſecond marriage, ſeeing they barre all ſuch from orders, as haue been twice married : as in their owne decrees, *C.*31.*c.*10. this reaſon is giuen : Quam ſancta ſit digamia hinc oſtenditur,&c. How holy a thing it is to be twice married, it appeareth by this, that ſuch are not choſen to the Clergie. And againe, they denie publike bleſſing vnto ſecond mariage. Bellarmine would ſalue vp the matter thus, becauſe the bleſſing giuen in the firſt marriage contiueth ſtill,cap.9.

The Proteſtants.

COncerning the denying of orders to them that are twice married, I haue entreated elſewhere in the generall Controuerſie of the Clergie : that publike benediction is to be vſed in ſecond marriage as well as in the firſt, we proue it thus:

Firſt, I reaſon thus from their owne principles : Euery Sacrament at the celebration thereof muſt be bleſſed : for, Euery thing is ſanctified by the word and prayer, 1.Timoth.4.5. But ſecond marriage with them is a ſacrament : Ergo, publikely to be bleſſed. And whereas it is alleaged, that the former bleſſing remaineth. I anſwere : firſt, the firſt Matrimonie remaineth not : Ergo, neither the benediction. For the firſt couples being parted by death, and ſo the mariage knot diſſolued, how can that bleſſing remaine, which was pronounced ouer them but while they liued ? Againe, Matrimoniall benediction is no more effectuall, than the benediction in the Euchariſt : but that is often renewed : Ergo, ſo may the other.

Secondly, Raguel bleſſed the marriage of young Tobie and Sara, which was giuen in marriage to ſeuen men before, Tobie 7.11,13. Ergo, ſecond marriage may be bleſſed. This booke is Scripture with them, and therefore concludeth againſt them ſtrongly.

Further, where God bleſſeth, there man ought to bleſſe much more : but Gods bleſſing is vpon the married couple being fit for procreation, though it be in their ſecond, or third marriage, Encreaſe and multiplie : Ergo, the Miniſters bleſſing is to be adioyned.

Laſtly, Leo ſaith, Epiſtol.9.c.4. Ancillam à toro abijcere, & vxorem certæ ingenuitatis accipere, non duplicatio coniugij, ſed profectus honeſtatis eſt : For a man to reiect his maide, or concubine from his bed, and to marrie a wife that is a freewoman, is not a doubling of marriage, but a profiting in honeſtie. I reaſon thus : Marriage after fornication doth receiue publike benediction, becauſe it is not the ſecond, but the firſt marriage : Ergo, much more ſhall marriage after lawfull marriage be publikely bleſſed : vnleſſe they will make marriage worſe than fornication.

THE SECOND PART OF POLYGAMIE, which is the marriage of diuers wiues at once.

The Papiſts.

81.Error. IT is their opinion, that it was lawfull not onely for the Patriarches of the Hebrues, but for the Gentiles alſo by way of diſpenſation to haue many wiues.

Argum.1. Sara gaue conſent to Abraham to take him another wife, which ſhe would not haue done, if it had been vnlawfull : ſo Iacobs wiues offered vnto him two other wiues: Bellarm.cap.11. propoſ.4.

Contra. Firſt, from the infirmities of holy men, or women, the argument followeth not, to proue the thing lawfull. Sara twice diſſembled, and in affirming to be Abrahams ſiſter, conſequently denied to be his wife : ſo did Rebecca once : it followeth not, that it is therefore lawfull. Secondly, thoſe were Abrahams and Iacobs concubines, not their wiues : they may as well inferre, that they had a diſpenſation alſo to haue concubines beſide their wiues : that Hagar was not Abrahams wife, while Sara liued, whatſoeuer ſhe was afterward (for ſome think, that Keturah his ſecond wife was Hagar) it appeareth : 1. Becauſe ſhe is ſtill called Saraes maide, and vnder her correction, Geneſ.16.6. 2. And the Angel biddeth her humble her ſelfe to her dame, verſ.9. 3. At the length, ſhe is caſt out with her ſonne, Geneſ.21. 4. She is alſo ſtill called a bondwoman, Geneſ.21.10. But if ſhe had been Abrahams wife, ſhe ſhould haue been free.

Argum.2. That it was lawfull alſo for the Gentiles by diſpenſation to haue many wiues, he proueth by the example of Laban, who was an idolater, and gaue to Iacob two wiues: Eſau alſo, who belonged not to the people of God, had many wiues, imitating therein, as it is like, the example of Abraham: *Bellarm.c.*11.*propoſ.*5.

Anſw. Firſt, neither Laban, nor Eſau were altogether ſtraungers from the people of God, and therfore are not well brought forth, as example of the Gentiles: for if Laban had bin a meere Gentile, Iacob had not been ſent to take his wife from thence: and Eſau when he tooke his two wiues, was yet in his fathers houſe, Geneſ.26.35. and ſo one of the familie. Secondly, the fact of theſe proueth no more the lawfulnes of many wiues, than Labans Images doe warrant the worſhip of many Gods. Thirdly, it is not like that Eſau herein imitated Abraham: 1. for Sara was dead before Eſau was borne, and therefore in Eſaus remembrance hee had not two wiues. 2. And his father Iſaacks example was neerer to him to be imitated, who had but one wife. 3. If he had reſpected the imitation of Abraham, hee would not haue married out of the Hittites, to grieue his parents. Laſtly, Auguſtine ſaith of the Patriarches, Coniugio vſi ſunt propter dei populum propagandum: They vſed mariage for the propagation of the people of God: Their Polygamie he thinketh was tolerated for the encreaſing of the Church. But the Church among the Gentiles was not encreaſed: Ergo, there was no reaſon of any ſuch toleration amongſt them. *Auguſt. de Virginit.cap.*20.

The Proteſtants.

Concerning Polygamie, or the hauing of diuers wiues at once, our ſentence is this: firſt, that it was neuer lawfull, being either a tranſgreſſion, of, or at the leaſt a digreſſion from the firſt inſtitution in the creation. Secondly, yet in the Patriarches wee denie not, before there was yet any law written, in reſpect of the neceſſitie of thoſe times, it was by vſe and cuſtome tolerated, though not by any diſpenſation authorized. Thirdly, among the Gentiles, where there was not the like reaſon or occaſion, it was neither lawfull, nor tolerable. Fourthly, after Moſes law written, and the Church in them encreaſed, we doubt not but that the multitude of wiues was a ſinne and corruption.

Firſt, the Prophet Malachie ſaith, chap.2.15. Did he not make one, yet had he abundance of ſpirit? and wherefore one? becauſe he ſought a godly ſeede. Here the Prophet ſheweth, that the firſt inſtitution in the creation, was of one wife: So our Sauiour, Matth.19.8. doth ſend vs to the firſt inſtitution, From the beginning it was not ſo, verſ.4. At the beginning God made them male and female: one male, and one female: and they two ſhall be one fleſh, not three, or foure, but only two are made in one: therefore Polygamie is a breach and tranſgreſſion of the firſt inſtitution.

Secondly, that there was neuer any diſpenſation graunted to make it lawfull, it is euident. 1. Chriſt ſaith, Moſes for the hardnes of your harts, &c. verſ.8. wee reade of no diſpenſation, but a toleration in Moſes, and by reaſon of the hardnes of the Iewes hearts. 2. A diſpenſation muſt be of as high a nature as the inſtitution: but the firſt inſtitution was giuen in the creation, and deliuered by tradition, though it were not written, not onely by inſpiration (as he ſuppoſeth) the like tradition muſt be ſhewed for the diſpenſation. 3. If there had been any ſuch diſpenſation, why did not the righteous firſt take benefite of it, to whom it was ſpecially graunted, but wicked Lamech was the firſt that tooke two wiues. 4. And the diſpenſation being generall, for the procreation of the righteous ſeede, they ſhould haue offended, that vſed not that libertie being for a common good: as Iſaack, that had onely Rebecca, and by her but one birth. 5. Auguſtine ſaith, Nullam legitur Iacob petiſſe præter vnam, &c. neque hoc faceret, niſi vxores flagitaſſent: Iacob deſired but one, neither would hee haue vſed more, if his wiues had not requeſted it: *lib.*14. *de Ciuitat. cap.*38. If there had been any ſuch diſpenſation, why ſhould he haue deſired one rather than two? and what needed he to haue the conſent of his wiues? it was then a permiſſion onely, no diſpenſation.

Thirdly, Polygamie among the Gentiles was altogether vnlawfull: firſt, they ſerued not for the propagation of the Church, for the which Polygamie was tolerated. Secondly, the fathers are excuſed, Quia caſtius habebant plures, quàm nunc vnam: Becauſe they vſed many wiues more chaſtly, than now one, as Auguſtine ſaith: But the Gentiles had no knowledge, how to poſſeſſe their veſſels in holineſſe, but in the luſt of concupiſcence, 1.Theſſ.4.5. They could not vſe one wife chaſtly, much leſſe many.

Fourthly, after the law of Moſes written, Polygamie was a corruption and tranſgreſsion: firſt, there was then no neceſſitie of propagation, as Auguſtine ſaith: Cum copia ſpiritualis cognationis exuberet: When there was plentie of the ſpirituall kindred: *de Virgin.cap.*10. Secondly, it was contrarie to the law: Deut.25.17. The King ſhall not take many wiues, leaſt his heart turne away. The author of the queſtions vpon Deuteron. vnder Auguſtines name, *cap.*27. ſaith, that Dauid did not tranſgreſſe this lawe but Salomon, Quia habuit paucas, non multas: Dauid had a few wiues, not many.

Anſw. 1. Dauid had not ſo many as Salomon, and therefore was not ſo deepe in tranſgreſſion: but yet he had with Michol and Bathſheba eight wiues, 2. Sam. 3. which are many: yea any number aboue two with the Hebrues maketh a pluralitie. 2. The reaſon of the law is, leaſt his heart turne away. This fruite of Polygamie was in Dauid; for his heart was turned away from iuſtice by the loue of women, as appeareth in the ſtorie of Vriah. 3. The Prophet Malachie calleth it godlie ſeede, which commeth of ſingle marriage after Gods inſtitution: and therefore Dauid tranſgreſſing herein, was chaſtiſed with vngodly children.

Laſtly, thus their own decrees teſtifie: Cauſ. 31. c. 10. Primus Lamech homicida vnam carnem diuiſit in duas vxores; fratricidium & digamiam eadem cataclyſmi deleuit pœna, &c. Lamech the murderer was the firſt that diuided one fleſh into two wiues: fratricide and digamie, the ſame puniſhment of the flood tooke away: Quantum diſtas in numero, tantum in crimine: As thou exceedeſt in number, ſo likewiſe in ſinne.

THE THIRD QVESTION, OF THE CAVSES OF diuorce in mariage, and whether it be lawfull to marrie after diuorce.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER THERE may be more cauſes of diuorce, than fornication onely.

The Papiſts.

82. Error. Diuorce, as Bellarmine defineth it, is either from the duties of mariage, as from bed and boord, as wee ſay, which is properly called diuortium, or it is a diſſoluing of the knot and bond of marriage, which is called repudium.

Firſt then, they affirme, that the very bond and knot may be diſſolued in the marriage of Infidels, if one of them after marriage become a Chriſtian: his reaſon is, becauſe marriage contracted in Infidelitie is no ſacrament, and therefore may be diſſolued, Bellarm. cap. 12. So hee affirmeth thoſe three things: firſt, that if the Infidell refuſe to dwell with the beleeuing partie, the partie refuſed and forſaken, may marrie againe. Secondly, that though the Infidell be content to dwell together, the other is at his or her libertie to refuſe, and may marrie againe. Thirdly, if the Infidell be content to dwell with the beleeuer, but yet ſo, that he is alwaies entiſing & prouoking to idolatrie and infidelitie, the beleeuing partie may depart. The firſt of theſe is not by vs gainſaid; the other two Bellarmine proueth thus.

Argum. Saint Paul ſaith, If the Infidell partie will depart, let him depart, a brother or ſiſter is not in ſubiection in ſuch a caſe, 1. Cor. 7. 15.

Anſw. Firſt, Saint Paul giueth not libertie to the one partie at their pleaſure vtterly to renounce the other, as though they were no longer man and wife: for Saint Paul had ſaid before, that if the Infidell partie be content to dwell with the other, he or ſhe is not to be put away. But his meaning is, that if one partie wilfully depart, the other is no longer bound, nor in ſubiection for the performance of the mutuall duties of mariage. Secondly, though the Infidell partie be yet froward and obſtinate, if he be content to dwell with the other, let her not forſake him, ſaith the Apoſtle: and he giueth a reaſon thereof, verſ. 16. What knoweſt thou O wife, whether thou ſhalt ſaue thy huſband? &c. Though he or ſhe be yet froward, or obſtinate, yet in time they may be conuerted.

The Papiſts.

83. Error. Secondly, ſeparation from bed and boord may be admitted, they ſay, for diuers cauſes, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 24. can. 8. Bellarmine nameth three: Fornication, according to Chriſts rule, Mat. 5. Hereſie, Tit. 3. An heretike muſt be auoyded. Thirdly, when one is a continuall offence to another and a prouocation to ſinne: If thine eye offend thee, pull it out, Matth. 5. 29. Bellar. cap. 14.

Anſw. 1. Fornication wee admit is a iuſt cauſe of ſeparation and diuorce, but not hereſie: for Saint Paul would not haue a woman to forſake an Infidell, 1. Cor. 7. 13. therfore not an heretike. 2. We muſt auoyde ſuch, that is, take heede of their poyſoned opinions, and ſhun their companie alſo, where wee are not otherwiſe bound. 3. Neither is the eye to be cut off, where there is any hope: but who knoweth whether the offenſiue partie may returne to grace? 4. And this place proueth as well a finall cutting off of mariage, as a ſeparation or diſiunction.

The Proteſtants.

Firſt, that there is no cauſe of vtter diſſolution of mariage by way of diuorce, neither that it is lawfull to diſmiſſe or put away the wife, but onely for adulterie and fornication: it is plaine by our Sauiour Chriſts words, Matth. 5. 32. and 19. 9. where neither infidelitie nor any cauſe beſide is excepted, but onely fornication: Whoſoeuer ſhall put away his wife, (ſaith our Sauiour) except it be for fornication, &c.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, our Sauiour ſpeaketh of marriage 1. betweene the faithfull: ſo that this rule bindeth not, if either partie be an Infidell. 2. And againe, ſuch ſeparation is here ſpoken of, as is by way of ſome crime, not when it tendeth to greater perfection, and where there is 3. feare of adulterie; as in the ſeparation of Infidels there is not, when the partie forſaken may marrie againe. Secondly, he anſwereth, our Sauiour only mentioneth the proper cauſe of ſeparation in marriage, which is fornication; the other for hereſie, and inducement to ſinne he leaueth as generall to all ſocieties: for theſe cauſes the ſonne may leaue the father, the ſeruant the maſter, and the wife likewiſe the husband.

Thirdly hee anſwereth, that Chriſt in this place ſpeaketh of ſuch a dimiſſion onely, or putting away, as is to continue for euer during their liues: but the other dimiſſions are to endure but for a time: of the firſt kinde of dimiſſion there can be no cauſe but fornication, Bellarm.cap.14.reſp. ad obiect.2.

Contra. Firſt, 1. The words of our Sauiour are generall: Whoſoeuer ſhall put away his wife, verſ.9. And 2. he ſpeaketh to the Iewes, that were not baptized, therefore hee meaneth euen marriage before Baptiſme. 3. And our Sauiour reaſoneth from the firſt inſtitution of marriage in the creation: but the law of the creation bindeth all both Infidels and beleeuers. 2. Againe, when any departeth for hereſie, or infidelitie, it is a departure for a crime. 3. And when the beleeuing party departeth not being forſaken, but voluntarily (for where there is deſertion, the caſe is otherwiſe, as ſhall be afterward ſhewed) how can it be without feare of adulterie, when in this caſe, the marriage is not diſſolued betweene them?

Secondly, 1. It is a falſe poſition, that a ſonne is to forſake his father, or a ſeruant to denie ſeruice to his maſter for hereſie, or infidelitie, the Apoſtle teacheth the contrarie: 1.Timoth.6.1. Let as many ſeruants, as are vnder the yoke, count their maſters (hee meaneth Infidels) worthie all honour. 2. And againe, if any other cauſes of dimiſſion might be pretended, though generall, then were not the rule giuen here by Chriſt ſufficient, nor vniuerſally true: except for fornication,&c. if for other things, they might be diſmiſſed.

Thirdly, it ſhall ſoone appeare how inſufficient his third anſwere is: firſt, Bellarmine is contrarie to himſelfe: for here he maketh fornication the onely cauſe of perpetuall dimiſſion, much forgetting himſelfe: for he affirmeth likewiſe, that the married parties by mutuall conſent may ſeparate themſelues, and vow continencie: and after their vow thus made, it is not lawfull for them to come together againe: here then is another kind of perpetuall ſeparation. Secondly, neither is diuorce or ſeparation for fornication neceſſarily to continue, during their life time: they may be reconciled: and ſo both Bellarmine and the Rhemiſts thinke, expounding that place, 1.Cor.7. Let her remaine vnmarried, or be reconciled: of ſuch as are diuorced for fornication. So Leo epiſtol.77. cap.1. determineth thus: Quod debent fœminæ, quæ captis viris nupſerant alijs, regreſſis de captiuitate viris, prioribus copulari: That women, which marrie to others, their husbands being taken captiues, ſhould be reſtored to their husbands after their returne. Here women falling into adulterie muſt returne to their husbands. Againe, the Scripture ſpeaketh for vs: that as God after ſpirituall fornication is readie vpon their repentance to receiue his people againe, Ierem.3.1. Thou haſt played the harlot, yet returne vnto me (ſaith the Lorde:) ſo Chriſtian charitie requireth, that if it be poſſible, reconciliation ſhould be made betweene man and wife, vpon humble ſubmiſſion for the fault committed. Thus we ſee, that euen in caſe of fornication the way is not ſhut vp againſt compaſſion: therefore the Ieſuite hath anſwered nothing.

Argum. What God hath ioyned together, let no man put aſunder: Matth.19.6. But the Papiſts, in deuiſing ſo many ſeparations from bedde and boord, do put aſunder thoſe, whom God hath coupled: for where the duties of mariage are broken off, there mariage it ſelfe is alſo diſſolued: if the man and wife be no longer bound to render the carnall debt one to another, and other ſeruices of loue, the bond of mariage it ſelfe is looſed betweene them: this then is but a friuolous diſtinction, that there are two ſeparations of mariage: Quoad thorum, quoad vinculum: One from the bed, another from the bond of mariage: they then making ſo many ſeparations from the one, do alſo diſſolue the other: and ſo man diuideth, where God hath coupled. argum.Kemnitij.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the bond of marriage is one thing, the debt or dutie of mariage another: for otherwiſe, when the maried parties are abſent by ſome diſtance of place, and ſo the debt not payed, the bond alſo ſhould preſently be diſſolued, and they ceaſe to be man and wife: cap.14. reſp.ad obiect.5.

Contra. Firſt Bellarmine granteth, that theſe words, Whom God hath coupled,&c. are vnderſtood of the bond of mariage, not of the carnall debt, communion of bedde and boord: ex conceſſis, I reaſon thus: That whereby they are coupled and made one fleſh, is the bond of mariage, but the carnall debt maketh them one fleſh; They twaine ſhall be one fleſh, Matth.19.5. therefore the carnall debt is the very bond of mariage: the propoſition is proued by the words of our Sauiour, verſ.6. wherefore they are no more twaine, but one fleſh: Let no man therefore put aſunder, that which God hath coupled together: here the making of two one fleſh, is ſaid to be the very coupling, wherewith God ioyneth them together.

Secondly, S. Paul vſeth all theſe words indifferently, for one and the ſame thing, debt or dutie, 1. Cor. 7. 3. to be in ſeruice or ſubiection, verſ. 15. to be bound to a wife, verſ. 27. So then ὀφειλὴ, debt, δουλεία, ſeruice, δέσις, bond: are with the Apoſtls all one: where then the debt of the fleſh is not due, nor the ſeruice of the bodie, there alſo the bond is looſed.

Thirdly, that in mariage the debitum, debt, and vinculum, bond, are all one: and that relaxatio debiti, the releaſing of the debt, is ſolutio vinculi, the diſſoluing of the bond: beſide that the Apoſtle ſaith, 1. Cor. 7. 27. Art thou bound to a wife, ſeeke not to be looſed; where he ſpeaketh vnto beleeuers of the diſſoluing of mariage; but they allow no diſſolution of mariage, but onely in the caſe of infidelitie: S. Ambroſe alſo ſaith, ſpeaking of the diſſoluing of marriage, Non debetur reuerentia coniugij ei, &c. the reuerence of marriage is not due to him, which abhorreth the author of mariage. in 7. 1. ad Corinth. The diſſoluing of mariage, and not paying the debt, with him are all one: Cauſ. 28. q. 2. c. 2. Non eſt ei fides ſeruanda coniugy, &c. The faith of marriage is not to be kept to him, which departeth becauſe he would not heare Chriſt: not to keepe the faith or debt of marriage, and to diſſolue marriage are the ſame.

Cauſ 32. qu. 7. c. 18. Si mulier non valeat debitum reddere: If the woman be not able to render her debt, or due to her husband, he may marrie another: Ergo, where the debt is not payed, the marriage bond is diſſolued.

Fourthly, when the parties are abſent vpon neceſſarie occaſion, or by conſent, here is neyther refuſal, nor acquitall of the carnall debt, as there is in forced ſeparations; but in affection and deſire, they remayne ſtill ſubiect one to the other: therefore the reaſon is not alike: ſo then I conclude, that they ſeparating, where God alloweth no ſeparation, do contrarie to the Scripture, put aſunder, where God hath ioyned together.

We haue alſo the full conſent of antiquitie, that no dimiſſion of mariage is to be admitted, but for fornication: Concil. Anglican. an. 670. can. 10. Nullus coniugem propriam niſi vt ſanctum euangelium docet, fornicationis cauſa relinquat: That no man put away his wife, but as the Goſpell teacheth, for fornication.

Toletan. 12. can. 8. Præceptum domini eſt, vt excepta cauſa fornicationis vxor à viro dimitti non debeat, &c. It is the commandement of the Lord, that except for fornication, the wife ſhould not be diſmiſſed from her husband: and therefore whoſoeuer vpon any other occaſion, except the former crime, doth diſmiſſe his wife; becauſe he ſeparateth that, which God hath ioyned, let him be put from the Communion, ſo long, till he receiue his wife againe.

Nicholaus 1. de matrimon. can. 6. Quicquid mulier contra te cogitauerit, non eſt excepta cauſa fornicationis reijcienda: Whatſoeuer thy woman doth practiſe againſt thee, ſhe muſt not be caſt off but for fornication. What greater euidence of antiquitie can any man require? This Canon is rehearſed, cauſ. 32. qu. 5 c. 22.

We haue further euidence: Cod. lib. 3. tit. 38. leg. 11. Conſtant. Quis ferat, liberos à parentibus, à viris coniuges ſeparari? Who can endure, that children from parents, wiues ſhould be ſeparated from their husbands? Yet I denie not, but that ſome Imperiall lawes allow other cauſes of ſeparation, beſide adulterie, as homicide, ſacriledge, robberie, manſtealing, Cod. lib. 5. tit. 17. leg. 8. and impotencie or imbecillitie of nature, ibid. leg. 10. yet the Canons of the Church haue otherwiſe decreed: as here I haue ſet them downe.

Cauſ. 29 qu. 7. c. 19. Gregor. Excepta cauſa fornicationis: It is not lawfull for any man to diſmiſſe his wife, except it be for fornication: ſo likewiſe Zachar. cauſ. 29. qu. 2. c. 2. Cauſ 32. qu. 5. c. 18. Quicquid excepta cauſa fornicationis cogitari poteſt horribile, ſuſtineat maritus: What horrible thing ſoeuer may be imagined, except the cauſe of fornication, the husband muſt ſuſtaine c. 21. Communione priuetur, &c. Let him be depriued of the Communion, Qui citra culpam fornicationis vxorem quacunque occaſione dimiſerit, which beſide the fault of fornication vpon any occaſion doth diſmiſſe his wife.

Now concerning the marriage of Infidels, Auguſtine ſometime was of opinion, that the wife might bee diſmiſſed for Infidelitie: but hee reuoketh and retracteth that opinion, Lib. retract. 1. cap. 19. For elſewhere hee flatly concludeth thus: A viro non fornicante non licere omnino diſcedere: That it is not lawfull for a woman at all to leaue her husband, if he commit not fornication, De adult. coniug. 1. 7.

And yet further, to make this matter more plaine, we acknowledge no other cauſe of lawfull diuorce in mariage but that onely, which is preſcribed in the Goſpell, namely, for adulterie or fornication, Matth. 5. 32. and 19. 9. There is notwithſtanding another cauſe whereby the marriage knot may be diſſolued, though not for fornication: as when one of the parties doth wilfully renounce, leaue and forſake the other vpon no iuſt cauſe, but either of lightneſſe or for diuers religion, as when an Infidell forſaketh a Chriſtian; a Papiſt, a Proteſtant; an heretike, a true profeſſor; or vpon any other vnlawfull or vniuſt cauſe: for the Apoſtle ſaith plainely, A brother or ſiſter is not in ſubiection in ſuch things, 1.Cor.7.15. that is, is freed from the yoke or bond of marriage.

Firſt, it is plaine that the Apoſtle is ſo to be vnderſtood in this place: for the word which hee vſeth is, οὐ δεδούλωται, is no longer a ſeruant, or in ſubiection: which is to be taken in the ſame ſenſe, as if he ſhould ſay, οὐ δέδεται, hee or ſhee is no longer bound or tyed: which word the Apoſtle vſeth verſ.39. And againe the Apoſtle hath relation here to the fourth verſe, where he ſaith, The wife, οὐκ ἐξουσιάζει, hath no power of her owne bodie, and the husband likewiſe: But now, ſaith he, the Infidell partie hauing wilfully ſeparated himſelfe, οὐ δεδούλωται, the innocent partie is no longer in ſubiection, that is, ἐξουσιάζει, hath now power ouer his owne bodie: and is now become, ἐλευθέρα, free, exempt from the marriage knot or bond, in which ſenſe the Apoſtle vſeth the word, verſ.39.

Secondly wee muſt know, what kind of deſertion it is, that cauſeth a diſſolution of marriage, and in what manner. Firſt, it muſt be malitioſa deſertio, a malitious departure without any iuſt cauſe: But when as the husband is abſent by conſent about neceſſarie affaires, as the Merchant beyond the ſeas: or is employed in ſome weightie buſineſſe, as in warfare, in ambaſſage, or ſuch like: or is violently deteined in priſon or captiuitie, amongſt the Turkes, or elſewhere: In theſe and the like caſes the wife is bound to wait and expect the returne of her husband, vnleſſe ſhe be otherwiſe aduertiſed of his death: According to the decree of the Trullane Synode, can 93. Militum vxores quæ non expectant viri peregrinantis reditum, ſed alteri nupſerint, antequam certæ ſint de morte, mœchantur: Souldiours wiues, which doe not expect their husbands returne, being in trauell, but doe marrie others, before they be certaine of their death, doe commit adulterie. Secondly, the innocent partie muſt vſe all means to reconcile, reclaime, and bring home againe the wilfull and obſtinate partie ſo departing, if it be poſſible. Thirdly, if he continue in his obſtinacie, and depart, hauing no purpoſe to returne, the matter muſt be brought before the Iudge or Magiſtrate in ſuch caſes: who after publike citation of the obſtinate partie, and certaine knowledge that he refuſeth wilfully to appeare being cited, and is not otherwiſe letted to come, may with mature deliberation pronounce the innocent partie free and at libertie to marry, according to S. Pauls rule, A brother or ſiſter is not bound in ſuch things.

Thirdly, neither is Saint Paul contrarie to our Sauiour Chriſt, who alloweth no diuorce but onely for fornication: for that is a diuers caſe from this, whereof S. Paul treateth: And there is great difference betweene lawfull diuorce, and vnlawfull and wilfull deſertion: for there the innocent partie firſt claimeth the priuiledge of ſeparation: here the guiltie partie firſt ſeparateth himſelfe; there diuorce is ſued and required: here the innocent partie ſeeketh no diuorce, but ſeeketh all meanes of reconciliation: So that properly the ſetting free the innocent partie in this caſe, cannot be called a diuorce. Chriſt therefore ſpeaketh of lawfull diuorce, not of euery diſſolution of marriage: for then mention ſhould haue been made in that place of naturall death and departure, which is confeſſed by all to be a diſſolution and breaking off of marriage.

Thus haue I ſhewed mine opinion with Beza and others concerning this point: herein further as in all the reſt, referring my ſelfe to the determination of our Church, and the iudgement of our learned brethren, Beza. 1.*Cor.*7.*verſ.*15. Hemingius. Tileman. Heſhuſ. Luther. de captiu. Babylon. cap. de Matrimon. Melanct. loc. theolog. tit. de coniug. Caluin. in 19. Matth.

We haue alſo the conſent of Antiquitie: *Concil. Lateranenſ. part.*50. cap. 23. wee finde this decree: A certaine man for the ſpace of ten yeeres was abſent from his wife, the woman came and complained, that ſhee could no longer expect his returne; then it followeth thus: Epiſcopus ſicut vir prouidus, parentibus ſuis mandauit, vt pro eo mitterent, & ipſum ad propria reuocarent. Cumque elapſo longo temporis ſpatio, vir ad propria non remearet: Epiſcopus in conſpectu Eccleſiæ inter eos diuortij ſententiam promulgauit, & mulieri, vt alium virum duceret plenariam facultatem indulſit: The Biſhop as a prouident man, did enioyne their parents to ſend for him and call him home: And after a long time, when he came not, the Biſhop in the ſight of the congregation did pronounce the ſentence of diuorce betweene them, and gaue the woman libertie to marrie another. Which ſentence of the Biſhop was approoued of the whole Councell. The ſame Canon, ſee *decret. Gregor. lib.*4.tit. 17.*c.*8.

Further euidence alſo we haue for marriage in the caſe of wilfull deſertion: Ambroſ. in 7.1. ad Corinth. vpon theſe words, a brother or ſiſter is not in ſubiection, &c. Non debetur reuerentia coniugij ei, qui horret authorem coniugij, &c. The reuerence of marriage is not due to him, which abhorreth the author of marriage, &c. Ac per hoc non eſt peccatum ei qui dimittitur propter deum, &c. And ſo it is no ſinne vnto him, which is diſmiſſed for Gods cauſe, if he marrie another.

Cod. lib. 5.tit. 1.*leg.*2. Conſtant. Sponſa poſt biennium, &c. The ſpouſe after two yeere expecting the returne of her husband, may marrie another: *Tit.*27.*leg.*2. Poſt triennium, after three yeeres ſhe may marrie: *leg.*7. Poſt quadriennium, after foure yeeres, if ſhe heare no newes of her husband. If the lawe giue this libertie, when the husband is abſent vpon other occaſion, and ſuppoſed to be dead, much more in the caſe of voluntarie deſertion.

Likewiſe decreeth the Canon lawe, Cauſ. 28. qu. 1. *c.*4. Vxor ſine vlla culpa relinquitur, &c. The wife is left without any fault at all, if ſhe refuſe to dwell with a Chriſtian husband.

*Ibid. qu.*2.*c.*2. Greg. Infidelis diſcedens, &c. An infidell departing ſinneth againſt God, and the faith of matrimonie is not to be kept with him.

*Decret. Greg. lib.*4. *tit.*19.*c.*7. Qui relinquitur ad ſecunda ſi voluerit, vota tranſibit: He or ſhee that is forſaken, may if ſhee will, goe vnto ſecond marriage.

The Papiſts themſelues allow the partie forſaken, to marrie againe; but the difference betweene vs is this: firſt, they affirme, that where the one partie is an Infidell, the marriage is diſſolued, whether the vnbeleeuing partie will remaine or not; contrary to the Apoſtle, 1.Cor. 7.13. If hee be content to dwell with her, let her not forſake him. Secondly, they hold this to be deſertion onely, where the one partie is an Infidell: and in this caſe of infidelitie only matrimonie vpon deſertion to be diſſolued: whereas if there be a wilfull deſertion of the one partie, the caſe is all one, whether he be a profeſſed Infidell or not: for he that is careleſſe of his wife and family, by Saint Pauls rule, is worſe than an infidell, 1. Timoth.5.8.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER IT BE LAWfull to marrie after diuorcement for adulterie.

The Papiſts.

84.Error. FOr adulterie one may diſmiſſe another, but neither partie can marrie againe for any cauſe during life, *Rhemiſt. Matth.*19.*ſect.*4. no, not the innocent partie may marrie againe: for the marriage knot is not diſſolued becauſe of adulterie, *Concil. Trident. ſeſſ.*24.*can.*7.

Argum. 1. Mark. 10.11. Whoſoeuer ſhall put away his wife and marrie another, committeth adulterie againſt her. Likewiſe, Luk.16.18. Ergo, it is not lawfull to marrie againe at all after the wife be put away, *Bellar. c.*16.*argum.*2.

Anſ. Saint Marke and Luke muſt be expounded by Saint Matthew, who ſaith, Whoſoeuer ſhall put away his wife except it be for fornication, and marrie another, committeth adulterie: whereupon it followeth, that not euery one which putteth away his wife and marrieth another, committeth adulterie: wherefore the other Euangeliſts muſt be vnderſtood to ſpeake of other ordinarie and common occaſions, ſuch as were vſuall among the Iewes, for the which men did vſe to put away their wiues, and not to include in their generall ſentence, this exception of fornication; for then the Euangeliſts ſhould be contrarie each to other.

Bellar. 1. When Marke did write his Goſpell at Rome, is it like that he would ſend the Romanes to Matthew for an expoſition thereof. 2. It followeth not, whoſoeuer putteth away, &c. except for fornication, and marrieth againe, committeth adulterie: Ergo, he that putteth his wife away for fornication, &c. doth not commit adulterie: and that for diuers reaſons, Bellar. ibid.

Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtles and Euangeliſts liuing, who did write and preach the Goſpell, they needed not to ſend one to another to know the ſenſe, themſelues being directed of the ſpirit: but now, the beſt direction we haue, is to expound the Scripture by it ſelfe, and to make it accord together. Secondly, this exception εἰ μὴ, vnleſſe, or except, doth alwayes inferre the contrarie to that which is affirmed: as Luk.17.18. There are none found to returne to giue God praiſe, ſaue this ſtraunger: Ergo, this ſtraunger did returne to praiſe God: Likewiſe Matth.5.20. Except your righteouſnes exceed the righteouſnes of the Scribes, &c. ye ſhall not enter into the kingdome of heauen: Ergo, if it did exceed, &c. they ſhould enter: After the ſame manner, If whoſoeuer doe put away his wife, &c. except for fornication, do commit adulterie; then he that for fornication doth put away and marrie againe, doth not, &c. As for the reaſons alledged to the contrarie, they ſhall be examined in the anſweres to our arguments. Thirdly, if they vnderſtand Marke and Luke thus generally without exception, then it ſhall not be lawfull at all to diſmiſſe for fornication. Bellarm. anſwereth, that this may be prooued out of Saint Matth. c.5.v.32. whoſoeuer ſhall put away his wife, except for fornication: Ergo, for fornication it is lawfull to diſmiſſe. Contra. 1. Doth not he now ſend vs for the vnderſtanding of Marke and Luke, to Matthew? 2. And doth not he himſelfe conclude the contrarie vpon the exception? thus he offendeth againſt his owne rules, and alloweth that in his owne argument, which he miſliketh in ours.

Argum. 2. Matth.5.32. Whoſoeuer ſhall marrie her that is diuorced, committeth adulterie: This muſt be vnderſtood generally, without the exception of fornication; for if it be lawfull to marry an adultereſſe that is diuorced for adulterie, and not the innocent partie, that is diſmiſſed, but not for adulterie, then ſhould the caſe of the adultereſſe be better then of the other: *Bellar. c.*16.*arg.*1.

Anſ. The adultereſſe is not ſtraightway to be admitted to ſecond marriage, but it is fit that ſome reſtraint ſhould be made in the diſcretion of the magiſtrate, leaſt it might be made an vſuall practiſe for incontinent perſons to get them new mates: therefore in this behalfe the adultereſſe caſe is not ſo good. 2. The innocent perſons caſe is much better, becauſe ſhe is free from ſo great a ſinne as the adultereſſe is guiltie of. 3. The innocent partie may be reconciled to her firſt husband: 1.Cor.7.11. which is better than to haue a new husband. 4. If ſhe cannot be reconciled, if the froward partie fall into the ſinne of incontinencie, as hee is moſt like in this caſe (refuſing the companie of an honeſt wife) to be giuen ouer, then hath the innocent partie the ſame remedie, with much better conditions, than the other. 5. Neither doth the argument follow, as it may appeare by this inſtance: Your penance you call the ſecond table after ſhipwracke: ſhe that ſinneth not need not this remedie, the adultereſſe is admitted to it; is the adultereſſe therfore the better becauſe of this ſecond table? no more is ſhe for her ſecond husband. 6. Wherefore the exception in the firſt clauſe of the ſentence, except it be for fornication, muſt be ſupplyed alſo in the latter, as it is euident Matth. 19.5. where the exception is ioyned to both members of the ſentence, both of diſmiſſion, and marrying againe.

Argum. 3. Rom. 7.2. The woman is bound by the law to her husband, ſo long as he liueth: nothing but death diſſolueth the bond betweene man and wife: therefore not lawfull to marrie againe after diuorce, Rhemiſt. ibid.

Anſ. 1. Saint Paul muſt be expounded by our Sauiour Chriſt, who maketh exception of fornication, Matth.5.

2 Neither doth Saint Paul denie, that marriage may be diſſolued, while they liue, without breaking of wedlocke: but that although the knot hold during their life, yet by death it is diſſolued. Againe, Saint Paul hauing no occaſion to intreat of diuorce, ſpeaketh of marriage as it ſtandeth whole and ſound by the ordinance of God, that if a woman ioyne her ſelfe to another man, her former wedlocke being not lawfully diſſolued, ſhe is a wedlocke breaker.

3 Therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, Quæ ſub viro eſt mulier, the woman that is in ſubiection to the man: But ſo is not a woman diuorced and ſeparated, any longer in ſubiection to her husband: therefore of ſuch an one the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not.

4 Laſtly, we muſt conſider the ſcope of the place, and how the Apoſtle applyeth this ſimilitude: As verſ. 4. he ſaith, that the lawe being dead by the comming of Chriſt, we are freed from it, from henceforth to liue vnto him; as the woman is free after the death of her husband to marrie to another: ſo that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of the continuance of the bond of wedlocke vntill death, but of the diſſolution thereof after death: which onely ſerueth for his preſent purpoſe. And thus alſo is that other place to be expounded, 1.Cor.7.39. where the Apoſtle ſheweth, that although marriage remaine firme and ſure vntill death, yet then it is diſſolued: To this effect alſo anſwereth Caietanus a learned Papiſt.

Argum. 4. 1.Cor.7.11. If ſhe depart, let her remaine vnmarried, or be reconciled: Ergo, the parties ſeparated for fornication may not marrie againe, Rhemiſt.

Anſw. Saint Paul ſpeaketh of other ſeparations, which are cauſed by diſſentions in marriage, and not of diuorce for adulterie: for he ſaith, 1. If ſhe depart; not, If ſhe be put away: 2. neither was it ſo vſuall a thing for reconciliation to be ſought after ſolemne diuorce. 3. Againe, hee ſaith, Let not the woman depart, as being in her choice, whether ſhe would depart or not: but in the caſe of fornication, ſhe was to depart, or rather be put away, whether ſhe would or not. Neither would Saint Paul haue ſaid in caſe of diuorce, let her not depart, ſeeing the Goſpell graunteth a ſeparation to be made betweene the man and wife in ſuch caſes.

Bellarm. anſwereth, 1. That the Apoſtle in the firſt place, v.10. Let not the wife depart from her husband, ſpeaketh of vnlawfull and vniuſt departure. In the next v.11. but if ſhee depart, let her remaine vnmarried, or be reconciled, he ſpeaketh of lawfull departure for fornication. 2. If the Apoſtle had ſpoken of any vnlawfull or vniuſt departure, he would not haue put it to the womans choice, whether to be reconciled or not; but ſimply haue enioyned her to be reconciled: c.16.reſp. ad arg.4.

Contra. Firſt, the ſame kind of departure is vnderſtood in both places: 1. becauſe they make but one full ſentence, and theſe wordes, ἐὰν δὲ, quod ſi, but if, haue relation to the other, and ſhewe a coherence of the ſenſe: 2. and againe, the ſame worde χωρίζω is vſed in both verſes, ſhewing one and the ſame kind of ſeparation.

Secondly, 1. the Apoſtle doth not put it to the womans choiſe to be reconciled or not, but by this meanes denying libertie of marriage, doth driue her to ſeeke reconciliation; and ſaith thus much in effect: that, if ſhe did not reconcile her ſelfe, ſhee ſhould remaine vnmarried; 2. For otherwiſe it was not in the caſe of diſmiſſion for adulterie in the offenders power to be reconciled, but in the innocent partie to receiue her to reconciliation: but here it is in the power of the guiltie partie to reconcile her ſelfe: therefore it was for other offences beſide fornication.

Argum. 5. If marriage ſhould be graunted after diuorce, theſe inconueniences would follow. Firſt, the children ſhould be euill prouided for, that are conſtrained to liue vnder a ſtepfather, or ſtepmother. Secondly, by this meanes, the married parties being diſcontented, would ſeeke occaſions and picke quarrels one to the other, that they may be diuorced and marry againe.

Thirdly, if the marriage be vtterly diſſolued, then the guiltie partie is either to marrie againe, or not to marrie: if the firſt, they of purpoſe may commit adulterie, that they may marry where they liſt: if the ſecond, what reaſon is there to reſtraine the weaker partie of the remedie? Bellar. c. 16.

Contra. Firſt, 1. The ſame daunger will be to the children, vpon ſecond marriage after death, as well as after diuorce, to endure ſtepfathers or ſtepmothers; ſhall therefore all ſecond marriage for this be reſtrained? 2. If the innocent partie hauing not the gift of continencie, ſhould be forced to keepe an adultereſſe ſtill, there would enſue a greater inconuenience, the father being vncertaine of his children.

Secondly, 1. As it may be feared, leaſt diuorces ſhould be procured and ſought, where a way is open to ſecond mariage; ſo if the way were ſhut vp, a greater matter would be feared; leſt where by diuorce they cannot helpe themſelues to new wiues, they ſhould practiſe by other meanes one to take away another. 2. Againe, where diuorce is by pretence or conſent, to pleaſe their owne luſt, the magiſtrate in his diſcretion hath power to moderate and ouerrule ſuch inordinate practiſes. 3. But where Chriſt hath graunted a libertie, the wiſdome of man muſt not controull it, but leaue the ſucceſſe to Gods prouidence.

Thirdly, 1. As the guiltie partie by Moſes lawe was to die for adulterie, ſo now alſo; if ſome grieuous mulct be laid vpon the offender, according to the nature of the offence, they would haue ſmall liſt to practiſe by adulterie. 2. The guiltie partie doth not ſue for diuorce, but the partie grieued; and therefore if there be offence willingly committed, yet the innocent partie may expect amendment and reconciliation; without whoſe conſent and liking, diuorce is not to be granted. 3. Some haue thought, that the guiltie partie ſhould not take benefite at all of ſecond marriage, as Luther, Eraſmus: ſome otherwiſe, as Melanct. in annot. ad c. 5. Matth. Howſoeuer, he is not ſo eaſily to be admitted to it, but with due puniſhment and rebuke before, and the mature aduiſe and diſcretion of the Magiſtrate.

The Proteſtants.

FOr no other cauſe in the world, but onely for fornication, may there be either a finall ſeparation, or cleane diſſolution of mariage, by way of diuorce: But for that cauſe our Sauiour hath graunted libertie, both to diſſolue matrimonie, and to marry againe.

Argum. Matth. 5. 32. Whoſoeuer putteth away his wife (except it be for fornication) committeth adulterie: Ergo, for fornication it is lawfull for a man to diſmiſſe his wife. Likewiſe Matth. 19. 9. Whoſoeuer ſhall put away his wife, except it be for whoredome, and marrie another, committeth adulterie: Ergo, for adulterie it is lawfull for the man both to put away and renounce his wife; and the wife likewiſe her husband (for there is the like reaſon for both) and for them to marrie againe. This libertie graunted by our Sauiour Chriſt, by no humane lawe can be reſtrained or cut off.

This place troubleth our aduerſaries very ſore, and therefore they haue found out many ſtarting holes; but all to ſmall purpoſe.

1. Durand a cunning Papiſt thus anſwereth: That when Chriſt vttered theſe words, the lawe of the Iewes was, that the adulterous woman ſhould be put to death, and ſo the husband might haue libertie to marrie againe.

Contra. Bellarmine ouerthroweth this anſwer, 1. Becauſe Chriſt here giueth a rule not onely to the Iewes, but to all Chriſtians, not being ignorant, how that in euery nation, that lawe of putting the adultereſſe to death, ſhould not be in force. 2. Chriſt might as well haue excepted other crimes that were puniſhed by death, as murder, and the like, that in thoſe caſes they might marry againe, becauſe by the lawe their wiues were to die, as well as in the caſe of fornication. 3. Chriſt ſpeaketh of diſmiſſion: but properly the wife is not ſaid to be diſmiſſed, when ſhee is put to death: Chriſt therefore is not ſo to be vnderſtood.

2. Bellarmine therefore approoueth this expoſition: Whoſoeuer ſhall put away his wife (except it be for fornication) and marrie another: hee would haue the exception reſtrained to the firſt clauſe, in this ſenſe: hee that putteth away his wife, which it is not lawfull to doe but for fornication: ſo that the crime of fornication maketh it lawfull to diſmiſſe, but not after diſmiſſion to marrie againe.

Contra 1. This expoſition is contrarie to the Ieſuite, for he alloweth a ſeparation of matrimony in other caſes, as of hereſie, infidelitie, vow of continencie: but here he ſaith, that only ſeparation and diſmiſſion is to be made in the caſe of fornication. 2. This anſwer of Chriſt had not been ſufficient, if he had ſpoken only of diuorce, and not of liberty to marry againe: for the Phariſies mooued the queſtion concerning the manner of diuorce permitted by Moſes law, after the which it was lawfull for them to marry againe: And therefore it was expected that our Sauiour ſhould anſwer to both theſe points; both in what caſes they might diſmiſſe their wiues, and marrie againe. 3. The ſentence cannot ſtand in any good ſenſe, vnleſſe it be read wholy together; vnleſſe you will ſay, that he which putteth away his wife only, committeth adulterie: he may cauſe her to commit adulterie, as the Euangeliſt hath in another place, Matth. 5. 32. but commit adultery he doth not, vnleſſe he marrie another : ſo that this muſt needs be the ſenſe, he that putteth away his wife and marrieth another, vnleſſe it be in the caſe of fornication, committeth adulterie.

3. Bellarmine further anſwereth with Auguſtine, that theſe words (except it be for fornication) are onely negatiuely to be taken in this ſenſe : that hee which putteth away his wife, and marrieth, where there is no fornication, ſinneth : but he determineth not of the affirmatiue part, where there is fornication, whether the partie in marrying againe ſinne or not : ſo that it followeth not, he that marrieth againe, his wife being put away without fornication, ſinneth : Ergo, he that marrieth, his wife being diſmiſſed for fornication, ſinneth not : it may be a leſſe ſinne, or not ſo grieuous a kind of adulterie, but it followeth not, that it is not at all : *Bellar.cap.*17. reſp.ad obiect.3.

*Cont.*1. This anſwere had been more ſufficient than the other : for Chriſt in not determining their queſtion ſhould haue left them in ſuſpence, and vncertaine what to do : whereas Chriſts anſweres vſe to be moſt full. 2. If as well he committeth adulterie, that marrieth vpon diuorce for fornication, as he that marrieth where there is no fornication, then our Sauiour Chriſts exception is needleſſe : he might haue ſaid in general termes, that whoſoeuer putteth away his wife, and marieth another, excepting no cauſe, committeth adulterie. And ſo indeed S. Marke and S. Luke ſet downe this ſpeech in generall words : who are to be expounded by Matthew, leaſt they ſhould ſeeme contrary one to the other. But farre be it from vs to thinke, that Chriſt vſed any needleſſe or vnneceſſary word. 3. This word of exception, εἰ μὴ, niſi, vnleſſe, or except, in Scripture is vſed to ſignifie a contrary diſpoſition in that, which is excepted to that which is ſet downe, ſo that if the one be affirmed, the other is denied : as 1.King.3.18. None was in the houſe, except we twaine: they two therefore were, other were not : Luk.13.3. Except yee repent, yee ſhall periſh : Ergo, if you do repent, you ſhall not periſh : Luk.17.18. None are found to returne to praiſe God, εἰ μὴ, except this ſtranger : therefore this ſtranger did returne. So where Chriſt ſaith, Who ſo putteth away his wife, except it be for fornication, and marrieth another, committeth adulterie ; wee inferre negatiuely, that he doth not commit adulterie, who putteth away, and marrieth, where there is fornication. Thus for all their ſhifting euaſions, the trueth cannot be obſcured.

*Argum.*2. S. Paul ſaith, Let euery man haue his wife, and euery woman her husband, for auoyding of fornication, and it is better to marrie, then to burne. Wherefore it is lawfull, the firſt mariage according to the word of God being broken, both for men and women to vſe the remedie againſt incontinencie, and to be married againe : for he ſpeaketh generally of all. To this purpoſe Hierom thus excuſeth the mariage of Fabiola, Repudiato marito, &c. Her firſt husband being refuſed : Melius eſt (inquit Apoſtolus) nubere, quàm vri : The Apoſtle ſaith, It is better to marrie then burne : ſhe was young, and could not keepe her widowhood, and therefore thought it beter to confeſſe her infirmitie, and to enter into a ſhadow of mariage, then vnder the ſhew of ſingle life to play the harlot : ad Oceanum.

*Argum.*3. If after diuorce for adulterie no mariage ſhould be lawfull, then the innocent partie ſhould be puniſhed without his fault : and beſide, he not hauing the gift of continencie, and being denied the remedie, eyther ſhall liue in continuall burning, or elſe be tempted to fall into adulterie : ſo it had been better for no diuorce at all to be granted, then vpon diuorce no mariage : obiect. Kemnitij.

Bellarm. 1. The guiltie partie may be reconciled againe, and ſo be reteined ſtill. 2. Or if that be not expedient, the remedie of continencie is readie for all thoſe, that will ſue for it, and aske it at Gods hands. 3 And in this caſe the innocent partie muſt endeuour to containe, as in the long abſence, or ſickeneſſe of the wife : *B.c.*17.*reſponſ.ad obiect.*2.

Cont. 1. For the partie that offendeth, vpon his or her repentance to be receiued againe ; we denie not, but to be a very charitable, and ſimply the beſt courſe : but all the matter is, when as there is no hope of amendment, ſhall a man retaine a ſerpent ſtill in his boſome? 2. The gift of Continencie is not giuen to euery man : for 1. our Sauiour ſaith, Mat.19.11. All can not receiue this thing ſaue they to whom it is giuen: It is not then giuen to all, for then all might receiue it, which is here denied. 2. And the Apoſtle ſaith further, 1.Cor.7.7. Euery man hath his proper gift of God, one after this maner, another after that. But if euery man may haue the gift of cõtinencie, it is no proper but a common gift. 3. Where Gods hand is vpon either partie, as by long ſicknes, or by neceſſitie of inuoluntarie abſence, as in captiuitie, there being no other remedie left, God will not deny the neceſſary gift : but where there is an ordinary remedie by mariage, we muſt not flie to the extraordinarie gift, which were to tempt God : as Peter leaped out of the ſhip, to walke vpon the water, and began to ſinke ; ſo they which leaue the ordinarie meane, truſting to extraordinarie helpe, may be deceiued. 4. If continencie were ſuch an eaſie and vſuall remedie vpon diuorce ; why did Pope Gregorie 3. giue this libertie, *Cauſ.*32.*qu.*7.*c.*18. that if a woman, by reaſon of her infirmitie, be not able to render her due, the man, qui ſe continere non poterit, nubat, which cannot containe himſelfe, may marrie? And *ibid.c.*24. If a man lie with his ſtepmother, Vir eius poteſt aliam accipere, ſi ſe continere non poteſt : Her husband may take another, if he cannot containe. It is euident dent by theſe Canons, that euery man cannot containe, and that mariage after lawfull diuorce, is the next and beſt remedie againſt incontinencie.

*Argum.*4. If vpon lawfull diuorce marriage were not lawfull, then the law of diuorce ſhould be altogether ſuperfluous and vnneceſſarie; neither ſhould Chriſt haue prouided as good a remedie in this caſe, as Moſes did, by whoſe law the adultereſſe was to die, and ſo the innocent partie at libertie to marrie againe. But none of Chriſts precepts are vnneceſſarie or ſuperfluous: Ergo.

Bellarm. Yes, diuorce is to great purpoſe, though it be not free to marrie afterward: for otherwiſe the innocent partie ſhould be conſtrained to the great daunger of his ſoule, ſometime to liue with an heretike, &c. *Bellarm.c.*17.*reſp.ad obiect.*2.

Contra. 1. Separation for hereſie is not lawfull, but onely for adulterie, and therefore this inſtance is impertinent. 2. The innocent partie may ſequeſter or ſeparate himſelfe of his owne accord from the guiltie partie, though there were no publike law of diuorce, as Bellarm. confeſſeth, Diuortium quoad thorum propria authoritate fieri poſſe: That diuorce from the bed may be done by a mans owne authoritie: *c.*14. *obſeruat.*2. and by this priuate ſeparation, all thoſe pretended daungers may be auoided.

*Argum.*5. This obiection was made in Auguſtines time, *lib.*2. *de adulter.coniug.c.*17. Cogentur mariti adulteras occidere, &c. If marriage after diuorce be adulterie, then the husbands ſhall be vrged to conſpire againſt their wiues, to take them out of the way, that they may marry againe.

Auguſtine anſwereth: 1. The ſame inconuenience may follow, when as the wife is ſeparated for any other cauſe than adulterie, that ſome may practiſe againſt the life of their husbands in this caſe alſo, to marrie their wiues. 2. Another inconuenience may be feared on the other ſide, that men will firſt diſmiſſe their wiues to cauſe them to fall into adultery, that they may haue new. Auguſtin. ibid.

Contra. 1. No ſeparation is to be graunted but for adulterie, and therefore in ſuch vnlawfull ſeparations, no ſuch daunger can be feared, but when the ſeparation is lawfull and marriage vnlawfull. 2. To practiſe againſt a womans chaſtitie, is not ſo great a ſinne, as to practiſe againſt her life: This may follow vpon the denying of marriage, the other vpon graunting. Auguſtine ſaith, as he is alledged, *cauſ.*33. *qu.*2.*c.*9. Si facturus eſt, quod non licet, iam faciat adulterium, & non faciat homicidium, &c. If a man muſt needs doe that which is not lawfull, let him commit adulterie rather than murder, and marrie another while his wife liueth, rather than ſhed blood: this inconuenience then is worſe than the other. 3. Where inconueniences are like to enſue on both ſides, the leſſe is to be taken, as rather that rule to be followed which is more conſonant to the Goſpell, as this is to marrie after lawfull diuorce.

De fide & oper.cap.19.

Auguſtine ſaith, that he which putteth away his wife for adulterie, and marrieth another, Non eſt æquandus ei, is not in the ſame caſe with him, which for any other cauſe putteth away and marrieth againe. But if it be as lawfull for other cauſes to be diuorced, as for hereſie and infidelitie, as the Ieſuite telleth vs, there ſhould be no difference made betweene the ſecond mariage of the one and the other. Auguſtine in the ſame place, though he be elſewhere reſolute againſt marriage after diuorce, yet graunteth that it is not plaine out of Scripture, whether he be an adulterer, that marrieth againe after diuorce for adulterie: Sed quantum exiſtimo, venialiter ibi quiſque fallitur: But as I thinke, we are euery one of vs herein deceiued: And, *de fide & operib.c.*20. he doubteth, whether he be an adulterer which marrieth another wife, the firſt being put away for adulterie.

I end this point, better allowing Pollentius iudgement for this matter, than Auguſtines, betweene whome there is much diſcourſed of both ſides: Si mulier à viro non fornicante diſceſſerit, non ei licere alteri nubere propter præceptum: ſi autem à fornicante, non ei expedire propter opprobrium: If a woman depart from her husband being no adulterer, it is not lawfull to marrie another becauſe of the commaundement: but if he be an adulterer, it is lawfull to marry, but not expedient alwaies, becauſe of the ſhame and reproch, *Ad Pollent. lib.*1.*c.*6.

We haue alſo further euidence of antiquitie: *Venetic. Concil. can.*2. Eos qui relictis vxoribus ſuis, ſicut in Euangelio dicitur, excepta cauſa fornicationis, ſeu adulterij probatione, alias duxerint, ſtatuimus à communione arcendos: They, which leauing their wiues, vnleſſe it be for fornication, and adultery manifeſtly prooued, and marrie other, we decree, to be put from the Communion. It followeth then, that if adultery be prooued, they may relinquiſh their wiues, and marry other.

Concil. Vormatienſ. can. 63. Si quis cum matre & filia in adulterio manſit, & poſtea ille vir mulierem acceperit, dimittat eam, &c. illa vero mulier, quam reliquerit, accipiat virum: If any hath continued in adultery with the mother and the daughter, and after hee taketh a wife, let him diſmiſſe her, and haue no wife ſo long as hee liueth, but the woman ſo diſmiſſed may take an husband: Likewiſe if the mother and daughter did commit this ſinne ignorantly, they may keepe their husbands: if wittingly, one knowing of another, dimittant maritos, they ſhall diſmiſſe their husbands, illarum verò viri accipiant mulieres: but their husbands may take other women to their wiues. This Councell giueth libertie to the innocent partie to marry after diuorce. But Bellarmine confeſſeth, Libertatem diuortium faciendi ob crimen, parem eſſe viro & vxori: That the libertie to make diuorce for adulterie, is alike to the man and wife: *De matrimon.lib.*1.*c.*14. Ergo, they may both marrie after diuorce for adulterie.

Lateranenſ. part. 50.*cap.*46. Mulieres licita aliqua cauſa à viris ſeparatæ poſt annum expletum accipiant alium virum, ſimiliter vir vxorem: Women ſeparate from their husbands lawfully, after a yeare may take other husbands, and their husbands other wiues.

*Lateranenſ.part.*6.*cap.*21. Vrbanus decreed thus: Si quis pendente lite matrimoniali aliam acceperit, & poſtea inter ipſum & primam diuortium fuerit celebratum, poterit cum ſecunda remanere: If any man, while the ſuite dependeth about marriage betweene him and his wife, doe marry another, and afterward ſentence of diuorce be pronounced betweene him and the firſt, he may vpon ſufficient penance remaine with the ſecond. Synod.Florentin. ſeſſ. 25. Græci matrimonia ſeparant, in quo diſſident à Latinis: The Grecians doe vſe to ſeparate matrimonie, wherein they diſſent from the Latines: but the Latines ſeparate marriage onely, quoad thorum, not quoad vinculum, they diſſolue the vſe of marriage, not the bond: Ergo, the Greeke Church diſſenting from them, diſſolueth the whole, both the vſe of mariage and the knot. And thus farre of this queſtion of marriage after diuorce: which we ſee hath been practiſed in times paſt of the Church, and approued of antiquitie.

Yet we haue further euidence, S. Ambroſe in 7.1. ad Corinth. thus writeth, the Apoſtle ſaying, Let not the man put away his wife, doth not adde as before of the woman, let him ſo remaine, Quia viro licet ducere vxorem, ſi dimiſerit vxorem peccantem: Becauſe it is lawfull for the man to marrie a wife, hauing diſmiſſed the firſt for her offence: here the man in Ambroſe iudgement is permitted to marrie after diuorce: but there is the ſame reaſon and libertie both of the man and wife in this caſe: Ergo, it is lawfull for both.

*Cod.lib.*5.*tit.*17.*leg.*8.Theodoſ. Vxorem ſi velit, ſtatim ducere definimus: We do define, that he may ſtraightway marrie a wife, which putteth away the firſt, for cauſes there expreſſed.

*Lib.*9.*tit.*9.*leg.*2. Crimen lenocinij incurrunt, &c. They incurre the crime of Bawdes, that retaine a wife ſtill in marriage deprehended in adulterie: and *leg.*3. Diſſolutio matrimonij: Vtter diſſolution of marriage is granted vpon the detecting of that crime.

Likewiſe their owne Canons thus teſtifie: *cauſ.*31.*qu.*1.*c.*6. Licet vxorem inſidiaturam dimittere, & ſi voluerit, aliam ducere: It is lawfull for a man to diſmiſſe a wife, laying awaite for her husbands life, and if he will, to marrie another.

*Cauſ.*29.*qu.*2.*c.*4. Qui ancillam duxerit vxorem, &c. Hee that hath married a bond-woman, Si voluerit, aliam accipiat: After he knoweth her to be a bond-woman, let him take another.

*Cauſ.*32.*qu.*7.*c.*17. Viro licet ducere aliam: The man may marrie another: *ibid.c.*18. Gregor. 3. alloweth a man to marrie againe: Si mulier infirmitate correpta non valet debitum reddere: If the woman taken with ſickeneſſe cannot render her debt or due to her husband, *ibid.c.*19. Illi, cuius vxor ſtuprata cum viri fratre, licita coniugia non negentur: lawfull mariage is not to be denied to him, whoſe wife committed adulterie with his brother.

*Ibid.c.*24. Si quis cum nouerca; If any man hath lyen with his mother in law, Vir eius poteſt aliam accipere, the man may take another, if he cannot containe.

*Cauſ.*33.*qu.*1.*c.*1. Licet mulieri alteri nubere, ob frigiditatem viri: The woman may marrie another for the weakeneſſe of her husband. *c.*2. Videtur mulierem ſecundas nuptias contrahere poſſe: It ſeemeth that the woman may marrie againe, ſpeaking of the ſame caſe. *c.*33.*qu.*2.*c.*9. Potius vxore viuente aliam ducat, quàm humanum ſanguinem fundat: Let a man rather marrie another wife, the firſt yet liuing, then ſhedde mans blood.

Thus it is euident, how by their owne law and Canons, mariage is lawfull after diuorce: yea, we ſee that ſome of their Popes haue granted ſecond mariage vpon diuorce, for other cauſes then adulterie, wherein, as they preſumed, exceeding the rule limited in the Goſpel, ſo now they offend in abridging the libertie graunted.

THE THIRD QVESTION, OF THE DEgrees in marriage prohibited.

FIrſt, of the ſupputation of degrees. Secondly, whether the degrees forbidden, Leuit.18. may be diſpenſed with. Thirdly, whether any other degrees may by humane law be prohibited beſide thoſe.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE SVPPVtation and account of degrees.

THe degrees are either of conſanguinitie, which is of diuers perſons comming of the ſame ſtocke and bloud: or of affinitie, which ariſeth of marriage, as when the kinſmen of either partie that is married, are by marriage allied to the other, though not of his blood, as Laban the brother of Rebecca was allied by marriage, as alſo by blood vnto Iſaac, though not ſo neerely.

In both theſe kindes of kinred there is a right line both vpward and aſcending: as in conſanguinitie, the Father or Mother, Grandfather, Grandmother, and ſo forth: in affinitie, the father in law, and mother in law, the ſtepfather, or ſtepmother: as alſo deſcending, as the ſonne, the ſonnes ſonne, the ſonne in law, or daughter in law, and their ſonnes and daughters. There is alſo a collaterall line in conſanguinitie, as brother and ſiſter, brother and ſiſters children, vncle or aunt: in affinitie, the brothers wife, ſiſters husband, the vncles wife, or aunts husband. Now our aduerſaries ſet downe theſe rules to know the degrees by.

The Papiſts.

85.Error. 1. IN the right line there are ſo many degrees as perſons, except the firſt, from the which we begin the account: as in this example, Iacob is in the ſecond degree from Abraham. The firſt is excepted, becauſe it is no degree of diſtance, but the beginning of the diſtance of the reſt: Bellar.cap.26.

Abraham.
Iſaac. 1.
Iacob. 2.

Anſw. We ſee no reaſon, why the firſt ſhould be left out: for, 1. looke how many generations, ſo many degrees: but euery perſon is a generation. 2. And this is the manner of account in Scripture: as Matth. 1. there are 14. generations reckoned from Abraham, whereof Abraham maketh one, Iude 14. Enoch the ſeuenth from Adam, Adam being the firſt himſelfe in that number. Thus the Scripture numbreth incluſiue, not excluſiue, incluſiuely comprehending alſo the number, from whom the account beginneth. And thus Abraham muſt be counted the firſt degree, and Iacob, not in the ſecond, but the third from him. The vſe of Scripture for this matter will perſwade more, than any reaſon the Ieſuite can bring. And we ſee that in Scripture not the ſpace betweene the perſons, but the perſons themſelues are counted the degrees.

Thus the Ciuill law accounteth: Cod.lib.6.tit.16.leg.2.Diocletian. Frater auiæ: The grandmothers brother is in the fourth degree, from the grandchildren. Filius fratris auiæ: The ſonne of the grandmothers brother, eſt quinto gradu conſtitutus, is ſet in the fift degree: as by this example it may be made plaine: Abraham is grandfather to Iacob: Iacob then is in the fourth degree from Haran Abrahams brother, and in the fift from Lot Harans ſonne: ſo by this account of the Ciuill law, euery perſon ſtandeth for a degree: Iacob 1. Iſaac 2. Abraham 3. Haran 4. Lot 5.

This manner of account is allowed alſo by the Canon law: Cauſ.35.qu.3.c.2.Calixtus: Eos conſanguineos dicimus, quos diuinæ & imperatorum leges conſanguineos dicunt, &c. We call thoſe kinſmen, or of one blood and conſanguinitie, whom the diuine lawes, and the lawes of the Emperors doe ſo call.

Ibid.qu.5.c.2. Alexander. Quia hæreditates nequeunt deferri, &c. Becauſe inheritances cannot be conueied but from one perſon to another, the ſecular Emperour hath prouided, in ſingulis perſonis ſingulos præſidere gradus, that in euery perſon there ſhould be a degree: but becauſe mariage can not be without two perſons, therefore the ſacred Canons haue appointed two perſons in euery degree: but it is manifeſt that both theſe kindes of computations, are of one ſentence, and come both to the ſame effect.

Ibid.c.6.declarat.arbor.conſanguinitat. In computatione aſcendentium, deſcendentium concordat vtrunque ius, &c. In the computation of thoſe that aſcend and deſcend both lawes doe accord: for one perſon added to another maketh a degree. Thus we ſee that the computation of the Ciuill lawe is confirmed by their owne Canons.

The Papiſts.

86.Error. 2. IN the collaterall line, if the parties be equally diſtant from the roote or ſtocke of the generation, looke how many degrees diſtant they are from the ſtocke, ſo is the diſtance betweene themſelues: Iacob and Rachel are in the ſecond degree, becauſe each of them is remoued from Bathuel, in the ſecond degree: neither haue they any relation one to the other, but as they are ioyned in the ſtocke, Bellarm.cap.26.

Bathuel.
Rebecca 1.	Laban 1.
Iacob 2.	Rachel 2.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. NEither doe we allow this rule: but rather follow the account of the Ciuill law, which in the collaterall line maketh ſo many degrees as perſons, excepting the ſtocke, which is not to be counted in collaterall degrees, becauſe we begin not to number there. Wherefore according to the rule aforeſaid, how many generations, ſo many degrees. According then to the account of the Ciuill law, which wee here follow, Iacob and Rachel are not in the ſecond, but the fourth degree each from other: Rachel, 1. Laban, 2. Rebecca, 3. Iacob, 4. For in collaterall degrees, we count not the diſtance from the roote or ſtocke, but the mutuall diſtance from themſelues.

2. And by this rule one brother ſhould be as neere another, as they are both to their father: the which nature it ſelfe confuteth: ſeeing there is greater loue and affection, and ſo a neerer coniunction betweene the father and the ſonne, than betweene brethren.

3. By this reaſon alſo, if Coſin germanes be but in the ſecond degree, there ſhould be no degree beyond the ſecond forbidden, Leuit. 18. for there is no degree forbidden beyond this: neither is this by name, and directly forbidden.

Bellarm. Firſt, à fratre ad fratrem non tranſitur per patrem, &c. Wee doe not paſſe from brother to brother by the father: for one brother proceedeth not from another, either mediatly or immediatly: One brother hath no coniunction with another, but conſidered in the father; and therefore from him we muſt ſeeke for the diſtance of brethren. Secondly, in the ſame equal diſtance, there may be notwithſtanding a greater coniunction, as betweene the father and the ſonne, the coniunction is greater, than betweene brethren, yet the diſtance is alike.

Contra. Firſt, in the 1. collaterall line, the computation doth not follow the carnall proceſſion or generation, as in the right line: and therefore, though one brother proceede not in generation from another, yet the computation may proceede from one to the other. 2. And he reaſoneth abſurdly; brethren are conioyned in the father, therefore from him the diſtance muſt be deriued: for coniunction and diſtance are two diuers things: and the contrary rather is inferred, that becauſe their coniunction is conſidered in the father, the diſtance alſo and diſiunction cannot be taken from thence. 3. And reaſon it ſelfe ſheweth, that from one brother wee cannot account to another, but paſſing by the father in computation.

Secondly, it cannot be that in an equall diſtance, there ſhould be an vnequall coniunction: for the neerenes and farneſſe of the blood, maketh the greater or leſſe coniunction: wherefore if brethren bee as neere each the other in blood as to the father, the coniunction and affection ſhould be as great: like as in a tree, the neerer the roote the more ſappe; ſo in conſanguinitie, the neerer the roote, the more affection.

The Ciuill law in the collaterall line maketh as many degrees as perſons, the ſtocke onely excepted: Cod. lib.5. tit.57. leg.3. Decius: Soror in ſecundo gradu, &c. The ſiſter in the ſecond degree, the brothers ſonne in the third. Leg.7. Patruus & matertera: The vncle and aunt in the third degree. Tit.58. leg.5. Diocletian. Fratres vterini, &c. Whole brothers are in the ſecond degree. Leg.6. Auunculus: The vncle by marriage in the third degree: Conſobrinus, The coſin germane in the fourth. In all theſe examples, there are ſo many degrees as perſons, beſide the ſtocke. This kinde of computation hath alſo the approbation of the Canons: Cauſ.35. qu.5. c.2. Alexander. 2. Vtraque computatio vno fine concluditur, &c. Both the computations haue the ſame end: for two degrees legall, make but one degree canonicall: as brothers that are by the ſecular lawes in the ſecond degree, are by the Canons in the firſt.

Ibid. qu.5. c.6. declarat. arbor. conſanguinitat. Theſe two rules of the Ciuill computation in the collaterall line are commended: firſt, Quoto gradu quis diſtat à ſtipite, in linea æquali toto duplicato diſtant inter ſe, &c. In what degree any are diſtant from the ſtocke, double ſo much are they diſtant from themſelues: as Iacob and Rachel are in the ſecond degree from the ſtock (which is not counted for a degree in the collaterall line) and therefore they are diſtant each from the other in the fourth degree. Secondly, another rule is this, in the equall line of collaterals, whether the line be, paris numeri, vel diſparis: Of euen number or odde, the degree is alwaies euen. As the firſt line is od, the ſecond euen, &c. yet Rebecca and Laban being in the firſt line from Bathuel, are in the ſecond degree, which is an euen number. It is otherwiſe in the Canonicall computation: for in an odde line, they haue an odde degree: as in the firſt line, where Rebecca and Laban ſtand, they haue the firſt degree: yet the firſt computation is commended in theſe words, Bene dicitur ſecundum leges, &c. It is well ſaid according to the lawes, &c.

I will here laſtly adde the teſtimonie of S. Ambroſe, that it may appeare how degrees were accounted in his time: Ad paternum patrueles fratres ſibi quarto gradu ſociantur, &c. Brothers children are ioyned in the fourth degree: hic autem gradus tertius eſt: but this degree is the third, namely, betweene the vncle and his niece.

The Papiſts.

3. THeir third rule is this: In callaterall degrees vnequall, that is, when both are not alike diſtant from the ſtocke, they ſhall differ in that degree, in the which the further of them is remoued from the ſtock: as in this example, Ioſeph is diſtant foure degrees from the ſtocke, and as many from Nachor, likewiſe from Bathuel and Laban: Bellarm. ibid. 87. Error.

Thare.
Abraham 1.	Nachor 1.
Iſaac 2.	Bathuel 2.
Iacob 3.	Laban 3.
Ioſeph 4.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. NEither is this rule perfect: for by this reaſon, he that is indeede a degree further off, ſhal be in the ſame degree: as Ioſeph ſhall be as neere to Laban as hee is to Nachor, who is three degrees from Laban: but this is againſt common ſenſe, that Ioſeph ſhould be as neere the furtheſt off, as to him that is neerer by three degrees.

Bellarmine anſwereth: The reaſon is, becauſe the perſons that are of the one ſide, Non habent habitudinem ad eos, qui ſunt in altero, niſi ratione ſtipitis: Haue no relation or diſpoſition to the perſons on the other ſide, but in reſpect of the ſtocke wherein they are all ioyned. And therefore looke how farre Ioſeph is diſtant from the ſtocke, ſo farre hee is from each of the other ſide.

Contra. If this rule hold in Ioſeph, who is the fourth degree from the ſtocke, why ſhall it not hold in Abraham of the ſame ſide, who is in the firſt degree from the ſtocke, that as Ioſeph is in the fourth degree from Nachor, Bathuel, Laban, becauſe hee is in the fourth degree from Thare, ſo Abraham ſhould be in the firſt degree from Nachor, Bathuel, Laban, becauſe hee is ſo from Thare? But this is not ſo: for you ſay Abraham is but one degree from Nachor, two from Bathuel, three from Laban.

Bellarmine ſaith the reaſon is this; becauſe that if Abraham ſhould be no further diſtant from the collaterall perſons, than he is from the ſtocke, as but one degree from Laban, becauſe he is but one degree from Thare, it would followe, that Laban ſhould be neerer to Abraham, than to the ſtocke, from the which he is remoued three degrees, which is impoſſible.

Contra. 1. Yet by the Ieſuites reaſon alleaged before for Ioſephs account, it muſt bee ſo for Abraham: becauſe the collaterall perſons haue no relation or diſpoſition together, but as they meet and are vnited to the ſtocke: why ſhould not then Abrahams account be directed by his diſtance from the ſtocke, as Ioſephs is?

2. As this way there falleth out an impoſſibilitie for Abraham, that Laban ſhould be neerer him than the ſtocke: ſo on the other ſide for Ioſeph, that Laban ſhould bee as neere him, as Nachor is, who is three degrees from Laban, and muſt needs be ſo much neerer Ioſeph. This account therefore and meaſuring of degrees according to their blind Canons, is found to be muſt doubtfull and vncertaine: as it may further appeare thus: The Canon law ſaith, Perſona addita perſonæ vſque ad lineam æqualitatis non creſcit gradus: That one perſon being added to another, till the line be equal, the degree is not encreaſed; as in the former example, Laban is added to Bathuel, yet both in the ſame degree from Ioſeph: cauſ.35.qu.5.c.6.declarat.arbor.conſanguinitat.

Contra. 1. It is abſurd and vnreaſonable that they ſhould be in the ſame degree of conſanguinitie, and that the addition of a perſon or generation ſhould not make a degree: for what elſe is a degree of conſanguinitie, but a generation? ſo that ſo many generations as there are, ſo many degrees there ſhould be.

2. In the degrees of affinitie the rule holdeth well: Perſona addita perſonæ per carnis copulam non mutat gradum ſed genus: One perſon comming or being added to another by carnall copulation, the degree is not chaunged but the kinde: Ibid.declarat.arbor.affinitat. As the brothers wife, marrying another husband, the ſecond husband is in the ſame degree of affinitie with the brothers wife, though in another kinde: but it is otherwiſe in the line of conſanguinitie.

3. If this were a good rule, that when two differ vnequally from the ſtocke, one two degrees, another foure, they ſhall differ one from another in that degree, which is fartheſt off, that is the fourth: then it would follow very well, they being diſtant in the ſame degree one from another, that if I cannot marrie thy daughter, then thou canſt not marrie mine, and ſo alſo affirmatiuely: but this is denied by their Canon: For he that is in the third degree may contract with his daughter that is in the fourth: ſed non è conuerſo, but not contrariwiſe: declarat.arbor.affinit. But if they were in the ſame degree of diſtance, according to their rule one from the other, why ſhould it not follow both affirmatiuely, and negatiuely.

4. Celeſtinus 3. decreeth contrarie to this rule: Decret.Gregor.lib.4.tit.14.c.3. That whereas there was a certaine indulgence or libertie to marrie in the ſixt degree: and ſo conſequently, hee that was in the ſixt degree on the one ſide, might marrie into the ſecond or third degree on the other: Quod videtur poſſe fieri ſecundum regulam, &c. Which it ſeemeth (ſaith Celeſtinus) might bee done according to the rule: which is, that how many degrees one is diſtant from the ſtocke hee is diſtant from euery one deſcending from the ſtocke on the other line. And ſo one in the ſixt degree, and another in the ſecond or third in another line, differ from themſelues in the ſixt degree, and conſequently by this indulgence might marrie: yet Celeſtinus determineth, that they muſt not be vnderſtood to be in the ſixt degree, vnleſſe both of them were diſtant from the ſtocke in the ſixt degree: and ſo hee apparantly croſſeth the Canon, by the which they are ſaid to differ in the ſixt degree, if one of them onely bee remoued from the ſtocke in that degree.

Wherefore in collaterals we preferre the Ciuill account of degrees: that is, ſo many perſons, the ſtocke of the kinred excepted, ſo many degrees. Theſe then are the rules for the degrees of marriage.

The rules for the degrees of Conſanguinitie.

1. IN the right line aſcending and deſcending all degrees are forbidden; as aſcending, the father, mother, Grandfather, Grandmother, Leuitic. 18.7. Deſcending; the ſonne or daughter, the ſonnes daughter, or daughters daughter, Leuit. 18.10. and ſo of the reſt.

2. In the collaterall line of conſanguinitie the prohibition reacheth expreſly to the third degree: as it is not lawfull to marrie the Vncle or Aunte, Leuit. 18.12. and by way of conſequence to the fourth degree; as to the Vncle or Auntes ſonne or daughter.

3. The ſame degrees are forbidden by way of Analogie, both to the man and woman: as it is not lawfull for the Nephew to marrie the Aunte, Leuitic. 18.14. So by the ſame reaſon, not for the Niece to marrie her Vncle. And theſe are the rules for the limitation of the degrees of conſanguinitie: The directions alſo for the computation are theſe.

4. In the right line there are ſo many degrees as perſons: as the ciuill law ſaith: Generata perſona ſemper adijcit gradum: The generation of euery perſon maketh a degree: as before I haue ſhewed, Err. 85.

5. In the collaterall line equall, or vnequall, there are ſo many degrees as perſons, not counting the ſtocke: See before Err. 86.87.

Of the degrees of Affinitie.

FIrſt of the Computation of the degrees; then of the limitation: the rules for the Computation are theſe.

1. The firſt rule of the Canon law is this: Inter virum & mulierem non contrahitur affinitas, ſed ipſi ſunt affinitatis cauſa: Affinitie is not betweene the man and the woman, but they are the cauſe of affinitie: for affinitie is defined Perſonarum proximitas ex coitu proueniens: The neereneſſe of perſons proceeding of carnall coniunction.

2. Hereupon it followeth, that the neereſt affinitie is in the ſecond or third degree: for if the man and wife be counted as one degree, the firſt affinitie is in the ſecond; if they be reckoned for two, the firſt affinitie is in the third, as the wiues or husbands, father, brother, daughter, &c.

3. Quoto gradu quis tibi conſanguineus, toto mulier affinis: In what degree thy kinſman is of conſanguinitie, in the ſame degree of affinitie is his wife. The law giueth this reaſon, becauſe they are one fleſh: cauſ. 35. qu. 5. c. 3. And this rule ſeemeth to be grounded vpon the Scripture: Leuit. 18.14. Thou ſhalt not vncouer the ſhame of thy fathers brother, thou ſhalt not goe into his wife, for ſhe is thy aunt. Here the vncles wife is called the aunt, as being in the ſame degree of kinred: hee of conſanguinitie, ſhe of affinitie. By this rule the brother being in the ſecond degree of conſanguinitie, his wife ſhall be in the ſecond degree of affinitie. I am not ignorant that ſome doe account alwaies the affinitie in a degree further than the conſanguinitie by the which it commeth in; as they place the vncles wife in the fourth degree of affinitie, the vncle being in the third of conſanguinitie, Iun. Annot. in 18. Leuitic. And this account I followed in the other edition: the matter is not great, whether way wee make our computation: but the firſt ſeemeth to me to be more probable, and according to the rule of the Ciuill law: Generata perſona adijcit gradum, &c. The generation of a perſon maketh a degree: where then there is no generation, but a copulation onely or coniunction, there is no new degree.

4. Perſona addita perſonæ per carnis copulam mutat genus, non gradum: One perſon comming to another by carnall copulation, chaungeth not the degree, but the kinde of affinitie: as the brothers wife is of affinitie in the ſecond degree and firſt kind: if ſhe marrie a ſecond husband, he is of affinitie in the ſame degree, but in the ſecond kinde: if he marrie another wife, ſhe is of affinitie in the ſecond degree ſtill, but in the third kind.

5. By this rule of the Canon law may another be collected: Perſona addita perſonæ per generationem, mutat gradum, ſed non genus, &c. A perſon added to a perſon by generation, doth chaunge the degree of affinitie, not the kind. As we haue an example, Leuit. 18.17. The wiues daughter is in the ſecond degree of affinitie to the husband and the firſt kinde: her daughters daughter is in the third degree and firſt kinde. And theſe are the rules of the computation of the degrees of affinitie.

The rules for the limitation of the degrees of Affinitie.

1. INter affines aſcendentes, deſcendentes, prohibitio extenditur in infinitum:* In aſcending or deſcending, affinitie is prohibited infinitely, that is, without any limitation: as Leuitic. 18.17. It is not lawfull to marrie the wiues daughter, nor daughters daughter, and ſo downward: and likewiſe aſcending, not the wiues father, or fathers father, &c.

2. Affinitatis perpetuum eſt impedimentum, quod durat, mortua perſona, qua mediante contrahitur: Affinitie is a perpetuall impediment, and it holdeth, though the perſon be dead, by whom it was contracted: cauſ.35.qu.10.c.2. As, though the wife be dead, yet her kinred is of affinitie ſtill with her husband remaining aliue.

3. Affinitas non habet prohibitionem niſi in primo genere: Affinitie is not forbidden, but in the firſt kind: declar.arbor.affinit. Affinitie in the firſt kind continueth, till it be changed, by a new coniunction in marriage: as the brothers wife is of affinitie in the firſt kind, but if ſhe marrie againe, her ſecond husband is of affinitie in the ſecond kind, and with him mariage is not prohibited.

4. In collaterall affinitie mariage is inhibited till the third degree, counting the man and wife for one, or to the fourth, making them two degrees, Leuitic.18.14. the Vncles wife is of affinitie in the third degree, the vncle being in the ſame degree of conſanguinitie.

5. Inter conſanguineos viri & conſanguineos vxoris, nulla affinitas: Betweene the kinred of blood on the mans ſide, and the kinred of blood on the womans ſide there is no affinitie? and therefore two brothers may marrie with two ſiſters; the father and the ſonne, with the mother and the daughter.

6. In conſanguinitie it followeth, the father is my kinſman, therefore his ſonne, but not in affinitie: for the father marrying my ſiſter, and hauing a ſonne by her, he is of conſanguinitie, but not of affinitie vnto me, if he haue a ſonne by another wife: though the father be my kinſman in affinitie by his firſt mariage, yet the ſonne is neyther of affinitie nor conſanguinitie.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER ANY OF the Degrees prohibited in the law may be diſpenſed withall.

The Papiſts.

88. Error. THey ſay not that the Pope may diſpenſe with all, but with ſome of them, Concil.Trident. ſeſſ.24.can.3. As they tooke vpon them to diſpenſe with King Henry the 8. mariage with his brothers wife: their reaſon is, becauſe ſome of thoſe prohibitions were only iudiciall and poſitiue conſtitutions, not grounded vpon the law of nature.

*Argum.*1. If it be the law of Nature not to marrie within thoſe degrees, it ſhould haue been in force before the law was made: but ſo was it not: for Abraham married his brothers daughter, and Iacob two ſiſters, Bellarm.cap.27.

Anſw. 1. As Auguſtine ſaith of the mariage and copulation of Adams children, brothers and ſiſters together: Factum eſt compellente neceſſitate: It was for neceſſitie ſake, becauſe there were then no more women: ſo alſo may it be in ſome ſort true of thoſe Patriarkes, that hauing a neceſſitie to marrie amongſt their owne kinred, and not with the Gentiles; there was no choiſe to be had of women of their owne kinred further off in degree.

2. Although this example of theirs, both in marrying many wiues and ſo neere of kinne, cannot be altogether excuſed or iuſtified in them: yet becauſe the law of nature was not yet ſo clearely knowne, as afterward by the giuing of the law, which is nothing elſe but an expoſition of the law of nature; the offence was not ſo great in them, but might better be tollerated: becauſe as Auguſtine ſaith, it was neither Contra morem illorum temporum, nec contra præceptum: Neither againſt the cuſtome of thoſe times, nor againſt any flat precept. And to conclude, although thoſe holy men had their imperfections, yet we muſt not iudge them in theſe things according to the euill and corrupt diſpoſition of men in theſe dayes, which might vſe this great libertie in mariage, better then many vſe lawfull mariage now: as Auguſtine ſayth, Caſtiùs habebant plures, quàm nunc multi vnam: They vſed many wiues more chaſtely, then many now liue with one, De bon.coniug. cap.10.

Bellarmine replieth: Firſt, hee denieth that Iacobs mariage and the reſt, were facta diſpenſante Deo, were diſpenſed with of God: for it appeareth, Geneſ.28. 2. that it was the cuſtome of the place, to giue two ſiſters to one man: neyther would Iacob haue ſo eaſily 3. yeelded to it, if it had been an vnwonted thing: 4. and beſide there was no neceſſitie in it, that they ſhould marrie their kinſwomen.

Secondly, if they had ſinned in theſe mariages, 1. then ſhould they haue continued all their life in ſinne, which the ſeruants of God do not: 2. and by this meanes their children ſhould haue been baſtards, being borne in vnlawfull Matrimonie: Bellarm.c.27.reſponſ.ad probat.2.

Contra. Firſt, Bellar. is 1. contrarie to himſelfe in denying that the marriages of the Patriarkes were diſpenſed with: for he affirmed before, c.11.propoſ.4. Diſpenſatio circa polygamiam eſt indicata patribus,&c. The diſpenſation concerning polygamie, or multitude of wiues, was declared to the Fathers by God,&c. Their Canons affirme the ſame, Decret. Gregor. lib.4. tit.19.c.4. Nulli licuit ſimul plures vxores habere, niſi cui fuit diuina reuelatione conceſſum,&c. It was lawfull for none to haue many wiues at once, but to whome it was graunted by diuine reuelation, &c. that as Iacob from lying, the Iſraelites from theft, Sampſon from murder; ſo they are excuſed from adultery: and as in taking many wiues, ſo alſo in marrying in their neare kinred, it was by the ſame toleration permitted, though not by diſpenſation authorized or warranted.

2. Geneſ.29. There 1. appeareth no ſuch cuſtome, to giue two ſiſters to one man, but the manner was not to marrie the younger before the elder, v. 26. 2. Though there had been ſuch a cuſtome, it was in an idolatrous countrey, and therefore could not make it lawfull.

3. Iacob 1. deſired but one, and had a purpoſe onely to marrie Rachel; but being deceiued, hee was driuen to this ſtraite, that he muſt either take both, or els be depriued of her whome he chiefly loued. 2. Iacobs affection herein is no excuſe of his infirmitie. 3. And the vnlawfulnes of ſuch marriage, there being yet no poſitiue law, was not ſo fully reuealed vnto them. 4. Wherfore that which Iacob might doe either of infirmitie, or ignorance, maketh not the thing lawfull.

4. Their neceſſitie was ſuch, that they muſt either marrie their kinſwomen, or elſe the daughters of Canaan, which was vnlawfull and forbidden, Geneſ.28.6.

Secondly, 1. Gods ſeruants doe not continue in any ſinne which they know, without repentance, but a ſinne of ignorance or infirmitie may remaine in them: for how ſhould they correct that which they knew not: it was a weakneſſe in Abraham to cauſe Sara to diſſemble, as though ſhee were not his wife; yet did not Abraham know it, but continued in it; for he committed the ſame error twice: and Iſaac his ſonne by his example did the like. 2. Neither can it be denyed, but that there was baſtardie in ſome of their ſeed: ſuch were the two ſonnes of Thamar which ſhe had by Iudah her father in law: But we deny, that though thoſe marriages in themſelues were vnlawfull, that therefore all their ſeed was illegitimate; both 1. becauſe the poſitiue law was not yet giuen, which iudgeth of baſtardie: 2. And beſide, they married not for luſt, but for procreation and propagation of the Church: 3. As alſo the vnlawfulnes of theſe marriages was tolerated in reſpect of the neceſſitie and condition of thoſe times. 4. And by lawfull marriage ſucceeding, in continuance of time, the firſt ſtaine and blot was extinct and worne out.

*Argum.*2. Deuteron. 25.5. The law giueth this libertie, that if a brother die without iſſue, his brother ſhould take his wife, and raiſe vp ſeed to his brother. This lawe commaundeth nothing againſt nature, becauſe God is the author of nature, who made this law, and doth nothing againſt nature: therefore that is no naturall lawe, Leuitic. 18. that a man ſhould not marry his brothers wife; neither is it ſimply euill ſo to doe, for then God would not haue commaunded the contrary: but it is onely a iudiciall law, afterward abrogate by Chriſt: *Bellar.cap.*27.

Anſw. 1. That the law, Leuit. 18. was grounded vpon nature, and endured euen after Chriſts comming, it appeareth, in that Iohn Baptiſt (Chriſt being then come, and entred into his office) reprooued Herod for marrying his brothers wife. 2. That libertie graunted, Deut. 25. is an exception from the other law, which ſerued onely for thoſe times, for the continuance of carnall kinred, and maintenance of their tribes and families, which were to hold till the comming of the Meſſia: but now the cauſe of that exception ceaſing, the libertie alſo is taken away. 3. Neither doth it follow, that if the other law, Leuit. 18.16. be grounded vpon nature, that this exception ſhould be againſt nature: for not ſimply the marrying of the brothers wife, but the vncleane affection in vncouering the brothers ſhame by ſo doing, maketh it vnnaturall, as it is in the lawe expreſſed: but in marrying the brothers wife in this caſe onely, to raiſe vp ſeed to him, and onely at that time during the ſtate of that people, was not to vncouer but to recouer his ſhame, and raiſe vp his name and honour in Iſrael, wherefore it was not vnnaturall. 4. God is aboue nature, and aboue the law: and who may better expound the law than the lawgiuer: and by the ſame right might the Lord in this caſe onely graunt libertie to marry the brothers wife, notwithſtanding the other generall law, as Phinehes did ſlay the adulterer and adultereſſe, and Samuel the King of Amalek, notwithſtanding the law, Thou ſhalt not kill. Neither doth it follow, that becauſe God did in that one caſe diſpenſe with his law: Ergo, man hath authoritie to doe the ſame. 5. Laſtly, if it be anſwered, that in this exception, Deut. 25.5. the next kinſman who might marrie the widowe by law, not the brother, is to be vnderſtood: for neither doth the word in that place ſignifie a brother properly: and we ſee the practiſe accordingly, Ruth. 4. where not the brother but the kinſman performeth this duty. This anſwer might ſuffice to remooue the Ieſuites force: but we rather receiue the former.

Bellarm. replyeth: Firſt, this exception ſheweth, that to marry the brothers wife, is not ſimply euill of it ſelfe, for then it could not be made good and lawfull by any circumſtance. Secondly, he denieth it to be an exception; for not God, that knoweth all things, doth vſe to make exceptions after a law made, but men, when they ſee the law cannot otherwiſe be kept. Thirdly, neither is it a diſpenſation, for a diſpenſation is no lawe, but onely a qualifying of the law in ſome particular caſe. Fourthly, this kinde of marriage is againſt the lawe of nature, no otherwiſe than killing is, which by ſome circumſtance may be made lawfull, and ſo may the other. *Bellar. c.*27.

Contra. Firſt, to marrie the brothers wife of a fleſhly mind, and carnall luſt, is ſimply euill, and cannot be made lawfull by any circumſtance: but to marry her according to the lawe, onely to raiſe vp ſeed to the brother, for the continuance of the tribes and families, which were then Gods people, was not euill, not proceeding of any ſuch carnall deſire to the brothers wife, but of obedience to the law: like as to kill a man in malice is ſimply euill, and is neuer made lawfull, yet Phinehes killing not in malice, but in the zeale of Gods glory, was commended.

Secondly, as man may make exceptions againſt mans lawe, ſo to God onely it belongeth to take exception againſt his owne law: for who dare preſume to adde any thing to Gods law, but himſelfe? neither doth God giue exceptions againſt his law for want of foreſight, but for the profite and vtilitie of men, as this exception was for the commoditie of the Iewes.

Thirdly, neither was this a perpetuall lawe, but onely for that nation and for that time, and therefore hath the right nature of a diſpenſation.

Fourthly, 1. As killing with a malitious mind and of priuate reuenge, is againſt nature, and cannot be made lawfull; ſo is the marrying of the brothers wife with an vncleane affection: but to kill to the glory of God, is diſpenſed with in the worde: ſo is this marriage done onely in obedience to the law, and vtilitie of the people of God. 2. Againe, as the lawfull kind of killing (as by publike authoritie) is allowed by the ſame lawgiuer; ſo alſo the caſes and exceptions that allow the marriage of the brothers wife, muſt be warranted by Gods word. 3. Wherefore Bellarm. graunting that this kind of mariage is as much againſt nature as killing is, doth confeſſe as much as we doe deſire: neither hath he gained any thing but loſt; ſeeing that as no man hath power to diſpenſe with killing but God, ſo neither is this marriage lawfull, but in caſes limited and appointed by God: ſo that neither the Pope nor any other mortall man hath power to diſpenſe in this caſe.

The Proteſtants.

WE affirme, that it is vtterly vnlawfull for any Chriſtian to marry within the degrees prohibited: neither can any humane power diſpenſe with ſuch marriages: but the equitie of that law being grounded vpon nature, is in force for euer. Wherefore the Pope of Rome ſheweth himſelfe plainly to be Antichriſt, in diſpenſing againſt the law of God.

Argum. 1. Leuit. 18.24. The reaſon of that law is giuen concerning the forbidden degrees: They ſhould not defile themſelues in any one of thoſe things, becauſe the Gentiles defiled themſelues thereby, and were caſt out before them for it. Wherefore it is a naturall and perpetuall law, otherwiſe the Gentiles had not been bound vnto it.

Bellar. anſwereth: Firſt, the Gentiles were puniſhed for other greater ſinnes, as idolatrie, adulterie, mentioned before; v. 21. 22. and not onely for theſe marriages. Secondly, the Gentiles did marry in their kinred without any reſpect, and no circumſtances conſidered, and therefore offended againſt the law of nature: for the Patriarkes married within the degrees prohibited, as Abraham, yet were not puniſhed, Bell. c. 27. reſp. ad argum. 1. proteſtant.

Contra. Firſt, the words are, In all theſe the nations are defiled: therefore theſe vnlawfull marriages are comprehended among the reſt: and although they had other ſinnes, for the which they were puniſhed; yet theſe alſo raigned among them, and conſequently were vnnaturall. Secondly, the marriages here forbidden are ſimply propounded without any circumſtance, and therefore no circumſtance of mans deuiſe, not allowed in the law, can diſpenſe with the vnlawfulneſſe of theſe marriages. Thirdly, the ſinnes of the Gentiles are noted, wherewith they did then pollute themſelues: the marriages of the Patriarkes were before the law, and in reſpect of the neceſſitie of thoſe times, their chaſtitie and fidelitie tolerated.

Argum. 2. Mark. 6.18. Iohn ſaith to Herode, It is not lawfull for thee to haue thy brothers wife: Ergo, the law was not abrogate, being in force in our Sauiour Chriſts time. Neither are they to alledge, that Herodes brother was yet liuing, or that he had a child by Herodias, and therefore it was not lawfull for him to marrie her: for all this being graunted, which cannot be prooued, yet it is plaine out of the text, that Iohn reprooueth him in no other name, but becauſe hee married his brothers wife.

Argum. 3. Saint Paul reprooueth the inceſtuous young man that had his fathers wife, 1. Cor. 5.1. and excommunicateth him for it: but this is not forbidden any where in the newe Teſtament, but onely by vertue of Moſes law: Ergo, that law concerning degrees of kinred continued in force ſtill. Neither is it a good anſwer to ſay, as Bellarmine doth, that in ſome degrees that lawe holdeth, and not in other; ſeeing that all the degrees there named, Leuitic. 18. are with the like ſtrictneſſe, and in the ſame forme of words prohibited: neither can the Ieſuite ſhewe, where any part of that law is reuerſed. The words are, v. 24. Ye ſhall not defile your ſelues in any of theſe things: ſo then all the degrees there expreſſed are forbidden. Neither doth it helpe him to ſay, that this inceſtuous perſon did keepe his fathers wife while his father liued: which is vncertaine, for as it is by ſome affirmed, ſo it is by other denyed, as Theodoret: howſoeuer it were, the Apoſtle deſcribeth his ſinne to be this, that he had his fathers wiſe : ſo that we ſee, that the Leuiticall prohibition was perpetuall, and in force vnder the Goſpell.

Auguſtine is againſt them, who ſpeaking of the marriage of Conſobrines or Coſin germanes, De ciuitat. Dei lib. 15. cap. 16. which had been ſometime in vſe, Quia id nec diuina prohibuit, & nondum prohibuerat lex humana: It was as yet thought lawfull, becauſe neither the diuine law forbad it, neither was it yet prohibited by mans lawe. If that then be thought lawfull, which Gods law manifeſtly forbiddeth not, that ſure is vnlawfull which it plainely forbiddeth. Wherefore to marrie within any of the degrees directly forbidden, Leuit. 18. is vtterly vnlawfull.

We haue the full conſent of antiquitie, Concil. Agathenſ. 61. Hos inceſtus cenſemus eſſe, ſi quis relictam fratris, aut germanam vxorem duxerit, &c. Theſe we count inceſts, if a man marrie his brothers wife, or his owne ſiſter, his mother in law, his Aunt, &c. as it followeth in Moſes law.

Synod. Epannenſ. can. 30. Aurelianenſ. 3. cap. 10. Arelatenſ. ſ*ub Carolo can.* 11. Gregor. 3. decret. 5. Neoceſar. can. 2. In all theſe Councels it is in flat termes decreed, that it ſhall not be lawfull for any man to marrie his brothers wife.

Concil. Parrhiſienſ. can. 4. Nullus illicita coniugia contra praeceptum Domini ſortiri praeſumat, vt fratris relictam, nouercam, &c. Let no man preſume to make any vnlawfull mariage contrary to the commandement of God, as to marrie his brothers widow, his mother in law, &c.

And that it is not lawfull for the Pope to diſpenſe in this caſe with the mariage of the brothers wife; heare the determination of the Pope himſelfe: Zacharie of that name thus writing to Bonifacius, who required his aduiſe concerning one that had married his vncles wife, who affirmed that he was diſpenſed with by Gregorie the 3. his Predeceſſor; Pope Zacharie maketh this anſwere: Abſit hoc, vt praedeceſſor noſter ita praeciperet, nec enim ab Apoſtolica ſede illa diriguntur, quae contraria canonum ſtatutis eſſe perhibentur : Farre be it from my predeceſſor to make any ſuch law, for the Apoſtolike ſea hath no authoritie to decree any thing contrary to the auncient Canons, Epiſtol. ad Bonifacium. But for a man to marrie his brothers wife, is contrarie to the Canons, as we haue ſeene: Ergo, in this caſe the Pope cannot diſpenſe.

We haue the approbation of the Imperiall lawes, Cod. lib. 5. tit. 5. leg. 4. 5. Valent. Theodoſ. Fratris vxorem ducendi, vel duabus ſororibus coniungendi penitùs licentiam ſubmouemus, &c. We do denie licence to marrie the brothers wife, or to be ioyned to two ſiſters: ibid. leg. 9. Anaſtaſius: Reſcripta omnia viribus carere decreuimus, &c. We decree, that all diſpenſations, licences of the Prince, &c. ſhall be voide, which do giue leaue to marrie the brothers wife. Wherefore ſeeing the lawes of Princes do concurre with the law of God, in the prohibition of ſuch mariages, it followeth that they are meere morall precepts, and agreeable to the law of nature.

Their owne Canons alſo are euident, Cauſ. 27. qu. 2. c. 11. & decret. Gregor. lib. 4. tit. 1. c. 4. Sponſam fratris frater habere non poteſt: The brother cannot haue to wife his brothers ſpouſe: how much more cannot he haue his brothers wife, that was not eſpouſed onely, but married to him.

Cauſ. 35. qu. 3. c. 8. Non relictam fratris: It is not lawful to marrie the brothers widow, c. 12. Nec relictam fratris vxoris: Nor the wiues brothers widow.

Qu. 5. c. 3. Vxorem propinqui mei ita me oportet attendere, &c. I muſt ſo regard my kinſmans wife, of what degree ſoeuer, as though ſhe were in the ſame degree of mine owne kinred. By this rule it is no more lawfull for a man to marrie his brothers wife, then his owne ſiſter. And the Canon goeth further, Qui aliter ſentiunt Antichriſti ſunt, they that thinke otherwiſe, are Antichriſts: ſo conſequently the Pope is by their owne Canons an Antichriſt, for allowing ſuch inceſtuous marriages.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER ANY OTHER degrees may be by humane law prohibited, beſide thoſe directly forbidden in the law.

The Papiſts.

1. THey affirme, that by the law of Moſes, thoſe degrees only are vnlawful to marrie in, which 89. Error. are directly and by name ſet downe: and therefore it is not vnlawfull, by Moſes law, for the Vncle or Aunts husband to marrie his niece, becauſe it is not by name prohibited: as Abraham married his brother Arams daughter: for Sara was his niece. The mariage alſo of Coſin germanes was lawfull by Moſes law, and practiſed, Numb. 36. The daughters of Zelophehad married their Vncles ſonnes. Therefore by Moſes law no degrees are forbidden, which are not directly named, Bellarm. cap. 27.

The Proteſtants.

1. COncerning Abrahams mariage what is to be thought, we haue ſhewed before, reſponſ. ad argum. 1. that although this mariage of Abraham is neyther commended, nor ſimply allowed in Scripture: yet it was tollerated both in reſpect of the neceſſitie 1. of thoſe times, when as they could not marrie in further degrees of kinred, vnleſſe they would haue taken them wiues from the idolatrous heathen. 2. Likewiſe the libertie then was greater, there being then no lawe to the contrarie. 3. And their chaſtitie and ſobrietie did ſomewhat beare them out, who as Auguſtine ſaith, Non laſciuiendi, ſed gignendi cauſa illis fœminis vtebantur: They did not vſe thoſe women for luſt, but for generation ſake: de bon. coniug. c. 25. but this example of Abraham notwithſtanding, now after the law giuen, it is a plaine caſe, that the vncle is no more to marry his neece, than the nephew his Aunt: and this being by name prohibited, Leuit. 18.14. 20.2. the other alſo is neceſſarily included: for the ſame rules for degrees of kinred, doe proportionably hold both in men and women: wherefore ſuch marriage is vnlawfull, neither to be contracted; and if it be, to be diſſolued.

The like iudgement is to be giuen, of the marriage of two ſiſters; that as the brother is forbidden to marrie his brothers wife, ſo the ſiſter not to ioyne her ſelfe to the ſiſters husband. And whereas Bellarmine vrgeth that place, Leuiticus 18.18. Thou ſhalt not take a wife with her ſiſter, to vexe her during her life: thereby proouing, that the lawe onely forbiddeth to marrie two ſiſters together, not ſucceſſiuely one after another. I anſwere, that the text is rather to be read thus, Thou ſhalt not take a woman to her ſiſter, that is, one woman to another: Firſt, the worde אשה, ſignifieth a woman, as well as a wife: as in the next verſe following 19. and in many other places. Secondly, the true reading is, to a ſiſter, not, with a ſiſter; ſo the prepoſition אל ſignifieth: Then thus to reade, Thou ſhalt not take a wife to her ſiſter, hath no ſenſe: to take the ſiſter to thy wife, by inuerting the wordes, were to better ſenſe. Thirdly, the phraſe is ſo taken in Scripture, Geneſ. 26.31. They did ſweare, vir fratri, a man to his brother, that is, one to another: for otherwiſe, Iſaak and Abimelech were not brethren. Likewiſe Ezech. 1.10. Their wings were ioyned, fœmina ad ſororem, the woman to her ſiſter, that is, one to another: where the verie ſame wordes in the verie ſame conſtruction are vſed: ſo then in this Text, not the marriage of two ſiſters together, but Polygamie or Bigamie, the hauing of two wiues or women together, is forbidden.

Now then, that by the ſame analogie, the prohibition giuen to one ſexe, doth bind the other, it may thus appeare: Firſt, becauſe all the rules of prohibited degrees are preſcribed namely to the male; ſo that if the other ſexe were not included alſo, none of the prohibitions ſhould concerne them. Secondly, to giue an inſtance, Leuiticus 18.11. Thou ſhalt not diſcouer the ſhame of thy fathers wiues daughter: If the analogie did not hold in the other ſexe, then it might be lawfull to marrie the fathers wiues ſonne. Thirdly, concerning theſe degrees which are in queſtion; firſt, to marrie with the vncle, is forbidden in direct wordes, Thou ſhalt not vncouer the ſhame of thy fathers brother, verſ. 14. Secondly, for the marrying of ſiſters, ſeeing degrees further off in affinitie are forbidden, as to marrie the wiues daughters daughter, the nearer cannot be lawfull: now the wiues ſiſter is nearer than the wiues daughters daughter.

Further, concerning marriage betweene the vncle and his neece, I will adioyne the moſt excellent teſtimonie of Ambroſe, who writeth hereof at large to one Paternus, Epiſtol. 66. Tu copulare paras filium, &c. You would ioyne together your ſonne, and his ſiſters daughter. 1. Non ipſe te reuocat ſonus nominum, &c. Doth not the very ſound of the names call you backe? for thus you ſhall be both a grandfather, and a father in lawe. 2. The diuine lawe doth forbid brothers children to marrie which are in the fourth degree, &c. but theſe are in the third. 3. But you will pretend, that it is permitted by the diuine lawe, becauſe it is not forbidden: Ego autem & prohibitum aſſero, but I ſay it is forbidden, becauſe lighter matters are forbidden, de patruelibus fratribus, of brothers children, &c. Neither doe you finde it forbidden, that a man ſhould marrie his daughter, quia interdictum eſt lege naturæ, becauſe it is forbidden by the law of nature. 4. What is ſo common, as for the vncle to kiſſe his neece? Hoc inoffenſæ pietatis oſculum ſuſpectum facies: You will make ſuch kiſſes of loue to be ſuſpicious, if ſuch be admitted to marriage. 5. But if you regarde not the diuine lawe, yet the Emperours law might mooue you. Theodoſius forbiddeth, that couſin germanes ſhould come together in marriage. Thus much Saint Ambroſe.

2. Concerning the marriage of brothers and ſiſters children, there is a greater queſtion. Firſt, it cannot be proued that Zelophehads fiue daughters married their vncles ſonnes, that is, their Coſin germanes: for the Hebrues call the nephewes, ſonnes: as Iethros daughters are called the daughters of Raguel their Grandfather, Exod. 2.17. So it is very like that their husbands were their vncles ſonnes ſonnes, as in the 12. verſe it may be gathered, where the text ſaith, They were married into the families of the ſonnes of Manaſſes: therefore not into one familie. But as touching the queſtion in hand, the marriage of Coſin germanes ſeemeth alſo by ſome analogie to be forbidden by Moſes law: for if the degrees of affinitie be limited to the third or fourth degree; as it is not lawfull for a man to marrie his wiues daughters daughter, Leuitic. 18.17. why ſhould not the line of conſanguinitie hold to the fourth degree likewiſe? And ſo neither the ſonne to marrie his fathers brothers daughter, or the daughter the ſonne: for here are alſo foure degrees: the ſonne, one: the father, two: the fathers brother, three: the brothers ſonne, foure. Againe, the vncles ſonne is as neere as the vncles wife, the one being of affinitie, the other of conſanguinitie: and therefore the firſt being forbidden, Leuit. 18.14. why not the other alſo? Yet this we graunt, that this analogie or proportion is not ſo ſtrong, nor doth conclude ſo neceſſarilie as the other. Wherefore we thus determine of this matter, that it is well that the marriages of Coſin germanes are reſtrained by humane law, and ſo they ought to be: which kinde of marriages may lawfully be hindered, and the contract looſed: but the marriage being conſummate and finiſhed, it is not for this cauſe to be diſſolued.

So was it decreed, Concil. Lateranenſ. part. 6. cap. 30. Matrimonium in quarto gradu conſanguinitatis iam conſummatum non debet diſſolui: Marriage in the fourth degree of conſanguinitie (ſuch as the marriage of Coſin germanes is) being conſummate and finiſhed, muſt not be diſſolued.

Auguſtine alſo writeth very well of this matter: Quis dubitet, honeſtiùs hoc tempore conſobrinarum prohibita eſſe coniugia, etiamſi id diuina lex non prohibeat: cuius enim debet cauſa propinquitatis verecundum honorem, ab ea contineat quamuis generatricem libidinem? Who doubteth, but that the marriage of Coſin germanes is honeſtly forbidden, though the diuine law doe not prohibite it? for to whom a man oweth a ſhamefaſt reuerence for kinred ſake, he ought to refraine his luſt.

De ciuitate Dei. lib. 15. cap. 16.

Let vs ſee the conſent of antiquitie: Gregor. 3. decr. 6. Si quis neptim, nurum, nouercam duxerit, &c. anathema: If any man marrie his niece, his daughter in law, or mother in law, accurſed be he. As then it is vnlawfull for the Nephew to marrie his Aunt, ſo is it for the vncle to marrie his niece.

As for the marriage of Coſin germanes, the Canons euery where forbid it: Agathenſ. can. 61. Epannenſ. can. 30. Aurelianenſ. 3. cap. 10. it is decreed, that no man ſhall marrie conſobrinam, his Coſin germane.

Antiſiodorenſ. can. 31. Non licet conſobrinam, hoc eſt, quæ de duabus ſororibus, aut duobus fratribus procreantur, in coniugium accipere: It is not lawfull to marrie a coſin germane, which commeth of two brothers, or two ſiſters.

Arelatenſ. can. 11. Ne quis conſobrinam, vel filiam auunculi ducat: That no man marrie his coſin germane, or vncles daughter. Thus we ſee how that our aduerſaries, that make ſhew of antiquitie, are the onely enemies to antiquitie.

Now further I will ſhew the conſent both of the Ciuill and Canon law for the vnlawfulnes of mariage: firſt, with the vncle: ſecondly, the wiues ſiſter: thirdly, the vncles daughter.

Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 17. Diocletian. Nemini matrimonium contrahere liceat cum ſororis filia: No man muſt contract Matrimonie with his ſiſters daughter, that is, his niece.

Cod. lib. 6. tit. 20. leg. 19. Iuſtinian. Whereas in the conferring of dowries and other gifts, ſome ſeemed to make a difference betweene vncles and aunts: Aſſerebant in perſonis auunculorum, non etiam patruorum, materterarum, vel amitarum locum habere: They affirmed that it tooke place in the perſons of the vncles by the mothers ſide, not of the vncles by the fathers ſide, or of the aunts: the law proceedeth, Talem ſubtilem dubitationem amputantes: Wee cutting off this ſubtiltie and doubt: and ſo maketh the condition of vncles and aunts to be alike: As then in this caſe, there was no difference betweene vncles and aunts, ſo why not alſo in marriage?

Decret. par. 2. cauſ. 27. qu. 2. c. 12. Gregorie decreeth againſt one, qui deſponſatam nepotis virginem duxit, which married one eſpouſed to his nephew: how much more doe the Canons forbid the marriage of the niece by blood?

Cauſ. 35. qu. 3. c. 8. Si quis relictæ, vel filiæ auunculi: It is not lawfull to marrie the vncles wife or daughter: how much more vnlawfull is it to marrie the vncle himſelfe?

Secondly, the marriage of two ſiſters is contrarie to the Imperiall lawes: Cod. lib. 5. leg. 5. Valent. Theodoſ. Duabus ſororib. cõiungẽdi, &c. We giue no licẽce to marrie the brothers wife, or two ſiſters.

Thirdly, concerning the vnlawfull marriage of Coſin germanes, that is brothers or ſiſters children, I finde not the like ſtrict prohibition in the Imperiall lawes: for by the law of Antoninus: Cod. lib. 6. tit. 25. leg. 2. and the conſtitution of Arcadius, lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 19. the marriage of conſobrines, and coſin germanes is made lawfull: Yet degrees as farre off are inhibited; as lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 17. Nemini liceat: No man is to contract Matrimonie with the brothers daughter, vel ex ea nepte, or his daughters daughter. Theodoſius alſo made a law againſt the marriage of coſin germanes, as before out of Ambroſe: yea and the Canon law is very ſtrict againſt ſuch mariages: Cauſ. 35. qu. 3. c. 20. and Cauſ. 32. qu. 7. c. 20. Brothers and ſiſters children are inhibited to marrie.

Decr. Greg. lib. 4. tit. 2. c. 12. Non debet cum conſobrina propter publicæ honeſtatis iuſtitiam permanere: He muſt not remaine or dwell with his Coſin germane for publike honeſtie ſake, whether he hath knowne her, or not.

Thus we ſee: firſt, that the two firſt degrees are euen by the law of the Gentiles inhibited, as being vnnaturall, that is the marriage with the vncle, or with the wiues ſiſter. Secondly, a difference we finde betweene theſe, and the marriage of coſin germanes, which though it be not conuenient, yet is not ſo vnnaturall, nor prohibited by the Imperiall lawes. Thirdly, the Canon law ſeparateth Coſin germanes after carnall knowledge: but that is too hard a ſentence: it is ſufficient to hinder marriage contracted, but not conſummate by carnall coniunction, as I haue ſhewed before.

The Papiſts.

90. Error. 2. IT is lawfull for the Church to reſtraine other degrees of affinitie and conſanguinitie, beſides thoſe preſcribed by Moſes, and that the decrees of the Church in ſuch caſes do binde in con-ſcience, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 24. can. 3. As to prohibite marriage vnto the ſeuenth degree in natu-
91. Error. rall kinred, and afterward to the fourth. 2. Alſo their Canons do make a ſpirituall kinred, that commeth in by Baptiſme and Confirmation: and ſuffer not the godfather to marry the godchild, 92. Error. or the godfather the godmother. 3. Likewiſe they haue found out an affinitie that commeth in by eſpouſals onely of Matrimonie, which bindeth (ſay they) in the firſt degree by the Canon law, which is the firſt and ſecond by the Ciuill law: as that it is not lawfull for the brother to marrie her which was eſpouſed to his brother. 4. Alſo another kinred and affinitie, by fornication and vnlawfull fleſhly knowledge, which bindeth in the ſecond degree Canonicall, which is the third and fourth Ciuill: as it is not lawfull for the ſonne to marrie his fathers baſtard, Bellarm. cap. 24.
cap. 30.

Bellarmine thus reaſoneth for the reſtraint of conſanguinitie and affinitie: firſt, to the ſeuenth degree, and afterward to the fourth.

Argum. 1. There is a peculiar ſhamefaſtnes and reuerence of nature due to kinſmen, which is violated in marriage. 2. If kinſmen might marrie together, they could not vſe cohabitation, or any familiaritie together without ſuſpition: but whereas marriage is interdicted betweene kinſmen, there is no daunger. 3. For the propagation of loue and charitie vnto others, marriage is forbidden in theſe degrees, wherein their affinitie or conſanguinitie is a ſufficient bond of loue, without marriage. 4. If kinſmen ſhould marrie together, their loue would be too inordinate, the loue of marriage being ioyned to the naturall loue of kinred, Bellarm. cap. 29.

Contra. Firſt, the wiſedome of man is not to controule the ordinance of God: if the Lord hath not thought good to make a reſtraint of marriage ſo farre, it is preſumption in man to doe it: ſhall it be thought, that God had not reſpect to the reuerence of nature, propagation of loue, familiaritie of kinred, ſobrietie in marriage, in ſetting downe the marriage law?

Secondly, none of theſe inconueniences neede to be feared in degrees ſo farre off: for whereas the fourth degree in the Canons, is the eight Ciuill degree: and by the Canons, brethren are in the firſt degree, brethrens children in the ſecond, their childrens children in the third, and their children in the fourth: what kinred can there be now betweene Coſin germanes twice remoued? and there being little or no kinred, there is neither 1. reuerence of nature due as to the kinred of the fleſh: 2. nor familiaritie to be admitted without ſuſpition, otherwiſe than betweene ſtraungers: 3. nor yet ſhall the propagation of loue be hindred, there being no ſuch ſure bond alreadie out of marriage: 4. and conſequently inordinate loue in the marriage of ſuch is not to be feared, the naturall affection by ſuch long deſcent being extinguiſhed.

The Proteſtants.

1. TO forbid more degrees in marriage, than are either directly or by neceſſarie conſequence prohibited in the lawe, is a meere Antichriſtian yoke laid vpon the people of God: for the Lord (the author of that law) beſt did know, both what perſons were fit for mariage, and how farre the line of mariage was to extend.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the law of the degrees of marriage was peculiar to the people of the Iewes, vnto whom the marriage of their kinred was not ſo much reſtrained: firſt, becauſe they were but few. Secondly, for the preſeruation of the Tribes and families. Thirdly, that being ſuffered to marrie in their kinred, they ſhould not ſo eaſily put away their wiues. Fourthly, as they were permitted to put away their wiues, and to haue many at once; ſo in like manner to marrie within certaine degrees of kinred, Bellarm. c. 29. reſp. ad argum. 2.

Contra. Firſt, theſe reaſons are not ſufficient to proue the law of degrees in mariage peculiar to the Iewes: 1. They were a great and populous nation: in Dauids time there were 13. hundred thouſand fighting men in Iſrael and Iuda, 2. Sam. 24. In the raigne of Iehoſaphat, Iudah onely was able to make 11. hundred thouſand men of warre, 2. Chron. 17. 14. to 19. therefore in reſpect of their ſmall number, there was no reaſon to allow them to marrie with their kinred. 2. For the preſeruation of their families there was a ſpeciall prouiſo in the law, that the brother might take the brothers wife to raiſe ſeede to his brother, Deuter. 25. 3. Moſes permitted them (notwithſtanding this law of degrees) to giue vnto their wiues bils of diuorcement: and it is ſeene by experience, that the neerer in degree the married couples are, for the moſt part greater contention falleth out. 4. To put away their wiues was but a toleration: but the law concerning degrees was a commandement, and the tranſgreſſion thereof puniſhed with death, Leuit. 20. The hauing of many wiues was directly contrary to the law, Leuit. 18. 18. Deuter. 17. 17.

Secondly, that this was not a law peculiar to the Iewes, but generall, to bind the people of God vnder the Goſpell: it appeareth both by Iohn Baptiſts reprehenſion of Herode for marrying his brothers wife; and Saint Paules cenſuring of the inceſtuous perſon that tooke his fathers wife: which are the very degrees forbidden in Leuiticus. 2. Neither can they ſhew any diſpenſation or reuocation in the new teſtament contrarie to that law.

This prohibition of marriage to the fourth degree Canonicall, that is, the eight Ciuill, is contrary both to the Imperiall and Canonicall lawes.

*Cod.lib.*5.tit. 4. *leg.*17. Dioclet. In collaterals both of affinitie and conſanguinitie, the prohibition goeth not beyond the fourth degree: Nemini liceat, a man muſt not contract matrimonie with his Aunt, ſiſters daughter, or Neece, that is her daughters daughter; with his brothers daughter or Neece: and in affinitie, with his wiues daughter, wiues mother, ſonnes wife, fathers wife, &c. none of theſe exceed the fourth degree Ciuill. The Canon law thus teſtifieth, *Cauſ.*35. *qu.*3.*c.*3. Fabianus: In quarta generatione ſi contracti fuerint, non ſeparentur: They which are maried in the fourth generation, let them not be ſeparated: *ibid. c.*12. Iulius, Vſque in tertiam progeniem, &c. No man muſt marry a wife to the third degree: Theſe Canons inhibite not marriage in the third and fourth degree Canonicall, much leſſe to the ſeuenth.

Lateranenſ. part. 50. 29. Cognati non ſunt ſeparandi niſi in primo vel ſecundo gradu conſanguinitatis ſint coniuncti: Coſins muſt not be diuorced, vnleſſe they marry in the firſt or ſecond degree of conſanguinitie: the ſecond degree by the Canon law, is the fourth degree by the Ciuill law, and after our account: after the fourth degree then marriage is lawfull: it is not then reſtrained till the ſeuenth.

Secondly, the inuention of ſpirituall kinred is but a popiſh tricke, to get the more money for their diſpenſations: for by this reaſon no Chriſtians ought to marrie together, becauſe they are all of one ſpirituall kinred in Chriſt.

Their owne Canons are againſt them, *Cauſ.*30.*qu.*3.*c.*4.Vrban. Poſt compaternitatem geniti, &c. Godfathers children may marrie: *Qu.*4.*c.*5. Paſchal. Vxorem compatris ducere licet: A man may marrie his Godfathers wife: *Decr.Greg. lib.*4.*tit.*11.*c.*1. Alexander. Filij duorum compatrum licitè contrahant: Godfathers children may contract matrimonie.

Thirdly, the new affinitie that commeth by eſpouſals, is alſo but an humane inuention: for the law ſpeaketh onely of the kinred of the fleſh, which ariſeth of carnall knowledge and copulation, not an intent or purpoſe onely of marriage, Leuit. 18.6.

We haue the conſent of a generall Councell, Lateranenſ. part. 6. can. 27. Pope Benedictus decreeth thus: Qui vnam ſororem deſponſauerit, ſi eam non cognouerit, poteſt aliam ſororem ſibi matrimonio copulare: apparet enim virum & mulierem non poſſe fieri vnam carnem, niſi carnali copula ſibi adhæreant: He that eſpouſeth one ſiſter, not hauing knowne her, may marrie her ſiſter: for man and wife are not made one fleſh, but by carnall copulation. Therefore by the eſpouſall words they are not made one fleſh: Propinquitas ſanguinis verbis dicitur, non verbis efficitur: Propinquitie of blood by words is ſaid, by words it is not made. Cur ergo prohibeamus, quod prohibitum nunquam ſcriptura declarauit? Why therefore ſhould wee forbid that, which is no where in ſcripture forbidden? To this agreeth alſo the decree of Pope Alexander, Lateranenſ. part. 45. can. 5. Non ſunt vna caro vir & mulier, niſi carnali, copula cohæſerint: Man and wife are not one fleſh but by carnall copulation.

Thus alſo the Ciuile law teſtifieth: Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 24. Iuſtinian. Conditio nuptiarum impletur per actum, non habitum, aut potentiam: The condition of marriage is accompliſhed by the acte, not by the habite or poſſibilitie.

Their Canons alſo are euident, *Cauſ.*27.*qu.*2.*c.*17. Iulius: Mulier præter commixtionem ſexuum non pertinet ad matrimonium: A woman without the copulation of the ſexe, belongeth not to matrimonie. C. 18. Benedict. Per nuda ſponſionis verba non poſſunt vna caro fieri: They cannot be made one fleſh onely by the words of eſpouſall. The reſt of this Canon is recited before.

The Maiter of Sentences maketh this anſwere, That thoſe Canons are vnderſtood of eſpouſals which are made, per verba de futuro, by wordes not of the preſent, but of the time to come; when there is not, conſenſus de præſenti, ſed ſponſio futuri: not a conſent for the preſent, but a promiſe for afterward.

Contra. Firſt, that diſtinction of the Canon law is but an humane deuice, that there is fidespactionis, fides conſenſus: That faith of marriage is made by couenant and promiſe, or by conſent: the firſt holdeth not, the ſecond is firme euen after carnall ſocietie with another: *Cauſ.*27.*qu.*2.*c.*51. For we ſee the Scripture maketh no difference betweene the couenant of marriage, and conſent: Geneſ. 24.57, 58. We will call the maid and aske her conſent, &c. Wilt thou goe with this man? and ſhee ſaid, I will goe. Her promiſe by theſe words of the future, I will goe, are called her conſent. So David ſent to Abigail, vt accipiat in vxorem, to take her to his wife: he ſaid not, I do take thee to my wife: 1. Sam. 25.40. Wherefore that ſimple and well meaning age, knewe no ſuch difference in contractes.

Secondly, the Canons exclude all eſpouſals whatſoeuer from the computation of the degrees of marriage: Propinquitas ſanguinis verbis dicitur, non verbis efficitur: Propinquitie of blood is ſayd by words, not made. He ſpeaketh generally of all words of eſpouſall or contract whatſoeuer: *Benedict.cauſ.*27.*qu.*2.*c.*18. And the queſtion is of a maide that was ſimplicibus verbis deſponſata, &c. eſpouſed by ſimple, that is, plaine and direct words, to a young man: the maide eſpouſed dieth, he is licenſed to marrie her ſiſter, and by warrant of Scripture; becauſe man and woman are not made one fleſh, niſi carnali copula, but by carnall copulation: as the Scripture ſaith, They two ſhall be one fleſh.

Fourthly, the laſt we admit, for the ſonne of the father begotten out of marriage, is of his fleſhly kinred, though not lawfully: and therefore in marriage matters there is reſpect alſo to be had euen of this kinred of the fleſh: as Ruben is curſed of his father becauſe he lay with his concubine, Gene.49.4. which notwithſtanding was not his fathers wife. So alſo the Ciuill law, *Cod.lib.*5.*tit.*4. *leg.*4. Alexander. Concubina patris non debet eſſe vxor filij: The fathers concubine cannot be the ſonnes wife.

THE FOVRTH QVESTION, OF OTHER impediments of marriage.

THere are ſome impediments which may hinder and diſſolue the contract of marriage, before it be conſummate, but not after: ſome, which both may hinder the contract, and diſſolue the matrimonie euen after carnall knowledge.

The Papiſts.

93.Error. 1. BEllarmine reckoneth vp diuers impediments of both kinds, which may diſanull the contract of marriage, and diſſolue the Matrimonie it ſelfe: but hee maketh no mention of the conſent of the parents. And indeede it is their opinion, that it is not a neceſſarie thing to be reſpected in marriage: nor of the eſſence thereof, neither can ſuch marriage, as hath the conſent of the children only, either by the parents, or Magiſtrate be diſſolued, *Bellarm.c.*19.

Argum. Eſau married without his fathers conſent, yet was not his marriage diſſolued: Iacob alſo had not his fathers conſent to the marriage of Lea, and of his two handmaides: Ergo, the parents conſent is not neceſſarie, *Bellarm.cap.*19.

Anſw. Firſt, concerning Eſau his marriage, we ſay he did very euill in marrying without his fathers conſent, and it was a great griefe to his parents: yet the marriage being once conſummate, wee ſay not, that then it ought to be diſſolued, for want of the parents conſent, but the contract and eſpouſals onely. Secondly, for Iacob, his maides were not his wiues, and Lea was thruſt vpon him againſt his will: no marueile if he had not his fathers conſent, when his owne was wanting: but to marrie one of his fathers kinred, as he made choyce of Rachel, he had his fathers full conſent.

*Argum.*2. In the marriage of children without conſent of the parents, the conſent of the parties is preſent, which is ſufficient: for conſenſus facit matrimonium, conſent maketh Matrimonie. And if the marriage of ſeruants againſt the will of their maſters be notwithſtanding firme and ſure, much more the marriage of children, &c. *Bellarm.cap.*19.

Anſw. Firſt, one of your owne writers ſhall make you an anſwere: Conſenſus facit nuptias, ſed eorum, qui ſui iuris ſunt, &c. Conſent maketh marriage, but of ſuch, as are in their owne power: ſo are not children, and therefore their conſent is not ſufficient: *Eſpenc.de clandeſt.in matrim.cap.*11. Secondly, where the maſters are in ſtead of parents, there they haue the ſame right and power to approue or diſſolue the contracts of their ſeruants, which fathers haue: but where ſeruants haue fathers beſide, they are to depend vpon their fathers conſent, and not the maſters: and in this caſe the argument followeth not, for fathers haue greater power in the marriage of their children, than maſters ouer their ſeruants.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, wee doe not ſay, that the want of the parents conſent may diſſolue marriage conſummate after mutuall coniunction: but that it may breake off the contract and eſpouſals. Secondly, neither haue the parents power to beſtow their children in marriage without their conſent, Geneſis 24.57. And this is agreeable to the law of nature: according to the conſtitution of the Heathen Romane Emperours: *Cod.lib.*5.*tit.*4.*leg.*12.Diocletian. Nec filiumfamilias inuitum ad vxorem ducendam cogi, &c. The diſcipline of the lawes doe not permit, that the ſonne ſhould be compelled againſt his will to take a wife. Thirdly, neither muſt the parents exerciſe a tyrannicall power ouer their children in forbidding them marriage, but muſt alway haue reſpect vnto their neede. And thus doing their conſent is neceſſarie, and without it the contract hath no validitie, 1.Corinth.7. 37.38. The parent hath power to giue in marriage or not to giue.

Argum. Exod.22.16. The law is this, That if a man lie with a maide not betrothed, and her father refuſe to giue her vnto him to wife, he ſhall pay money. Here the full authoritie of giuing or not giuing the daughter in marriage, is committed to the father.

Bellarmine anſwereth: That this is in ſuch caſes where there is no contract: but the law ſayth not, that the father may refuſe after the contract made.

Contra. 1. As though their mutuall carnall knowledge be not as forcible to ioyne them, as a bare contract, this being but in word, the other in deede. Secondly, Numb.30.4. The father may breake his daughters vow made vnto God: Ergo, much more her promiſe and contract made to man.

Bellarm. It is to be vnderſtood of ſuch an one, as is in ætate puellari, yet vnder age, a young maiden, which is not yet fit for marriage.

Contra. 1. In this chapter there be three eſtates or degrees of women ſet downe: a maide, a wife, a widow: of theſe three only the widow hath power to make a vow: ſhe that is not a widow, is either vnder her husband, if ſhe be married, or vnder her father, if ſhe be not: So then the law meaneth all maides vnmarried, vnleſſe you can finde out a fourth kinde, that is neither of maides, wiues, nor widowes. 2. Againe, here are to be vnderſtood rather maides of yeeres and diſcretion, to make a vow, than of tender and young yeeres, who knew not what a vow meaneth. 3. And beſides, the worde here vſed, verſ.4. אשה ſignifieth a woman, not a girle or young maide. 4. Laſtly, a writer of their owne thus concludeth vpon this place: Ergo vota à filiabus Deo nuncupata poterant parentes diſſoluere, ſponſalia, &c. Therefore might the parents diſſolue vowes made by their daughters vnto God, and could they not retract eſpouſals made to men? Eſpenſ.c.1.de clandeſtin.matrimon.

Argum.2. Deuter.7.3. Ye ſhall not make marriages with the Heathen, thou ſhalt not giue thy daughter to his ſonne, &c. Hence the ſame author concludeth thus: Eam legem fruſtra laturus, &c. This law had been made in vaine, if marriages had been free for the children without the fathers conſent. Againe, whereas the Iſraelites had ſworne, that they would not giue their daughters to the Beniamites to wife, Iudg.21.1. and therefore were very much perlexed & grieued for that tribe, ſaying, verſ.7. How ſhall wee doe for wiues to them that remaine? The daughters might haue helped their parents in this perplexitie, if notwithſtanding their parents oth, they might haue married of themſelues. Thus much Eſpenſ. and much more, libr.de clandeſtin.matrimon.c.1.2.

We haue alſo the conſent of antiquitie: to omit thoſe ancient Canons, which are very many, which doe inioyne that children ſhould not be married without their parents conſent: vnto the which Bellarmine anſwereth, that ſo much hee graunteth, yet it followeth not, that the contract ſhould for that defect and want be diſſolued: we will therefore bring forth ſuch Canons, as annihilate and diſanull the contract, where the parents conſent is not.

Euariſtus epiſtol.1. Non fit coniugium niſi ab his &c. There is no marriage made, but by them that haue power ouer the woman: let the wife be demaunded of her keepers and tutors, and eſpouſed by her parents, and the neereſt of her kinred: as it is adulterie rather and whoredome, than lawfull marriage.

Celeſtin.decret.4. Quod parentes, fratres, &c. ita vt ſi non interſint, & conſenſum non adhibuerint, ſecundum leges nullum fiat matrimonium: That the parents, brethren, kinsfolkes of both ſexes be admitted to teſtifie their conſent for their ſonne or daughter, and ſo to eſtabliſh or breake off their marriage: who if they be not preſent, neither giue conſent, according to the law, let it be counted no marriage. What plainer euidence can we haue for this matter?

Cod.lib.5.tit.4.leg.7 Gordian. Minus legitima coniunctio, ceſſante patris voluntate, &c. It is no lawfull coniunction, the fathers will being wanting, leg.12. Diocletian. Sociare, &c. Thou art not hindred to aſſociate thy ſelfe to what marriage thou wilt, vt contrahendis nuptijs patris conſenſus accedat, ſo that thy fathers conſent be to the contracting of mariage: leg.18. Valent. Theodoſ. Viduæ intra vigeſimum quintum, &c. Widowes vnder 25. yeeres, in ſecundas nuptias ſine patris ſententia non conueniant, muſt not enter into ſecond mariage without the ſentence of their father: tit.6.leg.6. If a man marrie an orphane or pupill, whoſe father is dead, being vnder 25. yeeres of age, nec matrimonium habuiſſe, it is to be counted no matrimonie, nor they children, that are borne in ſuch mariage, vnleſſe the father dying willed it.

Likewiſe the Canons: Cauſ.32.qu.2.c.13. Conſulitur puella non de ſponſalibus, &c. The maiden is not asked concerning the eſpouſals; for therein ſhe expected the iudgement of her parents, but ſhe is conſulted with about the day and time of her iourney: This is ſpoken of Rebecca: The ſame Canon alleageth Euripides, thus ſpeaking in the perſon of the woman, νυμφευμάτων, Sponſalium meorum pater meus curam ſubibit, &c. For my eſpouſals my father ſhal take care, it appertaineth not to me. Thus we ſee that it is agreeable to the law of nature, that the mariage of children ſhould not be attempted without the conſent of the parents.

Cauſ.36.qu.2.c.11.gloſſ. This law is alleaged out of the Digeſts, tit.de nuptiar.ritu, leg.2. Conſiſtere non poſſunt nuptiæ, &c. Mariages cannot ſtand, vnleſſe they conſent, in whoſe power they are.

Diuers of the learned Papiſts condemne ſuch marriages, as are enterpriſed without the conſent of the parents: Gropperus, in inſtitut. Colonienſ. Gentianus, in his booke ſet forth of this matter, alleageth a certaine Greeke canon to this effect: Quæ ſine ys, qui habent poteſtatem matrimonia fiunt, fornicationes ſunt: They are fornications, no mariages, which are done without them that haue the power, &c. Likewiſe Catharinus, Irrita eſſe velim, nec vera eſſe matrimonia, &c. I iudge them to be no true, but void mariages: Eſpenc. lib. de clandeſtin. matrim. c. 15.

There are notwithſtanding certaine caſes excepted by the law, wherein the ſonne or daughter haue free libertie to marrie without conſent.

1. Si vtroq; orba parente: If both the parents be dead. Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 20. Honor.

2. Cod. lib. 3. tit. 28. leg. 19. Poſt viginti quinq; &c. After 25. yeeres children might marrie without the parents conſent.

3. Ibid. leg. 20. Poſt matris pœnitentiam, &c. If the mother ſhall giue conſent, the father being dead, and afterward repent her, yet the marriage ſhall be good.

4. Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 25. Filij furioſi. &c. The ſonnes of madde men may marrie without conſent.

Other caſes there are beſide, as when the ſonne is manumitted, that is, ſet free by his father, or hath borne any publike office of Magiſtracie or gouernement, Eſpenc. c. 16. de clandeſtin. matrim. But theſe irregular and extraordinarie caſes excepted, the power of parents is not to be infringed, but their conſent to be expected in the eſpouſals of their children.

This trueth alſo is ſealed: Maſter Tindall holy Martyr; Let parents prouide mariages for their children in ſeaſon, teaching them alſo to know, that ſhe is not his wife whom the ſonne taketh, nor her husband whom the daughter taketh, without the conſent or good will of their Elders, or them that haue authoritie ouer them: if their friends will not marrie them, then are they not too blame if they marrie themſelues: let not the fathers and mothers alwayes take the vttermoſt of their authoritie of their children, but beare their weakeneſſe, &c. pag. 1249. col. 2. artic. 2.

There are alſo other cauſes which may diſſolue contracts and eſpouſals made: as if the honeſt and lawfull condition propounded in the contract be not kept: or if there be an error in the perſon, hee heareth afterward of her diſhoneſtie, whom hee tooke for an honeſt woman: both theſe may make void the contract, but not the mariage, if they be once ioyned together.

The Papiſts.

2. THey ſet downe many impediments, which may make a nullitie of mariage it ſelfe, after it be conſummate: ſome of them we acknowledge, as afterward it ſhall appeare: but theſe following we do renounce.

94. Error. First, the vow of chaſtitie and entring into Orders do looſe the bond of mariage. Bellarmine to this purpoſe vrgeth that place, 1. Timoth. 5. 12. Hauing damnation, becauſe they haue forſaken their firſt faith: the firſt faith, is the vow of continencie, which was a ſufficient impediment of matrimonie. Bellarm. c. 21. propoſ. 1

Contra. By the firſt faith, is vnderſtood their faith, which they profeſſed in Baptiſme, to renounce the workes of the fleſh, which theſe wanton widowes now follow in forſaking their calling: 1. So the interlinearie gloſſe, and Bruno expound this place: ex Eſpenc. in hunc locum. 2. The Apoſtle doth interprete himſelfe, verſ. 8. Hee that prouideth not for his owne, denyeth the faith, &c. that is, by his workes he denieth the religion of Chriſt: now to denie the faith, verſ. 8. and to violate the faith, verſ. 12. doe ſignifie the ſame. 3. The Apoſtle afterward giueth theſe widowes licence to marrie, verſ. 14. which he would not haue done, if it had beene damnation, & a breach of the faith to marry after their profeſſed widowhood: this place both Chryſoſtome & Theophilact expound of widowes profeſſed. vide Eſpenc. in hunc locum. This text then nothing maketh for them.

95. Error. Secondly, mariages of the faithfull with Infidels are not onely vnlawfull, but void, Bellarmine c. 23. Yet he confeſſeth that ſuch marriages are not void eyther by diuine or naturall law, or by any law of the Church, but onely by the cuſtome of the people of God, hauing the force of a law. propoſ. 2. 3.

Argum. Infidelitie in the old law, and diſparitie of religion did make matrimonie void: Ergo, much more now; for there is greater difference betweene Chriſtians and Infidels, then was betweene the Iewes and Gentiles, Bellarm. argum. 1.

Anſw. Firſt, if this argument conclude any thing, it ſheweth, that euen by the diuine Law ſuch mariages are void: which notwithſtanding he before denied.

Secondly, the argument followeth not, for this law belonged to the policie of that nation, that they ſhould not marrie with the Gentiles: who were accounted as an vncircumciſed, and vnholy people: but now this wall of partition is taken away; and in Chriſt there is neither Iew nor Grecian, Galath. 4. 3. 28. Thirdly, the mariage of the Gentiles, was for no other cauſe inhibited the Iewes, but leaſt it ſhould be a meane to withdraw them from the worſhip of God, Deut. 7. 4. This proueth not, that an Infidell willing to dwell together, and of whom there may be ſome hope, ſhould be put away, contrary to S. Pauls rule, 1.Cor.7.13. Fourthly, the Iewes were permitted vpon diuers occaſions to put away their wiues, for the hardnes of their heart, Matth.19.8. wherefore the impediments and diſſolutions of mariage among them do not bind vs.

96.Error. Thirdly, the mariage of thoſe which committed adulterie, and did compact together before to marrie after the firſt husbands or wiues death, is actually void. Bellarm.c.22.

The Proteſtants.

1. Concerning the inualiditie of vowes to diſanull mariage, wee haue declared the trueth before, Contro.6.de Monachis. For mariage lawfully contracted and conſummate, is onely made void by way of diuorce in the caſe of adulterie, as we haue before proued.

Argum. Matth.19.9. Our Sauiour giueth this perpetuall rule, that no man ſhould diſmiſſe his wife but for fornication: but Orders is no fornication: Ergo, not for entring into Orders is ſhe to be diſmiſſed: and verſ.6. No man muſt put aſunder that, which God hath coupled: but they which are but contracted, are coupled before God: Ergo, no humane ordinance, ſuch as is the ſingle life annexed to Orders, can ſeparate them.

Decret.Gregor.lib.3.tit.32.c.7. Alexander, giueth libertie to a woman profeſſed, vt ad religionem tranſeat,&c. to profeſſe religion, or returne to her husband: Ergo, it was lawfull after profeſſion made to returne.

*Sext.decretal.lib.3.tit.15.c.1.Boniſ.*8. Simplex votum non reſcindit,&c. A ſimple vow doth not cut off mariage afterward contracted: and againe he ſaith, Voti ſolennitas ex ſola conſtitutione eſt eccleſiæ: A ſolemne vow is onely by the conſtitution of the Church: and Alexander ſaith, that Votum ſimplex non minus obligat coram Deo, a ſimple vow doth not leſſe binde before God, then a ſolemne and publike vow,: it followeth, that a ſolemne vow then, doth not hinder mariage afterward contracted.

Extrau.Ioan.tit.6.c.2. Votum ſolemnizatum per ſacri ſuſceptionem ordinis,&c. A vow ſolemnized by entring into holy orders, is not of force to diſſolue matrimonie before going, though not conſummate with carnall knowledge: wherefore mariage contracted is not hindered or interrupted by the profeſſion of Orders.

2. Neither doth the infidelitie of the one partie make a nullitie of mariage: for S. Paul ſaith, that the woman in that caſe is not to forſake her husband if he will dwell with her. 1.Corinth.7. verſ.13. Of this matter ſee more, quæſt.2.part.2. of this Controuerſie.

Cod.lib.1.tit.7.leg.16.Leo& Anthem. Si ſponſa coniugium ſponſi propter religionis diuerſitatem recuſauerit: If the ſpouſe refuſe to marrie with him, to whom ſhe is eſpouſed, &c. The law alloweth onely a diſſoluing of the contract and eſpouſals for religion ſake, and not otherwiſe.

Diſtinct.10.c.1.Nicolaus, Si religionis cauſa coniugia debere diſſolui dicuntur, ſciendum eſt, quia licet hoc lex humana conceſſit, lex tamen diuina prohibuit: If for religion ſake mariages are ſaid to be diſſolued, let it be knowne, that although humane law doth allow it, yet Gods law doth forbid it.

Cauſ.28.c.1. Innocent. Quod Deus coniunxit, homo non ſeparet, &c. What God hath ioyned together, let not man put aſunder, and leaſt he ſhould be thought to ſpeake onely of thoſe, which marrie after Baptiſme, let them remember, that the queſtion was asked by the Iewes, and to the Iewes was the anſwere made, *c.*8. Auguſtine thus writeth to Pollentius: Tibi videtur infideles à fidelibus dimitti non licere,&c. You thinke that the infidels ought not to be diſmiſſed from beleeuers, becauſe the Apoſtle forbiddeth it, but I ſay it is lawfull, becauſe the Lord forbiddeth it not; yet not expedient, Quia hoc ne fiat monet Apoſtolus, becauſe the Apoſtle wiſheth or admoniſheth, that it ſhould not be: here be two opinions, one thinketh it is not lawfull for infidels to be diſmiſſed, the other that it is not expedient: ſo which opinion ſoeuer is followed, they are not at all to be diſmiſſed. ibid.c.9. Affert impedimentum ſalutis,&c. The departure of the beleeuer from the Infidell, bringeth an hindrance to his ſaluation.

Decret.Gregor.lib.4.tit.19.c.8. Innocent. Fideles cum infidelibus matrimonialiter copulati,&c. The beleeuers ioyned in mariage with vnbeleeuers, may freely and lawfully remaine with them.

Decret.Eutychiani. In poteſtate fidelis eſt poſt baptiſmum recipere vxorem, quam infidelis infidelem ante dimiſerat: It is in the power of a beleeuing man to receiue his wife after Baptiſme, which, when they were both infidels, he diſmiſſed. But if the very bond and mariage knot were diſſolued, as Bellarmine ſaith, how can they come together againe?

Thirdly, neither is the fault committed before the marriage, ſufficient to diſable the mariage once done: for then queſtion might haue beene made of the ſtrength of Dauids marriage with Bathſheba. And Auguſtine doubteth not thus to conclude, Poſſe ſanè fieri nuptias ex malè coniunctis honeſto poſtea placito conſequente: That mariage may very well ſtand betweene thoſe, that once had vnlawfull carnall copulation, but afterward an honeſt purpoſe of mariage followed.

Can.Apoſtol.66. Non licitum eſto aliam ducere, quam quis prius ſollicitauit, quamuis paupercula ſit: It ſhall not be lawfull for a man to marrie any other, but her whom hee entiſed to follie before, though ſhe be poore.

Concil.Lateranenſ.part.45.can.2. Alexander. Contrahere quis poteſt cum ea matrimonium, quam, viro viuente, adulterio polluerat: A man may contract marriage with her, whom, while her husband liued, he defiled with adulterie. Theſe Canons are directly oppoſite to the Ieſuites opinion.

Now whereas Bellarmine excludeth not all adulterie before going from future marriage, but where the parties were compact and confederate together to marrie afterward: their owne lawe ſimply maketh it lawfull for a man to marrie his concubine, though he had promiſed her mariage before: Cauſ.22.qu.4.c.22. Quam prius concubinam habuerat, non eſt peccatum in coniugem ſuſcipere: It is no ſinne to make her his wife, that was before his concubine: cui iuramento firmauit, &c. to whom he confirmed by an oth, to take her to wife. Cauſ.31.qu.1.c.2. Fieri poteſt coniugium cum quo praeceſſit adulterium: Marriage may be made with whom adulterie was before committed. Decret. Gregor.lib.4.tit.7.c.8. Siquis vxore viuente fide data, &c. If a man, his wife yet liuing, did giue his faith to marrie another, or did contract himſelfe to her, and did not carnally know her, the marriage is not to be diſſolued. So then neither adulterie precedent, nor yet the giuing of faith, or contracting marriage, the firſt husband or wife yet liuing, though theſe are grieuous offences; yet are not ſufficient to diſſolue or breake off Matrimonie.

But there are certaine caſes, wherein Matrimonie vnlawfully contracted, yea conſummate, may be diſſolued: as firſt, if the conſent of either partie be wanting, as when by tyrannicall coaction and compulſion they come together, and the conſent is ſtill withholden.

Hormiſda.decret.4. Filiam inuitam & renitentem, nemo viri alicuius coniugio cogat ſociari: quorum enim vnum eſt corpus, vnus eſſe debet animus: Let no man match in marriage vnto any his daughter againſt her will: for they that haue one bodie, ought alſo to haue one minde. Nicholaus de matrimon.can.1. Si ſolus conſenſus defuerit, caetera cum ipſo coitu celebrata fruſtrantur: If the conſent onely be wanting, the very carnall copulation, and whatſoeuer elſe beſide, are all fruſtrate and voyd.

Secondly, if the conſent of both be wanting, as in the marriage of children, that are not able to giue conſent.

Nichola.1.de matrimon.can.3. Vbi non eſt conſenſus vtriuſq; ibi non eſt coniugium: &c. Where each partie conſenteth not, there is no marriage: Therfore they which giue girles to boyes in marriage in the cradle, doe no act at all, vnleſſe both of them when they come to yeeres of diſcretion, conſent.

Thirdly, if there be an error of the perſon, as if one be thruſt vpon a man in ſtead of another, as Lea was vpon Iacob: or an error in the condition of the partie, as if he or ſhe be an Hermaphrodite, an Eunuch, or ſuch like.

Lateranenſ.part.50.cap.28. Alexander. Sicut puer, qui non poteſt reddere debitum non eſt aptus coniugio, ſic quoque qui impotentes ſunt, minimè apti ad contrahenda matrimonia reputantur: As a childe, which cannot render the debt or dutie of marriage, is not fit for marriage; ſo neither are they fit to contract marriage, that haue any naturall weakenes or imbecillitie. In this place it is ſaid further, that although it be not the cuſtome of the Romane Church, yet the French Church doth diſſolue marriage for frigiditie, and impotencie of nature.

Fourthly, if they marrie within the degrees forbidden by Moſes law. In all theſe caſes, Matrimonie thus vnlawfully begun and ratified, may be diſſolued. But lawfull Matrimonie cannot be abrogate, but either by naturall death, or lawfull diuorce for fornication. In the caſe of deſertion alſo and long abſence of either partie, after the expecting of his returne ſome terme of yeeres, with probable intelligence of the parties death; or if he be wilfully abſent, of his lewde and diſhoneſt life, the innocent partie, by the wiſe and deliberate ſentence of the Magiſtrate, may be pronounced free.

For other matters which are commonly obiected, marriage is not to be diſſolued: As for long abſence, when the husband is detained in captiuitie, or ſuch like: Leo epiſtol.77.cap.1. Quod foeminae debeant, quae captis viris nupſerant alijs, regreſſis de captiuitate viris, prioribus copulari: Women marrying to others while their husbands are captiues, muſt be reſtored vnto them at their returne.

Barrennes is no cauſe of diſſolution: Lateranenſ.part.6.cap.25. Ob coëundi poſſibilitatem fieri non debet diuortium: Diuorce muſt not be made, for poſſibilitie of generation.

The leproſie is no cauſe.: Lateranenſ.37.part.cap.3. Alexander. Vxores propter lepram non ſunt dimittendae; ſed illis petentibus debet debitum reddi: Women for leproſie muſt not be put away: but their husbands muſt performe the dutie of mariage if they require it.

So likewiſe in other caſes: Quicquid mulier contra te cogitauerit, vel ſi te accuſauerit, non eſt excepta cauſa fornicationis eijcienda: Though thy wife ſhould conſpire againſt thee, and accuſe thee, yet ſhe muſt not be caſt off except for fornication, Nichol.1.decret.de matrim.6.

Ibid.can.7. Hi qui matrimonium ſani contraxerunt, & vni ex duobus dementia, aut furor, aut aliqua infirmitas acceſſerit, non debent coniugia talium diſſolui: They which were ſound when they married, if either of them afterward fall into frenzie, madnes, or ſicknes, they muſt not for that be diuorced.

Ibid. Similiter ſciendum eſt de his, qui ab aduerſarijs excæcantur, aut membris truncantur, aut à barbaris execti ſunt: The like is to be ſaid of thoſe that haue their eyes pulled out, are maimed, or gelded of their enemies. None of theſe are ſufficient cauſes to breake off marriage. And thus much of this queſtion.

THE FIFT QVESTION, OF THE COMPAriſon betweene Virginitie and Mariage.

The Papiſts.

VIrginitie is preferred before Marriage, not onely for that it is a more quiet ſtate of life, and freer from troubles in this world, but that it is more conuenient for the ſeruice of God, and that it hath a gratefull puritie and ſanctitie, both of bodie and ſoule, which marriage hath not, Rhemiſt.

Argum. 1. Corinth. 7. 32. The vnmarried careth for the things of the Lord, how ſhe may pleaſe God: Ergo, virginitie is a fitter ſtate of life to ſerue and pleaſe God in, Rhemiſt. ibid.

The Proteſtants.

97. Error.

FIrſt, we grant, according to the Apoſtles ſaying in this place, that virginitie is alſo a fitter ſtate of life for the ſeruice of God, yet not ſimply, but for thoſe onely that haue the gift of continencie; for they which cannot abſtaine, may and doe ſerue God with a more quiet minde being married, than many popiſh virgins which burne in yͤ luſt of concupiſcence. Secondly, yet it followeth not, that virginitie is a more holie and cleane thing in it ſelfe, and more meritorious before God, than marriage is: for this were to make marriage vnholy and vncleane; whereas it is not the act of marriage, but the abuſing thereof, that bringeth vncleannes with it: before God in themſelues, neither is more holy than other.

Argum. It is faith which maketh vs accepted of God, not the merite of any worke: and therefore of all faithfull beleeuers it is ſayd, Apocal. 14. 4. Theſe are they which were not defiled with women: for they are virgines. And he vnderſtandeth all that are redeemed by Chriſt, from amongſt men, and are the firſt fruits of the Lambe, verſ. 4. and not onely thoſe, which properly in common vſe of ſpeech we call Virgines. And thus Saint Ambroſe expoundeth: Si ideo putes virgines dictos, quia corpora ſua intaminata ſeruarunt, &c. If you only vnderſtand virgines, becauſe they haue kept their bodies vnpolluted, then the Saints ſhalbe excluded from this glorie: for al the Apoſtles, except Iohn and Paul, had wiues, Ambr. in 2. Corinth. 11. True godlines therefore and a ſincere faith, whereby wee are diuorced from the world, and ioyned to God, is the true virginitie.

De bono coniugal.

Auguſtine: Sicut non eſt impar meritum patientiæ in Petro, qui paſſus eſt, & in Iohanne, qui paſſus non eſt: ſic non eſt impar meritum continentiæ in Iohanne, qui nullas eſt expertus nuptias, & in Abraham, qui filios generauit: As there was no greater merite of patience in Peter that ſuffered, than in Iohn, who ſuffered not; ſo there was no greater merite of continencie in Iohn that was neuer married, than in Abraham that begat children. See then, by his iudgement, there is the ſame merite of married and vnmarried perſons.

Synod. Gangrenſ. cap. 9. Si quis virginitatem profeſſus tanquam abominabiles nuptias iudicat, anathema ſit: If any man profeſſing virginitie doe condemne marriage, as an abominable thing, let him be accurſed. But thus doe our aduerſaries, who are carried away with ſuch an extraordinarie liking of their Monkiſh fained chaſtitie, that they deſpiſe marriage, calling it a prophaning and pollution of orders, as we haue ſeene before.

Cod. lib. 8. tit. 58. leg. 1. Conſtant. Whereas there was a lawe, that, cælebs, a ſingle man was not capable of any bequeſt or legacie: the Emperour correcteth that ordinance, and thus enacteth: Sit omnibus æqua conditio capeſſendi, quod quiſque mereatur: Let the ſame condition be to all, married and vnmarried to receiue, whatſoeuer they are meete or worthie of. This is the equitie of mans law, to make no difference in reward between the ſingle and married: ſhall Gods law be thought to be more vnequall?

Diſtinct. 30. c. 4. Siquis virginitatem, &c. If any man profeſſing virginitie for Gods cauſe, doe arrogantly diſpraiſe thoſe that are married, let him be accurſed. But the extraordinarie extolling and aduancing of ſingle life, tendeth to the diſpraiſe of marriage.

Cauſ. 32. 44. q. 4. c. 6. Quis ignorat omnes retrò ſanctos eiuſdē fuiſſe meriti, &c. Who is ignorant, that all the Saints in time paſſed, were of the ſame merit, that Chriſtians are? If then the Saints and Patriarches, that were married, be equall vnto Chriſtian virgines; then is not virginitie ſimplie to be preferred before marriage.

THE SIXT QVESTION, OF THE TIMES of marriage prohibited.

The Papiſts.

91.Error. THere are certaine ſeaſons in the yeere, wherein for the holines of the feſtiuall times, they hold it vnlawfull to haue marriage ſolemnized: as from the Aduent to the Epiphanie; from Septuageſima Sunday (as it is called) to the octaues of Eaſter: from three dayes afore the Aſcenſion, to the octaues of Pentecoſt, *Ruard.Tapper.artic.*20.*p.*526. But the Councel of Trent hath ſomewhat moderated this time, & cut it ſhorter, thinking it vnreaſonable that mariage ſhould be prohibited the third part of the yeere (for ſo much the time interdicted ariſeth to, if account be taken of the weekes:) The time of Pentecoſt therefore they haue diſpenſed with: and the time prohibited at Eaſter they would haue begun not from Septuageſima, but from Aſhwedneſday, *Seſſ.*24.*cap.*10. Vpon theſe times they hold it vnlawfull publikely to haue marriage ſolemnized, both for the holines of ſo great feaſts, and becauſe of receiuing the Sacraments, *Bellar.de matrim.cap.*31.

Argum. God commaunded the people to abſtaine from their wiues, when hee was to appeare vnto them in Mount Sinai, Exod.19.15. And Sam.21.4. Before the high Prieſt would deliuer the ſhewbread to Dauid and his companie, he asked if the young men had kept themſelues from women: Ergo, marriage is not lawfull at all times, Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, theſe places alleaged doe rather proue, that men in thoſe interdicted times ought not at all to come at their wiues, then that the ſolemnization of marriage ſhould be reſtrained: but I thinke they would be aſhamed to forbid men their wiues companie ſo long together, as fiue or ſixe weekes at the Natiuitie, and eight or nine weekes at Eaſter: why then ſhould not the one be as lawfull as the other? Secondly, the abſtinence from their wiues was commaunded then, as a legall and ceremoniall kind of ſanctification, as was alſo the waſhing of their clothes, Exod.19. verſ.10. And the companie of women was at ſome times counted as a legall pollution, not as a ſinfull or vncleane act of it ſelfe: as the women after childbirth were commaunded to purifie themſelues, Leuit.12. from a legall pollution onely, not from any ſinfull or vncleane act: for then it had been a manifeſt iniurie to that holy birth, that Mary purified her ſelfe according to the law, Luk.2.22. Wherefore ſeeing it was a legall kinde of ſanctification, it is not to be intruded and impoſed vpon Chriſtians now. Thirdly, neither can they proue that this kinde of abſtinence is neceſſarie alwaies before the receiuing of the Sacrament, though ſometimes wee denie not but it is conuenient: for it was not alwaies required, no not of the Prieſts in the lawe, when they were to offer incenſe or ſacrifice. For whereas the high Prieſt, which was alwaies but one, was bound morning and euening to offer incenſe vnto the Lord, Exod.30.8. he could not obſerue this rule vnleſſe he had been inioyned perpetuall abſtinence, which we ſee by the law was not impoſed vpon them. This doubt ſomewhat troubled Auguſtine: for firſt he ſaith, That it muſt needes follow, ſeeing the high Prieſt was married, and did ſometime go in vnto his wife, that the offering of incenſe ſhould ſome dayes be intermitted: but in his Retractations he miſliketh his former ſolution, and thus determineth; That the high Prieſt firſt offered the morning incenſe, and afterward went in to his wife, and ſo was vncleane, vſque ad veſperam, but vntill the eeuening, not after the eeuentide, & then he offered the euening incenſe. To take this anſwere for this time, though it be inſufficient: for the Hebrue word, which is tranſlated the eeuen, or eeuentide ערב, ſignifieth the twilight, when the Sunne is ſet, when light and darknes are mixed together: but the incenſe was renewed before the Sunne ſet: yet I ſay, admitting Auguſtines ſolution, the high Prieſt did not abſtaine one whole day before he offered: much leſſe many dayes, much leſſe many weekes, much leſſe ſome moneths: as the Popiſh Church preſcribeth by interdicting ſo many dayes.

Quæſt.ſup. Leuitic.15.

Retract.lib.2. cap.85.

The Proteſtants.

THat not onely the publike ſolemnitie of marriage at ſome times may haue intermiſſion, but all Matrimoniall acts ought to ceaſe: as when men either priuately doe giue themſelues to faſting and prayer, 1.Cor.7.5. or when publique or generall faſts are by the ſpirituall gouernours thought meete, and by the Chriſtian Magiſtrate proclaimed: we doe not denie, but in our iudgement allow it, and by our practiſe approue it: but that Matrimonie at ſuch ſet times as an vnholy and vncleane thing is to be forbidden and reſtrained, we take it to be popiſh ſuperſtition, and an Antichriſtian yoke.

*Argum.*1. It diſgraceth the holy inſtitution of marriage, which the Apoſtle calleth honourable, Hebr.13.4 and Saint Paul counteth the fruites of marriage, which are the children of the faithfull, holie, 1.Corinth.7.14. How is it then, that there can be any time ſo holie, the which holie Matrimonie is not beſeeming? Againe, in thus doing they make difference of dayes, eſteeming ſome in themſelues more holie than others, contrarie to the Apoſtles rule, Galat.4.10. Coloſſians 2.16.

Argum.2. The Apoſtle willeth, that they ſhould not defraud one another, but by conſent for a time &c. 1.Cor.7.5.which though it be eſpecially vnderſtood of married perſons,yet it may be extended to thoſe which are contracted together: how can they obſerue this rule, when their marriage is ſuſpended tenne weekes together, from Septuageſima till the octaues of Eaſter? may not Sathan tempt them all this while for their incontinencie? Againe,what is this elſe,but a forbidding to marrie, though not in whole,yet in part: contrarie to the Apoſtle, 1.Timoth.4.3.

Argum.3. The Tridentine Chapter maketh but two holie times in the yeere,the Natiuitie,and Eaſter: during which times,they would not haue Matrimonie ſolemnized: and I pray you, why is Pentecoſt left out,is it not as feſtiuall a time as the other? And if they haue power to diſpenſe with the feſtiuall of Pentecoſt,why not with the reſt alſo? wherefore it appeareth to be but an humane deuice. And as the Popiſh Church hath abrogated one of the interdicted times for mariage; ſo it were to be wiſhed,that thoſe reformed Churches,which haue abandoned other ſuperſtitious obſeruations,and yet doe retaine this vſe for the reſtraint of marriage at certaine ſeaſons, would proceede a degree further,and graunt a generall libertie to marrie in thoſe inhibited times: firſt, becauſe it is an offence to other reformed Churches,that where the Goſpell is profeſſed, any ſuch yoke ſhould be impoſed. Secondly,if Papiſts haue enlarged this reſtraint,thinking it not reaſonable to enioyne ſo many times of inhibition,much more ought Proteſtants to doe that which is moſt agreeable to the libertie of the Goſpell. Thirdly, while by diſpenſation it is made lawfull to marrie in theſe times,for euery one that will be at the charge thereof,and not otherwiſe, it will be taken onely to be an engine to draw aduantage. Fourthly,ſeeing that the Martyrs were perſecuted,for marrying in theſe inhibited times,as Iohn Crimes mentioned afterward: it is very vnfit, and vnbeſeeming,that the people ſhould vnder the Goſpell be encumbred with ſuch things. Fiftly,becauſe the lawes of the Realme doe ſeeme to giue libertie for marriage at all times, in theſe words: That no reſeruation,or prohibition,Gods law except, ſhall trouble or impeach any marriage,without the Leuiticall degrees: ann.32. Henric.8.c.38. If no prohibition, then not the prohibition or reſtraint of time. Laſtly,becauſe this reſtraint of marriage is not grounded vpon the word of God, for then it could not be altered; but is onely an humane conſtitution, and ſeemeth rather to abridge the libertie of marriage,and to be againſt the Apoſtles rule, 1.Cor.7.5.as I haue ſhewed before: in mine opinion it were much better for theſe reaſons alleadged,for this Canon of reſtraint to be diſcontinued,than vrged: and I hope,that the diſcreete officers of our Church,will be more ſparing and moderate therein.

But to returne,let vs ſee a little I pray you,how well they agree together about the times prohibited for mariage: ſome of them beſide the three times of the Natiuitie,Eaſter,Pentecoſt,make alſo a fourth time vnſeaſonable for mariage, and that is at the feaſt of Saint Iohn Baptiſt: Neither doe they here agree about the time, ſome preſcribing three weekes before of abſtinence from mariage: Synod.Ilerdenſ.decret.1.ex Gratian. Some 14.dayes onely, Synod.Salegunſtadienſ.can.3. Some doe adde alſo other times of prohibition,as in the foure Ember faſts,and in the holy dayes eeues: when they hold it vnlawfull to marrie, Salegunſtad.ibid. Others doe abridge the three vſuall times of reſtraint,either in part,as reformat.Ratiſpon.articul.21.the laſt weeke only of Aduent is reſtrained for mariage: or in whole,as the reſtraint of Pentecoſt is abridged and cut off in the late Tridentine Chapter. Thus it appeareth to be onely an humane tradition, which hath ſo much doubtfulnes,and vncertaintie: as though any time can be too holy for marriage.

Could there be a more holy place then Paradiſe? or a more holy time, than while man was in his innocencie? yet euen then and there Matrimonie was inſtituted.

Laſtly,is not the Sabboth or Lords day an holy feſtiuall time? and as holy as any is? what if I ſaid more holy,for this onely immediatly was inſtituted of God: but marriage may notwithſtanding be fitly ſolemnized vpon that day,the abuſes and diſorders,which commonly fall out in ſuch aſſemblies,being cut off: for Auguſtine is of opinion,that the marriage in Cana of Galile,was die Dominico, vpon the Lordes day. And it is moſt fit that Matrimonie ſhould bee ſolemnized in the face of the congregation,which is vſually aſſembled vpon that day: Ergo,it may as fitly and conueniently at any time be kept and ſolemnized,excepting the reſpects aforeſaid.

De tempor. ſerm.159.

The Ciuill law for decencie and comlines ſake interdicteth ſome times of marriage to particular perſons: as a woman marrying within a yeere after her husbands death, was counted infamous: Cod.lib.2.tit.12.leg.15.Gordian. but generally to all and for religion the law enioyneth not times of reſtraint.

We haue here the teſtimonie of the Martyrs: Iohn Lambert holy Martyr: In that they will not ſuffer mariage to be ſolemnized at all times in the yeere: I think it ſtandeth not with Chriſts rule, but is againſt the ſame; and that they will not ſuffer the banes vpon all holy daies to be proclaimed,vnleſſe a diſpenſation for money be purchaſed: All this God forbiddeth, Fox p.1105.col.1.

THE SEVENTH QVESTION, TO WHOM MAtrimoniall cauſes properly doe belong.

The Papiſts.

99. Error. Matrimonial cauſes, as to determine of the degrees of kinred, of diuorces, of the impediments of marriage, of contracts: doe only belong vnto the Church, and the Magiſtrate may make lawes hereof (approbante principe eccleſiaſtico) by the approbation of the eccleſiaſticall prince (hee meaneth the Pope:) otherwiſe the lawes of Princes are in this behalfe voide, Bellarm. de matrimon. cap. 32.

Argum. 1. Our Sauiour Chriſt giueth a law concerning diuorces, Matth. 19. he ſendeth them not to the ciuill Magiſtrate: and Saint Paul preſcribeth, what is to be done in the marriage of beleeuers and Infidels, 1. Cor. 7. 13. Ergo, the officers of the Church are onely iudges of theſe cauſes: Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, the argument followeth not: for Chriſt as King of his Church, the Apoſtles as his chiefe Miniſters, by warrant and commiſſion from him preſcribed, and gaue lawes to the Church: no mortall man now is to challenge that authoritie to himſelfe. Secondly, by this reaſon eccleſiaſticall perſons ſhall haue the rule of all cauſes: for Saint Paul deſcribeth the office alſo of Princes, and giueth direction for ciuill cauſes, as for tribute, vſing of the ſword, and ſuch like, Rom. 13. doth it follow then that theſe things doe belong to the Apoſtles ſucceſſors? Thirdly, as the Apoſtles did giue rules and directions for Matrimoniall and other cauſes: ſo it is the Miniſters part alſo, by the word of God to miniſter counſell, and giue direction to the ciuill Magiſtrate in theſe caſes, but not without authoritie from the ſame power to meddle with the execution thereof.

Argum. 2. Matrimonie 1. is a Sacrament, and therefore belongeth to the knowledge of eccleſiaſticall perſons: 2. and many caſes of conſcience may fall out, wherein recourſe is to be had to the paſtors of mens ſoules: 3. otherwiſe, when there are no Chriſtian Magiſtrates, their ſpirituall cauſes ſhould be brought before Heathen Iudges, if the Church hath no power to diſcerne of them, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, we denie Matrimonie to be a Sacrament, neither ſhall they be euer able to prooue it ſo. Secondly, in caſes of conſcience in Matrimonie the paſtors of ſoules muſt be conſulted with out of the word: but it followeth not, that they therefore ſhould make lawes: and are your Canoniſts and Licentiates paſtors of ſoules, to whom you referre the deciding of theſe cauſes? Thirdly, Heathen Iudges haue 1. made good lawes concerning Matrimoniall matters, as that no man ſhould marrie his fathers concubine, Alexander. Cod. lib. 5 tit. 4. leg. 4. not without the parents conſent: Dioclet. ibid. leg. 12. Not the ſiſter, ſiſters daughter, aunt, &c. Leg. 17. Dioclet. Not two wiues at once: ibid. tit. 5. leg. 2. Dioclet. 2. But where ſuch lawes faile, they muſt take that courſe which S. Paul did againſt the inceſtuous perſon, to vſe ſpirituall correction.

The Proteſtants.

Matrimoniall cauſes, ſuch as are before rehearſed, originally doe belong to the ciuill Magiſtrate, by whoſe munificence they haue been graunted to eccleſiaſticall perſons, and vnto them properly it doth belong to make Matrimoniall lawes.

Argum. 1. This is euident firſt out of the Scripture, for Moſes and not Aaron, did publiſh the lawes concerning the degrees of marriage, Leuit. 18. and other Matrimoniall cauſes. The Magiſtrate is Gods miniſter to take vengeance on them that doe euill, Rom. 13. 4. therefore alſo to cenſure and puniſh all tranſgreſſions and offences in marriage; to him it appertaineth to ſee that men liue in godlines and honeſtie, 1. Tim. 2. 2. Therefore it is part of the Magiſtrates care, that honeſtie and godlines be kept in Matrimonie and Matrimoniall duties and cauſes.

Argum. 2. Secondly, this is proued by the ancient practiſe of the Ciuill power: how the Emperours both Heathen and Chriſtian haue made lawes as concerning the degrees, contracts, diuorce of marriages; ſee Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. de Nuptijs, tit 5 de inceſto, &c. Beſide their practiſe, the teſtimonie of the law is euident: Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 3. Seuerus, Illicitum matrimonium coram ſeculari iudice: Vnlawfull marriage muſt be complained of before a ſecular Iudge: whom the lawe calleth, competentem iudicem, a competent Iudge. If the Secular be competent, the Eccleſiaſticall is incompetent. Ibid. leg. 11. Dioclet. If a mans father detaine his wife, rector prouinciæ, the rector of the prouince ſhall helpe. Leg. 20. Theodoſ. If there be many competitors of a woman, that is an orphane, Iudici deliberare permiſſum eſt: The Iudge ſhall determine whom ſhe ſhall haue.

Argum. 3. It appeareth by the reaſon of the law: firſt, Cod. lib. 3. tit. 8. leg. 1. Alexander. Poteſt vniuerſam incidentem quæſtionem examinare, &c. Hee before whom any principall cauſe is brought, may examine euery queſtion incident: But ſo cannot an Eccleſiaſticall perſon, examine euery matter that falleth in queſtion in the caſe of Matrimonie. Secondly, Ibid. leg. 3. Valerianus: Ciuilis quæſtio & incidens criminalis eadem ſententia terminantur, &c. A ciuill queſtion and criminall falling into it, are ended with the ſame ſentence: But Eccleſiaſticall perſons haue nothing to doe with Ciuill cauſes, as with matters of inheritance, debts, dowries, which are incident into Matrimoniall cauſes: Ergo, neither the iudgement of the crimes belongeth to them. Thirdly, Cod.lib.3.tit.26. leg.3. Antonin. Cui denegatur executio, denegatur pronuntiatio: To whom the execution is denied, the pronouncing alſo or giuing of the ſentence is denied: But Eccleſiaſticall perſons cannot execute the law in Matrimoniall offences, as in puniſhing of their bodie, or goods: Ergo, neither doth the ſentence originally and properly appertaine vnto them. They being incompetent perſons of themſelues, are made competent by the conſtitution of Princes: as the law ſaith, Cod.lib.3.tit.13. leg.5. Arcad. Principis oraculum incompetentem iudicem facit competentem: The oracle of the Prince maketh an incompetent Iudge competent.

THE EIGHT QVESTION, OF THE CEREmonies and rites of Matrimonie.

The Papiſts.

THe Ieſuite reckoneth vp ſeuen. Firſt, they which are to be ioyned in Matrimonie, are bleſſed of the Prieſt. Secondly, oblation is made for them in the ſacrifice of the Maſſe. Thirdly, they are couered with a vaile. Fourthly, they are coupled together vitta purpurea & candida, with a ſcarfe or riband, partly white, partly purple. Fiftly, the Bride giueth to the Bridegroome a ring, firſt hallowed and bleſſed of the Prieſt. Sixtly, he commendeth them to God in his prayers. Seuenthly, hee exhorteth and admoniſheth them of their mutuall dutie, Bellarm.cap.33.de Matrimon. 100. Error.

The Proteſtants.

SOme of thoſe rites we altogether allow and vſe them our ſelues, as the 6. and 7. for both prayers are made vnto God for them, and they are by the Miniſter put in minde of their dutie: and all is done with vs in the vulgar tongue, much more to the edifying of the people, and comfort of the parties themſelues: whereas their idolatrous Prieſt chattereth all in an vnknowne tongue: A goodly exhortation ſure, when the parties exhorted vnderſtand not one word thereof.

Some other of theſe rites we vtterly reiect, as the 2. 3. 4. for oblation or ſacrifice, in their meaning, we acknowledge none: for the married parties to receiue the Communion, if there be a ſufficient number, we neither hold it neceſſarie as being of the eſſence of marriage, nor yet thinke it vnmeete.

But as for that coloured and painted attire of blew and white, we take it fitter for a May-game, then to be ſhewed in a ſolemne aſſemblie of Chriſtians.

Nichol.1.de Matrim.can.4. Vt ligaturam auream, vel argenteam, vel ex quolibet metallo compoſitam, quando nuptialia fœdera contrahunt, in capitibus non deferant: That they weare no billament or plate of gold or ſiluer in their heads, when they celebrate the Matrimoniall contract. Yet ſuch ornaments were more ſeemely, than ſuch gue-gawes, and toyes of blew and white.

Colonienſ.part.7.cap.47. Ludicra illa, quæ in templis poſt benedictionē ſacerdotalem fieri conſueuerunt, veluti in pulſando ſponſo, atque alia eiuſdem generis penitus tollentur: nam res ſeria, quam Deus ipſe inſtituit, agitur: Thoſe light toyes which are accuſtomed to be done in the Church, after the bleſſing of the Prieſt vpon the married couple, as in ſmiting of the Bridegroome, and ſuch like, muſt be left: for a ſerious matter of Gods owne inſtitution is in hand.

Cod.lib.5.tit.4.tit.21.Thedodoſ. Milites ſine antiqua ſolennitate, &c. Souldiours haue licence to contract Matrimonie without the ancient ſolemnitie. Ibid.leg.22. Si pompa aliaque nuptiarum celebritas omittatur, &c. If the pompe and celebritie of marriage be omitted, nothing is wanting to the firmnes or ſurenes of marriage: Ergo, by the Ciuill law ſuch toyes and vaine pompe are not required, nor neceſſarie.

The reſt we in part allow, as the Ring, ſo it be vſed onely as a ciuill ornament, and token of mutuall loue: but that popiſh bleſſing either of the Ring, or of the married couple with the fingers acroſſe, and muttering of ſome few inchaunting words, as though by the very act of popiſh bleſſing, there were a ſecret vertue and qualitie of holines infuſed into the things ſo bleſſed or inchanted; we condemnne it as a ſuperſtitious toy. So we conclude, all ſuch rites in Matrimonie, as haue a comely and profitable vſe, tending to edifying, we refuſe not: the reſt we reiect, and ſend them backe to Rome, from whence they came.

THE SIXTEENTH GENERALL CONTROVERSIE,

OF CONFIRMATION, ORDERS, EXTREAME VNCTION.

THE FIRST QVESTION, OF Confirmation.

THe parts of this queſtion are theſe. Firſt, whether it be a Sacrament. Secondly, of the parts thereof. Thirdly, of the Miniſter. Fourthly, of the effect of this ceremonie. Fiftly, of the rites, and whole order thereof.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER it be a Sacrament.

The Papiſts.

101.Error. THat Confirmation is properly and truly a Sacrament, it was decreed in the Tridentin.Concil. ſeſſ.7.can.1.and it is their generall opinion.

Argum. Act.8.17. They did lay their hands vpon them, and they receiued the holie Ghoſt: This impoſition of hands, together with the prayers here ſpecified, was no doubt, the Sacrament of Confirmation: for here is an outward ſigne, and a ſpirituall grace: Ergo, a Sacrament, Rhemiſt. ibid.Bellarm.de Confirmat.lib.2.cap.2.

Anſ. Firſt, theſe were miraculous gifts of the holie Ghoſt, as the gifts of tongues, of prophecying, healing, which were beſtowed vpon the Diſciples, whereof the impoſition of hands was a ſigne at that time: but it is impoſsible to ground an ordinarie and perpetuall Sacrament vpon an extraordinarie example: and that they were ſuch viſible graces of the ſpirit, it appeareth, becauſe Simon Magus ſaw that the holie Ghoſt was giuen them by laying on of hands.

Secondly, the holie Ghoſt was obtained by their prayers, verſ.15. and not by the very laying on of hands.

Thirdly, to make a Sacrament, it is not enough to haue a viſible ſigne, and to ſhew ſome ſpirituall grace therewith to be beſtowed: for then the ſpittle and clay that Chriſt vſed, the napkins alſo and partlets, which were carried to the ſicke from the Apoſtles, and they were healed preſently: all theſe ſhould be ſacraments; for here are outward ſignes, and ſome effect followed: yet becauſe there was no inſtitution of a ſacrament by Chriſt, nor any commaundement to vſe them, neither theſe, nor the impoſition of hands can be a ſacrament.

Fourthly, the Apoſtles had an eſpeciall commaundement to impoſe hands, and a ſpeciall promiſe by laying on of hands to giue the holy Ghoſt, which we now haue not.

Fiftly, ſeeing the extraordinarie giftes, which the Apoſtles beſtowed by impoſition of hands, are now ceaſed, the ceremonie in that behalfe alſo is expired.

Bellarm. anſwereth, 1. The Apoſtles gaue not only the miraculous giftes of the Spirit, but the holy ghoſt; for all did not ſpeake with tongues, 1.Corin. 12.30. but theſe gifts all the beleeuers had. 2. It cannot be ſhewed, that the Apoſtles had any ſuch ſpeciall commaundement or promiſe, but the promiſe is generally made to the Church: I will be with you to the end of the worlde. 3. Though the viſible ſignes are ceaſed, yet the inuiſible grace, which was giuen by the impoſition of hands, remaineth ſtill: Bellar.c.2.

Contra. Firſt, we 1. graunt, that by impoſition of hands, the Apoſtles gaue both inuiſible graces and viſible ſignes together, not the one without the other: this notwithſtanding it was an extraordinarie worke of the Apoſtles, and no good ground for an ordinarie ſacrament. 2. Though all beleeuers ſpake not with tongues, yet they had all in thoſe dayes ſome eſpeciall or extraordinarie gift for the confirmation of their faith, Mark.16.17. Theſe tokens ſhall follow them that beleeue, &c. 3. Yet it is cleare, that all theſe at Samaria receiued extraordinarie gifts, for they had beene baptized before and beleeued, and were partakers of the common grace: and they were ſuch graces as Simon ſaw to be giuen: therefore extraordinarie and viſible.

Secondly, it is great boldneſſe to denie, that the Apoſtles had a ſpeciall promiſe to giue the graces of the ſpirit, and a commaundement ſo to doe: for he himſelfe graunteth, Nunquam ordinariè impoſuiſſent manus, They would neuer ſo ordinarily haue impoſed their hands, if Chriſt had not ſo commaunded. 2. Ananias by the commaundement of Chriſt laid his hands vpon Paul, not to take away his blindneſſe onely (as Bellarmine boldly affirmeth) but that he might be filled with the holy ghoſt, Act.10.17. Here is both an expreſſe commaundement and promiſe. 3. Some generall promiſes were made not onely to the Apoſtles, but to the whole Church, as of Chriſts perpetuall preſence and protection: but it is very abſurd, to ſay, that the Apoſtles had no more power to giue the holy ghoſt, than others ſucceeding them haue; for this were to make all Apoſtles, which S. Paul denieth, 1.Cor.12.29.

Thirdly, if the viſible ſignes are ceaſed, which came by impoſition of hands, then haue you loſt your ſacrament, the ſacramentall effect being extinct: the inuiſible graces of the Spirite remaine, but not conferred by impoſition of hands, but by the preaching of the word, and prayers of the Church. Hitherto therefore you haue prooued no ſacrament.

The Proteſtants.

WE graunt a ceremonie of impoſition of hands vſed in the Apoſtles time, and after, ſo long as the miraculous giftes of the holy ghoſt continued in the Church: there is alſo another kind of impoſition of handes, ſuch as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, Hebr.6.2. which may haue perpetuall vſe in the Church, which is nothing elſe but a kind of prayer to be ſtrengthened by the holy ghoſt, and for the increaſe of grace. But neither this nor the other doe we hold to be a Sacrament.

Argum. 1. Euery ſacrament muſt haue his appointment from Chriſt, conſiſting both of an outward element, and the worde of inſtitution: but the Popiſh ſacrament of confirmation hath none of theſe: the element they vſe, is oyle, the word of conſecration, I ſigne thee with the ſigne of the Croſſe, and annoint thee with the Chriſme of health, in the name of the Father, the Sonne, and holy Ghoſt: but none of theſe haue their inſtitution by Chriſt or his Apoſtles any where in the new Teſtament, Act.8.19. and in other places we reade that the Apoſtles vſed impoſition of hands, but there is no where mention made of Chriſme or oyle: neither this ſuperſtitious deuiſe in vſe then, whatſoeuer the Ieſuite ſaith, being brought in long after by Sylueſter, who is reported by Damaſus to be the deuiſer of Chriſme: Ergo, it hauing no inſtitution in the Goſpell, it is no ſacrament.

Argum. 2. The Scriptures beſide that extraordinarie impoſition of hands vſed by the Apoſtles, make mention of another impoſition of hands, not as of a ſacrament by it ſelfe, but as appertaining to the ſacrament of Baptiſme, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb.6.2. The doctrine of baptiſmes and laying on of hands: this externall rite depended vpon baptiſme, it was not a ſeuerall Sacrament by it ſelfe.

To this effect alſo their owne Canon, *p.*3. *diſtin.*4. *c.*124. Nullus miniſtrorum, &c. None of the miniſters that hath power to baptize ſhould goe without Chriſme: Quia inter nos placuit ſemel in baptiſmate Chriſmari, &c. Becauſe the vſe is with vs once in baptiſme to be Chriſmed. Chriſmatis non niſi vna benedictio: Chriſme is but once bleſſed or hallowed. Here we ſee, that Chriſme, which they now vſe in confirmation, went together then with baptiſme.

Auguſtine ſaith, Manus impoſitio quid aliud eſt, quàm oratio ſuper hominem? The impoſition of the hands, what elſe is it but prayer ouer a man? He ſaith not, it is a ſacrament. De Baptiſm. lib.3.c.16.

Deuſdedit. Papa decret. Scitis quia quomodo ſunt 7. dona ſpiritus ſancti, ita ſunt ſeptem dona baptiſmi, à primo pabulo ſacrati ſalis, & ingreſſus ſanctæ Eccleſiæ, vſque ad confirmationem ſpiritus ſancti per Chriſma: Yee know, that as there are ſeuen gifts of the holy Ghoſt, ſo there are ſeuen gifts of baptiſme, from the firſt ſpirituall nouriſhment of hallowed ſalte, and the entrance to the Church, vnto the confirmation of the holy Ghoſt by oyle. Here confirmation is but a part of Baptiſme, and therefore not a ſacrament of it ſelfe.

Concil. Arelatenſ. ſub Carolo. can. 18. Vt presbyteri ſub ſigillo chryſma cuſtodiant, genus enim ſacramenti eſt: That the Prieſts keepe the chriſme vnder ſeale, for it is a kind of ſacrament: Confirmation miniſtred with chriſme is a kind of ſacrament, that is, after a ſort, properly it is not.

In this cauſe ſuffered Maſter Benbridge holy martyr, for denying Confirmation to be a Sacrament, or that the Biſhop doth giue grace thereby, pag.2046.col.2.artic.3.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE MATTER and forme of Confirmation.

The Papiſts.

102.Error. THe matter of this popiſh Sacrament, they ſay, is oyle mixed and tempered with balme, *Rhemiſt. Act.*8. *Sect.*6. Firſt hallowed and conſecrated by the Miniſter thereof, and ſtriked in manner of a croſſe vpon the forehead of him that is to be confirmed, *Bellar.c.*8.

Argum. 2. Corinth. 1. 21. It is God which eſtabliſheth vs, or confirmeth vs with you in Chriſt, and hath annointed vs. Here the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of confirmation, and of the materiall part thereof, which is holy vnction, or annointing: and this holy chriſme was prefigured by that precious ointment, Exod. 30. wherewith the tabernacle and the prieſts were annointed: Bellar. ibid.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt, the Apoſtle ſaith not, Which hath confirmed, but, Which doth confirme: which if it were meant of that externall ceremonie of confirmation, ſee what iniurie you offer to the Apoſtle, that being a confirmer of others, hee had neede now to be catechized and confirmed himſelfe. Againe, he ſpeaketh not of confirmation wrought by the miniſterie of men: but God (ſaith he) confirmeth vs, that is, eſtabliſheth vs by his ſpirit.

2 It is too too groſſe to vnderſtand by this annointing, your greazie beſmeering mens faces with your Chriſme, ſeeing the Apoſtle expoundeth himſelfe in the next verſe, Hee hath ſealed vs, and giuen the earneſt of his ſpirit in our hearts, verſ. 22. Of this holy annointing of our hearts by the ſpirit, Saint Iohn alſo maketh mention, ſaying, This annointing teacheth you all things, 1. Epiſt. 2. 27. But doth the annointing of the face I pray you, giue men inſtruction?

3 S. Ambroſe thus expoundeth S. Paul of the ſpirituall annointing: Chriſtus confirmat gentes in fide promiſſa, &c. Chriſt confirmeth the Gentiles in the faith promiſed to the Iewes, &c. he hath annointed vs, giuing vs regiam honorificentiam, a kingly honour: as Peter ſaith, we are genus regale, of a royall kind: per vnctionem ſpiritualem, by the ſpirituall annointing: who hath alſo ſigned vs, dando ſpiritum ſuum nobis pignus, giuing his ſpirit as a pledge, that we ſhould not doubt of his promiſes: Ambroſ. in 1. Cor. 2.

Tractat in Epiſt. Ioh. 4. Let vs heare Auguſtines expoſition, Chriſtus ſit in corde, vnctio ipſius ſit in corde: inſpiratio eius docet, vnctio eius docet: Let Chriſt be in your hearts, let his annointing be in your hearts: his inſpiration is his annointing: you may be aſhamed therefore, ſo groſſely to abuſe the Scripture.

And concerning the ointment of the tabernacle: firſt, it is no way anſwerable or like to the popiſh Chriſme: 1. There is no mention made of balme in that confection, Exod. 30. 33. for the word which Bellar. vrgeth, בשם beſhem, is a generall name for ſweet ſpices; by the Septuagint tranſlation, ἡδύσματα; by the vulgare Latine, aromata, ſpices: and ſo is it taken in ſcripture, Cant. 4. 16. 5. 1. But 2. admit that there was balme there, as ſome thinke, being the chiefe of the reſt, yet had they other ſweet ſpices, cynamon, calamus, caſſia: you muſt mingle theſe alſo with your Chriſme, if you will finde a type here. 3. This ointment ſerued for the prieſts; you muſt prooue then that Chriſt the high Prieſt of the newe Teſtament was thus annointed: for if it belonged not to him, neither are we to challenge it: but Chriſt was no otherwiſe annointed then by the ſpirit, Luc. 4. 18. 4. They were not to annoint any mans fleſh with that ointment, Exod. 30. 32. how then dare you preſume to lay your Chriſme vpon euery mans forehead that is confirmed.

Secondly, ſay that your Chriſme, and that ointment were in all points agreeable; who taught you to borrow ceremonies of the Iewes, ſeeing they were but types and ſhadowes, but the bodie is in Chriſt? Coloſſ. 2. 17.

Argum.* 1. As for your oyle therefore mixed with balme: Firſt, the true balme you knowe is not to be had, and therefore you abuſe the people: As it may appeare, Epiſt. 2. Fabiani ad Orientales: in the which Epiſtle he reprooueth them for not renewing the Chriſme euery yeare: Dicunt enim nec balſamum per ſingulos annos non poſſe reperiri: For they alledged, that they could not get the right balme euery yeare: If they of the Eaſt countrey could not get it where it groweth, how ſhould it come into the Weſt parts? Plinie alſo ſaith, that the balme, which grew but in two places of Iudæa, is periſhed: yet Bellarmine controuleth him, and ſaith, that there is a kind of balme brought from India, beſide that which vſed to grow in Iudæa: yet by Bellarmines leaue it cannot be that balme, which grew in Iudæa, which he ſaith the Apoſtles vſed. And Plinie may be credited for this matter, being a curious ſearcher out of the ſecrets of nature. Secondly, make the beſt of it you can, it is but a Iewiſh ceremonie. Thirdly, your benediction of it, is but a kind of magicall inchantment, ſeeing you haue no word of God to conſecrate creatures in that ſort: for all things are ſanctified by the word of God and prayer: Ergo, without the warrant of God, there is no ſuch ſanctifying of creatures. Lib. 12. c. 25.

Argum.* 2. Act. 10. 44. the holy Ghoſt is giuen without any Chriſme, Act. 8. 17. 19. 5. the Apoſtles layde on their handes, but vſed no chriſme: Ergo, your chriſme hath no ground out of Scripture. Kemnitij argum.

Bellarm. 1. In the firſt place alleaged, the holy Ghoſt was giuen by the ſingular priuiledge of God without a Sacrament. 2. Where mention is made of impoſition of handes, chriſme alſo is vnderſtood: as where the Apoſtles are ſaid to baptize in the name of the Lord Ieſus, Act. 19. 5. both the father and the ſonne are vnderſtood: and where the Apoſtle ſaith, We are ſaued by the lauacre of regeneration, he vnderſtandeth alſo the word; though he make no mention of it: Bellar. c. 9. reſponſ. ad argum. 1.

Contra. Firſt, though 1. the holy Ghoſt came vpon them while Peter preached, Act.10.44 yet this is no ſingular or extraordinarie priuiledge, but the vſuall effect of the preaching of the word: as we may ſee in Lydia, Act.16.& faith ordinarily cōmeth by hearing, Rom.10.17. 2. And though the ſpirite was giuen without and before the Sacrament, yet preſently for their further confirmation, they were baptized, but not confirmed with chriſme: ſo here is a Sacrament miniſtred vnto them, to their further aſſurance and confirmation, but none other, then the Sacrament of Baptiſme.

Secondly, 1. we do not doubt, but that the Apoſtles baptized in the name of the whole Trinitie, though compendiouſly the name of Ieſus be expreſſed, becauſe they were commanded ſo to do: that although mention be not made there of the Father, Sonne and holy Ghoſt, yet in other places there is, Matth.28.19. 2. And S. Paul alſo elſewhere ioyned the word with the waſhing of water, Epheſ.5.25. and in the very ſame place it followeth, by the waſhing of water and renewing of the holy Ghoſt; whereby the operation of the word is ſignified: ſo then if in any other place of Scripture, you could finde your chriſme to haue beene vſed by the Apoſtles with impoſition of hands, though they be not euery where ioyned together, it might ſeeme probable, that you ſay: but this you are not able to do, therefore theſe examples are friuolouſly alleaged.

Thirdly, whereas Bellarmine doubteth not to ſay that the Apoſtles vſed Chriſme: other Papiſtes more honeſtly denie it, being conuinced with euidence of Scripture: as ſynod. Moguntin. c.18. Sacramentum confirmationis ab initio ſola manuum impoſitione exhibitum: The Sacrament of Confirmation in the beginning was onely exhibited with impoſition of handes.

Decret. Gregor. lib.1. tit 16 c.1. Innocent.3. Confirmationis ſacramentum non debet in eo iterari, qui per errorem fuit non chriſmate, ſed oleo, delinitus: The Sacrament of confirmation muſt not be iterated in him, which by error was annointed with oyle, and not with chriſme: Ergo, chriſme is not neceſſarie to confirmation.

Some of the popiſh writers affirme, that balme, whereof their chriſme is made, is not neceſſary ad eſſentiam Sacramenti, to the eſſence of the Sacrament: Caietan. 3. par. qu 72. artic.2. Dominic. a Soto. lib.4. ſentent. diſt.7. qu.1. art.2. ſynod. Arauſican. cap.1. Qui in baptiſmate Chriſmatus fuerit; in confirmatione ſacerdos commonebitur: nam inter nos Chriſmatis ipſius, non niſi vna benedictio eſt: Hee that was chriſmed, or annoynted in Baptiſme, muſt admoniſh the Prieſt thereof in confirmation (that he be not annoynted againe) for with vs chriſme is but once bleſſed and vſed. He then that was baptized with chriſme, was confirmed without chriſme: This Chriſme then and conſecrate oyle, was not the matter of confirmation.

The Papiſts.

2. THe forme of Confirmation is in the words which are pronounced, I ſigne thee with the ſigne of the Croſſe, and confirme thee with the Chriſme of ſaluation or health, in the name of the Father, the Sonne, and holy Ghoſt, Bellarm. cap.10. 103.Error.

The Proteſtants.

1. THey muſt ſhew the inſtitution of Chriſt, out of the word, for the forme of euery Sacrament: which they cannot do for this, vnleſſe they runne to their beggerly traditions, which they blaſphemouſly call the word of God vnwritten.

2. Where haue they learned, that men are confirmed and eſtabliſhed with the external annointing of oyle? ſo ſaid ſome amongſt the Coloſſians, Touch not, taſte not, handle not: to whom the Apoſtle anſwereth, Which things periſh with the vſing, and are after the commandements of men, Coloſſ.2.21.22. So is this annointing with oyle, a meere inuention of men, and hath no longer vertue or force, then in the naturall vſe thereof.

Bellarmine anſwereth: Firſt, we haue the warrant of the word for the forme of confirmation; for the Apoſtles prayed, when they layed on hands, Act.8.15. and the forme of the Sacraments conſiſteth in prayers. Secondly, the oyle is called the oyle of health or ſaluation, as Baptiſme the waſhing of the new birth, becauſe it is an inſtrument thereof, Bellarm. cap.10.

Contra. Firſt, prayer 1. is made to God, this forme is pronouneed to him that is confirmed, therefore it is not a prayer: 2. Beſide in the forme there is mention made of the ſigne of the croſſe, and of chriſme: can you fetch theſe alſo out of the Apoſtles prayer? 3. And if you make confirmation nothing els, but prayer ouer a man, we will not much ſtand with you.

Secondly, 1. we make not Baptiſme a cauſe of regeneration, as you do the oyle; but a ſeale onely thereof. 2. Neyther can yee ſhew the like inſtitution and ordinance of Chriſt for confirmation, as we can for Baptiſme.

Interrelig. cap.16. Sacramentum confirmationis initio impoſitione manuum tantū celebratum fuit, &c. The Sacrament of confirmation in the beginning was onely celebrated with the impoſition of hands: It was then no part of the forme of conſecration in thoſe dayes, to ſay, I confirme thee with the Chriſme of health, &c. for at the firſt no oyle or Chriſme was vſed, but onely the impoſition of hands.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE MINISTER of Confirmation.

The Papiſts.

104. Error. THe Papiſts are here diuided: Some thinke that the Biſhop is ſo neceſſarily the Miniſter of confirmation, that it can in no wiſe be committed to Presbyters: Sic Bouauentur. Durand. Adrian. in 4.diſtinct.7. Other of them are of opinion that it may extraordinarily be miniſtred by Presbyters, as Thomas, Marſilius, Ruhardus, Paludanus: But the Biſhop is the ordinarie Miniſter thereof by the word of God: of this ſentence is Bellarmine cap.12.

Argum. Act.8. Peter and Iohn are ſent to Samaria to lay on their handes, Philip onely baptized, if Philip could haue giuen the ſpirite, what need the Apoſtles haue beene ſent? the Apoſtles then onely confirmed: Biſhops ſucceed Apoſtles: Ergo.

Anſw. Firſt, the Apoſtles by laying on the hands, gaue the extraordinary grace of the ſpirite, therefore this place maketh not for confirmation. Secondly, none can ſucceede the Apoſtles, in their Apoſtolike and extraordinarie power in giuing the ſpirite. Thirdly, Philip gaue the holy Ghoſt alſo, though not thoſe viſible ſignes, which belong not to confirmation: for by his preaching they beleeued, and were baptized: and S. Hierome ſaith, Niſi fortè Eunuchus à Philippo Diacono baptizatus ſine ſpiritu ſancto fuiſſe credendus eſt: vnleſſe it is to be thought, that the Eunuch was baptized of Philip the Deacon without the holy Ghoſt: aduerſ. Luciferian. Fourthly, Philip was an Euangeliſt, Act.21.8. which was an office before Paſtors: Epheſ.4.11. Biſhops are the Paſtors of the Church: will they denie that to an Euangeliſt, which they yeeld to Paſtors? Laſtly, other beſide the Apoſtles were ſent to ſecond the firſt preachers, and to confirme them in their faith, as Barnabas to Antioch, Act.11.22.23.

The Proteſtants.

WE ſay with Hierome, Si hoc loco quæras, quare in eccleſia baptizatus, &c. If you aske in this place, why he that is baptized in the Church doth not but by the hands of the Biſhop receiue the holy Ghoſt? Know, that this obſeruation, Ad honorem potius eſſe ſacerdotij, quàm ad legis neceſſitatem: Is rather for the honour of the Prieſthood, then any neceſſitie of law: otherwiſe, if the holy Ghoſt onely be giuen at the prayer of the Biſhop, they are to be bewailed, which in remote places are baptized by Presbyters, and die before they are viſited of the Biſhop: Hieron. aduerſ. Luciferian. He thinketh this difference to be rather an ordinance of the Church, then any diuine inſtitution.

Argum. Ananias a diſciple of Antioch, layd his hands vpon Paul, Act.10. and at Antioch certaine Prophets and teachers layd on their hands vpon Paul and Barnabas, Act.13. and none of theſe were Apoſtles.

Bellarmine anſwereth: that Ananias laid on his hands, to heale him of his blindnes, and not to giue him the holy Ghoſt. Contr. The text it ſelfe is contrarie, Act.9.17. He put his hands vpon him, and ſaid, brother Saul, the Lord hath ſent me, that thou mighteſt receiue thy ſight, and be filled with the holy Ghoſt.

Diſtinct.95.c.1. Gregor. Vbi Epiſcopi deſunt, vt Presbyteri, &c. Where Biſhops are wanting, wee grant, that Presbyters may touch thoſe that are baptized with Chriſme in the forehead: par.3.diſtinct.4.c.119. Presbyteris, &c. It is lawfull for Presbyters to annoint thoſe that are baptized with Chriſme, whether they baptize in the preſence of the Biſhop, or without: c.125. he that doth receiue the office to baptize, muſt not go without Chriſme, decret. Gregor. lib.1.tit.4.c.4. Simplices ſacerdotes apud Conſtantinop. &c. Simple Prieſts at Conſtantinople do confirme: Concil. Florentin. ſeſſ.25. Apud Græcos, &c. Among the Greekes, Prieſts not Biſhops do vſe Chriſme: it is not therefore of any diuine inſtitution.

Bellarmine himſelfe graunteth, that the chiefe Biſhop may giue authoritie to a ſimple Prieſt to confirme, lib.1. de matrim. c.5. reſp. ad argum.13.

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE EFFICACIE and vertue of Confirmation.

The Papiſts.

105. Error. THe holy Ghoſt is giuen in confirmation, for force, ſtrength, and corroboration, againſt all our ſpirituall enemies, and to ſtand conſtantly in the confeſſion of our faith, euen to death, with great increaſe of grace, Rhemiſt. Act.8. ſect.7. And in this reſpect it giueth more aboundant grace, in ſtrengthening of vs againſt the diuell, then Baptiſme doth, Bellarm. cap.11.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, they do offer great iniurie to the ſpirite of God, tying him as it were, to their beggerly elements, which haue power, as they ſay, to conferre grace. The Scripture ſayth, The ſpirite bloweth where it liſteth, Iohn 3. The ſpirite of God is free, and is giuen without Sacraments, as well as with them: but this tradition of yours is no Sacrament: if it were, yet could it not conferre grace, as we haue proued before.

Their owne Maſter of ſentences lib.1.diſtinct.14.d. proueth that the Apoſtles themſelues gaue not the ſpirite: Orabant quippe vt veniret: They prayed that the ſpirite might come vpon them, on whom they laid their hands, they themſelues gaue it not. And againe, ibid.d. Nos accipere hoc donum,&c. We according to our meaſure may receiue this gift, effundere ſuper alios vtiq; non poſſumus: but we cannot powre it out vpon others: Ergo, Confirmation doth not conferre the holy Ghoſt.

Secondly, they do greatly deface the Sacrament of Baptiſme, making it imperfect without confirmation, ſaying, that he which is baptized, ſhall neuer be a perfect Chriſtian, vnleſſe hee be confirmed with Chriſme,; Gerſon. And that it is to be reuerenced with greater reuerence then Baptiſme: See Fulke Act.8.ſect.7. Yea, they depriue Baptiſme of the proper effect and vſe thereof, which is a ſigne vnto vs of the aſſiſtance of Gods ſpirite, to fight manfully againſt the Diuell: for by Baptiſme we are buried into the death of Chriſt, Rom.6.3. But Chriſt by his death triumphed ouer the diuell, Coloſſ.2.15. Ergo, Baptiſme is a ſigne of our victorie againſt the diuell: yet they rob Baptiſme of this honor, and giue it to confirmation. And thus they preferre their owne inuentions before the ordinance of God; no ſacrament before a Sacrament.

Tileman Heſhuſ.loc.22. error.22.

Auguſtine ſheweth, what the Sacrament of Vnction is, Vnctionis ſacramentum eſt virtus ipſa inuiſibilis; vnctio inuiſibilis, ſpiritus ſanctus: The ſacrament of Vnction, is the inuiſible vertue: the inuiſible annointing, the holy ſpirite. What is become now of your Sacrament of Vnction?

Tract.in.Epiſt.Iohan.4.

And that confirmation maketh no ſupplie, or addeth any complement to Baptiſme, their own Canons teſtifie: decret.par.3.diſtinct.5.c.2. Melchiades; Spiritus ſanctus in fonte tribuit plenitudinem ad innocentiam: The holy ſpirite in Baptiſme giueth fulneſſe tending to innocencie: Continuò tranſituris ſufficiunt regenerationis beneficia: The benefite of regeneration is ſufficient to thoſe that preſently paſſe out of the world: ibid.c.5. In the vnction in Baptiſme is ſignified deſcenſio ſpiritus ad habitationem, the deſcending of the ſpirite to dwell with vs: If then by Baptiſme we haue innocencie, and the ſpirit dwelling in vs, how is it not perfect and abſolute without confirmation?

THE FIFT PART, OF THE RITES and ceremonies of Confirmation.

The Papiſts.

106.Error.

THe ceremonies which they commonly vſe in Confirmation, are theſe. Firſt, the Biſhop muſt breathe vpon the pot or cruze of Chriſme. Secondly, hee ſaluteth it in theſe wordes, Aue ſanctum Chriſma: Haile holy Chriſme. Thirdly, he giueth a kiſſe. Fourthly, he ſtriketh him that is confirmed with his hand, to teach him patience. Fiftly, his forehead is bound about, leaſt the Chriſme ſhould runne downe, which teacheth him not to loſe the grace of God. Sixtly, ſeuen daies together he muſt neither waſh his head nor face. And theſe with ſuch like ridiculous toyes, are practiſed amongſt them, Bellarm.cap.13.lib.de confirmat.

The Proteſtants.

1. SOme of theſe ceremonies wee condemne as ridiculous: as the breathing vpon the oyle, the ſtriking of the partie confirmed, which light geſtures become not the grauitie of the Miniſters of the Goſpell: all things ſhould be done in the Church in decent and comely order, 1.Corinth.14.40. Concerning this light geſture of ſtriking, the like whereof was vſed in the celebration of Matrimonie, we heard before the iudgement of the Councell of Cullin: how it is counted, inter res ludicras, among ridiculous and wanton toyes. Concil. Colonienſ. part.7.cap.47. vid.ſupra, contro.15.quaeſt.7. In the like caſe, in the emancipation, or ſetting of men free, they did vſe to ſtrike them: which fooliſh vſe was corrected by the imperiall lawe, Cod.lib.8.tit.49.leg.6. hee biddeth, Iniurioſa raphiſmata, ſuch iniurious ſtrokes to be left, quorum nullus rationabilis inuenitur exitus, of the which there can be no reaſonable end: Iubemus circuitu huiuſmodi in poſterum quieſcente,&c. we will ſuch toyes and circumſtances to ceaſe. If in a ciuile acte ſuch ridiculous toyes were inhibited, how much more vncomely are they in an act of religion? Secondly, one of them is meerely idolatrous, to ſalute the oyle, as the Angell ſaluted Mary, to ſay, Aue, All haile vnto it, making an idoll of it, being a thing without ſenſe or life. Thirdly, all of them are ſuperſtitious, hauing myſticall and typicall ſignifications and ſhadowes, which agreeth not with the nature of the Goſpell: for all ſhadowes are now paſt, the body being come, Col.2.17. Laſtly, they are ſuperfluous, cumberſome, and burdenous, as Auguſtine ſaith: Ipſam religionem, quam Deus pauciſ- ſimis ſacramentis liberam eſſe voluit, oneribus premunt. They oppreſſe religion with the burden of ceremonies, which God hath left free in fewe ſacraments. Againe, who ſeeth not how thus by their owne traditions they doe euacuate the ordinance of God? for in ſtead of catechizing and inſtructing of the youth in the principles and foundation of religion, as of repentance from dead workes, faith toward God, of the reſurrection and eternall iudgement, Hebr. 6. 2, 3. they haue brought in nothing elſe, but oyling, greazing, annointing of them, breathing vpon them, croſſing, and ſuch like: And whereas S. Paul giueth parents a charge to bring vp their children in the inſtruction of God, Epheſ. 6. 4. they bid them bring their children to be annointed, croſſed, and chriſmated, as they call it, and they haue done enough.

Againſt theſe ridiculous ceremonies we haue the iudgement and determination of the Councell of Mentz, cap. 18. Sacramentum confirmationis ab initio ſola manuum impoſitione exhibitum: nam cum initio Spiritus ſanctus, ad euidentiorem recentis adhuc fidei confirmationem, ſigno viſibili influeret confirmatis, externa vnctione tum opus non erat: The ſacrament of confirmation in the beginning was exhibited onely with laying on of hands: for whereas the holy ſpirit then for the more euident confirmation of faith, did appeare by euident ſignes in thoſe, that were confirmed, there was no need then of outward anointing. At the firſt, the Apoſtles vſed nothing, but impoſition of hands: all the reſt of the ceremonies came in ſince by men. And this decree maketh directly againſt the Ieſuite, who will needs beare vs in hand, that the Apoſtles vſed oyle and Chriſme togither, with impoſition of hands: which is but his braine-ſicke coniecture, without any ground.

This truth hath that holy martyr of God Iohn Huſſe, ſealed with his blood: Leuis & breuis confirmatio epiſcoporum cum ritibus ſolennizata, eſt à diabolo introducta: The light and briefe confirmation of Biſhops ſolemnized, with the ſuperſtitious rites thereof, ſeemeth to haue been brought in by the deuill. Quantum ad oleum, quo epiſcopi vngunt pueros, & peplum lineum, quod complexum eſt capiti, videtur, quod ſit ritus leuis: And as for the oyle, wherewith the Biſhops annoint boyes, and the linnen vaile bound to their head, it ſeemeth to be a ridiculous faſhion: For thus ſaying, and boldly vttering his conſcience, this good man was condemned in the Councell of Conſtance, ſeſſ. 15.

THE SECOND QVESTION, of Orders.

THe ſeuerall parts of this queſtion, are theſe: Firſt, whether it be a Sacrament. Secondly, of the materiall part thereof. Thirdly, of the efficacie and vertue thereof. Fourthly, of the ceremonies.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER THE RECEIuing of Orders be a Sacrament.

The Papiſts.

107. Error. THat holy Orders are a ſacrament rightly and properly ſo called, it was decreed in the Tridentine Councell, Seſſ. 23. canon. 3. And that not onely the three higher degrees, of Prieſthood, Deaconſhip, Subdeaconſhip, but the foure inferiour orders, of Exorciſtæ, Acoluthi, Lectores, Oſtiary, do belong vnto the ſame ſacrament of orders, and are ſacraments as well as the other, Bellar. cap. 8. lib. de ſacram. ordinis.

Argum. 1 Timoth. 4. 14. Deſpiſe not that gift which was giuen thee through Propheſie, with the laying on of hands. Holy orders giue grace by an externall ceremonie and worke: Ergo, it is a Sacrament, Rhemiſt. in hunc locum.

Anſ. 1. It cannot be prooued out of this place, that impoſition of hands giueth grace: for this was an extraordinarie gift which S. Paul ſpeaketh of, and doth not alwaies follow impoſition of hands. Secondly, this gift was not giuen by the very ceremonie of impoſition of hands, but through propheſie and reuelation of the holy Ghoſt: for it was reuealed vnto the Church by the ſpirit of Propheſie, that Timothie was a choſen veſſell of God: therefore Saint Paul ſaith, That worthie thing which is committed vnto thee, keepe through the holy Ghoſt, 2. Tim. 1. 14. The holy Ghoſt was both the conferrer of that grace, and the preſeruer of it. Impoſition then of hands was but an outward ſigne of the preſence of Gods ſpirit vpon thoſe that were lawfully ordained: for all vpon whome hands were laide, receiued not the holy Ghoſt, but ſuch onely as were appointed of God: And therefore the Apoſtle chargeth Timothie to lay hands ſodainly on no man, 1. Tim. 5. 22. which caueat was not needfull, if vpon whomſoeuer he had laid his hands, they ſhould immediatly receiue the holy Ghoſt. Thirdly, euery promiſe of grace annexed to the outward ſigne maketh not a Sacrament, but it muſt be the grace of iuſtification, ſuch as is not in orders.

Bellar. denyeth, that euery Sacrament ſerueth to iuſtification or remiſſion of ſinnes; and hee giueth an inſtance in the Euchariſt, which was not inſtituted to take away ſinne, but to conſerue and encreaſe the ſpirituall life, *Bellar.c.*2.de ſacram.ordinis.

Contra. Firſt, that the Euchariſt was inſtituted to aſſure vs of remiſſion of ſinne, it is euident by the Scriptures; for it is a ſhewing forth of the Lords death, 1.Cor.11.26. but to what end elſe dyed Chriſt, but for remiſſion of ſinnes? Againe, it repreſenteth vnto vs the blood of Chriſt, which (ſaith Chriſt in the inſtitution of this Sacrament) is ſhedde for many for remiſſion of ſinnes, Matth.26.28. Secondly, it ſerueth alſo to conſerue our ſpirituall life, which cannot be without aſſurance of forgiueneſſe of ſinnes: for 1. the life of the ſoule is faith, The iuſt ſhall liue by faith, Roman. 1.17. and our faith, is in the blood of Chriſt, Rom.2.25. And 2. what elſe is the life of the ſoule but the happineſſe thereof? But our happineſſe is this, to haue our ſinnes forgiuen, Pſalm.32.1. Bleſſed are they whoſe iniquities are forgiuen.

*Argum.*2. Deaconſhip is a Sacrament, becauſe it is giuen by impoſition of hands: *Bell.cap.*6. Subdeaconſhip likewiſe is a Sacrament, becauſe it is not reiterable; and ſo of the reſt of the inferiour orders, *cap.*7.8.

*Anſ.*1. The Ieſuites reaſon ſtandeth thus: whatſoeuer is miniſtred by laying on of hands is a Sacrament, but Deaconſhip is ſo miniſtred: Ergo, it followeth then that the little children, vpon whome Chriſt laid his hands and bleſſed them, receiued a ſacrament, Mark. 10.16. What ſacrament was it I pray you? not confirmation, for they were not yet baptized: and others, I hope, they will not ſay, they receiued: Ananias laid his hands vpon Paul, and he receiued his ſight: Act.9.17. By the Ieſuites reaſon then, the giuing of ſight, becauſe it is miniſtred with laying on of hands, ſhall be a ſacrament: for Saint Paul neither receiueth orders from Ananias, ſeeing hee was immediatly called from Chriſt; nor yet was confirmed, not being yet baptized.

Secondly, hee hath reaſoned as well for the reſt of the orders: Whatſoeuer is not reiterable (ſaith he) is a ſacrament: but the creation of the world, the drowning of the ſame by water, are workes not iterable, or to be done againe: Ergo, they ſhould be ſacraments, by the Ieſuits reaſon. 2. Orders may be iterated: *Toletan.*4.27. Clericus iniuſtè depoſitus, ſi in Synodo innocens reperiatur, non poteſt eſſe quod fuerat, niſi gradus amiſſos recipiat de manu Epiſcopi. A Clerke depoſed, if hee be cleared in the Synode, cannot be reſtored to his former ſtate, vnleſſe hee doe receiue the degree he loſt, at the hands of the Biſhop.

The Proteſtants.

YOur ſeuen Popiſh orders we doe not at all receiue into the Church, much leſſe can we abide, that they ſhould be Sacraments: The lawfull ordeining of Paſtors, Teachers, and Deacons, we doe acknowledge; but no ſacrificing Prieſthood, nor no miniſtring Deaconſhip at the Altar: ſuch orders as we haue notwithſtanding wee doe not take to bee Sacraments, properly ſo called, much leſſe yours, that are vtterly to be aboliſhed.

*Argum.*1. Sacraments muſt haue their inſtitution from Chriſt; ſo haue not your orders: for Chriſt inſtituted onely Apoſtles and Diſciples: Presbyters and Deacons were founded by the Apoſtles: who notwithſtanding had no commiſſion to conſtitute new Sacraments. As for the other fiue orders, of Subdeacons, Readers, Acoluthi, Exorciſtes, doore-keepers, they are neither read in Scripture, nor ordained of the Apoſtles, nor heard of for many yeeres after.

Our Sauiour, when he ordained Apoſtles, vſed no impoſition of hands, or did annoint them: therefore Orders giuen by impoſition of hands, is no Sacrament, becauſe it hath no inſtitution from Chriſt. We denie not, but that the miniſterie of the word is Chriſts ordinance, but that it is no Sacrament, becauſe they can ſhewe no inſtitution of the outward ſigne from Chriſt: Kemnitij.argum.

*Bellar.*1. Chriſt might make Apoſtles without impoſition of hands, becauſe he was not tyed to the Sacraments: 2. and there is nothing to the contrarie, but that he might alſo vſe impoſition of hands: 3. Further, ſeeing that in orders grace is tyed to the outward ſigne of impoſition of hands, it muſt needs be of God, for no man hath power to annexe grace to the ſigne but God: and that grace is tyed to impoſition of hands, S. Paul teſtifieth, 2. Timoth. 1.6. *Stirre vp the grace of God which is in thee by the putting on of my hands, Bellar.cap.*2.

Contra. Firſt, we doe not ſpeake of Chriſts power, that he can worke without ſacraments, but of his will in ordaining of a ſacrament: for there is no ſacrament of the new Teſtament, which is not grounded vpon his precept and example: but neither can be ſhewed for orders by impoſition. Secondly, the inſtitution of a Sacrament muſt be expreſſed in Scripture, not implyed or coniecturally collected. Thirdly, in none of the ſacraments grace is annexed to the ſigne, much leſſe in orders, which is no ſacrament: neither hath S. Paul any ſuch meaning, as I haue ſhewed before: *Reſponſ.ad argum.*1. Fourthly, an ordinance of the miniſterie by commaundement from Chriſt, we graunt, but no inſtitution of a ſacrament.

*Argum.*2. Secondly, your ſacrament hath neither outward element, nor word of inſtitution: if you ſay, laying on of hands is the externall ſigne: we anſwer, that the viſible ſigne in a ſacrament ment muſt not onely be an externall action, but a materiall element, as water in Baptiſme, and bread and wine in the Lords Supper. The forme (you ſay) is in theſe words pronounced by the Biſhop, Accipite poteſtatem offerendi ſacrificium, Receiue ye power to offer ſacrifice: Bellar..cap.9. We anſwere againe, that this ſacrificing office hath no foundation in Scripture: The Miniſters of the Goſpell are called diſpenſers of Gods myſteries; namely, of the word and Sacraments, 1.Corinth.4.1. Miniſters for Chriſt, not ſacrificers of Chriſt: wherefore neither haue yee any word of inſtitution; and conſequently no ſacrament.

And I pray you tell me, if you will make euery one of your orders a ſacrament; then muſt you needs haue as many ſacraments as there are orders: and ſo ſhall you haue ſeuen ſacraments more than you thought; and ſo fourteene in all: for you doe diſtinguiſh all the orders in office and forme of conſecration one from another: and therefore they cannot all make one ſacrament.

Bellarmine anſwereth: that all theſe make but vnum ſacramentum genere, one Sacrament in generall, though they be diuers in ſpeciall, cap. 8. Anſwere: by this reaſon, Baptiſme, Orders, Confirmation, ſhall make but one Sacrament, ſeeing they are all of one kind or gender, that is, Sacraments irreiterable. But ſeeing all theſe ſeuerall orders doe differ both in matter and forme, it cannot be auoided, but there muſt be diuers Sacraments.

Epiſt.118. cap.1. Auguſtine ſaith, Chriſtus ſacramentis numero pauciſſimis ſocietatem populi colligauit: Chriſt hath ioyned togither his people with moſt fewe ſacraments: and then he nameth Baptiſme, and the Communion: Et ſi quid aliud in Scripturis canonicis commendatur: And if any other be commended in Scripture: Ergo, there is no ſacrament of orders, becauſe it is not found in Scripture, as wee haue ſaid.

Their owne writers are againſt them: the Maſter of Sentences ſpeaking of Presbyters, ſaith, Hic ordo à filijs Aaron ſumpſit initium, This order tooke beginning from the ſonnes of Aaron: Lib.4.diſtinct.24.I. And of Exorciſts, ibid.E. Hic ordo à Salomone videtur deſcendiſſe, This order ſeemeth to haue deſcended from Salomon: Ibid.I. Eccleſia ſibi Subdiaconos & Acolythos conſtituit, The Church hath ordained Subdeacons and Acolythes: De his ſolis præceptum Apoſtoli habemus, Of theſe onely we haue the precept of the Apoſtles: ſpeaking of Deacons and Presbyters. If ſome of theſe were inſtituted before Chriſt, ſome of them ſince Chriſt and the Apoſtles, by the Church; how can they be ſacraments of the Goſpell, which muſt be inſtituted onely by Chriſt? Durandus, Caietanus, two learned Papiſts, denie the inferiour orders of Subdeacons and vnder, to be ſacraments.

This doctrine is ſealed: Laurence Maxwell perſecuted, becauſe hee denyed that the order of Prieſthood is a ſacrament. Fox.p.1041.col.2.

OF THE MATERIALL PART, OF ORDERS, which is the impoſition of hands.

The Papiſts.

108.Error. THis matter is chiefly controuerted among the Papiſts themſelues: Some of them holde, that the impoſition of hands is not an eſſentiall part of orders, but onely accidentall; as Dominicus à Soto. diſtin.24. qu.1.artic.4. Others affirme it to be eſſentiall: Petrus à Soto. lect. 5. de ordin. Hoſius. confeſſ.Polonic.c.50. whereunto Bellarm. ſubſcribeth, c.9.

Argum. In the Scripture euery where, when any are ordained, mention is made of the impoſition of hands, Act.6.6. 13.3. 1.Tim.4.14. and in other places: Ergo, it is an eſſentiall part of this ſacrament, Bellar.ibid.

Anſ. Firſt, in the election of Matthias to be one of the twelue, there was no impoſition of hands vſed, Act.1. therefore not euery where: Neither can it be anſwered, that this ceremonie was omitted, becauſe Matthias was extraordinarily called by the direction of the Spirit, for Act.13.2. Paul and Barnabas were called of the Spirit, yet they impoſe hands vpon them. Secondly, theſe places alledged, onely prooue it to be requiſite as a decent ceremonie, not neceſſarie, as an eſſentiall part, without the which there could be no ordination.

The Proteſtants.

THat impoſition of hands is a comely and decent ceremonie to be vſed of the Church in ordaining of Miniſters, we willingly graunt, and our Church doth retaine it: but we take it not to be of the eſſence of orders, as that without it, vpon no occaſion, there could be any ordination.

Argum. Chriſt, when he inſtituted his Apoſtles, breathed vpon them, he laid not on his hands: the Apoſtles caſt lottes for Matthias, no impoſition of hands is mentioned: Ergo, it is not an eſſentiall part of orders, for then it could not be omitted.

Decret.Greg.lib.1.tit.16.c.1.& c.3.Greg.9. They determine, that orders miniſtred ſine impoſitione manuum, without impoſition of hands, ſhould not be iterated: Ergo, orders may be miniſtred without it.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE EFFICACIE which they aſcribe to this Sacrament.

The Papiſts.

THis ſacrament of orders, as they call it, giueth a double grace. Firſt, it giueth thoſe that are ordained, abilitie and power to execute their office: which is to conſecrate and offer vp the bodie and blood of Chriſt; wherein chiefly the prieſthood conſiſteth, and not in preaching the word: for they may be prieſts, though they preach not, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ.23. can.1. By holy orders then the holy Ghoſt is actually beſtowed, when thoſe words are pronounced, Accipe ſpiritum ſanctum, Receiue yee the holy Ghoſt, Canon.4. 109. Error.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, the Goſpell alloweth no externall ſacrificing Prieſthood, but a ſpirituall onely, whereby euery Chriſtian is made a King and Prieſt to offer ſpirituall ſacrifices of praiſe and thankſgiuing vnto God. Apocal. 1.6. And the onely eſſentiall part of the office of Miniſters vnder the Goſpell, is, to be able diſpenſers of the myſteries of the worde and Sacraments, 1. Corinth.4.1. 2. Corinth.3.6.

So Auguſtine alſo ſaith: Quicunque aut Epiſcopus aut Presbyter frequenter de Deo loquitur, & quomodo ad vitam æternam perueniatur annunciat, meritò Angelus Dei dicitur. Whoſoeuer, Biſhoppe or Presbyter, doth ſpeake freely of God, and preacheth the way to eternall life, is an angell of God. This then is the only principall office of true Paſtors, to teach the way to the kingdome of God. In Apocal. hom. 2.

Secondly, it is alſo a great vntruth, that the holy Ghoſt is ſtraightway giuen to all thoſe, vpon whomſoeuer hands are laid, and they admitted to Orders: For what need then that triall and examination, which ought to be had of thoſe, which are to be ordained, whereof S. Paul ſpeaketh, 1. Timoth.5.22. if the only laying on of hands can make able Miniſters?

Noſtri ſacerdotes, ſaith one, ſuper multos quotidie nomen Domini & verba benedictionis imponunt, ſed in paucis effectus eſt: Our Prieſts doe lay the word of bleſſing vpon many, calling vpon the name of God, but in few followeth any effect of that bleſſing. And hee giueth the reaſon in another place, Dei eſt, effectum tribuere benedictionis: It belongeth vnto God, to giue effect to prieſtly bleſſing: Ergo, it is not by onely act and vſing of the ceremonie beſtowed. Ex veter. teſt. qu. 109. inter opera Auguſt.

Aquiſgranenſ.cap.13. Præconis officium ſuſcipit, quiſquis ad ſacerdotium accedit: He taketh vpon him the office of a preacher, that commeth to the prieſthood.

Synod.Colonienſ.part.4.cap.1. Officium Parochorum in duobus potiſſimum ſitum eſt, diſſeminatione verbi, & adminiſtratione ſacramentorum: The office of pariſh prieſts, conſiſteth eſpecially in two things: in ſowing of the word, and adminiſtration of the Sacraments.

Ibid.part.6. Verbi miniſterium ſanctiſſim. Apoſtolus cæteris omnibus præfert, &c. The moſt holy Apoſtle preferreth the word before all other things, ſaying to the Corinthians, that Chriſt ſent him to preach, not to baptize. The office then of Miniſters of the Goſpell chiefly ſtandeth in preaching.

See their owne decrees: Diſtinct.38.c.6. Subſtantia ſacerdotij vera ſcripturarum diuinarum diſciplina: The ſubſtance of the prieſthood is the true knowledge or diſcipline of the diuine Scriptures. Extrauag.commun.lib.1.tit.9.c.4. Sextus 4. calleth them buccinatores ſpiritus ſancti, the trumpetters of the holy Ghoſt and preachers of the word. Ibid.lib.5.tit.7.c.1. Benedict.11. Poſt baptiſmum inter cætera magis ad ſalutem neceſſaria eſt propoſitio verbi, &c. After Baptiſme among other things more neceſſarie to ſaluation, is the propounding of the word of God, whereby the hearers are inſtructed in the faith. What orders then call you thoſe, wherein the more neceſſarie things to ſaluation, ſuch as is the preaching of the word, are omitted?

And that orders doe not conferre grace vpon him, that is ordained, their decrees alſo teſtifie: Cauſ.2.qu.7.c.29. Non omnes Epiſcopi, Epiſcopi: All Biſhops, are not Biſhops. Ibid.c.32. Qui regiminis in ſe rationem non habet, &c. He that hath no gouernment of himſelfe, impudicus canis dicendus potius, quàm Epiſcopus, is to be counted rather an vnſhamefaſt dogge, than a Biſhop.

Extrau.Ioann.tit.14.c.5. Scientia ordinato non confertur: Knowledge is not conferred vpon him, that is ordained.

The Maſter of Sentences, lib.4.diſtinct.19.a. Multi ſacerdotes, nec ante conſecrationem, nec poſt, ſcientiam habent diſcernendi: Many Prieſts neither before their conſecration, nor after, haue the knowledge of diſcerning. How doe orders then conferre grace?

Laſtly, ſee the teſtimonie of Iohn Tewkſburie holy Martyr, who affirmed, that a Prieſt by taking orders, receiueth not more grace, vnleſſe his faith be increaſed, Fox pag.1026.col.1.

The Papiſts.

2. ANother effect of their Sacrament of Orders, they ſay, is to imprint a certaine indeleble marke and character in him that is ordained, which can neither by ſinne, Apoſtaſie, or he- 110. Error.

The Proteſtants.

Fox.pag.623.

FIrſt, the practiſe of the popiſh Church is contrarie to their owne rules: for I would haue them tell me, whether they tooke not the Prieſthood and annoynting from Iohn Huſſe, when with a payre of ſheares they clipped off the skin of his head moſt cruelly, as they were buſie in degrading of him, in the Councell of Conſtance: Or when they had groſly abuſed that reuerend Father Biſhop Cranmer, and vnmanerly behaued themſelues in his degradation, and clapt him in a poore beggerly, thread-bare, Lay-mans gowne; did they not think, that they had diſpoyled him of his prieſthood? What is now become, maſters, of your indeleble character? Or is it your meaning, that it may be clipped or ſcraped off onely, but not waſht off, or lightly rubbed away? Your owne cruell deedes doe ouerthrow your popiſh principles.

Epiſtol.50.

Auguſtine is againſt you: Conſtitutum eſt in eccleſia, ne quiſquam poſt criminis alicuius pœnitentiam clericatum accipiat, ad clericatum redeat, aut in clericatu maneat: It is a conſtitution of the Church, that no man after publike penance done for ſome notorious crime, ſhould be either made a Clerke, or returne to his Clerkſhip or prieſthood, or be ſuffered to continue therein. If his prieſthood were neither reſtored to him, nor he ſuffered to remaine therein, then ſurely hee had loſt his prieſthood.

We haue here euident teſtimonie of both lawes: *Cod.lib.*1.*tit.*6.*leg.*12. Arcad.Curialis clericans: A Courtier taking Clergie vpon him, is brought backe to his former eſtate. *Ibid.leg.*33.authentic. A ſeruant without his maſters knowledge taking orders, within a yeere may be chalenged, and muſt returne to ſerue his maſter.

*Decret.diſtinct.*54.*c.*7. A ſeruant promoted to the Clergie without his maſters conſent, amittat gradum, let him loſe his degree. *Diſt.*50.*c.*12.Martin. Lapſus poſt ordinationem nullum gradum ſacerdotij adipiſci poteſt: He that is fallen after his ordination, can haue no degree of the prieſthood. *Cauſ.*1.*qu.*1.*c.*60. Ordinatus & non baptizatus &c. Hee that is ordained and not baptized, muſt be ordained againe. *Cauſ.*11.*qu.*3.*c.*10.Nicholaus: Epiſcopi depoſiti communicent vt laici: Biſhops depoſed muſt communicate as lay men. What now is become of the indeleble character, if Clergie may be loſt, and Clerkes become lay men againe?

*Concil.Lateranenſ.part.*50.*cap.*56. Si ſeruus fraude aliqua ad ſacros ordines peruenerit, ſi dominus illum libertate non donauerit, deponendus eſt, & gradum amittat: If a ſeruant or bondſlaue by craft attaine to orders, if his maſter will not make him free, let him be depoſed, and loſe his degree of orders. Where is now your indeleble character? Concerning the indeleble character imprinted, as they ſay by orders, ſee more, *Controu.*11.*quaſt.*2.*part.*11.

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE Miniſter of Orders.

The Papiſts.

110. Error.

THey hold, that they are neither Prieſts nor Deacons, which are not ordained of Biſhops, *Bellarm.de ſacram.Ordinis.cap.*11. he meaneth popiſh Biſhops, ſuch as receiue their conſecration and other Epiſcopals from Rome: and ſuch Biſhops hee ſaith onely are Miniſters and conferrers of Orders. Arguments he vſeth none, neither alleageth any teſtimonies at large, but referreth vs to the Controuerſie of the Sacraments in generall: but hee forgetteth himſelfe; for in that place there is no ſuch thing handled: but he onely prooueth this propoſition, that verus Miniſter ſacramentorum, &c. that the true Miniſter of the Sacraments is not euery man, but he only that is lawfully ordained in the Church, *lib.*1.*de Sacram.c.*24. which propoſition we willingly graunt.

The Proteſtants.

IN this aſſertion of the Papiſts, I note three errors, as it now followeth to be ſhewed. Firſt, whereas Bellarmine affirmeth, that they are no Miniſters or Presbyters, which are not ordained by popiſh Biſhops: we doubt not to auouch the contrarie, that they are no true Presbyters that receiue ordination from ſuch: for their Biſhops are vndoubtedly the Miniſters and officers of Antichriſt: which was the very poſition maintained by Iohn Huſſe: Sunt procuratores & diſcipuli Antichriſti: Papa, Cardinales, Patriarchæ. Archiepiſcopi, Epiſcopi, &c. The Pope, Cardinals, Patriarches, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, are the proctors and diſciples of Antichriſt. One of their owne writers, ſpeaking of their Biſhops, ſaith, they are not Epiſcopi, but apoſcopi: not ouerſeers, but by-ſeers: Eſpenc.præfat.in 2.ad Timoth. Being then the officers of Antichriſt, they cannot create or ordaine Miniſters for Chriſt.

Secondly, neither is it true, that there are no Miniſters but by the ordination of Biſhops: for this were to condemne all thoſe reformed Churches, of Heluetia, Belgia, Geneua, with others, that haue not receiued this forme of eccleſiaſticall gouernment. Vndoubtedly where godly Biſhops are, there no ordination is to be had without them, as in the Church of England: but euery Church hauing not the ſame office, but others equiualent or correſpondent thereunto, hath full authoritie in it ſelfe, to ordaine Miniſters in ſuch order and manner, as the Church hath receiued, agreeable to the word of God: ſo that we doubt not but that all the reformed Churches profeſſing the Goſpell, haue true and lawfull Miniſters, though they obſerue not all the ſame manner in the election and ordaining of them. And this is the generall conſent of the Churches themſelues:

Harm.ſect.11.Heluetic.confeſſ.latter. Let the Miniſters of the Church be called and choſen, by a lawfull and eccleſiaſticall vocation or election: that is to ſay, let them bee religiouſly choſen of the Church, or of thoſe which thereunto are appointed of the Church, and that in due order.

Heluetic.confeſſ.prior.artic.16. They muſt be choſen either by the diuine ſentence of God, or by the certaine and aduiſed ſuffrage of the Church, or by their ſentence, to whom the Church hath aſſigned this charge.

Confeſſ.Bohem.c.9. They muſt be proued and tried by examination, and ſo afterward prayer and faſting being made, they may be confirmed or approued by the Elders, by laying on of hands.

Confeſſ.Gallic.artic.31. Euery one ought to be admitted thereunto by a lawfull election, ſo neere as may be; and as long, as the Lord giueth leaue, &c. Neuertheleſſe, howſoeuer it be, we beleeue, that this rule is alwaies to be followed, that all Paſtors and Elders ſhould haue a teſtimonie of their calling.

Confeſſ. Anglican. We ſay, that the Miniſter ought lawfully, duely, and orderly to bee preferred to that office of the Church of God.

Confeſſ.Belgic. We beleeue, that the Miniſters, Seniors, Deacons, ought to be called to thoſe their functions, by the lawfull election of the Church: to be aduaunced to thoſe roumes, earneſt prayer being made vnto God, and after the order and manner, which is ſet downe vnto vs in the word of God.

Confeſſ.Scotic.p.22. We affirme lawfull Miniſters to be onely they, that are appointed to the preaching of the word, &c. they being men lawfully choſen thereto by ſome Church.

This then is the iudgement of the reformed Churches, that euery Church is not tied to the ſame manner of ordination of Miniſters, ſo that it be agreeable to the word of God: but according to this rule euery Church may make choiſe of that forme and order which is moſt agreeable to their ſtate: ſo that, where the calling of Biſhops is receiued, by them Miniſters muſt enter; where there are none, the calling of the Church muſt bee followed: Our arguments and reaſons are theſe:

Firſt, out of the Scripture, Act.13.3. certaine prophets and teachers at Antioch lay hands vpon Paul and Barnabas; the Rhemiſts gather hereupon, that they were ordered, admitted and conſecrated by them: Annotat.in hunc locum: (which we ſay not, but they were onely ſent out to the execution of their office, being before choſen of the ſpirit) but hence it followeth: that as at Antioch, there being no other Apoſtles, but onely prophets and teachers, to lay hands vpon Paul, the reſt did it: ſo in thoſe Churches where there are no Biſhops, the right of ordaining Miniſters may be executed by others lawfully appointed of the Church.

Argum.2. If it were not ſo, theſe inconueniences would enſue: firſt, that all thoſe reformed Churches ſhould haue no true Miniſters, being without Epiſcopall ordination. Secondly, that they muſt either be denied to be Churches, or elſe a true Church may be without the right power of ordination, which in no wiſe is to be graunted. Thirdly, that thoſe excellent men, Luther, Melancthon, Caluin, with others, extraordinarily raiſed vp of God, for the propagation of the Goſpell, ſhould not haue been true Miniſters, becauſe they entred not by that ordination.

Argum.3. That euery Church is left to it owne libertie herein, their owne Canons teſtifie: Diſtinct.12.c.Mihi placet, vt ſiue in Romana eccleſia, &c. It liketh me well, that whether in the Romane or French, or in any other Church, you finde any thing, which may better pleaſe almightie God, you make choiſe of it. Ibid.c.13. Auguſtin. Nec eſt vlla diſciplina melior: Neither is there any better diſcipline, than for a man ſo to doe, vt viderit agere eccleſiam, as he ſeeth the Church to doe, to the which he commeth.

Thirdly, whereas Bellarmine ſeemeth to aſcribe ordination wholy to the Biſhop, hee therein is contrarie to his fellow Papiſts: as the Rhemiſts giue this note, vpon that place 1.Timoth.4.14. By the impoſition of the hands of the prieſthood, as they tranſlate it, the practiſe of the Church giueth vs the ſenſe of this place, which the ancient Councell of Carthage doth thus ſet down: When a Prieſt taketh orders, the Biſhop bleſſing him, and holding his hand vpon his head, let all the Prieſts preſent lay alſo their hands on his head by the Biſhops hands, &c. Concil.Carthag.4.c.3. This interpretation is receiued by Ioann.Gropperus in Iſagoge, and allowed by Eſpencæus vpon this place.

Their decrees doe further thus teſtifie: Diſtinct.25.c.6.Epiſcopus ſine concilio clericorum Clericum non ordinet: The Biſhop muſt not ordaine a Clerke or Miniſter without a Councell or aſſemblie of Clerkes. Diſtinct.77. Alij ſacerdotes aſſenſum præbeant: Let other Prieſts beſide the Biſhop giue their conſent. Cauſ.12.qu.2.c.38.Vrban. Ordinationes factæ ſine communi conſenſu Clericorum irritæ: Ordinations made without the common conſent of the Clerkes, are voide, &c. This alſo is agreeable to the practiſe of the Church of England, which requireth all the Presbyters preſent to lay on their hands together with the Biſhop vpon his head, that is to be ordained.

Againe, Decret.Greg.lib.1.tit.13.c.1. Alexand.3. Ordines minores à non Epiſcopis conferuntur: The leſſe orders (that is, till the Subdeaconſhip) are conferred by them that are no Biſhops. Ibid.tit.14. c.11. Innocent.3. Abbas ſi eſt preſbyter conferre poteſt ordinem clericalem: An Abbot in his Monaſterie, if he be a Presbyter may giue orders. Thus we ſee, that by their owne law, there are other Miniſters of orders beſide Biſhops.

Now becauſe I haue entred to make mention of the calling of Biſhops (and there being two chiefe aduerſaries to this dignitie in our Church; the Papiſts that refuſe it as hereticall; the Schiſmatikes that condemne it as Antichriſtian) before I leaue this place, I will briefly deliuer this honorable calling, from both their ſlanders and accuſations.

THAT THE CALLING OF BISHOPS AS IT IS receiued in the Church of England, is not Antichriſtian.

IN the office and calling of Biſhops, ſomewhat is diuine; ſome things are humane; and in popiſh Biſhops there is ſomewhat Antichriſtian: theſe three points, I purpoſe by Gods grace, briefly to declare in order. Firſt then, that it is a diuine ordinance, that among the Miniſters of the Church, there ſhould be a ſuperioritie, and that one ſhould be appointed among the reſt, to whom chiefly, though not ſoly, the impoſition of hands, and adminiſtration of diſcipline did appertaine: thus I truſt to make it euident. Firſt, the Scripture euidently ſheweth, that euen among the Apoſtles themſelues there was a certaine order obſerued: as Galath.2.10. Iames, Peter, Iohn, were counted as the chiefe, and as the pillars among the reſt: as Act.15. the aſſemblie of Apoſtles and Elders was moderated by Iames and Peter. And to this purpoſe ſpeaketh Cyprian. de ſimplic. Cler. The ſame doubtleſſe were the reſt of the Diſciples, that Peter was, hauing an equall fellowſhip with him, both in honor, and power: but the beginning thereof proceedeth from vnitie, to ſignifie to vs, that there is but one Church. Againe, who doubteth but that the twelue Apoſtles were in office and calling ſuperiour to the 70. Diſciples, which were alſo ſent forth to preach, Luk.10.1. for elſe what needed another to be choſen in Iudas roome, and namely Mathias, ſuppoſed by the ancient writers to haue been one of the ſeuentie, if the Apoſtles office had not been greater? If there had been an equalitie, a ſupplie had not been neceſſarie: neither had it been requiſite or fit to remoue Mathias from his Diſcipleſhip to an office of the ſame equalitie.

Beſide, the ſeuen Epiſtles written to the ſeuen Churches of Aſia, Reuel.2.3. are directed to the Angels, which are the chiefe paſtors of the Churches, who are in the name of the whole Church blamed and commended, as in whoſe hands the Eccleſiaſticall diſcipline chiefly conſiſted. Saint Paul alſo writeth to Timothie, as the chiefe paſtor in Epheſus, to whom chiefly the impoſition of hands appertained, 1.Tim.5.22. Lay hands ſuddenly on no man: vpon the which place, Beza thus noteth, notandum eſt, it is to be noted out of this place, that Timothie was in the Epheſine presbyterie or Miniſterie, προεστῶτα, the Preſident, or chiefe Paſtor: And to omit here the teſtimonie of the fathers, who all with one conſent affirme Timothie to haue beene Biſhop of Epheſus, the ſame is affirmed by the reformed Church of Bohemia, in their confeſſion, Harm. ſect. 11. In like ſort Paul writeth to Timothie a Ruler and a Biſhop.

2. Secondly, concerning the difference and ſuperioritie of Biſhops, wee haue plentifull euidence from the ancient Church: Can. Apoſtol.13. Epiſcopus &c. The Biſhop muſt not leaue propriã Parochiam, his proper Church or pariſh; ſo then was his dioceſſe called: Carthag.4.can.35. Epiſcopus &c. The Biſhop muſt ſitte higheſt in the aſſemblie of the Presbyters: Cyprian.lib.4.epiſtol.9. Chriſtus dicit ad Apoſtolos, &c. Chriſt ſaith to his Apoſtles, and conſequently to all gouernors, præpoſitos, which ſucceede the Apoſtles vicaria ordinatione, as their Vicars or deputies by ordination: Hieron. ad Ruſticum: Singuli eccleſiarum Epiſcopi, &c. In euery Church but one or a ſingle Biſhop, one archpresbyter, one archdeacon, &c. as in a ſhip but one gouernour, in an houſe one maſter; in an armie, one Captaine. Ambroſe in 1. Timoth.3. after a Biſhop he ſetteth the ordination of a Deacon, and why? becauſe there is but one ordination of a Biſhop and a Presbyter, for each of them is a Prieſt: Epiſcopus tamen inter Preſbyteros primus: But a Biſhop is the firſt or chiefe among the Presbyters. But the teſtimonies of the fathers concerning the antiquitie of Biſhops is infinite: who liſteth to ſee further, I referre him to the learned treatiſe of a reuerend writer of our Church, written of the perpetuall gouernement of Chriſts Church.

B.Bilſon.c.13. p.263. & deinceps.

3. Thirdly, let vs ſee the conſent of the reformed Churches, and the writers thereof. M. Caluin epiſtol.87. written to the Lord Protector of England, Epiſcopi & parochi &c. Let the Biſhops and the pariſh Miniſters be eſpecially intent, that the Supper of the Lord be not polluted: epiſtol.190. To the King of Polonia: Eſſent deinde vel prouinciales, &c. If there were prouincial or citie Biſhops, which ſhould eſpecially be intent to conſerue order, as nature teacheth, that one ſhould be choſen ſen out of euery college, to whom the chiefe care ſhould belong : and epiſt.199. Fratres noſtri Epiſcopi, &c. Our brethren the Biſhops of England are deteyned in priſon: So farre was this godly learned man from counting our Biſhops Antichriſtian, that he giueth them the name of brethren. Likewiſe M. *Beza This was eſſentiall in the matter we haue in hand, that by Gods perpetuall ordinance it hath beene, is, & ſhall be neceſſarie, that ſome in the presbyterie, firſt in place and dignitie ſhould moderate and rule euery action, with that right which by Gods law is giuen vnto him: in reſponſ. ad tract. de Miniſtror. gradib. c.23. fol.*153. So alſo the reformed Church of Sueueland confeſſeth : Such as haue an earneſt care for the flocke of Chriſt, and do labour faithfully in the word and doctrine, &c. are acknowledged of our Preachers for true Biſhops; ſuch as the Scripture euery where ſpeaketh of. Thus it appeareth, that to haue ſuperioritie among the Miniſters of the Goſpel, that one ſhould be chiefe and aboue the reſt, is by Scripture, conſent of the ancient and new reformed Churches found to be diuine and Apoſtolicall.

Secondly, I affirmed ſomewhat in the calling of Biſhops, to ariſe rather of humane conſtitution, than of diuine preſcription : as it appeareth by theſe particulars following.

1. Firſt, that Biſhops were ſubiected to their Primates and Metropolitanes, was an ordinance of the Church : as Hierom teſtifieth lib. de 7. ordinibus ; or who els is the author : Propter hoc & nuper, &c. For this cauſe the Epiſcopall election of late was referred to the Metropolitane, &c. and the chiefe Prieſts begin not of right, but of neceſſitie to ſuffer another Prieſt ouer them.

2. *Concil. Aquiſgranenſ. c.*8. It is thus alleadged out of Iſidore, Solam propter authoritatem, &c. Onely for authorities ſake to the chiefe Prieſt is reſerued the ordination of Clearkes, &c.

3. In the ſame place, Conſecratio virginum, the conſecration of virgines is for the ſame cauſe reſerued alſo : but this is now out of vſe in our Church.

4. Of the ſame ſort is confirmation, as Hierome witneſſeth, aduerſ. Luciferian. Si hoc loco quæras, &c. If thou aske in this place, wherefore he that is baptized receiueth onely the holy Ghoſt by the hands of a Biſhop, know, that this obſeruation is rather for the honour of the Prieſthood, then neceſſitie of any law.

5. Hierome againe in the ſame place, Inde venit, &c. From thence it commeth, that is to auoid ſchiſme, that without the Biſhop bid, neyther a presbyter or deacon may baptize : but this vſe, as very iniurious to the office of Miniſters, is diſcontinued in our Church.

6. The titles of honor giuen to Biſhops haue the ſame beginning as Auguſtine witneſſeth epiſtol.19. ad Hieronym. Secundum honorum vocabula, according to the names of honor, which eccleſiaſticall vſe hath obtained, a Biſhops office is greater than a Prieſts.

7. Of the ſame kind are the poſſeſſions and reuenues of Biſhops, as Auguſtine ſaith, Vix vigeſima particula &c. That portion which I had from my parents, is hardly the 20. part in compariſon of the mannors of the Church, which I am held now as Lord to enioy, epiſt.5.

8. The diſtinction alſo and diuiſion of Dioceſſes is grounded vpon the ancient cuſtome of the Church : decret. part.2. cauſ.9. qu.3. c.2. Vnumquemq; Epiſcopum, &c. It behooueth euery Biſhop to haue power ouer his owne Dioceſſe, and of the region which is vnder his citie : ex Concil. Antiochen.

9. Certaine cauſes as matrimoniall and teſtamentarie haue by the fauour of Chriſtian Emperours beene reſerued to Biſhops, as *Cod. lib.1. tit.6. leg.*28. Anthemius thus decreed : That where there is no executor appointed, the Biſhop ſhall diſtribute the goods.

10. Hierome ſaith, in 1. cap. epiſt. ad Titum. That whereas at the firſt Presbyters with common aduice, and equall care guided the Church vnder the Apoſtles, Paulatim ad vnum, &c. the whole care thereof was by little and little deriued to one. To this it is further thus added by a reuerent learned man, now a B. of our Church : So at length by cuſtome Presbyters were vtterly excluded from all aduice and counſell, whereof Ambroſe complayneth, and Biſhops onely intermedled with the regiment of the Church: this manner of ſubiection in Presbyters, and prelation in Biſhops grew onely in continuance of time, and not by any ordinance of Chriſt or his Apoſtles: See more of this matter, Contr.5. qu.3. part.2. of the difference of Miniſters.

B.Bilſon.c.12. p.237.

Theſe and other ſuch like additions, priuiledges and increaſing of the dignitie of Biſhops, grounded rather vpon cuſtome then any commandement, do not yet make that function vnlawfull or Antichriſtian : To this wee haue the conſent of other reformed Churches : *Harm. ſect.*11. Confeſſion of Sweueland ; Our Preachers haue great iniurie offered them, in that they are blamed, as though they ſought to bring the authoritie of eccleſiaſticall Prelates to nothing, whereas they neuer forbadde them, that worldly gouernement, and authoritie, which they haue; but they haue often wiſhed, that they would come neerer the eccleſiaſticall commandements, &c. ſect.16. confeſſ. Auſpurg. We do not goe about to weaken the authoritie of eccleſiaſticall power, we detract nothing from the dignitie of Biſhops, wee do not diſturbe the good order of the Church : Againe, *ſect.*17. in the confeſſion of Auſpurg. The Churches do not deſire of the Biſhops, that they would repayre peace and concord with the loſſe of their honour, which yet good Paſtors ought to do, onely they deſire, that they would remit vniuſt burdens, &c. If the calling then of Biſhops were Antichriſtian, all theſe Churches ſhould be no leſſe, that allow them.

3. Thirdly, I will now in the third place ſhewe the difference betweene Proteſtant Biſhops, and Popiſh Biſhops, that it way appeare wherein indeed theſe are worthily counted Antichriſtian.

1. Popiſh Biſhops receiue their power from the Beaſt, and doe fight vnder Antichriſts banner: ſo doe not our Biſhops, who expect not any forraine ordination, but are made ouerſeers by the ſpirit of God, directing & gouerning euery true Church, according to the Scriptures, Act. 20. 28.

2. Popiſh Biſhops are maintainers of corrupt doctrine, and enemies to the faith, contrarie to the Scriptures, Tit. 1. 9. Saint Paules biſhop muſt hold faſt the faithfull word according to doctrine: So are our Biſhops defenders and preachers of the truth.

3. Popiſh Biſhops for the moſt part are vnlearned and vnpreaching Prelates, and iuſtified herein by their owne writers, Rhemiſt. annot. in 1. Tim. v. 17. contrarie to the Scriptures: A biſhop muſt be apt to teach, 1. Timoth. 3. 2. But our Biſhops are preachers; there is not one at this day in the Church of England, but is both able, and doth preach: which is the moſt weightie parte, and giueth greateſt grace to their paſtorall office: for whome we doe pray, that God would giue them grace both in their life and doctrine to ſet forth his holy word: as Saint Paul warneth Timothie, Preach the worde, be inſtant, in ſeaſon, out of ſeaſon: according alſo to the Canons, Carthag. 4. can. 1. Epiſcopus, &c. A Biſhop muſt onely attend vpon reading, prayer, and preaching of the worde.

4. Popiſh biſhops muſt aſcend by ſeuen ſteppes or degrees: firſt, hee muſt be a Doorekeeper, then a Reader, then an Exorciſt, an Acolythiſt, a Subdeacon, Deacon, Prieſt, and laſt of all a Biſhop, ex decr. Gaij. But our biſhops aſcend but by two degrees, of Presbyters and Deacons, according to the Scriptures, which deſcribe the office only of Biſhops, vnder them alſo comprehending Presbyters and Deacons, as degrees of the miniſterie, 1. Tim. 3. 2. 12.

5. Popiſh Biſhops are ſuperſtitiouſly conſecrated, with the annointing of oile, they haue their mitre, pall, croſſe, crozier ſtaffe, with other ſuperſtitious ornaments contrarie to the Scripture, 1. Tim. 1. 6. Timothie was ordained onely by impoſition of handes: ſo are our Biſhops conſecrated, with impoſition of hands and prayer.

6. The popiſh Prelates doe reſerue vnto themſelues for their aduantage, many ſuperſtitious rites and cuſtomes, as to baptize belles, to dedicate Churches, to annoint with Chriſme, and ſuch like: which things Saint Paules Biſhop hath no charge of, 1. Tim. 3. neither haue our Biſhops any thing to doe with ſuch things.

7. Popiſh Prelates are as Lordes ouer their flocke, ouerruling their faith; and the Clergie and people are as their ſubiects, nay which is more, their ſlaues: contrarie to the Apoſtle, 2. Cor. 1. 24. Not that we haue dominion ouer your faith: and 1. Pet. 5. 3. Not as though ye were Lords ouer Gods inheritance. But ſo are not our Biſhops, who diſdaine not in the ordaining of miniſters, to call them brethren: as Hierome ſaith, Pontifices Chriſti, &c. We reuerence Biſhops, preaching the true faith, not with the feare of Maſters, but with the honour of Fathers; that wee may yeeld reuerence to Biſhops as Biſhops, and not vnder one name to ſerue another: Hieron. ad Theophylact.

8. Saint Paules Biſhop muſt be φιλάγαθος, a louer of good men, Tit. 1. 8. So are not popiſh Prelates, who hate to death the profeſſours of the Goſpell of Chriſt: So doe not our Biſhops; I doubt not but many among them are patrons and louers of the truth.

9. Popiſh Prelates take vpon them to diſpenſe Indulgences, to forgiue ſinnes for dayes, moneths, yeares; by their owne power to acquite and diſcharge ſinners. But our Biſhops take not vpon them to be conferrers or beſtowers of Gods graces or mercies, but according to the Scriptures, to be as Miniſters by whome the people beleeue, 1. Cor. 3. 5. as diſpoſers of the ſecrets of God, 1. Cor. 4. 1. as helpers of our ioy, 2. Cor. 1. 24.

10. Saint Paules Biſhops muſt be readie to ſuffer aduerſitie for the truth, 2. Timoth. 4. 5. ſo doe not popiſh Prelates, who haue made many martyrs, but themſelues neuer were martyrs of or for the truth: but many of our Biſhops haue been faithfull martyrs, and ſuffered for the truth, as B. Cranmer, Ridley, Hooper, Latimer, Ferrar, of bleſſed memorie.

11. Saint Pauls Biſhop beleeueth and is perſwaded, that the Scriptures ſufficiently containe all doctrine neceſſarie to ſaluation, 2. Tim. 3. 15, 17. So alſo doe our Biſhops profeſſe in their conſecration, as is euident in the booke of Orders: but ſo doe not the popiſh Prelates beleeue, neither are they ſo perſwaded, holding many vnwritten traditions neceſſarie beſide Scripture.

12. Our Biſhops doe profeſſe, when they are conſecrated, To teach nothing as required of neceſſitie to eternall ſaluation, but that they are perſwaded may be concluded, and prooued by the Scriptures: according as S. Paul ſaith to Timothie, 2. Timoth. 3. 14. Continue thou in all things, which thou haſt learned, and art perſwaded of, knowing of whome thou haſt learned them: But popiſh Prelates doe binde mens conſciences to obſerue their own traditions, as the Church of Saxonie complaineth in their confeſſion: The Biſhops take to themſelues authoritie to ordaine new kindes of worſhip, and to bind conſciences, Harmon. ſect. 17.

13. Saint Paules Biſhop is required to be ſober, watching, modeſt; ſo is it demanded of our Biſhops in their conſecration: Will you denie vngodlineſſe and worldly luſtes, and liue ſoberly? Such are not popiſh Prelates, who forcing themſelues to keepe the violent vowe of ſingle life, are many of them detected of incontinent and adulterous life: as Pope Iohn 13. was wounded and ſlaine in adulterie, Luitprand.lib.6. Two adulterous Biſhops of the Tridentine Councell, were ſlaine in adulterie: ex proteſtat. concion. German.

14. Popiſh Prelates take to themſelues authoritie to giue power vnto Prieſts, to make the bodie of Chriſt, and to offer ſacrifice for the quicke and the dead: for this is the very forme of the order of popiſh prieſthood inuented by man, and not grounded vpon the word of God: but our Biſhops do ordaine miniſters to be faithfull diſpenſers of the word of God, and of his holy ſacraments: agreeable to the Scriptures, 1.Tim.4.13. Giue attendance to reading, to exhortation, doctrine: 2.Tim.4.2. Preach the word, &c.

15. Popiſh Prelates neglecting their Epiſcopall office, take vpon them the vſe of both ſwords: as to be captaines and leaders of armies, muſter maſters: Such an one was Henry Spencer, anno 1380. or thereabout, that was Pope Vrbanes captaine Generall, and in his owne perſon fought the Popes battailes: Fox.p.446. Such an one was Theodorike Biſhop of Colen, that waged many battailes. Cardinall Ballua vnder Lodouic. 11. King of Fraunce, tooke generall muſter of the ſouldiers at Paris: whereupon one Chabanus a Courtier merrily ſaid to the King: Send me, I pray you, to his Biſhopricke to conſecrate Prieſts, for I may as well doe that, as he muſter ſouldiers: Eſpenc. digreſſ. in 1. ad Tim. lib.3.c.6. And it is not long ſince a Cardinall was Lieutenant of the king of Spaine his forces in the Low countreys. But Saint Pauls biſhop muſt be no fighter, 1.Tim.3.3. neither are the Proteſtants biſhops ſuch.

16. Popiſh Prelates doe moſt tyrannically compell their Clergie to liue vnmarried, and to forſake their wiues to whome they were coupled, as is euident in the ſtories of Lanfranke and Anſelme Biſhops of Canterburie; contrarie to the Apoſtle, Heb.13.4. Marriage is honorable among all: But our Biſhops enforce no ſuch thing.

17. Popiſh Prelates are moſt groſſe idolatours, falling downe before ſtockes and ſtones, commaunding the people to doe the like: contrarie to the Apoſtle, 1. Ioh.5.21. Keepe your ſelues from idols: But our Biſhops are free from all idolatrie.

18. Popiſh Prelates doe take themſelues and their Clergie to be exempted from the ciuill power: contrary to the Apoſtle, Rom.13.1. Let euery ſoule be ſubiect to the higher powers: ſo are not our Biſhops, who doe moſt willingly ſubmit themſelues to the lawes of the Prince, and at their conſecration bind themſelues by oath thereunto.

19. Popiſh Prelates are capable to be Lord Cardinals, and ſo to inſult aboue their brethren and fellow Biſhops, and to be the Popes agents and factors; contrarie to the Apoſtle, who reprooueth Diotrephes for louing to haue the preheminence, Iohn Epiſt. 3.9. And Hierome ſaith, Whereſoeuer a Biſhop is, whether at Rome, Eugubium, Conſtantinople, they are of the ſame merite or worthineſſe of the ſame Prieſthood: Hieron. Euagr. But our Biſhops are capable of no ſuch proud or ambitious title.

20. Popiſh Biſhops and Cardinals are capable of the papacie, the ſeate and throne of Antichriſt and Satan; for they are not true Biſhops: as Antipas was ſlaine, euen where Satans throne was, becauſe he kept the name of Chriſt, and did not ſit in Satans throne: Reuel.2.13. And our Biſhops at their conſecration do renounce and diſdaine the power and iuriſdiction of all forraine Prelates, Potentates, and ſo doe not communicate at all with that throne of Satan.

In theſe and many other materiall points, doe our Biſhops differ from the popiſh Prelates: and yet if they agreed with them in all other matters, and diſſented only in doctrine and faith, it were ſufficient to cleare and diſcharge them from their ſlaunderous accuſation of Antichriſtianiſme: for where Satans throne is not, there cannot Antichriſt ſit: and where Chriſtes name is kept, his faith not denyed, but ſincerely taught, there Satans throne is not, Reuelat. 2. 13. Therefore the Church of England, profeſſing the true doctrine and faith of Chriſt, is not vnder the kingdome of Antichriſt: and ſo I conclude with that ſaying, Nicen. concil.*2.*can.2. Noſtræ Hierarchiæ ſubſtantia, &c. The ſubſtance of our Hierarchie are the heauenly words, that is, the true knowledge of the diuine Scriptures: the Church and Miniſterie then of England hauing the ſubſtance of the true miniſterie, cannot be iudged Antichriſtian: neither are our Biſhops the miniſters of Antichriſt, being preachers and profeſſours of the true faith. Now I will proceed.

THE FIFT PART, OF THE Ceremonies.

The Papiſts.

THey doe annoynt the hands of ſuch as are ordained, with oyle, and do inioyne them to ſhaue their crownes. And the higher degree of prieſthood they haue, ſo much broader muſt their ſhauen crowne be, Tileman. Heſhuſ. loc.14. Err.5. Bellarm. cap.12. 111.Error.

The Proteſtants.

WE haue the ſame opinion of theſe ceremonies, as we haue of the popiſh orders themſelues, counting them worthie of no place in the Church of God. As for the ſuperſtitious cuſtome of annoynting, it is a Iewiſh rite, better beſeeming Aarons order, than the Miniſters of Ieſus Chriſt. Looke how he was annoynted, ſo are we: of him it is ſaid, The ſpirit of the Lord is vpon me, becauſe he hath annoynted me, Luk.4.18. So the inward working of the ſpirit is our annoynting, 1.Iohn 2.27. Againe, in diuers places of the Scripture wee reade of ordaining by impoſition of hands, Act.13.3. 1.Tim.4.14.and 5.22. 2.Tim.1.6. But there is no mention at all made of annoynting with oyle.

And as for the ſhauing of the crowne, it is worſe than a Iewiſh ceremonie: for it ſeemeth to haue taken beginning from the Heathen: and the Iewes were forbidden to cut or make bald their heads, Deuter.14.1. Leuit.19.28. In ſo much, as it was a ſigne of more holines amongſt them not to ſuffer the raſor to come vpon their heads, as it is to be ſeene in the law of the Nazarites, Numbers 6. The reſt of the queſtions that concerne the calling of Miniſters, we haue entreated of more at large, Controuerſ.5.of Eccleſiaſticall perſons.

Concil.Eliberin.can.55.Sacerdotes, qui tantum ſacrificantium coronam portant, nec ſacrificant idolis, placuit poſt biennium communionem accipere: Prieſts, that haue only a ſhauen crowne like idolatrous ſacrificers, and yet doe not ſacrifice to Idols, after two yeeres may receiue the Communion. Wee ſee that by this Canon they are cenſured, that had ſhorne crownes.

*Decret.Gregor.lib.1.tit.15.c.1.Innocent.*3. Among the Greekes, Non conſueuerunt pontifices cùm conſecrantur inungi: Biſhops, when they are conſecrated, are not annoynted. If it were an Apoſtolike inſtitution, it would haue been generally obſerued in all Churches.

Cauſ.12.qu.1.c.7. Hanc coronam habent ab inſtitutione Romanæ eccleſiæ: They haue their ſhauen crowne from the inſtitution of the Romane Church. Then not from the inſtitution of the Apoſtles.

Magiſter ſententiar.lib.4.diſt.24.b. Tonſuræ eccleſiaſticæ vſus à Nazaræis exortus videtur: The vſe of Eccleſiaſticall tonſure or ſhauing ſeemeth to haue taken beginning from the Nazarites. How then can it be a ceremonie of the Goſpell, being altogether a Iudaicall rite? Nay the Iewes neuer ſo abounded in ſuperſtitious obſeruations and fooliſh ſignifications. The Prieſts ſhauing firſt (they ſay) betokeneth that they are as it were Kings of the Church, which is ſignified by the crowne, to rule themſelues and others: And ſo indeede popiſh prelates haue taken vpon them to be Kings indeede, exalting themſelues aboue Kings and Princes: Cauſ.12.qu.1.c.7. Secondly, Raſio capitis eſt temporalium omnium depoſitio: The ſhauing of the head ſignifieth the laying aſide of al temporall things: ibid. This did well appeare in their cloiſtered ſhauelings, that had ſcraped together the riches of the land. Thirdly, Denudatio capitis eſt reuelatio mentis: The baring of the head ſignifieth the reuealing of the minde, that they ſhould not be ignorant of Gods ſecrets: Magiſter ſententiar.ibid. And no marueile, their ſhaueling Prieſts were ſuch great Clerkes. Fourthly, their ſhauing betokened the mortifying of the fleſh, and the ſubduing of vice: Magiſt.ibid. The vncleane ſtories of Monkiſh liues do well make proofe of their mortification. Thus wee ſee how vnlike they are in their workes, to the meaning of their ſhauen crownes vpon their heads. The ſuperſtitious Iewes themſelues may well laugh at ſuch toyes.

To this agreeth the iudgement of the holy Martyrs: Robert Smith holy Martyr: *As for your ſhauing, annoynting, greaſing, polling, rounding: there are no ſuch things appointed in Gods booke: and therefore I haue nothing to doe, to beleeue your orders. And as for you my Lord, if you had grace or intelligence, you would not ſo disfigure your ſelfe, as you doe: Fox p.*1693.

THE THIRD QVESTION, OF EXTREAME VNCtion. Firſt, whether it be a ſacrament. Secondly, of the efficacie. Thirdly, of the ceremonies.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER EXtreame Vnction be a Sacrament.

The Papiſts.

112.Error. THat extreame Vnction is rightly and properly a Sacrament, which is (ſay they) the annointing of thoſe that are extreame ſicke, to aſſure them of remiſſion of their ſinnes: it was concluded in the Chapter of *Trent.ſeſſ.*14.*can.*1.and is generally maintained by the Church of Rome, *Bellarm.cap.*2.

Argum. Iam.5.14. The Sacrament of extreame Vnction in this place is plainly promulgated by the Apoſtle, being inſtituted before by our Sauiour Chriſt, Mark.6.13. For here is remiſſion of ſinnes promiſed to the outward element, that is, the annoynting of the ſicke with oyle: Ergo, a Sacrament, Rhemiſt.

*Anſ.*1. This annoynting of oyle, was a ſigne onely of the miraculous gift of healing, that was then in the Church, and therefore was no longer to continue, than the gift it ſelfe. But it is not like, will they ſay, that euery one of the Elders had this miraculous gift of healing. Anſ. Though euery particular Elder perhaps had it not, yet the whole companie of the Elderſhip might haue it, as S. Paul ſpeaketh of the gift of propheſie giuen to the Elderſhip, 1. Tim. 4. 14. And it is not like that the Apoſtle would haue promiſed health by calling for the Elders, if the gift had not been generall in euery congregation.

*Anſw.*2. Neither is remiſſion of ſinnes annexed to the element, but to the exerciſe of prayer made in faith. The prayer of faith, ſaith the Apoſtle, ſhall heale the ſicke.

Bellarmine on the contrarie ſide laboureth to proue, that this place of Iames cannot be vnderſtood of the miraculous gift of healing. Firſt, if it had been a miraculous gift, it ſhould haue been more generall, not onely to cure ſicke folke, but the blind alſo and lame.

Contra. 1. As though there were not diuers miraculous gifts, which were not all in euery one, neither was it requiſite ſo to be. Saint Paul diſtinguiſheth the gifts of the ſpirit, as one hath the gift of healing, another the operation of great workes, 1. Corinth. 12. 9, 10. as to caſt out diuels, to heale thoſe which were borne blinde, and ſuch like: doth it follow now, that hee which had the one, muſt needes alſo haue the other? 2. The Ieſuite controuleth the wiſedome of our Sauiour Chriſt, who although he endued his Apoſtles with a generall power to worke miracles, yet gaue them this gift, that by this ſpeciall meane the annoynting the ſicke with oyle, they ſhould heale them. Mark. 6. 13.

Bellarm. 2. If the Apoſtle had ſpoken of a miraculous gift, he would not haue preſcribed them the matter to worke by, namely oyle.

Contra. By this reaſon, that gift of healing, which the Apoſtles vſed, Mark. 6. 13. ſhould not be miraculous, becauſe there alſo, they are preſcribed oyle: nor that, which is promiſed, Mark. 16. 18. becauſe there is a preſcription alſo, how they ſhall lay their hands vpon the ſicke, and ſo heale them.

Bellarm. 3. If it had bin a miraculous gift, it ſhould haue neuer failed, but they alwaies ſhould haue recouered bodily health, and ſo none ſhould haue dyed in the Apoſtles time.

Contra. 1. As though the miraculous gifts, which were then giuen vnto men, were infinite, and not rather meaſured, and directed according to Gods will: The Apoſtles had power giuen them to caſt out diuels, Mark. 3. 15. yet could they not caſt out a dumbe ſpirit, Mark. 9. 18. So that their miraculous giftes, then, and ſo often, and for the moſt part tooke place, when it pleaſed God, when hee ſaw it to be to his glorie, and needfull for his Church. 2. Neither doth it followe, that they which were thus once healed, ſhould alwaies be healed, and ſo neuer dye: no more then Lazarus, who was once raiſed out of the graue, was preſerued from death, who afterward notwithſtanding dyed.

Bellarm. 4. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh in direct termes of forgiuing of ſinnes: therefore ſpirituall health is here vnderſtood, rather than corporall.

Contra. We graunt, that remiſſion of ſinnes did concurre with the outward miraculous gift, at the feruent prayers of the faithfull. For how could the diſeaſe be cured, if the cauſe thereof, which was ſin, were not firſt remoued? but it followeth not, that the gift of bodily health was not therefore miraculous: For Chriſt, whom he healed bodily, to many of them alſo he forgaue their ſinnes, yet did hee heale by miracle, as Mark. 2. 5. Chriſt ſaith to the ſicke of the palſey, thy ſinnes are forgiuen thee: he healed him both bodily and ghoſtly: ſhall wee ſay therefore, that he was not cured miraculouſly? Wherefore it remaineth, as wee anſwered before, that this gift of healing, which Saint Iames ſpeaketh of, was miraculous, and ſo proueth no Sacrament: for it is all one with that gift, which the Apoſtles exerciſed, Mark. 6. which cannot be denied but to haue bin miraculous.

Thus much alſo is confeſſed: Interrelig. Cæſarea. cap. 19. Inter initia fidei externa quoque corporis ſanitas, quaſi internæ ſanationis ſignum conſequebatur, &c. In the beginning, and ſpringing vp of faith, the outward health of the bodie did followe as a ſigne of the inward healing: Quemadmodum in alijs ſacramentis ad confirmationem rudis fidei interna virtus, externis ſignis & miraculis demonſtrabatur: As in other Sacraments, for the confirmation of their weake faith, the inward vertue was ſhewed forth by outward ſignes and miracles: which are not needfull now. The gift of healing then was a miracle.

The Proteſtants.

EXtreame Vnction is no conuenient ceremonie at all to be vſed in the Church, as tending to ſuperſtition, and breeding a vaine confidence in terrene elements: much leſſe is it to be holden for a Sacrament.

Argum. 1. It hath no inſtitution from Chriſt: for they themſelues confeſſe, that Mark. 6. 13. there is but a preparatiue to the Sacrament of extreame Vnction, Rhemiſt. the promulgation and publiſhing thereof is ſet forth by the Apoſtle, Iam.5. But this is not to be admitted, that Chriſt was a preparer of Sacraments onely, and that they were perfited and finiſhed by his Apoſtles: nay, they were not to adde any thing to the inſtitution of Sacraments, but to take them as Chriſt deliuered them, 1.Cor.11.23.

The Maſter of the Sentences ſaith: Sacramentum vnctionis infirmerum, &c. The Sacrament of annoynting the ſicke, is read to haue been inſtituted of the Apoſtles. Then is it no Sacrament, for Chriſt onely is the author of the Sacraments: as Bellarmine proueth at large, *lib.1. de Sacrament. in genere. c.*24. And it was thus decreed, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ.7. c.1. Siquis dixerit Sacramenta noua legis non eſſe omnia à Ieſu Chriſto inſtituta, anathema: If any man ſay that the Sacraments of the new Teſtament were not at all inſtituted of Chriſt, let him be accurſed. How then doth Bellarmine and the reſt auoide this curſe, that doe hold this Sacrament to haue been inſtituted by the Apoſtles? There are two opinions among them: ſome thinke that the annoynting, ſpoken of Mark.6.13. and the other mentioned Iam.5. to be all one: ſic Thomas Waldenſ. Alphonſus de caſtro lib. de Hæreſib. Others of them doe thinke, that that, which Marke ſpeaketh of, was not Vnctio ſacramentalis, a ſacramentall Vnction, but onely a figure and ſhadow of it: ſic Ruardus in explicat. artic. 12. *Ianſenius in Mark.6. Dominicus à Soto. diſtinct.23. qu.1. artic.*1. the Rhemiſts alſo and Bellarmine. Thus we ſee how well they agree among themſelues.

Againe, the place in Iames maketh nothing for their popiſh aneeling: for the Apoſtle would haue all the Elders called: but one prieſt is ſufficient to bring your oyntment boxe. Secondly, if any man be ſicke, ſaith Saint Iames, though it be not deadly or mortall ſicknes, but whenſoeuer he is ſicke: But your Vnction is neuer miniſtred before the poynt of death. Thirdly, here health is certainly promiſed: But not one amongſt ten recouereth after your popiſh aneeling.

*Argum.*2. Chriſt vſed ſometime clay, and ſpittle, ſometime other elements in healing the diſeaſed, as the Apoſtles vſed oyle: why, I pray you then, may not they bee Sacraments as well as this? for they were ſignes of healing but for a time: no more was the annoynting with oyle.

Bellarmine anſwereth, there is not the like reaſon: firſt, thoſe other ceremonies are not commanded to be frequented as this of oyle is, Iam.5. Secondly, there is no promiſe of ſpirituall grace annexed to them, as vnto this. Thirdly, neither is the certaine Miniſter of thoſe ceremonies deſcribed, as the Elders, that is the Prieſts, are of this, Iam.5.

Contra. Firſt, you cannot proue an inſtitution of a Sacrament out of that place of Iames, ſeeing Chriſt, and not the Apoſtles, is the author of Sacraments: There is no Sacrament of the Goſpell which is not grounded both vpon the example and precept of Chriſt: but ſo is not your aneeling.

Secondly, the other elements, which Chriſt vſed, haue thoſe three things required: firſt, our Sauiour vſed ſpittle diuers times: as Mark.7.33. in healing the dumbe man, Mark.8.23. in curing the blinde man. Here is an iteration of the ſame element. Secondly, it hath alſo an infallible effect: for it healeth both dumbnes and blindnes. Thirdly, the Miniſter thereof is certaine, Chriſt himſelfe.

Thirdly: firſt, the ſpirituall grace promiſed, is not annexed to oyle, but to the prayer of faith, Iam.1.15. Neither can it be proued, that all thoſe Elders were Miniſters, or, as they call thē Prieſts: for diuers of the faithfull, which were not Miniſters, had the gift of healing: as it appeareth, Mark.16.18. These ſignes ſhall follow them that beleeue, &c. they ſhall lay their hands vpon the ſicke, and they ſhall recouer. But all beleeuers were not Miniſters.

August. in Pſal. 40.

Auguſtine ſaith, De latere Chriſti in cruce ſacramenta eccleſiæ profluxerunt: The Sacraments of the Church iſſued out of Chriſts ſide vpon the Croſſe: There guſhed out of his ſide, water and blood: but we reade not that any oyle was ſhed from him: therefore by Auguſtines argument, Vnction is no Sacrament.

*Innocent.1. Epiſtol.1. can.*8. ſaith, that this cuſtome in annoynting with oyle, genus eſt ſacramenti, is a kind of Sacrament. It is not then properly a Sacrament, but after a certaine kind and manner. This is rehearſed, diſtinct.95. c.3.

Wee haue alſo the ſeale of the holy Martyrs: Iames Bainham Martyr, being asked what hee thought concerning the Sacrament of aneeling: he anſwered: It was but a ceremonie, neither did he wot what a man ſhould be the better for ſuch an oyling and annoynting: Fox pag.1028.

Iohn Denley, Iohn Newman, Patricke Pachingham, holie Martyrs, condemned to death, for affirming, that the annoynting, and aneeling of the ſicke, was not allowable by the word of God: Fox pag.1684. col.2.

THE

THE SECOND PART, OF THE MATTER and forme of extreame Vnction.

The Papiſts.

THe matter is oyle oliue conſecrated by the Biſhop, not ſimple, or vnhallowed, as is water in baptiſme: the forme is in theſe words: By this holy vnction, and by his moſt godly mercy, God forgiue you,&c. Bellarm.c.7. 112.Error.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt as touching the forme: 1. It is not warranted, nor found in Scripture, as the words of conſecration in the other Sacraments are, and therefore we refuſe it. 2. It is blaſphemous, matching the beggerly annointing, and Gods mercy together, and ſo ioyne the creature and Creator in commiſſion together.

Secondly, for the matter: 1. The element is not conſecrated, but in the vſe of the Sacrament: 1. Cor. 10. 16. bread is bleſſed in the breaking: therefore that forerunning hallowing of oyle is ſuperſtitious and ſuperfluous. 2. If ſimple water ſerue for Baptiſme being ſo excellent a Sacrament, much more may ſimple oyle ſuffice for your vnction. 3. Your canons alſo allow the ſprinkling of water as well as oyle vpon the ſicke. decr.p.3.d.4.c.127. Aſpergi &c. the ſicke are bid to be ſprinkled.&c.

THE THID PART, OF THE EFFECT and vertue of extreame Vnction.

The Papiſts.

FIrſt, it giueth health of bodie. Secondly, it wipeth away the reliques of ſinne: And therefore the prieſt thus ſaith: Per iſtam ſanctam Vnctionem, & ſuam piiſſimam miſericordiam, indulgeat tibi Deus quicquid deliquiſti per viſum,&c. By the vertue of this holy oyntment, and the moſt mercifull fauour of God, the Lord forgiue thee, what thou haſt offended by the ſight, hearing, &c. Bellarm.cap 7.8. 113.Error.

The Proteſtants.

1. YOur popiſh aneeling is not able to heale the bodie, as we ſee by daily experience: for more die then liue after your annointing: and they that doe recouer ſhould doe as well without your aneeling. Wherefore this annointing of oyle is not like to that vſed by the Apoſtles: for then health certainely followed, Iam.5.14.

Heere alſo the papiſts themſelues are deuided: ſome thinke, that the health of the bodie is the proper ende of this their Sacrament: Dominicus à Soto diſtinct. 23. qu. 1. art 2. Bellarmine with other thinketh, that the health of the ſoule is the peculiar ende: and the health of the bodie conditionally, ſo farre forth as it is expedient for the ſoule.

Sotus replieth, many times he that is aneeled, is more wicked then before, how then is it to the health of his ſoule? Bellarmine, when this falleth out, he obtaineth not health by the Sacrament, but by ſome other naturall meanes. Contra. Then it would follow, that other naturall meanes applied, are more effectuall for the health of the bodie, then your Sacrament is; ſeeing they may giue health, when the Sacrament doth not: ſo then ſeeing your extreame aneeling doth not alwaies giue health, by your owne confeſſion, it is no effect of a Sacrament; for the Sacrament alwaies worketh Sacramentally, where it is not otherwiſe hindred for want of faith: but many a faithfull man may be aneeled, and yet die, in whom there is no ſuch let: and many a wicked man may recouer his health, in whom the impediment is found, namely, the lacke of faith.

2. It is alſo a great blaſphemie, to aſcribe remiſſion of ſinnes to a terrene and beggerly element: The Apoſtle ſaith, not the oyle, but the praier of faith ſhall ſaue the ſicke. The Scriprure alſo teſtifyeth, that the iuſt ſhall liue by faith, Rom.1.17. And we walke by faith, not by ſight, 2.Cor. 5.7. But he that aſcribeth remiſſion of ſinnes to oyle or any other externall element, walketh by ſight, not by faith.

Heere againe the popiſh diuines are put to their trumpes; and much ſcanning there is among them, what manner of ſinnes are remitted by extreame vnction: ſome ſay veniall ſinnes; other the aptnes to ſinne that remaineth. Bellarmine thinketh they be reliques of any ſinne veniall, or mortall, and the terror or anxietie of ſoule, which remaineth and perplexeth the ſoule in the point of death. *Bellarm.c.*8.

*Contra.*1. The Apoſtle ſaith. verſ.6. If he haue committed ſinne, or as the vulgar tranſlation readeth, if he be in ſinne: whereby the Apoſtle vnderſtandeth neither the leſſer ſinnes only, which they call veniall, nor the reliques of ſinne only: but ſinne it ſelfe whatſoeuer that is pardonable.

2. This remitting of ſinnes is not aſcribed to the annoynting with oyle, but to the prayer of faith.

faith, verſ.16. Acknowledge your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that you may be healed: here repentance with confeſſion of ſinnes is required in the behalfe of the ſicke; prayer to be performed by the other: by theſe two meanes health is obtained.

3. The ſinne being once pardoned and remitted, there remaineth no more terror of conſcience, Rom.5.1. Being iuſtified by faith, we are at peace with God. Rom.8.1. There is now no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Ieſus: and conſequently no feare of condemnation.

4. The annoynting was a ſigne onely of their bodily healing: Matth.6.13. They annoynted many that were ſicke with oyle, and healed them: but in this place they ſay, the ſame gift of healing is ſhadowed forth, which is deſcribed in Saint Iames.

5. Whereas the Apoſtle requireth confeſſion of ſinnes in the ſicke, whereupon followeth remiſſion of ſinnes: they vſe to aneele the ſicke when they are paſt ſenſe, and ſo can ſhew no repentance: as Sext decret.lib.5.tit.2.c.5. Alexander 4. reproueth the vſe of certaine, Qui nullum conſolantur, qui non ſit ſanæ mentis, &c. Which vſe not to comfort any that are not of a right minde and ſounde memorie: how then can there be forgiuenes of ſinnes, where no confeſſion goeth before?

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE MINISTER of extreame Vnction, and the ceremonies.

The Papiſts.

114.Error. First, they giue power onely vnto their annoynted Maſſe prieſtes, to aneele the ſicke with oyle. Lay men haue no authoritie to do it, nor whoſoeuer are no prieſts, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 14.*ca.*4.
115.Error. Secondly, for the rite and ceremonie, the prieſt comming to the ſicke muſt annoynt his fiue ſenſes; his eyes, eares, noſtrels, mouth, and hands: alſo the reines, which is the ſeat of concupiſcence, and his feete, which are the inſtruments of execution, *Bellarm. cap.*10.

The Proteſtants.

1. This annoynting which Saint Iames ſpeaketh of, was done by the whole company of Elders in euery congregation, which were not all the Paſtors of the Church: and although the Paſtors and Miniſters of the Church, are both more eſpecially bound in reſpect of their dutie to viſite the ſicke, and are the fitteſt perſons in regard of their calling to pray for them & comfort them; yet Saint Iames much commendeth the prayer not only of faithful Paſtors, but of any righteous man, which is auaileable to procure health vnto the ſicke. verſ.16. Yea, and it appeareth by their owne Canons, *Innocent.*1.*Epiſt.*1.*c.*8. that it was lawfull for lay men and all Chriſtians to vſe this annoynting.

Bellarmine anſwereth with Ianſenius, that Innocentius ſpeaketh not of the miniſtring, but receiuing of this oyntment, that it is lawfull for euery lay man to receiue it at the Prieſts hands, and ſo vſe it, cap.9.

*Contra.*1. This place alleaged out of Innocentius troubleth them ſore, and maketh them almoſt at their wits end: Thomas Waldenſ. anſwereth, that lay men may aneele, where there are no Prieſts to be had: but this anſwere miſliketh Bellarmine, becauſe the Prieſt muſt neceſſarily be the Miniſter of euery Sacrament, vnleſſe it be in Baptiſme. Dominicus à Soto ſaith, that Innocentius ſpeaketh of a kind of conſecrate oyle, which it was lawfull for lay men to vſe, beſide this ſacramentall oyle: this anſwere alſo diſpleaſeth the Ieſuite, for Innocentius ſpeaketh of oyle conſecrated by the Biſhop, which was the matter of this Sacrament. Secondly, therfore Bellarmine hath found out an other anſwer, but as vnſufficient as the other: the words of the decree are theſe: Sancto oleo chriſmatis ab Epiſcopo confecto, non ſolum ſacerdotibus, ſed & omnibus uti Chriſtianis licet in ſua aut ſuorum neceſſitate inungendo: The holy oyle of Chriſme made by the Biſhop, it is lawfull not onely for Prieſts, but for all Chriſtians to vſe by annoynting, in their, or their friends neceſſitie. This cannot be vnderſtood as the Ieſuite ſuppoſeth: Firſt, it is lawfull for other Chriſtians to vſe oyle, as the Prieſts did vſe it, which was by miniſtring, not receiuing. Secondly, they may vſe it to annoynt their friends, as well as themſelues, therefore they miniſtred to their friends.

2. What need the bodie be annointed in ſo many places? It is meere ſuperſtition: of the like minde was Peter ſometime, when he ſaid to Chriſt, who would waſh his feet; Lord, not my feete onely, but my hands and my head. To whom Chriſt anſwered: He that is waſhed, need not ſaue to waſh his feet, but is cleane all, Iohn.13.9. Where, although the words of Chriſt haue a ſpirituall meaning: yet we ſee the euident and plaine practiſe of them in Baptiſme: In the which Sacrament, wee doubt not, but that infants are thoroughly baptized though euery part be not touched with water. And euen ſo, if your aneeling were a Sacrament: why might it not ſuffice, in ſome one part of the bodie to bee annoynted, and not in ſo many? This wee are ſure of, that nowe you ſpeake without booke: For the Apoſtle maketh no mention of annoynting, eyes, hands, or mouth, but onely generally of annoynting the ſicke. And thus it appeareth that your extreame Vnction is no ſacrament, nor any of the other foure, which you haue inuented.

THE CONCLVSION OF THIS TREATISE concerning the Sacraments.

THus, I truſt, wee haue made it plaine by Scripture, and euidence of argument, that there are but two Sacraments onely, Baptiſme, and the Supper of the Lord, left and inioyned to the people of God by our Sauiour Chriſt: for foure things are required to make a ſacrament: Firſt, the authoritie of Chriſt in commaunding it. Secondly, the element or externall ſigne, as the matter. Thirdly, the word of inſtitution, as the forme. Fourthly, the end and vſe, to bee a ſeale of our faith for remiſſion of ſinnes.

1. Concerning the efficient cauſe, we finde that two Sacraments onely in the new Teſtament, are commaunded by Chriſt to be vſed for euer in the Church, Baptiſme, and the Lords Supper: which both by his owne example and preſence, as alſo his precept and commaundement, were eſtabliſhed.

2. There muſt be an outward viſible elementall ſigne, as is water in Baptiſme, bread and wine in the Lords Supper. But ſo is there not in the fiue popiſh ſacraments: For in ſome there is no ſigne at all, as in Matrimonie, where they are driuen to ſay, that the parties that are married are the ſignes. In ſome there is a ſigne, but not viſible, as in abſolution, the audible voyce of the Prieſt pronouncing the words of abſolution is, they ſay, the outward ſigne: But in all the Sacraments of Chriſts inſtitution, we finde a viſible ſigne. In ſome there is an outward ſigne, but it is an action or geſture only, no materiall element, which is not ſufficient: ſo is the impoſition of hands in giuing of Orders. In ſome there is a materiall ſigne, as Chriſme in Confirmation, oyle in extreame Vnction: but they are not of Chriſts inſtitution.

3. They alſo want a word of inſtitution: In Penance the Prieſt ſaith, I doe abſolue thee, after particular confeſſion made of his ſinnes. In confirmation the words are, I ſigne thee with the ſigne of the Croſſe, and confirme thee with the Chriſme of ſaluation, in the name of the Father, Sonne, &c. In Matrimonie, I take thee to my wife. In giuing of Orders, Receiue thou power to offer vp the bodie of Chriſt. In extreame Vnction, God by the vertue of this oyle forgiue thee thy ſinne. Theſe, they ſay, are the words of the inſtitution: But they can ſhew no word of God for them: for it is not euery worde that ſanctifieth, but onely the word of God, 1. Timoth. 4. Wherefore, ſeeing they haue no word of inſtitution, they are no ſacraments.

Laſtly, they want the true vſe and end of a ſacrament, which is, to ſtrengthen our faith for the remiſſion of ſinnes: for in ſome of theſe there is no relation at all had to the forgiuenes of ſinnes: As Matrimonie doth but performe, ſay they, the graces of marriage, as fidelitie, mutuall loue, and ſuch like. Orders doe conferre the power of Prieſthood. Here is no ſigne or aſſurance of the grace of iuſtification. In the reſt, remiſſion of ſins is aſcribed to other inſtrumentall meanes, than to faith only; as to ſatisfactorie workes in Abſolution, to Chriſme in Confirmation, to oyle in extreame Vnction: wherefore we conclude, becauſe they are no ſeales of the righteouſnes of faith, as S. Paul defineth a ſacrament, Rom. 4. verſ. 11. that they are no ſacraments of Chriſts inſtitution, but ſuperſtitious ceremonies deuiſed by men.

Here endeth the third Centurie.

HERE ENSVE SVCH CONTROVERSIES AND QVESTIONS, AS ARE MOVED CONCERNING THE BENEFITS OF our redemption, purchaſed vnto vs by the death of Chriſt.

HAuing now ſufficiently entreated of all thoſe matters, wherein wee and our aduerſaries diſſent, as touching the propheticall, regall, and prieſtly office of our Sauiour Chriſt: the next place according to our purpoſed order and methode, doth offer vnto vs ſuch queſtions to be conſidered of, as are handled betweene our aduerſaries and vs, concerning the benefits enſuing by theſe heauenly offices of Chriſt. And this treatiſe containeth three controuerſies, which now follow in order: The firſt is of the ſtate of man in his firſt creation, before his fall. The ſecond, of the fall of man, the condition and qualitie thereof. The third, of the reparation of our decayed nature, and our reſtitution by Chriſt.

THE FIRST CONTROVERSIE BEING THE 17. in the whole, of the ſtate of man in Paradiſe.

THis controuerſie contayneth three queſtions. Firſt, of the ſtate of mans ſoule by creation. Secondly, of the qualitie and condition of his bodie. Thirdly, of the place, namely, of Paradiſe.

THE FIRST QVESTION, OF THE perfection of the ſoule of man.

The Papiſts.

IT is agreed betweene vs, that man was created in his ſoule according to the image of God, 1.Error.
both in holines and righteouſnes in his will and affections, as Saint Paul ſheweth, Epheſ.4.24, as alſo with the light and perfection of knowledge, and iudgement in the vnderſtanding part, Coloſſ.3.10. for in theſe two conſiſted the image of God, being thus agreed of the thing it ſelfe, we diſſent about the manner: for the Papiſts opinion is, that the originall iuſtice and perfection, wherein Adam was created, was not in him a natural gift, eyther that it was a part of his nature, or did ariſe or ſpring out of any naturall beginning; as we ſay the ſoule in the body, and the vnderſtanding in the ſoule, are naturall: but that it was meerely a ſupernaturall gift, hauing no naturall beginning: euen as Helias taking vp into heauen in a firie chariot, was a thing ſimply & abſolutely ſupernaturall. They ſay alſo further, that man now hath all the pure naturals that Adam had, and that the humane nature is the very ſame that Adams was: And that Adam if it had not been for that ſupernaturall gift, ſhould haue been ſubiect to the like ignorance, & infirmity, and rebellion of fleſh that we are; ſauing that, then in Adam, Ex natura & conditione materiæ profluxiſſet: Thoſe infirmities ſhould haue ſprung out of the very nature of man, and the quality of the mould that he was made: but now in vs, they doe proceed ex originali culpa, of originall ſinne. This then is their ſentence, that Adams nature by creation, and ours now by birth, is all one: Bellarm. de grat. primi. homin. cap.5. And he further declareth his minde thus: The ſtate of man after the fall of Adam differeth no more from the ſtate of Adam in his pure naturals, than a man that is ſpoiled differeth frō a naked man, that is, nothing at all: Neither is mans nature now more ſubiect to ignorance and infirmitie, if you take away originall ſinne, then it ſhould haue beene, being created in the pure naturals: and therefore the corruption of nature is not by want of any naturall gift, or by the acceſſion of any euill qualitie, but only by the loſſe of that ſupernaturall gift, by reaſon of Adams ſinne. Bellar. ibid. So then 1. his opinion appeareth plainely to be this, that as a man ſpoyled differeth not from a naked man in the ſubſtance of the thing, but in the cauſe or manner; for the one is ſpoyled by force, the other is naked without force, yet both without clothing: ſo man in his creation without that ſupernaturall gift or grace, was as naked, but now by ſinne is as one robbed and ſpoyled: 2. Againe, where he ſaith: If you take away originall ſinne: If he meane, that our nature is the ſame with Adams but for ſinne, he fighteth with his owne ſhadow; for no man denieth, but that ſinne cauſed this alteration in the nature of man. 3. And he ſpeaketh againſt himſelfe: for if original ſinne be the cauſe of our corruption, It commeth by the acceſſion of an euill quality, which he before denied; vnleſſe he will denie that ſinne is an euill qualitie. 4. But if he make exception of originall ſinne, not in regarde of the fruites and effectes thereof, but as of the cauſe, that Adams ignorance and infirmitie ſhould haue proceeded of another cauſe, then originall ſinne, that is, out of the condition of his owne nature; it is a great error, as afterwards ſhall appeare: let vs ſee ſome of his arguments.

Argum. 1. God ſaid to Adam, Gen. 3. Duſt thou art, and to duſt ſhalt thou returne: that is, by nature and creation, had it not been for that ſupernaturall gift which I gaue, which nowe thou haſt loſt, thou art mortall. Alſo Pſal. 8. the Pſalmiſt ſaith, What is man, &c. thou haſt made him a little lower then the Angels, and crowned him with glory and honour: but Adam being created with a bodily ſubſtance, could not by nature, but by a ſupernaturall gift onely be made like the Angels: And ſo much is implied by theſe words, glory, and honour, which are things not naturally inherent, but outwardly added: Argum. Bellarm. cap. 6.

Anſw. 1. To the firſt place we anſwere thus: that it was ſpoken to Adam after his fall: And the Lord in ſaying, thou art duſt, &c. did not there ſhew the ſtate, wherein hee was created, but whereinto he was fallen by ſinne, for by nature he was no more to returne to duſt, then to eate his bread in the ſweat of his browes: for they are both ioyned together. If they anſwere, that this was alſo a ſupernaturall gift to be void of labour and trouble, in ſeeking his foode; then was it a ſupernaturall gift alſo in the earth not to bring forth thornes and thiſtles: for theſe are the cauſe that man muſt eate his bread with ſweat, that is, with labour in tilling the ground. But it were abſurd to ſay, that God created the earth in the beginning with an aptneſſe and inclination, to bring forth weedes and vnprofitable hearbes, ſeeing all he made, was excellent good.

2. To the other place alſo we doe thus make anſwere: firſt, why might not God naturally create the ſoule of man like vnto Angels, though it were incloſed in the body, as naturally he hath created the bodies of beaſts in ſtrength, ſenſe, agilitie, ſwiftnes, and the like qualities, not onely equall, but farre ſuperiour to the bodies of men, which are ioyned with a reaſonable ſoule, but the bodies of beaſts to an vnreaſonable? Secondly, this place, Heb. 2. 15. properly is applied to Chriſt, verſ. 9. But we ſee Ieſus crowned with honour and glory: but the glorie of Chriſt is not accidentall, externall, or ſupernaturall; but altogether in him naturall, which he had with God his father before the world was, Iohn. 17. 5. Therefore Bellarmine faileth in his collection here.

Argum. 2. If Adams integritie and innocencie were naturall, then they ſhould haue remained after his ſinne: as the ſame naturals in diuels doe ſtill remaine: but ſo doe they not, Ergo.

Anſw. Firſt, the argument followeth not in naturall qualities: for Adam had knowledge without ignorance, memorie without obliuion before his fall, which were natural in him, but ſo hath he not now: ſo the naturall qualities are corrupted and decayed by ſinne, but the naturall ſubſtance and ſubiect as of the ſoule and bodie remaineth ſtill, though much depraued and corrupted by ſinne.

Secondly, yet this naturall integritie of Adam is not vtterly by ſinne extinct, for there is in man a law of nature, which is a remainder of that law of perfection, whereby a mans thoughts doe eyther accuſe him or excuſe him. Rom. 2. 14.

Thirdly, neither doe the ſame naturall qualities remaine in the reprobate ſpirits, which they had before their fall: for they haue alſo loſt the integritie and innocencie of nature; yea and in other qualities of the ſpirituall nature are inferiour to the elect Angels.

Fourthly, the reaſon is not like betweene man and ſpirits: for the decay of perfection in ſpirits is helped by their ſpirituall nature, and long continuance, and therefore it is no maruell, that euill ſpirits, are in vnderſtanding, memorie, knowledge, agilitie of nature farre beyond the ſoules of men, which are both clogged with terrene bodies, and by the mortalitie thereof abridged of the courſe of experience.

The Proteſtants.

THat the gifts of integritie and innocency were in our firſt parents by nature of their creation; yet not without Gods gift (for euen naturall things are of Gods grace; that is, the generall grace and gift of the creation, which is not properly called grace, Lombard. diſt. 25. lib. 2.) and that their naturals were not the ſame, but much more pure and perfect then ours are; neither that they were the ſame in them before and after their fall, thus we proue it.

Argum. 1. If Adams naturals were the ſame that ours are, then it would follow that the concupiſcence of the fleſh, which is in vs by nature was alſo naturall in Adam and that Adam ſhould haue beene as prone by nature vnto all kind of vice, as we are: which if it be granted, this were to make God the author of ſinne, and his workmanſhip imperfect, if he had not made man ſuch an one by creation, as could not ſinne.

Bellarmine anſwereth: graunting, that the concupiſcence of the fleſh was by nature in Adam, and that if he had been created in his pure naturals onely, he ſhould haue been as prone to ſinne as we are: But God (ſaith he) did take away, ſuſtulerat concupiſcentiam, this concupiſcence, and bridle it by a ſupernaturall gift. Secondly, it followeth not, that God ſhould haue been the author of euill, for concupiſcence is not properly ſinne: neither if God had created man in his pure naturals, ſhould it follow, that he made concupiſcence: Quæ præter intentionem agentis ex conditione materiæ conſequuta fuiſſet: Which ſhould haue proceeded from the condition or qualitie of the mould or matter, whereof man was made, beſide the purpoſe or intention of the creator: Bellarm. cap. 7. reſponſ. ad 1. 9. & 10. obiection.

Contra. Firſt, it is falſe that Adam ſhould haue been as prone to ſinne, continuing in his pure naturals, as we are: ſeeing that neither we ſhould haue been made ſinners, if Adam had remained in his naturals, and not added the actuall ſinne of diſobedience, which ſinne, and not his pure naturals, made both him, and vs ſinners, as Saint Paul ſheweth, Rom. 5. 19. By one mans diſobedience many were made ſinners: he ſaith not, by his naturals. Secondly, he ſaith, that God tooke away Adams naturall concupiſcence: then God did correct his owne workmanſhip, and ſo it ſhould be imperfect. And againe, the Ieſuite here forgetteth his owne rule, that, Nullum naturale principium aut donum corrumpitur: That no naturall part or gift can be corrupted or chaunged in man; and yet here he ſaith, that God tooke away or ſuppreſſed Adams naturall concupiſcence: ſo then the generation or infuſing of a ſupernaturall gift, was the corruption and deſtruction of the naturall. Thirdly, neither can it be auoided, that God ſhould not be the authour of ſin: for concupiſcence is properly ſinne, as the Apoſtle ſaith, he knew not ſinne but by the law: and then it followeth, I had not knowne luſt, vnleſſe the law had ſaid, thou ſhalt not luſt: ſo that luſt is ſinne. Neither is it like, that any thing can fall out beſides the intention and purpoſe of the Creator: for God cannot be deceiued, who worketh all things according to the counſell of his owne will, Epheſ. 1. 11. All things are wrought according to the counſell, purpoſe, and intention of God: Ergo, nothing falleth out beſide, or contrarie vnto it.

Argum. 2. Euery gift and grace beſide the generall grace of creation, is giuen by the mediation of Chriſt, and the merite of his paſſion, Epheſ. 4. 8. Hee led captiuitie captiue, that is, by his death, and gaue giftes to men: but as Auguſtine ſaith, Adam in illis bonis in quibus creatus, Chriſti morte non eguit: Adam in thoſe gifts wherein he was created, had no need of Chriſtes death: De corrept. grat. c. 11. Ergo, the graces which Adam had in the ſtate of his innocencie, did belong to his creation.

Argum. 3. Whatſoeuer Adam had by creation, he had by nature: for as our birth is vnto vs, ſo was Adams creation to him: and as well that was naturall to him, which was giuen by creation; as that naturall to vs which we haue in our birth: But Adam by his creation was made righteous, Ecclеſ. 7. verſ. 31. Ergo, his perfection and originall iuſtice was in him in his creation, through the gift of the creator, naturall.

Bellarm. Firſt, it is true that God made man righteous, but it was by a ſupernaturall gift beſide the worke of the creation. Secondly, if man had beene created onely in his pure naturals, hee might be ſaid to be made right or perfect, becauſe as yet there was no euill in him, but only a poſſibilitie and ſubiection thereunto; like as an iron ſword is ſubiect to ruſt, Bellar. c. 5. & c. 7. reſp. ad argum. 10.

Anſ. Firſt, that man by the very worke of his creation, was made perfect and righteous, it is euident by the Scripture; for hee was created according to Gods image, Geneſ. 1. 26. and the image of God is expounded by the Apoſtle, to be in righteouſneſſe and holineſſe, Epheſ. 4. 24. Gods generall gift and grace beſtowed vpon man in his creation, we graunt, but of any other grace beſide conferred in the worke of the creation, we reade not.

Secondly, as yron, becauſe it is but a baſe mettall, is ſubiect to ruſt; but the more perfect and precious mettals, as of ſiluer and gold are not: ſo if man by creation had an inclination to ſinne, he could not be perfect. This then is the difference betweene vs: they ſay, that man was created like iron, that is made bright, and kept from ruſting with oyle; ſo man in his creation was vpheld from falling and ſinning by a ſupernaturall gifte: wee rather ſay, that man was created as golde, without any aptneſſe or inclination by nature to corruption, if hee had not fallen away by ſinne from his ſtate of innocencie.

Laſtly, we reaſon thus: Whatſoeuer was in Chriſt as touching his humanitie, was of the nature of man: for in all things he was made like vnto vs, ſinne only excepted: and as the firſt Adam was in his perfection, ſo was the laſt: for the firſt Adam was a figure of him that was to come, Rom. 5. 14. But Chriſt as hee was man had a perfect ſoule: Ergo, perfection was of the nature of man, in his ſtate vncorrupted. So Auguſtine ſaith: Mente humana perfecta, &c. God onely is greater than a perfect humane ſoule, ſuch as was in Chriſt. He calleth a perfect and righteous ſoule, an humane ſoule: and whatſoeuer is humane, is of or belonging to the nature of man. Cont. Maxim. Arrian. lib. 3. cap. 23.

Interrelig. Cæſarea. cap. 1. Deus creauit hominem ad imaginem ſuam,& fecit per originalem iuſtitiam, vt eſſet tum corporis, tum animi viribus rectus: God created man according to his image, and made him by his originall iuſtice, perfect, or right in bodie and ſoule.

Synod. Moguntin. cap. 3. Deus ab initio creauit hominem ad imaginem ſuam, intus in animo prauis motibus vacuum,&c. God in the beginning created man after his image, in his ſoule void of euill motions, &c. Ergo, man by nature in his creation, was endued with a perfect and righteous ſoule.

Cauſ. 33. diſtinct. 2. c. 31. Hanc imaginem in ſpiritu mentis impreſſam perdidit Adam per peccatum: This image of God imprinted in the ſoule of man, Adam loſt by his ſinne. From hence I reaſon thus: Adams ſoule receiued the print or image in the creation; (vnleſſe they wil ſay, that Adams ſoule was created bare and naked:) but the righteouſnes and holineſſe of Adam was this print or image: Ergo, he receiued it in the creation.

THE SECOND QVESTION, OF THE QVAlitie and condition of the bodie of man by creation.

The Papiſts.

2.Error. BEllarmine his opinion is, that the immortalitie of Adams bodie was a ſupernaturall gift: and that by nature his bodie was created mortall, but that this naturall mortalitie was taken away, by the ſupernaturall gift of immortalitie, Bellar. de grat. primi homin. cap. 9.

Argum. 1. His beſt reaſon is drawne from that place of Scripture, which he alleadged before: Duſt thou art,&c. which the Ieſuite would haue vnderſtood of Adams creation: becauſe the reaſon is rendred, Thou ſhalt returne to duſt, becauſe thou waſt taken out of duſt.

Anſ. This was ſpoken to Adam, after that by his tranſgreſſion hee had deſerued death. And whereas the Lord ſaith, For out of the duſt thou waſt taken, it ſheweth not that he was created mortall: but that he had a poſſibilitie onely of mortalitie, into the which he might fall by ſinne, and ſo loſe the immortalitie of nature, wherein he was created: for this is the difference betweene the immortalitie of man by creation, and the immortalitie which we ſhall haue by grace through Chriſt; that man in his creation had power, poſſe non mori, not to die, if he would: that is, if hee kept himſelfe in obedience: but in the kingdome of heauen we ſhall haue a gift, non poſſe mori, not to haue power or poſſibilitie to die. And Auguſtine ſaith, Bina iſta quid inter ſe differunt, diligenter intuendum eſt,&c. We muſt diligently conſider, what difference is betweene theſe two: Poſſe non peccare, & non poſſe peccare, To be able not to ſinne, and not to be able to ſinne: To haue power not to dye, and not to haue power to dye: The firſt man was able not to ſinne, not to dye; but we cannot ſay, non potuit mori, he had no power to dye, or to ſinne: De correp. & grat. c. 11. If Adam before his fall had power not to die, then had he power to be immortall; then conſequently he was not created mortall.

Argum. 2. Adam in his creation was made apt to generation, for God ſaid vnto him, encreaſe and multiply: he had need alſo both of meate and drinke: Ergo, he was created mortall, Bellar. c. 9.

Reſp. Firſt, aptneſſe to generation prooueth not mortalitie, but ſuch generation onely as is by concupiſcence and ſinne procured: 1. as the tree of life in Paradiſe ſhould alſo encreaſe and multiply, but it ſhould not haue beene corruptible: 2. Eua by a kinde of generation was produced out of Adam, ſhe ſhould notwithſtanding haue beene immortall. 3. Some affirme, that the ſoule commeth into the bodie by a kinde of generation, ex traduce, yet they hold notwithſtanding, the immortalitie of the ſoule. 4. Chriſt had a generation, as God, will ye conclude him therefore to be mortall? He alſo had a generation according to the fleſh, yet was he not ſubiect at all to corruption, nor to death of neceſſitie, but of his owne will.

Secondly, the Angels did eat and drinke, yet were not their bodies mortall, wherein they appeared: therefore not euery eating and drinking prooueth mortalitie, but to eate and drinke with hunger, thirſt, and of neceſſitie: but Adam in Paradiſe ſhould neither haue felt hunger nor thirſt, heat or cold, as Auguſtine ſaith, In Paradiſo abſit vt credamus aliquid fuiſſe, vnde ſenſum aut dolor pungeret,&c. Farre be it from vs to thinke, that there was any thing in Paradiſe, whereby eyther griefe ſhould offend the ſenſe, or labour wearie the bodie: Cont. Iulian. lib. 5. c. 8.

The Proteſtants.

THat Adam was by nature created immortall, if hee had not ſinned, we by theſe reaſons doe make it good.

Argum. 1. The ſoule of Adam was immortall, and therefore it was meet and requiſite, that a bodie alſo immortall ſhould be ioyned vnto it.

Bellar. Yea, an immortall bodie is moſt meet for an immortall ſoule: but the functions of the body, which are now exerciſed, and ſhould haue beene in the ſtate of innocencie, doe require a bodie temperated together of diuers humors and qualities, which muſt needes make it mortall, Bellarm.c.9.

Contra. Firſt, if an immortall bodie had been a fitteſt companion for the ſoule, and yet was not giuen vnto it: then by their ſentence, God did not that which was moſt meete and conuenient. Secondly, what maner of qualitied bodie humane actions require now it skilleth not: certein it is, that if man had not ſinned, he ſhould haue done no other things then were beſeeming an immortall bodie, ſuch as he had by creation.

Argum. 2. Auguſtine ſaith, Conſtat inter Chriſtianos veraciter Catholicam tenentes fidem, etiam ipſam nobis corporis mortem non lege naturæ, ſed merito inflictam eſſe peccati: It is euident among Chriſtians rightly holding the Chriſtian faith, that euen the death of body is laid vpon vs, not by the law of nature, but by deſert of ſinne. Saint Paul alſo ſheweth, that death came in by ſinne, Rom. 5.17. Ergo, before man had ſinned, he was not ſubiect to death.

Lib.13. de ciuitate Dei cap.15.

Bellarm. anſwereth, that death came in by ſinne, becauſe by ſinne that ſupernaturall gift was loſt, whereby man was preſerued from mortalitie.

Contra. Yet hath he not ſufficiently anſwered: for if man remaining in his pure naturals was ſubiect to death; then ſhould there haue beene death in the worlde without ſinne, which S. Paul denyeth, for death is the wages of ſinne, Rom.6.23.

Argum. 3. Chriſts body had no poſſibilitie of corruption, Act.2.24. It was impoſſible he ſhould be holden of death: the reaſon is giuen, v.27. Thou wilt not ſuffer thy holy one to ſee corruption: Chriſts holineſſe and freedome from ſinne preſerued him from corruption: Ergo, Adam in the ſtate of innocencie was freed from the poſſibilitie of mortalitie and corruption.

Concil. Mileuitan.cap. 1. as it is alleadged, *part.3.diſt.4.c.*152. Quicunque dicit Adam primum hominem mortalem factum ita, vt ſiue peccaret, ſiue non peccaret, moreretur in corpore: hoc eſt de corpore exiret, non peccati merito, ſed neceſſitate naturæ, anathema ſit: Whoſoeuer ſaith, that Adam was created mortall, ſo that, whether hee ſinned or not, he ſhould die in the body; not by the merite of ſinne, but the neceſſitie of nature, let him be accurſed: Ergo, Adam was created immortall, if he had not ſinned.

Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Si parentes non peccaſſent, eos, &c. If our parents had not ſinned, when they had perfourmed their dutie of obedience: angelica eos immortalitas, &c. the euangelicall immortalitie had followed them, ſine interuentu mortis, without death comming betweene, *de ciuitat. Dei. lib.*13.*c.*1. But how could angelicall immortalitie haue ſucceeded mortalitie without any change by death? and angelicall immortalitie hath no poſſibilitie at all of mortalitie: Adam ſhould haue had an angelicall immortalitie: Ergo.

THE THIRD QVESTION, OF THE PLACE WHERE Adam was created: namely, Paradiſe.

THe Ieſuite affirmeth, that Paradiſe, where Adam was placed, was a terreſtriall place: which we graunt: and ſuch a place, as was not knowne to any: and therefore hee miſliketh their opinions, that would define where Paradiſe ſhould be: Some thinke, that Paradiſe is taken for the whole world, as Ioſephus: ſome, that it is a place deuided from the world beyond the Ocean ſea: others imagine it to be a high ſcituated region, reaching euen vnto the globe of the Moone: others thinke it was in Meſopotamia: But Bellarmine approoueth none of theſe opinions, but ſaith ſtill that Paradiſe was a place vnknowne, yet that it remaineth ſtill vnto this day, *Bellarmin. cap.*12.& 14. This queſtion then hath two parts: firſt, whether Paradiſe were a place alwayes vnknowne to men: Secondly, whether that Paradiſe doth remaine to this day.

The Papiſts.

THat Paradiſe was a ſecret place kept from the knowledge of men, the Ieſuite would ſeeme to proue it thus.

3.Error.

*Argum.*1. If Paradiſe were ſcituate in a knowne place, it is moſt like by the deſcription to haue been in Meſopotamia; but there it was not: for the text ſaith, that out of Eden went a riuer, which afterward was deuided into foure heads: but there is no ſuch riuer, that hath his beginning in Meſopotamia: *Ergo, Bellarmine cap.*12.

Anſw. The text ſaith not, that this riuer had his beginning in Eden, but went out from Eden, that is, it might haue the beginning before, and ſo runne through Eden: neither are we to vnderſtand the place ſo, as though this riuer, as ſoone as it was runne through Eden did deuide it ſelfe into foure heads: but theſe foure heads or branches do come from two riuers, Tigris, and Euphrates, which running aſunder till they come to Eden, make two heads, which in the text are called Hiddekle and Perath, and ſo ioyning together, as they paſſe through Eden, do againe deuide themſelues, and ſo make two heads more, Piſhon and Gihon, and ſo runne into the Perſian gulfe.

*Argum.*2. How could Paradiſe be a knowne place being kept of the Cherubims by a fierie ſword?

Anſw. Firſt, the keeping of it with the firie ſword, doth ſhew that it was a place inacceſſible, and not inhabited before the flood: for ſo long was it ſo kept: but it might be knowne where it was ſcituate, though the paſſage thereunto were ſtopped. Secondly, after that the beautie of Paradiſe was deſtroyed by the flood, it needed not any more the cuſtodie or watch of Angels: but the place where Paradiſe was planted then lay open to man and beaſt, being both knowne and inhabited.

The Proteſtants.

THat Paradiſe, otherwiſe called Eden, was planted in a knowne place of the world, which was moſt like to be Meſopotamia; thus we make it plaine.

*Argum.*1. The two riuers mentioned in the deſcription of Eden, namely, Hiddekle, which is Tigris; and Perath, which is Euphrates, are found to runne through Meſopotamia: Ergo, there alſo was Paradiſe.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the two other heads of the riuer, namely Phiſon and Gihon, are the two riuers Ganges and Nilus, which come not neere Meſopotamia, and therefore it is not like, that the two other riuers make the other two heads, *cap.*12.

Contra. Firſt, Phiſon and Gihon cannot be the knowne riuers Ganges, whoſe beginning is in the mountaines of Scythia; and Nilus, which ſpringeth from the mountaines in Æthiopia: for Phiſon and Gihon are two heads of one Fountaine and Riuer: but Ganges and Nilus haue two ſeuerall heads or fountaines, many thouſande miles aſunder; Ganges in Aſia, and Nilus in Africa.

Secondly, if Ganges and Nilus be theſe two heads, which are knowne Riuers, and their fountaines alſo knowne, then muſt Eden alſo be knowne, where the Ieſuite ſaith the riuer hath his beginning.

Bellarmine replieth, that Phiſon and Gihon cannot be two heads ſpringing from Tigris and Euphrates. 1. Becauſe thoſe two heads are ſaid to compaſſe diuers nations; but the branches of thoſe two riuers do runne by a ſtraight courſe into the Perſian Sea. 2. The mappes do ſhew, that Tigris and Euphrates after their coniunction are not deuided againe, but runne together into the ſea. 3. Ierem.2.18. the Septuagint reade thus, What haſt thou to do in the way of Ægypt, to drinke the water of Geon? Geon then is Nilus the riuer of Ægypt: Againe, Eccleſiaſtic.24.31. Gihon is ſaid to ouerflow in the time of vintage, and ſo doth Nilus. 4. Hierome, Ambroſe, with others, do take Phiſon and Gihon, for Ganges and Nilus, *Bellarmine c.*12.

Contra. Firſt, it is euident, that Phiſon and Gihon the two neather ſtreames of Tigris and Euphrates, do paſſe through and compaſſe in a manner the lands Hauilah, where gold is; and Cuſh, which is Arabia deſerta, before they fall into the ſea.

Secondly, if he view the Mappe better, or follow the beſt deſcription, he ſhall finde that the riuers Tigris and Euphrates part againe, before they runne into the ſea.

Thirdly, 1. in Ierem.2.18. the hebrue hath not Geon, but Sichar, which ſome do take for Nilus, others vpon better ground, for a riuer, that paſſing by Arabia Petrea, falleth into the lake Sirbon, and deuideth the Land of promiſe from Ægypt, Ioſu.13.3. neyther doth the vulgar Latine reade Geon, but aquam turbidam, troubled water.

2. It is 1. no good argument, that Geon ſhould be Nilus, becauſe it ouerfloweth in the time of Vintage: as though it is not vſuall for riuers to riſe twice in the yeere, in the ſpring, and in autumne: 2. and yet Nilus greateſt ouerflowing is in ſeede time, which is in the ſpring, Deut.11.10. 3. I vrge not beſide, that this booke is not canonicall; for the other anſweres are ſufficient beſide.

Fourthly, Hierome and Ambroſe do follow the opinion of the Greekes, who were herein deceiued by the tranſlation of the Septuagint: as *Ambroſe de Paradiſ.c.*3. Phiſon Ganges eſt ſecundum Græcos: Phiſon is the riuer Ganges according to the Greekes, &c. And Epiphanius ſaith, Ego vidi aquas Geon,&c. I haue ſeene with mine eyes the waters of Geon, meaning Nilus, and then he alleageth Ierem.2.18. where the Septuagint ſo reade: epiſt ad Ioann. Hieroſolym. So that this conceit of the Greekes was grounded vpon the erroneous tranſlation of the Septuagint.

Fiftly, this opinion is contrary to Scripture, 1. Phiſon and Gihon come out of one riuer, and haue the ſame beginning: Geneſ.2.10. But Ganges and Nilus are many hundred miles diſtant. 2. Gihon compaſſeth the whole land of Cuſh. Geneſ.2.13. Which they take to be Æthiopia: but Nilus compaſſeth Ægypt, not Æthiopia, taking his beginning onely from thence: ſo that Cuſh here is not taken for Æthiopia, but for Arabia deſerta, for it is a general name to them both. 3. Whereas Epiphanius ſaith, he had ſeene Geon, and that he had drunke of the great riuer Euphrates: the riuers of Paradiſe being ſo well knowne, how could Paradiſe be a place vnknowne?

*Argum.*2. Againe, Eden is deſcribed by the countries next adioyning, as Aſſyria, Geneſ.2.14.

So Charran and Eden are ioyned together, Iſai.37.verſ.12. Cain alſo is ſaid to haue dwelled on the Eaſt ſide of Eden: But theſe countries were well knowne: Ergo, ſo was Eden.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that this Eden in theſe places mentioned, was another Eden, beſide that, out of the which Adam was throwne: vnleſſe you will ſay, that Cain was ſent and baniſhed into Paradiſe, *Bellarm.cap.*13.

Anſw. Firſt, the Ieſuite cannot ſhew vnto vs any other Eden out of the ſtorie of the Bible: Geneſ.2.14. that Eden is ſpoken of, which is neere to Aſſhur: Iſai.3.7. that Eden, which is ioyning to Charran: But Aſſhur and Charran were not farre aſunder, Ezech.27.23. therefore it was one and the ſelfeſame Eden. Secondly, the text ſaith not, that Cain was exiled into Paradiſe, or that he dwelt in Paradiſe, but by the Eaſt ſide of Paradiſe.

Saint Ambroſe ſaith, *Epiſt.*42. Ioſephus hiſtoriographus, &c. Ioſephus the hiſtoriographer ſaith, that Paradiſe is a place full of trees and plants, and is watered with a riuer, which is diuided into foure ſtreames. How could Ioſephus deſcribe Paradiſe, if it had been an vnknowne place? And if they will haue Paradiſe ſo ſecret a place, let them ſay with their Maſter, that Paradiſe was ſituate in a region, that reached vp to the circle of the Moone: lib.2.d.17.lit.e. Ianſenius a learned Papiſt witneſſeth with vs, that Paradiſe was ſituate in Meſopotamia, but afterward defaced and deſtroyed by the flood, in cap.143.concord.Euangelic.

THE SECOND PART OF THIS QVESTION, whether the terreſtriall place of Paradiſe doe yet remaine.

The Papiſts.

THeir beſt argument is this: Henoch and Helias doe yet remaine aliue in Paradiſe in their bodies: Ergo, there is a Paradiſe, *cap.*12. 4.Error.

Anſw. Firſt, that Henoch and Elias doe liue with God we denie not, but whether in their bodies or no, the Scripture ſaith not. Secondly, but that they liue in an earthly and terreſtriall place, ſuch as hee imagineth Paradiſe to be, it is contrarie to Scripture, which ſaith, that Elias went vp in a whirle-winde to heauen, 2.King.2.11. Ergo, he is not in earth. Thirdly, Paradiſe is now no terreſtriall but a celeſtiall place in heauen: for Saint Paul taketh Paradiſe and heauen for all one, 2.Corinth.12.verſ.2.4.

The Proteſtants.

THat the terreſtriall Paradiſe is not now extant vpon the earth, but long agoe, as it is moſt like, deſtroyed by the flood: we thus ſhew it.

*Argum.*1. The waters in the flood couered the whole earth, and preuailed ouer all the mountaines that are vnder the heauen, fifteene cubites, Geneſ.7.20. wherefore it is moſt like, that Paradiſe was then deſtroyed.

Bellarm. Firſt, he ſaith, that all thoſe mountaines were couered with waters, where ſinners and mortall men dwelt, whom the Lord purpoſed to deſtroy; ſo that the mountaines and regions of Paradiſe are excepted.

Contra. Firſt, but the text ſaith all the mountaines were couered vnder the whole heauens: how then dare he make the holie Ghoſt a lyer, and ſay, as it were correcting the text, no, all were not couered. Secondly, thus to vphold his fancies, he runneth to forged myracles: for the waters being fifteene cubites aboue other mountaines, and yet not ouerflowing Paradiſe, muſt needes compaſſe it about as a wall, and ſtand as a collar of a coate round about it: But what authoritie hath he thus to coyne myracles beſide Scripture?

Bellarmine anſwereth, that it had bin a greater myracle to ſee Henoch and Elias hanging in the ayre to be kept from the waters, for they could not haue liued in Paradiſe, being ouerflowen, as it is certaine they doe.

Contra. Why Bellarmine? Elias was taken vp into heauen, as wee prooued out of Scripture, and therefore hee needed not to haue feared the flood vpon the earth. Thirdly, if Paradiſe were not ouerflowen, God might haue ſpared the making of the Ark, for Noah with his familie and all the cattell might haue been more ſafely kept in Paradiſe.

Bellarmine ſaith, it was no place for ſinners.

Anſw. Why Noah was a faithfull man, and no more a ſinner now, then Henoch was, when he was taken vp: might not Noah therefore as well haue been kept there as Henoch? eſpecially ſeeing hee was not to continue there, but to remaine onely for a time, till the deluge were ouerpaſt?

Secondly, Bellarmine denieth the argument: it followeth not, that Paradiſe ſhould be vtterly deſtroyed, though it were ouerflowen: for the deluge did not chaunge the ſituation of the place, nor the diſpoſition of the ayre, &c. *Bellarm.cap.*14.

Anſw. Firſt, the ouerflowing of water, which many times caſteth downe hils, and filleth vp valleyes, which maketh ſtanding pooles where it was drie land, muſt of neceſſitie bring great alteration, both for the pleaſant ſituation, and the temperate ayre. Secondly, we ſay not, that by the flood Paradiſe was vtterly made deſolate: for it remained a pleaſant and fertile ſoile euen afterward, Geneſ. 10.10. The land of Sodome and Gomorrha, before it was deſtroyed, is ſaid to haue been like the Lords garden, which was Eden: But yet the beautie and excellencie of Paradiſe was by the flood decayed.

*Argum.*2. That Paradiſe is now onely remaining, which is the receptacle of the bleſſed ſoules of the Saints after this life: This day (ſaith Chriſt) ſhalt thou be with me in Paradiſe, Luk. 23.43. the Goſpell ſpeaketh not of any other Paradiſe. But this can be no terreſtriall place: for the ſoules of the righteous goe to heauen: and Paradiſe in the Ieſuites iudgement is a receptacle of bodies, not of ſoules: Ergo, there is no ſuch terreſtriall Paradiſe.

Saint Ambroſe witneſſeth with vs: Tum ſaluus ero, &c. Then I ſhall be ſafe, when I ſhall be in Paradiſe, where I ſhall liue inter electos Angelos, among the elect Angels: *ſerm.*15. *in Pſal.*119. Againe, in 2. *Corint.*12. Vltra omnia mundi ſydera raptus intelligitur, &c. Paul is ſaid to be rapt or taken vp beyond all the ſtars, &c. and into that Paradiſe, of the which the Lord ſpake to the theefe, euen where the citie Ieruſalem is, the mother of vs all. Paradiſe then is no other where now but in heauen.

AN APPENDIX OR THIRD PART OF THIS queſtion, concerning the tree of life in Paradiſe.

The Papiſts.

5. Error.

BEllarmine rehearſeth two opinions of this matter: ſome thinke that it was called the tree of life, becauſe by eating thereof Adam might be preſerued from death, and his ſubſtance, which might decay, in time be reſtored: ſic Auguſtine. Others are of opinion that it was appointed to be a meane to bring Adam to perfect immortalitie, ſuch as wee ſhall haue after the reſurrection: Of this minde is Bellarmine.

He groundeth his opinion vpon that text, Geneſ. 3.22. Leaſt he put forth his hand, and eate of the tree of life, and liue for euer: Ergo, the tree of life had power to giue eternall life to the eaters thereof.

Ironia, is a figure, when one meaneth contrary to the ſignification of the word or ſentence.

Anſw. 1. This ſpeech here vttered by the Lord, is ironically to be vnderſtood, that is, God in ſo ſaying, meaneth not, that indeede, by eating of this fruit, Adam ſhould liue eternally: but as in the former part of the verſe the Lorde derideth the follie and ſimplicitie of man, who thought by eating the forbidden fruit to haue been as God, and was deceiued: Behold, (ſaith God) the man is become as one of vs, to know good and euill: that is, hee thought in his owne opinion and conceit, &c. So the ſame ſpeech is continued in this part of the verſe: leaſt he liue for euer, that is, hee may in his ſimplicitie be ſeduced to thinke hee may haue eternall life by eating of the tree of life, as hee was made to beleeue before, that he ſhould by taſting of the forbidden fruit in knowledge be like vnto God.

2 Or if we take the wordes ſimply as they are ſpoken: the meaning is this, that ſeeing Adam was by his tranſgreſſion depriued of life, he ſhould alſo loſe the ſigne thereof: it was therefore called the tree of life, not becauſe it gaue life, but was a ſigne thereof.

The Proteſtants.

THat the tree of life was neither ordained to preſerue Adam in that ſtate wherein he was, nor yet to endue him with a new kinde of immortalitie, but that it was a ſigne onely or ſymbole of life receiued of God.

*Argum.*1. This tree, which was in the middeſt of Paradiſe, was no otherwiſe the tree of life, then the other was of the knowledge of good and euill: but this was not ſo called, becauſe it actually gaue knowledge, but was a ſeale and ſigne vnto them of that miſerable knowledge and experience, which by tranſgreſſing of Gods commaundement in eating of that fruit, they ſhould fall into. And this is confeſſed by their Maſter, that it was called the tree of good and euill, becauſe man by tranſgreſſing in eating thereof, experiundo diſceret, ſhould learne by experience what difference there was, betweene good obedience and euill diſobedience, *lib.*2. *diſt.*17. Ergo, the other tree was a ſymbole or pledge of life. So in the Reuelation, chap. 22.2. mention is made of the tree of life, which is Chriſt Ieſus: He is indeede the true tree of life, becauſe hee verily giueth life, this was but a ſigne and ſymbole of life.

*Argum.*2. Spirituall graces are not obtained by corporall and carnall meanes: for as wee can not vſe carnall weapons againſt ſpirituall euils, 2. Cor. 10.4. ſo can wee not by externall and corporall meanes procure celeſtiall and ſpirituall bleſſings: but immortalitie was a ſpirituall gift, eating of the fruit was but an externall action: Ergo, it could not giue immortalitie.

*Argum.*3. If the tree of life had been able to giue immortalitie, and God foreſeeing the fall of man, would not haue him in that eſtate to be partaker of immortalitie: God would not haue permitted vnto man the vſe of that tree as hee did, but rather haue giuen him a prohibition to eate thereof: but this the Lord did not, giuing them onely a charge concerning the tree of knowledge: Ergo, it is not like that tree had any ſuch force.

Bellarmine anſwereth: 1. that neither Adam nor Satan did know which was the tree of life: for Sathan 1. would haue tempted him to haue eaten alſo thereof, that hee might haue been eternally miſerable: but Adam 2. might haue eaten of it by chaunce, as the text is, ne fortè, leaſt perhaps he put forth his hand,&c. Gen.3.22. 2. Though Adam had knowne it, he would not haue bin curious to eate thereof before the time appointed, *Bellarm.cap.*29.

Contra. Firſt, 1. Sathan had no reaſon to tempt them to eate of the tree of life, becauſe it was not forbidden: for they might haue eaten freely of euery tree in the garden, chap.2.16. the tree of the knowledge of good and euill onely excepted: In eating then of any other tree they ſhould not haue tranſgreſſed: but Satans drift was to bring them into tranſgreſſion. 2. And the Hebrue particle פן, pen, is not ſo to be tranſlated, ne fortè, leaſt perhaps, but rather as the 70. reade μήποτε, nequando, leaſt at any time. Likewiſe, Iſay.27.3. I will keepe it, leaſt any aſſaile it: but the enemies would aſſaile it, not by chaunce, but of purpoſe and pretended malice. The wordes alſo that follow exclude this collection of chaunce, ne extenſa manu, leaſt he ſtretch out his hand: But hee that ſtretcheth out his hand, doth it not at aduenture, but wittingly and of purpoſe. 3. Adam could not be ignorant which was the tree of life: 1. both in reſpect of his great knowledge, whereby he knew the nature of all creatures, and ſo of plants and trees. 2. And becauſe they had libertie to eate of all the trees in the garden: vnleſſe they will ſay, he eate he knew not what: 3. and for that the tree of life was ordained onely for Adams vſe, as they thinke to bring him to immortalitie, as we ſay to be a ſymbole vnto him of Chriſt: howſoeuer the vſe of this tree ſpecially concerning Adams ſtate, was not to be kept from his knowledge.
